I am justified in claiming that such persons ought not to be represented among my judges. But I hav good reasons to suppose they are. In accordance with the decision of Svea Hofrätt, did the supreme court—Messrs. Knut Olivercrona, Frans Huss, Carl Svedelius, and August Ostergren—sentence me last year to the highest punishment which the law allows this court to inflict, because I denied the truth of some of the church's teachings? Those men did violate that regard for truthfulness and honesty which is expected of upright judges. Although in our free press law is found a prohibition of a denial of the existence of God, a future life, and of the pure evangelical teachings (the Lutheran theology in its Swedish form), yet they cannot, as many believe, explain this in an orthodox manner without consciously attacking their own and the nation's idea of what is right. They hav not made themselvs guilty in making Jesuitic distinctions between what is theoretically defensible, and what are the moral results therefrom. When the result of modern researches brings a view of the Lutheran dogmas, a life after this, and the God idea, which is in contradiction with the one accepted by us, then they sentence the proclaimer of this to the highest punishment they can inflict. They do not believe, like myself, that since the old ideas are not believed in any longer, they hav, of necessity, become obsolete, and that although absolute certainty stands not at the service of man, yet everyone ought to be at liberty, not alone to form his own convictions according to what his reason and consciousness dictate to him, but also to labor for what he considers right; they, on the other hand, believe that the officially settled dogmas ought, under all circumstances, to be protected.

It is for this reason that I am just as convinced of being found guilty by my judges in this suit, as I am that the supreme court will declare me innocent. Then there are paragraphs in the law, pertaining to freedom of speech, which indicate, what the press laws do not, that denial of dogmas is permissible, inasmuch as these paragraphs are founded upon the supposition that free inquiries into this subject, as well as into all others, ought to be allowed. Therefore, since this is the only right I desire, I do expect to be declared guiltless in this suit.

Not wishing it to be understood—what is far from my object—that it is my intention to annoy the courts of our country, who of late hav had to deal with many indictments for so-called blasphemy, and thereby with interpretation of corresponding laws, it is perhaps my duty to giv an explanation of how I regard the motiv for their judgments, so that they may not be considered as included in that opinion above given of those who through foolishness or ill-will are partakers in all heretic persecutions. The explanation can no doubt be found in the fact that the education of these judges is almost wholly pertaining to legal matters. Only a superficial knowledge of the results of modern inquiry is possessed by them, and what theology regards. Then their information is in most cases confined to what the Lutheran school-books contain. Endowed with a practical sense, they, as officers of the state, soon perceive that for those who wish promotion, studies and sympathies which extend beyond the line of dogmas are a hindrance, while piety in Lutheran garb pays well. They hav, therefore, even if time had permitted it, not received outward encouragement to undertake individual studies in the history of religion. We can therefore suppose that they are simple, believing Christians. But in viewing the case from this standpoint we find we are met by an important religious contradiction. Just as natural as it is that a Mohammedan should consider it blasphemy for anyone to insist upon Jesus's being the son of Allah, or that pagans should regard Christian missionaries, who declare their gods to be false, as blasphemers, and punish them according to their prevailing customs; just as natural as it is that Giordano Bruno and John Huss should hav been by the courts of their times condemned as heretics—just so natural is it that I and so many others are found guilty by the Sweden of our time. The opinion of our forefathers at the time when Christianity was first preached here, that the new teaching ought to be given publicity, so that they from its progress could judge of its truth, is very uncommon among mankind, and it is, so far as I can judge from my religious researches, even unchristian, and likewise not in accordance with the newer Swedish opinion of religion.

I hav tried to make clear to your royal majesty the reason which, in spite of the action of our courts, induces me to continue my work in the service of those ideas which I cherish. I hav tried, as far as it regards myself, to giv all information which might prove useful to a court judging in the suit. Hereby I deliver the matter into your hands, urging acquittal.

There is even another point to which I should wish to call the attention of the supreme court. The persecution which has broken out in our country against the Freethinkers stands without parallel in the civilized world. Nor has there in this whole century been, in our country, so many heretical persecutions as during the last two years. What regards myself, every time an informer has called a jury the latter has rendered a decision of acquittal. Can one from this fact not draw the conclusion that the educated public, even if it does not adopt my views, at least regards me as working for its own good in a way which ought to be allowed? That my ideas hav not caused that public indignation which the law demands before a breach is proven, can at the very least be deducted herefrom. The courts hav only poor insight in these questions, and perhaps still less independence. Is it not about time for the supreme court to pronounce its "Stop" to these foolish proceedings, showing thereby that not even in our country is it right always to hide the presence of new ideas in the domain of religion with imprisonment and fines? I hav not enumerated how many years of imprisonment hav been given, all in all, to various persons for Atheism, blasphemy, or whatever one pleases to call this resurrected child, but they are already numerous enough to prove sufficient even for the shepherds of Swedish Christendom.

The courts hav even sentenced me to fines because I hav stated that the accusers were but marionets in a more powerful hand. In this assertion I did not at all intend any harm. It indicates partly that the accusers would not acquit me on their own responsibility—which according to my opinion is a compliment to their insight and logic—partly that they obeyed, within the domain of their office, the orders of higher authorities—a thing which I thought was their duty. The coincidence between that bigotry well understood to exist in the higher classes, and the accusers' sudden ambition to pose as informants of heretics, is merely an accident, and at least it is not on the accuser the shame falls. Hence I urge acquittal even in this case.

VICTOR E. LENNSTRAND.

Stockholm, July 25, 1889.

Christian Missions in China a Failure.

Lieutenant Wood of our navy in the Denver Republican.

"It is not extravagant to say that the work of missionaries in China and Corea has been absolutely without result, except to hold them up to the ridicule of the natives. It has been stated, and I concur, that there is not a Chinese convert to Christianity of sound mind within the extent of China. The converts we hear of in this country are merely the menials employed about the quarters of the missionaries, who, for a salary of $4 a month, become converts, but when discharged there is no further evidence of a change of mind. Missionaries do not mix with the natives to any considerable extent, and many of the meetings are not only in English, but with the missionaries themselves as the audience. As for a nobleman of Corea or a mandarin of China ever acknowledging the Christian faith, such a thing was never heard of."

"How do missionaries bring themselves into ridicule?"

"As a matter of fact, they are looked upon about as is the Salvation Army in America, only to a degree ten times as great. The Chinaman, for instance, has a respect for his language which amounts to reverence. Even a stray piece of paper covered with Chinese characters would be picked up by them and burnt. You will understand with what feelings they regard the translation of the Bible the missionaries prepared for them, when you know that this is in a lingo which stands in the same relation to the mandarian tongue or classical language of the country used in court and as the official language all over the country that the obscure negro dialect of Louisiana stands with classical English. Only educated Chinese are able to use this language. They all hav the same respect for it, and it is in it that the precepts of Confucius are given to the people."

"How did it happen that this mistake was made?"

"Simply because when the missionaries located in Foo Chow they learned the language of that locality, and could use no other either in speech or to write in making a translation. There is a gradual change in the lingo of China which is seen distinctly in a distance of fifty miles, but the tongue of the mandarins is universally used by the educated and reverenced by everyone."

Religion in Government.

Rev. F. M. Washburn in the Christian Statesman.

Our government seems to invite Sabbath-breaking by setting the example. For instance, in the military department the Sabbath has been the high day for reviews, parades, and all kinds of extra labor. It is refreshing, though, that the new secretary of war has the fear of God before his eyes sufficiently to prohibit such unnecessary work during his term of office.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - OCTOBER 19, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00

Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

The Bible in Common Schools.

By D. M. BENNETT.

To our older readers what a familiar look that "By D. M. Bennett" has! It revives old memories and old times, and touches a tender chord in the heart.

Looking over some papers with the dust of nearly a decade upon them, we found a long article with this heading. Recollection carried back recalls it as a lecture prepared by Mr. Bennett, but never delivered. The opportunity was lost through press of business, a year of martyrdom, and journeying in Europe and around the world during the three years preceding his death. It is, we think, the only paper by Mr. Bennett that has not appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER. We shall print it in the next two issues.

The lecture is written in his familiar style, easy, thorough, copious, irrefutable. Reading it brings back to us his image, and we can almost see him at his desk, with a worn-out lead pencil in his hand, preparing it. He never used any but worn-out pencils. Where he got them we don't know, but they were probably the stubs thrown away by the clerks. There are one hundred and twenty-four pages of it, enough for three pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is in the main a review of the Bible, its absurdities, inconsistencies, errors, and mistakes, as he would say. He givs us thirty cataloged reasons why the Bible should not be used in the common schools, and then goes on to giv a hundred or two more. "You can't make it too strong," he used to say when writing against the Bible. For years he had been a devout believer in the inspiration and absolute truth of the book, and he was angry at the deception he had imposed upon himself. Paine's "Age of Reason" first induced him to investigate the volume, and placed him on the road to Rationalism.

To Mr. Bennett's friends, the undelivered lecture will bring back alike pleasant and sad memories. Those who did not know him will find that the Founder of THE TRUTH SEEKER wrote with no timorous hand.

A BOOK that ought to be a thousand times more widely read in this country by the Liberals is Professor Ludwig Büchner's "Force and Matter." It is an annihilation, on scientific grounds, of the Christian scheme, as the "Age of Reason" is on historical and common-sense grounds. English Freethinkers regard "Force and Matter" as a text-book, and the Germans value it so highly that it has gone through fifteen editions. The price is a little high, as it has to be imported, but we hav obtained a limited supply of the translation from the last German edition, and we can forward it for $3. We do not believe, however, that anyone will regret the expenditure of that sum after reading the book.

WE hav published for William Hart, of Kirksville, Mo., a volume which he calls, "The Candle From Under the Bushel." It consists of thirteen hundred and six "questions to the clergy, and for the consideration of others." The work is a good deal like D. M. Bennett's "Interrogatories to Jehovah." The questions, it is safe to say, will never be answered by the clergy. They cannot do it, and for that reason they will never make the attempt. The book is something like a dictionary to read, being from the nature of the case slightly disconnected in style, but as so many of the questions carry their own answers the volume is an excellent one to hav handy in the house. It will help Liberals in argumentation wonderfully. Price, 50 cents.

With Our Friends the Enemy.

The executiv committee of the National Reform Association held a meeting in the Young Men's Christian Association parlors at Pittsburgh, on the 1st instant. This association is the direct opponent of the American Secular Union, and is endeavoring to do exactly what the Secular Union is endeavoring to prevent being done. The preamble to its constitution recites the reason for its existence as follows:

"Believing that almighty God is the source of all power and authority in civil government, that the Lord Jesus Christ is the ruler of nations, and that the revealed will of God is of supreme authority in civil affairs;

"Remembering that this country was settled by Christian men, with Christian ends in view, and that they gave a distinctly Christian character to the institutions which they established;

"Perceiving the subtle and persevering attempts which are made to prohibit the reading of the Bible in our public schools, to overthrow our Sabbath laws, to corrupt the family, to abolish the oath, prayer in our national and state legislatures, days of fasting and thanksgiving and other Christian features of our institutions, and so to divorce the American government from all connection with the Christian religion;

"Viewing with grave apprehension the corruption of our politics, the legal sanction of the liquor traffic, and the disregard of moral and religious character in those who are exalted to high places in the nation;

"Believing that a written constitution ought to contain explicit evidence of the Christian character and purpose of the nation which frames it, and perceiving that the silence of the Constitution of the United States in this respect is used as an argument against all that is Christian in the usage and administration of our government;

"We, citizens of the United States, do associate ourselvs under the following articles, and pledge ourselvs to God, and to one another, to labor, through wise and lawful means, for the ends herein set forth."

The second article catalogs the objects of the society:

"The object of this society shall be to maintain existing Christian features in the American government; to promote needed reforms in the action of the government touching the Sabbath, the institution of the family, the religious element in education, the oath, and public morality as affected by the liquor traffic and other kindred evils; and to secure such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as will declare the nation's allegiance to Jesus Christ and its acceptance of the moral laws of the Christian religion, and so indicate that this is a Christian nation, and place all the Christian laws, institutions, and usages of our government on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land."

This association is no paper organization, but a practical working force, well officered, well directed, and well supported. Almost every minister in the country is a sort of agent to distribute its publications and organize meetings for the propagation of its un-American principles. Its secretaries are welcomed in Sunday-schools and are afforded opportunities to address the congregations at week-day meetings. Already the results of its work are apparent in state and national legislation, and it was the Pittsburgh members of this organization who, under the name of a law and order society, proposed to arrest the lecturers at the Secular Union Congress, and prevent the meeting, in that city last year.

The methodical and careful character of its work may be inferred from a synopsis of the proceedings of the executiv committee. The corresponding secretary reported as a result of a conference with special secretaries in charge of various departments of work these things: "The Rev. Dr. Morrow accepts the secretaryship relating to our immigrant population. The Rev. Irwin P. McCurdy, D.D., accepts the department of the press. The Rev. S. L. Baldwin, D.D., of New York, accepts work on the Chinese question. President Chas. A. Blanchard accepts the labor question as a special department of work. The Rev. I. N. Hays, D.D., accepts the department on the acknowledgment of Christ in Thanksgiving proclamations." From these, and they are but a few of the many ramifications of the society, the scope of the association is learned. The immigrants are to be besieged to vote for God and Christ, the press is to be pestered to say a good word for the society, the laborers are to be labored with, and even the Chinese are not to be exempt from importunities to advocate the claims of "C'list" (which means the ministers) to be ruler over us. Governors and president are to be labored with to acknowledge Jesus, instead of the people, as their sovereign, and if they are found sufficiently pious or demagogic to yield to the solicitation, the Thanksgiving proclamations this fall will be brief statements of church doctrins, with two individuals to thank instead of one. We suggest to the Rev. Mr. Hays that he include the Apostles', Athanasian, and Nicene creeds in his department. As long as we are to be loaded down with religion, it will be well to know just what we are expected to believe.

A special object just now, as it appears from the report of this meeting, is a "reformation" of the marriage laws, under the guise of subserving "public morality." That 25,535 divorces were granted in this country in 1886, while only 6,000 were granted in England and Wales and an equal number in the German empire; that almost one-third of a million divorces (328,716) hav been granted in our states and territories in twenty years, and that while our population increased 66 per cent, divorces increased 156 per cent, disturbs these self constituted guardians of other people greatly, and the press, both religious and secular, the ministers, legislators, and citizens generally, are to be appealed to to urge Congress to take steps for the enactment of a national marriage law which shall be "carefully conformed to the moral laws of the Christian religion." A public meeting to push this project will be held in Pittsburgh this month, and the committee believes it can get a thousand dollars in that city for that object alone.

This National Reform Association last year united with the American Sabbath Union, and both used the women and children of the Women's Christian Temperance Union to further the success of the Blair Sunday and Education bills. The three organizations are practically one in the results aimed at, and to oppose them there are but the American Secular Union, and a handful (barely 25,000) of Seventh Day Adventists. The secular press, while largely with the Liberals in sentiment, dare not or will not oppose the church, and it will not be at all astonishing if the three organizations attain a good degree of success. The National Reform Association and the Sabbath Union were behind all the attempts to incorporate Christianity into the constitutions of the four new Western states, and though the conclusion of that fight may be regarded as a draw, these Christians are ready to renew it, while we fear that without some strong agitation the Liberals will allow their efforts to slacken.

The delegates to the Secular Union congress at Philadelphia next week may well study the methods, emulate the zeal, and copy the well-directed efforts of their friends the enemy.

The Roman Catholic Church.

If anyone doubts that the Roman Catholics are increasing in strength and boldness of operations, he should make a study of the daily papers for a month and note the news recorded. In the West, from Chicago to Denver, through Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and Kansas; on the Pacific coast in California, and on the Atlantic coast from Boston to Florida, the Romish church has built parochial schools and is taking part in secular administrativ affairs with a rapidity and openness which shows her consciousness of power.

Two instances—one showing how contemptuously she treats her enslaved people and the other how she regards her own statutes as superior to civil law—hav recently been detailed in the papers of this city. The first is in Brooklyn. A pastor of one parish has built a parochial school and driven eleven or twelve hundred of his people's children into it. The parents of ten children, however, preferred to send them to the public schools, alleging a desire to hav the youngsters learn something besides the catechism. This contumacious conduct was denounced by the priest, and he informed the parents that unless their children attended the parochial school they need not come to his Sunday-school. In the parents' eyes this deprivation of religious instruction imperiled the salvation of the children's souls, and they remonstrated. They were curtly told by the priest that they could look after the children's salvation themselvs. He should not, and strongly intimated that the infants could go to hell if they did not go to his parochial school.

The other case, showing how little the church regards the government that protects her, is that of a New Jersey priest named Butler. When Mr. Butler took orders he made to his church a solemn vow of chastity. This he violated by marrying Miss Brady, a young Catholic woman. The marriage ceremony was duly performed by a civil magistrate. After living with his wife four years Butler broke the marital vow he had made, abandoned his wife and child and returned a suppliant to the Catholic church. He has been taken back and will be required to do penance for his sin, after which he will be again a priest. A reporter asked Bishop Wigger of Newark how, when Butler was again a priest, his marriage to Miss Brady would be regarded—whether the church would hav a married priest at work for her, or whether Mr. Butler would get a divorce, and on what grounds, as Butler had deserted his wife and she had violated none of her marital obligations? Bishop Wigger replied:

"The church never recognized the marriage, Father Butler had made a solemn vow of chastity, and his marriage was not valid. There was no marriage to be annulled."

This is the view of marriage held by the Romish church, and is a distinct announcement by that institution that her own rules are superior to the laws of the country. According to this a priest might marry forty women, and a penance would be the only penalty, unless the state should peremptorily upset the theory of the church. But Butler's vow was no legal bar to his marriage. Both parties were legally free to marry, and their marriage is valid by the law of the land, and no churchmen in the whole world can annul it. To refuse to recognize it is to defy the law of the land. The church can enforce its own rules against its own members—giv them penances to perform if they are willing to submit to them, and expel them if it chooses, but it cannot use physical force to compel a penance, nor can it disregard the state's laws.

Within the next decade or two the Roman Catholic church will be a good deal bigger institution in this land, or a good deal smaller.

Two or Three Views.

The New York Sun calls attention to two views of the progress of the church, much more widely divergent than the creeds of the two men who hold them. The first is the view of Cardinal Gibbons, given in the pastoral making the announcement of the celebration at Baltimore on the 10th proximo of the one-hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the Catholic hierarchy in the United States, and is as follows:

"But while we rejoice in the numerical strength of the Catholic religion, we rejoice still more that, far from betraying any symptoms of religious torpor, still less of decay and dissolution, the church exhibits an organic vitality, an exuberant spirit, a vigorous activity, and a sturdy growth which afford a well-founded hope of unlimited expansion in the future."

The second is that of the clergyman who preached the opening sermon of the Episcopal General Convention just held in this city. He said:

"We are perplexed by the unbelief and sin of our time. The Christian faith is assailed not only with scoffs as old as Celsus and Julian, but also with the keenest intellectual criticism of divine revelation, the opposition of alleged scientific facts, and a Corinthian worldliness whose motto is 'Eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.' In many places Christian homes are dying out. Crime and impurity are coming in as a flood, and Anarchy raises its hated form in the land where all men are equal before the law. The lines between the church and the world are dim. Never did greater problems confront a council of the church."

Our luminous contemporary makes this brief comment upon the foregoing, but it sheds little light upon the matter. It says: "The difference between these two views of the progress of Christianity is noteworthy, but it may be due to a difference of individual temperament only."

The fact is that both clergymen are right. Catholicism is unquestionably gaining ground in this country, not by convincing the American intellect that the Catholic church is right, but by immigration of ignorant Catholics from Europe, and by the solidity of the church and its devotion to one principle, namely, her own supremacy. It is this solidity and control maintained over the individual Catholic which enables the Romish church to open state and county and town treasuries to her subsidy grabbers, and to acquire and hold exempt from taxation millions of dollars' worth of the most valuable property in the country. By the control of hundreds of thousands of votes she obtains parochial schools and whatever else she desires in those localities where she has colonized her members, or where natural causes hav forced them to settle in large numbers. This sharpness in politics and the foreign immigration hav certainly enabled the Romish church to how a wonderful gain. Cardinal Gibbons's exultation is not the result of a too sanguin temperament.

And if the cardinal's chuckle is the natural expression of a man tolerably sure of his facts, so is the Protestant preacher's lament the utterance of a man who has cause for grief. It must be apparent to everybody that Protestantism, in its creeds and beliefs, is slowly going to pieces. The convention before which this sermon was given has under consideration the revision of the prayer-book and the Episcopal creed. The Presbyterians set the example. Even Princeton orthodoxy is assimilating the evolution theory. Congregationalism long since became the refuge of the doctrinally unsound. Methodism—a church we do not expect to find very intellectually acute—is cautious about preaching hell. There are a good many Protestants who did not stop reasoning when they joined the church, and these are dragging Christianity along. Doctrinally, we find that the very churches whose fanatical members are doing their utmost to restore Puritanism to our statutes hav all grown away from the stern theology of their ancestors, an unquestioning belief in which was the bedrock on which the puritanical legislation was founded.

The "scoffs" of Celsus and Julian, too, hav never been answered; nor can the church reconcile scientific discoveries with any existing creed. To preserve her integrity she must retreat like the Catholic church into the citadel of faith and refuse to be enticed into the open fields of argument and investigation. To investigate is to find errors in all her assumed authorities; and when men reason they reject her dogmas. The "intellectual criticism of divine revelation" has stripped the revelation of its divinity, and deprived divinity of any revelation. Concretely, abstractly, doctrinally, and in every other way but temporally—and in the last considerably—Protestant Christianity in this country has gone to pieces in the last hundred years, and there is therefore very solid reason for the dejection of the clergyman quoted. The most sanguin of men, if truthful, must agree with the statements made in the first half of the paragraph quoted. The statements in the last half are the usual doleful lament of the clergy, and are in the nature of a storekeeper's bewailing the lack of custom. The people pass by our clergyman's store, and he accuses them of being impure and criminal. If the lines between the church and the world are dim it is because of the "worldliness" of the professing Christian, who makes a business of religion. And it is possible, too, that our clergyman's surprise that Anarchy has raised its head in a country where "all men are equal before the law" would be diminished if he set about making it a practical as well as theoretical truth that all men are equal before the law.

Christianity is going up and it is going down. The branch that is going up has a history at which men shudder. The branch that is going down has been as cruel as its power permitted, and nothing about it is so well calculated to benefit humanity as its decline.

Mr. Parsons of San Jose.

We heartily wish there were in this country a million Freethinkers like aged Samos Parsons, of San Jose, Cal. He believes in doing as well as talking, and having by prudent and hard work accumulated a fortune sufficient for his needs, though inadequate to his generosity, he is helping the cause along by spreading his wealth around among the needy. He sends us a list of his September benefactions:

S. Parsons's Donations for September, 1889.

To our Home Society in San Jose	$10 00
To aid Putnam's paper in San Francisco	10 00
To American Secular Union	10 00
To The Truth Seeker, N. Y.	5 00
To H. L. Green, Buffalo	5 00
To J. P. Mendum, Mass.	5 00
To J. R. Monroe, Ind.	5 00
To J. D. Shaw, Texas	5 00
To E. C. Walker, Kan.	5 00
To Ella E. Gibson, Mass.	5 00
To L. K. Washburn, Mass.	5 00
To Nellie Booth Simmons	5 00
To Elmina D. Slenker	5 00
To Jeremiah Hacker, N. J.	5 00
To Thomas Winter, Cincinnati, O.	5 00
To Hannibal, Mo., Moralists	5 00
Total	$95 00

Mr. Parsons had no idea that we should make this list public, but as we like to giv a man credit for his good acts while he is alive, we venture to print it. In his letter accompanying he makes a suggestion of which we cordially approve. He says:

"There ought to be a Fund established at every Freethought office for sending free and broadcast all over the land books, pamphlets, and specimen papers, as suggested in a late issue of the Investigator. That plan suits me, and I would contribute to the Fund all I am able. Our enemies spread their lies and delusions on this plan, and we should spread the antidote."

The list we print, which he calls "mites" sent to show his friendship and appreciation of the labors of the recipients, demonstrates Mr. Parsons's earnestness and belief in his own advice. We are quite willing, and undoubtedly all the other Freethought offices are equally willing, to receive money and use it for circulating Freethought literature. We guarantee that none would be wasted, and that a great big dollar's worth would be distributed for every dollar received.

Another paragraph of Mr. Parsons's letter we can as completely indorse as the foregoing. It is this:

"I hope the Freethinkers will do their duty and sustain the lecturers and publishers all over the country. I hope the Secular meeting at Philadelphia will be a success, and that the officials and leading men will meet in harmony, and not quarrel as they did in times past."

Those are worthy hopes; may they be fulfilled. A blessing for Horace Seaver's memory follows this, again indorsed by us, and then The Truth Seeker is exhorted:

"Wanamaker has got the medium Reid in his talons—say a good word for Reid. Also for Harman and Walker. Explain ghost-raising and slate-writing if you can. That is a wonderful phenomenon. It puzzles me."

The first part of this exhortation has been already attended to. The Messrs. Reid, and Harman and Walker, hav had many good words in The Truth Seeker, for we do not need to be reminded of the duty of speaking good words, and speaking them forcibly, for the victims of bigoted religious oppression. To say these words, however, is much easier than explaining ghost-raising. We hav had no experience with ghosts. But this may be a good place to say that we intend to shortly publish—either in these columns or in the Truth Seeker Annual for 1890—a full and truthful account of our investigation of slate-writing. A part of the story has been told by Mr. McArthur, but he did not see all that the Editor saw, nor hav the subsequent events been related. Slate-writing is certainly a curious phenomenon.

Long life and happy days to Mr. Parsons! His big heart and serene temper entitle him to the choicest blessings to be drawn from the glorious climate of California.

Our Sunday-School Administration.

Mr. A. J. Brown, a subscriber to The Truth Seeker at Ipswick, South Dakota, writes:

"I feel the inconvenience of the Sunday-school administration's manipulation of the mails, depriving me of the usual reading of your paper on the Sunday after its publication—it reaching me now Monday morning, whereas before the pious Wanamaker's accession to office it always reached me Sunday morning."

This is the practical result of having a man in office who places his church above the government. If Holy John would confine his hypocritical pisty to his Philadelphia Sunday-school, no one would find fault with his pretensions to sanctity. But when he uses his power as a United States official to fasten a theocracy upon the people of the country, it is time to protest, though we suppose that until he is ridiculed out of office we must submit, as he is backed up by another churchman higher in power than himself. At present Puritanism is in the ascendant at Washington.

Liberal Hall, at Waco, Texas, was destroyed by fire on the 5th instant. The loss falls chiefly upon Mr. Shaw, as the insurance does not nearly cover the value. The building was erected in 1882 by the Religious and Benevolent Association of Waco, aided by Liberals from other places. About a year ago Mr. Shaw acquired control, by purchase, of the stock, and so virtually owned it. The loss is a severe one to him, but he will not forsake his post, and intends to rebuild in brick. He means to stand by the cause, and continue his work, in spite of the burning of the hall wherein for seven years he has talked to the Liberals of Texas. He thinks there are, he told a Day reporter, enough Liberals in the state to coöperate with him in the work and make Liberal Hall, as heretofore, a place where Freethought and ethical culture can be taught or discussed, without let or hindrance, for all time to come, and without disturbing anybody else or interfering with anybody's rights or pursuit of happiness. And Liberals from other states are not debarred from lending a hand if they feel so disposed. Liberals everywhere will sympathize with the talented and courageous worker fo mental liberty.

Letters from Friends.

CINCINNATI, O., Sept. 29, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to make this appeal. American fellow citizens, will you suffer yourselvs to be ruled by a foreign despot, a crafty and plotting priest of Rome, who is seeking the destruction of this great and free republic and the enslavement of its people, who hav enjoyed human liberty, bequeathed to us by the fathers of this grand nation? Oh, shall it ever be accomplished? I think I hear the grand and mighty multitude, millions and millions in number, with a roar of voices crying, "No, no, no, never, never!" The miserable traitor who seeks the extinction of the blood-bought liberties of this republic must and shall be repelled by any and every force that free men can and will use against so tyrannical a foe. T. WINTER.

DES MOINES, IA., Sept. 29, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $7.50. There is a fourth party who promises to giv a yearly subscription soon, probably within a month, and I will see this gets to you as soon as he gets around to it. There is occasionally something found in the "old book" that has a practical application, and one passage, notably, is, "The whole need not a physician, but the sick." This is the case with those who take a Liberal paper like THE TRUTH SEEKER, because its contents are in accord with their convictions. They read and are interested because they are Liberal already. The case makes no new convert to Liberalism; it merely gratifies an old one; while if, after reading THE TRUTH SEEKER, the reader would inclose it to some one who is still in "the gall of bitterness and bond of iniquity" of antiquated error, he might prove a veritable missionary to some practical and desiderated effect. If Liberalism is not aggressiv, it will make slow progress. Its tenets must be put in the way of those of a present different belief, and if examined, it will weaken the old and may ultimately lead into higher and clearer perceptions of truth. V. C. TAYLOR.

SODOM, O., Sept. 25, 289.

MR. EDITOR: I would like to hear from some good Materialist, one that is able and willing to speak at the funerals of deceased Liberals at this place when called upon. There are only four Liberals in this part of the country, and if death comes upon any one of us, we would like to hav some Liberal friend speak at the funeral, as none of us would like to hav a long-faced hell-fire pedler speak over us when we are dead. Of course they would like the job, or rather, the $10, to preach over an Infidel, as they call us. But we are not going to let them do it, because it hurts the advance of Freethought. I am sorry to say it does not advance very fast around here; there are too many people who will not reason. As soon as one speaks against the Bible they leave his company, with the remark, "I am afraid to be where you are for fear that the almighty will strike you dead." Then they tell their beloved pastor what was said, and he pulls him over the coals the next Sunday; but he takes good care to keep out of the way for some time. We want to show Christians that we are not afraid to die. That is the reason I would like to hear from some Liberal.

R. A. WEBB.

DAVENPORT, WASH., Sept. 10, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for about a year. Liberalism has got a start here and is progressing. The first Freethought lectures at Davenport were given by S. P. Putnam last November, nearly a year ago, at which half a dozen clergymen attended, thinking to lay the Infidel speaker out flat so that he would be forever squelched. But they were unable to sustain a single argument or point. This year we hav had three Liberal lecturers here. First, Mrs. F. C. Reynolds delivered a course of three lectures in June, which were much appreciated by all who heard her. Then S. P. Putnam came next, and gave us three of his excellent lectures. The clergy who fought him a year ago did not come out to hear him at any of the lectures this time, which evidently shows that they were defeated in their attempt to use up Mr. Putnam last year. Yesterday W. S. Bell left us, after having given us a course of three lectures. He made a profound impression, although he is very much given to making his audience laugh. Mr. Bell is a grand, good speaker, and will be welcomed here again whenever he can make it convenient to visit Davenport. H. L. WILSON.

MOTUPIPI, GOLDEN BAY, NELSON,
NEW ZEALAND, Sept. 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKERS for July to hand. The number for the 20th contains an article entitled, "The Lady of the Club," by Helen H. Gardener. I was so pleased with it that I cannot refrain from tendering my thanks and unqualified satisfaction for the masterly and able manner in which the writer has laid bare the gulf that separates wealth from poverty. Such an exposition of the extreme selfishness of wealth on the one hand, and of devoted and sublime attachment on the other, cannot but inspire the hope that the keynote has been struck that will ultimately lead up to the destruction of those social barriers that divide wealth and poverty; and also awaken the intelligent wealth of the nation to the fact that they are their brothers' keepers and protectors. The cries of humanity will yet urge with stinging force the brotherhood of man and social dependence of all. The heroin of the story is a typical character and ennobles her sex.

In the number for July 6th is an editorial, "We Giv the Devil His Due." Your subscribers should be more than satisfied with this clear, concise, and and incisiv reply to "two very much respected friends," re the chief postmaster. It is also an article that inspires confidence in a representativ medium of Freethought principles.

I notice that one or two of your correspondents advise how THE TRUTH SEEKER should be conducted. With all due respect for their well-meant intentions, it is yet very evident that such a course would end in pleasing none; it would be a decided case of the old man and his donkey.

Yours fraternally, THOMAS HARWOOD.

UPPER MATTOLE, CAL., Sept. 20, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: In a late issue of your paper, under the date of August 10th, on the subject of "Total Church Exemptions," I see you hav made an error in stating that church property to the amount of $7,404,235 is exempt from taxation in California. I think that since this state has been admitted into the Union churches hav always been taxed.

California has been under two state constitutions consecutivly, the one beginning in 1849 and continuing till 1879, and the other beginning at the ending of the former, and continuing to the present.

The old constitution, which was adopted in 1849, has in section 13, article xi, of the Miscellaneous Provisions, the following:

> Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state. All property in this state shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law; but assessors and collectors of town, county, and state taxes shall be elected by the qualified electors of the district, county, or town in which the property taxed for state, county, or town purposes is situated.

This is all I can see concerning this subject in the old constitution, and from it I can glean nothing to make me think that church property was exempted.

The new constitution, dating at the ending of the old, has the following enactment under the head of Revenue and Taxation, article xiii, section 1:

> All property in the state not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. The word "property," as used in this article and section, is hereby declared to include moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, dues, franchises, and all other matters and things, real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership; provided, that growing crops, property used exclusivly for public schools, and such as may belong to the United States, this state, or to any county or municipal corporation within this state, shall be exempt from taxation. The legislature may provide, except in case of credits secured by mortgage or trust deed, for a deduction from credits of debts due to bona fide residents of this state.

California takes the lead of other states in liberty, equality, learning, and advancement, and no other people in the world are more law-abiding. No state in the Union or no municipality in the world has ever made the advancement California has in a few years. Church property is taxed! and we hav no Sunday laws! W. T. S. H.

[The list used was compiled before California adopted her new constitution. That state should not be included, though church property is still partly exempt in the state, as the assessors in some places value only the ground the building stands on, and not the building itself. It is a characteristic Christian swindle and should be taken into the courts wherever it occurs.—ED. T. S.]

COLUMBUS, KAN., Oct. 2, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: For fifty years I hav been an advocate of the rights of labor and the equitable distribution of its products. I hav lived in this county nearly twenty years, and I hope that my labors with hands, tongue, and pen hav been a blessing to it. I hav many faults, but no one who knows me can say, truthfully, that I am a liar or a hypocrit. I hav tried to deal justly and honestly with my fellow-men. I want to know the truth and liv it as far as I can. I stand with Thomas Jefferson for the rights of man, religiously as well as politically. A human belief or opinion is not necessarily true and good because it is old and popular; it is not necessarily false and bad because new and unpopular, either in the physical or mental world. I hav always advocated, often to my great cost, and I always shall advocate, what I believe to be true and for human good, if I stand alone and suffer persecution and misrepresentation as I always hav. "I would rather be right than be president," as Henry Clay said.

As far as I understand the purposes of the Farmers' Alliance I am with them, i. e., in obtaining a just compensation for the products of their labor. When they interfere with and question me as to my private opinions, and make them a test for my admission to their order, I protest. If I should make application for membership I could not be admitted. Why? They would first ask me if I "believe in a supreme being." I should hav to say no, most conscientiously and sincerely. In the name of our boasted liberty, in the name of my natural and individual rights, in the name of that right and freedom of conscience given me in the Constitution of the United States, what right has the Farmers' Alliance, a secular and material order, to ask me that question? What right hav they to play the inquisitor and debar me from membership because I do not with them believe what to me is an impossibility and absurdity? With as much sense and justice might a club of ballplayers refuse me membership because I do not see causes and effects in this great infinit all as they do. Is there any need of it? Hav I not the same right to ask them questions which hav nothing to do with the purposes of their order? What if they still believe in the popular but, to me, absurd and impossible theory of a personal God and creation, while I, with many noble men and women, believe in evolution, and that space, matter, and motion never had a beginning, are self sustaining and perpetuating by their inherent and eternal forces, and will never cease; that only forms and organisms change and come to an end? All this, facts and science are more and more proving. Is it necessary to believe in inhuman absurdities to be good and honest? Hav Infidels no rights that Christians are bound to respect? They never hav had their natural and political rights. Yet Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Franklin, Paine, and other founders of our godless Constitution were Deists and Atheists. I would not be allowed my testimony in the Arkansas courts and those of many other states because I am not orthodox. A man's abstract belief in some old myth or dogma, creed or assumption, is of more importance to the sectarian bigot than his truthful and honest life. Ninety-five per cent of all our criminals believe in supreme being. A great effort is now being made to ge God into the Constitution, pass a national Sunday law, and other laws subversiv of human rights and liberty and the Constitution. General Washington in his treaty with Tripoli, said, "Our government is not founded upon religion." He and his noble compatriots designed and desired that church and state should be kept apart. They well knew the dark and bloody history of the past, and that one hundred millions of men, women, and children had been sacrificed and put to death in the name of God and religion. It is a lamentable fact that church and state are more and more courting each other; priests and politicians playing into each other's hands, the former to get money and the latter to get votes, and I fear that between them they will "kill the goose to get the golden egg," and that we shall hav to say as Dr. Franklin said in the darkest hour of the American Revolution, "The sun of liberty is set."

> O Liberty! thou wast undone;
> Wast from thy nativ country driven,
> When tyranny eclipsed the sun,
> And blotted out the stars of heaven.

PROF. J. H. COOK.

COAL VALLEY, W. VA., Sept. 25, 1889.

TO THE MOST REV. JAMES GIBBONS, ARCHBISHOP OF BALTIMORE: In the twenty-fourth edition of your book, "The Faith of Our Fathers," I find the following lines, concerning which I wish to giv you my ideas through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER. In the first part of the ninth chapter, "The Primacy of Peter," you say, "I may state that in the old law the high priest appointed by almighty God filled an office analogous to that of pope in the new law. In the Jewish church there were priests and Levites ordained to minister at the altar; and there was also a supreme ecclesiastical tribunal, with the high priest at its head. All matters of religious controversy were referred to this tribunal, and in the last resort, to the high priest, whose decision was enforced under pain of death." And a little further on in the same chapter you say: "We must, therefore, find in the church of Christ a spiritual judge, exercising the same supreme authority as the high priest wielded in the old law. For, if a supreme pontiff was necessary in the Mosaic dispensation to maintain purity and uniformity of worship, the same dignitary is equally necessary now to preserve unity of faith." Now, if I rightly understand, this is the pith and core of your doctrin concerning church government. And do not you think it barbarous? Do not you think that, if the pope should condemn a man or woman to be killed because they would not accept his decisions on religion, he would be rather cruel, to say the least? Now, I shall not in this letter ask you any questions concerning the past deeds of the Roman Catholic church. But, by way of illustration, we will suppose that there has been a Protestant church whose origin dates back some ten thousand years ago, whose doctrin was and is that if any person or persons raise any dispute, or begin to teach any other doctrin than the doctrin of this church, they should be brought before the highest bishop of the church, who would tell them what to believe and what to teach, and if they did not accept the bishop's decision death would be their lot. Would you not cry out, "Oh, that murderous bishop?" Mr. Gibbons, would you not call me a murderer if I should say that you ought to be put to death because you do not believe as I do?

Now, then, turn back and study what you and your church are teaching, and tell me and the world if it is not murder. You are making an idol of your church, and you would like to make everyone kneel under pain of death at the feet of that idol. Is this what you call religious liberty—the liberty to be a Roman Catholic and liv, or to die if you advocate any other religious doctrins? Mr. Gibbons, you trace your religious doctrins back to the ancient barbarians, and claim that they were "appointed by almighty God." God never has "appointed" or inspired one tribe of barbarians to murder an individual or another tribe because of a difference on the subject of religion or any other subject. This doctrin of yours and your church, Mr. Gibbons, is not an American idea. It is not a common-sense idea, and it is not a scientific idea, but it is a brutal, barbarous, and fiendish idea. It is not the spirit of God, but the spirit of the devil, who leads you and the pope to teach that men should be put "under pain of death" to make them accept your creed. You know that any man who cannot argue on the subject of religion without getting mad is a mean and ill-mannerly man, much less than to advocate the idea that God has "appointed" a few, or even one man, to dictate to all the rest on religion, and force them "under pain of death" to accept his decisions. Do you think that the sensible and thinking Americans will accept such doctrin? Do you think that the American people will accept such idolatry? You idolize your church, then tell us that God has "appointed" the pope to murder people if they will not worship that idol. Do you comprehend what a grand traitor this doctrin makes you, standing on the American soil, enjoying the extreme religious liberty which the American people hav given you, while you are demanding them to yield up their government, their civil and religious liberty, and lay them all down at the feet of the pope? You cannot be loyal to the American government, Mr. Gibbons, and advocate Roman Catholicism. Now, Mr. Gibbons, while I am freely discussing this point of religion, remember that I am intending no personal insult, because it is not a personal question. Now, while I hope the good Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER will giv me space, I hope he will also giv you space for your reply to me, which I hope you will giv at your very earliest opportunity. Very kindly yours, JOEL B. SMITH.

PORTSMOUTH, O., Sept. 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Old thoughts are dying and new ones are constantly being born. The cemetery of the past is crowded with, and the burying-plot of the present contains a few of, the ideas of the barbaric and superstitious. It is the thoughts of the great fighters of life's army, those who prefer intellectual freedom to that impossible conception of being "born again;" who accept the good wherever found and reject the bad; who favor the temple of learning, the school-house, to the cathedral, filled with "graven images" and subjects who bow to the "powers that be;" who practice the religion of doing right; who believe in the bathtub gospel, whose immersion is cleanliness, health, and life—their thoughts it is that are eternal, that are the assassins of the church's cruel lies. They are steam-engin, hose-reel, and pipe-man—they are a great big fire company, so to speak, who hav stretched their lines of hose, and turned their sprays upon that fiery patent, called hell, upon the lurid face of which is written the names of patentee and general distributing agent, the former the Christian's God, commonly called "Jehovah," and the latter his satanic majesty, autographically written "Old Satan." According to the evidence, this pair of eternal patent-right individuals hav been working jointly, you might say, for about six thousand years, and the evidence of which I speak is claimed to hav been written or dictated by the senior member of the firm, the inventor and maker of all that is. Satan, the junior member, has never written a word. He has put in his time distributing the patent named hell, that is, the manufacturer of the same finds the buyer, picks him out, and Satan sees to it that a bargain is made. As a result, the really good, the innocent of earth, hav been the purchasers, and they form a vast majority of mankind. The proprietor of bloodhounds that tracked the fleeing slave, the polygamous, the seducers, the vile and vicious, the murderers and wife-beaters, these hav been "born again," given a keen perception as to the trickery and cheating devices made use of by the great Jehovah, thus steering clear of purchasing a right to hell, and instead, stealing a crown and harp, and taking a seat in the big game on high, where all are of a kind, and where they follow suit to the letter. A careful consideration of the evidence shows me that, of the two, Jehovah and the devil, the latter is the best. The former has murdered, made promises that were never fulfilled, scattered broadcast the seeds of discord, and starved mothers and babes. He is an eternal tyrant, who gloats over the frailties of the human race, of whom the evidence says he is the creator.

> In the sweet silence of the night we look
> Up to the open sky, and there we see
> The myriad stars from out our nook
> Of earth; for more it does not seem to be > Within the space of great infinity.
>
> One of the many of the worlds in air;
> Its voyage making, ever sailing free
> Around its nourisher, the sun; and fair
> Is all and beautiful; and what are we
> But passengers in voyage to eternity?

True it is, "life is but a vale between the barren peaks of two eternities." The world is a wondrous ship, and we are its passengers. The ship is safe enough. Nature is in command and

> Does not let it swerve or dip
> From out its course, nor other let intrude;
> But safely on, through vast infinitude, far from the tracks of others in the same, the old ship plows its way, heedless alike of storms and sunshine, of billows and of the placid calm, anchoring for each and every one in that harbor of dreamless and sweet rest, the grave.

Before concluding, I desire to say that Moses Schloss, one of God's chosen people, who keeps a grocery in this city, a decent, orderly place, as much so as the synagog, the cathedral, or the church, has been arrested for keeping his business going on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, and has been fined $10 and costs. This honest old Jew, true to his own religious belief, closes his doors on what he believes to be the Sabbath, viz., Saturday, and sells on Sunday, the day on which hypocrits bury their faces in cushioned seats, and the preachers say "amen" to godly lies and psalms, and for so doing he is drawn up before Portsmouth's mayor, George A. Waller, decided by him a guilty man, and punished. The justice of this I cannot see. Mayor Waller, being an Episcopalian with one lung, might observe it, but as for me I cannot.

The sky-pilots of this city are acquainted with me and my belief. I am convinced from the cool manner in which several recognize me as we pass by that they really and truly hate me. By their little stingy nods that won't bear interest, they display a Christian spirit similar to the individual who, when clothed as a divine one, said unto his mother: "Woman, do not touch me!" Right here let me say that for Jesus Christ regarded in the light of reason, as a man, as flesh and blood, I hav respect and words of praise. So regarded, his last words, "My God! why hast thou forsaken me?" excite the pity of mankind. They hav a meaning vast, and touch deep into the hearts of men. As for the advocates of the Christian religion, spoken of above, who make use of pomp and popish title, they hav my sympathy. The good, if any they do, I admire, and I feel for them when, to suit their congregation, they are compelled to express an untruth. If I was poor and starving, would they help me? Would they extend the hand of charity? Would they place the cup to my parched and heated lips? Would they feed me? These are questions I hav often thought about. Were they to be deserted, cast aside, and trampled upon, I would not hesitate a moment to assist and do all in my power to help them rise again. I like to see a man on his feet, upright, fearless, and courageous. Let the hand go forth to the drunkard in the gutter, let him feel friendship's warm grasp, assist him to his feet and spread before him the splendid possibilities of the future. Turn not your back upon any who are fallen, who lie by the wayside. Remember that each and every one is some mother's darling. Perhaps the mother may be sleeping in the cemetery. Let your mind revert, picture that mother in life, a living, breathing soul, with a heart of love, and do exactly for her darling as she would do. It was not many months ago, when a young man was turned out of the Ohio penitentiary. His health had been broken by the confinement, and he walked forth a free man an object of pity. As he took his departure from the institution the parting words of the chaplain (to his lasting credit be it said) were: "Lead an honest life; don't go crooked." And this chaplain gave the young fellow a letter of introduction to one of the ministers of this city. He came on to Portsmouth and called at the parson's house. He rang the door bell, and the minister came to the door in person. The letter of introduction was handed him. He read it and immediately slammed the door in the face of his caller, an insult which showed the blackness of his interior. The young man was afterward picked up by several Liberals and provided for, and to-day I understand he is in the northern part of the state making an honest living and expressing his honest thoughts. WILL S. ANDRES.

IPAVA, ILL., Oct. 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I noticed the question asked in THE TRUTH SEEKER, No. 39, "Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?" A man cannot be a Christian unless he believes the Bible to be the word of God, not the work of men; and to believe the Bible one would hav to believe in slavery. The Emancipation proclamation proves to the world that Lincoln did not believe in slavery. Therefore he did not believe the Bible and could not hav been a Christian. "Uncle Abe" was no doubt a "loving pantheist." I will here quote from Carpenter's "Inner Life of Abraham Lincoln," page 192:

> At the time of the nomination at Chicago (1860) Mr. Newton Bateman, superintendent of public instruction for the state of Illinois, occupied a room adjoining and opening into the executiv chamber at Springfield. Frequently his door was open during Mr. Lincoln's receptions, and through the seven months or more of his occupation he saw him every day. Often when Mr. Lincoln was tired he closed the door against all intrusion, and called Mr. Bateman into his room for a quiet talk. On one of these occasions Mr. Lincoln took up a book containing a careful canvass of the city of Springfield in which he lived, showing the candidate for whom each citizen had declared it his intention to vote in the approaching election. Mr. Lincoln's friends had, doubtless at his own request, placed the result of the canvass in his hands. This was toward the close of October and only a few days before election. Calling Mr. Bateman to a seat by his side, having previously locked all the doors, he said: "Let us look over this book; I wish particularly to see how the ministers of Springfield are going to vote." The leaves were turned, one by one, and as the names were examined Mr. Lincoln frequently asks if this one and that were not a minister or an elder or a member of such church, and sadly expressed his surprise on receiving an affirmativ answer. In that manner they went through the book, and then he closed it and sat silently for some minutes, regarding a memorandum in pencil which lay before him. At length he turned to Mr. Bateman with a face full of sadness, and said: "Here are twenty-three ministers of different denominations, and all of them are against me but three, and here are a great many prominent members of the churches, a very large majority are against me. Mr. Bateman, I am not a Christian. God knows I would be one; but I hav carefully read the Bible, and I do not understand this book," and he drew forth a pocket New Testament. "These men well know," he continued, "that I am for freedom in the territories, freedom everywhere as far as the Constitution and the laws will permit, and that my opponents are for slavery. They know this, and yet, with this book in their hands, in the light of which human bondage cannot liv a moment, they are going to vote against me. I do not understand it all." Here Mr. Lincoln paused, paused for long minutes, his features surcharged with emotion.

Here we hav Mr. Lincoln's own statement that he was not a Christian, and according to all reports concerning his loving nature, he was, as Mr. Field so truthfully said of Col. R. G. Ingersoll, too kindhearted to be a Christian. Some children grow larger than their parents, so Mr. Lincoln grew larger than the Bible God. As the eagle soars above the little field mouse, so Lincoln was above the preachers in Springfield.

I am fully convinced that there should be a Liberal political party formed by the next presidential campaign to test the strength of the number who are for mental liberty, who are for humanity. While we hav had many good men in the presidential chair, history points to Jefferson and Lincoln as being equal or superior to the best. I would like to see Colonel Ingersoll chief magistrate before he falls into his long sleep. He has done more to civilize the world than any one living man, and it would be simple justice to make him president of the greatest country under the sun.

I will also say here a few words further on another matter. See in Vol. XVI, No. 22, June 1, 1889, a brief article on Heston's cartoons and the fall of Jericho, by Ella E. Gibson. In that article she traces the genealogy of Christ to Rahab the harlot, who was saved from the great horn disaster at Jericho. So much, so good. Miss Gibson has given a correct statement of facts which are new to many readers. Such facts taken from history are hard for the credulous to contend with. Rahab was a bad woman, if reports concerning her are true. Rahab married Salmon and became the mother of Boaz, who married Ruth the gleaner. Ella Gibson could hav gone back further and not found anything that would elevate one's opinion of Jesus Christ's ancestry, or any of the Bible characters. She could hav gone back three hundred years earlier, or seventeen hundred and fifty years before Christ, and hav found recorded in the thirty-eighth chapter of Genesis—please read it—the record of a good man, Juda by name, who was a noted sheep-shearer in his time. This excellent man Juda was a man of note, a man of command, a man who in a peculiar manner, not elevating, became the father of two sons who had a scarlet string, a ring, and a staff associated with their birth. The mother in the case was sister to her own children. These children, born in this wicked manner, were better than their father or grandfather Jacob. These two boys, Zerah and Pharez, grew to manhood and became the head of two great houses. The house of Pharez was eminently distinguished in the reign of David. Who was this man Juda, the mighty shearer of sheep? He was the fourth son of Jacob by Leah. If Laban had not played the trick on Jacob, we would not hav had a Juda—Jacob the deceiver being the son of Isaac and Rebekah, and Isaac being the son of Abraham, who told a fib and gave his wife to another man to save his own head. Here we hav a chain running from Abraham to Christ and from Christ back to Abraham, every link being welded in blood and crime, the most heinous crimes which hav ever been perpetrated upon an ignorant, superstitious people. Then what wonder that we find some of the greatest, gentler minds condemning the book and coming over on the side of reason and common sense?

The lives of such men as the best Bible characters are degrading and contaminating to a pure man or woman.

How can any possessed of reason expect progression while they hold such lewd and cruel men up as models? Why, the average citizen at the present time is superior in virtue and morals to the very best at that time. The only thing worthy of note in all that cruel, barbarous—yea, horrid—history is that Christ according to the report was better than his ancestry. This givs encouragement to go on.

That ridiculous old book should be laid upon the highest shelf in the library for boys and girls to read when they hav grown to manhood and womanhood; for no other purpose than to show them the evolution of the mind, the great change in custom, the much-needed development in morality and virtue. To teach that such an obscene and unphilosophical book emanated from God would hav a tendency to lead every good man and woman, if they were reasonable, to hate God—if there is a God. Any system of religion that shocks the mind of a child cannot be a true system. Any belief or religious system that teaches repentance for crime is unjust and false. Any man or woman that will labor to inculcate into the mind of a child a religion that has a golden crown for the repenter and a lake of fire for the moralist is a promulgator of crime. To teach that crime can be forgiven is a crime within itself, leading people to seek revenge and then their savior. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth. I come not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father and the daughter against her mother. If any man come to me and hate not his father and mother and wife and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." If Christ said the above, he was not a good man. I do not believe he said all things recorded of him. He was better than the historians made him. He was betrayed and crucified by the followers of God.

In Ex. xxiv we read that "Moses and Aaron and seventy of the elders of Israel saw the God of Israel." Then we read in John iv, "No man has seen God at any time." Now, what do we learn by two such statements in the book said to be the word of God? It is either a Bible fabrication, a cunningly devised fable, or else Moses, Aaron, and seventy of the elders of Israel were not men. Now, taking into consideration many of the sayings reported to hav been the sayings of Christ, the savior eternal, and the chain of evidence relativ to his ancestry, the scarlet string of Pharez and the scarlet rag of Rahab, we surely came very nearly being minus a savior, the lion of the tribe of Juda.

To know that there are millions of dollars paid out yearly to hav this chain of blood and crime held up before a guiltless people is galling, to say the least.

There is money enough paid for repeating those awful deeds to educate every poor boy and girl in the land.

It is simply awful to contemplate the chicanery practiced upon a misguided and too credulous people. Any man or woman preaching such a system is as a parasite feasting upon the hard earnings of the honest poor. There are no class of people who giv so little for the money paid them as the gospel-pounders. Many men and women stint their children in food and raiment to keep their credit good with the "reverend" and be popular with the church. This is wrong. But there is a great light breaking in on the intellect of mankind. It is shining brighter every day. "Reason is the supreme test." The brain is better than the cross. The greatest question now is, How can the people universally be taught to see clearly? The question, Is the Bible the word of God? does not giv us the least concern. But how to brush the "cobwebs of superstition" from the eyes of the credulous is a study within itself to be answered in the future. It does not seem that any man or woman capable of reasoning, capable of connecting the chain of history, could believe the Bible to be other than the work of man. If there is one individual associated with the book that we feel more sorry for, that we pity more than another, it is John the Revelator. We hav often wondered what he ate or drank that made him hav such spells. We hav known men who saw snakes, but John saw the whole animal kingdom.

THE TRUTH SEEKER and the scientific writers and associations are doing a wonderful work. Let the wave move on until it becomes gigantic, crowning every brow with the most beautiful wreath, Reason! May philosophy and reason ever stand as a monumental warning to the credulous and a beacon light to the thoughtful! C. S. RANDOLPH.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight.
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Old Jones is Dead.

I sat in my window, high overhead,
And heard them say, below in the street:
"I suppose you know that old Jones is dead?"
Then the speakers passed and I heard their feet
Heedlessly walking their onward way.
"Dead!" What more could there be to say?

But I sat and pondered what it might mean
Thus to be dead while the world went by.
Did Jones see farther than we hav seen?
Was he one with the stars in the watching sky?
Or down there under the growing grass
Did he hear the feet of the daylight pass?

Were day-time and night-time as one to him now,
And grieving and hoping a tale that is told?
A kiss on his lips, or a hand on his brow,
Could he feel them under the churchyard mold,
As he surely had felt them his whole life long,
Though they passed with his youthtime hot and strong?

They called him "Old Jones" when at last he died;
"Old Jones" he had been for many a year;
Yet his faithful memory time defied,
And dwelt in the days so distant and dear,
When first he had found that love was sweet,
And recked not the speed of its hurrying feet.

Does he brood in the long night under the sod
On the joys and sorrows he used to know;
Or far in some wonderful world of God,
Where the shining seraphs stand, row on row,
Does he wake like a child at the daylight's gleam,
And know that the past was a short night's dream?

Is he dead, and a clod there down below,
Or dead and wiser than any alive—
Which? Ah, who of us all may know,
Or who can say how the dead folk thrive?
But the summer morning is cool and sweet,
And I hear the live folk laugh on the street.

—Selected.

Notice.

TWO PRIZES OF FIVE DOLLARS EACH.

Through the kindness of a friend and patron of the Children's Corner the editor is enabled to make the following offers:

Five dollars for the best scientific essay, and

Five dollars for the best Liberal story, which shall be founded upon some local event, in which, however, the words God, Christ, Devil, or Religion, shall not occur.

Essay and story shall each contain not less than fifteen hundred and not more than two thousand words.

Competitors must be under eighteen years of age.

Manuscripts are to be sent in by the 1st of January, 1890.

All communications must be forwarded direct to the editor of the Corner, whose address is at the top of the first column of this page.

Something to Remember.

"If you were to stop up all the sewers of a great city, what would be the result?" was the question asked recently by an eminent physician in his lecture before a class in medicin.

"Foul gases, chills, fever, and death would result," responded one of the students.

"You are right," responded the doctor. "Therefore, look after your own body and the bodies of your patients. Keep the sewer traps of the body—the liver and kidneys—wide open, especially during the summer. Many a life has been saved by the purchase of three compound cathartic pills and the use of them."

There is a gold mine of health in that simple proposition. Let the reader paste this in his hat and chisel it deep in his memory.

No Flies on Him.

A lady opposed to corporal punishment visited a school, not in a fashionable part of the city, just as a boy was being flogged. Before going away she spoke to the culprit, and asked him to come and see her on a certain evening, promising to make it pleasant for him. At the appointed hour a boy, dressed in his best, came, and for an hour and more the lady and her daughter laid themselvs out to amuse him. Then the lady began to speak of the importance of good behavior and obedience to rules, when the boy interrupted her: "Oh, I ain't that feller! He gi'me ten cents to come instider him."

Correspondence.

WARREN, O., Oct. 7, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: You will no doubt see that the writer is a stranger in THE TRUTH SEEKER, or Children's Corner. Yet I hav felt for a long time that I would like to write a letter for your paper. I hav the privilege of reading it each week. Mr. Thomas Douglas, of our city, brings it and the Investigator here for me to read. He is a man seventy-six years old, and a dear, good old soul, too.

I was not raised by Christian parents, as my mother is a Radical Spiritualist, and so is my grandmother.

My mother and myself liv with my grandparents. My grandpa's name is Royal Rogers. He is not a Christian either, but I don't know what to call him, because he doesn't express himself; so a person can't determin what to call him, but I do know that he never goes to church, and was never known to giv any wealth to the church's benefit.

I am thirteen years old, and I go to school, and also take lessons on the violin, and my teacher said I was doing nicely.

I hav a piece of poetry which is original. I will send it to you, and if you consider it good enough to publish in the Children's Corner, you may do so.

As this is my first letter to you, I will not write a very long one, but will close it. At some future time I expect to write another. So, my friend, good-bye.

Yours for truth BIRD C. RUSSELL.

A GIRL'S TASKS.

My girl friends, I must to you explain
This thought, which before me many days has lain;
'Tis this—that boys hav easy work,
And not one place can we girls shirk.

The first thing is our breakfast to get;
During this time we must our table set.
When all is ready, we must call the boy
Who nothing does, so he can this enjoy.

Now, in the place of "we," I use the letter "I,"
For I don't want to cause any little friend to sigh.
Methinks I hear you say, "There is one or two, I know,
That play as much as boys, and stand as good a show."

Next come those dreadful dishes I must clean;
I meditate, and on my elbow lean,
And wonder why boys don't do indoors work,
Where the chances would be slim for them to shirk.

I find that sitting still won't do this work,
So I make things get around here in a jerk.
Dishes washed and all put in order,
Pantry shelvs paper-trimmed with scalloped border—

Oh, dear! that sweeping must be done!
I wish I could in the meadows run!
Boys can enjoy this fine air
Playing ball, which girls would love to share.

Beds to make? Yes, every day;
No time for this girl to play—
It's nothing but work, work, work,
While boys can shirk, shirk, shirk.

Now the canary birds must be fed;
Just look! this floor, the feathers they hav shed!
I wish that all the birds were free,
They would feel much better, and make less work for me.

There go the boys with all their toys,
And here I am with household joys;
It makes me turn my nose with spite
And almost feel I'll take my flight.

Now girls may dig from morn till night—
Does anybody think it right
To see a girl tied up so close
With something that she never chose?

It's crimping this, or ironing that,
Or trimming up a new street hat—
Seldom an hour she gets to read,
It makes no difference if she plead.

While boys hav any time to read,
Or the horses they may speed;
Now, I can't see why this is always thus,
Can't some one help me make a fuss?

Cause the boys to work indoors awhile,
I'll venture they will hardly smile;
Giv them the work the girls are taking,
If not done right, giv them a shaking.

Giv them the chance the cake to make,
And just the same the bread to bake,
And don't forget to sweep the rooms,
Furnish them with brand-new brooms;

Scrimp them not of soap and water—
I expect they would the dishes slaughter—
But the time would come when they would learn
The wheel of housework well to turn.

I feel the chances are poor; at least, I see
From household duties I cannot flee,
But while at work my brain does whirl,
All because I am a girl.

I learn there is no other way,
For girls must work, and boys must play—
Must be content, for that's my lot.
I'll scrub and dig, yes, every spot.

A consolation now, I see quite plain
Where boys o'er girls hav a little gain,
When they want your company, they must ask!
It must for them be an awful task!

How many times they get badly smitten
And they feel as meek as any kitten!

So I must feel consoled, for this is my fate,
And settle down to work, because it's getting late—
Water must be brought, and dinner must be got,
So I'll giv way to only solid thought.

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

Science Column.

Steam.

Water at all temperatures givs off vapor, and steam is the vapor of water. The surface particles or drops of water are changed to steam, slowly or quickly, according to the temperature of the body or bulk of water, and the surrounding atmosphere. If you heat water in an open or uncovered vessel, the vapor arising combines with the air at once. When it begins to boil the pressure of the vapor is equal to the pressure of the atmosphere. Air is pushed aside, and the steam arises and floats away in a mass.

Steam when it is quite free from particles of water is dry, and cannot be seen with the naked eye. Real steam is a gas.

Steam is a powerful and wonderful agent. The evaporation of a cubic inch of water at 212° is said to be almost equal to that of raising a ton a foot. The application of steam is now in all parts of the civilized world, and it would seem that we could hardly get along without it. It propels railway cars, heats houses and public buildings, keeps machinery in motion in large shops and factories, and sends great ships across the ocean.

The steam engin is a mighty invention, and the thought of many minds has brought it to its present great beauty, ingenuity, and usefulness.

Hero, who lived 250 B.C., had a crude idea of the steam engin, but the time of its very first application to practical work is not definitly known.

The name of James Watt is associated with the modern application of steam to real uses. This man was born in Greenock, Scotland, in 1736. He always had great love for scientific pursuits, and early developed inventiv genius. He was but fourteen when he made an electrical machine, and then he began to show a natural taste for the making of mathematical instruments, which was the trade he followed.

He was always studious, and was looked upon when a boy as a "dreamer." He would sit for hours silent and thoughtful. The Scotch people are very practical, and the friends of young Watt could see little good in the boy who would go "mooning around," as they said, from morn till night. His aunt, Mrs. Muirhead, is reported to hav said to him upon one occasion: "James Watt! I never saw such an idle boy. Take a book, or employ yourself usefully. For the last half hour you hav not spoken a word, but taken off the lid of that kettle and put it on again, holding now a cup and now a silver spoon over the steam, watching how it rises from the spout, and catching and connecting the drops of hot water it falls into. Are you not ashamed of spending your time in this way?"

James Watt was then fifteen. How little did the aunt dream that she was talking to one of the greatest inventors of the age—the wonderful engineer who was to startle the world by his discoveries, and open a new era to civilization! S. H. W.

QUESTIONS.—What is steam? How is water changed to steam? What is the condition of steam freed from water? Can we see it? What is real steam? Say something of the power of steam and its application. What of the steam engin? Describe the principal parts of an engin. Did Hero know about engins? When did he liv? Tell what you know of James Watt. What did his aunt say to him? Would she hav said that had she known to whom she was speaking?

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND,
LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

MATERIALISM AND CRIME.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 5 cents.

AN OUTLINE OF THE
French Revolution
ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.
By W. S. BELL.
Paper, 12mo, 25 cents.

MORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

IMMORTALITY OF ITS ELEMENTS.
By A. S. de Pellegrini.
Paper, - - 15 cents.

PHILOSOPHY of SPIRITUALISM

AND TREATMENT OF MEDIOMANIA.
By F. R. Marvin, M.D.
Cloth, . . . 50 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY.

By VOLTAIRE.

Terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of theological terms.
Price, 25 cents.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY EXPOSED.

By REV. G. T. FOX, M.A.
15 cents.

PRO AND CON OF Supernatural Religion.

Have We a Supernatural, Inspired, Miraculous Religion?
By E. E. GUILD.
Paper, 20 cents; cloth, 30 cents.

PYRAMID OF GIZEH.

Ancient Egyptian Civilization and Hebrew Narrative in Genesis and Exodus.
By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D.
Price, 15 cents.

QUESTION SETTLED.

BIBLICAL and MODERN SPIRITUALISM.
By MOSES HULL.
Price, 60 cents.

Rational Communism.

THE PRESENT AND FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.
Advocates associate life and employment as a preventive of vice, crime, poverty, etc.
By A CAPITALIST.
Paper, 498pp., 50 cts.: clo., $1.

Relation of Witchcraft to Religion.

By A. C. LYALL.
Price, 10 cents.

Fruits of Philosophy.

POPULATION QUESTION.
By Dr. Knowlton. Edited by Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant.
25 cents.

TRUTH. A Poem. By E. N. Kingsley. 10 cents.

POVERTY: Its Cause and Cure.

How the Poor May Attain Comfort and Independence.
By M. G. H.
Price, . . 10 cents.

Religion of Inhumanity.

With a Glance at the Religion of Humanity.
BY FREDERIC HARRISON.
Price, 15 cents.

RELIGION:

The Gibraltar of the World, as Now Constituted.
By George T. Bondies.
With
Exceptions to the Character of Christ as a Gentleman.
By W. T. Purviance.
25 cents.

IMAGE BREAKER.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Six Lectures.
Decline of Faith.
Protestant Intolerance.
Washington an Unbeliever.
Jefferson an Unbeliever.
Paine and Wesley.
Christian Sabbath.
Each, 5 cents; bound, pap., 25 cents; per doz., 40.

SABBATH BREAKING.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Price, 25 cents.

St. Matthew Before the Court

FOR THE CRIME OF FORGERY.
By SECULARIST.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.

Including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, Bible.
By D. M. BENNETT.
(From Vol. II. "Gods and Religions.")
333pp., pap., 60 c.; clo., $1.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 558 West Madison st., Room 1, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

FAITH AND REASON.
A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.
With elaborate index.
By HALSEY R. STEVENS.
A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained in such compact form.—[Literary Review.
Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

THE Truth Seeker Annual —AND— Freethinkers' Almanac, 1889.

(E. M. 289.)

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1889,	5
Freethought in the United States for 1888,	17
Liberalism: a Symposium.
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,	28
JAMES PARTON,	32
HELEN H. GARDENER,	33
S. P. PUTNAM,	36
CHARLES WATTS,	37
E. A. STEVENS, Sec. A. S. U.	41
PARKER PILLSBURY,	42
ROBERT C. ADAMS,	44
J. D. SHAW,	46
F. M. HOLLAND,	47
E. B. FOOTE, JR., M.D.,	50
LUCY N. COLMAN,	51
J. H. BURNHAM,	53
L. K. WASHBURN,	63
ELLA GIBSON,	64
SUSAN H. WIXON,	67
JOHN PECK,	71
W. S. BELL,	78
E. C. WALKER,	80
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN,	84
DR. JULIET H. SEVERANCE,	87
MRS. E. D. SLENKER,	89
COL. J. R. KELSO,	91
G. H. DAWES,	92
The Nine Demands of Liberalism,	95
Ingersoll and Shakspere,	96

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

THE SAFEST CREED,
AND
TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.
By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.
Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BIBLE INQUIRER;
OR,
A Key to Bible Investigation.
Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.
BY A. JACOBSON.
Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.
Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.
Price only 25 cents.

SOCIAL WEALTH,
The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in the Acquirement and Apportionment.
By J. K. INGALLS.
Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

ROME OR REASON
A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.
By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.
A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.
Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ON THE WORD GOD.
By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."
The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.
Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.
Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Liberty of Printing, and Reply.
By HURLBUT and WAKEMAN.
Price, 10 cents.

NOW READY.
A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS OF
HORACE SEAVER.
COMPILED BY
L. K. WASHBURN.
This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.
Price, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

POINTERS:
A POCKET CYCLOPEDIA,
CONTAINING
Tables, Rules, Practical Hints, and Historical Sketches, for Farmers, Mechanics, Machinists, Merchants, Housekeepers, and the Public Generally, with
Numerous Maps, Illustrations, and Diagrams
Illustrating some of the more Important Comparativ Statistics of the World.
More Information for Less Money than has ever been offered.
ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS
For $50 worth of "Cold Facts" boiled down in a Nutshell. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE
Cosmian Hymn Book,
A COLLECTION OF
Original and Selected Hymns
(Words and Music)
For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.
COMPILED BY
L. K. WASHBURN.
PRICE, . . . $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE JEWS AND THEIR GOD.
"The Jews and their God stood on the lowest plane."
Price 10 cents.

The Reign of the Stoics.
THEIR
History, Religion, Philosophy, and Maxims of Self-Control, Self-Culture, Benevolence, and Justice.
With Citations of Authors Quoted from on Each Page.
BY FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.
Read the philosophers, and learn how to make life happy, seeking useful precepts and brave and noble words which may become deeds.—Seneca.
OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.
This book shows that many Christians might learn much from these ancient heathen.—American Bookseller.
One of the most valuable helps for those who would understand the character of human progress in all ages.—National Quarterly Review.
The author has shown himself a diligent student, an ardent admirer, and a faithful interpreter, of some of the most remarkable monuments of ancient thinking.—New York Tribune.
Reading this book, we find the doctrins of the Stoics to be almost identical with the views held by the broadest and most enlightened minds of the present day.—Cincinnati Commercial.
Lecky says of Marcus Aurelius: "The purest and gentlest spirit of all the pagan world." Merivale says: "Of all the line the noblest and dearest." Taine says: "The noblest soul that ever lived." John Stuart Mill says: "He preserved through life not only the most unblemished justice, but the tenderest heart."
Extra Cloth, 12mo, 248 pp., $1.25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LITERATURE OF THE INSANE.
BY F. R. MARVIN.
Price, . . . 5 cents.
Pertinent and interesting.—Freethought.
Will be handed to my Christian friends that they may, by finding the garden of Eden, get the $5,000 reward.—Editor Sequachee Times.
Raises the devil with the garden of Eden yarn. —Hastings, Mich., Plaindealer.

WHAT KIND OF A MAN CLARK BRADEN IS.
BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 10 cents.

BLASPHEMY AND THE BIBLE.
BY C. B. REYNOLDS.
Price, 5 cents.

ICHABOD CRANE PAPERS.
Daringly witty and inexpressibly laughable onslaughts on Christianity.
Price, 10 cents.

Natural Rights, Natural Liberty, and Natural Law!
AN INQUIRY INTO THE CAUSES OF SOCIAL MALADJUSTMENTS. THE RATIONAL, JUST, AND ADEQUATE REMEDY.
A work that treats of basic principles, and should be read carefully by all Liberal and social reform thinkers.
It is highly commended by Samuel P. Putnam, Henry George, Hugh Pentecost, Herbert Spencer, and other men of note.
Price, 25 cents.
Address, F. Q. STUART, Editor the Arbitrator.
1653 Blake St., Denver, Col.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.
It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Sixteen pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $2. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.
Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 Cents.

Poetry.

The Reverend Simon Magus.

A rich advowson highly prized,
For private sale was advertised;
And many a parson made a bid;
The Reverend Simon Magus did.

He sought the agent's: "Agent, I
Hav come prepared at once to buy,
If your demand is not too big,
The cure of Otium-cum-Digge."

"Ah!" said the agent, "there's a berth—
The snuggest vicarage on earth;
No sort of duty, so I hear,
And fifteen hundred pounds a year!

"If on the price we should agree,
The living soon will vacant be;
The good incumbent's ninety-five,
And cannot very long survive.

"See—here's his photograph—you see,
He's in his dotage." "Ah, dear me!
Poor soul!" said Simon. "His decease
Would be a merciful release!"

The agent laughed, the agent blinked,
The agent blew his nose and winked,
And poked the parson's ribs in play—
It was that agent's vulgar way.

The Reverend Simon frowned: "I grieve
This light demeanor to perceive;
It's scarcely comme il faut, I think;
Now—pray oblige me—do not wink.

"Don't dig my waistcoat into holes—
Your mission is to sell the souls
Of human sheep and human kids
To that divine who highest bids.

"Do well in this, and on your head
Unnumbered honors will be shed."
The agent said: "Well, truth to tell,
I hav been doing very well."

"You should," said Simon, "at your age;
But now about the parsonage.
How many rooms does it contain?
Show me the photograph again.

"A poor apostle's humble house
Must not be too luxurious;
No stately halls with oaken floor—
It should be decent and no more.

"No billiard-rooms, no stately trees,
No croquet-grounds, or pineries."
"Ah!" sighed the agent, "very true;
This property won't do for you."

"All these about the house you'll find."
"Well," said the parson, "never mind;
I'll manage to submit to these Luxurious superfluities.

"A clergyman who does not shirk
The various calls of Christian work,
Will hav no leisure to employ
These 'common forms' of worldly joy.

"To preach three times on Sabbath days;
To wean the lost from wicked ways;
The sick to soothe; the sane to wed;
The poor to feed with meat and bread.

"These are the various wholesome ways
In which I'll spend my nights and days;
My zeal will hav no time to cool
At croquet, archery, or pool."

The agent said: "From what I hear,
This living will not suit, I fear—
There are no poor, no sick at all;
For services there is no call."

The reverend gent looked grave: "Dear me!
Then there is no 'society?'
I mean, of course, no sinners there
Whose souls will be my special care?"

The cunning agent shook his head,
"No, none except," the agent said,
"The Duke of A., the Earl of B.,
The Marquis C., and Viscount D.

"But you will not be quite alone,
For though they've chaplains of their own,
Of course this noble, well bred clan
Receive the parish clergyman."

"Oh, silence, sir!" said Simon M.,
"Dukes—earls! What should I care for them?
These worldly ranks I scorn and flout!"
"Of course," the agent said, "no doubt!"

"Yet I might show these men of birth
The hollowness of rank on earth."
The agent answered, "Very true,
But I should not, if I were you."

"Who sells this rich advowson, pray?"
The agent winked—it was his way—
"His name is Hart; 'twixt me and you,
He is, I'm grieved to say, a Jew!"

"A Jew?" said Simon, "happy find!
I purchase this advowson, mind.
My life shall be devoted to Converting that unhappy Jew!"

—W. S. Gilbert.

Literary Notices.

Fowler & Wells Co. are printing a new edition, the seventy-fifth thousand, of "Heads and Faces, and how to Study Them," which is having a remarkable sale.

"Human Magnetism," by H. S. Drayton, is in press by Fowler and Wells Co, 775 Broadway, for early publication. It considers the latest phases of the subject.

We hav received the Fourth Annual Report of the Commissioner of Labor, 1888. The subject dealt with is Working Women in Large Cities. The statistics will be useful to investigators.

If anyone wishes to study botany, we can recommend to him the work entitled, "Botany," written by Annie Chambers Ketchum, A.M., and published by J. B. Lippincott Co. It is full and accurate.

"The Substantial Theology," by Mahlon Ross, Virden, Ill., is not a very large book for its price, which is 20 cents. But the style in which it is written is simple and clear, and the reasoning good.

Mrs. J. M. Kellogg has published at San Diego, Cal., a pamphlet setting forth Freethought principles. But the title, "We Are All Here," is odd and injudicious. It conveys no information as to the nature of the work.

An article from the Freethinkers' Magazine, entitled "A Diagnosis," has been reprinted in pamphlet form. It is a diagnosis of the illness and decline of orthodoxy. An editorial from the same periodical, commenting on the article, is appended.

"The Senses, Five or Seven," is a good pamphlet by Dr. Wm. M. McLaury, New York city. The writer asks whether we hav not two senses besides the five commonly recognized. He treats of clairvoyance and kindred phenomena.

Fowler & Wells Co. will publish this fall a volume by Geo. J. Manson on the Choice of Occupation by young men, under the title of "Ready for Business," in which will be shown the advantages afforded by a dozen or more professions, trades, and occupations.

"Right Selection in Wedlock," forms No. 8 of the Human Nature Library, published by Fowler and Wells Co. The book is illustrated, and the matter is readable. It makes one smile to see, in one chapter, that subject of so many jokes, the mother-in-law, scientifically considered—which, however, is right. Price, 10 cents.

A novel, "A Hopeless Case," has been written by Luther H. Bickford, and published by Charles H. Kerr & Co. We hav no time to read it. It may be good. But the author has just previously written a "reconciliation of religion and science," and if his novel is no better than its predecessor, we fear it is in more than name a Hopeless Case.

English Freethought produces and sends us "The Case for Agnosticism," by B. Russell. This useful pamphlet bears as motto the quotation from Huxley:

Agnosticism is not a creed but a method, the essence of which lies in the rigorous application of a single principle. . . . Positivly, the principle may be expressed: In matters of the intellect, follow your reason as far as it will take you, without regard to any other consideration. And negativly: In matters of the intellect, do not pretend that conclusions are certain which are not demonstrated or demonstrable.

"It appears," says the writer, "to be generally admitted that the mental attitude of suspended judgment is gaining ground." The price of the book is 15 cents.

Rev. Frank L. Phalen, pastor of the Unitarian church at Brattleboro, Vt., sees "Rocks Ahead in Our Social Life," and writes a pamphlet on them. He starts off from the text, "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord." We should say that this God himself is the greatest rock ahead in our social life. "When indifference and skepticism wink and sneer at loyalty and law and religion," says the author, "then the state is in danger and the church is called upon to press home the divine commands." When an author winks and sneers at the great habit of mind which has lifted us all out of black barbarity, Skepticism, then we feel called upon to press home the criticism that the book he has sent us is not worth a fig.

Cremation has received an exposition from the hands of John M. Peacocke, M.D., Brooklyn, N. Y. The work is published in pamphlet form. The title is, "The Disposal of the Dead." One passage reads:

The three chief impediments that obstruct the advance of cremation are the sentimental, the religious, and the medico-legal. . . . Many distinguished men among the clergy are opposed to cremation on religious grounds. The bishop of Lincoln, in Westminster Abbey, July 5, 1874, denounced incineration as barbarous and unnatural, and said: "One of its first fruits would be to undermine the faith of mankind in the doctrin of the resurrection of the body." His lordship has been pertinently asked: "Can it be supposed to be less possible or less easy for the all-knowing and almighty God to gather and revivify the material atoms after they hav been oxidized and scattered by the agency of the incinerator than after precisely the same result has been accomplished by combustion in the earth." And if, as the bishop of Lincoln seems to assume, it is impossible for God to raise up the bodies of those who hav been burnt, what, it is asked, is to become of the many of the noble army of martyrs who were burnt at the stake, or devoured by lions and tigers in the arena, or broiled on beds of iron, rather than renounce their holy faith? Does the bishop really mean to say that there is to be no resurrection of the bodies of Archbishop Cranmer and Bishops Latimer and Ridley who went to heaven in chariots of fire?

Charles Watts has written another pamphlet in his clear style and sensible way of reasoning. It is, "The Superstition of the Christian Sunday: A Plea for Liberty and Justice." We are disposed to giv our readers the benefit and pleasure of reading some of its best passages:

What is Superstition? Worcester defines it as worshiping a false object, the observance of unnecessary rites and practices. Sunday is a "false object," inasmuch as it is put forward by the orthodox clergy as a divinely appointed day, which it is not. It is an "unnecessary observance," because regarding the day as the churches do, particularly in Ontario, with its theological associations, is not sanctioned by the Bible, and is not required by the interests either of true religion or of morality; moreover, such forced observance is destructiv of the principle of all gennin freedom.

What hav the Sabbatarians left us? The street cars are not running, trains are stopped, cab service is suspended, libraries are closed, theaters locked up, museums barred, and picture-galleries (if we had them) know us not. The cry is for more Sabbath observance, and it is gathering power day by day. It is fostered and accelerated by the clergy for one purpose alone, and that purpose they will tell us of presently. If carried out in its entirety as in Scotland, it means the complete domination of the clergy in all matters of human life, involving the abridgment of individual liberty to an extent little dreamed of as yet. The probable course the party will take if left unchecked, can only be left to conjecture. They will no doubt advocate the stoppage of the Sunday milk supply, the hiring of any vehicle for Sunday travel, then will follow the peremptory demand that all persons shall attend church.

If the fanatical Sabbatarians were consistent in their professed reverence for the Sabbath, they would accept the day as it is appointed in the Bible, with its demands and penalties. But do they do this? Certainly not, for in every particular those believers violate the "inspired" command, and pay no heed whatever to its threatened penalties. In the Hebrew Sabbath means "rest," hence we read: "On the seventh day thou shalt rest; that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thy handmaid, and the stranger, may be refreshed" (Ex. xxiii, 12); also it is recorded that God rested on the seventh day "and was refreshed" (Ex. xxxi, 17). The injunctions upon this point are very explicit: "These are the words which the Lord hath commanded, that ye should do them. Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you an holy day, a sabbath of rest to the Lord: whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death. Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the Sabbath day" (Ex. xxxv, 1-3). The seventh day "is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates" (Ex. xx, 10). Now, with what consistency can a Christian minister preach a day of rest on Sunday, when he himself does the heaviest and hardest part of his labors on that very day—labors for which he receives almost his entire income? True, he may urge that the work in which he is engaged is a work of necessity. But that is entirely a matter of opinion. Besides, even if it were a necessity, the Mosaic law made no provision for such labor, and hence he is violating the commandment which forms the foundation of all his Sabbatarian superstructure.

A very able writer in Scotland, whose name is unknown to fame, wrote a pamphlet upon the "Sabbath" a few years ago from which we take the following suggestiv passage: "When we recently read the observation of one of the bishops in the House of Lords (in England), that, 'as a Christian prelate, he exulted in the number of petitions that had been presented for the better observance of the Sabbath,' we could not but ask ourselvs what would hav been the fate of this very prelate if he had lived three thousand years ago, and had then, like the man who gathered sticks on the Sabbath day, been called upon to answer before Moses and Aaron for his present opinions and practice in regard to the observance of this institution? Imagin the accusation and sentence of the judges. 'Here is a man who teaches that the seventh day is not to be kept as a Sabbath, neither as a memorial of God's resting on that day, nor of the Exodus from Egypt; but that another day should be observed instead. 'Stone him to death.' 'This man declares that the Sabbath is not to be "a perpetual covenant" between God and Israel; but that the seventh day is to be changed for the first, in honor of "another prophet like unto Moses;" although he can produce no authority to that effect.' 'Stone him to death.' 'This man was found breaking the command that no fire should be kindled on the Sabbath day (Ex. xxxv, 3), and partaking of a sumptuous entertainment, prepared, not the day before, but on the Sabbath day, for himself and friends!' 'Stone him to death.' 'This man, because he is wealthy, is driven in his chariot, with horses, and coachmen, and footmen, in all the apparel of state; and these horses, and coachmen, and footmen, he employs in his service, even when he attends public worship; forgetful of the command that his man-servant, and his maid-servant, and his ox and his ass, should rest on the Sabbath day.' 'Stone him to death.' We leave the Sabbatarian in the dilemma in which his creed has placed him." If the fourth Commandment be, indeed, a law of the Christians, it is too certain that all Christians deliberately break it; but if it be a law of the Jews only, then all the scandal is chargeable upon those who, professing to hav the "divine truth" in their keeping, mete this law as if it were a part of the Sermon on the Mount. Such conduct can be only sheer hypocrisy.

The price of "The Superstition of the Christian Sunday," is 10 cents.

LIVING MATTER: Its Cycle of Growth and Decline in Animal Organisms. By C. A. Stephens. Norway Lake, Me.: The Laboratory Co. Price, $1.

The subject is one that we recommend Freethinkers to read about. Christians often demand to know if we can explain what they call the mystery of life, and if we cannot tell them something about it claim that it must proceed from their God. There are now books written on our side that do tell something about it. This is one of them. We think it not a bad or an unprofitable book to read. There are, however, some inaccuracies of diction.

THE BIBLE OF NATURE; OR, THE PRINCIPLES OF SECULARISM. A Contribution to the Religion of the Future. By Felix L. Oswald. 16mo, pp. 240. Truth Seeker Company, New York. $1.

Dr. Oswald is one of our prophets in the sphere of hygienic reform, and he is inclined in discussing a topic, whatever it may be, to point to those principles of hygiene and physiology that are fundamental to true development in human affairs. So in the discussion of the subject included in this title we find him dwelling upon Health, Strength, Chastity, Temperance, and proceeding further, he discusses Knowledge, Independence, Freethought, Justice, Humanity, and so on. He believes that there can be no true progress in mental or moral excellence without due regard to those principles that relate to the physical nature in the origin and growth of human beings.

Society and individuals are not to be converted by mere pulpit or platform exhortation, but by obedience to the laws of nature and conformity to the canons of truth and duty. Important questions now agitate the thinking world. Labor, Society, Prohibition, come in for their share in this agitation. Dr. Oswald wields a trenchant pen. With a sharp criticism, founded on deep conviction, he strikes at the very core of the social outrages and abuses that prevail in American life—the abuses that are tolerated by church and state receive no quarter, and their promoters and abettors are dissected with little allowance.—Phrenological Journal.

CHURCH HISTORY. By Professor Johann Heinrich Kurtz, D.D., Germany. Translation from latest revised edition by Rev. John MacPherson, M.A. In three volumes. Vol. II now ready. Cloth, 12mo, 496 pages. Price, per volume, $2. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

This work has now reached its tenth edition. The second volume covers nearly seven hundred years—from the beginning of the tenth to the close of the sixteenth century. It treats at length such topics as the following: Missionary enterprises as conducted for three hundred years in sixteen different fields; the crusades of the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries; the hierarchy, the clergy, and the monks, theological science and its controversies; the Germano-Romanic church; the papacy and its claims; monastic orders and societies; national literature; worship and art; church disciplin; corruptions and indulgences; inquisition and persecution; the Reformation; Luther and his coworkers; perils and martyrdom; divisions and fanaticism; councils and creeds; victories and defeats. As we said of the preceding volume, so we say of this, that it is useful to anyone wanting to get a late and full presentation of the church view on the subjects treated. It is useful to one who wishes to inform himself fully on what his opponent's position really is, so that he can combat that position intelligently. But this is not saying much for a book. In just the same way we inform ourselvs on the nature of the lunatic or the criminal as fully as possible in order best to doctor or punish him. So to say what we hav said is to rank the thought of the writer of this book no higher than the thought of the lunatic or criminal. And it can hardly be held to deserve a much higher place. As a matter of fact, nearly all the statements of the work are untrustworthy. It delivers as truths old legendary accounts and absurd mythological fables that we hav no good reason to think true, but every reason to think false. Of course, much in this later volume may be true, but in the earlier volume treating of the first few centuries of Christianity, it is not to be supposed that more than one assertion in twenty has any ground. It is but a work of fiction, a novel, when all is done. The only books on these matters really worth reading are those of Freethinkers.

EVERY LADY WANTS A SILK DRESS

This is your opportunity. A new departure. SILKS direct from the manufacturers to you. Our reduced prices bring the best goods within reach of all. We are the only manufacturers in the U. S. selling direct to consumers. You take no risk. We warrant every piece of goods as represented, or money refunded. See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the U.S. Established in 1838, with over 50 years' experience. We guarantee the

CHAFFEE DRESS SILKS,

for richness of color, superior finish and wearing qualities, to be unexcelled by any make of Black Silks in the world. We offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grains, Satins, Surahs, Faille Francaise and Aida Cloths, in Blacks only.

Send us a 2c.-stamp (to pay postage) and we will forward you samples of all our styles free with prices, and you can see for yourselves.

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON,
Mansfield Centre, Conn.

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank, Windham National Bank, Dime Savings Bank, Willimantic Savings Institute, of Willimantic, Conn.

RECOLLECT we send to all parts of the U.S. With each Dress Pattern we present the buyer with 1000 Yards Sewing Silk, and enough Silk Braid to bind bottom of dress.

THE GOODS are delivered to you all carrying charges PREPAID

THE
MARTYRDOM OF MAN.
A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rash, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE
CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:
THEIR
Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Ingersoll and the Deist.
BY
A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."

Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE NEW GOD.
BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

GIRARD'S WILL
AND Girard College Theology.
AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE
LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price, 75 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.
MEN, WOMEN & GODS.
BY HELEN H. GARDENER,
Introduction by
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

THE STRUGGLE
FOR
Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.
A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.
Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By D. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth. By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development. By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ROMANISM,
OR DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 833pp., silk cloth, $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

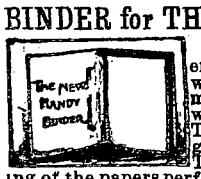
THE
UNIVERSE ANALYZED

By JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,

Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.

The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productiv of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.



Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

NEW EDITION.
The Secret of the East,
OR,
The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

tf

SAKYA BUDDHA.
A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO. 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.

Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.

tf

Essence of Religion.
By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Argument by R. G. Ingersoll
IN THE
TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS
FOR
"BLASPHEMY,"
At Morristown, New Jersey.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER. 28 Lafayette Pl., New York

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES:
A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, - - 25 cents.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 7 o'clock.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Elizur Wright Secular Union

Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10.30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

DIAMONDS.

Unprecedented offer. No other house so fair In order to giv my Liberal friends throughout the United States an opportunity to examin, test, and compare my goods and prices with those of other diamond merchants, I will sell any piece of Diamond Jewelry, accompanied by contract that cash in full will be refunded any time within one year from date of purchasing if goods are not entirely satisfactory. No other dealer will do it. None will sell as cheap. Carrying a large stock, being an expert, close buyer, and doing business on smallest possible expense, you will positivly save twenty to thirty per cent by purchasing of me. Diamond Pins and Eardrops, worth $600, for $400; Pins, Rings, Eardrops, Studs, Hair Ornaments, Pendants, worth $300, for $200; do., worth $200, for $140; do., worth $150, for $110; do., worth $100, for $70; do., worth $80, for $60; do., worth $60, for $45; do., worth $40, for $30; do., worth $30, for $22; do., worth $20, for $15. You can wear these goods daily for one year, It will not cost you a cent. If in the mean time you are not satisfied that the goods are better and cheaper than sold elsewhere return and get your cash in full.

Selections sent to responsible parties on approval; to any banking-house or C.O.D., privilege of examination.

The "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

sixteen jewels, finely adjusted to heat and cold, patent regulator, Brequet hair-spring, beautiful double-paneled dial, and all modern improvements. Perfect, and no watch will compete with it! In silverine case, $19; in four-ounce coin silver case, $23.50; five-ounce, $25; six-ounce, $27. In open face, best filled gold case, $27; hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV., $35. In fourteen carat solid gold, $50 to $150. Sent prepaid, and cash refunded if not satisfactory.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.
Established 1857.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 100 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin, 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, Eng.

ANTICHRIST.

PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

LIFE OF
Joshua Davidson:
MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

News of the Week.

THE czar is visiting the German emperor at Berlin.

AT Northeast, Md., there was a fatal railway accident on the 12th.

DISASTROUS floods prevail in the department of the Jura, France.

A RAILWAY collision at Bridgeport, O., on the 11th, had fatal results.

TALMAGE'S church in Brooklyn was destroyed by fire last Sunday.

THE Wyoming constitutional convention has granted woman suffrage.

SOME Chinese still come in from Cuba with passports as Spanish citizens.

DISCOVERY has been made of extensiv and powerful attempts to bribe jurymen in the Cronin case.

THERE is trouble over the color line in the national council of Congregationalists at Worcester, Mass.

THE forest fires which hav been burning in Idaho, Washington, and Montana are still raging in the latter.

SURVIVORS of Chickamauga, from North and South, will purchase the battlefield and turn it into a national park.

SOME traveling commercial men are getting to carry rolls of Confederate money to deliver to train robbers, to save their real currency.

DURING a late religious festival at Rohtak, India, Mussulmans and Hindoos became involved in religious disputes which led to rioting.

A CHARLES MIX county, Dak., Presbyterian church does double duty by being occupied for school purposes during the week. All churches should be.

STATISTICS taken of the Eastern penitentiary of Pennsylvania seem to indicate that a large percentage of crime is due to not learning every youth a trade.

THE Russian government is about to organize a military administration for the railroads of western Russia which will replace the civil officials in case of war.

GERMAN Socialists assail the governmental insurance to provide for all disabled or aged workmen, as a pretended Socialistic measure to divert attention from the real ones.

MARY E. WELCH was taken from St. Gabriel's church, New York, one morning recently, where she was singing and shouting, and committed as suffering from religious mania.

THE French government had hard work at the recent election to repress the interference of the clergy, who continually influence toward rebellion, conservatism, or monarchy.

BOULANGER is endeavoring to excite patriotic enthusiasm in his favor by circulating in the army circulars hinting that France should put him at her head to recover Alsace-Lorraine.

THE government of Madrid, Spain, has got in trouble for committing enormous robberies of the citizens. The municipalities of Spanish Catholic Spain and Irish Catholic New York are the two most corrupt known.

MISS HATTIE BARTLETT, of West Pittston, Pa., has been removed to the insane asylum. About a month previous Evangelist Yatman had opened meetings, and she soon manfested a desire to climb tall trees, and get in the attics of high houses, to "get nearer heaven."

THERE is excitement over the case of a widow named Mrs. Portingall, of New York. She is dying, and a Freethinker friend of hers named Wallace has been named guardian of her children in her will, but the priest refuses her absolution and communion unless she revokes it.

SEVERAL injuries and deaths hav occurred from electric light wires in New York. In the last case a man caught in the wires was exposed several minutes before a crowd of some thousands, fire and smoke issuing from his mouth, ears, and eyes. The wires will now be fully insulated, or buried.

BROOKLYN has been the scene of the death from faith cure of a Norwegian girl named Olsen—no relativ of the preceding victim. A physician diagnosed her case as bilious fever, and left drugs, saying she would recover, but faith cure people with whom she had associated called and reproached her for apostasy, and persuaded her not to take her medicin.

Gems of Thought.

STUDY to a profound theologian consists in puzzling his brains and filling his pate with words to which neither himself nor anyone else . . . can attach any reasonable sense.—Voltaire.

THEOLOGICAL professors hav the power of stating the most absurd propositions with faces as solemn as stupidity touched by fear.—Ingersoll.

INSTEAD of aspiring to sanctity and virtue, which alone can render men acceptable to the great author of order and of excellence, they imagined that they satisfied every obligation of duty by a scrupulous observance of external ceremonies. . . . All the religious maxims and practices of the Dark Ages are a proof of this. I shall produce one remarkable testimony in confirmation of it, from an author canonized by the church of Rome, St. Eloy or Egidius, bishop of Noyon, in the seventh century. "He is a good Christian who comes frequently to church; who presents the oblation which is offered to God upon the altar; who doth not taste of the fruits of his own industry until he has consecrated a part of them to God; who, when the holy festivals approach, livs chastely even with his own wife during several days, that with a safe conscience he may draw near the altar of God, and who, in the last place, can repeat the creed and the Lord's Prayer. Redeem then your souls from destruction, while you hav the means in your power; offer presents and tithes to churchmen; come more frequently to church; humbly implore the patronage of the saints; for, if you observe these things, you may come with security in the day of retribution to the tribunal of the eternal judge, and say, 'Giv to us, O Lord, for we hav given unto thee'" (Dacherii Spicelegium Vet. Script. v. ii, p. 94). The learned and judicious translator of Dr. Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, to one of whose additional notes I am indebted for my knowledge of this passage, subjoins a very proper reflection: "We see here a large and ample description of a good Christian, in which there is not the least mention of the love of God, resignation to his will, obedience to his laws, or of justice, benevolence, and charity toward men."—Robertson's Survey of the State of Europe.

LET it be understood, once for all, that Christ had but little to do with Christianity. The people became convinced—being ignorant, stupid, and credulous—that the church held the keys of heaven and hell. The foundation for the most terrible mental tyranny that has existed among men was in this way laid.—Ingersoll.

As Catholicism was based upon the infallibility of the church, so Protestantism has been based upon the infallibility of the creed.—Morell's History of Philosophy.

THE Catholics hav a pope. Protestants laugh at them, and yet the pope is capable of intellectual advancement. In addition to this the pope is mortal, and the church cannot be afflicted with the same idiot forever. The Protestants hav a book for their pope. The book cannot advance. Year after year, and century after century, the book remains as ignorant as ever. It is only made better by those who believe in its inspiration giving better meanings to the words than their ancestors did. In this way it may be said that the Bible grows a little better.—Ingersoll.

IF some people devoted half the time to steering in this world that they do to seeking a good landing in the next, there would be less wild sailing and fewer accidents.—Germantown Independent.

THEY made this world a hell. But if cathedrals had been universities—if dungeons of the Inquisition had been laboratories—if Christians had believed in character instead of creed—if they had taken from the Bible all the good and thrown away the wicked and absurd—if domes of temples had been observatories—if priests had been philosophers—if missionaries had taught the useful arts—if astrology had been astronomy—if the black art had been chemistry—if superstition had been science—if religion had been humanity—it would hav been a heaven filled with love, with liberty, and joy.—Ingersoll.

WHATEVER religion may be in the ascendant, the influence of its ministers is invariably strengthened by a long and dangerous war, the uncertainties of which perplex the minds of men, and induce them, when natural resources are failing, to call on the supernatural for help. On such occasions, the clergy rise in importance; the churches are more than usually filled, and the priest, putting himself forward as the exponent of the wishes of God, assumes the language of authority, and either comforts the people under their losses in a righteous cause, or else explains to them that those losses are sent as a visitation for their sins, and as a warning that they hav not been sufficiently attentiv to their religious duties; in other words, that they hav neglected rites and ceremonies in the performance of which the priest himself has a personal interest.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

THOUGH peace upon earth was at first proclaimed as a main object of Christianity, and though for about three centuries the Christian disciples displayed unwearied zeal and amazing heroism in advocating it, the sublime conception of a moral unity gradually faded away before the conception of a unity of ecclesiastical organization, and for centuries theologians were so far from contributing to the suppression of war, that they may be justly regarded as its chief fomenters.—Lecky's History of Rationalism.

ARE the Christian nations patterns of charity and forbearance? On the contrary, their principal business is to destroy each other. More than five millions of Christians are trained, educated, and drilled to murder their fellow-Christians. Every nation is groaning under a vast debt incurred in carrying on war against other Christians.—Ingersoll.

WE must regard all the children of the earth as members of the human family. All war is nothing more than civil war.—Chas. Sumner.

Odds and Ends.

SHE: "This is Minerva." He: "Was she married?" She: "No, she was the goddess of wisdom."—Life.

THE papers hav been discussing the man with a mission. They would handle the man without a mission, but that they fear to exasperate Elliot F. Shepard.—Puck.

"MARRIAGES are made in heaven," quoth Miss Antique. "Then there is some chance for you yet," was the cruel response of her younger sister.—Harper's Bazar.

BESSIE: "Do you read the departments devoted to women in the Sunday papers?" Jennie: "No, my dear. Those articles are only fit for men to read."—Munsey's Weekly.

MIKE: "What's the matter, Bill? Yer looking pale." Bill: "Too much head-work, Mike. I had ter sleep all night wid me head agin a knot hole ter keep th' muskeeters out o' the barn."—Time.

"THERE is ice in Greenland six thousand feet thick," read Mr. Mumble in his evening paper. "That's just the way," commented his wife, "I suppose it's so cool there they don't need it, either."—Puck.

NO MONEY IN IT.

Smartte: "Hullo, Sharpe! How's Christian science gittin' along?"

Sharpe: "Oh, I've giv up Christian science, an' gone back to plain bunco."—Puck.

ALICE: "I've just been reading a newspaper discussion on 'When Women Should Marry,' Miss Elder. When do you think a girl should marry?" Miss Elder (emphatically): "Just as soon as she has a proposal."—Munsey's Weekly.

CRITIC: "What does that fashionably attired young man with wings represent?" Cartoonist: "The angel of style." Critic: "Who ever saw an angel wear a silk hat and a suit of clothes?" Cartoonist: "Who ever saw one that didn't?"—Life.

WOULD BE poet: "And, my dear doctor, I hav taken such delight in all the great poems that I am sure that poetry is my vocation." Eminent litterateur: "And—ah—my dear young lady—you—ah—hav read 'Romeo—ah—and Juliet.'" Would-be poet: "Well, I havn't read Juliet yet, but I think Romeo is glorious."—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

"I'D like to exchange this yard of ribbon; it is soiled in one place," said Mrs. Shopingly to one of the clerks at Silk and Sattin's. "I'm not the lady you bought it of," replied the sales-duchess in attendance; "I've just returned from my season in the country, and some other lady must hav sold it to you. Here, Maggie, did you sell this person a yard of orange ribbon? No? Well, see which of the ladies in our department did sell it, then."—Time.

BOATMAN: "Sail a boat? Why, it's easy as swimmin'. Jest grasp the main sheet with one hand, an' the tiller with the other, an' if a flaw strikes, ease up or bring 'er to, an' loose the halyards; but look out fer the gaff an' boom, or the hull thing'll be in the water, an' ye'll be upsot; but if the wind is steady y'r all right, onless y'r too slow in luffin' too; 'cause then y'll be upsot sure. Jump right in an' try it; but, remember, whatever ye do, don't jibe."—New York Weekly.

DIFFERING VIEWS.

Young Gibbon's wit was very light,
But heavy his conceit;
He fancied he a charmer was
With whom none could compete.

"Behold yon pretty girl ahead,
A stranger quite," quoth he,
"But that already I hav turned Her head, you can't but see."

"I must confess," his friend replied,
"That what you say is true;
Her head is turned, beyond a doubt—
It's turned—away from you!" —Puck.

QUESTIONS IN INDUCTIV PHILOSOPHY.

A young lady went into a store and asked for number eleven shoes. In what large Western city did she liv?

D. Stump, of Burnt Cabin, York county, Pa., can put a large goose-egg in his mouth and close his lips without crushing the shell. What is the color of D. Stump's cuticle?

A foreign gentleman addressed a nativ the other day in these words: "No checkee, no shirtee." In what country was the foreign gentleman born?

In a certain bar-room a man arose and made this remark: "Colonel, will you take a drink?" Every man in the room rose, saying: "Thanks! Don't care if I do." In what state did this take place?—Life.

DRESSING THE BOY.

"Elijah, dear, will you dress Willie this morning? I'm in such a hurry, and it won't take you but a minute or two."

"Certainly," replied Mr. Bixby, cheerfully, "I'd just as soon dress the little chap as not. Here, my little man, come and let papa dress you. I'll hav you as neat as a pin in a jiffy."

Willie, aged four, comes reluctantly from his playthings, and Bixby begins:

"Now, let's off with your nighty-gown and—keep still, dear, or I can't unbutton it. There now, we'll—sit still, child. What makes you squirm around like an eel? Where's your little shirty? Ah, here it is, and—sit still! Put up your arm—no, the other one and—can't you keep still half a second? Put up your other arm and stop hauling and pulling so! Now, let's—come here, boy! What under heaven do you mean by racing off like that with nothing on but your shirt? Now you come here and let me put the rest of your duds on. Stand still, I say! Put your leg in here! Not that leg? There you go squirming around like an angle-worm. Now, if you don't keep still, young man, I'll—stop pulling at that chain, and—here, Mary Ellen, you'll hav to dress this wriggling animal yourself. I couldn't do it in ten years. Go to your mother, sir!"—Time.

AN HOUR WITH THE DEVIL.
By D. M. BENNETT.
Price. - - - 10 cents.

COMMON SENSE
GUIDE TO CORRECT ENGLISH.
By J. L. BARKER.
Price, 35 cents. Address this office.

INFLUENCE OF
CHRISTIANITY ON CIVILIZATION
By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 25 cents.

INGERSOLL IN CANADA.
Reply to Archbishop Lynch.
By A. PRINGLE.
Price, . . . 15 cents.

Civil Rights Speech
By R. G. INGERSOLL.
With Speech of HON. FREDERICK DOUGLASS.
Price, 10 cents.

Ingersoll Catechised.
ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS BY EDITOR OF San Franciscan.
Price, 3 cents; per doz., 30 cents.

LIMITATIONS OF TOLERATION.
Discussion between
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL, Hon. Frederic R. Coudert, and Ex-Gov. Stewart L. Woodford. Before the Nineteenth Century Club.
Price, . . 10 cents.

ORTHODOXY.
By R. G. INGERSOLL.
Price, 10 cents; per dozen, one dollar.

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT.
By G. F. RINEHART.
25 cents.

LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT
OF
JEAN MESLIER.
Abstract of.
Paper, price, 25 cents.

LOVE VENTURES
Of TOM, DICK, AND HARRY.
A Novel With an Affidavit.
"And they were naked and not ashamed" (Gen. ii, 25).
16 full-page French Art Illustrations. Beautifully Illustrated Covers.
12mo, 236 pages, paper, 25 cents; boards, 50.

MANNA. Our Forefathers' Ideas of Hell.
Price, 5 cents.

MARIA MONK.
CONVENT MYSTERIES.
MONKS and THEIR MAIDENS.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

Modern Thinker, No. 2.
The Most Advanced Speculations in Philosophy, Science, Sociology, and Religion.
160pp., pap., 50 cents.

MOTHER of HARLOTS.
POPERY DISSECTED.
By WM. HOGAN (25 years a confessing priest).
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75

NEW ENGLAND
AND THE PEOPLE UP THERE.
A HUMOROUS LECTURE.
By Geo. E. Macdonald.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

NIBBLE AT JOHN FISKE'S CRUMB FOR THE MODERN SYMPOSIUM.
Price, 10 cents.

ORIGIN OF
THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE
By O. B. WHITFORD.
Price, 25 cents.

The OUTCAST. Freethought Story.
By WINWOOD READE.
25 cents.

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY.
By F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.
Pap., 25 c.

RIGHTS OF MAN.
By THOMAS PAINE.
Answer to Burke's Attack on the French Revolution.
Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE THE POLITICAL and RELIGIOUS REFORMER.
By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, ... 10 cents.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 43. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY. { New York, Saturday, October 26, 1889. } 28 LAFAYETTE PL. } $3.00 per year.

THE LAW AND THE GOSPEL IN BROOKLYN!—NOT THE SAME.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Catholic churches of this country number 7,424 as against 6,829 one year ago, and there are 7,996 clergy as against 7,596 in 1880.

A PORTION of the Salvation Army is about to invade the Argentine Republic. That devoted land, hitherto blessed, may soon find itself annoyed by faith cure cranks, Second Adventists, and Mormons.—World.

WALT WHITMAN, the good gray poet, has a boy about twelve years of age to drive him around. The boy is clever. He recently said: "I think a great deal of W. W. I keep a note-book and I put down all he says into the note-book, and after he's dead I'm going to go round lecturing about him."

A SERVIAN law has been passed through the influence of Archbishop Michael which compels all shopkeepers and tradesmen to close their places of business not only on Sundays but on all holy days of the orthodox church. Hence the Servians will observe one hundred and eighty holidays during the year.

A TOTAL eclipse of the sun will take place on December 21st. The line of totality will not touch North America at all; it will skirt the northern shores of a portion of South America and thence proceed across the south Atlantic ocean to St. Paul de Loando, in the state of Angola, about two hundred miles south of the Congo river, on the west coast of Africa, at which point the American expedition, for which the last Congress appropriated $5,000, will take observations.

THE Italians of this city propose to erect a $20,000 statue to Christopher Columbus. It will be placed at the Battery, and already over $3,000 toward the project hav been raised. According to Mr. Stone, of Boston, the statue should hav the features of Amerigo Vespucci, better known under his Latinized name of Americus Vespucius.

SAYS the Concordia Blade: "John E. Remsburg has undertaken the extremely hard task of proving that Abraham Lincoln was not a Christian. Several reverend gentlemen hav proved that he was. Having given their evidence in THE TRUTH SEEKER, he will now produce his evidence to sustain his position. He has spent a great deal of time and money in hunting for evidence, which will make his article worth reading."

PROFESSOR TYNDALL has returned to England much improved by his sojourn among the Alps. He has suffered greatly from insomnia. Professor Tyndall is a pretty lively climber for a man of his years. He is in his seventieth year. His first exploration of the Swiss glaciers was made thirty-three years ago, but not for love of adventure; it was for love of science. His object was to determin glacier motion, and he found, as he expected, that it was on the move—in fact, very fast.

IMPORTANT news in the World: "It has been learned that Postmaster-General Wanamaker is the administration official who is to take a Bible class in the church of the Covenant, Washington. He is about to giv up his Bethany Bible class, over which he has presided for a great many years. The strain of leaving Washington and going to Philadelphia every Saturday was too much for him. His family will soon be located at the capital, and if he left them every Sunday he would find little time in which to enjoy their society. Bethany Sunday-school will miss Wanamaker greatly."

THE German purists are still continuing their campaign against the French element in the language of the Fatherland. Finding that they cannot enjoy their cigar under that name, they hav had some difficulty in finding a suitable German term to take its place. The cigar manufacturers of Düsseldorff, however, recently offered a prize for the best Teutonic substitute for the obnoxious foreign vocable, and their choice has fallen on a coinage of Pastor Zeller of Waiblingen—"Rauchrolle."

THE Rev. Dr. Alden has just reported to the American board of commissioners for foreign missions, now in session in this city, that Japan is now almost ready to adopt Christianity as a national religion; that the board has forty-five missionaries there, and that more of them are urgently called for. The Sun comments upon this astonishing news: "Yet it is a fact that, after many years of missionary labor in Japan, the number of converts to Christianity there is small, and it is not probable that the national religion would be changed without the consent of the Japanese people and the conversion of the mikado."

RAILROAD accidents, electric-wire fatalities, and other casualties peculiar to the times lead a great many people, says the World, to the conviction that they were born a century too late. They feel that the dangers begotten by science hav been greater than the benefits derived therefrom. But the fact is that the average length of human life is on the increase. Science is responsible for this. Our great-grandfathers rode in stage-coaches and were in but slight peril from electricity. But they were bled when sick by surgeons and received physic when they needed tonics. Houses were badly ventilated and a thousand evils unknown at present were in activ existence. Science can prevent all dangers begotten by science.

THE sons of men seem all to be tarred with the same stick, says the Commercial Advertiser. As Christmas approaches, with its present-laden tree, the boys and girls begin to repair to the Sunday-schools in flocks that chirrup in unison shrill praises of that beneficial institution, not unaccompanied with vociferous longings to be an angel and with the angels stand. So we are not surprised to learn that the missionaries in New Guinea are sure of immense congregations if they let the fact leak out that a large invoice of tobacco has come to hand. This reminds us again of the report—slanderous, no doubt—that a certain revivalist of the broad, howling, and wooly West (not far from the site of the semi-millennial fair of 1992) whose exhortations attained a phenomenal success after a sly hint that each convert might count on a chromo. Another potent device of the missionaries is to take their guns along. The barbecued game draws vast crowds of repentant natives. But a scarcity of game has been observed to be coincident with a thinly populated mourners' bench. There would seem, therefore, to be very much of a muchness about the men of New Guinea—and elsewhere.

Communications.

Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?

CHAPTER IV.

REVIEW OF CHRISTIAN TESTIMONY.—ARNOLD AND OTHER WITNESSES.

Arnold's "Life of Lincoln"—Claims Respecting Lincoln's Religious Belief—Address to Negroes of Baltimore—Carpenter—Hawley—Willetts—Pious Nurse—Illinois Clergyman—Barrows—Simpson—Vinton—Robert Lincoln.

With the Christian masses whose minds hav become warped by the bigoted teachings of their clerical leaders, nothing affects the reputation of a man so much as his religious belief. Public men who are disbelievers are fully cognizant of this, and generally refrain from expressing sentiments that would tend to alienate those upon whom the retention of their positions depends. Biographers understand this, too, and are likewise aware that a dead Infidel is as cordially hated as a live one. They know that a cold reception awaits their works unless they are able to clothe the characters of their subjects in the robes of popular superstition. Mr. Arnold realized this when he wrote his "Life of Lincoln." He had been most forcibly reminded of the fact by the fate of two biographies of his own subject which had already appeared—Holland's and Lamon's. Holland's work by catering to popular prejudice, regardless of truth, had been financially a success; Lamon's work by adhering to truth, regardless of popular prejudice, had been financially a failure.

Determined to profit by these examples, and intimidated by the threats and entreaties of those who had resolved to secure for Christianity the influence of the Great Emancipator's name, Arnold dare not giv the facts regarding Lincoln's religious belief. Nor is it to be presumed that he desired to. He had previously appeared as a special pleader for the popular faith.

He affirms that "No more reverent Christian than Lincoln ever sat in the executiv chair, not excepting Washington." The fact is, when Arnold wrote his biography of Lincoln, no very reverent Christian ever had occupied the executiv chair. Previous to the installation of the present incumbent, no real orthodox Christian communicant had held the office of president.

If Mr. Arnold knew no more about Lincoln's religion than he appears to hav known about Washington's, a more charitable reason than those suggested might be assigned for his statements concerning the former. Washington, like Lincoln, has been claimed by the church; yet, Washington, like Lincoln, was a Deist. This is admitted even by the leading churchmen of his day. Three of the most eminent divines of his age, and the three to whom he was most intimately related in a social way, were Bishop White, Rev. Dr. Abercrombie, and Rev. Dr. Ashbel Green. Bishop White, the father of the Episcopal church in America, declares that Washington was not a communicant, as claimed by some, and intimates that he was a disbeliever. The Rev. Dr. Abercrombie, whose church he attended while he was president, said: "Washington was a Deist." The Rev. Dr. Ashbel Green, chaplain to Congress during his administration, said: "Like nearly all the founders of the republic, he was not a Christian, but a Deist."

Arnold presents the following as the basis of Lincoln's religion, and proofs of his Christianity: "(1) Belief in the existence of God, (2) in the immortality of the soul, (3) in the Bible as the revelation of God to man, (4) in the efficacy and duty of prayer, (5) in reverence toward the almighty, and (6) in love and charity to man."

1. "Belief in the existence of God." This does not prove a belief in Christianity. The Jew believes in the existence of God; the Mohammedan believes in the existence of God; the Deistic Infidel believes in the existence of God.

2. "Belief in the immortality of the soul." That he believed in the immortality of the soul is a claim that cannot be clearly established; and even if it could, would not confirm the assumption that he was a Christian. Deists, many of them, believe in the doctrin of immortality. Paine believed in immortality; Voltaire believed in immortality.

3. "Belief in the Bible as the revelation of God to man." This, if true, would be evidence of his Christianity; but, unfortunately for Mr. Arnold's claim, Lincoln did not entertain this belief.

4. "Belief in the efficacy and duty of prayer." This, in the orthodox sense of these terms, is not true; and if it were, would not furnish conclusiv evidence that he was a Christian. Jews pray; Mohammedans pray; Buddhists pray; some Deists pray. Franklin believed in the efficacy and duty of prayer, and Frankin was an Infidel.

5. "Belief in reverence to the Almighty." This does not demonstrate a belief in Christianity, for all Deists believe in reverence to the almighty.

6. "Belief in love and charity to man." When it can be shown that only Christians believe in love and charity, then will it be time to affirm that Lincoln was a Christian.

Arnold confounds Christianity with Deism. In the following words he admits that Lincoln was simply a Deist: "Not orthodox, not a man of creeds, he was a man of simple trust in God."

When the subject of Lincoln's belief was once mentioned to Mr. Arnold, he said: "Lincoln was a rational Christian because he believed in morality." With equal propriety, one might say of an upright Christian, "He is a rational Freethinker because he believes in morality."

"His reply to the negroes of Baltimore," he says, "ought to silence forever those who charge him with unbelief." This alleged reply of Lincoln was as follows:

> In regard to the great book I hav only to say that it is the best gift which God has given to man. All the good from the savior of the world is communicated to us through this book. But for this book we could not know right from wrong. All those things desirable to man are contained in it (Lincoln Memorial Album, p. 340).

The writer of this was in Washington when the colored deputation from Baltimore presented the president with a $500 Bible. The papers mentioned the fact at the time, but no such speech as Lincoln is said to hav made appeared in the reports. About two months later, this apocryphal version of his remarks on the occasion referred to, made its appearance.

The first two sentences contained in this speech Lincoln, if a Christian, might hav uttered. They are words that any intelligent Christian might, from his standpoint, with propriety affirm. We are familiar with these claims. We are also familiar with the claims embodied in the last two sentences. They are repeatedly made. But they are made only by very ignorant persons, or by clerical hypocrits who try to impose upon the ignorance and credulity of their hearers. Had Lincoln been a Christian he would not hav used these words, because he was too intelligent to believe them, and too honest to pretend to believe them.

Concerning this speech, Lincoln's partner, Mr. Herndon, thus vigorously yet truthfully remarks:

> I am aware of the fraud committed on Mr. Lincoln in reporting some insane remarks supposed to hav been made by him, in 1864 on the presentation of a Bible to him by the colored people of Baltimore. No sane man ever uttered such folly, and no sane man will ever believe it. In that speech Mr. Lincoln is made to say: "But for this book we could not know right from wrong." Does any human being believe that Lincoln ever uttered this? What did the whole race of man do to know right from wrong during the countless years that passed before this book was given to the world? How did the struggling race of man build up its grand civilizations in the world before this book was given to mankind? What do the millions of people now living, who never heard of this book, do to know how to distinguish right from wrong? Was Lincoln a fool, an ass, a hypocrit, or a combination of them all? or is this speech—this supposed—this fraudulent speech—a lie?

Arnold would hav his readers believe that this speech is genuin. And yet it is plainly evident that he himself does not believe it. He mutilates it by omitting the more orthodox portion of it—the very portion he would hav retained had he believed it to be genuin. The first part would suffice to serve his purpose; the remainder he knew was too incredible for belief and would stamp the whole as a fraud.

Arnold says: "The veil between him and the supernatural was very thin." Yes, so thin that he saw through it and recognized the greater part of it to be a sham.

"His faith in a divine providence began at his mother's knee, and ran through all the changes of his life." I do not desire to charge Mr. Arnold with plagiarism, but the foregoing recalls the following much admired passage to be found in Holland: "This unwavering faith in a divine providence began at his mother's knee, and ran like a thread of gold through all the inner experiences of his life" (Life of Lincoln, pp. 61 62).

There is much in Arnold's biography, aside from the above, to suggest that Holland's work formed the basis and model of his own. While more accurate in the main than Holland's Life, Arnold's Life is in some respects equally unreliable, and less readable.

Adverting to the many fraudulent stories that hav been circulated concerning Lincoln, in an address delivered in London, he says: "The newspapers in America hav always been full of Lincoln stories and anecdotes, some true and many fabulous." Unfortunately for the cause of truth, Mr. Arnold has himself recorded some of these fabulous stories, not because he deemed them authentic, but because they agreed with his preconceived prejudices, or the prejudices of those whom he wished to please.

Mr. Carpenter says: "I would scarcely hav called Mr. Lincoln a religious man, and yet I believe him to hav been a sincere Christian."

In a letter, Mr. Herndon makes the following correction in regard to his friend Carpenter's statement:

> Mr. Carpenter has not expressed his own ideas correctly. To say that a man is a Christian and yet not a religious man is absurd. Religion is the generic term including all forms of religion; Christianity is a specific term representing one form of religion. Carpenter means to say that Mr. Lincoln was a religious man but not a Christian, and this is the truth.

It is unfortunate that while in many cases we hav several words to express the same idea, the same word in many cases is employed to express different ideas. Ideas thus become confused. If the terms morality, religion, and Christianity were always used in their legitimate sense—used to express the ideas of which they were the original signs—much trouble and ambiguity would be avoided. As it is, they are promiscuously used as interchangeable terms. Many use the word religion and even Christianity when they mean morality. Mr. Carpenter uses the word religious in its proper sense, and the word Christian to mean a moral man. The following examples will serve to illustrate the various forms employed to express the thought now under consideration:

> I would scarcely hav called Mr. Lincoln a religious man, and yet I believe him to hav been a sincere Christian.—Carpenter.
>
> I would scarcely hav called Mr. Lincoln a Christian, and yet I believe him to hav been a truly religious man.—Herndon.

I would scarcely hav called Mr. Lincoln a religious man, and yet I believe him to hav been a truly moral man.—Author.

We all desire to express substantially the same thought. I do not wish to dictate to Mr. Carpenter and Mr. Herndon what words they shall employ to convey an idea, but this explanation is essential to a proper understanding of the question in dispute, and will help to reconcile much of the apparently conflicting testimony presented in this work.

As Lincoln was in a certain sense a Deist, the religious element was not entirely wanting in him, and hence the statement of Mr. Herndon that he was a religious man is, in a degree, true.

Mr. Hawley professed to believe that Lincoln was a Christian, but he had no personal knowledge of the fact, although his neighbor for many years. The only reasons he was able to adduce upon which to predicate his belief were the Bateman story and his farewell speech on leaving Springfield. The former has been exploded, the latter proves nothing.

During all the later years of his life Lincoln generally refrained from expressing his anti-Christian opinions, except to friends who shared his views. This silence, in connection with his sterling moral character, might lead some of his Christian neighbors to suppose that he was a believer, the more especially as Christians are generally ignorant of the extent of unbelief, and are loth to believe that a person, unless he openly avows his disbelief, can be an Infidel.

According to Mr. Willets, Lincoln, during the war, had an attack of what he thought might be a "change of heart." He consulted a pious lady in regard to it and requested her to describe to him the symptoms attending this theological disease. She defined "a true religious experience" as "a conviction of one's own sinfulness and weakness, and personal need of the savior for strength and support." She said that "when one was really brought to feel his need of divine help, and to seek the aid of the holy spirit for strength and guidance, it was satisfactory evidence of his having been born again." Lincoln replied that if what she had told him was "a correct view of this great subject," he hoped he was a Christian. But was this a correct view of it? I was not aware that conviction constituted conversion. We hav been taught that conviction is but a preliminary step toward conversion. If Lincoln relied upon this as a true exposition of this doctrin, the genuinness of his conversion may well be questioned.

It is to be regretted that Mr. Willets did not giv the name of his informant. As it is, we do not know whether to credit "a lady acquaintance of his," or himself, with the invention of a first-class fiction.

In regard to the story of the "Pious Nurse," we hav not even a clergyman to vouch for its authenticity. We do not know the name of this witness; we do not know whom she communicated the story to; we do not know when nor where it made its first appearance. We only know that for years it has been floating through the columns of the religious press, a companion-piece to Washington's devotional exercise at Valley Forge.

An "Illinois Clergyman" reports Lincoln as saying that when he left Springfield he was not a Christian, that when his son Willie died he was not a Christian, but that when he visited the battle field of Gettysburg he gave his heart to Christ. Christians cite the testimony of this anonymous witness, seemingly unconscious of the fact that if true it refutes the testimony of every other Christian witness. If this statement be true what becomes of the testimony of Holland and Bateman? What becomes of the testimony of Reed's witnesses? The testimony of Brooks invalidated the testimony of every other witness; the testimony of this Illinois clergyman invalidates the testimony of Brooks itself.

Reed did not present this evidence, doubtless aware that his lecture already contained a sufficient number of discrepancies. He was thoughtful enough, however, to anticipate it. He had Dr. Gurley refer to Lincoln's conversion as taking place "after the death of his son Willie and his visit to the battlefield of Gettysburg." These events are referred to as if they occurred in close proximity to each other; whereas the death of Willie occurred during the first year of his administration, his visit to Gettysburg less than seventeen months before his assassination.

The passage quoted from Dr. Barrows contains six specific affirmations.

1. In the anxious uncertainties of the great war, he gradually rose to the hights where Jehovah became to him the sublimest of realities, the ruler of nations.

Collect all the utterances of Abraham Lincoln, all the letters he ever wrote, all the speeches he ever delivered, all the state papers he gave to the public; and from this full store of words that fell from his lips and flowed from his pen, I challenge Dr. Barrows to produce one word expressing a recognition of Jehovah. Jehovah was to him, not "the sublimest of realities," not "the ruler of nations," but a hideous phantom. He recognized a God, but his God was not Jehovah, the God of Dr. Barrows.

2. When he wrote his immortal proclamation, he invoked upon it not only "the considerate judgment of mankind," but "the gracious favor of almighty God."

When he wrote his immortal proclamation, he did not invoke "the gracious favor of almighty God." This instrument, as drafted by Lincoln, contained no allusion to God. The paragraph containing the words quoted was drafted by Secretary Ch se and inserted in the proclamation at his urgent request after it was printed and ready for delivery.

3. When darkness gathered over the brave armies fighting for the nation's life, this strong man, in the early morning, knelt and wrestled in prayer with him who holds in his hand the fate of empires.

A "Christian lady from Massachusetts" (name unknown), and a Christian gentleman from New York (Noah Brooks), declare that Lincoln was accustomed to pray. This declaration is echoed by Arnold, and reëchoed by Barrows. If true, is it not strange that a hospital nurse and a newspaper reporter were in possession of the fact while his most intimate friends were entirely ignorant of it?

4. When the clouds lifted above the carnage of Gettysburg, he gave his heart to the Lord Jesus Christ.

This is the fifth time that Lincoln gave his heart to Christ. The above statement is the vital one in Dr. Barrows's testimony—the keystone in the arch comprising "the religious aspects" of Lincoln's presidential career. The others, even if true, only prove a Theistic belief. This statement affirms that he became a Christian—a statement evidently based upon the anonymous story of the "Illinois clergyman." Between the original presented by the "Illinois clergyman" at large, and that presented by the Illinois clergyman from Chicago, however, a grave discrepancy appears. From the time that "the clouds lifted above the carnage of Gettysburg" to the time that Lincoln visited its cemetery, a period of twenty weeks had elapsed. Now, did Lincoln giv his heart to Christ when the battle ended on the 3d of July, as stated by the one, or not until he stood upon the battle field on the 19th of November, as asserted by the other? This is a question that we leave for the Illinois clergymen themselvs to decide.

5. When he pronounced his matchless oration on the chief battle-field of the war, he gave expression to the resolve that "this nation, under God, should hav a new birth of freedom."

This simple Deistic phrase, "under God," is the only utterance of a religious character to be found in that oration. When this speech was delivered, Lincoln, it is claimed, had experienced a change of heart, and consecrated himself to Christ. This address furnishes an overwhelming refutation of the claim. At the dedication of a cemetery, surrounded by thousands of graves, he ignores Christianity and even the doctrin of immortality.

6. And when he wrote his last inaugural address, he gave to it the lofty tone of an old Hebrew psalm.

This is true; and it is likewise true that in that document he made no more reference to Christianity than did the Hebrew psalmist who lived and wrote a thousand years before it had its birth.

The "Lincoln Memorial Album," in which Dr. Barrows's article appears, contains the offerings of two hundred contributors, twentv of them divines, and among them Lyman Abbott, Dr. Bellows, Theodore L Cuyler, Robert Collyer, Bishop Coxe, Dr. Crosby, Bishop Haven, Philip Schaaf, and Bishop Simpson. The work is prefaced with a biographical sketch of Lincoln, written by Isaac N. Arnold, in which he makes substantially the same statements regarding Lincoln's belief as those made in his "Life of Lincoln." Aside from this, Dr. Barrows is the only one of these two hundred memorialists who ventures to affirm that Lincoln was a Christian.

Bishop Simpson's remarks hav been presented, not because they furnish any proofs of Lincoln's reputed Christianity. but because he was one of the clergymen who officiated at Lincoln's funeral, and because his words on that occasion hav been cited in support of this claim. But he does not assert that Lincoln was a Christian. He simply testifies to his belief and trust in God—to his Deistic faith—nothing more.

I am aware that in some of the published reports of his address there hav been interpolated words intended to convey the idea that Lincoln accepted Christ. Bishop Simpson, I am sure, never authorized the insertion of these words. They express a claim he never made—a claim he certainly did not make on the day of Lincoln's interment.

In his funeral address at Washington, Dr. Gurley did not affirm that Lincoln was a Christian, or that he was intending to make a profession of religion. Bishop Simpson, in his oration at Springfield, made no mention of these claims, and Dr. Gurley and Bishop Simpson are known to hav held a consultation before that oration was delivered.

This silence is conclusiv evidence that these men knew that Lincoln was an unbeliever. Commenting on this notable omission, Mr. Herndon says:

> Bishop Simpson delivered the funeral oration, and in that oration there was not one word about Mr. Lincoln's Christianity. Bishop Simpson was Lincoln's friend; Dr. Gurley was Lincoln's pastor in Washington. Now these men knew, or had reason to know, Lincoln's religion, and the world would hav heard of his Christianity on the day of his burial if it had been known. But Simpson and Gurley are silent—dumb before the Christian world.

One of the most beautiful and exhaustiv tributes ever paid to Lincoln, aside from the matchless tribute paid by Colonel Ingersoll, is that from the pen of Bishop Simpson which appears in the "Lincoln Memorial Album." In this tribute he does not make even the remotest allusion to Lincoln's religious belief. He appears to hav heeded the advice tendered by a less discreet Christian writer, and recognized the fact that, from his standpoint, the less said about the subject the better. Had all Christians acted as wisely and as honorably in this matter as Bishop Simpson, this controversy about Lincoln's religion would never hav arisen.

The story of Dr. Vinton, too absurd to demand serious consideration—apparently too incredible for belief—is yet believed by thousands. When such fabulous tales are told by men who are looked upon as the exponents of morality, and published in papers and periodicals that are presumed to be the repositories only of truth, it is not strange that such stories as Washington's Praying at Valley Forge, Ethan Allen and His Daughter, Don't Unchain the Tiger, Paine's Recanting, and a thousand and one other pious fictions of a similar character hav gained popular credence. To read the fabrications of this class pertaining to Lincoln alone, one would suppose that this astute statesman, this chief magistrate of a great nation, this commander-in-chief of two millions of soldiers, engaged in the most stupendous civil conflict the world has known, occupied the greater portion of his time in studying the scriptures, poring over doctrinal sermons, participating in prayer-meetings led by pious nurses, and weeping upon the necks of clerical visitors.

Robert Lincoln denies that his father wrote a book on Infidelity. But his denial is evasiv. To be hypercritical, he did not write a book; it was a booklet—a mere brochure or pamphlet. That he wrote a small book or pamphlet against Christianity, however, it is useless to deny. His biographer, Colonel Lamon, savs that he wrote one; his partner, Mr. Herndon, affirms that he wrote one; his political manager, Colonel Matheny, asserts that he wrote one; his friend, Judge Nelson, declares that he wrote one; his friend, Mr. Jeffrey, avers that he wrote one; Chambers's Encyclopedia states that he wrote one; even Dr. Holland admits that he wrote one.

The history of this affair is as follows: Lincoln, even in his youth, was skeptical, and disposed to rebel against the teachings of the church. In his early manhood, and while he resided at New Salem, he read and thought a great deal upon this subject, and finally became convinced that Christianity is false. In the fervor of his enthusiasm to rid the world of a debasing superstition, he wrote a little book, in which he maintained, first, that the Bible is not the word of God; and, secondly, that Jesus Christ was not the son of God. Those who saw the work pronounced it a logical assault against the popular faith. It was his intention to hav it published, but an unforeseen circumstance prevented him from doing it. Mr. Samuel Hill, his friend and employer, saw in Lincoln a rising man, and although he was himself a skeptic, and did not particularly dissent from the opinions expressed in the work, he yet recognized the popular prejudice that existed against Infidel literature, and believing its publication would hopelessly ruin the political prospects of Lincoln, took the manuscript and consigned it to the flames He then prevailed upon Lincoln to drop theology and devote his energies to law and politics. His action lost Freethought an able champion, but gained for American statesmanship its brightest ornament.

Robert had most certainly been apprised of all this. But whether he had or not, his statement concerning a transaction that occurred long anterior to his birth is of little value when opposed to the testimony of those who were then living and conversant with the facts.

I hav now reviewed the testimony of these witnesses. Tested in the crucible of honest criticism, little remains of their statements save the dross of falsehood and error. I may be charged with unjust severity toward these witnesses, nearly all of whom are men of recognized respectability and distinction. But a majority of them hav testified to what they know to be false, and against those who knowingly bear false witness no censure can be too severe. Thousands of Christian men and women, misled by this false testimony, honestly believe and contend that Lincoln was a Christian. Against these I hav not an unkind word to offer. But I am resolved to disabuse their minds of this erroneous belief. Painful as the birth of an unwelcome idea is, they shall know the truth.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Lincoln's Neighbors' Opinions.

No publication of recent date has interested me more than the chapters now going through THE TRUTH SEEKER press concerning the religion of Abraham Lincoln, written by John E. Remsburg. It is not a matter of much importance as to just what Abraham Lincoln did believe concerning God, the Bible, or the man Jesus, but when we discover an earnest, persistent, mean, and wicked attempt by lying and deceitful men to pervert the truth in this matter, in order that their "holy religion" shall profit by their lies, the matter does become of some importance, and I am glad that Mr. Remsburg has taken hold of this subject with that zeal and earnestness which usually characterize his great ability, and from what I know in this matter I can assure all whom it may concern that by the time Mr. Remsburg is through with the subject it will be deemed settled that Mr. Lincoln was not a hypocrit, neither was he a believer in the monstrous and superstitious doctrins of the Christian church.

I had the honor of a limited acquaintance with Mr. Lincoln prior to his election to the presidency, and although we never discussed or alluded to religious matters as such, nevertheless I hav always been fully persuaded in my own mind that it would hav been utterly impossible for a man possessing that intuitiv wisdom, keenness of logic, and discernment of truth, which were the marked characteristics of Mr. Lincoln's mind, ever to hav subscribed to the atrocious doctrins of the Christian church. He was developed far above it, and although making no war upon the church, he did not hesitate to speak his mind freely upon these subjects upon all proper occasions. I lived in Springfield among his old neighbors for many years, and I hav talked with many of them, and to those who had good opportunity to know his views touching religious matters All, without exception, classed him among the skeptics. It was not until after his death that he was claimed as a Christian.

I am sorry for Newton Bateman. He has placed himself in a most awkward predicament by trying to keep out of one. As already indicated in the chapters by Mr. Remsburg, Mr. Bateman has an aversion to unpleasant notoriety. He was for several terms superintendent of public instruction in Illinois, and enjoyed great popularity. He permitted Mr. Holland to circulate an atrocious falsehood in his "Life of Lincoln" rather than incur "unpleasant notoriety" by a firm and courageous denial. Although I am not an admirer of Grover Cleveland, I am an admirer of that sentiment ascribed to him, "Tell the truth." Enough is now known, even from the pen of Mr. Bateman himself, to refute every word of Holland's forgery and falsehood.

I am led to inquire, Why is it that the church is so anxious to claim as its own men of distinction who hav secured popular favor? It was so with George Washington. My father was born and raised in the neighborhood where Washington had his headquarters, and he talked and discussed Washington in his early days with hundreds of people who had been associates of Washington, and I hav heard my father say many times that there was not a man in the whole army who could make the air more blue with profanity than could George Washington. And yet he was a praying man, they say. If so, it was not to his credit. Now, I am in politics a Republican. I was a supporter of Benjamin Harrison for the presidency. He is publicly known as Presbyterian. Now, if any reliable information should reach me that President Harrison away down in the bottom of his heart was a Liberal or Freethinker, I would denounce him as a hypocrit and would support him no longer. I am broad enough and Liberal enough to fraternize with Catholics or Presbyterians on matters of common ground, but I hate a sneak, a hypocrit, a lying, deceitful man, who is all things to all men. Had Mr. Lincoln been a Christian, as Mr. Harrison is, I can conceive of no reason why I, being a Freethinker, should attempt to claim Mr. Lincoln as one. As I said at the outset, the simple fact of whether Mr. Lincoln was or was not a Christian, is of no importance. It is of some importance, however, to know whether he was a hypocrit, or whether certain men now living, and some dead, are or were liars and hypocrits. Truth, when disputed, becomes important.

JAMES K. MAGIE.

Washington, D. C.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President,
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treas., ... Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com., 120 Lexington Ave., New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

Next week will contain a full report of the doings of the American Secular Union, the Secretary's report, and as much of the speeches as space permits.

The American Secular Union Congress

WILL BE HELD AT

INDUSTRIAL HALL,

BROAD STREET,

Between Wood and Vine Streets, PHILADELPHIA, PA.,

October 25th, 26th, and 27th.

Addresses will be delivered as follows:

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 26TH,

DR. EDWARD McGLYNN.

SUBJECT: "Our Common Schools and Their Enemies."

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 27TH,

REV. MINOT J. SAVAGE.

SUBJECT: "Religious Instruction in Our Public Schools."

SUNDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 27TH,

T. B. WAKEMAN, Esq.

SUBJECT: "The Nine Demands."

Other speakers will be heard.

R. B. WESTBROOK.

Old Immortality Jealous of His Spiritual Junior(?).

From the Independent Pulpit.

This old gentleman of Idealaho, represented by the equally respectable Postmaster-general John Wanamaker, is credited with ordering the arrest of W. E. Reid, president of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists. This is interpreted by the Grand Rapids Association as preparing "to persecute hundreds of mediums," because the charge states that said Reid "knowingly and wrongfully advertised, in the Banner of Light, to secure communications from spirit land to order" (accompanied with cash, you may bet with security).

A writer in the Montreal Witness suggests that this is a cute way of recommencing persecution for witchcraft. I suppose he refers to the witch of Endor, who raised the prophet Samuel's (not Uncle Sam's) ghost. He thinks, too, that if this experiment succeeds, as a test case, against the Spiritists for "raising the wind" under false pretenses, our Postmaster and Master of Purification might be tempted to logical prosecution of priests who take fees for praying souls out of purgatory. The New York TRUTH SEEKER, reigning belle among refractory milkmaids of the Bible land, and hitherto on terms of simple courtesy with her Spiritist admirers, now warmly espouses their cause against the common enemy. Where to begin the divine petrifaction of conservatism is, indeed, but a question of policy with the powers that be, and there may be sagacity in taking trouble by the forelock, especially when one is drum-beater, as well as truth seeker. "Similia similiabus curantur," in moral homeopathy, must be credited with the fact that modern Spiritism has done more in one generation to deauthoritize the Bible by its commonplace miracles, and humdrum revelations, than reason and ridicule combined had achieved during centuries, aided by the fagot and the torture chamber.

Our postmaster is a matador that takes the bull by the horns, and the game will be lively in one of the supreme courts with such a test case, if, as is supposed, W. E. Reid is but a fair exemplar of his class. To be making a fortune by swindling is no more than thousands of financial and political respectabilities are doing, but if his clients depose that they are satisfied with his communications, and still he is not acquitted, then it will be, sure enough, a prosecution of faith by faith. Neither money nor talent are lacking on the side of the defendants, and the telegraph and telephone operators from both banks of the mysterious Styx will muster strong.

In as far as the mails are concerned, exclusion of medium advertisments would not prevent Spiritists from establishing a postal service of their own, for which unbelievers would not, as at present, be indiscriminately taxed.

The supreme court's decision could be second only to majority vote in determining what sort of immortality American citizens shall enjoy. The postmaster and his illustrious friends go in for the building with the devil's kitchen in the basement, and the music hall above without seats, angels being usually upon the wing, for it does not appear from cathedral paintings that they really hav wherewith to sit down.

Spiritists prefer the modern improvements by electiv affinity, etc, considering with Swedenborg that if the wicked need hell they are perfectly competent to make it, or any number of hells, without assistance.

Secularists generally seem to prefer the continuity of life by races, and do not speculate in or upon souls, though they do not all believe that "at the end of their line they are at the bottom of the ocean," nor deny the possibility of occult science. Fair discussion over a test case ought to suit us all, even the truth seekers; but if paternal government is going to undertake the general protection of the dupes from the knaves it will hav its hands full, and no time left for the fleecing of its own political dupes.

Among the knaves, patent medicin advertisers make fortunes more scandalously than mediums, but they do not effect a practical censorship on the pretensions of scholastic ignorance, as the Spiritist mediums do upon orthodox priestcraft. Free competition then by all means. M. E. L.

A Great and Serious Waste.

It is not within the mental power of man to calculate the extent and the evil consequences which hav fallen upon the human race by the introduction and propagation of religion, embracing all forms of religion, brought down to present time. The best and most that can be effected in this direction is to contrast the natural workings of pure ethics in society, put forth by philosophers in all ages, free from religious bias, with the workings of religious sentiments and organizations throughout the world. It is to be understood, of course, that the never-ending contests between the numerous—said now to be one thousand—sects of religion are to be taken into account in the comparison.

The goal of ethics is truth—nothing else. Cast abroad in society ethical culture will ever implant, has ever implanted, the seeds of social good joined to all of the kindred virtues, and upon this foundation alone. Whatever of greatest good has fallen upon our race, one may safely credit the same to the workings of ethical culture, attended by its natural outgrowth of higher enlightenment.

True, in this close of the nineteenth century a vast amount of ignorance, international and social antagonism, and wide-spread error abound. From whence came the cause? Certainly not from ethical sources, for these are inimical to all such invasions.

Candidly considered, the case will be easily resolved. There has been and is but one great cause: The accepted domination of clerical power everywhere; sectarian antagonisms on all sides, in all localities; irrational religious dogmas sought to be enforced upon the people everywhere upon pain of endless torment, by an alleged merciful God, in case of refusal; to which may be added a general purpose to socially berate and legally punish such intelligent citizens as by the dicta of their reasoning faculties hav been led to entertain Liberal ideas, having the manhood or womanhood to publicly express them.

For a change, let us suppose what a primitivly inducted race, having no thought or inclination as to religious matters, would naturally do on the earth relating to private and public intercourse. Surely there would be no discussion of gods, angels, spirits, devils, or hell-fires. They would be kind to each other, with a prime regard for nature's first rule, self-preservation, and, being by natural endowment gregarious, each and all would quickly hav found it advisable to maintain to all a kindly social intercourse, and this sort of life would by natural transmission confirm to the following generations like qualities, but more and more firmly grounded. Query: Would such a case hav dawned upon the world if any form or theories of religion had first engrafted themselvs upon the thoughts of these primitiv ones? Not to be even supposed.

So far as history informs, the latter case was permitted to, or rather assumed to, serve the worst ends. Religion gathered all to itself. It made haste to seize the power over all to the death, reaching to farthest lands. It transmitted cruel dispositions through the veins of the following generations, not eliminated, as a whole, even now. Yet modern enlightenment, by the growth in Liberal sentiment, has in a large degree reversed the scale.

Our headline calls for an explanation of "waste." We shall make no reference to pecuniary gains or losses, for pecuniary matters are sordid. We aim at more important ends. It is the waste of true human greatness in all tending to happiness, independence, and manhood that we would speak of—thus: Education stands first in the line of necessity; yet, during scores of centuries religious dicta chose to suppress enlightenment solely because it was inimical to religion. This enforcement extended to personal tortures, death, and wars of extermination.

Religion chose to subvert manhood to mental and physical slavery throughout the world. It caused articles of faith wholly unsubstantial and at variance with sense and reason, which were and are now imposed upon its subjects. It seized upon, by unnatural agencies and associations, nature's ethics, which are the foundation of all goodness in human life and carriage, in order, as it should seem, to underrate and crowd out their virtues by placing them very far below in importance the clerical ratings of the unsound dogmas which constitute all that should go to the make-up of existing religion. It assumed to fill all space with an infinit godhead, creator of all things and director of all events, thereby charging upon him the responsibility for all evils and crimes that ever existed or shall ever exist. While the very fact of his assumed form and station obviously denied to him his alleged infinity.

In the matter of "Waste" to which we hav referred, a few presentments relating to social and economic conditions should, in closing, invite our attention. The endeavor, in general, will be to show what grand results would hav followed had the thoughts and energies of the race, from earliest times down, been devoted to Secular education to the exclusion of religion. The debasement of the race was caused by the advent of superstition, fostered by craft and temporal power, history painfully informs us. The natural growth of this condition tended to universal subserviency; on the side of power to tyranny, claimed to hav emanated from divine authority, and so accepted. The measure of the results of these evils can never be made. They were fatally entailed upon the generations for all time.

Maxims.—To make an endeavor to countermand the order of nature is to insure an evil and a waste. To propagate error and untruth is also an evil and a waste; and to build ponderous theories upon air and spiritual conceits, ditto, as to human thought.

Educational Problems.—We appeal to reason and common sense. Had Secular education been first, continuously and universally planted to the exclusion of religion, and pressed forward on a purely rational basis, would not the unity of the populace hav been assured against brutalities, persecutions, and wars? Would not the whole race, centuries ago, hav obtained a high state of enlightenment if the energies and the moneys expended for the propagation of religion had been, instead, expended in the interest of Secular education? Is there room for doubt?

It remains only to invite a comparison of this problematic case to the veritably known case of the world's populace from the beginning until now.

D.

Intimations of Modern Science.

A GAS BUBBLE.

This mimic world in our basin looks as fresh and charming this morning as it looked yesterday, continues Mrs. Chambers-Ketchum in her scientific series in the Home Journal. But a tiny bubble here and there about the limbs of our little colony warns us there is no time to lose. Those silent, omnipotent forces with which none of us can contend, to which all of us are subject, will soon reduce this sea and its inhabitants to a putrescent mass; we must save the dead bodies of our friends. Carefully slipping this smooth but bibulous paper beneath them, we lift it with its precious freight of passengers and lay it on the marble slab of the table. How lovely they look—yet how sad—these drowned children, their hair and limbs and garments dripping in disorder. Reverently we get them into shape again; using our best skill to giv to them, on this flat surface, the semblance of roundness, grace, and perspectiv which enchanted us a moment ago. By the help of pin and bodkin, gentle manipulation and patience, the duty is done; they lie ready for embalmment in the folds of one of these missals on the shelvs yonder—missals illuminated by nature herself with the bodies of her children.

We cannot separate the sea-firs from the tangles without mutilating both. But there is another reason why we leave them as they grew, and place them together in the first volume of our flower-missal. These tangles—what a poem they write about color and light! These sea-firs—what a sermon is preached to the dwellers in cities, to the rulers of nations, by these citizens living in peace and order on a shred of weed in the wild Atlantic.

There is another theme for a meditation. The elements which compose them are the same: carbon, nitrogen, and water; or to put it in more scholarly terms, carbon, nitrogen, oxygen, and hydrogen. Here then we reach the borderland between minerals and living things. We hav seen that the opal is composed of silicon, oxygen, and hydrogen. The chemistry of the fiery underworld is the chemistry of silicon; the chemistry of the newer world of organic life is the chemistry of carbon. Yet the two elements are closely allied. Though carbon forms nearly one-half of the vegetal kingdom, silicon is taken up also by many plants. The grains and grasses build it into their hollow stems, to which it givs uprightness and flexibility. The pottery-trees of South America take it up in such quantities that their bark, powdered and mixed with clay, is molded into shape and baked, making durable and beautiful household vessels.

Wishing to secure a safe anchorage for his boat in stormy weather, some long-forgotten sailor invented a method of discovering the character of the sea-bottom: he fastened a bit of grease to the sounding-lead. Like the farmer and miner, he thus opened a school. Following this hint, Lieutenant Brooke, of the United States navy, invented a machine to be attached to the lead and used at any depth. In 1853 he brought up mud from the bed of the North Atlantic, where the ocean was more than two miles deep. This mud was sent to Professor Bailey, of West Point, the pioneer of microscopic research in America—whose beautiful life and early death make his memory sacred to all who love science. Professor Bailey found that this mud consists of the skeletons of myriads of microscopic living animals, identical with the fossils that make the white chalk of the old world.

Soundings ordered by the British admiralty, when the laying of the telegraph cable was undertaken, were made solely in the interests of finance; that rope was too expensiv to be lightly risked in the maw of such a monster as the Atlantic. But the scientist made this his opportunity, and the result we know. The bed of the North Atlantic is one of the broadest and most even plains in the world. We might jog along comfortably in a coach all the way from Trinity bay, Newfoundland, to Valentia, in Ireland, if the water were let off. The whole of this ocean floor is covered with ooze or mud, which dried is a soft grayish-white substance resembling chalk. Under chemical tests it is found to be composed of carbonate of lime almost entirely; under the microscope it is resolved into myriads of animals simpler in structure than the sea-firs. Each little creature is a mere atom of jelly without defined organs, sending out filaments which serve as arms or legs, and which it retracts at will. Yet it is able to feed, grow, and reproduce its kind, to choose from the teeming bosom of our mother ocean such pabulum as it needs, to separate the carbonate of lime out of which it builds its exquisit shell after its own pattern. These shells hav one or many openings through which the filaments are thrust in search of food; scientists hav therefore given to the animals the name foraminifera, which we of the laity may call hole-bearers.

Associated with them are the diatoms, those beautiful fairies that puzzled us so long with their queer frolic motions and their flinty structure—how could these living jewels be plants? Yet so they are. The starch stored up in their fossil remains for thousands of years is the mountain meal which the Norwegian mixes with his rye flour in time of dearth to make the loaf last longer. Their marvelous coats of mail are made of silicon, which they choose too from the motherly water and fit outside their bodies as no knight could fit them. Betide what will, they are safe in this crystal armor. And how wonderful its carvings! Who is the wizard artificer inside? Only another atom like her comrade the hole-bearer, but an atom of starch instead of jelly. They make immense fossil deposits. One near Monterey, Cal., is fifty feet thick; another near Richmond, Va., is thirty feet thick; still another in Bohemia is fourteen feet thick. This last furnishes the tripoli, or polishing-slate of commerce. Ehrenberg has estimated that this slate contains forty-one millions of diatoms to the cubic inch.

The hole-bearers, though often microscopic, are not so minute. They can easily be got from the shakings of sponges or from sands along the sea-shore in warm climates. Plancus found six thousand specimens in an ounce of sand taken from the Adriatic. D'Orbigny estimated that an ounce of sand from the Caribbean sea contained between three and four millions. Other microscopical genera are found in immense numbers in the sandstone of Barbadoes. The stone of which Paris is built consists of myriads of these tiny things. The beautiful nummulites, or flattened fossils of the early tertiary period, are foraminifera (minute animals of the protozoan period) of much larger growth. They get their name from their resemblance to a coin, and are about the size of an English shilling. Herodotus noticed them in the stone of which the Egyptian pyramids are built. This stone stretches from France to China; it is largely developed in the Alps, and attains a thickness of several thousand feet.

The sponges are amongst those primitiv types. They, too, choose silex for building; and what builders they are, what models for our architects and health officers are those imperishable glass cities with their wonderful houses, their more wonderful waterways, the busy, harmonious industry of all their citizens for the common good! What structure ever built by man will compare with Venus's flower-basket of the Philippine seas, a goblet woven of glass threads spun from the body of the weaver; for here the flesh even is furnished with flint.

Natura non facit saltus, said the great Swede, the poet-prophet of science. We cannot attempt to decipher the calendar of these measureless æons which transpired during the embryogeny of our visible universe; the shaping of chaos into our sun; its planets thrown off in wheeling fiery bubbles of molten minerals; each cooling into an outer crust as our earth has done; this crust then thrust up by the internal fires into mountain chains or headlands; these then furrowed by tremendous seas and floods and fiords to which we of to-day know no parallel. What forces were at work in that ocean whose dominant waters swathed the globe on every side!

We are taught that geologic time has four periods, each period being named from the fossil remains found in the rocks that form this crust. Beginning with the lowest formations, these periods are called Azoic (sometimes Archæan), or Lifeless time, without organic remains; Palæozoic or Old-life time, with remains of plants and animals foreshadowing, but unlike, our present types; Mesozoic or Middle-life time, with types more like our own; and Cainozoic or Modern-life, in which present types first appear. We are further taught that each of these periods represents millions of years, and that the first, or Azoic period, is by far the longest. The Azoic or Archæan rocks of Canada are more than thirty thousand feet thick. Below these there must be others which make the inner side of the crust, but we know very little about them. The entire crust of the earth is, in proportion, no thicker than the shell of a hen's egg.

The waves of that encompassing primal ocean gnawed the surface first formed wherever they could reach it; they deposited sand, pebbles, and clay. Thus the Archæan rocks were made. These first appeared in Scandinavia, Scotland, Bohemia, Canada, making the nuclei of future continents. The rest of the world was still submerged, with the probable exception of a spot here and there. No terrestrial life was possible. What life existed in that mother sea?

The rocks tell us. No plant skeletons hav been found, but their record is left in the graphite of which our common black-lead pencils are made. It is concluded that graphite is of vegetal origin because it has been formed in later times from charcoal, and this we know is made only from plants. It is concluded also that these plants were seaweeds, because no higher types are found in the overlying rocks of the next (Palæozoic) period. The limestone beds indicate that the primal types of both plant and animal life existed then; for nearly all limestones are organic in origin. But we hav a surer witness. In the Canadian rocks (called Laurentian from the river St. Lawrence) the Eve of our lovely little foraminifera has been found, according to the general consent of the modern summi magistri; she has therefore been christened Child of the Dawn, nativ of Canada. That is a free translation of her scientific name—Eozoon canadense.

We hav reached the border land. But is it a border land? Ah, mothers, sisters, of that wondrous dawn, we salute you. There is no dividing line. We are one.

And pardon us, we beg, my lords and gentlemen. You yourselvs hav taught us how modern you are. The sexes are two—decidedly two—in the higher classes, "the upper crust" of our terrestrial society to-day. We women folk—human or beast, worm or weed—are content. We are trying to work out our destiny as best we may according to our environments; we ask no rights that are yours. But we smile when you try to rob these our primordial kin of the indestructible right of womanhood. We smile to hear you speak of a time when sex was born (by which you mean to say when a male sex was born), and to hear you class as neuters all the millions of living creatures antecedent to that time, creatures whose unaided motherhood peopled the world. You explain the potential energy of coal and corn, of the voltaic battery. What about the potential womanhood of the working bee who is called a neuter, yet who invariably puts forth the practical energy of a queen and a mother when state exigencies demand her higher service. But we forgiv you. You builded better than you knew when you gave the holy name of matrix to the couch in which even a crystal is formed. What is this carbon, through whose agency the complicated machinery of organic life has been developed? It is found in three distinct forms—amorphous carbon, graphite, and diamond. Amorphous carbon is non-crystalline; it includes peat, charcoal, coal, coke, gas-carbon, lamp-black, bone-black, ivory-black, and soot. All these are allotropic—capable of being changed so as to hav new properties without the slightest change of element. Charcoal becomes graphite; diamond becomes coke; mineral becomes gas-carbon. All unite with the same invariable quantity of oxygen, and form one identical compound, a gas from which the carbon can again be reclaimed in the form of charcoal. It is this gas—carbonic anhydride, known as carbonic acid—which is the building material chosen by the plants and animals we hav been considering; with which they hav helped to make the limestone, marble, magnesia, and chalk of the world; giving to these rocks half their weight, and adding one-seventh to the thickness of the earth's crust. Yet it is the deadly choke-damp of the miner, which results from the combustion of fire-damp or marsh gas, another carbonic compound. Marsh gas is formed from the decomposition of vegetal matter; we saw it in little bubbles among our sea-tangles.

Diamond is pure carbon in a crystallized state. It is the hardest of known substances; it can be cut only by its own dust. It will burn only at a very high temperature, in an oxygen flame, and then it vanishes, leaving no trace; it has become choke-damp, which is colorless, inodorous, and transparent.

From choke-damp to diamond, through the slow processes of chemical and physical interaction between four ethereal ghosts out of whom and through whom the whole fabric of the world is built. Whence came this virgin queen, this morning star of gems? From the fire of some unutterably fierce crucible, or from the embrace of some silent omnipotent pressure—before either of which thought staggers?

No one can answer—no one knows her birthplace. She is found in the beds of rivers, in waste places, in unsightly bogs, though she was evidently born in the grand empire of the metamorphic rocks. Yet, exiled as she is, her clear eyes tell us she has kept her integrity. No matter how low the conditions to which she has been reduced, whether as coal or peat or choke-damp or marsh gas; no matter how coarse the garb she has had to wear, no matter how humble the task she has had to do, she has yielded to no temptation from within or without. Et qui vicerit, dabo illi stellam matutinam.

CHRISTIAN civilization in the twentieth century of its existence, degrades its women to labor fit only for beasts of the field; harnessing them with dogs to do the most menial labors; it drags them below even this, holding their womanhood up to sale, putting both church and state sanction upon their moral death; which, in some places, as in the city of Berlin, so far recognizes the sale of woman's bodies for the vilest purposes as part of Christian religion, that license for this life is refused until they hav partaken of the sacrament; and demands of the "10,000 licensed women of the town" of the city of Hamburg certificates showing that they regularly attend church and partake of the sacrament.—Gage.

Lectures and Meetings.

W. F. JAMIESON held two meetings before good audiences in Des Moines, Ia., Sunday, October 13th. He has decided to make that city his headquarters for the winter. Address him at Des Moines, Ia.

ATTENTION is called to the Sunday evening meetings of the Chicago Secular Union at Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street. The Union also givs a ball each month which it would amuse the dancing heretics to attend. These affairs are dignified by the names of "Secular Ball," "Free School Ball," etc. Next month the Union will giv a "Sunday Newspaper Ball." Liberals in or visiting Chicago should not forget the meetings of the Union.

Some New Reading.

THE Freethinkers' Magazine for November will be an extraordinarily good one. A portion of the contents will be as follows: "Giordano Bruno," by Robert G. Ingersoll; "Why was Bruno Murdered?" by George Holyoake; "The Source of Economic Law," by Prof. Thomas Davidson; "Only One World after all!—That Infinit," by T. B. Wakeman; "The Bruno Celebration and the Papal Allocution," by Edward Montgomery, M.D.; "How to be Good though Godless," by Hugh O. Pentecost; "Giordano Bruno," a poem, by Emma Rood Tuttle; also a "fine Likeness and Life Sketch" of John E. Remsburg, and much other interesting matter. Price, 20 cents. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

WM. HART, the author of the "Candle from Under the Bushel," asks in the Democrat, of Kirksville, these pertinent questions of a local preacher who asserted that Pilate did wrong and lost his soul when he gave Christ to the soldiers to be crucified: 1. Was not the coming of Christ, his betrayal and crucifixion, of God's foreordained plan for the redemption of man? 2. Would almighty power and infinit wisdom inaugurate a plan which required evil proceedings to accomplish? 3. If it was wrong in Judas and Pilate to consummate the plan, was it not wrong in God to inaugurate the plan? 4. By condemning Judas and Pilate in the matter, do you not condemn the most effectual part of God's plan for the redemption of man? 5. Judas and Pilate having consummated "the great scheme of salvation," should they not be considered as benefactors to the human race? "Men and brethren, this scripture must needs hav been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus" (Acts i, 16).

To Methuselah!

O Great Methuselah! so great in years,
In number near a thousand, round and stout!
O tell if all those centuries, in tiers,
Were purely lengthened sweetness long drawn out?
Great feeder at the festiv board of time,
Unconscionable gormandizer, glutton,
Consuming centuries as one does mutton,
About what age were you when in your prime?
How old when buying thy last wedding ring?
When had the sere and yellow leaf its inning?
Ah! when had second childhood its beginning,
And thou sans eyes, sans teeth, sans everything?
Didst mope, old man, a broken reed for years,
Or, with the boys, straight through, "set up the beers?"

SI SLOKUM.

DR. E. B. FOOTE, JR., the genial president of the Manhattan Liberal Club, is pleased with Remsburg's work on Lincoln now appearing in THE TRUTH SEEKER. He says: "His work on Lincoln promises to be of permanent historic value as well as of transient interest. It is in his usual systematic style. It suits me."

Editorial.

The Bible in Common Schools.

Among the many questions which hav agitated the people of this country, is, Shall the Jewish and Christian scriptures be retained as a reading and class book in our common schools?

A large percentage of the people of America, from various points of view, consisting of Catholics, Israelites, Quakers, Rationalists, skeptics, unbelievers, Spiritualists, Materialists, Theists, Pantheists, Atheists, advanced thinkers, moderate doubters, antitheologians, lovers of science, devotees of mental liberty, opposers of sectarian dogmas and creeds, and many who are regarded as more or less heterodox, are not in favor of the Bible being placed in our common schools; while another large portion of the public, consisting mainly of members of the orthodox Protestant churches of the country, are not only in favor of the Bible being used as a school-book by their own children, but also insist that the children of the unbelieving members of the community shall be compelled to acquiesce in its use whether they choose to or not.

The Christian public take this position mainly because they believe the Jewish scriptures are the word of the creator of heaven and earth, either written by himself, or by certain anonymous writers in ancient times delegated to place them upon parchment, and that in either case they are equally his word and will.

This Christian portion of the community seem to be under the impression that it is a benefit or an honor to their God to keep his book, or his "great letter to mankind," prominently before the rising generation. They are not content, as I said, that the Bible shall be used by their own children, but insist that the children of all other classes, whether they tacitly admit its divinity, or doubt it in toto, shall also be compelled to use it, and read it, and study it, and by the system of public taxation, shall be made to pay for the enforced privilege of doing so. Millions of copies of the Bible hav been used as a propagandizing agent for making proselytes to the Christian religion, and it is supposed to weave an influence around the tender minds of the young that can with difficulty be removed in after years. For this reason the Bible worshipers are so persistent that the volume shall be retained in our public schools. Had they been educated in the belief that the Institutes of Menu, the ancient Hindoo Vedas, the teachings of Zoroaster, the maxims of Confucius, the sublime beatitudes of Buddha, or the later writings of Mohammed were the word of God, they would doubtless hav had the same amount of reverence for them, and would hav insisted, with equal earnestness, that they should be used in our schools.

Indeed, to many minds it is difficult to understand why the rising generation of the present day should be compelled to use the sacred writings of the Jewish nation any more than the sacred writings of any other ancient nations who hav held that they received through their prophets and inspired priests, laws and instructions direct from heaven. While they all contain some sublime sentiments, and grand specimens of antique poetry, they also all contain certain superstitions, mythical legends, etc., that can be of little or no benefit to the young minds of the present age.

That class of the American public who are most zealous and persistent that the Bible shall be used in our common schools, are the same who are in favor of placing the Jewish God, Jehovah, in our national Constitution; who demand that Sunday shall be kept as a holy day by the people of all shades of belief or unbelief; that a union of church and state shall be maintained; that churches and church property shall not be subject to taxation; that chaplains shall be maintained at public expense in our armies and navies, in our prisons and in our halls of legislation, and that all grades of unbelievers in the popular system of religion shall be compelled, nolens volens, to help pay its expenses and keep the machinery in good running order.

A spirit of deep injustice rules in all this. It is perfectly right for those who believe in a certain system of religion to hav the privilege of enjoying it, and having enjoyed it, it is only just that they should pay for the pleasure so enjoyed. It is not just that those who do not believe in it shall be compelled to pay for it. Equal taxation is one of the fairest principles that was ever incorporated into a government; but to distinguish the property of a country, assessing heavily farms, houses, manufactories, merchandise, etc., and letting another class of property, which is plentiful throughout the land, entirely escape, is palpably unequal and unjust. Is there any justice or equity in unbelievers being compelled to pay for the privileges which believers enjoy, and being made to help keep up their running expenses? When church property is allowed to pay no taxes to help sustain the government, it amounts just to that and nothing else.

It is perfectly allowable for every man and woman to believe in a personal, anthropomorphic God, who necessarily occupies but a limited portion of the universe at a given time; who is supposed to hav a white throne a little way above the clouds, surrounded by courtiers and worshipers; who looks with partiality upon some of his children, granting them all sorts of favors and emoluments, while hating and despising the far larger share of his offspring, cursing them with disease, pestilence, and famin; who fights the wars and battles of his favorits, and sends destruction, massacres, bloodshed, and death upon those whom he does not regard with favor. It is quite right, I say, for every person to believe in this kind of a God, who thinks he has good reason to do so, and to believe him fickle, changeable, revengeful, passionate, merciless, and cruel, if they really hav grounds to think he is that sort of a being; and the believer should be allowed to bow down to his God and worship and adore him to his heart's content; and his perfect right to do so should not be interfered with by those who dissent from him. But there are hundreds of thousands in our land who do not believe in such a God, who do not believe that a person who has eyes, ears, a nose, a mouth, hands, legs, and feet; who indulges in queer whims and conceits; who knowingly sets a trap for his ignorant and unsophisticated children to fall into, and then, for doing so, empowers a big, furious devil to torment them to the latest moments of eternity, is the supreme power of the universe. I repeat, it is right for as many to believe in this kind of a God as are able to convince themselvs that he exists; but, in the name of all justice and equity, I denounce it as a gross species of oppression and tyranny that you and I shall be compelled to worship such a deity; that we shall be forced to pay taxes upon his property to support his numerous priests and chaplains, and that contrary to our wishes he shall be placed in our national Constitution, by which process we shall be forced to pay allegiance to his court, to acknowledge his priests and admirers as our superiors and entitled to perquisits and emoluments at our expense; that they shall be preferred to ourselvs in filling places of honor and profit, and that unless we bow our heads and worship their God, we shall be considered as outlaws and aliens, having no rights which they are bound to respect. I raise my voice in earnest protest against the injustice of compelling me to pay allegiance to a kind of deity I cannot believe in, and of tabooing and proscribing me if I cannot conscientiously do so.

It is the right and privilege of people who want chaplains and priests to talk to them and tell them about the great fact of total depravity—that man was made pure and perfect in the beginning, but that within the first twenty four hours or thereabouts, by a little lack of foresight and good management on the part of the creator and considerable shrewdness and tact on the part of the devil, the grand scheme of peopling this earth with a race of upright, faultless, happy people, and of its being a perfect paradise, was, in the language of printers, completely "knocked into pi," the devil winning the first trick in the grand game, and being able to hold the best cards ever since—it is, I say, the right and privilege of people who want this kind of talk, to hav it.

Instruction upon the consistency of one being three and three being one; of a son being as old as his father, and, in fact, being his own father, and all that sort of thing with which those who frequently listen to the teachings of this privileged class are sufficiently familiar—all the many beauties and consistencies which they hand out to the people—I do not object, I say, to those who want this kind of instruction having all they can make a good use of, nor do I object to their paying for it every cent it is worth; but I do object to being made to pay for it myself. I hav no use for that kind of doctrin, and it is very much against my inclinations to help foot the bills incurred in the propagandism of such views. They possess no value to me, and I very much object to being forced to pay for them. Let those who want gorgeous churches be willing to pay for them; let those who want splendid carriages pay for them; let those who wish liveried servants to wait upon them be willing to foot the bills themselvs; let those who want diamonds and precious stones to decorate their persons be willing to pay their cost; let those who covet gewgaws and worthless ornamentations not object to meeting the expense which is entailed upon them; let those who want priests and chaplains be willing to pay for them. Let them not ask us to pay for them who hav no use for them, and who need not their services.

The same with the Bible as a book to be used in the education of the young. Those who prefer it should be allowed to use it without molestation or hindrance, but in equal fairness they should not insist that our children shall also be compelled to use the same book; that we shall be forced to pay for their children using it, or that it shall enter into the list of reading-books or class books in our common schools, to help mold the early opinions of the rising generation. "Let justice ever be done."

Without arguing much the question whether the Bible is a divinely inspired volume, and whether the claims usually set up by its admirers are tenable, whether the statements made in the anonymous compilation are worthy of credence or whether they comport with human experience, I propose merely to make a cursory examination of the fitness of the volume as a school-book. It will be admitted by every candid person that the education of the young is a matter of the highest importance, and that such means should be employed and such books furnished as are best calculated to impart correct and useful information with the least possible amount of error. We know well that the impressions received in childhood remain fixed in the mind till the close of life. We know by bitter experience how difficult it is to eradicate from our minds the effects of early education and how lessons that we learned when young remain engraved on the memory when thousands of incidents through which we pass in later years flit from our recollection and are utterly forgotten. How important, then, that the lessons imparted to the young minds should be free from that which is mythical, that which is fabulous, that which is sectarian, everything which is tinctured with superstition, and everything that is misleading and harmful. The mind of childhood is a clean, unwritten page, and nothing should be inscribed there save that which is true and useful; nothing should be written there that in after years must be eradicated at an expense of toil and sorrow.

Much has yet to be learned of the true system of early education; much that is mythical and mistaken, much that is uncertain and untrue, touching the dogmas of theology has to be replaced with the well-attested truths of nature as they are verified by the investigations of science and absolute demonstration. The universe, or that portion of it which is within the reach of our own cognizance, contains enough of the grand realities of existence without there being the slightest necessity for the rising generation to spend their time and energies delving, stumbling, or floundering in the dark and uncertain realm of ancient mysticism and theological conjecture. When there is so much truth to be learned it is utterly useless to store the infantil minds with pernicious errors. Let us consider some of the reasons why the Bible is unfitted for a school-book.

1. Its language is antique, and many of its forms of expression are obscure and obsolete. It is therefore ill adapted to the present style of imparting knowledge.

2. It is too composit in character, being a compound of domestic narrativ, genealogy, romance, poetry, and accounts of wars and bloodshed.

3. It abounds in hard and unpronounceable names of persons and places, difficult of reading, puzzling to the mind, and not of the slightest value as information.

4 It abounds in obscenity and vulgarity, and acts of incest, rape, adultery, and amorousness wholly unfit to feed to juvenil minds.

5. It abounds in tales of horror, slaughter, massacre, bloodshed, carnage, and death which are a very pernicious species of pabulum to the youthful intellect.

6. It represents the supreme power of the universe in a most unfavorable light, making him changeable, passionate, revengeful, and cruel.

7. It teaches theories of cosmogony, especially relating to the age of this planet, diametrically opposed to the clearest revelations of science and observation. It inculcates on the young mind much that has to be unlearned and discarded in succeeding years.

8. It sets up falsehood for the truth, in a thousand ways which are not specified in these brief counts. It gives as facts statements which children themselvs know to be untrue.

9. It recognizes witchcraft, a vagary which belongs only to barbarism and has been the cause of great cruelty and outrage upon men, women, and children.

10. It is a supporter of kingcraft and tyranny, upholding the rule of one man over the many, and is consequently opposed to a republican or democratic form of government, which we believe to be the most equitable system that has yet been devised.

11. It is an advocate of priestcraft, upholding a species of rule that has fettered the mind of man, made him an abject slave, and proved itself a curse to the human race.

12. It requires a belief in supernaturalism, an absurdity that has proved more mischievous to humanity than any other one, in support of which not a particle of real proof can be adduced.

13. It casts a slur upon human industry. According to its foundation story, labor was imposed upon man as a punishment, and the idea is presented that if a man had never done wrong, he would never hav had to toil nor to bring the sweat from his brow, but, like the birds of the air and the lilies of the field, he would never need to take thought as to what he should eat, drink, or wear. When it is considered how much industry has done toward educating, civilizing, and elevating the human race, the mischief that has been caused by stigmatizing labor can easily be imagined. Labor has emphatically been man's savior.

14 Its self-contradictions are so numerous and flagrant as to greatly detract from its value as an authority in educating the juvenil mind.

15. Its writers were too unlearned and too unscientific to constitute them good teachers for others. It was written long ago, when little progress had been made in the natural sciences, and when the knowledge of nature and art was far less than at the present time. The world has traveled far away from it.

16. Its literary ability is not so great, when taken in connection with its want of scientific knowledge, as to giv it special merit as a text-book.

17. The tenor of the lessons in it are not of a practical character, especially for the present age of the world. If it was of value to the nation of the Jews three thousand years ago, it has ceased now to possess much practical importance to mankind.

18 The Bible teaches that the earth has been peopled less than six thousand years, while geology and other sciences unmistakably prove that man has existed on the globe more than one hundred thousand years.

19. The Bible says nothing about the upheavals or internal commotions which are plainly seen to hav occurred on the globe in the past.

20. It says nothing about the great glacial period which numerous proofs clearly show existed for a long time on the earth.

21. The Bible teaches that the consequences of wrong doing can be obviated and set aside by repentance, and wearing sackcloth and ashes, as well as by offering sacrifices—placing the face in the dust, and all that sort of thing—while nature's truth and reason clearly show that there can be no forgivness for a wrong act once committed. A sin once done can not be undone by penance, prayer, or confession.

22. The Bible has caused untold wretchedness in the minds of men by pictures of the torments of hell and eternal misery for fallible unfortunate man, who falls naturally into the state of suffering so elaborately prepared for him. It is not pleasant reading; not a cheerful study for children to pursue.

23. The Bible has done much toward the degradation of woman, and in subjecting her to the rule and dominion of the opposit sex. In this regard it testifies to the barbarous age in which it was written, and is not in keeping with the more progressiv sentiments touching woman's equality with man which rule at the present time. In according to woman her true position in the journey of life, the sentiment of the present hour stands far in advance of the ethics of the Bible.

24. The Bible recognizes human slavery, one of the greatest curses that the world has ever known—a system of outrage, oppression, and wrong.

25. The Bible recognizes polygamy, one of the twin relics of barbarism. Some of the highest dignitaries of the book, and many of the greatest favorits which the volume names, were men who indulged in a plurality of wives, some of them going to an extravagant excess in this direction. Instance, Solomon with his seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines.

26. The Bible sanctions the taking of human life. The approval which is found there for murder, wars, and bloodshed is quite sufficient to make it an unfit monitor to inexperienced and innocent minds.

27. The Bible exhibits great partiality toward different portions of the family of man. It favors the Jewish nation, and showers favors and blessings upon them, while curses and imprecations are poured upon the heads of gentiles. Palpable inequality.

28. It is a warm advocate of the barbarous custom of slaying innocent animals and offering them up as a propitiation, and as a sweet-smelling savor in his nostrils, to the deity who rules on high. Human sacrifices were also sometimes approved. The whole thing is necessarily abhorrent to the tender, sympathetic instincts of a child.

29. The teachings of the Bible are calculated to stifle and destroy providence, foresight, and enterprise. If some of its teachings were carried out mankind would be little better than a race of pitiable mendicants.

30 The Bible upholds and teaches the principles of punishing the innocent for the acts of the guilty, and of the undeserving being made eternally happy because of the good deeds of a single individual. This is opposed to every element of justice, and should never be impressed upon the brains of artless and simple minded and justice-loving children.

I hav thus shown many reasons why the Bible is not fitted for a school-book for the use of children, but the category might still be largely increased. There are numerous other reasons why it should not be admitted into our schools, and more especially why all children should not be required to read it, and why the parents of all should not be compelled to pay for the expense. Many of the points of objection that hav been mentioned might be enlarged upon, and the strength of the objection could be made still more apparent.

Think for a moment of the erroneous ideas that are taught in the Bible, which the investigations and observations of scientific men hav proved to be wrong in toto. The cosmogony of the Bible, as I said, is utterly at fault. The age of this planet, according to its teachings, is less than six thousand years, while the clearest proofs are found that it must hav existed for millions of years. It speaks of the division of light from darkness as though they were formerly blended together—truly an unscientific absurdity. It teaches about the existence of days, mornings, and evenings before the sun, moon, or stars were brought into existence; how all kinds of vegetation, including herbs, plants, grasses, shrubs, and trees, grew and came to perfection, bearing flowers, fruits, and seeds, before there was a sun to send forth a ray of light, or a drop of rain had ever fallen upon the earth. But it is now well known that this could not hav possibly been the case. The sun is as old as the earth and probably was the parent of all the planets that form the solar system, and the indentations caused by drops of falling rain are found imprinted in the old red sandstone, made when in a plastic state, and must hav occurred hundreds of thousands, and probably millions, of years ago. It shows the hight of ignorance to talk about trees and vegetables growing, and producing fruits and seeds, without the influence of the sun, and without the moistening and rejuvenating properties of rain and dew. Equally absurd is the legend about the division of the waters and the making of the firmament, whose office was claimed to be to divide the waters above it from those below it, and to keep them separated. What a crude, clumsy appreciation the writer of that tradition had of the true state of the case! The "firmament" is nothing but space, and would be totally incapable of sustaining a body of water in the upper atmosphere even were such a body there to be sustained. The merest tyro in physical science can easily comprehend the fallacy of the Bible story. D. M. BENNETT.

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

Not a Ghoulish Lie.

I quoted from Rayner's "Life of Jefferson," published in 1832 the last words of the dying statesman. On July 3, 1826, Jefferson expressed a fervent desire to liv till the next day that he might "breathe the air of the fiftieth anniversary, when he would joyfully sing, Nunc Dimittas Domine."

When the morning of that day came he appeared to be thoroughly impressed, as if preternaturally, that he should not liv through it, and only expressed a desire that he might survive until midday. He seemed perfectly at ease, being willing to die. When the doctor entered his room he said: "Well, doctor, you see I am here yet." . . . On a member of his family observing that he was better, and that the doctor thought so, he listened with evident impatience and said, "Do not imagin that I feel the smallest solicitude as to the result." He then calmly gave directions for his funeral, expressly forbidding all pomp and parade, when, being answered by a hope that it would be long ere the occasion would require their observance, he asked with a smile, "Do you think I fear to die?" A few moments after, he called his family and friends around his bedside and uttered distinctly the following sentence: "I hav done for my country, and for all mankind, all that I could do, and I now resign my soul without fear to my God, my daughter to my country." These were the last words he articulated—his last solemn declaration to the world—his dying will and testament, bequeathing his most precious gifts to his God and to his country. All that was heard from him afterwards, was a hurried repetition, in indistinct and scarcely audible accents, of his favorit ejaculation, Nunc Dimittas Domine. He sunk away imperceptibly, and breathed his last, without a struggle or a murmur, at ten minutes before one o'clock on the great jubilee of American liberty—the day and hour, too, on which the Declaration of Independence received its final reading, and the day and hour on which he prayed to heaven that he might be permitted to depart.

And now a gentleman from Florida attempts to discredit the fact of these last words of Jefferson because he has found another account of the last words and circumstances of his death, to wit:

Jefferson knew he was dying, and he wanted to die on the Fourth of July. As time wore on toward morning, he said to Mr. Trist: "This is the Fourth?" Mr. Trist nodded. "Ah!" murmured Jefferson, with an expression of satisfaction. Then he sank into unconsciousness.

This incident occurred early in the morning, but before noon Jefferson revived and spoke again. He believed in a God and could therefore consistently utter the words, Nunc Dimittas Domine. What foundation, therefore, is there for the accusation by the gentleman from Florida that Jefferson's biographer has told a "ghoulish lie" about the dying Deist? BURR.

Was George Washington or Abraham Lincoln a Christian?

For a long time I hav regarded Mr. John E. Remsburg as being one of our most able and indefatigable champions of Rationalism—not of Freethought, for we all are but poor, frail creatures of circumstances, environments, knowing that which we do know by and through circumstances, compulsion. By and through compulsion we believe all that we believe and do all that we do. The organs of the brain in the cranium are developed by, through, and under circumstances over which we hav no control, and extending back to our remotest ancestry. The causes are now established that must inevitably work out all the causes and effects that ever can occur. Whatever is to be will by and through cause and effect, be.

Now, how was it with Washington and Lincoln? We hav two evidences that Washington was a Christian; one of which was that he had a hundred and twenty five black Christian spots upon his character, in the form of so many mulatto and negro slaves. The Constitution of the United States, by the word "justice" in the preamble, and the word "people" in the fourth Amendment, of that great, though often outraged, document, from the very foundation of this republic prohibited slavery. In violation thereof, Washington held and bought and sold slaves, and he had no other authority or law by which to be guided in regard thereto than that of the Christian's "holy Bible" (Ex. xxi, 6, 21; Deut. xxv, 44–46). He also made whisky and grew tobacco, and sold them. He neglected to draw his salary when he was president of the United States, but gave it to the rich, the government. All governments are the rich, while the people are the poor. Had Washington been a thorough and veritable Rationalist, he would hav drawn that salary and distributed it among the poor people. But we hav overwhelming evidence that Washington was not a Christian. By Christianity (Rom. xiii, 1, 2; 1 Pet. ii, 13) Washington was commanded to submit to George III. of England under the penalty of damnation. He knew this, and heeded it not. Therefore he could not hav been a Christian. Since he "could not tell a lie," he could not hav been one of the average Christians that are now as common as pig-tracks around a country barnyard, and of whom we read in 1 John ii, 4.

As for Lincoln, he was a kind of dish-rag. He was friend to his enemies, and enemy to his friends, in conformity with Christianity (Matt. xix, 29; v, 44, and Luke xiv, 26). He pardoned, patted, and pampered the rebellious "enemies" of our government, of our people, and of decency, while they were yet in the act of murdering our best citizens by thousands.

For a person to believe that section 3 of article iii of our federal Constitution should be held to imply that the confiscated property of a rebel convicted of treason, should, after the death of that rebel, revert to his heirs, is the manifestation of a distorted condition of intellect that is very little above the point of idiocy. Nevertheless, that was the way in which Mr. Lincoln twisted our Constitution about.

When we read Judge Underwood's logical and lucid remarks upon that subject, when rendering a decision touching that matter in the United States district court down in Virginia, and compare them with those of Mr. Lincoln, upon the same subject, in one of his messages to Congress, Mr. Lincoln withers to the condition of a distorted-minded shyster. His logic was like unto that of a Talmage, or a Roman Catholic priest.

Just at the close of the slavemongers' rebellion, I chanced to pass by the gate of a United States military prison at Wheeling, W. Va., and when I saw our boys in blue serving terms of three and four years of confinement there for having committed some slight breach of military disciplin while fighting rebels, while, at the same time, those rebels were enjoying liberty, outraging freedom and the loyal people all over the Southern states, I thought, surely Abe Lincoln must be a Christian! G. N.

FEMALE voices are never heard in the Russian churches; their place is supplied by boys; women do not yet stand high enough in the estimation of the churches . . . to be permitted to sing the praises of God in the presence of men.—Kohl.

The Men of God.

At Chicago, Joseph Moysant, a Roman Catholic priest, has eloped with the wife of Mr. M. C. McDonald. The husband says: "He was her confessor, and my little boy used to go to the school attached to the church. Just think of it! The man who ate my food and blessed my table, to come into my own house and steal the affections of my wife! Why, he used to hav my little boys get down on their knees before him till he'd bless them and pat them on their heads. He was a dirty, greasy, gluttonous Frenchman. Poor woman, I feel sorry for her. I suppose she was weak and he took advantage of her in the confessional.

"It was two years ago last July that she first met him. He was then a curate at this little church of Notre Dame. I don't know how she became acquainted with him, but I presume it was at the confessional. One evening she came home and told me that there was a poor priest down at the Notre Dame church, and she asked me for permission to bring him up to the house and giv him something to eat.

"I told her yes, why certainly to bring him up and feed him. His shoes were out at the toes, and he did not even hav a handkerchief to his name. That visit he blessed my food and asked God to watch over me and my family. After that he visited the house quite frequently.

"He used to go to the Grand Pacific hotel, the Palmer and Sherman House, and register as Father Moysant, and then my wife would call on him in the garb of a nun, and, of course, the hotel people thought nothing of it.

"But that isn't the worst. This treacherous scoundrel has been trying to get my wife to poison me. He circulated the story around the parish that I had heart disease, and that there would be a funeral at Poppy Mac's house one of these days. He used to always call me Poppy Mac and my wife Mammy Mac. You see, he tried to induce her to poison me, and I would hav taken anything from her hands at the darkest hour of night. But her heart failed her; she couldn't do that. I'd giv all the money I've got in the world to just lay eyes on him for one second."

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - OCTOBER 26, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

The Plight of the Church.

The Sun of this city doesn't seem to hav very consistent notions regarding the progress or decline of Christianity. A few days ago, as we noted last week, it thought that the lamentation of a preacher at the Episcopal convention over the falling off from the church was the result of a pessimistic or dyspeptic disposition, while it now holds that the similar views of another preacher hav an exceedingly substantial foundation. "One of the most striking addresses before the general convention of the Episcopalians," it says, "was delivered by Bishop Johnson, the missionary bishop of western Texas. It was a call upon the church to consolidate its ranks and rekindle its enthusiasm to resist the advances of the skepticism of the period. 'The very citadel of our Christianity,' declared the earnest bishop, 'is being assailed by a scientific apparatus of destruction never equaled since Christianity was first preached to the world; and this apparatus is in the hands of the most subtle reasoners that the human race has ever produced.' The assault, too, is coming not merely from without. 'There are many things to indicate,' he proceeded, 'that there is a sapping going on from the inside that is almost as dangerous.'" This situation the Sun regards as correctly described, and adds that the bishop from Texas has not exaggerated its dangers.

The writer then goes on to consider the necessity for the bishop's warning. These words, he thinks, may well come from a sincere believer in the doctrins which he preaches, for it is true that never before, in the whole history of Christianity, were the very foundations of religious faith so powerfully assailed as now. The attack is not on any particular religious system, Christian or pagan, but against all supernatural religion whatsoever. It is not conducted in enmity to any, but simply and coolly in the interests of scientific truth. It therefore differs radically from the bitter Infidelity of the past. It analyzes, tests, and examins the bases of religious faith as dispassionately as the chemist or the physicist conducts his investigations. Its purpose is not to destroy, but to discover. It conducts no violent controversy with theology, but simply presents the results of its inquiries. It does not deny, but merely says that the scientific grounds for belief are lacking. It does not doubt, but only declares that it does not know, and that the theological premises are irreconcilable with reason, with fact, and with common sense.

A foe like that, the writer considers a very dangerous enemy, for it sacrifices nothing to mere sentiment. It does not even get on any common ground with theology, so that a battle between the two may take place. Theology may make war on it, but it refuses to join the issue. Theology must come to its ground and meet its arguments of fact and reason with like arguments if there is to be a contest. That is, supernaturalism must be abandoned altogether. What is demonstrable can alone penetrate the other's armor. There is no premis of theology, the personality of God, revelation, inspiration, supernatural control and direction of human affairs, which Agnosticism does not reject. It treats them as mere assumptions, poetical imaginings of which there is and can be no proof. It will giv no more serious heed to them than it would giv to the dreams of the uninstructed poet as to the laws of science.

This attitude of scientific skepticism, it is thought, is all the more dangerous because it is an enemy which refuses to fight, and yet goes on with its work of undermining the foundations of supernatural religion. It may alarm the defenders of faith, but it does not incite them to war and fill them with the enthusiasm of battle by violent attack. It is at work quietly and patiently to remove stone by stone the pillars upon which their faith rests.

If the Sun will let its rays illumin the country across the channel from France, its editors may observe that the Episcopalian clergy and their supporters there hav been incited to fight this sort of skepticism. Dr. Wace, the bishop of Peterborough, Mr. Gladstone, and others less prominent hav been trying to controvert Professor Huxley, as the exponent of scientific Agnosticism, while the Dr. Gibson and the Christian Evidence Society hav been endeavoring to refute what the Sun calls "the bitter Infidelity" of Mr. Bradlaugh and his colaborers in the Secular vineyard. The church in England is awake to the crisis, if the American church authorities are still slumbering peacefully with the Thirty-nine Articles, Nicene creed, and an unrevised prayer-book under their heads.

The church's enemy within her folds, says the Sun, are "those who are trying to perform the impossible task of making faith jibe with their Agnostic convictions or desires; who pretend to preach faith while they are really leading their hearers into Agnosticism." This is precisely the opinion of the "bitter Infidelity" of the present, whatever the view of the "bitter Infidelity" of the past may hav been, and we are glad to see so pious a journal as the pope's secular ally in this country acknowledge its validity. Heber Newton and preachers of his stamp are really Infidels, and a very few hundred years ago they would hav been burnt at the stake by Episcopalians and Roman Catholics alike. There can be no reconciliation of the essential Christian doctrins with reason and common sense more than there can be between biblical cosmology and the theories of the evolutionists. To be a Christian necessitates faith, which, says Dr. Newman, "is the power of saying you believe things which are incredible." Agnostic convictions can never be squared with faith, which before all things else is imperativ upon the upholders of all supernatural religions. Therefore, if the words of the editorial writer in the Sun are true, Protestant Christianity is in sore straits, and the lamentations of the preachers are not the product of pessimistic dispositions, or a personal failure to induce people to join the Episcopalian church.

Bigotry Beating the Devil Around a Stump.

In the Christian Advocate last week a subscriber asks if Methodists shall keep their promis made when soliciting funds with which to erect a church, the promis being that the church should never be closed to anyone for funeral purposes, and the case in point being that the trustees had allowed Spiritualists to use the building for that purpose.

The omniscient editor answers the query in this way:

"It depends upon whether the common understanding at the time the promis was made related to the funeral services of some branch of the Christian church; if it did, the Spiritualists hav no claim. Is it to be supposed that, if Mormons wanted the church, these trustees would hav felt bound to giv it? Under a general statement of that kind we think not. But if they would deny Mormons, why would they admit Spiritualists? If an Infidel had died, and it was understood that Ingersoll was to speak, would they hav surrendered the church for that purpose? If the Spiritualists had no organization in the town at the time, and were not on such terms with Christian denominations as to be recognized, we think the trustees would be authorized in stating: 'This church is open to Christian services without respect to denomination.' They had no right to compromise other subscribers by making a promis that went beyond a general implication. It was undoubtedly a bid to outsiders to help them, but was not intended to be understood as selling out the sanctity of God's house, nor the principles which govern Christian churches. Everyone knows that if a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church had been expelled for immorality, and some one who stood by him should die, and the friends of that person should ask for the church for the funeral services, intending to hav the expelled Methodist minister enter it to make the funeral address, he could not be admitted under such a general promis as they made. Christianly conducted funerals must hav been meant."

The query and answer, particularly the answer, is not without interest to Freethinkers. Hardly a report of a lecturer of his experiences comes to notice that does not tell of aid given to churches by Liberals and Spiritualists of generous natures, who are assured that if they desire to use the building they can do so. This is usually in small towns where only one public building is practicable, and to the credit of the Christians, let us record that the promis is sometimes kept, and the church walls occasionally resound to the oratory of a Freethinker. We think all of the Liberal lecturers hav on occasions spoken in Christian churches. But if the morality of Mr. Buckley is to prevail those church buildings the ownership of which is vested in Methodist hands will henceforth be closed to non-Christians, though their money aided in its erection. He takes refuge in the Jesuit doctrin of mental reservation, and though the building was never to be closed against any one for that special use, he would make with the promis the reservation "who is a Christian." That is Jesuitry pure and simple.

We hav never thought well of the practice of some Liberals who giv to churches, even to boom a village. It is nursing a viper, the best that can be made of it. But there are in Liberalism no conferences, nor bishops, nor editors to lay down rules for individual action, nor to prescribe penalties for their violations. The money a man earns is his, and he can do with it as he pleases. He can bestow it for churches, or whatsoever his soul lusteth after, but we look upon such bestowal as we do upon the Lord's command to buy strong drink. It is apt to cause subsequent trouble. And no better proof of that is needed than the Jesuitical and immoral tergiversation of the bigoted Dr. Buckley, Methodist organ-grinder.

P.S.—As if to specially illustrate and enforce the foregoing remarks, comes the experience of S. P. Putnam, at Fossil, Ore., where he had a lecture engagement. He tells the story thus in his glowing News and Notes, in Freethought:

"The church was built by all the citizens of the place with the understanding that it was for general use, but the Christians in control absolutely refused it for Liberal lectures. The school-house was also refused, and the Masons, not knowing but what I had horns and hoofs, and was really the devil in disguise, didn't want I should lecture in their hall until they had seen and heard me, and found out how harmless I might be, or otherwise. There was nothing to do but to make a hall for the occasion, and so the lumber was procured, and in a little while Watson's store became Watson's Hall."

The Christians of Fossil are brethren after Dr. Buckley's own heart. They took the Infidel's money to help build the church, and now shut the doors in the heretics' faces. Honesty and religion are pretty wide apart, in Oregon as well as in New York.

Justice and Fair Play Demanded.

A Michigan grand jury hav indicted W. E. Reid, the Spiritualist medium, for using the mail for swindling purposes, and hav, he writes, not confined their presentment to individual concerns, but hav taken a wide scope "so that in reality mediumship and not Reid is on trial." If this is true, the matter grows interesting, and the communication which we copy from the Independent Pulpit will be a pretty fair statement of the pros and cons of the case.

By this prosecution it is evident that the "old gentleman of Idealaho," otherwise the Lord, represented by Holy John, of Philadelphia, and helped by nearly two score Michiganders, proposes to find out whether his patent on revelation will protect him from competition by presumptuous men. If not, if the professed mediums of communication between this world and his and the devil's can keep revelations on tap; if men regard these revelations above those made in the book called the Bible, it needs no very keen observer to discover that great injury will be done the old gentleman's church—meaning the old gentleman's self-constituted representativs—and credit which should go to him will be given to other parties. To protect himself, therefore, the old gentleman has raised up Holy John to be his prophet and defender.

If the indictment is what Mr. Reid alleges, it is an attempt on the part of the Christians to suppress the religion of a class of American citizens, and is, as the Pulpit writer says, a prosecution of a faith by a faith—a revival of the time, with modern methods, when sect warred with sects, and the stronger put the weaker in prison or the grave. For a decade, now, the Christians hav been jealous of the Spiritualists, who go beyond them in exhibiting the joys of the other world, and consequently become dangerous rivals in a business which of all other businesses can never endure rivalry without the loss of temper by those engaged in it. There is no other way of looking at it, if we credit the Christians with sincerity. Unbelievers in either revealed religion or Spiritualism can with some show of logic deny intercourse with spirits, but these unbelievers would never resort to force to prevent people anxious to pay money for being deceived from having the opportunity to pay it. Unbelievers do not regard themselvs as keepers of their brothers to that extent. They would allow Christians to support their priests and be swindled to their hearts' content. But Christians hav no show of logic whatever in their attempted suppression of other-world intercourse. They believe in another world; they believe that God and spirits hav communicated and can still communicate with the inhabitants of this, and a very large proportion of them hold that their mediums can by incantations and prayers—and cash—considerably reduce, if not at once end, the detention of souls in a place where, to put it mildly, things are not altogether lovely. They believe in miracles beside which Mr. Reid's performances are insignificant. Why, then, we ask, shall they persecute a sect which instead of leaving heaven away off in the misty realms of somewhere, and their dead friends in some uncertain place, brings heaven around us, and produces our friends at call to assure us that they are comfortably off, in a moderate climate, and with a rational method of life, instead of playing on harps forever and singing songs which hav no end? The only answer that can be made is that the stronger body is angry at the weaker, and resorts to force for the same reason that it once forcibly suppressed minority sects within its own ranks. The minority are always bad folks, and it is the duty of the majority to disciplin them.

We shall not, of course, see our [post]Master of Purification attempt to reinaugurate prosecutions for witchcraft, or of the mediums of the Christian church who expedite the passage of souls through purgatory. The majority nowadays do not believe in witchcraft, and the sect behind the allayers of purgatorial torments are just a little too numerous to render their prosecution an easy affair. Holy John must therefore appease the ire of the old gentleman of Idealaho by putting the Spiritualist revealers into prison. If the court shall do this, it will furnish a creed on immortality for the American people, and save them much trouble in deciding by which route they shall attain eternal bliss. The legal route would be the only one to travel. We should then hav an established religion, which is the greatest of all blessings to people without brains, and Mr. Wanamaker and his fellow church-members would be satisfied.

Whether the "reigning belle among refractory milkmaids of the Bible land" prefers to go to heaven by one of these routes or the other, or whether she prefers to go by neither, is not at present under consideration. Like other belles, she chooses to hav her own way, and she is willing to allow to others the same desirable, if sometimes ruinous, privilege.

This prosecution is also a persecution, and a very one-sided affair. If the Spiritualists are not to be allowed their media, why should the Christians be allowed their priests? Every dollar solicited for church work by the religious organs is as much a swindle as Mr. Reid's advertisment of spirit communications. The promis is held out by church beggars that souls will be saved by the aid of the money given; let us now see that statement proven, or the solicitors prosecuted for swindling.

Another Occasion for Papal Grief.

If the pope has thought to frighten the government of Italy by his allocutions, quasi "bulls," and demands for temporal sovereignty from his followers in the church, he must giv up that hope as long as Prime Minister Crispi retains office. At a banquet given him on the evening of the 14th at Palermo, at which forty-nine senators and one hundred and forty members of the Chamber of Deputies were present, Signor Crispi made a speech which ought to send Leo XIII. into another three days' spell of prayer. The Herald summarizes it as follows:

"He declared that it was necessary to combat all persons, high or low, who were seeking to undermine the political edifice of Italy. The temporal power of the pope, although it had existed for centuries, had been only a transition period. Rome existed before it and would continue to exist without it. Complaints or threats, either from home or abroad, would hav no effect. He declared unassailable the utterance of King Humbert that Rome forms an integral part of Italy just as law forms a part of the modern world. After asserting that the pope possessed perfect religious liberty, and was only restricted, and less harshly than in other Catholic states, from encroaching upon the sphere of national right, which is the right of reason, Signor Crispi exclaimed: 'Let the church, which is now free, not endeavor to frighten Prometheus with the thunderbolts of heaven. Our task is to fight in the cause of reason.'

"He next touched upon the subject of Anarchism, which, he said, was easier to combat than the church. He appealed to all men of advanced but reasonable ideas to separate openly from the creators of disorder, national discord, and social disorganization who were pretending to represent the ideas of Mazzini and Garibaldi."

It is pretty evident from this that Signor Crispi is a Rationalist, and, if he were a citizen of the United States, would subscribe unreservedly to the Nine Demands of Liberalism. He does not propose to hav a little monarchy disturbing the internal arrangements of Italy, but he does propose to make all citizens amenable to the general laws. The pope can abandon his hope of the restoration of temporal sovereignty and complete his arrangements for leaving Italy, as his followers hav often threatened he would do, but probably will not.

Political Immorality.

A Sunday newspaper in this city has obtained—probably through the junkman—the letters of a large number of the men who hav applied to the New York Central railroad for passes. The list comprises about all the senators and assemblymen of this state, a state commissioner representing Labor, several tax assessors, and a few ministers. The passes in a majority of instances were granted.

It is natural, of course, for the politicians and ministers to deadhead it over railroads. The ministers consider themselvs a privileged class, and the legislators hav laws to make financially affecting railroads. Their votes are influenced by the passes, and it is a cheap way for the railroad to buy legislation. But when the tax assessors take to selling their judgments of the value of property for a pass it is time the people knew of it. The extent to which the interests of the people hav been thus sacrificed may be learned from a short summary of the tax assessors' applications. Mr. C. J. Todd, assessor of Hyde Park, asks for and receives free passes for himself and his two sons, and says to Mr. Depew: "I hope under the circumstances you are pleased with your assessment this year. If you want to see me, please say so, and I will call on you when I am down in New York." L. D. Wilder, J. D. Ames, and James W. Conolly, of the New York tax office, ask for free passes to Auburn and Niagara Falls for themselvs and their friends, and their applications are indorsed on the corporation's books, "Granted on account of the tax office, New York city." Mayor A. Bleecker Banks, of Albany, forwards to Mr. Depew a request for free passes for tax assessors of Greenbush, and says, "I think it would be good policy if you should send passes." Henry J. Boyle, an Albany assessor, writes to Mr. E. D. Worcester, a high officer of the railroad direction, for a yearly deadheading over the Central and Hudson River railroads, and Mr. Worcester makes this comment to Mr. Depew's secretary:

"Dear Sir: In view of our peculiar relations to the Albany assessors I would recommend this. We are liable there to local tax on capital stock, and by special arrangements succeed in paying nothing. E. D. Worcester, Sec."

F. F. Wendell, another officer of Mr. Depew's corporation, suggests the renewal of a yearly pass for Assessor W. N. Johnson, and givs his reasons as follows:

"Since the pass was issued Mr. Johnson has done what I expected from him in helping me break the combination formed against the West Shore by the supervisors and assessors of Montgomery county to assess it at the rate of $10,000 per mile, and which resulted in an assessment of only $6,000 per mile. He is ready and willing and able also to giv you some valuable aid in your assessments in Palatine Bridge village, and the town of Palatine. I feel it my duty to the company not only to requite Mr. Johnson for what he has done, but to make sure of his aid in the future—to recommend a renewal of this favor. F. F. Wendell."

It is as plain as day from these letters that in consideration of personal favors to themselvs the taxes of the railroad hav been lowered. It is direct selling and buying official action, and is disgraceful and outrageous to the extreme, if not criminal.

And what shall the workingman think of his representativ on the state board of arbitration—a board constituted expressly to decide disputes between railroad corporations and their employees—when he reads F. F. Donavan's letter soliciting free passes for his wife and daughter over the road, when on the next day Mr. Donavan may be called upon to act as judge in an arbitration in a dispute between the corporation and its workingmen. It reminds us of an anti-monopoly and all-around reformer who was sent to the assembly some years ago, and of whom a friend said, He is the cheapest man in the legislature. His vote goes for $200 when the others ask $400.

It is very well known that many of the country members of the legislature come down to this city on Friday night, remaining till Sunday night encarmining the neighborhood of Madison square, and then return to Albany and introduce virtuous legislation reciting how wicked the city is. It is safe to say that these people know more of the dark places of New York than those who hav lived here all their lives. It now transpires that all the travel of these virtuous gentlemen between here and Albany is done on free passes. If the Central would refuse them favors New York would probably not lose any of its reputableness. We notice among those who hold these session passes Mr. G. Z. Erwin, the north country pietist, who would not allow the assembly judiciary committee to report on a bill to tax church property. He is more pious than righteous.

The people ought to giv their representativs and tax assessors salaries sufficiently large to enable them to be honest during their terms of office at least. It is pretty expensiv to reduce a valuation on a railroad to the extent of $4,000 a mile in return for a tax assessor's ticket over the road.

The Devil and the Other One.

The editor of the Unitarian organ, Unity, says: "The end of religion is not faith in certain human propositions, but is obedience to divine requisitions written on the tablets of the human heart."

Now will the editor kindly inform us what those requisitions are, where they may be found, what divinity is, how we are to know that the requisitions when found are divine, and how they are to be written on a human heart? To a man who pays attention to the meaning of words he writes, Unity's statement as to the end of religion sounds much like jargon—which the dictionaries describe as confused, unintelligible talk or language—gabble—gibberish.

Another loose averment of the same editor is this: "There was but one Satan in the old theology, and he was no Atheist, but his moral character was not much to speak of." Can the theologians of Unity point out a single mean action of Satan that he wasn't put up to by Jehovah? Ministers are apt to judge of Satan by the hard things said about him, and not by what he did. But if actions were to be the basis for judgment, Jehovah is a million times more immoral than Satan. And the Jehovah of the Jews, the "Father" of Jesus, is the Unitarian's God.

Mr. E. C. Walker says in Fair Play, winding up with a request to The Truth Seeker to copy, that "Recently the Boston Investigator and The Truth Seeker, of New York, hav published without credit poems by Mary Baird Finch, which first appeared in Fair Play."

Only one poem by the lady named has ever appeared in these columns that was not received direct from its author in manuscript as original. The exception was a poem printed in another paper than Fair Play, and the author requested us to use it as original.

The Rev. Jonathan Edwards, D.D., has been appointed a special secretary of the National Reform Association on "The Oath, and the Suppression of Profanity." The Association has also "resolved" to take steps to protest against the opening of the World's Fair in 1892, on Sundays. Inasmuch as this fair will probably be held in New York, Chicago, or St. Louis, we doubt if it will be closed on Sundays, though the New York pietists will work hard, and with some prospect of success, to close it. Public sentiment in either Chicago or St. Louis would, we feel certain, hold the doors open, while if the fair were held in Washington, the Christians would probably hav their way. Like every patriotic New Yorker, we hope to see it held here (whether Columbus discovered America or not), and in that event we should do our level best to hav the doors opened on Sundays. But if it is not to be in New York, it ought to go to some city where public sentiment will not crouch to Christian tyranny. We should rather that New York lost the fair than that the Sunday policy of the managers of the Philadelphia exposition be repeated. But the outlook is, however, that the newspapers of New York, backed by the protests of the public, would defeat the Christians in their attempts to deprive hundreds of thousands of people of their best opportunity to visit the fair.

Letters from Friends.

PORTVILLE, Oct. 8, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a subscriber for THE TRUTH SEEKER since the days of D. M. Bennett's unpleasantness with Comstock, and hav always paid in advance, a practice I intend to keep up, for it fills a place in my household that nothing else could. J. L. BROOKS.

HARWICH, Sept. 22, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I send a new subscriber.

For one, I am well pleased with THE TRUTH SEEKER, whose helmsman and contributors cannot be beat. Editorials, Peck's, Si Slokum's, and all the articles and the pictures are doing wonders in showing up the absurdities of Christianity and the Bible nonsense—loosening their hold upon the minds of the devotees of superstition.

Get the people to think—get the thin edge of the entering-wedge of investigation into operation, and honesty will do the rest. B. F. ROBBINS.

ADRIAN, MICH., Oct. 18. 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me brief space for reply to J. H. Wood's article of October 12th. He is much mistaken in many of his assertions. He has finally come down to a green back basis, which does not accord with his former plan of individual scrip as money. Mr. Wood should confine himself to facts, and abridge his assertions. His heretofore vague, undefined elucidation of the subject puzzles me, and probably himself. The controversy will benefit nobody. Such bickering discussion does not alter matters. The situation is a reality. A unpractical idea is nonsensical. The ballot and urging of legitimate legislation, is the only remedy. I am intensely loyal to country and friends, down on priests. Superstition and all such foolishness should be abated. All so-called exposition of the book called the Christian Bible, and its doctrins, should be consigned to oblivion. Au revoir, Friend Wood; I take leave of the financial subject.

O. S. BARRETT.

KENTON, O., Oct. 11, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The Cincinnati Enquirer of the 10th inst. describes an action of Father Kelly, pastor of St. Patrick's church of Oneida, N. Y., while celebrating mass yesterday morning. It seems he washed it down with the blood of the lamb, commonly called wine by the vulgar horde, and it proved to be a case of blood poisoning. The blood or wine he indulged in seems to hav contained arsenic. He soon felt a burning sensation in his stomach, and sent at once for an emetic, supposing that he had been poisoned. Dr. Bailey was summoned, and administered antidotes for arsenical poisoning. It was near night before Father Kelly's condition began to improve. This story either givs the Bible the lie, or proves that Father Kelly is an impostor. Turn to Mark xvi, 16–18:

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

Now, if the scripture I hav quoted is true, Father Kelly does not practice what he preaches, or he would not hav sent for a doctor. The chances are that the doctor he sent for did not believe in the Bible, or he would hav used the faith cure. In the first place, if Father Kelly is a believer in the name of the Lord, he could not be poisoned; and if he was sick, he could be cured by the laying on of hands. But it seems he had more faith in an M.D. than in the Lord, or he would hav made no attempt to save his life, but would hav gone to his blessed Virgin and received his golden trumpet.

GEORGE BAKER.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Oct. 12, 289.

MR. EDITOR: So Mr. Gleeson, in his address at the opening of the college at Oakland, Cal., said that Infidelity was making great strides through this nation. Now, if his hearers are of a thinking class, it will cause them to think and consider the reason, and they must come to the conclusion that it must be best suited to the people or they would not adopt it. The rest of his address was in praise of the Roman Catholic church, and, of course, like the rest of the parsons, he claims certain reforms on behalf of the church. But the few remarks you made through the address would soon convince anyone to the contrary.

I noticed in THE TRUTH SEEKER of September 21st that Dr. Tiffany gave a lecture on theocracy, in which he says that the mountains and hills in the Bible mean greater and smaller kingdoms. It seems strange that the revisers did not find it out. The next thing, we shall hear that Jonah was not three days and nights in the whale's belly, but the whale was three days and nights in the belly of Jonah. It is strange how the parsons do twist the Bible around. I wonder what he would say if his man hitched the cow to the cart when he was told to bring the horse and buggy? He could say cow and cart meant horse and buggy if mountains and hills meant greater and smaller kingdoms.

It seems if any more Christs come around now they shut them up as lunatics. I don't know what doctrins these modern Christs teach, but they certainly could not teach a more absurd doctrin than the Christ of eighteen hundred years ago—viz., take no thought for to-morrow, and whatever you want pray for through him and it will be all O.K.

This city is named after the Joseph to whom the pope has made the prayer to be offered this month. The city directory gives the number of forty-five churches here, including separate churches for the colored people. Of course white and colored Christians could not sit together. I don't know how they will get on when they get to heaven; but they will be washed in the blood of the lamb, then it will be all right.

I hav been here only three months and don't know if there are any Freethinkers here; if so, I would like to hear from them. RAYMOND COLE.

NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME, WIS., Oct. 6. 289.

MR. EDITOR: James Vincent, S.R., editor of the Christna, says: "People hav often been mistaken in me, and when sailing around the Christian system they hav got it into their heads that I was assailing Christianity, confounding Christianity with the Christian church. The Christian system is not Christianity, nor the truthful exponent of Christianity, and this is what I expect to be able to show." "Confounding Christianity with the Christian church!" "The Christian system is not Christianity!" A Western schoolboy once said to his teacher, "If s-o-x don't spell socks, what the hell does it spell, then?" I admit that this comparison lacks somewhat, though it will do to start on. Now, if neither the church nor the Christian system, which are the same, are not Christianity, then may I not safely ask, like the boy, what the hell are they, then?

Christna claims to be Liberal, yet this miserable sophistry, this newfangled nonsense about assailing Christianity and confounding it with the Christian church, seems to me a kind of Liberalism that all parties can easily dispense with, no matter what the editor of Christna expects to be able to show.

The editor knows as well as the most crafty scoundrel that ever mauled the word of God for a living, that there is no record of this ghoulish monstrosity to be found anywhere outside the church or the Bible. So his only resource is to ransack the Holy Queer from end to end in order to enlighten Christendom anent this most astounding myth, Christianity. Now let Christna scratch around and find Christianity, crop its wings, tie its legs, and nail it up in a box for future generations to peep at at $1 a peep. Doubtless it will turn out a more lucrativ business than that of the pulpit shark or the Christian scientist, whose choicest virtues are adultery, fanaticism, and falsehood Nevertheless, O Christna! we humbly beseech thee that in the day thou findest this Christian vampire that has sucked the blood of millions of the human race, has slain other millions with the sword that Christianity's founder sent on the earth, has tortured, hanged, and burnt still other millions, and drenched the earth for centuries and for Christ's sake with the blood of wiser men than thou art, O Chris na!—yea, verily, we implore thee to save thy reputation and bury this ghostly Christian fraud deep down into the bowels of the earth, where henceforth it may know no resurrection forever, but sleep in everlasting innocuous desuetude with its vicious old prototype, heathen mythology.

Yours truly, NELSON HUNT.

GALENA, KAN., Oct. 7, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: There are a number of the doctrins of Christianity which, resembling some badly constructed outworks to a fortified position, cannot be abandoned with impunity or even successfully defended by themselvs. One of the weakest of these is the belief in the resurrection of the body. Any intelligent person who givs the matter a moment's thought will wonder at its acceptance. The early fathers of the Christian church could hav understood very little of the subject when they preached this doctrin, or they would hav invented some subterfuge easier to explain or defend. Merely an article of belief, they might hav taught something else. Perhaps it was taken to test the credulity of their followers There was no need of even that, for people could be found who would believe anything.

When a tenet of church doctrin remains unquestioned it is safe, but let the sacrilegious hand of scientific inquiry drag it into light, and lo! what a sorry spectacle it presents.

The present direction of enlightened thought is toward the belief that "the law of nature is the law of God," and in whatever point orthodoxy conflicts with a well-defined natural law, it must succumb. This is very hard on the teachers of Christianity, for after many vain defenses and explanations there will be the inevitable surrender of their doctrin, piece by piece, until nothing is left.

If the belief in the resurrection of the body could be accepted by itself, it would be a simple matter, but the continued existence of the body in a future life would necessarily entail the continuance of those surroundings which are essential to our well-being in this life. I will briefly illustrate my meaning in one particular. For instance, the muscles of our legs and back hav sufficient strength to support us in an erect position, and to propel the body in any desired direction. They support what is called the weight of the body. This so-called weight is the resistance to the attraction of gravitation. In a larger planet than ours, of an equal density, it would be greater. If it were greater, our bodies would hav to be differently constituted or the muscles larger and stronger. This is only one point, but there are many. There is no doubt that the world we inhabit would not be large enough to contain all the generations of mankind which hav existed in the past, and probably will exist in the future, even allowing Satan a very large percentage. In the resurrection of the body we hav something utterly at variance with the requirements of a future existence. It limits the condition of a heavenly existence, which is to be eternal, a requirement impossible to our present state, to a mere repetition of our lives, or requires a succession of miracles to sustain it under altered circumstances. What is the Christian to do? Is he to reject the resurrection of the body, or will he believe that the body, being perfectly adapted to our short, earthly lives, and unfitted in every way for an everlasting one under different conditions, will resolve into its original elements after death and remain so? I hav never heard any sufficient explanation whatever, and shall be happy for enlightenment from any quarter. The Christian belief, as I understand it, deals with resurrection of a perfect body in form. There are to be no cripples or deformed persons. The man who is blown up in a powder factory will be all O K., along with all others. About the color question I can not speak with so much certainty. Some of the negroes confidentially assert they are all going to be white. Let us hope that with a perfectly constituted body there will be a mind to match, for as St. Paul has left the door open to all persons of feeble intellect and unsound mind, it would be pitiful to see the kingdom of heaven turned into a lunatic asylum on a large scale. JAMES FORGEY.

DODGE CITY, Sept. 23, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Always being a truth seeker myself, and seeing newspaper accounts of an individual at Rockford, Ill., being considered Christ in his second advent, and wishing to know from the man, or being, or god, himself the main facts in the case, I addressed a letter of inquiry, not on the sweet-hour-of-prayer plan, but on paper in tolerably fair chirography, as follows:

G. J. SCHWEINFURTH, Reverend Sir: Seeing newspaper accounts afloat that you are considered as a re incarnation of Jesus Christ and are being worshiped as such by a more or less numerous following, and not wishing to disobey the divine command, "If any man sav unto you, Lo! here is Christ, or, Lo! he is there, believe him not," without due investigation, I take the liberty of asking you direct: Do you believe yourself to be the Jesus Christ of scripture, and if so, what proof hav you within yourself that you are, and also, what proof can be adduced to show to others that you are what is said to be claimed for your being such. As these are momentous and vital questions, I hope for a direct and convincing reply at your convenience.

Very respectfully, J. C. BAIRD.

In reply I hav the following, which marks Mr. Schweinfurth as no Christ at all, but a fence-corner pretender of the "cavorting" school, and shows that the command, "If any man sav unto you, Lo! here is Christ! believe him not," is still good:

ROCKFORD. ILL., Sept. 6, 1889.

J. C. BAIRD, Dodge City, Kan., My Inquiring Friend: God hath not made it necessary for me to bear witness unto myself, for he himself, hath borne witness through the works of redemption and deliverance which I hav done in his name and through his own testimony given to the heart and consciousness of my blessed people, and through the confirmation and corroboration of the scriptures of truth which I hav unto their understanding opened and illuminated.

It is all the while true that no man can come unto me except the father which hath sent me draw him. I hav no saving work to perform upon those whom the father does not draw. My father hath sent me, and I am come to glorify him, to make his judgments known, and to gather together in one my saints, his holy people. God himself is making my mission to prosper. Amen.

G. J. SCHWEINFURTH.

By the way, it may be noted that our country is unusually prolific of Christs this year, as we hav no less than three, one in Illinois, one in North Carolina, and one in Mississippi. The only genuin original will hav to look out for his trademark, and his agents will hav to issue flaming posters warning the dear people to beware of base imitations put up in similar packages, and to see that the beneficent motto, "Believe or be damned," is blown into the glass of each bottle.

J. C. BAIRD.

SAN DIEGO, CAL., Sept. 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: To those friends who hav written me concerning the Liberal colony of which I wrote in THE TRUTH SEEKER of February 23d, I will say that the company failed to develop, or store up water sufficient to irrigate the land. The government, in taking the matter of irrigation out of the hands of private corporations, ordered all filings for homestead, preëmption, or desert claims, on irrigable lands belonging to the government, made since Oct. 2, 1888, to be canceled.

This, as all can see, knocks the bottom out of the scheme to establish a Liberal colony on government land which requires irrigation, until the "circumlocution office" gets around to that part of its ponderous duties, which may not be soon. We had thought that the San Filipi Grant, which belongs to a private corporation, would not require irrigation, but this point is disputed by some who profess to understand the nature of the soil better than we do.

If the principles advocated by Nationalists, as set forth in Edward Bellamy's "Looking Backward," continue to gain in popular favor, as they hav within the last six months, we hope to see such changes in land laws as will enable people, who are honest and industrious, to get homes on easier terms than those which originated in semi-barbarous ages. This seems to me the only feasible and practical method of inaugurating "liberty, equality, and fraternity" on this planet. Being the outcome of absolute necessity, there is a prospect that it will crystallize into living realities. All classes of people are seeing this necessity, which is a practical application of the principle of equal justice for all.

The first club of our little city is only about a month old, and yet our numbers exceed one hundred and thirty, among whom we find many of the rich, the learned, and the gifted, as well as honest toilers for daily bread. This is a hopeful sign. Reforms, to be of lasting benefit, must be carried out by the thinkers of the ages. This is eminently the case in the present Nationalist movement. Here political parties, and even religious prejudice, is yielding to the grander needs of humanity. We know, however, that our hardest fight will be with the church. Human liberty does not affiliate with church supremacy, and the wise ones among them will not be slow to see that the tendency of this movement will not be healthy for church domination. But there may be more McGlynns ready for the combat.

Rev. Mr. Crafts spouted his crafty attacks on liberty in our city quite recently. It was a "low-down, crafty" effort; and this reminds me that I hav over a hundred names ready to be sent you against his insidious Blair bill.

Let us all be up and doing, for the enemy to our liberties is indeed crafty and industrious. MARY A. WHITE.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Oct. 13, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of July 20th, we find an elaborate description of "poverty with love," to which Mr. Clemens P. Berylson adds some pertinent remarks in your issue of September 21st, and inquires, "Is there any remedy?" I think it pertinent to inquire, why does not Mr. Berylson think a remedy? Or better, why does he not think a cause? For a knowledge of the cause should suggest the only remedy that has in it a reliable promis of efficiency. Many assumed causes are urged upon our attention with more or less persistency, and a requisit amount of audacity. I will invite especial attention to one of them.

A correspondent recently asserted that selfishness is mean and contemptible; Miss Gardener and Mr. Berylson associate selfishness with inhumanity; and I hav heard people who hav the reputation of being intelligent and well informed charge selfishness with being innate hellishness and the cause of man's inhumanity to man; and I shall admit that it has that appearance to a superficial view. Nevertheless, selfishness is a logical sequence of self-love; and that is a necessary incentiv to self-preservation; and that is universally recognized to be the first law of nature. Then selfishness is essential, if not a necessity, to human existence and well-being. Therefore, if selfishness, per se, is "innate hellishness, and the cause of man's inhumanity to man," there is no reasonable hope that the world can be reformed except by exterminating the human race. Being influenced by the instinct of self-preservation, I shall propose to reason the question rather than advocate that method of social reform.

I perceive that ownership makes it expedient for everyone to look out for himself, "and let the devil take the hindmost;" to fold himself, as it were, within himself, and care for none but himself. I think it pertinent to inquire, Is that a Christian civilization? Is it an Infidel civilization? Is it a scientific civilization? To my view, it is systematized barbarism that we call civilization because we hav no other use for the term. Therefore, and notwithstanding the supposed contemptible meanness and hellishness of selfishness, unless we were instinctivly far better than artificial environment tends to make us, we would hav no regard at all for the well-being of our fellow-men. Hence it is obviously not selfishness but ownership that is unmitigable hellishness and the cause of man's inhumanity to man. If ownership was abolished, our instinct of self-preservation would naturally and necessarily become an incentiv to mutual preservation through coöperation by all for the mutual benefit of all; and selfishness, being an incentiv to acquiring the means of self-preservation, would become the most beneficial instinct that nature bestowed upon man. But ownership compels coöperation by all for the special benefit of a few, and makes selfishness a universally admitted curse.

Having frequently heard vigorous protestations against the monopoly of wealth, and against the demoralizing influence of large accumulations of wealth in the hands of a few, not only upon those who possess it, but also upon legislation, the judiciary, and the people generally, I will suggest that all the potency of wealth for evil is derived from ownership. Therefore if ownership is abolished, wealth will be divested of its potency for evil, and its potency for good will be correspondingly augmented. Hence, I think it should appear unaccountably strange to intelligent and observing people that those who protest the most vigorously against the evil that ownership inflicts upon suffering humanity, are the most persistent advocates and upholders of ownership; and insist that the evil it causes can and must be remedied by some other method than removing the cause. Where such inconsistency is the result of ignorance, I shall prescribe the schoolmaster; but where it is the result of hypocrisy, I shall prescribe nothing; for hypocrisy is a constitutional disease, whose victims lack the courage or honesty of their convictions and must be further evoluted before any good can reasonably be expected of them. J. A. TUTTLE.

PORTSMOUTH, O, Oct. 6, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: As the year is fast drawing to a close the questions arise, How stand the Freethought hosts? What is doing, and what has been done? Has each and every one tried to improve each moment? Hav all extended the hand of charity to the needy? Has the hungry been fed, the poor clothed, and the ignorant taught? These, and like queries, demand answer at the threshold of every Liberal home. They should be replied to in an emphatic affirmativ. But are they? Is "Yes" the honest answer to these questions? It has always been my aim to help the poor. And I never pass a needy one by without giving my mite—what I call the "Infidel's" missionary contribution. When the church asks alms I shake my head, and also say "No" for fear they do not understand the "nodding alphabet." Several months ago, one Rhoden, with a "Reverend" prefix, who preaches to the nativs, skunks, and Holy Ghosts in the backwoods of Kentucky, approached me to sell a copy of the holy novel that some call the Bible or the word of God. He was selling them at twenty-five cents apiece. I told this Rhoden that instead of purchasing a Bible, I would giv him the price asked with which to purchase five loaves of bread for some poor one. He didn't accept my kind offer, not a bit of it, nor neither did one Sluiz, who was by Rhoden's side, and who is a pulpit orator at the Bigelow Methodist Episcopal church in the Sabbath-school of which I was once planted as you would set a post out. How we little liars used to shout the "psalms" and say the "amens!" As I say, neither one of these preachers offered to take the money, buy bread, and fill an empty stomach. To do that would not help the church or the Methodist Book Concern one iota. Instead, Sluiz wittily replied that there was no use of my having a copy, as I never read it. "Don't I?" said I to him. "Well, if you think I don't, the first time you make a pastoral call at my home [you see, my parents are Methodists], haul the big parlor Bible down from its resting-place and upon its pages you will notice contradictions marked. If you can stand it, commit them to memory, and also memorize the fact that I read the Bible to so mark it." As yet he has not called and gone through the book, the latch-string of which is always found on the outside.

As I look back over my past life I often think of "how I came to be an unbeliever." I had been brought up to believe that God and heaven were somewhere above, and Satan and hell somewhere below. I was raised a Methodist, and when a small boy, on the eve of going to bed would say:

> Here I lay me down to sleep,
> I pray the Lord my soul to keep,
> And if I die before I wake,
> I pray the Lord my soul to take.

I was always afraid when night came. I imagined when the mantle of darkness dropped about, old Satan and his angels got out on the warpath in search for bad little boys. In fact, I was taught it, and nights of my childhood, which should hav been to me happiness and joy, were clouded and made hideous by the Methodistic hell-fire doctrin. I always welcomed the dawn; when daylight came I seemed "born again" sure enough. From a little fellow who played marbles for keeps, and ball in the streets to annoy the policeman, I passed on to a time (nine years old) when I was taken to a revival. Conversion was talked to me night after night; heaven and hell were pictured before me in vivid, damnable colors. I was finally led to the mourners' bench, and they got me so "bumfuzzled" that I imagined I could see heaven about six inches away from my eyes. I told the Methodist zealots around me, and this they said was a token that my sins were washed away, that I was forgiven, and that I could arise and claim salvation, which I did. I attended the public school and soon found myself in the scientific department. The Bible had been read in all the lower grades, and was not missing in this. It was articulated immediately after roll-call, and in a half hour afterward we received a glimpse of science. This opened my eyes. It, and the Bible, I saw did not agree. The Bible said Eve was made from a bone, and that another female was turned into a pillar of salt, and science said both feats were impossible. One must be wrong, and I accepted science as the truth. Shortly after this splendid change I made the acquaintance of Colonel Wharton, who now sleeps beneath the weeping willows of Greenlawn. He was a magnificent specimen of manhood. He was fearless and brave. His honest thoughts were always expressed. When he had anything to say, he said it like a man. Through his efforts the public library of our city was established, and he was its first librarian. While in this position he took from the library shelvs a book written by Kersey Graves and entitled "The Bible of Bibles," and handed it to me. I read it, and it did me good. I loaned it to others, and in this way Liberalism got a pretty stiff breeze in this locality. The book opened the eves of some who had been swimming around in the pools of ignorance for years. Its presence in the library became town-talk. Members of the church took action to hav it discarded, but brave Colonel Wharton contended that it should remain, and it did during his life. Upon his death, and the appointment of a Miss Newton in his place, the book disappeared, and from that date to this Freethought literature has been an outcast from the so-called public library of Portsmouth, O.

WILL S. ANDRES.

WILKESBARRE, PA., Oct. 11, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: In reading over THE TRUTH SEEKER I find myself highly complimented by Mr. Tuttle, whom I took the liberty a month or so ago to criticise about his scientific notions concerning attraction and gravitation, and his statement that he would not believe the evidence of his own senses on the subject of Spiritual phenomena. He gave his reasons why he would not, and I shall not refer to that matter again, only to say that it was quite apparent to any ordinary mind that his main reason was prejudice. Any man who cannot believe the evidence of his own senses is a mighty poor teacher to depend on.

Then he starts out like a tempest in a teapot, thinking no doubt to bulldoze me into silence by his audacious statements and accusations. He charges me with misquotations and misrepresentations, and calls me insane and idiotic, and by such easy slang and bluster thinks he has presented arguments on science.

He fails, however, to state one misquotation, and of course his calling me fool, crazy, and idiotic I do not mind, as our readers will probably know how much confidence to place in such unbecoming talk. My dearly beloved and brotherly friend Tuttle, you should not use such rough language nor so many threats of what you can do in the way of "paying me off with interest." And if we should say anything sensible enough to be read by the intelligent truth seekers, it might as well hav the appearance of decency and respect for common usages.

Now to the subject. Mr. Tuttle asserts that gravitation exists; he says "it is a positivly known and indisputable fact," but here he interjects a bold statement, one of his scientific assertions, which I dispute in toto. He says, "Gravitation is obviously caused by the ponderosity of matter; no other cause is provable."

Science, which is ascertained fact, says that gravitating means, "Being attracted, or tending or going toward another body, according to the law of gravitation," and "every portion of matter attracts and is attracted directly as the square of the distance and the quantity of its matter." This is one of the great laws discovered by the illustrious Kepler, and founded by the immortal Newton's law of the attraction of gravitation. The above definition is given by Professor Olmsted.

It would appear, then, that the cause of gravitation is attraction. Matter moves toward matter by attraction, which is a universal law. This my friend disputes, and therefore butts the density of his scientific cranium against the bulwarks of science, and sets himself against all the great lights of the scientific world to-day. My comment on such conduct is simply this: The man who does it is not well informed on the common laws of science, and I do not envy him his theories.

He says that gravitation is caused by the weight of matter; that is, by ponderosity. Here he stumbles again, for weight has nothing to do with the passage of falling bodies. A light body will fall with the same velocity as a heavy one; an ounce will fall exactly as fast as a ton, and in a perfect vacuum a feather will fall as quickly as a bar of iron of a ton weight. Now, if the weight of bodies had anything to do with causing the fall, the heavy body should gravitate faster than a lighter one toward the earth.

Again: If we take a bar of iron of one hundred pounds weight on the earth's surface, and convey it out into the air and away from the earth to the distance of seven miles, its weight will be diminished to about twenty-five pounds; and if we could carry it away far enough from the earth's attraction so as to bring it into the attraction of some other body in space, it would lose all its weight, and remain suspended in space or take on a very gradual motion as it might be attracted by some one or more bodies in space around it. That weight diminishes according to the distance of the body from the earth any schoolboy knows, and consequently weight is not a property of matter, but depends on its density and its nearness to other matter. Gravitation, therefore, is not caused by ponderosity, but by the law of attraction, which is as the square of the distance of the relativ bodies, their density and bulk.

Why do two bodies in vacuo fall with equal velocity? For two reasons: First, because the law of attraction acts on every atom of every body with equal force at equal distances; and, secondly, because the vast amount of matter contained in the earth cannot be appreciably affected by any body of ordinary magnitude falling upon its surface. If, however, a planetary body of greater magnitude than the earth should come into close contact with it, then the earth itself would become the falling body, and it would gravitate toward and ultimately rest upon such body by the same law of attraction.

But my scientific friend, Mr. Tuttle, says that "no other cause than ponderosity of matter is provable." He says that "gravitation is caused by the ponderosity of matter," and "I think," says he, "that the difference between attraction and gravitation should be broad enough and clear enough for even a Spiritualist to comprehend it." I must confess, and I may as well do it at once, that I cannot comprehend such unscientific and absurd statements. He admits that the mariner's compass a few years ago was supposed to be polarized by attraction, but now thinks it points in that direction "on account of certain currents of electricity passing from the equator toward the poles." Now, the last statement would be pretty plausible if it were not for one fact, that these currents are passing in a spiral form from the north pole to the south pole of the earth, and the reverse, as well as other terrestrial currents which pass at right angles to the first named; but, alas! why is it that the needle dips the nearer it gets toward the north pole?

But I must not get away from the text. He says, "Attraction aside from weight cannot be proved." Now, if he will place a few pieces of cork upon the water in a basin, and remove thereby all their weight, practically, by allowing them to float upon its surface, he will find that they will be attracted toward each other, and exactly in accordance with their size and distances, the smaller bodies traveling faster than the larger ones in the proportion of size, etc.

Therefore, as the weights of these bodies are eliminated from the problem by floating on the water, it must be that attraction is acting independently of their weight and only on their bulk and relativ distances, else it were utterly impossible that floating bodies should approach each other, the smaller one of half the bulk (not weight) with just twice the velocity of the larger one, and this is proof that attraction acts upon every atom of all bodies, and that they are drawn together or torn asunder or drawn apart by the operation of attraction or repulsion as the case may be. This does not, however, explain magnetic force, which is brought on by frictional processes, but has reference to the common law of attraction of gravitation. My genteel friend asserts that "there is no necessity in nature for such a thing as attraction, especially not as a cause of motion." When, therefore, he is moved toward an object, it is owing to his ponderosity, and not because he has been attracted. When he goes to an entertainment to see and be edified, it is owing to the weight of his body, and not his mind. So when a lady and gentlem n are drawn toward each other (as is often the case), and we say they are attracted, it is all wrong; we should know and comprehend that it is the ponderosity of their minds which has thrown them together. Verily, the usual modes of speech and the facts of Mr. Tuttle's science must all be changed, as we are only beginning to learn what a set of theorizing numskulls our Newtons, Keplers, Humboldts, and the like hav been. "Pseudo scientists, to be sure!" Alas, for the "mith" of attraction! So far as a discussion of the phenomena of Spiritualism goes, it were wasted time and patience to argue with a man like Mr. Tuttle, who would ignore his senses on prejudice. If he has the presumption to deny the well-established facts of science, what impression could touch him on that subject? J. R. PERRY.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Truth in Rhyme.

A child of the world and its number,
As fair as the lily's white dress,
Is rocked on the deeps of the ocean,
And close to the cliffs of distress.

The signal of danger may beckon,
In anguish and sorrow may wave,
And yet from the hights of the city
There comes not an offer to save.

The pomp and the riches, hard-hearted,
Are deaf to the sorrowing wail;
The lowly of earth and its number
Are destined to perish and fail.

The earth with its trouble may shudder,
May tremble with famin and need,
And up from the valley their echoes
Plead not to the purses of greed.

The statues of glory majestic,
The emblems of manhood and worth,
So great in their infinit grandeur,
Giv joy to no suffering heartb.

The glitter and glare of the city,
Its mansions of splendor and show,
The grandeur of feasting and living,
Speak not to the children of woe.

And stately cathedrals of worship
Seem naught but deception's own snare,
To gild with the virtue of ages
The shams of a century's glare.

And charity seems but a mockery,
Designed by the rich to make pure
The deeds of a life of wrongdoing,
And not for the pains we endure.

Richland, S. D. Louis N. Crill, Jr.

Daddy Longlegs.

Some little children, one summer day,
Saw a daddy longlegs stalking away.
"What is it? What is it?" cried little Goldhead;
"'Tis a spider on stilts," the Silklocks said.

Along came a whistling country lad;
A merry and careless way he had.
"If I hold him up this way, you see,
He'll point where I tell him to," said he.

Then he said gruffly, "Show me true
Where are my cows, or—I'll kill you!"
And daddy longlegs did his best;
He waved to the east and waved to the west.

"Now let him go," begged little Goldhead;
"For he won't hurt anyone," Silklocks said.
"He's only a spider that after all
Is trying to make us think he's tall!"

—Little Men and Women.

Story of William Tell.

In the Aryan myths are many fascinating and really beautiful legends. Among them is the story of William Tell, with which all are familiar. Tell is represented as a hunter in Switzerland. His wife, it is said, was a daughter of Walter Fürst, who, with others, led the conspiracy of the Grüth in 1307, which gave rise to Swiss independence.

Gessler was the Austrian bailiff, and one day he caused his hat to be placed on a pole in the market-place, and then commanded all the people to bow before it.

William Tell said: "No, I will not bow before the cap of a tyrant like Gessler." For this he was arrested, locked up in a cell, and sentenced to death. He was very skilful with the bow and arrow, and Gessler consented to spare his life if he would shoot an apple from the head of his own little boy.

It was a very trying ordeal, but the brave hunter accomplished the feat successfully. But just before he sent the arrow he had hastily concealed another arrow in his bosom. "Why did you do it?" asked Gessler.

"To shoot you," said Tell, "had I harmed my son."

Then he was again arrested, and put in chains, but he managed to escape, and afterward he killed the cruel Gessler, shooting him with an arrow.

This is the story, but investigation shows that it is not a "truly story," as the children say, but an old tradition handed down from a long-ago time.

Ferided-Din Attar is the name of a Persian poet who lived in, or about, the year 1175. In one of his poems he tells of a king who shoots an apple from the head of his favorit.

Another story-teller, before that time, relates how Toko shot an apple off the head of his son by the order of King Harold Bluetooth. The name Tell is supposed to come from the Latin telum, which means arrow. The German definition of the same word means "half-witted."

While the Swiss story is not real history, neither is it altogether "made up."

It is the old tradition of an ancient poetic and imaginary people, which may hav, once upon a time, had some foundation in reality. Old myths are easily recast and adapted to modern historical events, and in this way, much of a wholly fictitious nature has been believed by the credulous, and those who would not take the trouble to look up facts, as the solemn truth.

We should not accept all the old stories we hear as truth, until we hav "looked them up," and many times we should be astonished at the mythological origin of some of them, and the ready credence given them by otherwise sensible persons.

Don't believe all you hear. S. H. W.

Origin of Punch and Judy.

Where did Punch and Judy come from? Who devised that popular show, and set up that grotesque and quarrelsome couple for the amusement of people? Wide Awake answers the above queries as follows:

Punch can be traced directly to the Italian Punchinello, and he dates away back, two hundred years at least—a creature who was a sort of clown, with rustic manners and roguish tricks; who was shrewd and said smart things, like a court jester. He usually had a hooked nose, or a mask with one, wore a countryman's frock and a peaked hat. Punchinello came from Italy into France, where he made great sport at court, and had license to say things that nobody else might dare without the risk of losing his head.

Thence he was taken over to England after the restoration of Charles II., and there he began to be called "Punch," and was always a little, dumpy man, an odd, grotesque figure; by and by the showman had a wife for him and they called her "Joan" or "Judy," and Punch became quarrelsome and it was Judy he quarreled with; and next a dog seemed necessary, and so "Toby" was introduced.

In Queen Anne's time they made great account of puppet shows, even trying to hav a performance of "Whittington and His Cat," with real rats, but had to giv up the rats; they also had live birds on the stage, but their sparrows and chaffinches would not do as they were expected to—would not alight on the trees, but instead would go dashing about and put out the candles. However, they had Punch and a pig dance a minuet together, and the pig was so well disciplined that these two did best of all.

Teach Your Boys

To run.
To swim.
To carve.
To be neat.
To be honest.
To make a fire.
To be punctual.
To sew a button.
To do an errand.
To cut kindlings.
To sing, if they can.
To hang up their hat.
To respect their teacher.
To hold their heads erect.
To read aloud when requested.
To cultivate a cheerful temper.
To wipe their boots on the mat.
To button their mother's boots.
To help their mother and sister.
To learn to sew on their buttons.
To speak pleasantly to an old woman.
To help the boy smaller than themselvs.
To remove their hats upon entering a house.
To put every garment in its own proper place.
To keep their finger nails from wearing mourning.
To be as kind and helpful to their sisters as to other boys' sisters.
To take pride in having their mother and sisters for their best friends.
To close the door quietly, especially when there is a sick person in the house.
To treat their mother as politely as if she were a strange lady who did not spend her life in their service.
If they do anything, to take their mother into their confidence, and, above all, never to lie about anything they hav done.
When their play is over for the day, to wash their faces and hands, brush their hair, and spend the evening in the house.
Not to take the easiest chair in the room and put it directly in front of the fire, and forget to offer it to their mother when she comes in to sit down.
To make up their minds not to learn to swear, smoke, chew, or drink, remembering these things are not easily unlearned, and that they are terrible drawbacks to good men.
Not to grumble or refuse when asked to do some errand which must be done, and which would otherwise take the time of some one who has more to do than themselvs.

Seeking Fun on a Rainy Day.

Did you ever, I wonder, try to draw a pig with both of your eyes closed? If not, do make the experiment some rainy day when you and your companions hav exhausted other pleasant pastimes, and you will be rewarded with a wonderful collection that will cause many a hearty laugh.

Provide a large sheet of paper and a lead pencil, then invite your friends, one at a time, to draw a pig with their eyes closed, and conclude the exercises by drawing one yourself. Of course, you begin with the head, draw ears, eyes, legs, back, and tail in quick succession, flattering yourself, meanwhile, that you are getting each part in exactly its proper position. You open your eyes and behold a confused mass, consisting of four perpendicular lines representing the legs, ears somewhere on top of the pig's back, the tail, always artistically curled, placed probably under the pig's snout! You see in what you had supposed to be a grave, decorous pig, a wild, rampant beast, with an expression perhaps crafty and cunning, sometimes complacent, occasionally imbecil.

What the Little Ones Are Saying.

Mrs. Travis: "Ah, Johnnie! I hav caught you with a fish-pole over your shoulder! I shall go right and tell your father. Where is he?" Johnny Dumpsey: "Down at the foot of the garden diggin' the bait."

Uncle: "Bobby, don't you hear your mother calling you?" Bobby: "Yes'r." Uncle: "Well, why don't you hasten to her?" Bobby: "Why, ma has heart disease, and she'd be surprised most to death if I answered the first time she called me."

"What you want, my boy, is push. You'll win a fortune with that." "That depends." "On what?" "What you push. The pay for pushing a lawn-mower or go-cart is very small."

Teacher: "If a man has two hundred pounds of ice in his wagon and one-fourth of it is lost by melting, how many pounds do his customers pay for?" Boy (whose father is in the business): "Three thousand pounds."

"Aren't you ashamed to be seen fighting with that brutal Jenkins boy on the street?" asked Johnnie's irate mother. "Ashamed? No, why should I be? I licked him."

Johnny (watching his big brother dig angleworms for bait): "I say, Bob, if a worm will catch a little fish, wouldn't a snake catch a whopper?"

Chinese Wonders.

Of works of art, the great wall of China may truthfully be said to be the most elaborate and extensiv on the globe. It was built about the year 200 B.C., to protect China from the annual incursions of the Tartars. It is 1,500 miles long and, where still intact, 30 feet high and broad enough to allow of six horsemen riding abreast on its top.

The Imperial canal, also a Chinese work, is something over 900 miles long. A vast army of from 30,000 to 40,000 men are said to hav been employed for a period of fifty years in its construction.

Correspondence.

Richland, S. D., Oct. 6, 1889.

Miss Susan H. Wixon: I inclose a short poem which, if you deem it suitable for the Children's Corner, you are at liberty to use. Make any corrections you deem necessary, and I will profit by them. I am reading "All In a Lifetime," and consider it a very worthy book, and sincerely wish it could be placed in every library. I remain,

Yours very respectfully,
Louis W. Crill, Jr.

[Accept our thanks for the kindly appreciation of "All In a Lifetime." We would be glad to close out the remaining copies on hand this fall, in order that we may hav funds to go on with other work under contemplation. Always thankful for past and present patronage, we respectfully solicit a continuance of the same.—Ed. C. C.]

THE
CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:
THEIR
Crimes and Persecutions.
8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

PIONEER PITH.
The Gist of Lectures on Rationalism.
By Capt. R. C. Adams, President of Montreal Pioneer Freethought Club; author of "Travels in Faith from Tradition to Reason," and "Evolution—A Summary of Evidence."
A compendium of scientific and critical lore. Best handbook for introducing the general reader to the principles and data on which Rationalism is based.
Paper, 12mo, 100pp., 25 cents.

EVOLUTION THEORY.
Three lectures by Prof. Thos. H. Huxley.
Paper, 10 cents.

Thirty DISCUSSIONS, BIBLE STORIES, ESSAYS, and LECTURES.
By D. M. Bennett.
Pap., 700pp., 75 cents.

BENNETT-TEED DISCUSSION.
"Jesus the Lord God, Creator of Heaven and Earth."
By D. M. Bennett and Rev. Mr. Teed.
Paper, 30 cents.

BESANT-HATCHARD DEBATE.
BETWEEN
ANNIE BESANT AND REV. A. HATCHARD
ON
Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity.
Price, 25 cents.

BIBLE BALANCED.
Comparing the Bible's Best Teachings and Sayings with those of Philosophers who Lived previous to Bible Authors.
By G. C. Darling.
Paper, - - 50 cents.

BIBLE FABRICATIONS REFUTED.
Errors Exposed.
By O. B. Whitford, M.D.
Price, 15 cents.

BIBLE MORALS.
TWENTY CRIMES and VICES Sanctioned by Scripture.
By J. E. Remsburg.
Price, 25 cents.

CRIMES OF PREACHERS in the United States and Canada.
By M. E. Billings.
Price, . . . 25 cents.

BUDDHIST NIHILISM.
By Max Muller, M.A.
Price, 10 cents.

GOLDEN MEAN in Temperance and Religion.
By JOHN E. BURTON.
Price, 10 cents.

INSPIRATION OF BIBLES.
By Jno. E. Burton.
Price, 10 cents.

Christianity and Materialism.
By B. F. Underwood.
Price, 15 cents.

CHRISTIANITY A REWARD FOR CRIME.
By O. B. Whitford, M.D.
Price, 10 cents.

CHRISTIANITY from a SCIENTIFIC and HISTORICAL STANDPOINT.
By W. N. McLaren.
Paper, 50 cents.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus.
Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. New Scripture (evidently inspired). Discovered by I. N. Fidel and A. Hook.
Price, 25 cents.

THE CRISIS.
By THOMAS PAINE.
Written during the American Revolution, and by order of General Washington read to the army.
Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75.

CULTIVATION OF ART.
ITS RELATIONS TO Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting.
By A. R. Cooper.
Paper, 20 c.; flexible clo., 35.

THE DARWINS. A Domestic Radical Romance. By Mrs. E. D. Slenker.
Pap., 50c.; clo., 75.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 558 West Madison st., Room 1, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King. 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like metbods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

FAITH AND REASON.
A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.
With elaborate index.
By HALSEY R. STEVENS.
A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained in such compact form.—[Literary Review.
Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

THE Truth Seeker Annual
—AND—
Freethinkers' Almanac,
1889.
(E. M. 289.)
WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.
CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1889,	5
Freethought in the United States for 1888,	17
Liberalism: a Symposium.
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,	28
JAMES PARTON,	32
HELEN H. GARDENER,	33
S. P. PUTNAM,	36
CHARLES WATTS,	37
E. A. STEVENS, Sec. A. S. U.	41
PARKER PILLSBURY,	42
ROBERT C. ADAMS,	44
J. D. SHAW,	46
F. M. HOLLAND,	47
E. B. FOOTE, JR., M. D.,	50
LUCY N. COLMAN,	51
J. H. BURNHAM,	53
L. K. WASHBURN,	63
ELLA GIBSON,	64
SUSAN H. WIXON,	67
JOHN PECK,	71
W. S. BELL,	78
E. C. WALKER,	80
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN,	84
DR. JULIET H. SEVERANCE,	87
MRS. E. D. SLENKER,	89
COL. J. R. KELSO,	91
G. H. DAWES,	92
The Nine Demands of Liberalism,	95
Ingersoll and Shakspere,	96

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.
PRICE, 25 CENTS.

THE SAFEST CREED,
AND
TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.
By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.
Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BIBLE INQUIRER;
OR,
A Key to Bible Investigation.
Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.
BY A. JACOBSON.
Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.
Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.
Price only 25 cents.

SOCIAL WEALTH,
The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in the Acquirement and Apportionment.
By J. K. INGALLS.
Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

ROME OR REASON
A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.
By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.
A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.
Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ON THE WORD GOD.
By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."
The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.
Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.
Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Liberty of Printing, and Reply.
By HUBLBUT and WAKEMAN.
Price, 10 cents.

NOW READY.
A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS OF
HORACE SEAVER.
COMPILED BY
L. K. WASHBURN.
This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.
Price, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

POINTERS:
A POCKET CYCLOPEDIA,
CONTAINING
Tables, Rules, Practical Hints, and Historical Sketches, for Farmers, Mechanics, Machinists, Merchants, Housekeepers, and the Public Generally, with
Numerous Maps, Illustrations, and Diagrams
Illustrating some of the more Important Comparativ Statistics of the World.
More Information for Less Money than has ever been offered.
ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS
For $50 worth of "Cold Facts" boiled down in a Nutshell. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE
Cosmian Hymn Book,
A COLLECTION OF
Original and Selected Hymns
(Words and Music)
For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.
COMPILED BY
L. K. WASHBURN.
PRICE, . . . $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place. New York.

THE JEWS AND THEIR GOD.
"The Jews and their God stood on the lowest plane."
Price 10 cents

The Reign of the Stoics.
THEIR
History, Religion, Philosophy, and Maxims of Self-Control, Self-Culture, Benevolence, and Justice.
With Citations of Authors Quoted from on Each Page.
BY FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.
Read the philosophers, and learn how to make life happy, seeking useful precepts and brave and noble words which may become deeds.—Seneca.
OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.
This book shows that many Christians might learn much from these ancient heathen.—American Bookseller.
One of the most valuable helps for those who would understand the character of human progress in all ages.—National Quarterly Review.
The author has shown himself a diligent student, an ardent admirer, and a faithful interpreter, of some of the most remarkable monuments of ancient thinking.—New York Tribune.
Reading this book, we find the doctrins of the Stoics to be almost identical with the views held by the broadest and most enlightened minds of the present day.—Cincinnati Commercial.
Lecky says of Marcus Aurelius: "The purest and gentlest spirit of all the pagan world." Merivale says: "Of all the line the noblest and dearest." Taine says: "The noblest soul that ever lived." John Stuart Mill says: "He preserved through life not only the most unblemished justice, but the tenderest heart."
Extra Cloth, 12mo, 248 pp., $1.25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place. New York.

LITERATURE OF THE INSANE.
By F. R. MARVIN.
Price, . . . 5 cents.
Pertinent and interesting.—Freethought.
Will be handed to my Christian friends that they may, by finding the garden of Eden, get the $5,000 reward.—Editor Sequachee Times.
Raises the devil with the garden of Eden yarn. —Hastings, Mich., Plaindealer.

WHAT KIND OF A MAN CLARK BRADEN IS.
By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 10 cents.

BLASPHEMY AND THE BIBLE.
By C. B. REYNOLDS.
Price, 5 cents.

ICHABOD CRANE PAPERS.
Daringly witty and inexpressibly laughable onslaughts on Christianity.
Price, 10 cents.

Natural Rights, Natural Liberty, and Natural Law!
AN INQUIRY INTO THE CAUSES OF SOCIAL MALADJUSTMENTS. THE RATIONAL, JUST, AND ADEQUATE REMEDY.
A work that treats of basic principles, and should be read carefully by all Liberal and social reform thinkers.
It is highly commended by Samuel P. Putnam, Henry George, Hugh Pentecost, Herbert Spencer, and other men of note.
Price, 25 cents.
Address, F. Q. STUART, Editor the Arbitrator.
1633 Blake St., Denver, Col.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.
It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Sixteen pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $2. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

DR. FELLOWS
STAR OF HOPE
Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.
VINELAND, N.J.
Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL,
Price, 25 Cents.

Poetry.

The Reverend Micah Sowls.

The Reverend Micah Sowls,
He shouts, and yells, and bowls,
He screams, he mouths, he bumps,
He foams, he rants, he thumps.

His armor he has buckled on to wage
The regulation war against the stage;
And warns his congregation all to shun
"The presence chamber of the evil one."

The subject's sad enough
To make him rant and puff,
And fortunately, too,
His bishop's in a pew.

So Reverend Micah claps on extra steam,
His eyes are flashing with superior gleam,
He is energetic as can be,
For there are fatter livings in that see.

The bishop, when it's o'er,
Goes through the vestry door
Where Micah, very red,
Is mopping of his head.

"Pardon, my lord, your Sowls's excessiv zeal,
It is a theme on which I strongly feel."
(The sermon somebody had sent him down
From London, at a charge of half a crown.)

The bishop bowed his head,
And acquiescing, said:
"I've heard your well-meant rage
Against the modern stage.

"A modern theater, as I heard you say,
Sows seeds of evil broadcast: well, it may—
But let me ask you, my respected son,
Pray, hav you ever ventured into one?"

"My lord," said Micah, "No!
I never, never go!
What! Go and see a play?
My goodness gracious, nay!"

The worthy bishop said: "My friend, no doubt
The stage may be the place you make it out;
But if, my Reverend Sowls, you never go,
I don't quite understand how you're to know."

"Well, really," Micah said,
"I've often heard and read,
But never go—do you?"
The bishop said, 'I do."

"That proves me wrong," said Micah, in a trice;
"I thought it all frivolity and vice."
The bishop handed him a counter plain;
"Just take this stall and go to Drury Lane."

The bishop took his leave,
Rejoicing in his sleeve.
The next ensuing day
Sowls went and heard a play.

He saw a dreary person on the stage,
Who mouthed and mugged in simulated rage—
Who growled and spluttered in a mode absurd,
And spoke an English Sowls had never heard.

For "gaunt" wast spoken "garnt,"
And "haunt" transformed to "harnt,"
And "wrath" pronounced as "rath,"
And "death" was changed to "dath."

For hours and hours that dismal actor walked
And talked, and talked, and talked, and talked,
Till lethargy upon the parson crept,
And sleepy Micah Sowls serenely slept.

He slept away until
The farce that closed the bill
Had warned him not to stay,
And then he went away.

I thought," said he, "I was a dreary thing,
I thought my voice quite destitute of ring,
I thought my ranting could distract the brain.
But, oh! I hadn't been to Drury Lane.

"Forgiv me, Drury Lane,
Thou penitential fane,
Where sinners should be cast
To mourn their wicked past."

—W. S. Gilbert.

Mexico.

From the New Orleans Daily States.

Editors Daily States: If Spain, anywhere in the wide world, has ever added one element of civilization conduciv to the happiness of mankind, or to the enlightenment of any of the many peoples she decimated, then conquered, and finally corraled in vast droves to be, at the muzzle of arquebuses, baptized in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, it is not here, in Mexico, that one may find the faintest glimmer of it.

It proves ever a pitiful study to trace back the cause of Spain's blighting influence wherever her Conquistadores set foot on this continent, marking every step in their advance with churches erected on spots made holy by the blood of the so-called heathen nativs, massacred, naked as they were, and in the broad light of God's sun, by pious heroes all accoutered in iron and armed cap a pie, thus obliterating civilizations which, if not more advanced, certainly were infinitly less cruel and not more superstitious than her own.

At home, the Spaniards, led by their bishop-warriors, swept away very nearly the last vestige of the marvelous civilization which the Arabs had planted within their border, to fall, in the fifteenth century, under the stifling influence of religious intolerance and the moral asphyxia of priestcraft, where doubt might never enter the souls of men, and where progress was ever crushed on the rack and wheel of the Inquisition. To this day, however, the best there is in Spain, is not Spanish; the best is that which the Moors left there, which neither the armies led by bishop-warriors could destroy, nor the Inquisition fostered by the popes of Rome obliterate. Indeed, even the wondrous black eyes of the women of Andalusia, and the pompous dignity and legendary chivalry of the hidalgoes, are of Moorish inheritance. The blood of the Moor, whatever the Spanish grandee may prate of his sangre azul, lends nearly all there is of female beauty in Spain, and whatever of chivalry Cervantes has not laughed away resides now in hearts which pulsate with much of Moorish blood.

In Mexico, the Spanish invaders swept away all they could of the Aztec civilization, and for three hundred years, with the sword in one hand and the crucifix in the other, they strove to build a New Spain over the bloody ruins of superior dominions, and to foster a Spanish civilization in the souls of better men. Yet, for all that, to-day, whatever is most repulsiv in Mexico, is Spanish; whatever is contemptibly vain and boastful, whatever is sacrilegiously pious, if I may so express it, is Spanish. It was a Spanish monk who first called a Mexican town, "Body of Christ," and another town the "True Cross," and even a back-of-town alley, "Street of the Holy Ghost."

It was a Spanish bishop who first corraled and then baptized an innocent and idol-fearing family of Aztecs, imposing "with apostolic blows and knocks" upon the miserable father the awfully blasphemous name of "Incarnation," upon the trembling mother that of "Conception," and upon the mewling and puking infant that of "Jesus." Oh! for the sickening sense of fathomless abhorrence, not of the poor Aztec himself, but of the Spanish priest who baptized him, when one must, as I hav to do every day, here, in the capital city of Mexico, call upon the Indian bell-boy, in the language of the Cid, saying: "Jesus, get me a cocktail, and, my good man, please empty the slops!"

To say that even after such hideous blasphemy, this ecstasy of sacrilegious fanaticism, there was still a lower depth for Spanish priesthood and Spain's chivalry to reach, may be hard, but it is true nevertheless. There were no less than three millions, out of a total of perhaps five millions, of unwarlike, quite civilized, and extraordinarily intelligent and laborious Aztecs thus thrust by neck and crop into the Spanish Catholic church every one of whom was a living monument to the violation of the second Commandment, which solemnly enjoins: "Thou shalt not call the name of God in vain," and every one of these, despite the awful name bestowed upon him in holy baptism, was cast into the most cruel slavery when he was converted into a beast of burden, there to remain, himself and his progeny, from generation to generation for three hundred years, transmitting as sole inheritance to his children his own sacrilegious name, his enforced ignorance, and a harrowing mixture of blind superstition, of image-worship, and of false Christian faith which the Spanish padre instilled in his always tender soul just far enough to render him a double adscrip us glebae in a country where the church for all that time held in mortmain two-thirds of the lands.

When I said above, "Whatever in Mexico is repulsiv" is Spanish, my Aztec bell-boy, Jesus, by name, had just left my room, whither he had come to bid me in the sonorous Castilian tongue that I might suffer him to carry off my soiled linen to be washed, after he himself had blacked my boots. That boy is of pure Aztec blood, with complexion not much, if at all, darker than my own; perhaps of the complexion of the nativs of the south of France, indeed very much like that of the Creoles of southwestern Louisiana. Although bearing such a terrible name, despite the fact that he never had an ancestor, since the Spanish conquest, who ever wore shoes, or slept in a bed, or could either read or write, or who ever clearly understood the awful difference between his own son, whom the blindly venerated padre had christened "Jesus," and our savior; despite all that, I say, that boy, born about the time Benito Juarez, himself a pure Indian, was upon the political stage of Mexico, fighting what remained of the Spanish power, which had been crushed in the revolution of 1819, and the power of the Hispano-Mexican church, which, still unimpaired, was then in league with all that was left of Spain's partisans together with Spain's moral influence resulting from a three centuries' continuous rule—that boy has now got to blush at his sacrilegious cognomen; he has learned to read and write in the public schools which President Juarez established in confiscated convents, while his soul is free from the sensuous mockery on Christianity, in the practice of which his ancestors were wont to seek heavenly surcease from pain in their cruel days of temporal slavery.

The life of Benito Juarez was spent in heroic efforts against besotted clericalism and against the so-called aristocracy of Mexico, which measures its own purity in inverse ratio to the quantity of Aztec blood and in direct ratio to the quantity of Spanish blood coursing in its veins. It was the union of the Mexican clergy with this ridiculous mongrel, this ineffably contemptible aristocracy, which made the ephemeral Maximilian empire possible even for a short while. Juarez, the pure-blooded Indian boy, first rebelling against the priestly education attempted to be given him, by dint of inborn genius educated himself even to the standard of the greatest and most virtuous statesmen of our day. Juarez overcame Maximilian and had him condignly shot to death, while he crushed the Mexican clergy, confiscated their vast estates, and, turning some of their convents into public schools, caused the others to be sold for conversion into public inns or into liverystables.

Verily, to-day in Mexico all that is beautiful, all that is full of hope, whatever is progressiv, whatever looks like an honest ambition to move on abreast of modern civilization, is Aztec—is pure Indian.

Porfirio Diaz, the actual president, as everybody knows, is pure Indian, like Juarez, and if he, like Juarez, maintains Mexico as a republic in name only, while both in reality hav made of it a military oligarchy, it is because of the very nature of things Mexican. With military grades, gaudy uniforms, and pinchbeck decorations, he, like Juarez, can always bribe the so-called aristocracy away from the church party, while he fills the rank and file of his standing army with pure Indians, to whom a soldier's life is one of ease and extreme luxury compared to that which they must otherwise lead as beasts of burden, as full six millions of their kind are even to this day forced to lead. It will not be within our day, nor indeed before many such enlightened Indians as President Diaz shall hav more or less peacefully succeeded each other, that the seven millions of Indians in Mexico shall emerge from the horrible condition in which the Spaniards hav left them after three hundred years of slavery and dense ignorance.

The length of this homily, perhaps even more trite than long, admonishes me against wearing out the patience of such unwary readers as it may capture, be it only you, my friends of the States. To say the truth, I can but laugh when I think that I sat down to write a letter of humorous comments on the funny Mexican types and the still more amusing customs which I hav met with; but my Mexican bell-boy, "Jesus," breaking upon me just then knocked all the fun out of me, and, like the dyspeptic Carlyle, I could see but the "tragedy of it all." I may be funny if ever I write again; and if I do, be sure I shall not touch on Spain nor on things Spanish. Hasta luego. G. W. D.

Mexico, Sept. 19, 1889.

A Farm for Sale.

Who wants a farm? Col. John R Kelso, of Longmont, Colorado, author of "Deity Analyzed," "Bible Analyzed," "Universe Analyzed," and other valuable things, desires to devote his time to literature, and his wife desires to occupy herself with less laborious duties than those incident to a housewife, and their big farm is for sale. Colonel Kelso asks us to help him find a buyer, in return for which he will giv us some printing to do. This printing will benefit us, and the books will benefit those who read them. Hence this advertisment.

The farm is a big one and very valuable. The price is $25,000—$10,000 cash, balance, if so desired by the purchaser, on long time. This price covers a "clean up," and includes besides the 320 acres with buildings, $3 000 of ditch stock, $275 mill stock, $50 creamery stock, 9 horses, about 40 cows and heifers, a thoroughbred Holstein bull, 200 hens (if no preachers visit him before the sale), a full outfit of farming implements, wagons, feed, seed, canned fruits, first-class furniture for a fourteen-room house, large library, paintings, and so forth, and so forth, as the auction bill recites. A good idea of the ranch is obtained from a disinterested (except in a general way to boom the country) description by the editor of the Rocky Mountain News:

Returning to a closer consideration of Colonel Kelso's half section, we find, besides the several inclosures embraced in the gardens, groves, lawn, and stock lots, that the place is divided into three large fields. There is an eastern slope that terminates at a branch of living water which leaves 90 odd acres on the opposit side from the house and about 230 on the west, which is the part that is under cultivation, the 90 acres constituting a pasture with access to the water mentioned. The slope of these 230 acres is just sufficient to favor irrigation, with a minimum of wash, a point of the first importance in Colorado farming. Attaching to the place there is some $3 000 worth of stock in the Highland ditch and in the Oligarchy, which in any ordinary season furnishes a supply sufficient not only for the portion now cultivated, but for the ninety acres of pasture, which may be reached and watered whenever it is deemed advisable to do so. The field crops of this farm the present season were wheat, 65 acres; barley, 65 acres; oats, 15 acres; potatoes, 7 acres; alfalfa, 60 acres. It would not be an exaggerated estimate to put the gross proceeds of the whole crop at $25 an acre, which would giv $5 300 The alfalfa will find its market mainly in the growth of stock and in the form of returns from the Longmont creamery, in which the Kelsos hav an interest. It would be interesting, in connection with the gross estimate, to giv a fair idea of the running expenses necessary to produce the result; but there was not an opportunity to reach that conclusion in more than general terms. As Colonel Kelso and his lady are engaged in literary pursuits and do not giv or intend to giv their farm full and close personal service, figures based upon the case in hand would not hav general application. The matter of cost was considered, and the conclusion, doubtless approximately correct, is that under usual circumstances in which the owner and his wife giv their labor to the farm, the labor bill for hired help to produce and handle such a crop would be about $700 in addition to cost of board, which would add about $400 more. After deducting interest on investment and all other legitimate charges, there would remain a fair showing to reward the year's work. The exact results in a case of the kind are not easily attainable and call for data that are found in the books of very few farmers. A fact pertinent to the present problem, and one that has force and expression, is that one season when this farm was rented the owner received the sum of $1,200 net for the one-third rental. The place is well stocked, including nine good work-horses and something over forty head of graded shorthorns, the herd being under the supervision of a pure-bred Holstein bull. An abundance of ice, obtained from a pond in the neighborhood, and coupled with the deep can setting in tanks, gives the best results in cream with the least expenditure of house labor. Good coal is sold at from $2 to $2.50 per ton at the banks, with only a short distance to haul. Longmont, with its farmers' mill, creamery, and canning factory—a beautiful and live business place—furnishes a cash market for the products of all the rich farming country that is tributary to it. Close observers hav estimated that the present season's grain shipments from that busy point will aggregate 1.500,000 bushels.

There you hav it—a paradise and a mine of wealth. Step up and buy, and don't forget to mention THE TRUTH SEEKER, so we can get the printing to do, and the Liberal public can get another of Colonel Kelso's valuable books.

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 833pp., silk cloth. $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

MATERIALISM AND CRIME.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 5 cents.

AN OUTLINE OF THE
French Revolution
ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.
By W. S. BELL.
Paper, 12mo, 25 cents.

MORTALITY OF THE SOUL.
IMMORTALITY OF ITS ELEMENTS.
By A. S. de Pellegrini.
Paper, - - - 15 cents.

PHILOSOPHY of SPIRITUALISM
AND TREATMENT OF MEDIOMANIA.
By F. R. Marvin, M.D.
Cloth, ... 50 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY.
By VOLTAIRE.
Terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of theological terms.
Price, 25 cents.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY EXPOSED.
By REV. G. T. FOX, M.A.
15 cents.

PRO AND CON OF Supernatural Religion.
Have We a Supernatural, Inspired, Miraculous Religion?
By E. E. GUILD.
Paper, 20 cents; cloth, 30 cents.

PYRAMID OF GIZEH.
Ancient Egyptian Civilization and Hebrew Narrative in Genesis and Exodus.
By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D.
Price, 15 cents.

QUESTION SETTLED.
BIBLICAL and MODERN SPIRITUALISM.
By MOSES HULL.
Price, 60 cents.

Rational Communism.
THE PRESENT AND FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.
Advocates associate life and employment as a preventive of vice, crime, poverty, etc.
By A CAPITALIST.
Paper, 493pp., 50 cts.; cl'o., $1.

Relation of Witchcraft to Religion.
By A. C. LYALL.
Price, 10 cents.

Fruits of Philosophy.
POPULATION QUESTION.
By Dr. Knowlton. Edited by Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant.
25 cents.

TRUTH. A Poem. By E. N. Kingsley. 10 cents.

POVERTY: Its Cause and Cure.
How the Poor May Attain Comfort and Independence.
By M. G H.
Price, . . 10 cents.

Religion of Inhumanity.
With a Glance at the Religion of Humanity.
BY FREDERIC HARRISON.
Price, 15 cents.

RELIGION:
The Gibraltar of the World, as Now Constituted.
By George T. Bondies.
With
Exceptions to the Character of Christ as a Gentleman.
By W. T. Purviance.
25 cents.

IMAGE BREAKER.
By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Six Lectures.
Decline of Faith.
Protestant Intolerance.
Washington an Unbeliever.
Jefferson an Unbeliever.
Paine and Wesley.
Christian Sabbath.
Each, 5 cents; bound, pap., 25 cents; per doz., 40.

SABBATH BREAKING.
By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Price, 25 cents.

St. Matthew Before the Court
FOR THE CRIME OF FORGERY.
By SECULARIST.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.
Including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, Bible.
By D. M. BENNETT.
(From Vol. II. "Gods and Religions.")
333pp., pap., 60 cts.; cl'o., $1.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.
MEN, WOMEN & GODS.
BY HELEN H. GARDENER,
Introduction by
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.
Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.
The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.
Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

THE STRUGGLE
FOR
Religious and Political Liberty.
In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.
By THEO. C. SPENCER.
Cloth, 12mo., 188pp., price 75 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.
A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.
Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.
For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrative is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Career of Jesus Christ.
An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

ROMANISM,
OR DANGER AHEAD.
The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.
By A. J. GROVER.
Price, paper, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.
Ten Cents Each.
1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRETT P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By D. ROSSITER RAYMOND.
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth. By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development. By Dr. ROBERT G. FOCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. BARNARD.
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR BUTT NICHOLS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE
UNIVERSE ANALYZED
By JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,
Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.
The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productive of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will have the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.
Cloth, 12mo, $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WRITE TO ELMINA.
Friends who want good Knitting-yarn, Blankets, Cassimeres, or other Woolen Goods, or Liberal Books, will please send to me for circulars and price-lists. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, 4t SNOWVILLE (Pulaski Co.), VA.

NEW EDITION.
The Secret of the East,
OR,
The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.
BY FELIX L. OSWALD.
Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.
Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

SAKYA BUDDHA.
A Versified, Annotated Narrative of his Life and Teachings.
With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."
BY E. D. ROOT.
I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.
The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers have spoken highly of the book.
Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

L. K. Washburn's Works.
Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.
The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.
The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.
Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.
Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.
Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.
Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.
Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.
The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.
The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.
Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.
Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negative and affirmative standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

Essence of Religion.
By L. FEUERBACH.
Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.
The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Argument by R. G. Ingersoll
IN THE
TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS
FOR
"BLASPHEMY,"
At Morristown, New Jersey.
Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.
Handsome 8vo, 86 pp. beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.
By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES:
A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.
BY J. K. INGALLS.
Price, - - 25 cents.

The Forum.
Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257
meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,
Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human culture are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.
Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.
The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 7 o'clock.

The Minneapolis Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association
Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 8 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Elizur Wright Secular Union
Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10 30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

DIAMONDS.
Unprecedented offer. No other house so fair In order to give my Liberal friends throughout the United States an opportunity to examine, test, and compare my goods and prices with those of other diamond merchants, I will sell any piece of Diamond Jewelry, accompanied by contract that cash in full will be refunded any time within one year from date of purchasing if goods are not entirely satisfactory. No other dealer will do it. None will sell as cheap. Carrying a large stock, being an expert, close buyer, and doing business on smallest possible expense, you will positively save twenty to thirty per cent by purchasing of me. Diamond Pins and Eardrops, worth $600, for $400; Pins, Rings, Eardrops, Studs, Hair Ornaments, Pendants, worth $300, for $200; do., worth $200, for $140; do., worth $150, for $110; do., worth $100 for $70; do., worth $80, for $60; do., worth $60, for $40; do., worth $40 for $30; do., worth $30, for $ 2; do., worth $20 for $15. You can wear these goods daily for one year. It will not cost you a cent. If in the mean time you are not satisfied that the goods are better and cheaper than sold elsewhere return and get your cash in full.
Selections sent to responsible parties on approval; to any banking-house or C.O.D., privilege of examination.
The "Otto Wettstein" Watch,
sixteen jewels, finely adjusted to heat and cold, patent regulator, Breguet hair-spring, beautiful double-paneled dial, and all modern improvements. Perfect, and no watch will compete with it! In silverine case, $19; in four-ounce coin silver case, $23.00; five-ounce, $25; six ounce, $27. In open face best filled gold case, $27; hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV., $35. In fourteen carat solid gold, $50 to $ 50. Sent prepaid, and cash refunded if not satisfactory.
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.
Established 1857.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.
Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 160 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorite, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.
Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, Eng.

ANTICHRIST.
PROVING conclusively that there was no Christ Crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

LIFE OF
Joshua Davidson:
MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,
As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.
BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,
Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.
Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.
☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

News of the Week.

ON the 16th Governor Hill of New York received a great ovation at the Piedmont exposition, Georgia.

THE czar had to be closely guarded during the whole of his visit in Germany to protect him from Nihilists.

BARNUM is taking his show to Europe.

COAL-MINERS hav won a strike in France.

NATURAL gas has been found at Salem, S. D.

BOTH New York and Chicago are raising funds for the fair.

ON the 19th there was a fatal railway accident near Confluence, Pa.

CHOLERA is raging in Persia, and it is feared that it will penetrate Europe.

ON the 16th a railway collision at Gibson, near Omaha, Neb., injured fifty persons.

BURNS, the Socialist leader who headed the London strike, is standing for Parliament

THE color question made great disturbance in the Independent Baptists' convention at Baltimore.

WESLEY ELKINS, the eleven-year-old Iowa boy who was suspected of murdering his parents last July, has confessed.

INQUIRY into the plot to bribe the Cronin jurors is disclosing information upon the original crime of the murder.

DOTHEN, Ala., on the 14th had a fight between Farmers' Alliance men and local merchants that resulted in several deaths.

THE Vatican has collected the documents relating to what it calls the government's continual violation of its rights, and, if the pope approves, will publish them as an appeal to the world.

ONE party in the Protestant Episcopal convention urges that as their church is "the one Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church of Christ" its name should be changed to that designation.

AT Meriden, Kan., a farmer named Cook, seven of whose children hav been bitten by a mad dog and one of whom has been seized with hydrophobia, refuses medical assistance, saying that if it is the will of God that his children die no human power can save their lives.

MAYOR CREGIER of Chicago says of the action of Socialists at their convention: "When any organized body will hiss at an American flag unfolded in their presence and grow very enthusiastic in their applause when the bloody colors of a red flag are unfolded, I think it time some action was taken, and prompt action at that."

THE American board of Foreign Missions at its late meeting reported that Japan missions had been extremely successful, while those of Turkey, though they expended $200,000, had accomplished very little. The South Sea Islanders were reported to be as obstinate as ever. The total outlay was $635,000. The Zulus cost $31,000, and the rest of the Africans $17,000. The secretary predicted that the total income would soon reach $1,000,000.

THE party of Pan-American delegates making a tour of the country in a specially luxurious Pullman train is made up as follows: Delegates who are the nation's guests, 15; United States delegates, 2; secretaries of delegates, who are the nation's guests, 17; attachés, etc., accompanying delegates who are the nation's guests, 7; consul-general of a South American government, 1; valet of the secretary of a South American delegate, 1; secretaries and attachés, etc., of the United States delegates, 8; representativ of the Spanish-American Commercial Union, 1; his secretary, 1; representativ of the Pennsylvania railroad, 1; newspaper correspondents and artists, 11.

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Givs a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

GIDEON WANTS SOME PROOF THAT GOD IS ON HIS SIDE.

And Gideon said unto God, Let not thine anger be hot against me, and I will speak but this once; Let me prove I pray thee but this once with the fleece; let it now be dry only upon the fleece, and upon all the ground let there be dew.—Judges vi, 39.

Gems of Thought.

THE word of God is the creation we behold: and it is in this word, which no human invention can counterfeit or alter, that God speaketh universally to man.—Paine.

IF there is a God, it is reasonably certain that he made the world, but it is by no means certain that he is the author of the Bible. Why then should we not place greater confidence in nature than in a book?—Ingersoll.

GOD is a pure spirit, but nevertheless he has an eye to the temporal blessings of this world, without which his spiritual ministers could not subsist.—Voltaire.

IN all these countries it was a crime to fail to divide your substance with the lazy hypocrits who managed your affairs in the next world upon condition that you would support them in this.—Ingersoll.

THE duty of a philosopher is clear. His path lies straight before him. He must take every pains to ascertain the truth; and, having arrived at a conclusion, he, instead of shrinking from it because it is unpalatable, or because it seems dangerous, should, on that very account, cling the closer to it, should uphold it in bad repute, more zealously than he would hav done in good repute; should noise it abroad far and wide, utterly regardless of what opinions he shocks, or what interests he imperils; should, on its behalf, court hostility and despise contempt, being well assured, that, if it is not true, it will die, but that, if it is true, it must produce ultimate benefit, albeit unsuited for practical adoption by the age or country in which it is first propounded.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

No simplicity of mind, no obscurity of station, can escape the universal duty of questioning all that we believe.—Clifford's Scientific Basis of Morals.

THE truth cannot be burnt, beheaded, or crucified. A lie on the throne is a lie still; and truth in a dungeon is truth still; and a lie on the throne is on the way to defeat, and truth in the dungeon is on the way to victory.—Anon.

COURAGE yet! my brother or my sister!
Keep on! Liberty is to be subserved, whatever occurs;
That is nothing, that is quelled by one or two failures, or any number of failures,
Or by the indifference or ingratitude of the people, or by any unfaithfulness,
Or the show of the tushes of power, soldiers, cannon, penal statutes.
Revolt! and still revolt! revolt!
What we believe in waits latent forever through all the continents, and all the islands and archipelagos of the sea;
What we believe in invites no one, promises nothing, sits in calmness and light, is positiv and composed, knows no discouragement,
Waiting patiently, waiting its time.
—Walt Whitman.

HERE'S freedom to him that wad read,
Here's freedom to him that wad write!
There's nane ever feared that the truth should be heard,
But they wham the truth would indite.—Burns.

IF all will admit that all hav an equal right to think, then the question is forever settled.—Ingersoll.

WHEN men hav come to regard a certain class of their fellow-creatures as doomed by the almighty to eternal and excruciating agonies, and when their theology directs their minds with intense and realizing earnestness to the contemplation of such agonies, the result will be an indifference to the suffering of those whom they deem the enemies of their God, as absolute as it is perhaps possible for human nature to attain.—Lecky's History of Rationalism.

CHRISTIANITY cannot liv in peace with any other form of faith. If that religion be true, there is but one savior, one inspired book, and but one little narrow grass-grown path that leads to heaven. Such a religion is necessarily uncompromising.—Ingersoll.

THE doctrins of the Galilean Buddhist, Jesus Christ, hav burdened the record of human misery with thousands of devastating wars. Hav they ever added one millet-seed to the sum of human happiness? Did the apostle of Nazareth ever speak one word in favor of industry, of rational education, the cause of health, the love and study of nature, of physical and intellectual culture? Not one. Has he promoted our progress in the paths of science and freedom? Not one step.—Prof. Felix L. Oswald in The Secret of the East.

As ministers become more civilized, they will wish to know what we shall do with our criminals instead of what God will do with his—how we shall do away with beggary and want—with crime and misery—with prostitution, disease, and famin—with tyranny in all its cruel forms—with prisons and scaffolds, and how we shall reward the honest workers, and fill the world with happy homes!—Ingersoll.

Odds and Ends.

THE eagle is dear to the American heart; but the double-eagle is twice as dear.—Puck.

MR. TOP HEAVY: "Will you share my lot, Penelope?" Penelope: "Yes, if there is a brown-stone front on it."—Life.

PROUD mother: "Oh, John, the baby can walk!" Cruel father: "Good! He can walk the floor with himself at night then."—Detroit News.

AN Indiana man read a newspaper headline, "The Situation at Washington," and he telegraphed to Harrison for it at once.—Texas Siftings.

AL: "Mary is a real nice girl—what a pity she drinks." Ed: "She? Never." "Yes, I saw her this morning drink four goblets of ice-water. It'll kill her."—Time.

"JOE, I've begun to think my wife doesn't tell the truth." "Why so, Bill?" "Well, she threatens every week to go back to her mother, but she never goes."—Epoch.

SIMEBAL: "Are Jones and Briggs friends?" Grimsby: "Friends! No, indeed! They couldn't hate each other more if they sang in the same church choir."—Time.

MR. ISAACS: "Vat for, Mr. Solomon, hav you got dot Irish vet nurse?" Mr. Solomon: "Pecause, Mr. Isaacs, I vant my leetle poy, Jacob, to pegin early in life to make his living off dose shentiles."

KIND soul: "My husband is such a dear, sympathizing creature! When I am chopping a pile of firewood out in the yard, he'll sit half a day before the fire and weep at my having to work so hard!"

FIRST Boston girl: "Got any pickles in your pocket?" Second Boston girl: "Yes, and some gum." First Boston girl: "That's all right. I've got some cold beans and two slatepencils. Let's lunch."

REV. DR. PRIMROSE: "I had a most pleasant time in Paris this summer, but it didn't rest me as much as I thought." Merritt: "Yet it should be some consolation to you to know that your congregation got the rest."—Life.

THERE is a time for everything. After you hav weighed your neighbor in the balances, drop the nickel of fairness into the slot of self-examination, and ascertain your own moral avoirdupois.—Boston Courier.

ETHEL: "Oh, how you frightened me when you came up behind me and put your arm around my waist! I thought you were a man." Laura: "I thought you thought I was a man. You did not try to get away until I spoke."—Exchange.

"MRS. MULLIGAN," said Mrs. Ginty, "it is well yer falin' the day?" "Yis, very well." "An' shtrong?" "Yis, quite shtrong." "Then, p'r'aps it's able ye'd be to bring back the two washtubs yez borried last Monday."—Merchant Traveler.

"WHAT'S the matter, Eddie?" "Willie Thomas has gone and moved out of this street, boo, hoo." "Well, don't cry; there are plenty of other little boys in the neighborhood to play with." "Y-e-s, b-u-t he's the o-n-l-y one I could l-i-c-k."—Life.

MR. SMART (as the churchgoers pass): "I'm surprised that Miss Sweet permits Bodworth to accompany her. He's about the freshest young fellow I know." Mrs. Smart: "Perhaps that's the reason why she lets him carry her Psalter."—Boston Times.

YOUTHFUL skeptic: "Say, Edna, do you believe that story about Adam and Eve and the snake and the garden of Eden?" "Why, Agnes! of course I do." "Well, I don't! And nothing will ever make me believe that God made women wear clothes as a punishment."—Boston Beacon.

"I WOULD hav you remember, brethren," continued the preacher, "the same master hand that contrived the celestial system fashioned the least of earthly atoms as well; the superb architect of the mountains arranged the minute threads of gold within them; and, remember, friends, the God who made me made a daisy."—Life.

A PRETTY HOW-D'YE-DO.

When maidens greet
Upon the street,
Exchanging love and kisses, too,
You must admit,
At sight of it,
Now "Here's a pretty how-d'ye-do."
—Philadelphia Press.

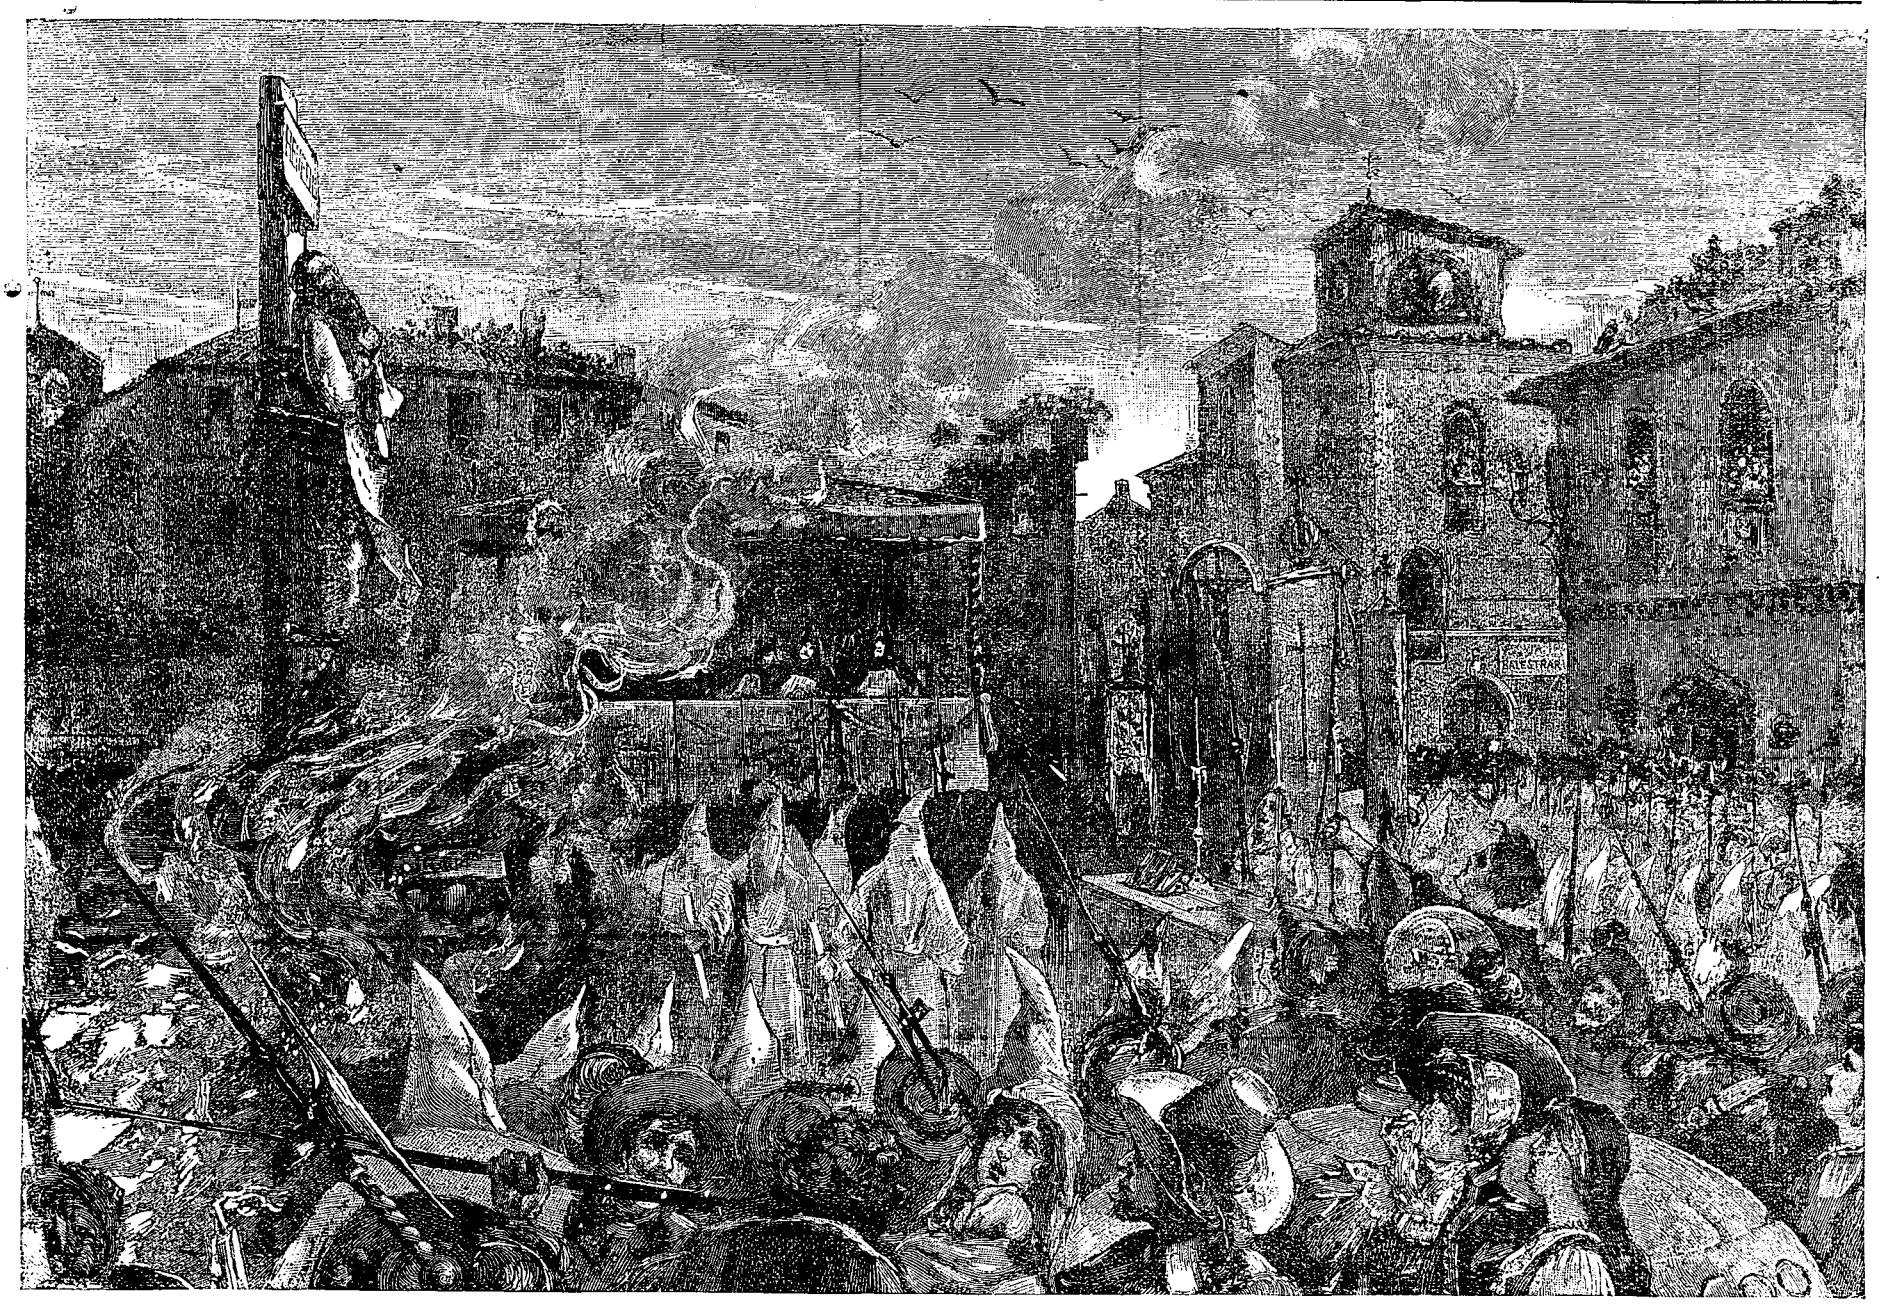
MINISTER (to boy with a long pole): "I hope you are not going fishing in the creek on this beautiful Sabbath day?" Boy (emphatically): "No, sir, I am not." "That's right—you're a good boy. Here's a nickel." (After the minister's departure): "Golly! If he'd asked me wuz I goin' fishing in the mill-pond he'd had me sure."—Time.

REV. CALLER: "Your congregation seems to be very attentiv and devout, Mr. Scrimper." Rev. Scrimper: "Yes, they show it in their contributions." Rev. Caller: "Ah, I am glad to hear that they are liberal." Rev. Scrimper: "They are not liberal, they are devout. You ought to see the number of religious two-cent pieces with 'In God We Trust' that I take in every Sunday!"—Life.

"I REALLY don't know for certain whether he's married or not," said Johnson, "but the other day I saw him wheeling a perambulator down the street with two squalling infants in it. And behind him were two females, and the younger of them was saying to him, 'You wretch! you've been like that twice this week—you know you hav!' And then the other female pleasantly remarked, 'Matilda, if you don't make him insure his life for another thousand before his liver's altogether gone, you're no daughter of mine.' This looks like marriage, anyhow! Don't it, old man?"

IT was in a grocer's window
That she saw a simple sign,
And she stopped and slowly read it,
While her blue eyes seemed to shine.

Then with scornful lips she murmured,
As she tossed her pretty hat:
"How I wish that men were labeled
With a good plain sign, like that!"



So when she had passed, I ventured
Near that favored grocer's shop,
And espied this simple legend:
"This Corn Warranted to Pop." —Puck.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16 No. 44. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY. { New York, Saturday, November 2, 1889 } 28 LAFAYETTE PL. } $3.00 per year.

THE BURNING OF GIORDANO BRUNO, FEBRUARY 17, 1600.

(From a circular issued by the Committee to erect a statue to his memory at Rome.)

Notes and Clippings.

ONE Agnostic rabbi does more injury to Judaism than ten missionaries.—Jewish Times.

SAM JONES is laying up treasure in heaven, and is doing a local trade of $25,000 a year.—Herald.

THE Catholic Telegraph is discussing "The Insecurity of Protestantism" It had better discuss the insecurity of Catholic editors and publishers when there is an angry archbishop about.—Independent.

THE Argentine government has instructed its agent in Paris to offer facilities for emigration to the Jews who are being expelled from Russia. Several thousand of these people, who are under orders to quit Bessarabia, hav accepted engagements to go and colonize lands on the Argentine territory. A shipful of the emigrants will start in a few days from Ismailia.

IN Ecuador there is a church, it is said, for every hundred and fifty inhabitants, and ten per cent of the population are priests, monks, or nuns. The priests control the government in all its branches, and two hundred and seventy-two days of the year are observed as feast or fast days. One-fourth of all the property belongs to the church. Seventy-five per cent of the people can neither read nor write.

THE Roman Catholic primate of all Ireland, the Rev. Dr. Logue, said the other day in the cathedral at Armagh, in reference to the pope seeking possibly some other asylum than Italy, that the Irish people are losing their original simplicity of faith and gradually failing in devotion to the holy see. Irish Catholic politicians were holding up to contempt the opinions of the pope and his counselors.

A BAND of brigands has been terrorizing Macedonia, which upon capture was found to contain several priests, a Greek Archimandrate, and the superior of a convent.—Truth Seeker. A band of sky-pilots hav also been terrorizing and robbing weak-minded people in Hastings, Mich., and, by dire threats of endless torment, hav made very many stand and deliver. They should be captured and made to dig 'taters, or set at some other honest labor.—Hastings, Mich., Plaindealer.

THE monument to the forefathers recently erected at Plymouth by the aid of Mr. Ames, the state of Massachusetts, and the United States, is an argument against the public schools. There is Mr. Ames's statue of faith, that means religion: "Without faith it is impossible to please God." There is a statue of "Morality" under Faith, and evidently guarded by religion. Law and freedom depend on these. There is no statue of public schoolism, and therefore it was not that idea that could or should be embodied there. All honor to the Pilgrim fathers.—American Catholic News.

THE late Andrew J. Geiger, of Philadelphia, left an estate valued at $250,000. His will provides for the erection of an obelisk over his grave. The panel on the east side is to contain his name, age, and date of death. The north panel will bear this inscription: "Traveled sixty thousand miles in America, Europe, Asia, and Africa." The south panel is to read: "Young man, stop and think. See what has been the reward for honesty, industry, and economy. In 1849 I worked on Robert Martin's farm near Jersey shore for twenty-five cents a day. No fortune left to me." The west panel will say: "Lived and died in the faith of the immutable and unchangeable and Nature's God. Believed in the Gospel of Peace, Right, and Justice."

IN a village in the canton of Lucerne, Switzerland, there is a society of old maids. It numbers eighty members, and, queer enough, it is under the patronage of the St. Catharine matrimonial agency. They perform acts of charity, and are highly esteemed in their neighborhood. The municipal council lately presented them with a banner, on which there is the following startling inscription: "Women are an evil, but they are also a blessing. They remind us of the onions that make us weep, but that we love all the same."

CHICAGO is again suffering from an outbreak of the most offensiv foreignism. An attempt has been made to enforce the Sunday-Closing law against the saloons, and the Personal Rights League has seen fit to protest against the enforcement of the law. One of the speakers at a meeting of the League said: "If they are going to close the saloons we insist that the churches also be closed, and that they shall not be allowed to continue business at the old stand." The idea of comparing the whisky shop—the nursery of crime and disorder—with the churches is outrageous. It ought to be enough to arouse public sentiment on the subject and to force Sunday closing. Such offensiv language is a disgrace to Chicago, and cannot be squelched too soon.—Cleveland Leader.

THE true scientific attitude of the day, as expressed by the president of the British Association, Professor Flower, is "a suspended judgment." Professor Flower indorses Sir John Lubbock's idea that the field of inquiry is limitless, and that there may be "fifty other senses as different from ours as sound is from sight; and even within the boundaries of our own senses there may be endless sounds which we cannot hear, and colors as different as red from green of which we hav no conception. These and a thousand other questions remain for solution. The familiar world which surrounds us may be a totally different place to other animals. To them it may be full of music which we can not hear, of color which we cannot see, of sensations which we cannot conceive."

CORRESPONDENCE from Russia declares that the clergy of the Greek Catholic church there stand low in the respect of the people. The priest possesses absolutely no authority or influence, and no one would ever dream of applying to him for advice. How is it possible to expect anything else, when the peasant sees in his pope a confirmed drunkard, a public vagabond and tramp, who often does not put in an appearance at his church for weeks together? How can the moujik do otherwise than despise a priest whose amorous intrigues are of the most flagrant and debased nature, and who, instead of seeking to maintain the virtue of the fairer members of his flock, seeks by every means in his power to bring them to disgrace and shame. "I called him in to say prayers at the bedside of my dying wife," complained a poor peasant the other day, "and he has taken advantage of the fact to lead my only daughter to ruin."

Communications.

Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?

CHAPTER V.

TESTIMONY OF HON. WM. H. HERNDON.—PUBLISHED TESTIMONY.

Statement of Lincoln's Freethought opinions—Herndon's Association with Lincoln—Character—Writings—Competency as a Witness—The Abbott Letter—Contribution to the Liberal Age—Article in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Having presented and reviewed the evidence in behalf of the affirmativ of this question, the evidence in support of the negativ will next be given.

The following is a brief statement of the theological opinions of Abraham Lincoln as understood by those who deny that he was a Christian:

1. In regard to a supreme being he entertained at times Agnostic and even Atheistic opinions. During the latter years of his life, however, he professed a sort of Deistic belief, but he did not accept the Christian or anthropomorphic conception of a deity.

2. So far as the doctrin of immortality is concerned, he was an Agnostic.

3. He did not believe in the Christian doctrin of the inspiration of the scriptures. He believed that Burns and Paine were as much inspired as David and Paul.

4. He did not believe in the doctrin of Christ's divinity. He affirmed that Jesus was either the son of Joseph and Mary, or the illegitimate son of Mary.

5. He did not believe in the doctrin of a special creation.

6. He believed in the theory of evolution, so far as this theory had been developed in his time.

7. He did not believe in miracles and special providences. He believed that all things are governed by immutable laws, and that miracles and special providences, in the evangelical sense of these terms, are impossible.

8. He rejected the doctrin of total or inherent depravity.

9. He repudiated the doctrin of vicarious atonement.

10. He condemned the doctrin of forgivness for sin.

11. He opposed the doctrin of future rewards and punishments.

12. He denied the doctrin of the freedom of the will.

13. He did not believe in the efficacy of prayer as understood by orthodox Christians.

14. He indorsed, for the most part, the criticisms of Thomas Paine on the Bible and Christianity, and accepted, to a great extent, the theological and humanitarian views of Theodore Parker.

15. He wrote a book (which was suppressed) against the Bible and Christianity.

16. His connection with public affairs prevented him from giving prominence to his religious opinions during the later years of his life, but his earlier views concerning the unsoundness of the Christian system of religion never underwent any material change, and he died, as he had lived, an unbeliever.

In consideration of his long and intimate association with Lincoln, and the character and comprehensivness of his testimony, the first to testify will be Hon. Wm. H. Herndon, of Springfield, Ill.

In 1843, Lincoln formed a partnership with Mr. Herndon in the law business, which existed for a period of twenty-two years, and was only dissolved by the bullet of the assassin. The strong attachment that these men had for each other is illustrated in the following touching incident, related in "The Every Day Life of Lincoln:"

> When he was about to leave for Washington, he went to the dingy little law office which had sheltered his saddest hours. He sat down on the couch and said to his law-partner, Herndon, "Billy, you and I hav been together more than twenty years, and hav never 'passed a word.' Will you let my name stay on the old sign till I come back from Washington?" The tears started to Mr. Herndon's eyes. He put out his hand. "Mr. Lincoln," said he, "I will never hav any other partner while you liv," and to the day of the assassination all the doings of the firm were in the name of "Lincoln & Herndon" (Every Day Life of Lincoln, p. 377).

Though younger than his illustrious partner, Mr. Herndon is now well advanced in years. He has retired from the activ practice of law, and resides at his country home near Springfield. He is noted for his rugged honesty, for his broad philanthropy, and for his strong and original mental qualities. He was one of the pioneers in the antislavery movement, and one of the founders of the Republican party. He was the Republican nominee for presidential elector of the Springfield district when the first Republican ticket, Fremont and Dayton, was placed in the field. Governor Bissell, Governor Yates, and Governor Oglesby successivly appointed him bank commissioner of Illinois. His talents were recognized and his friendship sought by many of the most eminent men in the nation. Garrison stopped for weeks at his home; Theodore Parker was his guest; Horace Greeley was his devoted friend, and Charles Sumner was his friend and correspondent.

When Lincoln and Herndon were first thrown into each other's society, Lincoln's mind was dwelling, for the most part, in the theological (or rather anti-theological) world, while Herndon's found a most congenial habitation in the world of politics. They were destined to exercise an important influence in molding each other's characters. Herndon is indebted chiefly to Lincoln for the religious views he entertains, while Lincoln was indebted mainly to Herndon for the political principles which he finally espoused. Colonel Lamon, in his "Life of Lincoln," givs the following truthful sketch of the character of the man whom Lincoln made a Deist, and who in turn made an Abolitionist of Lincoln. Alluding to the Abolitionists of Illinois, as they appeared in 1854, when Lincoln took his stand on the side of freedom, Lamon says:

> Chief among them was Owen Lovejoy; and second to him, if second to any, was William H. Herndon. But the position of this latter gentleman was one of singular embarrassment. According to himself, he was an Abolitionist "some time before he was born," and hitherto he had made his "calling and election sure" by every word and act of a life devoted to political philanthropy and disinterested political labors. While the two great national parties divided the suffrages of the people, North and South, everything in his eyes was dead. He detested the bargains by which those parties were in the habit of composing sectional troubles, and sacrificing the principle of freedom. When the Whig party paid its breath to time, he looked upon its last agonies as but another instance of divine retribution. He had no patience with time-servers, and regarded with indignant contempt the policy which would postpone the natural rights of an enslaved race to the success of parties and politicians. He stood by at the sacrifice of the Whig party in Illinois with the spirit of Paul when he held the clothes of them that stormed Stephen. He believed it was for the best, and hoped to see a new party rise in its place, great in the fervor of its faith, and animated by the spirit of Wilberforce, Garrison, and the Lovejoys. He was a fierce zealot, and gloried proudly in his title of "fanatic;" for it was his conviction that fanatics were at all times the salt of the earth, with power to save it from the blight that follows the wickedness of men. He believed in a God, but it was the god of nature—the god of Socrates and Plato, as well as the god of Jacob. He believed in a Bible, but it was the open scroll of the universe; and in a religion clear and well defined, but it was a religion that scorned what he deemed the narrow slavery of verbal inspiration. Hot-blooded, impulsiv, brave, morally and physically, careless of consequences when moved by a sense of individual duty, he was the very man to receive into his inmost heart the precepts of Mr. Seward's "higher law."

His literary abilities, both as a speaker and as a writer, are of a high order. He has written a meritorious work on mental philosophy, and a "Life of Lincoln," which is now in press. In addition to numerous addresses upon historical, economical, and other subjects, he has prepared and delivered several able and interesting lectures on Lincoln: "Abraham Lincoln and Ann Rutledge," a beautiful and touching presentation of that pathetic and romantic love episode which forms one of the saddest chapters in Lincoln's history; "The Analysis of Lincoln's Character," which appears in the "Lincoln Memorial Album," and "Lincoln's Religion," which was published in the State Register.

Carpenter, and in fact nearly every writer on Lincoln, has made free use of Herndon's writings. Both Holland and Lamon acknowledge that they were more deeply indebted to him in the preparation of their respectiv works than to any other person. The Petersburg Democrat, published in Menard county, where Lincoln spent the first years of his manhood, says: "Mr. Herndon was the law partner of Mr. Lincoln from 1843 to 1860, and knew his inner life better than any other man." The Sangamon county Monitor, of Springfield, where Lincoln lived for a quarter of a century, says: "Herndon knew Lincoln's views better than any man in America." Judge David Davis, the lifelong friend of Lincoln, in whose court both Lincoln and Herndon practiced for years, declared that Herndon knew more about Lincoln's religion than any other man.

In this chapter will be reproduced the evidence of Mr. Herndon that has already been made public.

The first elaborate exposition of Lincoln's Freethought views was made in 1870, in what is known as the "Abbott Letter," an article which Mr. Herndon by request contributed to the Index, a paper published at Toledo, O., and edited by Francis E. Abbott. The article was extensivly copied and commented upon, and produced a profound sensation in the religious world, which, to a great extent, had been misled by such writers as Holland. The first and more important part of Mr. Herndon's article will now be presented:

> Mr. Abbott: Some time since I promised you that I would send a letter in relation to Mr. Lincoln's religion. I do so now. Before entering on that question, one or two preliminary remarks will help us to understand why he disagreed with the Christian world in its principles, as well as in its theology. In the first place, Mr. Lincoln's mind was a purely logical mind; secondly, Mr. Lincoln was a purely practical man. He had no fancy or imagination, and not much emotion. He was a realist as opposed to an idealist. As a general rule, it is true that a purely logical mind has not much hope, if it ever has faith in the unseen and unknown. Mr. Lincoln had not much hope and no faith in things that lie outside of the domain of demonstration; he was so constituted, so organized, that he could believe nothing unless his senses or logic could reach it. I hav often read to him a law point, a decision, or something I fancied. He could not understand it until he took the book out of my hand, and read the thing for himself. He was terribly, vexatiously skeptical. He could scarcely understand any thing, unless he had time and place fixed in his mind.
>
> I became acquainted with Mr. Lincoln in 1834, and I think I knew him well to the day of his death. His mind, when a boy in Kentucky, showed a certain gloom, an unsocial nature, a peculiar abstractedness, a bold and daring skepticism. In Indiana, from 1817 to 1830, it manifested the same qualities or attributes as in Kentucky: it only intensified, developed itself, along those lines in Indiana. He came to Illinois in 1880, and, after some little roving, settled in New Salem, now in Menard county and state of Illinois. This village lies about twenty miles northwest of this city. It was here that Mr. Lincoln became acquainted with a class of men the world never saw the like of before or since. They were large men—large in body and large in mind; hard to whip and never to be fooled. They were a bold, daring, and reckless sort of men; they were men of their own minds—believed what was demonstrable; were men of great common sense. With these men Mr. Lincoln was thrown; with them he lived, and with them he moved and almost had his being. They were skeptics all—scoffers some. These scoffers were good men, and their scoffs were protests against theology—loud protests against the follies of Christianity. They had never heard of Theism and the newer and better religious thoughts of this age. Hence, being natural skeptics, and being bold, brave men, they uttered their thoughts freely. They declared that Jesus was an illegitimate child. They were on all occasions, when opportunity offered, debating the various questions of Christianity among themselvs. They took their stand on common sense and on their own souls; and, though their arguments were rude and rough, no man could overthrow their homely logic. They riddled all divines, and not unfrequently made them skeptics, disbelievers as bad as themselvs. They were a jovial, healthful, generous, social, true, and manly set of people.
>
> It was here and among these people that Mr. Lincoln was thrown. About the year 1834 he chanced to come across Volney's "Ruins" and some of Paine's theological works. He at once seized hold of them, and assimilated them into his own being. Volney and Paine became a part of Mr. Lincoln from 1834 to the end of his life.
>
> In 1835 he wrote out a small work on Infidelity, and intended to hav it published. This book was an attack upon the whole grounds of Christianity, and especially was it an attack upon the idea that Jesus was the Christ, the true and only-begotten son of God, as the Christian world contends. Mr. Lincoln was at that time in New Salem, keeping store for Mr. Samuel Hill, a merchant and postmaster of that place. Lincoln and Hill were very friendly. Hill, I think, was a skeptic at this time. Lincoln, one day after the book was finished, read it to Mr. Hill, his good friend. Hill tried to persuade him not to make it public, not to publish it. Hill at that time saw in Mr. Lincoln a rising man, and wished him success. Lincoln refused to destroy it—said it should be published. Hill swore it should never see light of day. He had an eye to Lincoln's popularity—his present and future success; and believing that if the book was published it would kill Lincoln forever, he snatched it from Lincoln's hand when Lincoln was not expecting it, and ran it into an old-fashioned tinplate stove, heated as hot as a furnace; and so Lincoln's book went up to the clouds in smoke. It is confessed by all who heard parts of it that it was at once able and eloquent; and, if I may judge of it from Mr. Lincoln's subsequent ideas and opinions, often expressed to me and to others in my presence, it was able, strong, plain, and fair. His argument was grounded on the internal mistakes of the Old and New Testaments, and on reason and on the experiences and observations of men. The criticisms from internal defects were sharp, strong, and manly.
>
> Mr. Lincoln moved to this city in 1837, and here became acquainted with various men of his own way of thinking. At that time they called themselvs Freethinkers or free thinking men. I remember all these things distinctly; for I was with them, heard them, and was one of them. Mr. Lincoln here found other works—Hume, Gibbon, and others—and drank them in. He made no secret of his views; no concealment of his religion. He boldly avowed himself an Infidel.
>
> When Mr. Lincoln was a candidate for our legislature, he was accused of being an Infidel and of having said that Jesus Christ was an illegitimate child. He never denied his opinions nor flinched from his religious views. He was a true man, and yet it may be truthfully said that in 1837 his religion was low indeed. In his moments of gloom he would doubt, if he did not sometimes deny, God.
>
> Mr. Lincoln ran for Congress against the Rev. Peter Cartwright in the year 1846. In that contest he was accused of being an Infidel, if not an Atheist. He never denied the charge—would not—"would die first." In the first place, because he knew it could and would be proved on him; and in the second place, he was too true to his own convictions, to his own soul, to deny it.
>
> When Mr. Lincoln left this city for Washington, I knew he had undergone no change in his religious opinions or views. He held many of the Christian ideas in abhorrence, and among them there was this one, namely, that God would forgiv the sinner for a violation of his laws. Lincoln maintained that God could not forgiv; that punishment has to follow the sin; that Christianity was wrong in teaching forgivness.
>
> From what I know of Mr. Lincoln, and from what I hav heard and verily believe, I can say, first, that he did not believe in a special creation, his idea being that all creation was an evolution under law; secondly, that he did not believe that the Bible was a special revelation from God, as the Christian world contends; thirdly, he did not believe in miracles as understood by Christians; fourthly, he believed in universal inspiration and miracles under law; fifthly, he did not believe that Jesus was the Christ, the son of God, as the Christian church contends; sixthly, he believed that all things, both matter and mind, were governed by laws, universal, absolute, and eternal. All his speeches and remarks in Washington conclusivly prove this. Law was to Lincoln everything, and special interferences shams and delusions.

In 1874 Mr. Herndon delivered in Springfield a lecture on "Lincoln's Religion." It was a reply to Reed's lecture, and was published in the State Register of Springfield. In this lecture he reaffirms the statements made in the "Abbott Letter," supports them with substantial arguments and proofs, and completely overthrows the claims advanced by Reed. From it I quote the following:

> It is a curious fact that when any man by his genius, good fortune, or otherwise rises to public notice and to fame, it does not make much difference what life he has led, that the whole Christian world claims him as a Christian, to be forever held up to view as a hero and a saint during all the coming ages, just as if religion would die out of the soul of man unless the great dead be canonized as a model Christian. This is a species of hero or saint worship. Lincoln they are determined to enthrone among the saints, to be forever worshiped as such.

I believe that Mr. Lincoln did not late in life become a firm believer in the Christian religion. What! Mr. Lincoln discard his logical faculties and reason with his heart? What! Mr. Lincoln believe that Jesus was the Christ of God, the true and only begotten son of him, as the Christian creed contends? What! Mr. Lincoln believe that the New Testament is of special divine authority, and fully and infallibly inspired, as the Christian contends? What! Mr. Lincoln abandon his lifelong ideas of universal, eternal, and absolute laws and contend that the New Testament is any more inspired than Homer's poems, than Milton's "Paradise Lost," than Shakspere, than his own eloquent and inspired oration at Gettysburg? What! Mr. Lincoln believe that the great creator had connection through the form and instrumentality of a shadow with a Jewish girl? Blasphemy! These things must be believed and acknowledged in order to be a Christian.

One word concerning this discussion about Mr. Lincoln's religious views. It is important in this: 1. It settles a historic fact. 2. It makes it possible to write a true history of a man free from the fear of fire and stake. 3. It assures the reading public that the life of Mr. Lincoln will be truly written. 4. It will be a warning forever to all untrue men, that the life they hav lived will be held up to view. 5. It should convince the Christian pulpit and press that it is impossible in this day and generation, at least in America, to daub up sin, and make a hero out of a fool, a knave, or a villain, which Mr. Lincoln was not. Some true spirit will drag the fraud and lie out to the light of day. 6. Its tendency will be to arrest and put a stop to romantic biographies. And now let it be written in history, and on Mr. Lincoln's tomb: "He died an unbeliever."

In January, 1883, Mr. Herndon contributed an article on "Lincoln's Religion" to the Liberal Age, of Milwaukee. From this article the following extracts are taken and submitted:

In 1837, Mr. Lincoln moved to the city of Springfield, and there came across many people of his own belief. They called themselvs at that time Freethinkers. Some of these men were highly educated and polished gentlemen. Mr. Lincoln read in this city Hume, Gibbon, and other Liberal books. He was in this city from 1837 to 1861, an Infidel—Freethinker—Liberal—Free Religionist—of the radical type.

In his philosophy, he was a realist, as opposed to an idealist; he was a sensationalist, as opposed to an intuitionalist; and was a Materialist as opposed to a Spiritualist.

Some good men and women say that Mr. Lincoln was a Christian, because he was a moral man. They say that he was a rational Christian, because he loved morality. Do not other people, who are not Christians, love morality? Morality is not the test of Christianity, by any means. If it is the test, then all moral men, Atheists, Agnostics, Infidels, Mohammedans, Buddhists, Mormons, and the rest, are Christians. A rational Christian is an anomaly, an impossibility; because when reason is left free, it demands proofs—it relies on experience, observation, logic, nature, laws. Why not call Mr. Lincoln a rational Buddhist, a rational Mohammedan, a rational Confucian, a rational Mormon, for all these, if true to their faith, love morality.

Did Mr. Lincoln believe in prayer as a means of moving God? It is said to me by Christians, touching his religion: "Did not he, in his parting speech in Springfield, in 1861, say, "I hope you, my friends, will pray that I may receive," etc., and to which I say, yes. In his last inaugural he said: "Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray." These expressions are merely conventional. They do not prove that Mr. Lincoln believed that prayer is a means of moving God. . . . He believed, as I understood him, that human prayer did the prayer good; that prayer was but a drum beat—the taps of the spirit on the living human soul, arousing it to acts of repentance for bad deeds done, or to inspire it to a loftier and a higher effort for a nobler and a grander life.

Did Mr. Lincoln, in his said inaugural, say: "Both read the same word of God?" No, because that would be admitting revelation. He said: "Both read the same Bible." Did Mr. Lincoln say; "Yet if God wills that it [the war] continue till all the wealth piled by the bondman's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn by the lash shall be paid with another drawn by the sword, as was said by God three thousand years ago?" He did not; he was cautious, and said: "As was said three thousand years ago." Jove never nods.

A little later, Mr. Herndon wrote an article entitled, "Abraham Lincoln's Religious Belief," which appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER, of New York. From this article I quote the following passages:

In 1842 I heard Mr. Lincoln deliver a speech before the Washingtonian Temperance Society, of this city. . . . He scored the Christians for the position they had taken. He said in that lecture this: "If they [the Christians] believe, as they profess—that omnipotence condescended to take on himself the form of sinful man," etc. This was spoken with energy. He scornfully and contemptuously emphasized the words as they profess. The rebuke was as much in the manner of utterance as in the substance of what was said. I heard the criticisms of some of the Christians that night. They said the speech was an insult and an outrage.

It is my opinion that no man ever heard Mr. Lincoln pray, in the true evangelical sense of that word. His philosophy is against all human prayer, as a means of reversing God's decrees.

He has told me often that there was no freedom in the human will, and no punishment beyond this world. He denied God's higher law, and wrote on the margin of a newspaper to his friends in the Chicago convention in 1860, this: "Lincoln agrees with Seward in his irrepressible conflict idea; but he is opposed to Seward's higher law." This paper was handed to Judge Davis, Judge Logan, and other friends.

Mr. Lincoln and a minister, whose name is kept in the dark, had a conversation about religion. It appears that Mr. Lincoln said that when his son—bone of his bone, flesh of his flesh, and blood of his own heart—died, though a severe affliction, it did not arouse him to think of Christ; but when he saw the graves of so many soldiers—strangers to him—. . . that sad sight aroused him to love Jesus. . . . It is a fine thing for the reputation of the "Illinois Clergyman" that his name is to the world unknown. It is a most heartless thing, this supposed conversation of Lincoln with the Illinois clergyman. What! Lincoln feel more for the graves of strangers than for the death of his once living, loving, and loveable son, now dead, moldering to ashes in the silent tomb! This charge is barbarous. To make Lincoln a lover of Jesus, whom he once ridiculed, this minister makes him a savage.

I wish to giv an illustration of the uncertainty and unreliability of those loose things that float around in the newspapers of the day, and how liable things are to be inaccurate—so made even by the best of men. Mr. Lincoln on the morning he started for Washington to take the oath of office, and be inaugurated president of this great republic, gave a short farewell address to his old friends. It was eloquent and touching. That speech is copied in Holland's "Life of Lincoln," in Arnold's "Lincoln and Slavery," and in Lamon's "Life of Lincoln," and no two are exactly alike. If it is hard to get the exact truth on such an occasion as this, how impossible is it to get at Mr. Lincoln's sayings which hav been written out by men weeks and months after what he did say hav passed by! All these loose and foolish things that Mr. Lincoln is supposed to hav said are like the cords of driftwood, floating on the bosom of the great Mississippi, down to the great gulf of—Forgetfulness. Let them go.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

A Direct Statement by Mr. Herndon.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Feb. 3, 1885.

MR. COZINS, My Dear Sir: Your letter, dated the 25th ult., making inquiries about Mr. Lincoln's religion, was duly received; and in answer to which let me say that Mr. Lincoln was an Infidel. He did write a little work on Infidelity in 1835-6, and never recanted. He was an out-and-out Infidel, and about this there is no mistake.

Respectfully, W. H. HERNDON.

The Origin of Christianity.

From an article in the Encyclopedia Britannica we learn that as early as the year 130 there were many religious sects in Rome, with creeds, constitutions, and churches, and these churches were spread throughout the eastern and western empires, or, as they would hav said, through the world. Whence came so many religious sects, so widely diffused, at so early a period? We are not informed. But Christians would hav us believe that the disciples of the fabulous Jesus, in obedience to his dying injunction, to "go into all the world and preach the gospel," had, by the aid of miraculous endowments, accomplished these results. Unfortunately for this theory, the story of the crucifixion was the fabrication of a later period. Marcion, the son of the bishop of Pontus, had not heard of it when he went to Rome in the year 140, although he had preached in Asia Minor and could not hav been ignorant of an event so marvelous had it ever happened as related. A doubt, even, has been expressed in these columns of the existence of Marcion, but from the encyclopedia we learn that nearly every eminent churchman noticed him—the names of seven are given—while many wrote extensiv treatises against him.

Therefore we must record him as having lived, for the records of the early Christians cannot spare so eminent a man.

Marcion was a member of the largest of the Roman churches—the Asiatic, of which Paul had been a member, afterward known as the Roman Catholic. This church was the fruit of the preaching of Buddhist missionaries. It recognized as the supreme God the personification of the good principle of the Persians, whose worship had been established in Western Asia—a being to be loved, not feared, and his son, a spiritual savior and teacher. It held that men erred through ignorance. There was no hell in its system. Men were not to be punished, but instructed. It was a rational faith. It was while Paul was a member of this church that it was proposed to adopt the Hebrew scriptures, then a recent compilation, and to substitute the Jehovah revealed in them—then a new and inferior deity—for the beneficent God they had hitherto worshiped.

The author of the article in the encyclopedia admits the resemblance between this church and the Gnostic systems, but shows an entire ignorance of the character of its God in the remark that "when it is denied that the God of redemption is at the same time the almighty Lord of heaven and earth, the gospel is turned upside down." Now by the God of redemption the author means Jehovah, who, according to the Bible, is not the almighty Lord of heaven and earth, or the creator of the world even. Had the author known that the first chapter of Genesis, and the second chapter, from the beginning of the fourth verse to the end of the chapter, were the productions of different writers—that, in the first chapter, the Gods create the world and man, leaving nothing for the God, or rather the Lord God, or Jehovah, of the plagiarist of the second chapter to do, and that the creed of the Asiatic church was probably established before the Hebrew manuscripts were collected for Ptolemy, he would hardly hav settled the God question so hastily or so positivly. And it would be well for Christians in our day, of all denominations, if instead of accepting so readily the Jehovah adopted by the Catholic church with all its theological consequences, they would practice the right of which they boast so loudly, of interpreting the Bible for themselvs. They might discover a more rational faith, a more humane religion.

According to Marcion, Paul had spent the greater part of his life in opposing the contemplated change of faith by his church. But after his death, if we may believe our author, "false Jewish Christians had falsified his epistles," and by this means ultimately gained the ascendency. It was then that Marcion went to Rome, not, as his opponents say, the promulgator of a new faith, but appealing openly to the whole Christian world for the reformation of Christendom—for the restoration of the Pauline conception of the gospel as taught in the epistles; Paul being, as he declared, the only apostle who understood Christianity. True, his opponents denounced him and Paul as heretics; but we know, from Mosheim, that they held to the primitiv faith of the Asiatic church; to the supreme God and the spiritual savior, instead of Jehovah and the Hebrew scriptures; for neither the crucified Jesus nor our gospels had been then imagined. Marcion knew nothing of them. But though there was, after his death, a majority in Rome against the reform which he commenced, he had the support of many churches there, and in the eastern and western empire, and for many years expected to be successful; but, for nearly a century after his death, his followers were formidable to the Catholic churches, and were not extinct till the seventh century, when they were known as the Paulicians.

And yet our author, from whom we gather these facts, while proving Paul and Marcion a unit in belief, tells us that Marcion was the only Christian in the second century who took the trouble to try to understand Paul, and still misunderstood him! After admitting that false Jewish Christians had falsified Paul's epistles, he cannot accept Marcion's statement of Paul's faith, although it is based on his genuin epistles. Pray, who else, in that century, should hav understood Paul, if Marcion, the only one to try, did not? Then, after describing their savior, the son of the supreme God, as a purely spiritual being, with a visionary body, who came down to preach at Capernaum, he would persuade us that those who put their trust in the crucified son shall be saved, as though that had been Paul's belief, while Marcion, so late as the middle of the second century, two centuries after the time of Paul, had never heard of a crucified Jesus. As the spiritual Jesus had raised up Paul, who had opposed the Judaizing of Christianity, we read that the good God—not Jehovah—raised up Marcion to proclaim, once more, the true gospel, and it was Marcion who restored the true text of the Pauline epistles. This true version is unfortunately lost, and we hav only the falsified version, which has been, and must ever be, a subject of controversy till Christians, adopting the primitiv faith as taught by Paul and Marcion, repudiate it. Manes, in the third century, repudiated the historical Jesus. If there had been any foundation for our gospel story, he could not hav been ignorant of it. He regarded the church—after its adoption the Catholic church—as a devilish error, but considered Marcion's teachings as valuable and sound, and held Paul in the highest estimation. He was a man of eminent ability, the founder of a religious sect which existed till the fifteenth century, and he lived near enough to the origin of Christianity to know the history of the period.

Why should not Protestants, especially Unitarians and Universalists, who are ashamed of Jehovah, and the devil and hell, and who believe in enlightening men, and in appealing to their love of the right, and to their self-respect rather than their fears, abandon what Manes calls the devilish error founded on the falsified epistles, and return to what we hav proved was the faith of Paul as well as Marcion—that rational faith of which no man need be ashamed?

S. P.

Brother Shaw's Calamity.

Disasters upon disasters follow each other in our Freethought ranks. I hav just received a letter from our good brother Shaw of the Independent Pulpit, Waco, Tex., that his lecturing hall has been destroyed by fire. The loss is a personal one, as he had bought up the stock and assumed its indebtedness to save the hall from debt. What can be done for Brother Shaw? O that I was a millionaire so that when such cases occur I could make good the loss, and bid the sufferer go on rejoicing. Mr. Shaw adds: "But I will not forsake my work or abate my zeal for the cause of Liberalism." Good! Again I inquire, what can be done for Brother Shaw?

Barre, Mass., Oct. 17, 1889. ELLA E. GIBSON.

A Noble Prophet of Science.

Sixteen years ago John W. Draper prophesied so distinctly, unequivocally, definitly, what has since taken place that it serves to show the value of scientific prophecy. Where is there a biblical prophecy that can match it in precision? Here is his prophecy: "Perhaps the day approaches when posterity will offer an expiation for this great ecclesiastical crime, and a statue of Bruno be unveiled under the dome of St. Peter's at Rome." W. F. JAMIESON.

Des Moines, Ia.

HELP yourselvs, for heaven will not help you.—Oscar Beck.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Vice-President, 120 Lexington ave., New York city.
T. B. WAKEMAN, Vice-President, 93 Nassau street, New York city.
J. E. REMSBURG, Vice-President, ... Oak Mills, Kan.
JULIET H. SEVERANCE, Vice-President, ... Milwaukee, Wis.
IDA C CRADDOCK, Secretary, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
F. C. MENDE, Treasurer, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, Ida C. Craddock, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
TREASURER, F. C. Mende, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Thirteenth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union.

The Thirteenth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union was a small but interesting and important meeting. Only twenty-seven voting members were present, though the attendance of annual members and unaffiliated friends of state Secularization brought the number of activ workers in the cause up to about fifty. The local attendance at the public lectures was large, probably a thousand persons listening to Dr. McGlynn on Saturday night. The Rev. Mr. Savage's audience Sunday afternoon was nearly as numerous, and T. B. Wakeman on Sunday night was greeted by hosts of interested friends. The Congress was held too far east to insure a large delegate attendance, as traveling expenses are too great. Next year the meeting should be held several hundred miles farther West. That would be fairer toward the people and better for the Union. Among those present whose names do not appear in the list of delegates were, Louis Wolfes and H. H. Bohda, of Martinsburg, W. Va.; John Downes, Pittsburgh; S. W. Devenbaugh, Brimfield, Ind.; Jeremiah Hacker, Berlin, N. J.; Mrs. Tillotson, Vineland, N. J.; Susan Wixon and sister, Fall River, Mass.; Voltairine DeCleyre, Pittsburgh, and Marius Heighton, Kent, Ohio.

The result of the Congress has been a still further simplification of the Constitution of the Union, making it a non-partisan organization, and transferring from the Secretary to the President the activ management of its affairs. If things don't go right now we can disciplin the President instead of cussing the Secretary. To enable the President to perform the work of the organization he has been given a corresponding Secretary at a salary of $1,000 and expenses from her home to Philadelphia. As she is a constitutional officer also she will find her position one of responsibility and rewarded with as much censure as coöperation. Selecting a woman for an executiv office is a new proceeding for the Union, but if she doesn't do more and better work for the cause of state secularization for a thousand dollars than any two men would for three times that amount Dr. Westbrook says he is going to foot the bills. With the President, Secretary, and Treasurer in one town and the other executiv officers within easy reach, there is no reason why the Union, if supported by the Secularizationists, should not in the coming year accomplish more good to liberty than has ever before been secured in a twelvemonth. The result of the Congress may therefore be summed up as follows:

1. Simplification of the constitution, so that all in favor of state secularization may join the Union, whether Agnostics, Materialists, Spiritualists, evangelical Christians, Free Religionists, Universalists, Unitarians, or Catholic rebels from church authority.

2. A transferral of the activ management of the Union from the Secretary to the President.

3. Election of officers who can reach one another for consultation and official action at a moment's notice.

The way it was done is as follows:

The Congress was held in Industrial Hall, a rambling structure full of neat little halls and an untidy big one. The big one has a circus attachment just back of the platform, and orators with an ear for music can hav their periods set to a brass band accompaniment free of charge. This advantage, however, was not appreciated by Dr. McGlynn, whose earnest denunciation of his church's attempts to run this country was somewhat interfered with by the noise. In one of the neat little halls, before about a hundred people, of whom only some two dozen were delegates, Dr. Westbrook called the Congress to order at 8 o'clock on Friday evening, October 25th. The first thing in order, he said, was to elect a pro tem secretary, as Secretary Stevens had resigned. That statement started an earnest but quiet row that was not settled till the election of officers on Saturday afternoon. It was known that Mr. Hoover of Pittsburgh intended to renew his efforts to reach the secretaryship of the Union, and he had been boomed by Truth of that city. It was understood, also, that Mr. Milleson of the Chicago Secular Union had aspirations in the same direction, and the Investigator had helped him by an editorial recommendation. The other Freethought papers had no candidates. Mr. Milleson did not materialize at the Congress, and Chicago was unrepresented. But Mr. Hoover was on hand, and evidently very much in the hands of his friends, for when the President called for nominations for pro tem secretary he was promptly put forward. Other delegates, however, had an idea that neither of the gentlemen seeking the honor would be just the man for the place, and they accepted the challenge implied by Mr. Hoover's nomination and named E. W. Chamberlain for temporary recorder of the congressional proceedings. A viva voce vote was taken, but the lungs of both parties were equal, and the Chair couldn't tell much about it, as he labored under the disadvantage of a temporary deafness. A rising vote showed this:

E. W. Chamberlain..... 12
H. Hoover..... 9

And Mr. Chamberlain took a vacant chair at the reporter's desk. Dr. Westbrook then read his opening address, in which he sketched this slightly discouraging picture:

Ladies and Gentlemen, Members and Friends of the American Secular Union: About one year ago, late one Sunday night, I found under my door a telegram announcing that I had been elected president of the American Secular Union, and demanding an immediate answer. My wife said "Don't," and I said "I won't," and then set about thinking the matter over. In about one hour I had settled the matter by a provisional acceptance in the following words: "Regarding the American Secular Union as an organization for the protection and promotion of the principle implied in its name, and not for the advancement of any dogma of religious belief or disbelief, I cordially accept the presidency, unanimously tendered me, and publicly pledge myself to resist all encroachments of sacerdotalism, whether papal or puritan." This I telegraphed to the Congress. In a formal acceptance, a short time after, I repeated these words, and "promised the utmost firmness and diligence in maintaining the Demands of Liberalism, and an honest conformity to the Secular principle upon which our government was founded." This I hav done according to the best of my ability and as circumstances gave me opportunity, and come now to lay the trust I received from you at your feet.

In reviewing the constitution of this society I do not find one single word at variance with the largest catholicity, one single word that an honest Presbyterian, Methodist, or Episcopalian might not accept, and yet the members of this society are almost exclusivly classed as Freethinkers. This has led me to propose an amendment to our constitution, so that there could be no doubt on this subject.

I favor the adoption of only five of the Nine Demands, holding that if these are made the only ones the other four will follow as a matter of course. I would hav Article III read thus:

"As means for the accomplishment of this purpose, the specific work of this society shall be to advocate,

"1. The equitable taxation of church property in common with other property.

"2. The total discontinuance of religious instruction and worship in the public schools, and especially the reading of any Bible.

"3. The repeal of all laws enforcing the observance of Sunday as a religious institution, rather than an economic one, justified by physiological and other secular reasons.

"4. The cessation of all appropriations of the public funds for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character.

"5. The substitution of a solemn affirmation, under the pains and penalties of perjury, in the courts and in all other departments of the government, in place of the common forms of a judicial oath."

The following non-partisan article has been introduced in the proposed amendments to show that we mean just what we say:

"NON-PARTISAN.

"ARTICLE IV. The American Secular Union is strictly unsectarian and non-partisan in both religion and politics. It is not either publicly or privately committed to the advancement of any system of religious belief or disbelief, but honestly welcomes all persons of whatever faith or party to its membership, on the basis of 'no union of church and state.' The word Secular is here used in the broadest sense, as applied to the state, and not to any system of religion or philosophy."

After the adoption of this article there could be no doubt as regards the unsectarian character of the society we represent.

Several classes of Liberals should be activly engaged in promoting these Demands. The Spiritualists are probably the most numerous class of Liberals in the world, and would all favor secular government if properly treated. So with the Free Religionists, the Unitarians, Universalists, Hicksite Quakers, progressiv Jews, the various German societies and labor reform associations, and last, but not least, the ethical societies. It remains to be seen whether we are wise enough to enlist all these reformers. Indeed, there is no reason why we should not enroll in the ranks of state secularization multitudes of Catholics and orthodox Protestants. As individuals we may hold and work for our own peculiar views, but as an organization we must stick to the one object of a complete separation of church and state. This and this only must be our creed.

Our local auxiliary societies may adopt whatever course they may deem most expedient, without let or hindrance from the parent society, as they are absolutely free and independent in the administration of their affairs. The only effect of their charters is simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient coöperation with the parent society, in the one principle of the entire separation of church and state. It is upon this principle alone that we say that the national society shall not be held responsible for the acts and utterances of local auxiliaries.

If we are indeed a society for the promotion of certain forms of Secularism, a sort of hybrid of Materialism and positivism, then let us say so in so many words, throw off all disguises and appear in our true character, and not attempt to masquerade under the disguise of State Secularization. This common honesty requires, and nothing short of this will satisfy the intelligent and honest friends of truth. Moreover, if the classes of Liberals already mentioned, the great and increasing numbers of the non-evangelical, the uncounted numbers who call themselvs by no particular name, cannot be enrolled in our ranks on this basis, then are we "reckoning without our host." We should at once take our position as a band of Freethinkers, haul down the flag of "no union of church and state," as a specialty, and go on our way rejoicing.

It was a long while before I got a copy of our constitution and learned the duties of the president. This I found to b "to preside at the annual congress and other conventions, and at the meetings of the board of directors, and to countersign all orders upon the treasury duly drawn by the secretary." Here I was dumfounded, at finding myself a mere figurehead, with nothing to do. No annual congress until the close of the year, no meeting of the board, and no other conventions over which to preside. But how about countersigning all orders drawn upon the treasury by the secretary? I was told by this officer that "this had never been done," and was not expected. Moreover, it would be impossible for the president to do so, residing in an eastern city, with the secretary residing in Chicago, and the treasurer living another hundred miles further west. It could not be done. We hav had no use for anybody but the secretary, and nominally for the treasurer. The money has been paid mainly to the secretary, and by him transferred to the treasurer, and by him re-transferred to the secretary! What use therefore to hav a president? The natural remedy for all this irregularity, and want of conformity to the requirements of business principles, is to hav their officers located in the same vicinity, so that they could confer together, and transact their business. We hav had no meetings of the board the last year, and I hav only seen one member except the secretary. Indeed we hav no board in the strictness of language, as two of the directors are such in virtue of their offices a chairmen of committees, and we hav no committee.

Members of the American Secular Union, I stand before you to-day as an acknowledged culprit, not having authority to do one single thing that I hav done! I throw myself upon your clemency as a usurper, and only ask your grace on the ground that there was no other course to pursue. Necessity knows no law, it is said, and it became necessary to do just what I hav done. When the office of secretary became vacant September 1st, and the chairman of the finance committee resigned her position as a member of the board, the three remaining members did not feel that they ought to fill the vacant office of secretary, for two short months, and the duties of secretary hav been performed by the president, at great sacrifice. Neither did they think it expedient to elect a successor of the chairman of the finance committee, as we hav no such committee. We now occupy the position of a society with three officers, one in New York, one in Rochelle, Ill., and one in Philadelphia. The great mistake has been in making the secretary the one great officer of the society, and requiring him to keep the accounts, write the letters, act as treasurer in fact, and, in short, to be the society. It is worthy of notice that the secretary succeeded by dint of begging, and publishing a "roll of honor," to collect just about enough money to pay his own salary (about $1,000) and to hav a little left to commence, in Chicago, an action at law, which might just as well hav been commenced in any other city.

This is the sum total of our doings for the year about to close, and we might just as well look matters squarely in the face and determin whether we shall wind up the concern, or whether we shall attempt to reorganize on a business basis, defining each officer's duties, and holding him to a strict accountability. This is the alternativ that faces us. The work of the last thirteen years has been mainly the work of one man, who has been able to collect his own salary, pay his own expenses, and to get up a Congress each year, to which hav been invited the principal professional lecturers, who hav spread themselvs on their favorit subjects whether relating to the object of the Congress or not. All this should be remedied in future meetings.

We are happy to announce, however, that some extra work has been commenced the past year with which you are all acquainted. I refer to the $1,000 Prize Manual on "how to teach the purest principles of morality without teaching religious dogma in our public schools." This has received the greatest attention from the public press, and great interest is manifested by those who propose writing for the prize. Our friends are entitled to great credit for their liberality in contributing the money necessary for this purpose.

I know that I hav drawn a dark picture for your contemplation, but I trust that you will not be disheartened, but meet the situation as it deserves to be met, by devising wise measures for the future. I recommend that the society pursue the following course:

1. That an application be made to the courts for a charter for our organization. This will, of course, require a careful pruning of our constitution so that no objection can be made. This is a matter of great importance, as I know men to-day who are anxious to leave their money to us, but do not know that we will exist as a society to the close of the year! Our society did come very near losing its very existence this year by the simple resignation of two of its officers.

2. I recommend that we take up our constitution item by item and so construct it as to meet the requirements of the case. I do not here go into details, as these must come before the body in due form. I recommend the appointment of an efficient board of directors, a majority of whom shall reside so near together as to make frequent meetings possible, with a corresponding secretary, whose duties shall be under the direction of the president, and the whole under the supervision of the board. I would hav the president, corresponding secretary, and treasurer reside in the same city. No one would think of running a bank or a railroad with the officers living thousands of miles apart! In addition to the corresponding secretary I would recommend the appointment of several field or district secretaries, who shall go out and organize auxiliary societies, and generally promote the interests of the association. No one man can look after the whole country. The National Reform Association hav, at the present time, seven district secretaries, and we should hav at least one-half of this number to begin with. These field secretaries I would hav appointed by the board of directors, as it is impossible to assign them their fields and arrange all the details of their work at a public meeting.

And now, dear friends, I hav in this hasty sketch placed before you my plans for your consideration. I know that they are crude and need revision, but they are the best I hav to giv you. We had better giv up and own that we are not capable of running such an institution, than to go forward, as we hav done, in a limping, hesitating manner. You may say we hav not the means to carry out these plans. No—and we never shall hav until we do something, or show that something is to be done. It would require about $1,000 for salary of the corresponding secretary—rent of office, and other expenses, would amount, say, to $500 more. Can we raise this amount? Can we raise a similar amount for a field secretary—amounting in all to about $3,000? If we cannot, we hav no business to be here. Let us look the whole matter square in the face, and firmly resolve that we will do it, or let us disband and giv up the ship.

I hav thus placed before you the real situation of things and the way to meet them, and I hav not failed to speak plainly to you because I resolved more than two months ago to retire from the presidency at the close of this, my first term, and ask you to choose another in my place. This conclusion has been reached mainly for three reasons: (1) I hav a large amount of unfinished literary work on hand, which cannot safely be delayed much longer. (2) The labor of exploiting our prize Manual, until the work is completely finished, and to which I am fully committed, involves an amount of work, which alone must occupy a great share of my time next year. (3) The Girard College perversion must be brought in the courts, and in this I must be the working counsel. These, and other reasons, compel me to ask you to provide another person to preside over your society another year.

There was no applause over these remarks, and the Chair asked for instruction as to further proceedings. E. B. Foote moved that the Chair appoint a committee of five on Credentials. Carried. Dr. Westbrook named these:

Leonard Geiger. Mrs. A. C. Macdonald. Harry Hoover.
J. Heron Foster. Jay Chaapel.

While this committee were making up the roll of delegates, Dr. Foote read the retiring Secretary's report, which had been forwarded to him:

TO THE OFFICERS AND MEMBERS OF THE THIRTEENTH ANNUAL CONGRESS.

Ladies and Gentlemen: At the last Congress the walls resounded with triumphant cheers for the noble decision by the supreme court of Illinois, sustaining the constitution relativ to a systematic robbery on the part of the Romish church. It becomes my duty to point out what progress the American Secular Union has made since that occasion.

Nearly all the Liberal lecturers showed their sympathy with the purpose of the Union by signing the agreement adopted in open Congress one year ago. Experience has proved that such agreements carry but little force for the practical purposes of our organization.

A pleasant memory will always remain of my visit to President Westbrook, officially informing him of his election, the conference we held on future action, etc. A slight description of that work and those impressions was given in a brief sketch of our honored executiv in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, Investigator, and Freethought.

At the same time I felt it my duty as your representativ to endeavor to prevent a judicial outrage being perpetrated on Moses Stern, a Russian Freethinker, who had been denied his second citizenship papers by the decision of Judge Wilson, in the court of common pleas, in the City of Brotherly Love. My efforts were not successful; not on account of the law, but owing to an illegal practice which prevails in the courts of Pennsylvania relativ to the swearing of persons about to make depositions. To succeed, however, would necessitate a contest in the higher courts, which I thought inadvisable, owing to an injudicious reply Moses Stern made to a question by the judge.

In Troy, N. Y., a similar straining or perversion of the law was made by Judge Fursman, because the applicant's religious views did not accord with those of the court.

The insolent interference with the political rights of E. M. Macdonald, by the ignorant and bigoted election inspectors of New York city, was very properly resented by the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We hope to hear that many others will vindicate their opinions in a similar manner. Still, those who are so very sure we hav no church and state in this country had better examin these and similar cases constantly recurring, all tending to show that religious bigotry is "not dead," nor even "speechless," but is activ and alert, and only waits for a favorable opportunity to become as bloody and relentless a persecutor as of yore. It is the special work of the American Secular Union to "nip" all such opportunities in the bud, and jealously guard the Constitution from the attacks of zealous Christian fanatics.

The injunction sought to restrain the county board of Cook county, Ill., from paying over money to the St. Mary's Training School, otherwise known as Feehanville, thereby giving state aid to a sectarian institution, a course which is by our constitution both illegal and unwarrantable, was dissolved in the lower or circuit court, but the appellate court, out of consideration for their senior judge, who happens to wear a cross on his back, decided that it was not for them to decide. The case has been entered for the supreme court to act upon, and, if victorious, Judge Russell should be well rewarded for his vigilance and pertinacity in this cause. I earnestly hope that this Congress will bestow more than passing attention upon this most important matter, and that lack of financial encouragement will not prevent the proper legal representation before the state tribunal. The issues involved are not of mere local significance, but are far-reaching in the realm of Secular progress. If a correct interpretation of the law can be obtained in this case, an important precedent may thus be established for future judicial rulings, so that its importance can scarcely be overestimated. I hope the American Secular Union will be the David prepared to do battle with this formidable Goliath of Romanism, and that a rousing response will be made to any financial appeal.

Doubtless you are familiar with the agitation which has been going on in Boston and other cities where Romanism threatened to subvert the public schools. That agitation can be traced to the influence of our Secular organs, which are the leaven destined to ferment the whole continent. All honor to our Boston friends for the zeal and enthusiasm they hav employed to such good purpose. The matter of public Secular education is the one which, above all others, should engage the watchful attention of every Freethinker. If we would, indeed, Secularize the state, we must first Secularize the school-room, for the public school and a free republic are Siamese twins, of whom it may be said:

They rise or fall together,
Dwarfed or godlike, bond or free.

Within the past year several new societies hav received charters, in Fairmount, Minn.; West Union, O.; Rine River, Col.; Dorr, Mich.; Des Moines, Ia., and Minneapolis, Minn. Des Moines and Minneapolis, situated at the door of the legislature, should hav plenty of Secular work to occupy their attention. The reports from there are, in the main, favorable, justifying the prediction that, with proper leadership, they will become veritable strongholds of Secularism.

Pursuant to resolutions of the last Congress the Board of Directors urged that action be taken in reference to Girard College, but after counseling with President Westbrook, who is more familiar with that institution than possibly any other person, and whose legal acumen is unquestioned, a passiv policy was, for the time being, adopted. That question will doubtless receive due consideration at your hands.

Thanks to the unparalleled efforts of Freethinkers of the civilized world, and to that rapidly advancing wave of Liberalism which is destined to yet submerge even the "dark places of the earth," the long-contemplated, longed for monument to the sage, hero, martyr to scientific truth, and victim to the cruelty and malevolence of priestcraft, Giordano Bruno, has become at length, au fait accompli.

In this truly cosmopolitan testimonial, in the erection and dedication of which nearly all the civilized nations of the world participated, the honor of representing the United States of America devolved upon the American Secular Union, whose members responded so nobly to the appeal. It is much to be regretted that a personal representation was impossible. However, I sent a communication to be read at the dedicatory services.

Some attempt has been made to carry out our demand relativ to the taxation of church property in the legislatures of Michigan and Illinois. It should be one of our chief aims to see that such bills are introduced, read, and discussed in the legislatures of every state in the Union. The American Secular Union should not be satisfied with simply acting upon the defensiv in the hand-to-hand combat in which it is engaged with its ecclesiastical antagonists. It must become aggressiv and carry the war into Africa, or Rome, as the case may be, and since the Blair bill is now the rallying cry of the orthodox party, let Secularists make theirs, church property taxation. Long before the new states considered the question of adopting constitutions, your secretary forwarded almost all the available leaflets and pamphlets to be scattered by our friends in Dakota, Montana, and Washington, and doubtless this seed was sown in good soil, as quite a demonstration was made in behalf of Secular principles in each of those conventions. It was my intention and desire to hav personally appeared before these several constitutional conventions, and although there were no funds for that purpose, I should hav gone had I been in a condition of health capable of accomplishing any good. It is a matter of congratulation that the constitutions of those new states breathe so broad and liberal a spirit, in spite of the most strenuous efforts of the orthodox to engraft in them provisions fundamentally at variance with secular justice. Though the church party evidently left no stone unturned in its fanatical attempts to identify the church with the state, it has not had everything its own way. One of the members of the convention of the state of Washington, a Mr. Godman, notwithstanding the fact that deity and humanity had been so in dissolvably linked in his own peculiar cognomen, objected nevertheless in unmeasured terms to anything that would even appear to favor the union of church and state. Therefore, he is entirely opposed to the exemption of church property from taxation. It is quite evident that Mr. Godman is a wise man, and it is much to be regretted that his fellow-legislators were not all equally wise. They will probably be compelled to earn their wisdom, paying dearly for it in the hard coin of experience. It is possible that the Washington state legislature may yet indorse the amendment offered by Mr. Godman regarding the taxation of church property. In any case, Secularism cannot complain that its interests hav suffered severely in this new state, for in spite of the fact that the constitution recognizes "a supreme ruler of the universe," the provisions in the matter of affirmation in lieu of the judicial oath in all cases where the latter has previously been insisted upon; the prohibition of public appropriations in support of religious institutions, and the explicit declaration that no religious qualifications shall be demanded of any candidate for official positions—all these show that the new state of Washington recognizes the importance of keeping the "flag above the cross."

South Dakota has also declared herself grandly for religious liberty and the right of free speech. Let us venture to indulge a hope that no scheming politicians of the ecclesiastical stripe will hav power to defeat any one of its liberal provisions and that every attempt shall signally fail, and that the example set by Washington and South Dakota will be cheerfully followed by the other sister states.

One of the most gratifying victories yet acnieved by Secularism in the United States is that embodied in the recent decision of Judge Dixon, of New Jersey, concerning the right of a witness to testify even though he does not accept the theory of punishment after death for the crime of perjury. It is substantially a victory even though the matter is to be referred to the Supreme Court of the United States for final adjudication, because, but a few years ago, such a judicial decision could not hav been obtained in any court in the land.

A word in reference to the prize Moral Manual. It is a matter for rejoicing that the funds are now in hand which warrant the undertaking of this most important task. It is more gratifying still to find that the suggestions of our honored executiv, upon this point, hav met with so prompt and cheerful response on the part of members of our Union. They evidently appreciate an ethical manual for the public schools, the aim of which should be to quicken the moral sense of a child and to teach him how to apply to moral problems the rational process employed in the solution of those of a purely mental or scientific character. The advantages of a work of this kind are obvious. The time has been when Liberals were known only as destructiv iconoclasts. They are now beginning to realize the fact that their work is twofold—constructiv as well as destructiv. While there is doubtless need for much destructiv work, the constructiv features should no longer be delayed. Constructiv Liberalism necessarily presupposes clear and definit ethics, but this is not intended to be the formulation of a set of moral dogmas, but simply the recognition of "duty" to self and others, and also the importance of harmonizing or properly adjusting conflicting claims with each other. The selection of those manuscripts will be awaited with much anxiety by all Liberal thinkers, and it is hoped that they may be readily apprehended by the children of even less than ordinary capacity, and giv general satisfaction.

Another matter which should engage the attention of this Congress is the arrest and indictment of Dr. Reed, of Grand Rapids, Mich., by and through the efforts of Postmaster Wanamaker, who, it appears, proposes to use the machinery of the government for the purposes of religious persecution. The American Secular Union should look well into this matter.

To our able chairman of the executiv board—that tireless champion of freedom, Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.—the Union, as well as every Freethinker, owes hearty thanks for his prompt selection of so brilliant a representativ as J. B. Wolff* to defend the Secular cause against Jesuitical adversaries at the national capital.

The masterly argument of Brother Wolff, the wealth of historical data he displayed, the logic, and knowledge of the Constitution and law, he showed before the Senate committee on the Blair bills, who had been listening for days to ecclesiastical intriguers, made a profound impression, and scored a splendid point for the American Secular Union.

* Mr. Wolff, the delegates were pained to hear from Dr. Foote, had since been removed from the ranks of Freethought by death.

Your secretary was invited to speak on the Blair bills at five mass meetings arranged by the German Freethinkers in and around Chicago, and also was sent for to speak for the Frei Gemeinde, of St. Louis, on the same subject. Wherever this infamous measure is ventilated a victory for Secularism is gained. This theme should not be allowed to rest as long as the slightest possibility of the passage of the bill remains.

As your secretary I hav had some correspondence with the secretary of the interior department relativ to the advisability of including in the next census questions relativ to the religious opinions of the people, and the comparativ value of exempt property.

I wrote various prominent individuals of influence to urge this on the secretary. That your secretary's efforts were not wasted is evident from the circular sent out by Robert P. Porter, superintendent of the eleventh census, asking voluntary coöperation in this work from the heads of ecclesiastical organizations and religious editors (among whom he somewhat erroneously included the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, from whom I obtain my information). The regular enumerators are, says Mr. Porter, fully burdened, and the appropriation available will not allow the appointment of special enumerators. The work must therefore be done by volunteers; and Dr. H. K. Carroll, of the Independent, of New York, has been appointed chief collector of such information. Of the plan of the work Mr. Porter says: "The inquiry will be broad enough in scope to embrace every religious body, of whatever name or creed, however few or many its churches and members, and it will be conducted with the utmost fairness and impartiality. The information sought will be arranged under five heads: (1) Organizations or societies; (2) Church edifices; (3) Seating capacity; (4) Value of church property; (5) Communicants. This is as much, in my judgment, as it will be wise to undertake in this direction for the eleventh census." It is to be hoped that Dr. Carroll will also take cognizance of the organized Freethought of the country.

There can be no question but that a decided advance has been made during the year, and, as ever, the vice-presidents and life members hav borne the brunt of the battle, and but for their generous aid the work could not hav been carried on, as will be seen by consulting the financial reports.

A towering oak—a stalwart figure amid this noble band of self-sacrificing soldiers—a brave and earnest lifelong champion of truth—Horace Seaver—is no more. May his life-work be the guiding-star for many others to emulate, and may this Congress express, in a befitting memorial, its appreciation of his services and sense of the loss that has fallen upon it.

"The world moves," but let it not be forgotten that such organizations as the American Secular Union are composed of world-movers, and if Freethinkers desire to accelerate its momentum, they must, as THE TRUTH SEEKER admonishes, do all in their power to assist in the dissemination of Secular literature.

Shall we whose lamps are lighted
From reason's altar high,
Shall we to men benighted
The light of life deny?

Perish the thought! May the American Secular Union push forward more diligently to the task before it, inspired with the proud consciousness that, as Secularists, they are the torchbearers of humanity, whose mission it is to illume the world's deepest recesses and flood with light the pathways which even now re-echo the yet distant footfalls of the coming race.

To our president, to Dr. Foote and Treasurer Wettstein, for their good will and truly Liberal spirit I owe my heartfelt thanks; but to none more than my earnest friend, E. M. Macdonald, for the space he has so generously devoted to the American Secular Union in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

To one and all my numerous friends, with a heart full of gratitude for their many evidences of esteem, I bid a fond farewell, and rest assured that though I may be denied the privilege of activ participation in the American Secular Union's deliberations, my passiv support will most probably be welcome.

To one and all, good-bye. E. A. STEVENS,
Ex-Secretary American Secular Union.

Action on the report was, on motion, postponed to Saturday, but this decision was afterward reversed, and the report accepted.

Pending the report of the Committee on Credentials Mr. John Kirschner assumed the floor. He wanted to say that in his opinion the Liberals theorized too much and worked too little. While Liberalism is spreading very fast, it lacks practical effort to giv it effect. The government is drifting into the hands of the church because of the latter's strong organization, and as a result all legislation is colored by religion. The Christians hav stolen a march upon us and stolen all the plums. Liberals must think less and work more. The question is how we can get a strong organization, without which we cannot prevent the domination of religion in our schools, nor enforce equitable taxation of property. Men of action, said Mr. Kirschner, are scarce. We must hav system, method. The essential thing for Liberalism is to ally itself with the workingmen's cause and propaganda.

Mr. Kirschner was cut off in the middle of a sentence on the importance of this last move by the return of the Committee on Credentials. The roll, as then read and afterward amended, was as follows:

LIST OF DELEGATES.

J. B. Beane,	Philadelphia.	Lucy N. Colman,	Syracuse, N. Y.
J. B. Elliot,	"	Dr. G. F. A. de Lespinasse,	Ia.
E. R. Carl (Mrs.),	"	Leonard Geiger,	Hudson, N. Y.
Geo. Longford,	"	Margaret Geiger,	Hudson, N. Y.
J. H. Foster,	"	S. D. Moore,	Adrian, Mich.
Jacob Duerr,	"	D. H. Smith,	Alliance, O.
Julius Fraelich,	"	John Downes,	Pittsburgh, Pa.
Jas. Eidelman,	"	Harry Hoover,	" "
John Kirschner,	"	John R. Charlesworth,	Newark, N. J.
Jas. Engle,	"	A. L. Rawson,	New York.
E. M. Macdonald,	New York.
Mrs. A. C. Macdonald,	"
Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	"
E. W. Chamberlain,	"
T. B. Wakeman,	"
Thos. Monahan,	"

The treasurer's report was then read in summary,

(Continued on page 696.)

Editorial.

The Bible in Common Schools.--Concluded.

The account of the setting of the stars in the firmament; of the short job of making the countless millions of suns, stars, systems, and constellations, as described in the five short words, "He made the stars also," shows how inadequate was the conception of the writer of the number, magnitude, and distance of the heavenly orbs. And it is easy to see how unlikely it was, if it required five days to manufacture this small globe, nearly eight thousand miles in diameter, that the sun, a million times larger than the earth, larger than the entire orbit of the moon; the planets of our own system, in the aggregate hundreds of thousands of times larger than our globe; with the thousands of other suns and systems, many of which are much more immense than our system, could all be turned out in a single day. If children are compelled to read such details of the origin of the systems and constellations, they cannot fail to see the absurdity of it.

They can see, too, how imperfect was the conception of the writers of the Bible when they talked about the "corners," "ends," "pillars," and "foundations" of the earth, and how utterly ignorant they were of the fact that the earth is a round ball that unceasingly whirls in the blue vault of space, turning on its axis daily toward the sun, and making a journey every three hundred and sixty-five days round that brilliant luminary. The Bible placed "ends" and "corners" to the earth, but science unceremoniously knocked them off. Copernicus two hundred and fifty years ago proved the utter fallacy of the Bible theory, and effectually knocked theology into a cocked hat. When it is duly realized how little Bible writers knew of the simple laws of nature, it must be seen how totally unfit is the Bible as a factor in the education of the young.

How crude and fallacious was the conception of the writer of the book of Genesis in reference to the phenomenon of rain! He thought it was produced by the windows of heaven (probably in the floor of heaven or the firmament) being opened and the waters falling through the same to the earth. The theory made no provision for the return of the water into heaven. Yes, how ignorant that writer was of the simple process of rain falling to the earth and rising again in the form of vapor, the operation to be repeated thousands upon thousands of times. Is it desirable that the rising generation should continue to be taught these incorrect and absurd theories? Shall they continue to read and believe the incredible story about the flood of waters pouring through the windows of heaven until all the hills and mountains were covered, the tallest of which reached the altitude of five miles? Shall they continue to read of and believe the possibility of such a quantity of water coming from the atmosphere and of its finding a place to go to after the rain was over and the waters were assuaged? Shall they ever continue to be taught that Noah was able to gather some millions of beasts, birds, reptils, insects, and worms from all parts of the globe in a single vessel and in that air-tight ark, in an atmosphere that must hav been foul enough to stifle a bat in fifteen minutes, to keep all that wide range of animal life for the space of thirteen months, and without such food as they required?

Has not man in later times produced far better mental pabulum for miniature men and women? Would it not be far better to giv them real truths, devoid of monstrosities, fables, and errors? Shall they ever continue to be told that two men, Moses and Aaron, were able to change rods into serpents, to produce frogs enough to fill an extensiv country, to change dust into lice, to produce locusts in infinitude, to convert all the water in Egypt, including the river Nile, into blood, to kill the horses and cattle of the country two and three times over; that the waters of a sea divided in the center and walled up on either side, like mason-work, leaving a dry roadway over which two million of people were able to pass dryshod, to say nothing of horses and herds of cattle and sheep? Are these the highest truths that our children can acquire—that a nation of people were kept forty years in the performance of a journey through a wilderness that could easily hav been made in forty days? That during this forty years they were daily fed by showers of manna sent from heaven, by fast time, for their special benefit? That during that long, tedious journey neither their shoes nor their clothing wore out? Shall they still continue to read how General Joshua, unable in a given time to slay as many of his fellow-beings as he desired, and being anxious to continue the slaughter twelve or fifteen hours longer, by a mere freak of his will, or with a little aid from the one on high, was able to stop both the sun and the moon in their courses and to make one day nearly as long as two ordinary days? Shall they continue to believe that the kind father of all mankind was so anxious that a few hundred more of his children should be slaughtered that he performed that astounding feat, never performed before and never since? Was ever so great a work performed for so base a purpose? When, to get people over the difficulty of believing this marvelous statement, which even children find so hard to believe, they are told all things "are possible with God"—which is the convenient solution for all the big stories which the Bible contains—what must they think when they read in Judges xix, these words: "But he [God] could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley because they had chariots of iron?" This confession decidedly places a limit upon almighty power, and it would secure that he found his match once, if never before nor since. Is the marvelous story of Samson and his astonishing feats of strength the best kind of matter for our children to study? Can we wonder at all if they do not believe the big stories reported of the Jewish Hercules—of his slaying a lion with his naked hands; of his dextrous feat of catching three hundred foxes, tying their tails together with a firebrand attached to the tails of every pair of foxes? Those who hav ever joined in a regular old-fashioned fox-chase, where a score of men, and as many swift horses, with a whole pack of dogs yelping as they go, spend the better part of a day in riding pellmell over twenty farms, jumping fences and hedges, leaping ditches and streams, coursing over meadows and pastures, through thicket and woodland, and feeling that it is glory enough after keeping up this race for hours, exerting every muscle of human flesh, horse flesh, and dog flesh, to be "in at the death" of one poor, exhausted fox, can realize how far the mighty Samson transcended all this kind of business. He found no trouble in catching three hundred of these shy, cunning, swift-footed animals, and tying their tails together in pairs with a firebrand attached to each pair. He then let them go through the Philistines' fields of standing corn, setting it all on fire, of course, whether green or dry. What a chase poor Samson must hav had in running down and catching those three hundred foxes! And a little curiosity might be excited on the part of the children as to how he disposed of the first two hundred and fifty foxes while he was running down the last fifty. Perhaps they were very accommodating foxes, that stood still while being caught, and were willing to stand still after they were caught. It might occur to the young minds that the foxes in that Philistine country must hav been very different from the foxes that hav existed in Europe and America. It might strike them that the land of the Philistines was a pretty good place in which to engage in the fox culture, and in fox-hunting, and that Samson was as fleet as he was strong, to be able to catch such numbers in so short a time. Perhaps it was his long hair that carried him triumphantly through the fox-chase, as it did on another occasion in slaying one thousand men with the jawbone of an ass; in breaking the strongest ropes and withes; in carrying off those heavy gates, and finally in pulling down the vast temple upon his own head and the heads of thousands of the poor Philistines. There was a power in that Samsonian hair that was never possessed by hair before nor since. And how curious, too, that strength superior to any muscular strength that was ever heard of elsewhere should be produced by the hair of the head! How unlike the experience of all other human beings! But the gay Delilah was too much for the foxy Samson at last; she bewitched him with her charms and then while he was taking a siesta, his head reclining in her lap, she sheared off his curly locks; whereupon he at once became weak like other men, when his foes had no difficulty in capturing him, in gouging out his eyes, and in confining him in prison.

Has it ever occurred to you, my friends, that even school-children might doubt the truthfulness of these remarkable stories about Samson and his wonderful exploits? Or did you expect they would believe them always with the same ease and facility with which their parents and Christians generally are able to receive everything of that nature?

Young people are now becoming very inquisitiv, and are searching around for proofs more industriously than was formerly the case. It seems to be the spirit of the age. The tendency toward demanding demonstration and proof seems to be infectious, and doubt is felt on the part of many who were once perfectly credulous and unquestioning believers.

Do you expect children will always believe that the man Elijah was able to prevent rain and dew from falling upon the earth for more than three years, at the expiration of which term he was able to produce a most profuse and refreshing rain? That he was able to create oil and meal from the surrounding atmosphere; that he was able to restore life to a dead carcass; that he could call down fire from heaven and burn up the bodies of animals, the stones of an altar, twelve barrels of water. and more than a hundred men, and finally, when he got tired of this life on the earth, that a heavenly chariot and horses were sent around for him, in which he took an aerial ride bodily up into the upper ether, where scientists tell us there is not oxygen enough to sustain life for a moment, and where the intense cold is 500° below zero, and where it would be utterly impossible for a man to liv a minute? Will not the children sometimes inquire where the manufactory is located in which that chariot was got up, and where the horses were raised? Are you certain that children will always be credulous enough to believe these stories? Like some grown people, will they not take the liberty to question the validity of some of these improbable statements? When our children read about the forty-two other children that were torn to pieces on the highway by two she bears at the instance of the good prophet Elisha because they alluded to his loss of hair and failed to recommend to him some modern wonderful hair restorers, will they hav full confidence in the kindness of the being who sent around those bears to tear those helpless children? Will they easily believe that that man Elisha could restore life to the dead, that he could manufacture oil from air, that he could part the waters of the rapid Jordan with a mantle, that he could make iron rise and swim upon the surface of the river, and that he could perform other similar remarkable feats, and that even the touch of his bones after his death was sufficient to reanimate the bodies of men who had long been dead and in their graves? Will they never doubt these tales? And if they can always continue to believe them, can they not as easily believe the tales of Baron Munchausen and of the Arabian Nights? Will the children readily believe the fish story connected wth another prophet, Mr. Jonah, who was induced to embark on a vessel at Joppa, and from fatigue or long watching went into a sound sleep in the side of the ship, though a fearful storm was raging without, whereupon the sailors came to the conclusion that a gale could not take place at sea unless some one on board the ship had been guilty of some offense, and that the way to determin the offender consisted in the accurate plan of drawing lots or throwing dice? Will children, young or old, always continue to believe with facility that upon Jonah's being thrown into the sea the tempest was immediately assuaged, and that a big fish which God "had prepared" for the purpose took the traveler in out of the wet and housed him for the term of three days? Will it always be easy for them to believe that a man like Jonah could liv three days in the confines of a fish's stomach in the water of the ocean, where it would be an utter impossibility to get a breath of air, or to procure anything to eat? If the fish was "prepared" for the purpose, might not the question arise in their minds whether Jonah would not also need to be "prepared" to be able to withstand for three long days and nights the strong digestiv powers, the gastric juices, of that fish's stomach? Will it be unnatural if children suspect that the whole story is decidedly fishy? Will the statement about the three young men being thrown into a superheated furnace, made seven times hotter than ever before, seem any more credible to them, and can they easily understand that the human organization by any process can be made so successfully to withstand the destructiv effects of such intense heat that not a thread of their garments was scorched, and that they had not even "the smell of fire upon them?" If they can easily believe stories of this character, need their credulity be balked at anything? It is probably unnecessary to allude to the hundreds of other improbable and impossible stories and statements which the Bible givs upon various subjects. They are scattered all through the book. They require a great amount of credul ty to accept them without a question. These statements hav long been accepted with hardly a doubt, but in this day of skepticism, and unbelief in the mysterious and unnatural, as I said, the reason requires to be convinced, and miracles and impossibilities are not passing as current as in the times gone by. People are becoming less confiding and gullible, and children are partaking of the same feeling, and books which contain such big stories and such marvelous incidents hav ceased to be fit for the purposes of educational culture.

The vulgarity and obscenity of the Bible has been mentioned, and all who are familiar with its contents cannot entertain a doubt of the truthfulness of the charge. If any good soul has a beginning doubt upon this point, he has only to peruse the story of the faithful Abraham and his treatment toward his handmaiden or concubine Hagar, who bore him a son, and how he turned her and her child out into the wilderness to perish with hunger and thirst; about the incest committed by his cousin Lot while in a state of intoxication, with his two daughters; about the worse than beastly crimes of the inhabitants of Sodom; about the adultery of Zimri and Cozbi, of Dinah and Shechem, of Reuben and his father's concubine Bilhab, of Judah and Tamar, of Onan, of Joseph and Mrs. Potiphar, of the Levite and his concubine, of Ruth and Boaz, of David and Bathsheba, of Amnon and Tamar, of Absalom and his father's concubine on the housetop in the eyes of all the people of the city, of Solomon the wise man and his seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines—Solomon, to whose authorship is attributed a very amorous composition called the Song of Solomon, which for broad, indelicate allusions has been surpassed by very few compositions that hav ever been written.

I will not detain you by further allusions to other vulgarities and indecencies of the Bible, for it is an infliction that I do not care to make. I hav pointed out but a few of the large number that are to be found there. I deem them quite sufficient to prove to you, if proof were necessary, that the Jewish Bible is unfit to hav a place in our common schools as a text-book or as a reading-book. The priesthood may find it to their interest to continue to hold up the volume before the eyes of the people and declare it to be the inspired word of God, and they may see that their influence over the masses is perpetuated by their enjoining upon them the necessity of their revering the antique volume, and by making them believe that every word the book contains, though it is confessedly full of errors and mistranslations, must be accepted as the true and infallible voice from heaven.

This class of men well understand the advantages to be gained to their system by early enlisting the sympathies of the young in favor of their objects and aims. With this view Sunday-schools were organized, and for this reason are sectarians so intent upon retaining the Bible in our common schools, that it may be kept constantly before the rising portion of our population. It may not be strange, as the Christian system of theology is founded upon the Bible, and as priestcraft is sustained by it, that sectarians should be earnest in continuing its rule and that young children should be required to turn to it daily as the source of truth and knowledge. But when its defects are made apparent and its total unfitness as a school-book is realized, a large portion of the American people must be opposed to the children of those who do not believe in the divinity of the Bible and its super-excellence being compelled to use it daily in our common schools and to their being taxed to pay others for using it. I would not curtail the right of any parents to read the book to their children and to enjoin it upon them to read it at home, but in the name of justice I again protest against its being forcibly kept in our public schools where everybody's children are compelled to use it whether they choose to or not. This question should not be suffered to rest until justice in the matter is accorded to the entire American people, unbelievers as well as believers. Much stress is aimed to be laid upon the Bible on the ground of its superior morality, but like its divinity, its morality will hardly bear the test of close scrutiny. It is held up as the source of virtue, civilization, liberty, and intelligence. It is pointed out to us as the grand palladium of all that we hold near and dear, but this claim, like the others that are made in its favor, does not possess truth. If the countries where the Bible circulates freely enjoy a higher degree of civilization than is found in other lands, the Bible is by no means the cause of such superiority. There are other causes to be considered aside from the prevalence of the custom of reading the Jewish scriptures. The Abyssinians are a Christian nation, and they hav had the Jewish Bible in their possession twice as long as hav England and America, and yet they remain in barbarism. How much did the Bible accomplish for the inhabitants of Syria and Asia Minor? It was easily superseded by the Koran. Mohammedanism has proved itself more potent in subduing the savages of Africa and Asia to comparativ civilization than Christianity has ever been, though it repeatedly made the trial. The Greeks and Romans were as far in advance of surrounding nations as we are to-day, or as we claim to be. Was it the Jewish Bible that elevated them and inspired them with the talent that made their poets, painters, sculptors, and orators, many of whom the world has never since equaled? The Chinese and Hindoos hav for thousands of years been far advanced in some phases of civilization, and they certainly did not owe it to the influence of the Bible. They were farther in advance of some of the pagan tribes than we are in advance of the Turks to-day.

If we could regard the Bible, only, as the means of our advancement in civilization, we should doubtless hav the fairness to accord it all due credit, but there hav been numerous instrumentalities that hav contributed their share to place us where we are. The civilized world owes far less to the influence of the Bible than it does to what it has received from pagan nations. From India, from Egypt, from ancient Greece and Rome, has the civilized world obtained much of its literature, its philosophy, its laws, and its glory. When the literature and religion of Greece and Rome were superseded by the Bible and its religion, there certainly was made no advance in culture and civilization. Under Bible and Christian rule a night of mental darkness spread over those countries, and from them extended over a large part of the world, and it required many centuries of skepticism for them to emerge from the long, dark night of gloom thus engendered. The art of printing shed the first ray of light across this vast pall of darkness and night, and much has it done to usher in the bright, cheerful day of intelligence and learning. The growth of science has been largely due to the art of printing, coupled with the lessening of the influence of superstition. It is to science we are to look for further advances in the direction to which the world has been tending. From this we hav much to expect, but we cannot expect much aid from the Bible. Truthfully, as Professor Denton said, "When a people are much lower than the Bible plane, it may tend to elevate them but when they are above it, its influence is degrading."

Our common school system is the foundation of our literature, our mental culture, and our civilization. We should giv it all the aid possible in the facilities that promote mental liberty and general intelligence. Every science and every department of study to elevate the mind should be placed within it. But mythology, theology, sectarianism, mysticism, and superstition should ever be guarded against and firmly repelled. The Bible is largely made up of these qualities, and I again repeat, It should not hav a place in the schools of the American people.

'Tis coming up the steep of time,
And this old world is growing brighter!
We may not see its dawn sublime,
Yet high hopes make the heart throb lighter.
We may be sleeping in the ground,
When it awakes the world in wonder;
But we hav felt it gathering round,
And heard its voice of living thunder.
'Tis coming! yes, 'tis coming!

'Tis coming now, the glorious time,
Foretold by seers, and sung in story;
For which, when thinking was a crime,
Souls leaped to heaven from scaffolds gory!
They pass'd, nor see the work they wrought,
Now the crowned hopes of centuries blossom!
But the live lightning of their thought
And daring deeds, doth pulse earth's bosom.
'Tis coming! yes, 'tis coming!

Creeds, empires, systems, rot with age,
But the great people's ever youthful!
And it shall write the future's page,
To our humanity more truthful!
The gnarliest heart hath tender chords,
To waken at the name of "brother;"
And time comes when brain-scorpion words
We shall not speak to sting each other.
'Tis coming! yes, 'tis coming!

Out of the light, ye priests, nor fling
Your dark, cold shadows on us longer!
Aside! thou world-wide curse, called king!
The people's step is quicker, stronger.
There's a divinity within
That makes men great, whene'er they will it.
God works with all who dare to win,
And the time cometh to reveal it.
'Tis coming! yes, 'tis coming!

Freedom! the tyrants kill thy braves,
Yet in our memories liv the sleepers;
And, though doomed millions feed the graves,
Dug by death's fierce, red-handed reapers,
The world shall not forever bow
To things which mock God's own endeavor;
'Tis nearer than they wot of now,
When flowers shall wreathe the sword forever.
'Tis coming! yes, 'tis coming!

Fraternity! love's other name!
Dear, heaven-connecting link of being!
Then shall we grasp thy golden dream,
As souls, full-statured, grow far-seeing.
Thou shalt unfold our better part,
And in our life-cup yield more honey;
Light up with joy the poor man's heart,
And love's own world with smiles more sunny.
'Tis coming! yes, 'tis coming!

Ay, it must come! The tyrant's throne
Is crumbling, with our hot tears rusted;
The sword earth's mighty hav leant on
Is cankered, with our heart's blood crusted.
Room! for the men of mind make way!
Ye robber rulers, pause no longer;
Ye cannot stay the opening day:
The world rolls on, the light grows stronger—
The people's advent's coming!

D. M. BENNETT.

Tertullian and Marcion.

If the four volumes of Tertullian are forgeries of the fifteenth century, then what we know of Marcion is next to nothing.

There was and is no such word in Latin as christus. The Greek word christos meant "anointed," and the Latin equivalent is unctus, which is the word that would hav been used in the second or third century, when Tertullian is supposed to hav lived. Christos, in Greek, was not a proper name for Jesus—only an epithet, which is imperfect without the definit article prefixed—ho christos, "the anointed," from the Hebrew ha mashiach. The omission of the definit article sometimes in the Greek gospels and frequently in the epistles is a manifest corruption.

Tertullian's works were discovered in the fifteenth century by Poggio Bracciolini, the forger of the Annals of Tacitus. The latter task was so difficult in a literary point of view that he wanted to abandon it after it was begun. But to forge the works of Tertullian was an easy task for such a scholar as Poggio.

"Tertullian against Marcion" is a volume of four hundred and seventy-eight pages in English. It is so full of false quotations and manifest misrepresentations of Marcion's alleged gospel that the question arises whether the author ever saw it in any shape whatever. Not less than four times does Tertullian charge Marcion with erasing from Luke a passage that exists only in Matthew. And repeatedly he makes similar false charges in regard to other erasures.

Marcion's gospel is nameless, but the inference from Tertullian is that it was a corruption of Luke. Attempts hav been made to reconstruct it by eliminations from the third gospel, with here and there a change of text; but the result is not satisfactory. See chapter on Marcion in "Supernatural Religion."

Tertullian not only falsifies quotations from the New Testament, but from the Old. He frequently interpolates important words which are not found either in the Hebrew or the Septuagint. For example:

> Come now, when you read in the words of David how that "the Lord reigneth from the tree," I want to know what you understand by it. Perhaps you think some wooden king of the Jews is meant—and not Christ (Christus who overcame death by his suffering on the cross, and thence reigned.

In regard to "the words of David" the translator makes this note:

> Ps. xcvi, 10, with a ligno added.

Tertullian attempts to tell us when Marcion came to Rome. Taking the fifteenth year of Tiberius as the time when, according to Marcion's gospel, "Christ Jesus vouchsafed to come down from heaven, as the spirit of saving health," he proceeds:

> I cared not to inquire, indeed, in what particular year of the elder Antoninus, he who had so gracious a purpose did rather, like a pestilential sirocco, exhale this health or salvation, which Marcion teaches from his Pontus. Of this teacher there is no doubt that he is a heretic of the Antonine period, implous under the pious. Now, from Tiberius to Antoninus Pius there are about one hundred and fifteen years and six and one-half months. Just such an interval do they place between Christ and Marcion.

The reign of Tiberius was from Aug. 19, A.D. 14, to March 7, A.D. 37. And the crucifixion is dated by Tertullian elsewhere March 25, A.D. 29—which by the way, is manifestly false, because that was one week after the full moon in March, A.D. 29; and furthermore, although the full moon, March 18, A.D. 29, was on Friday, the alleged day of the crucifixion, the next full moon, when the Passover was celebrated, was not on Friday.

But how does Tertullian figure out his dates with regard to the advent of Marcion at Rome? From the beginning of the reign of Tiberius to that of Antoninus Pius, July, A.D. 138, is one hundred and twenty-three years and eleven months. From Tertullian's date of the crucifixion, March 25, A.D. 29, to the reign of Antonine is one hundred and nine years and three months. From the end of the reign of Tiberius to the beginning of that of Antonine is one hundred and one years and three months. From the fifteenth year of Tiberius, A.D. 29, if we add one hundred and fifteen years and a half, it brings us to the year 144 or 145, which would seem to be the nearest approach to the intended result of Tertullian's calculation. But the date generally assigned for Marcion's arrival at Rome is 138–142. See "Supernatural Religion," chap. vii, "Marcion," where in a note the author says: "The accounts of the fathers are careless and conflicting."

The critics date the composition of Tertullian against Marcion A.D. 207 or 208; and the author tells us that it is a new work in lieu of an old one, hurriedly composed, intended to be superseded by a fuller treatis, and now lost by the fraud of a Christian who afterward became an apostate.

Our own judgment is that Tertullian of Carthage is a myth; and that if the rest of the evidence in regard to the alleged heresiarch of the second century is no more authentic than that given by pseudo Tertullian, it is quite likely that Marcion is a myth also.

ANTICHRIST.

THE narrow range of their sympathies [the clergy's], and the intellectual servitude they hav accepted, render them peculiarly unfitted for the office of educating the young, which they so persistently claim, and which, to the great misfortune of the world, they were long permitted to monopolize. . . . The almost complete omission from female education of those studies which most disciplin and strengthen the intellect, increases the difference, while at the same time it has been usually been a main object to imbue them with a passionate faith in traditional opinions, and to preserve them from all contact with opposing views. But contracted knowledge and imperfect sympathy are not the sole fruits of this education. It has always been the peculiarity of a certain kind of theological teaching, that it inverts all the normal principles of judgment and absolutely destroys intellectual diffidence. On other subjects we find, if not a respect for honest conviction, at least some sense of the amount of knowledge that is requisit to entitle men to express an opinion on grave controversies. A complete ignorance of the subject-matter of a dispute restrains the confidence of dogmatism; and an ignorant person who is aware that, by much reading and thinking in spheres of which he has himself no knowledge, his educated neighbor has modified or rejected opinions which that ignorant person had been taught, will, at least if he is a man of sense or modesty, abstain from compassionating the benighted condition of his more instructed friend. But on theological questions this has never been so.—Lecky.

(Continued from page 693.)

and referred to an auditing committee composed of Leonard Geiger, John Downes, and F. C. Mende. The summary is as follows:

REPORT OF OTTO WETTSTEIN, TREASURER AMERICAN SECULAR UNION, FROM OCT. 1, 1888, TO OCT. 20, 1889.

Dr.			Cr.
Receipts,	$1,408.39	Expenditures,	$1,357.58
		Bal. in treasury,	50.81
	1,408.39		1,408.39
Bal. brought forward,	50.81

BRUNO MONUMENT.

Receipts.	150.00	Remitted to com.,	150.00

The President also reported that there were in the possession of Charles Eckhardt, the previous treasurer, some forty dollars or so, which he had been unable to obtain. He himself had been Treasurer, Secretary, and President during September and October, and his account was submitted separately. When the present Treasurer gets the matter into understandable shape he will giv it to the public.

SATURDAY MORNING.

In the morning the delegates assembled in the hall habitually used by the Friendship Liberal League of Philadelphia. It is an exceedingly pretty and comfortable place, and no doubt its attractivness helps to swell the large audiences the League is favored with regularly every Sunday. After the reading of the minutes the amendments to the constitution proposed by Dr. Westbrook were taken up. The amendments were practically a substitution of a new for the old constitution, and great interest was aroused, though the new one, as published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of September 28th, was regarded favorably, as being less cumbersome than the old. The Chair read the new preamble. He had stricken out, he said, the clause in reference to the treaty with Tripoli (in 1796) as special pleading. Mrs. E. R. Carl arose. She had evidently determined to reply to Mr. Kirschner's speech of the preceding evening, and calmly proceeded to discuss that, ignoring the question under consideration. Mr. S. D. Moore, of Adrian, Mich., followed her. He objected to eliminating the clause. A. L. Rawson moved to retain the clause and amend it by adding "or any other religion." Dr. Foote showed the impracticability of this proposition, as it in effect amended the treaty with Tripoli, which was beyond the jurisdiction of the Union. A man from Vineland, afterward ascertained to be Mr. A. C. Cotton, editor during its existence of the Rostrum, told of the time when he and Dr. Joseph Treat, one of Victoria Woodhull's friends and enemies, now deceased, knew of the continuity of the soul. He desired the preamble to be so broad that he could be in touch with the universe. He had just paid a dollar for an annual membership in the Union, and he could talk though he could not vote. After he had used this privilege ten or fifteen minutes a motion to limit speeches to three minutes was carried. Jay Chaapel said religion meant to hold back, and he didn't want to do that. Mr. Wakeman then presented an amendment to the new amendment and the preamble was finally adopted as follows:

WHEREAS, The Constitution of the United States, in spirit and in letter, is framed in accordance with the principle of the total separation of church and state; and the Constitution and government of the United States, from beginning to end, in spirit and letter, were not formed on any religion but were framed in accordance with the principle of the total separation of church and state; and the treaty of Tripoli, signed by George Washington as a part of the supreme law of the land, declares emphatically that "the government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion," and,

WHEREAS, Notwithstanding these facts, the administration of the national government, and the administration and constitutions of the several state governments, maintain numerous practical connections of the state with the church, thereby violating the spirit of the United States Constitution; and,

WHEREAS, The welfare and peace of the republic, the equal religious rights and liberties of its citizens, require that all the political and educational institutions of the nation which are supported by taxation should be faithfully conformed to the spirit of the fundamental law; we hereby associate ourselvs together and adopt the following constitution.

The Chair proceeded to read the amendments, and under the three-minute rule and Mr. Wakeman's leadership the work proceeded more rapidly. Article I retains the name, and Articles II and III were adopted in this shape:

ARTICLE II. The general object of the association shall be to secure the total separation of church and state, to the end that equal rights in religion, genuin morality in politics, and freedom, virtue, and brotherhood be established, protected, and perpetuated.

ARTICLE III. As means for the accomplishment of this purpose the specific work of this society shall be to advocate:

(1) The equitable taxation of church property in common with other property.

(2) The total discontinuance of religious instruction and worship in the public schools, and especially the reading of any Bible.

(3) The repeal of all laws enforcing the observance of Sunday as a religious institution, rather than an economic one, justified by physiological and other secular reasons.

(4) The cessation of all appropriations of the public funds for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character.

(5) The abolition of ecclesiastical chaplaincies paid out of the public treasury.

(6) The discontinuance of the practice of the appointment by the president of the United States and the governors of the several states, and other civil public officers, of religious festivals and fasts.

(7) The substitution of a solemn affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury in the courts and in all other departments of the government, in place of the common forms of a judicial oath.

(8) The defense through the courts of any American citizen whose equal religious and political rights are denied, or who is oppressed on account of any opinions he may hav held or expressed on the subject of religion.

(9) The promulgation by all peaceable and orderly means of the great principles of religious liberty and equal rights, devotion to truth for its own sake, and universal brotherhood on the ground of a common humanity; to secure the state from the encroachments of the church, and to foster the development of intelligence and morality, which constitute the all-sufficient basis of Secular government.

Article IV, herewith subjoined as finally amended, elicited a good deal of discussion. Mr. Wakeman objected to limiting the scope of the organization. Dr. Westbrook wanted the scope limited so as to broaden the work, and get aid from other organizations which would not work with the Union under a constitution which embraced all sorts of reforms. Mr. Cotton interjected the remark that the Nine Demands were Articles of Faith. Dr. Foote had sympathies with both Mr. Wakeman and Dr. Westbrook. But the time had not come for Mr. Wakeman's ideas to become practical. He, like Dr. Westbrook, wanted the aid of other organizations, and thought that in view of the failure in the past to keep local Unions alive and activ the new article should be adopted. Mr. Wakeman then withdrew his objections, Mrs. Colman spoke on Dr. Westbrook's side, and the article stands thus:

ARTICLE IV. The American Secular Union is strictly unsectarian and non-partisan in both religion and politics, but will use any and all honorable means to secure its objects as above stated. It is not either publicly or privately committed to the advancement of any system of religious belief or disbelief, but honestly welcomes all persons of whatever faith or party to its membership on the basis of "no union of church and state." The word secular is here used in the broadest sense, as applied to the state, and not to any system of religion or philosophy.

Article V, after a discussion, was adopted as follows:

ARTICLE V. Any person who shall pay $1 into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the American Secular Union, and shall be entitled to a vote in all meetings of the society, providing they shall hav been members for three months immediately preceding, and if the Congress shall so permit by a two-thirds vote. Any person who shall pay $25 or more into the treasury at once shall be entitled to a similar certificate, and shall hav a vote without regard to the date of membership. All life members of the National Liberal League, formed in 1876, shall be life members of the American Secular Union.

Article VI was adopted without discussion or amendment, and read thus:

ARTICLE VI. The annual Congress of the American Secular Union shall be held at such time and place and with such sessions as the Board of Directors may announce, and public notice of the Congress shall be given at least one month previous. Other conventions of the Union may be held at such place and time as the Board of Directors shall appoint.

Article VII was verbally amended, and the others adopted as proposed by Dr. Westbrook. They are:

ARTICLE VII. The officers of the American Secular Union shall be a President, four Vice-presidents,* a Corresponding Secretary, and a Treasurer, who together shall constitute a Board of Directors and shall hold their office one year or until others are elected. Four of these seven officers, on due notice to the whole, shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The President, Corresponding Secretary, and Treasurer shall constitute an Executiv Committee, to act under the authority of the Board. One or more Field Secretaries, Lecturers, or Organizers may be appointed by the Directors to promote the general objects of the Union. Men and women shall be equally eligible to these offices.

ARTICLE VIII. The President shall preside at the public meetings of the association and at the meetings of the Board of Directors and the Executiv Committee, and shall hav the general direction and supervision of all business, under authority of the Board.

ARTICLE IX. The Corresponding Secretary's duty shall be to keep the records and complete lists of life and annual members, and also full minutes of the meetings of the Board of Directors and of the Executiv Committee, prepare and transmit to the newspapers of the country items of interest relating to the work of state secularization, keep a full list of auxiliary societies, and conduct such correspondence, under direction of the President, as usually pertains to such office, and shall make a condensed annual report to the society of the business of the year. His or her salary and the location of the office shall be settled by the Board of Directors.

ARTICLE X. The Treasurer shall receive and hold all funds of the Union subject to orders duly drawn by the Secretary and countersigned by the President. He shall report the state of the finances of the Union at every Annual Congress, and oftener if required by the Board of Directors or Executiv Committee; and upon the election of a successor he shall deliver to him all the property of the Union that he may hold.

ARTICLE XI. The Board of Directors herein provided shall be intrusted with the direction and management of the affairs of the society, and shall make a condensed report of their doings to the Annual Congress. All appropriations from the treasury outside of fixed charges and ordinary expenses shall be by vote of the Board of Directors.

ARTICLE XII. The Executiv Committee shall hav authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by twenty or more persons and accompanied by $10 (or ten persons accompanied by $5), to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Union; and the committee in their discretion in special cases may issue a charter on application signed by ten or more names unaccompanied by the money in advance, but promised in the future. Auxiliary societies should adopt constitutions substantially similar to this constitution, but adapted to local wants. Local auxiliaries shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient coöperation of the freest kind with the American Secular Union and with other local Unions. Neither shall the national society be responsible for the acts or utterances of local auxiliaries.

ARTICLE XIII. Every local auxiliary society organized in accordance with the provisions of this constitution shall be entit ed to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress, who shall hav the right to speak and vote.

ARTICLE XIV. Amendments to this constitution may be made at any Annual Congress of the American Secular Union by a three-fourths vote of the qualified members present. But no amendment shall be made unless the proposed alteration shall hav been published one month previous to the meeting.

When the new constitution had been happily disposed of, Dr. Foote moved that the Chair appoint a Committee on Nominations. The motion was opposed by several, and Mr. Wakeman moved that the Congress resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on Nominations. The motion was carried, and after various schemes for making the choice of the delegates known had been suggested and rejected, John Downes moved that the Congress adjourn for lunch, and in that interval write the names of their candidates on slips of paper and hand them to the Secretary on the reassembling of the Congress. Carried, and the Congress adjourned.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

This was the interesting session of the Congress. As soon as they reached Philadelphia the delegates begun asking each other the question, Who are you going to make Secretary? The Pittsburgh Union and the Friendship League delegates invariably replied, Harry Hoover. The other delegates didn't know. They were perfectly willing to elect anybody who could press the objects of the Union, and who would work harmoniously with President Westbrook on the new plan, for his reëlection was early settled, provided the consent of himself and wife could be obtained; for be it known that Dr. Westbrook is a devoted husband, and his wife was solicitous that he should not take upon himself too much work. Mr. Hoover had high hopes, as he afterward confessed. He desired the place, and desired it badly. But the majority of the delegates and life members present didn't desire that he should hav it, and they cast about for an eligible party. One of them expressed the situation thus: Those that want it we don't want; those we want, don't want it. Mrs. Westbrook solved the problem by saying that if the Union fancied her husband for its President, the Union must provide a Secretary who would do the clerical work and the rushing around. Dr. Westbrook had the prize Manual on his hands; he must be working counsel in the suit against the Girard College trustees when it was begun, and he was engaged in writing a Radical book. That was enough for him to do. She suggested for Secretary Miss Ida C. Craddock, a young lady of beauty and understanding, a Freethinker of Freethinkers, a theologian and dialectician of skill, a woman suffragist, and one altogether lovely.

The first officer to be elected was the President. The delegates handed in slips mentioning their choice for all the offices, and nominated for the presidency R. B. Westbrook, T. B. Wakeman, and Leonard Geiger. Mr. Wakeman wouldn't run. Neither would Mr. Geiger. The vote when taken stood:

R. B. Westbrook	24
T. B. Wakeman	1

The election was made unanimous. Then, out of its regular order—perhaps owing to the desire of the delegates to see what the result would be—the nominations for Secretary were read. They were:

Miss Ida Craddock.	John R. Charlesworth.
Harry Hoover.	E. W. Chamberlain.

Mr. Chamberlain withdrew. Mr. Charlesworth was going to vote for Miss Craddock. Mr. Hoover's friends were very much surprised at the introduction of Miss Craddock's name. Mrs. Colman, ever on the alert to push women ahead, took the floor to second her nomination. Dr. Westbrook followed. He made the views of his estimable wife his own, and would, he said, hav to decline the honor tendered himself unless a Secretary was chosen who would liv in Philadelphia and do the work. He could never be a figurehead to an organization, and if he accepted the presidency he should accept its responsibilities. He thought he could serve the Union better with Miss Craddock as Secretary than with any other. He would rather not be President. He had no object in taking it except to further the cause of state Secularization. He was in his seventieth year, and had retired from business on an income considerably exceeding his needs, and could well afford to take life easy, though he expected to work for Freethought for at least another ten years. As for Miss Craddock, she is a Greek and Latin scholar, and a capital speaker. She is the best theologian he knew. She would serve the Union for $1,000 and fare from San Francisco, and he would guarantee that she would do better than any two men he knew of at $3,000. If she didn't, he would foot the bill.

* At the next session this article was amended to include among the officers as many Honorary Vice-presidents as the Annual Congresses might elect, or delegate the Board of Directors to appoint. —ED. T. S.

Dr. Westbrook's speech settled the matter, and when the vote was announced it stood thus:

Ida C. Craddock	17
Harry Hoover	9

A little more information concerning Miss Craddock will probably be appreciated by the public. She is a nativ of Philadelphia, about thirty years old, and may be called an educated woman in the best sense of the word. She made the fight for opening the University of Pennsylvania to women single-handed and alone. She passed her examination in Greek, Latin, and was recommended by the faculty for admission, but was rejected by the trustees. She was teacher of stenography and typewriting in Girard College for a number of years, and held the position of curator in the Wagner Free Institute of Science, until she voluntarily resigned that position two years ago to visit California, Oregon, and Alaska. She is an expert correspondent in short-hand and typewriting, and has special qualifications as an organizer and business manager. She has a knowledge of German and French, and can correspond in those languages, and is a "Liberal of Liberals," though prudent and politic. She can work her way among people of all classes. She will accept the office of Secretary and return immediately to Philadelphia, where her mother resides.

The names handed in as candidates for Treasurer were F. C. Mende, of Philadelphia; Otto Wettstein, E. B. Foote, Jr., L. Geiger. Messrs. Foote and Geiger declined to keep their names before the Congress. Mr. Wettstein was in Rochelle, Ill. The vote resulted as follows:

F. C. Mende	24
Otto Wettstein	1

Mr. Mende was called for. He is a retired Philadelphia merchant of wealth and responsibility, with German antecedents, and is an earnest and Liberal Freethinker, though, in his younger days, educated for the ministry. In accepting the office he thanked the members of the Congress for the honor paid him, and said he should take in all the cash he could get, and under direction of the Directors spend it judiciously.

The new constitution adopted provides for four activ Vice-presidents, who shall be members of the Board of Directors. A ballot was taken for these four, resulting as follows:

E. B. Foote, Jr.	15	Leonard Geiger	11
Otto Wettstein	6	Juliet H. Severance	7
T. B. Wakeman	21	R. G. Ingersoll	4
J. E. Remsburg	6	S. P. Putnam	4
Lucy N. Colman	2	John Downes	1
John Kirschner	6	Mrs. E. R. Carl	7
J. Eidelman	1	Harry Hoover	3
J. H. Foster	2

The ballot elected these candidates: T. B. Wakeman, E. B. Foote, Jr., and Leonard Geiger. Mr. Geiger withdrew, leaving third place tied between Mrs. Severance and Mrs. Carl. Mrs. Carl withdrew, and Dr. Severance was declared elected. Mr. Kirschner withdrew, and J. E. Remsburg and Otto Wettstein were tied. Another ballot was taken, with this result:

J. E. Remsburg	18
Otto Wettstein	4

The activ Vice-presidents, members of the Board of Directors, are, therefore, Thaddeus B. Wakeman and E. B. Foote, Jr., of New York; Juliet H. Severance, of Milwaukee, Wis., and J. E. Remsburg, of Oak Mills, Kan. Mr. Wakeman suggested that it would be well to elect the prominent Freethinkers of the country to be honorary Vice-presidents. Dr. Westbrook moved to amend the section of the constitution relating to that office so as to allow of such election. The motion prevailed, and the old list was unanimously reëlected, substituting the name of L. K. Washburn for that of Horace Seaver, deceased, and adding Otto Wettstein. The list is:

Col. R. G. Ingersoll.	L. K. Washburn.
Samuel P. Putnam.	H. P. Mason.
T. B. Wakeman.	Mattie P. Krekel.
James Parton.	E. B. Foote.
Charles Watts.	Leonard Geiger.
A. B. Bradford.	N. D. Goodell.
Otto Wettstein.	Dr. S. S. McLeod.
Lucy N. Colman.	Daniel Aerl.
James Wardwell.	Romun Staley.
J. A. Smith.	H. L. Boyes.
Wm. Redfield.	J. H. Burnham.
M. M. Secor.	Maj. W. W. Forward.
W. L. Willis.	Joseph Sedgebeer.
A. J. Truss.	Dr. G. F. A. de Lespinasse.
Photius Fisk.

Wm. Redfield, whose name is included in the list, died a few days ago, after a brief illness. Mr. Redfield was a sterling citizen of Stanley, Ia., a noble and generous Liberal, and his death is indeed a great loss to the cause of liberty.

A Committee on Resolutions was then appointed by the Chair, comprising:

E. B. Foote, Jr.	J. R. Charlesworth.
J. H. Foster.	R. B. Westbrook.
T. B. Wakeman.	E. M. Macdonald.
Prof. A. L. Rawson.

The Auditing Committee reported that they could not thoroughly understand the retiring Treasurer's report and desired to pass it over to the new Treasurer, which was permitted. The President's account for September and October was correct and explicit. About $285 were in the treasury.

Mr. A. C. Cotton said he hoped the Committee on Resolutions would say something severe about Holy John Wanamaker, who was running his department according to church ideas. As for himself, he had circulated petitions in Vineland asking for the removal of the postmaster-general. Mr. Charlesworth took the floor and urged those present, when they went home, to stir up things and make this Congress an epoch in human affairs. Mr. Charlesworth's oratory is somewhat like that of Charles Watts. So far his labors for Freethought in this country hav been principally in Newark, N. J., where he is very highly regarded. Mr. Hoover wanted to make a personal explanation. He was born with a hatred of wrong. He had permitted his name to be used as candidate for Secretary by his friends. He had hoped for election till he heard President Westbrook's speech. He was defeated because his opponent was a lady. But he never retreats, and so had met the enemy, and he was hers. Defeat, under the circumstances, was sweet. Mr. J. Eidelman wanted to know if these meetings were to be continued, and Dr. Westbrook replied that he proposed to hold a great many more meetings in the city of a Secular nature. Adjourned.

SATURDAY EVENING.

In the evening the large hall with the circus attachment was crowded. Mr. Chamberlain conducted Dr. McGlynn to the hall, and hearty applause greeted the rebellious priest as he walked down the aisle. Evidently excommunication does not physically disagree with him. He looks well fed and prosperous and in a wrestling match could giv Leo XIII. the under hold and throw him. He was again cheered as he took the platform. "Our Public Schools and Their Enemies," was his subject, and he talked for an hour and a half, and this is part of what he said:

At the outset it occurs to me that some people may think it strange that our public schools should hav any enemies, yet there are enemies to the common schools. It may be well to show how proper it is that there should be common schools. To begin with, it is proper in order that we should hav anything like an approach to the proper exercise of the suffrage—that the sovereigns who exercise that right should be able to read their ballots. [Applause.] In some of our states the law requires that the voters should know how to read. In the state of New York, where I come from, there is on the part of some people a very tender regard for illiterate voters. It should not be enough that the voter may be able to read his ballot. It is desirable that every facility be given for the spread of knowledge among the common people. In a perfect commonwealth it is eminently desirable that there should be culture and knowledge. It is impossible that liberty should be preserved if those who are called upon to be the guardians of our liberties through the right of suffrage should not be intelligent. Ignorance is not bliss, and rarely, if ever, is it folly to be wise.

I would not neglect the education of the body. We should not retrograde and be less high-minded than the ancient Greeks and Romans. Therefore we rejoice in the revival of athletic training in our schools and colleges. We old fogies who cannot play baseball should not sneer at the interest that is manifested in that game. [Laughter and applause.]

The commonwealth that has citizens who are barbarous is a commonwealth in which liberty must soon decay. There are certain enemies of public education, because they are enemies of freedom. You will find them more frequently in the Old World than in the New. In countries in the Old World there are people who openly say that all that is needed is bread and the catechism. An able ecclesiastic in Italy wrote an elaborate work to show the absurdity of a representativ government. These clever Italian writers time and time again tried to show that the mass of the people did not want education; that it was a bad thing for them. They were hostil to the liberties of their nativ country. One reason they were opposed to education was because educated young men would not be slaves. Right in Italy good religious men argued for the maintenance of this order of things. They said they would throw in something besides bread—they would throw in the catechism. It is a degradation of human nature to say that you can keep the body of men in order only by keeping them in ignorance.

Other enemies to the common schools are those who agree with what I hav said, but they would make the schools not common, by keeping up in them the teaching of religion. These people are mostly Protestants, who actually say that this is a Protestant country and that the Bible should be in the schools as a part of the religion of the country. Is not this a commonwealth composed of all stripes of belief? Is there any reason why there should be in the common schools anything to offend Hebrews, Catholics, Agnostics, or Atheists? You are setting a bad example, for the time may come when the Hebrews or the Catholics may be in the majority in some city or state, and then they might make the schools Hebrew or Catholic. If you want to hav common schools, they must be common in those things that are common.

Other enemies of the common schools are those bishops and priests of the Catholic church who insist on the establishment of parochial schools, and in many cases refuse the sacrament to parents and children where the latter were sent to public schools, there being parish schools close by. The teaching in the parochial schools is usually poor. The priest is often obliged to start a school or else be removed. He would incur a heavy debt and then would get cheap teachers, because he did not want to go into any more expense than he could help. "Poor pay, poor teach." The Catholic German church tries to keep its congregations strictly German, and to prevent its people from speaking the English language as much as possible. The same policy is pursued toward the Irish, and they are kept always Irish.

Dr. McGlynn was given a vote of thanks, and he left the hall to catch a train for New York. A collection was taken up, and Mrs. Colman responded to loud calls. She spoke but briefly, as she is not strong. Miss Susan Wixon was then called for, but excused herself. Mr. Hoover said that when he was trampled upon and knew it he fought back. Mr. Wakeman called attention to the Liberal papers, and asked the audience to buy Mr. Longford's stock out. The audience was then permitted to retire.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON.

A violent rainstorm diminished the attendance to hear the Rev. Minot J. Savage, Unitarian minister of Boston, discourse on "Religion in Our Public Schools," but he was greeted by seven or eight hundred people. Before introducing him, Dr. Westbrook explained the objects of the American Secular Union. Mr. Savage's address was considerably like that of Dr. McGlynn. He is a Theist, though as he explained his conception of God he pretty clearly defined Pantheism. But he was at one with the Union in its work, and knew many orthodox people who also agreed with it. Like a good many other folks, Mr. Savage sees the things of this world clearly, but is so anxious to know the affairs of another that he loses his logical faculties and becomes mystical. He put more theology into his speech than Dr. McGlynn did, which was not very well liked by the audience. But where his discourse bore on the subject under consideration it was admirable in matter and argument, and was fully appreciated by the heretics present.

At the conclusion of Mr. Savage's address, Dr. Foote read the resolutions composed by his committee. They were as follows:

The Committee appointed to frame resolutions for the action of this meeting, report for your consideration and approval the following:

1. Resolved, That the American Secular Union, in this its Thirteenth Annual Congress, meeting in the city of Philadelphia, October 27, 1889, remembers with gratitude the men who organized this movement in this city in 1878, and all the efficient officers, activ members, and generous supporters who hav continued the work; that though the Union has not been successful in effecting any constitutional reforms, nevertheless it has been successful in repelling efforts toward constitutional deform, and the enactment of any more laws or devices saddling the state with riders of the church; that we hav seen with great satisfaction the spreading and acceptance of our principles, as recently made manifest in the stubborn and largely successful resistance to infusion of religious dogmas in the work of the constitutional conventions of our newly organized Western states.

2. Resolved, That we send fraternal greetings to our allies in the North and West, the newly formed Canadian Secular Union and the Oregon State Secular Union, in both of which we see promis of great service in promoting our mutual objects; with these and all similar organizations we desire to coöperate in all possible ways.

3. Resolved, That we hav especial cause for congratulating all Freethinkers at home and abroad upon the erection of a monument in Rome to Giordano Bruno, a martyr to church domination of secular government, and we take pleasure in the remembrance that from this Union and its friends came the support to that great event from this country.

4. Resolved, That we regret the death of Horace Seaver, the veteran Freethought leader, whose fifty years' service as editor of the Boston Investigator rendered him dear to the hearts of all Secularists, and that we regard his death as our greatest loss to the Union during the past year.

5. Resolved, That this Congress hears with regret of the serious illness of that fearless champion of human rights, Charles Bradlaugh, and we hereby tender our sympathy and express our hopes of his speedy recovery.

6. Resolved, That we denounce the attempts being made by the various religious bodies throughout the country to force through the national legislature two measures, known as the Blair Sunday bill and the Blair Educational bill—the first to enforce a complete inactivity on Sunday, and to compel its observance as a religious institution; the second pledging the national government to guarantee the maintenance by the states of public schools in which the principles of the Christian religion shall be taught; and

Resolved, That the American Secular Union, through its officers, will use every legitimate and honorable means to prevent the passage of these bills by Congress.

7. Resolved, That we strenuously oppose the perversion of the states' penal laws by tyrannical and bigoted officials belonging to dominant religious sects, to destroy their critics and religious opponents, as such action is conspicuously illustrated in the prosecutions directed against Messrs. Harman & Walker, of Valley Falls, Kan., and W. E. Reid, of Grand Rapids, Mich.—that both these cases bear evidence of being the results of malicious personal animosities and contemptible religious antipathies, which make it a disgrace for the state to lend its powers to the use of the church.

8. Resolved, That the impartial and equal administration of justice demands that there be no discrimination in the application of the laws between the letters said to be inspired by spirits and the Revelation alleged to be derived from the same source, or between the medium who takes money for establishing communications from the souls of the dead to their living friends and the priest who takes money for the performance of masses to relieve the souls of the dead from the torments of purgatory; that as the whole matter rests in the realm of faith it is entirely beyond the scope of legal enactment, and that for this reason we regard the prosecution of Walter E. Reid, of Grand Rapids, Mich., as an assumption of governmental power violativ of the Constitution of the United States, and dangerous to the religious liberty of the citizen, and which should be sternly rebuked.

9. Resolved, That we condemn the action of Postmaster-General John Wanamaker in discontinuing mail service on Sunday on star or minor routes, which is a practical union of church and state that deprives the people, for religious reasons, of one-seventh of their mail service, which is a hardship, and is contrary to the letter and spirit of the Constitution of the United States and the policy of the general government during the past century, and we recommend his removal from office.

(Continued on page 701.)

Letters from Friends.

RIVERSIDE, CAL., Oct. 12, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3, for which please continue to send THE TRUTH SEEKER. I don't want to miss one number. Respectfully yours, C. NEWTON ROSS.

KENTON, O., Oct. 18, 1889.

MR. EDITOR I will send you an account of a miracle from Madison, Ind. Joseph Schafer, of the tribe of Indians, claims he has a chicken nineteen years old. And we are sending missionaries to China and Africa. When it comes to pass that this Christian land cannot furnish preachers enough to eat the chickens before they get to be nineteen years old, we had better leave our measure at the tailor's for a suit of imported sackcloth. Brethren, keep your lamps trimmed and your hands on your pocketbook.

GEO. BAKER.

ATLANTIC, IA., Oct. 14, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I could not do without your valuable paper. I read all it contains. I am at home but little except on Sunday of each week, being a commercial traveler. I would like very much to help organize a Union in Council Bluffs or in Omaha across the river. The work of a Union is very much needed in these cities, and one would hav a strong following in a very short time. Will you be so kind as to print this, and then if it is noticed by any who would like to take up the work in this direction, I wish they would address me a letter and I will call on them, and in a short time activ work may be begun. May every Freethinker in the two cities who sees this respond. H. G. BLINN.

CINCINNATI, O., Oct. 13, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The front-page cartoon in your last issue is a magnificent hit! A better illustration of the pulpit could not hav been wrought. I was so wildly delighted with the grand idea that I at once showed it around to the fellow-artists at the Strobridge lithographing establishment, the place of my employment. It created no little merriment, and it roused enthusiasm out of even the most unconcerned person. I want to see it posted in a conspicuous place nearest to every church in every city and town, in order that people in passing on the way to worship may notice it. Let the reproductions of this illustration be much larger and of sufficient size for the weak-eyed sky-pilots and gospel-twisters to discern it at a single glance. Couldn't it be done? Wouldn't that be a good scheme? Our artistic friend Mr. Watson Heston has my most heartfelt congratulations for his ingenious idea. May he liv long in his useful work. A. FRANTZ.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., Oct. 16, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I suggest that the "Bible Morals" of John E. Remsburg be printed in pamphlet form, that is to say, each crime or vice sanctioned to be separate, and about the size of those Christian tracts published by the Bible Society, so we could buy them by the thousand for distribution free to all who would read them, and hand to our friends and neighbors. We hav in this country thousands of people who are indifferent on the subject of religion, and even thousands who are outspoken Freethinkers and Infidels and yet are seen at church, not for the sake of religion, but for society and fashion, and the lack of a suitable society of Freethinkers. We must hav a society, with all the attractions equal to that of the best society of the best churches. If we could attack the church with Remsburg or Reynolds, or, if possible, if the great and only R. G. Ingersoll could come here and lecture, what a storm would be created in the camps of Jesus Christ and his followers!

The tracts I speak of would of course make the preparation for such an event. Each tract would hav the signature of John E. Remsburg and the address of THE TRUTH SEEKER, where anyone would be able to get a supply of them. They should also be numbered, and some might contain two or more crimes. CHRIS. BATHMAN.

TORONTO, ONT., Oct. 17, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: It is simply astounding, the countless number of people who hav been reared under the banner of theology, who hav tried for eighteen hundred years to unravel the mysteries of the Christian church, whose mental forces hav been scattered and intellectual faculties undeveloped, who hav been daily whirled into oblivion through the inconsistent teachings of the Bible, who, had they come under the scope of philosophical training, would hav developed some of the noblest types of humanity and been ornaments to society and the world.

It is a moral offense against human justice, and ought to be a hateful insult to the honor and dignity of mankind, that such a deplorable condition of things exists, but there is a rift appearing in the cloud of misery and discord, and, as Abraham Lincoln once said in a speech made before the breaking out of the war, "The time is coming when this Union will be all slave or all free," so the time is coming when this world will be, not all slave, but all free from the galling influences of theology, free from the chafing manacles of bigotry, free from the clanking chains of superstition and despair—yes, free from the ruthless, agonizing, terrorizing grasp of Christian despotism. J. B. VAIL.

IPSWICH, S. DAK., Oct. 6, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER from its foundation by the venerated D. M. Bennett, and every year find it more valuable and indispensable.

Three years ago I commenced pioneering in the direction of Freethought in this community, and in spite of hailstorms of Christian persecution, I still continue, and ever shall, to hold the flag above the cross. I am happy to say that there is a sensible diminution of bigotry and prejudice against our cause since the beginning of my residence here, and think I can promis you an addition to your subscribers from this part of the world when we get free from the drouth that has stricken us this year.

I feel the inconvenience of this Sunday-school administration's manipulation of the mails, depriving me of the usual Sunday reading of your paper immediately after its publication—it reaching me now Monday morning whereas before the pious Wanamaker's accession to office it always reached me Sunday morning.

I am also able and happy to say that in spite of the supposed unpopularity of such opinions as mine, my business has steadily and constantly improved. Wishing you every success in the great cause of truth against error which you so ably advocate, I am, Fraternally, A. J. BROWN.

OBITUARY.

ELMORE, ILL., Oct. 5, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I send this obituary: Died, Tuesday, Oct. 1, 1889, Frank Osmen Morris, aged 22 years 11 months 3 days, at the residence of his father, Dennis Morris, in Millbrook township, Peoria county, Ill., where he was born and lived the greater part of his life. He leaves an aged father and mother, and three brothers and one sister, and numerous friends and relativs, to mourn his loss. His death was caused by a complication of diseases. He has been a sufferer for the last eight years. He has borne his suffering with patience and fortitude, always cheerful and happy while in presence of friends. He was truthful and honest in performing the duties assigned to him, and always tried to do right, which was his religion. He believed in Universal Mental Liberty to all. He was a member of the Hawthorn Grange, No. 1,637, of Stark county, Ill. Living as we are in a priest-ridden country we could not obtain a suitable place to conduct the funeral services, therefore we had no services except the reading of a poem by Mr. Robert Lang, a neighbor and friend. The poem will be found in "The Truth Seeker Collection," on page 240, "The Slumber of Death." The poem was read at the grave. DENNIS MORRIS.

BARRE, MASS., Oct. 16, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Many thanks to C. S. Randolph, of Ipava, Ill., for his excellent letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER of October 19th, wherein he calls attention to the reputed genealogy of Jesus Christ in my article of June 1, 1889, in which it was shown that the son of God was indebted to "Rahab the harlot" for his earthly existence. Mr. Randolph adds, "Ella Gibson could hav gone further back . . . three hundred years earlier . . . and hav found recorded in Gen. xxxviii—please read it," etc.

Please let me inform your worthy correspondent that "Ella Gibson did go farther back" in "The Ungodly Women of the Bible," where "she traces the genealogy of Christ" not only to Rahab the harlot, but to the very beginning, to Abraham's wife, Sarah, in order to prove that God's son was born of vile women as well as vile men. Alas for his pedigree! It smells of the slums of holy incest, polygamy, and deceit! (See Godly Women of the Bible, pages 233–249.)

Perhaps it would be well to add that Mr. Bennett published this volume anonymously by the request of its ungodly author, and that it previously appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER as a serial during the two years preceding his death. The book is still for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, and is "a correct statement of facts which are new to most readers," as Mr. Randolph affirms of the Ungodly Woman's article of June 1, 1889. ELLA E. GIBSON.

EDEN, ALA., Oct. 14, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of October 12th J. H. Wood tries to explain the cause of the depreciation in value of greenbacks in 1864. I think he is wrong. I will tell your readers what I think caused their depreciation. If you will take the trouble to examin the reports of finance and trade from the first issue of legal tender notes, in 1862, till the close of the war in 1865, and till the act of resumption of specie payment was passed by Congress, you will see that the first paper money issued by the government in 1862 never was the thousandth part of a mill under par with gold, and the reason is obvious. The government said it would receive it in payment of its dues. This arrangement did not suit capitalists of Europe, and of Wall street, New York, so they combined and brought such a pressure to bear on Congress that they got an exception added to the next issue of currency by the government. That exception read about this way (as I hav no bill at hand to copy from, I quote from memory): "This is a legal tender for all dues and demands, both public and private, except for the interest on the public debt and for import and export dues." Now note the result. Uncle Sam said he would not take his own private note for debts owing to him. As a matter of course, no one else wanted it. He might just as well hav sent one-legged and one-armed soldiers to do his fighting, as to hav sent a currency depreciated by his own act to pay for it. It would hav taken a great many more one-legged men to hav whipped the rebels than it did men with all their limbs intact. But all those events are passed. The present and future are what we are working for. Let the government issue legal tender notes sufficient to pay off our present national debt, or bonded debt, principal and interest. Then let the government strike a sufficient quantity of legal tender notes to loan to each state sufficient to pay off their several debts, charging the states not exceeding one per cent per annum interest for the use of the money, and so long as the interest is promptly paid annually when due, never demand the principal. Then let the government establish one or more post-office banks, at the principal business cities in each state, where the people can borrow money of the government equal to one-third the value of real estate unincumbered, as security to the government for the payment of the sum borrowed. Let the government charge not exceeding one per cent per annum for the use of the loan; and so long as the interest is paid promptly in advance, never demand the principal. The government can afford to lend to individuals, not bankers, at as cheap a rate as it does to the present bankers. And the citizens who are not bankers do as much toward the maintenance of the government as those who are now monopolizing the banking business. Paying off the state and national debts will throw plenty of money into circulation to transact all business of the country. And if parties can get money at one per cent from the government, capitalists will hav to go into some more legitimate business than robbing labor with usury in order to make their wealth pay dividends, or it will remain idle in their vaults. They will build railroads, factories, furnaces, and other improvements with it, giving employment to the thousands of idle hands, rather than let it lie idle and bring them in no returns. Under our present laws they can rob labor—I speak advisedly; it is nothing but legal robbery—while their capital is locked up and kept out of circulation.

I will say to our Liberal friends that my neighbors are getting a little more friendly toward me. I lend THE TRUTH SEEKER to a few that I think can appreciate a good thing. And I think it is bearing fruit. I hav scattered all the tracts sent me by Liberals among the sky-pilots and their followers in such a way that they do not know who to look to for receiving them. How the preachers do rant! The brethren are not so obstreperous as they used to be. I am not able to purchase Liberal literature, but I can hand it round. If all who hav tracts to spare, will send them to me, I will take pleasure in putting them where they will either bear fruit or raise Cain among the sky-pilots' flocks of lambs and suckers. THE TRUTH SEEKER and Heston get better with every issue. AMOS L. GRIFFITH.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Oct. 10, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find clipping from Mail and Express editorial, September 24th. I suppose this is Elliott Shepard's own. No wonder the commodore said he had a damned fool in the family. J. BARRY.

SHE DIED NOT AS A FOOL DIETH.

With her pastor and two ministering spirits as attendants on her departure, Miss Elizabeth McCormick went to heaven, on the best day of all the week, from one of the open streets of this great city, hearing the testimony that

There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains.

And saying:

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly.

And as if already conscious of the happiness and security afforded by the immediate answer to her prayer, she exclaimed, "This is the "Rock of Ages."

Forever consecrated will be the spot—the sidewalk in West Forty-fifth street—where she was, in good health, instantaneously translated from music here to the heavenly choir.

The effect on the Rev. Dr. D. Parker Morgan will be to hurry up his saving of souls, for his time, as is everybody's, is short; and to make him more earnest than ever in preaching his last words to her, "The precious blood of Jesus cleanseth us from all sin;" and to tinge his whole life with the refrains that will come to him continually from the "Gates Ajar," as his faithful parishioners joined the company of Asaph, Jeduthun, Heman, Watts, Heber, Handel, P. P. Bliss, Muhlenburg, Brown, Cowper, and Bradbury,

In the land that is fairer than day.

Would that the reeking, tipsy, blasphemous mass of disconsolate humanity which is madly rushing the way of King Saul to suicide here and perdition hereafter, which "dies as the fool dieth," might see the magnificent figure of Miss McCormick, full of light and beauty as a stained-glass cathedral window, rising up before them, and hear her skilful hand as she plays

Hide me, O my savior! hide,
Till the storms of life be past;
Safe into the haven guide,
O receive my soul at last!

and would make the same prayers while they are still in the flesh, and then suicide would cease from among men!

BUTTE CITY, MONT., Oct. 11, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I was reading in the last number of THE TRUTH SEEKER of the Prize Manual, and a reference to the manual to be used in the public schools and Girard College. A thought came to me in regard to a school at my old home in Youngstown, O., that has a history somewhat similar to Girard College; and thinking that the Secular Union may hav a chance to do some good work, I will state what I know of it. Judge Rayne, of Youngstown, was an Infidel, and in his will he bequeathed a large sum of money to build a school for the orphans of the poor of Youngstown, and his will clearly states that there shall be no religion taught in it. The school was built, and has been in operation for quite a number of years, as long as I can remember; and I can say as a positiv fact that the orphans of Youngstown do not receive any benefit at all from it, and I feel safe in saying that religion has been practiced in it, and I think is to this day. The trustees of the school were all psalm-singers, and A. B. Cornell was one of them, a Presbyterian, now of Youngstown, and is yet if I am not mistaken. The school is run on the following plan. It is a high school. When any scholar has completed a course in the public school, he gets a certificate from the superintendent of public schools entitling him to go to the Rayne school, where all the higher branches are taught. So you see it practically does not benefit the ones for whom it was intended. Every man's child can go to th t school providing his or her parents can afford to send him to school long enough to be qualified. And I know it for a fact that the poor or orphans of Youngstown do not get any benefit from it, for when they get old enough to work they hav to leave school to earn their own living. And I was one of the many that can testify to that fact. And if the Secular Union will investigate the matter, I will do all I can to help them, and will subscribe to a fund to carry on a prosecution, for I would like to see justice done to a man that tried to do good and benefit the poor. C. A. LINDSAY.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Oct. 10, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: God has been at his old tricks again in this city, and destroyed his most famous temple by fire. I refer to the burning of DeWittless Talmage's Tabernacle last Sunday morning. One would naturally think that God would hav too much respect for the Sabbath day to do anything of that sort thereon, causing so much extra labor to the police and fire departments on the day which he hallowed and commanded should be kept holy, that is to say, idle. But as John Peck truly says, "God has always been a little freakish, and never could be depended upon." If God wishes the Sabbath day to be kept holy by his children, he should set a good example before them, and refrain from starting fires on that day. But "God works in a mysterious [and idiotic] way his wonders to perform," and we poor, totally depraved worms of the earth hav no right to criticise his actions, for doth not the inspired volume tell us that "He doeth all things well?" Verily, verily, I say unto thee, it doth. Although the trustees of the church trusted him, they apparently were not prepared to go it blind on this very unreliable person, and so they had the gospel-mill insured to its full value. Notwithstanding this, they are out with an appeal to the "dear public" for funds with which to rebuild. They touchingly say: "That we bow in humble submission to the providence which this morning removed our beloved church, and while we cannot understand the meaning of that providence, we hav faith that there is kindness in the blow." Of course they hav faith. If they had less faith and more common sense they would let this great supernational What-is-it? take care of himself. But what would Talmage do then, poor thing? The trustees further remark that if "God and the people help," they will erect something "worthy of the cause of God." Are we to understand that the old structure was not worthy of that cause? If so, Talmage and his crowd of Christian lunatics hav not been honest with the dear people to whom they so confidently appeal for assistance. And if God is omnipotent, why is the help of the peeple needed? Can finite beings help an infinit being? And why should the people repair the mischief God does? Again I ask, Does he not do all things well? And such being the case, is it not blasphemy for this Brooklyn scripture-slugger and his Christ-crazy followers to put up another God-house, when it is plainly God's will that he does not want it? This is the second time Jehovah has visited his fierce wrath on Talmage's Home for the Moderately Insane, and it is fully time for this clerical mountebank to take a tumble to himself, if I may be permitted to use such worldly-minded language in speaking of one of God's particular pets. In a sermon he delivered some years ago (in the winter of 1886, if I remember rightly) this lover of Jesus and hater of honest unbelievers made use of the following language: "Oh, it would hav been the grandest drama ever enacted on the stage of the Brooklyn theater if my friend, Patrick Campbell, chief of police, who believed in God and Jesus Christ, had walked on the platform, followed by a platoon of officers, and had put his hand on the shoulders of that blasphemous lecturer and had said: 'In the name of the common law, in the name of the state of New York, in the name of the city of Brooklyn, this blasphemy must stop, and stop here and stop now!'" Who was the blasphemer he referred to, and what were the blasphemous remarks that so shocked poor Talmage's sensitiv nature? The man whom this Christ-crazy bigot wanted to hav thrown into prison was none other than the intellectual idol of the Freethinkers of America, Robert G. Ingersoll, whose shoes the "Rev." Talmage is not fit to brush. Colonel Ingersoll said of this mythical person generally called Jesus, that "when he was here he was forgiving and half human, but now he is God, and instead of saying, 'Father, forgiv them, they know not what they do,' he sends them to eternal fire. It is wonderful the difference office makes with some people." Well, is not that perfectly true? And how can the truth be blasphemy? If Talmage is so easily shocked, he should retire to a monastery. I am confident that the doughty colonel has no more admiration for Talmage's sermons than that theological clown has for the colonel's "blasphemy," but does "Our Bob" yell for the chief of police, a platoon of officers, and three different sets of laws to gag the doctor's honest thought? When will these New Jerusalem pilgrims ever learn that others hav exactly the same rights and privileges that they possess? If it is a crime for Infidels to giv expression to their opinions, is it a virtue for the followers of the blood-stained lamb to do the same thing? Who ever heard of a Liberal calling on the chief of police to arrest a Christian for giving utterance to sentiments the Liberal did not approve of? And yet would it not be just as consistent, just as fair-minded, as Talmage's action? Why did not this great Brooklyn hell-herder hav our beloved leader arrested? Because, thanks to the noble martyrs of Freethought, he lacked the power. And it is the duty of all Infidels in this country to see to it that he and his kind will henceforth and forever lack that power. And there is but one way to keep these ecclesiastical hyenas within bounds, and that is by unity of action and the whole-souled, enthusiastic support of Liberal journals. THE TRUTH SEEKER has struck many a valiant blow for the cause of Universal Mental Liberty since the days when its great-minded founder was cast into a dungeon, compelled to don the garb of a felon, and treated as an outcast from society, a moral leper, for the infamous crime of displeasing St. Anthony Comstock, who apparently runs this "land of the free." When the Infidels of this country get together and, regardless of the particular "ism" upon which they may dote, resolve that their motto shall ever be, "One for all and all for one," then, and only then, will our land be freed from the clutches of the Bible fanatics who are conspiring day and night to put God in the Constitution and Infidels behind the bars of the nearest jail. I fear, Mr. Editor, that I hav made my communication too long. If so, my only excuse must be that a certain person who obtained considerable cheap notoriety some years ago commanded us to never weary of well doing, and I am obeying his word.

Fraternally yours in U. M. L., EDWARDS ROUSSEAU.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN STATESMAN.

MAKANDA, ILL., Oct. 20, 1889.

Dear Sir: I hav carefully read the copy of your paper which you sent me, and I wish to say a few words with regard to some of the subjects in which it takes a special interest. I am pleased to recognize in your paper ability, with apparent fairness and honesty of purpose. It is, however, entirely beyond my comprehension why men and women, so intelligent, cultured, and refined, should wish to hav their sons and daughters compelled to read the Bible in our schools. When I think of multitudes of passages containing intensified filth, found in the Bible, such as the story of Jacob and his wives and concubines; Lot and his daughters; David's talk with Abigail, and his and Solomon's abominable adulteries, and vile, lecherous conduct generally, your position in the premises is truly strange to me. Were scenes to transpire in our courts requiring such a record, our magazines would refuse to publish it, and characterize it as matter so filthy as to be unfit for publication. And any paper that did publish it, would do it, not to gratify the wishes and tastes of the pure and refined members of society, but to pander to the depraved appetites of its lowest and most depraved classes. And if you saw your children, of choice, perusing such literature in any paper, or in any other book than the Bible, you would be shocked, and filled with sad apprehension at the indication it gave of their depraved taste. And yet you would compel them to read this obscene, vulgar trash publicly in school! And not only so, but you would compel your neighbors' children, who justly look upon the whole performance with disgust and abhorrence, to read it also, and tax their parents to support the reading of it into the bargain. Is that your idea of justice and the Golden Rule? What possible good can our children derive from having constantly paraded before them the libidinous, beastly practices of these semi-barbarous Old Testament saints? Neither can I see any advantage in having our children read, every day, about the cruel, aggressiv, and inhuman wars waged by Joshua, David, and the rest, in the name, and by the command, of Jehovah. Thus, by his command, perish all the males of Midian, both old and young, and all the married women—the exhausted mother and her new-born infant son perish together, and thirty-two thousand innocent girls are handed over to be the victims of the lust of the bloody, brutal soldiers, who hav just murdered their fathers, mothers, and brothers. Such reading must either demoralize our children, and blot from their minds every proper conception of justice and mercy, or else cause them to utterly despise and abhor the God who commanded and approved such atrocities. Look also at the bloody massacres perpetrated by David. When he fled to Ackish, king of Gath, for protection from Saul, which Ackish kindly gave him, he was no sooner settled in his new quarters, than he took the six hundred outlaws who had joined him, and went forth against the towns of his protector's country, and perpetrated one of the most infamous, murderous raids that history, ancient or modern, records. He, without the slightest provocation, plundered and burnt the towns that lay in his way, and murdered all the inhabitants—men, women, and children. And for what reason? Had they injured him in thought, word, or deed? Not at all. What, then, is the reason? "Lest they tell on us." He deemed the piratical principle that "dead men tell no tales," his only safety, and therefore he butchers the innocent women and children. One other example: David, because the king of Ammon had insulted his messengers, sends an army and plunders and destroys all the cities of Ammon, and brought out the people that were in them, and cut them with saws and harrows of iron, and with axes, and caused them to pass through the brick-kiln. And then our children read, in connection with this, that "David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and turned not aside from doing anything that he commanded him, all the days of his life, save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite." Think of it; all of his treachery, polygamy, adultery, and concubinage is indorsed by God as right (except the murder of Uriah to escape the consequences of his adultery with Bathsheba, his wife), though the grossness and enormity of his lust and lewdness would bring the blush of shame to the cheek of a Mormon. His cruel, exterminating raids, also, are all approved of God, though they were incomparably more atrocious than the Mountain Meadow massacre of Mormon history. Is it strange that such reading produces "Infidels?" That intelligent young men and women should turn from it with disgust, and not only reject its inspiration, but deny the existence of its God? I once heard the Rev. Mr. Bruce, one of your ministers, in a sermon he preached at New Bedford, Pa., defend some of the most cruel atrocities of the Mexican war by a reference to the still greater outrages perpetrated by David on the Ammonites, with God's full approval.

Do you imagin that, when you hav overthrown the American principle of civil government, viz., that all just powers are derived from the consent of the people, and established the old Russian doctrin that they come from God, and put your creed with regard to God and the divinity of Christ into the Constitution, with the right to supplement all with appropriate legislation, and made the word of God (Bible) the supreme law of the land, your church will interpret that law, or dictate that appropriate legislation? You are laying out work for the Catholics. The Catholic church is the growing ecclesiastical power in this country, and if you succeed in your retrograde scheme, and thus secure a union of church and state, and church dictation in our politics, and the enforcement of religious dogmas by constitution and law, the Catholic church will dictate and enforce that legislation, and when that day comes, if all history is not a lie and the unchangeable church changed, the Auto-da-fé will be revived again, and you and your paper may be among the victims. If you hav the right, regardless of the protests and rights of the minority, to put your creed into the Constitution, because you deem it true and hav the power, the Catholics will hav the same right when they get the power. Our Constitution will then read that the Catholic is the only true church. The Catholic Bible will be read in our schools. Catholic teachers will interpret it, and Catholic rites and ceremonies will be taught instead of science, and these vile mummeries will be called the "Christian religion." And your money and mine will pay these Catholic teachers for instilling these degrading absurdities into the minds of our children. Do you think such a catastrophe improbable? Look at the rapidity of the Catholic increase. Since the organization of our government, that church has increased from less than one per cent of our population to fourteen per cent, their present claim. And their present increase, by births and immigration, amounts to perhaps over half a million annually. How long will it be, under such conditions, until they will control our state and national elections, and dictate the legislation of the country? That church controls many of our cities and some of our rural districts now, and wherever she has the power, she supplants our common by her parochial schools, and supports them by the public funds.

But suppose the late Dr. Ewer is correct, when he says in his work entitled, "Protestantism a Failure," that before thirty years the Freethinkers will control this government. And, by the way, their ascendency is our salvation from Catholic supremacy. You and your friends are cheek by jowl with them now, coöperating like Pilate and Herod to advance your tyrannical "reform," and crush out the religious and civil liberties of the people. You cannot deny that the trend of the times is toward Freethought supremacy. The change of public sentiment in that direction, in recent years, is remarkable. The increase of ably edited Freethought newspapers, books, and tracts, is quite so; while able lecturers are expounding Freethought principles to intelligent, thoughtful audiences all over the country. And a very important and ominous fact, in connection with these lecturers, is that their challenges and invitations to the church party to defend the orthodox principles are seldom accepted, which is a practical admission of conscious weakness. Should Freethought triumph, then our government will be thoroughly secularized. There would be no compulsory Sabbath. You would "swear not at all."

We would legislate and fight without chaplains. The filth of neither the Catholic nor the Protestant Bible would be read in our schools. Nor would any of your sectarian schools or institutions receive any money from the public treasury. The pious, unscrupulous, designing hypocrits would hav to retire from Girard College, and your churches would pay their just share of the taxes, and preachers would, probably, eventually cease to be deadheads, and would pay as much for a ride on the cars as the poor widow. Should they go further, and, in imitation of your example, put their creed into the Constitution, then it might read that the Jehovah of the Jews was a tyrant and a myth; Jesus Christ was no more God than the rest of us; that to worship him was idolatry, and that he had no right to rule in this or any other country unless he was duly elected by the people. Then you would begin to feel that the "other ox was gored." And if we followed your example still further, and when you complained of our injustice should tell you that, if our Constitution and laws did not suit you, you could bless the country by leaving it, you might begin to realize the impudent, ungentlemanly, not to say brutal, utterances of some of your own pious Christian orators.

Now, honor bright, do you really think it desirable to make the Bible the supreme law of the land? Our rights and liberties would then be very uncertain quantities, and depend on which of the numberless sects had the power and were the interpreters of it. The Bible teaches the Catholic to torture and murder heretics. It taught your pious and illustrious Presbyterian predecessors in Scotland and elsewhere to drown, hang, and burn witches, and it might teach their children to do it again. To the Mormon it sanctions polygamy and the most beastly lust. It sanctifies slavery to the slaveholder. It justifies war to the Christian nations, and teaches non-resistance to the Peace Society, etc., ad infinitum. Surely a book of such diversified and opposit interpretation is utterly unfit to be the supreme law of any land. Were it our supreme law, then look at some of our statutes: "If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thy own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, thou shalt not consent unto him; neither shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him, but thou shalt surely kill him." This accords with Catholic faith and practice, and they would no doubt gladly execute it. Another statute would read thus: "Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself: thou shalt giv it to the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it, or thou mayest sell it unto an alien;" and would not that be a capital dose for the immigrant Irishman when he lands? Another law would read: "And thou shalt bestow that money [money procured by selling wine, etc.] for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink." Would not that make a magnificent plank for your Prohibition platform? But why add? Now, dear sir, permit me to urge you to reconsider your position, join with us, and help to secularize our government, so as to rescue it from the evil designs of the anti-republican, Christian plotters who would overthrow our free institutions.

Very truly, W. W. WALKER.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - NOVEMBER 2, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00

Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Bible Advocacy of Prohibition and Woman Suffrage.

The following queer letter was received last month:

"OLYMPIA, W. T., Sept. 7, 1889.

"EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER: Hav received THE TRUTH (?) SEEKER for six months. I never ordered it or sent money for it, although you sent card acknowledging receipt of $1.50 in payment for the paper. I know nothing about it. Probably some friend (?) ordered it for me. Do not want the paper. Please stop it at once. While your attack on the churches is not without ample grounds, your attack on the religion of Christ, per se, is outrageous and unwarranted, and you strive to bring the genuin article into disrepute. I do not wish a paper that speaks against my best friend and Redeemer.

"Stop THE TRUTH (?) SEEKER.

"P.S.—Of course the Roman church is the beast of blasphemy, and Rome the horrible whore of Revelation, and true Christians claim nothing else. It is from fear arising from the fact of its great power that shuts mincing, clerical mouths on that as well as all other questions. It is undermining our American Institutions, and the Powers that be are 'fools, and blind,' and cowards that 'Strain at a gnat and swallow a camel.' The Bible, the Bible, is the great remedy for all. It does not teach intemperance—it forbids it. It is for Prohibition and Woman Suffrage from Genesis to Revelations, and those who say it is not will not 'search and look' to ascertain.

"THE TRUTH (?) SEEKER is a misnomer. Old Satan lied, mixing truth with the same, from the beginning, and has thus destroyed thousands of souls and bodies in Hell. Notwithstanding you picture him alongside of the Almighty (screened) and accuse the latter of cruelty, at the same time excusing the former from the same, though guilty of the blood of souls and bodies. 'And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.' 'I am the way, the truth, and the life,' Jesus said. Praise God! Although all the existing churches should go out in darkness, I fear nothing for the great invisible church which shall rise phenix-like from their ashes—Christ's true, pure religion, consisting of 'every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.' May the Holy Ghost open your blind eyes blinded by the God of this world to the truth of his word and the lost condition of your souls and the falsity of your teachings.

"Yours truly, AGNES W. PRATHER,
(or) MRS. T. PRATHER."

Mrs. Prather need not worry about the financial part of our six months' acquaintance, and she need not hav THE TRUTH SEEKER if she does not want it.

We do not know whether Rome and the Roman church are all that she alleges or not. Concerning Old Satan's veracity we are also in doubt, though in holy writ we find that he usually told the truth and the other fellow the lies, as see Genesis, in which it is recorded that God said that if Adam ate the apple he should die while Satan reversed the edict. Perhaps, however, the Lord has reformed and Satan gone to the bad. We cannot believe, though, that he has destroyed all the souls our fair but wrathy correspondent credits him with doing, for God, as we understand it, is responsible for the creation of hell and its China-like plethora of population. Altogether, Mrs. Prather knows so many things toward which we are forced to assume an Agnostic attitude, that we wonder she should be so completely ignorant of the Bible's position on the prohibition and woman suffrage questions. For her benefit, and perhaps the benefit of others, we will consider the two matters briefly:

First, as to prohibition of wine drinking. On this, as on the doctrins obtained from the Bible, the book has divers things to say. In about a dozen places it condemns liquor drinking, while in other equally authoritativ passages it orders liquor to be drank, approves and defends its use. We must judge its intent, therefore, by the preponderant evidence and by the general tenor of the chapters wherein the subject is mentioned. Against the paltry dozen of condemnations of wine there are seventy or eighty commands to use it, and mentions of its use without condemnation. In these instances, and in others where its use is condemned only on certain occasions, holy writ not only records its drinking as an ordinary and beneficent thing, but it absolutely orders its use. Wine is even blessed by the Lord and drank by him, if Moses was his authorized spokesman (see Deut. vii, 13; Judges ix, 13). Has Mrs. Prather read also these passages?

"That I will giv you the rain of your land in his due season, the first rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thy oil" (Deut. xi, 14).

"And thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink, or for whatsoever thy soul desireth; and thou shalt eat there before the Lord thy God, and thou shalt rejoice, thou, and thine household" (Deut. xiv, 26).

"Thou shalt furnish him liberally out of thy flock, and out of thy floor, and out of thy wine-press" (Deut. xv, 14).

"And he dealt among all the people, even among the whole multitude of Israel, as well to the women as men, to every one a cake of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine" (2 Sam. vi, 19).

"For the children of Israel and the children of Levi shall bring the offering of the corn, of the new wine, and the oil, and we will not forsake the house of our God" (Neh. x, 39).

"And wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and oil to make his face to shine, and bread which strengtheneth man's heart" (Ps. civ, 15).

"Giv strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be of heavy heart. Let him drink and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more" (Prov. xxxi, 6, 7).

"Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart; for God now accepteth thy works" (Eccl. ix, 7).

"Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth; for thy love is better than wine" (Song of Sol. i, 2).

"In that day sing ye unto her, a vineyard of red wine. I the Lord do keep it; I will water it every moment; lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day" (Isa. xxvii, 2, 3).

"Thus saith the Lord, As the new wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it, so I will do for my servants' sake, that I may not destroy them all" (Isa. lxv, 8).

"And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus saith unto him, They hav no wine. Jesus saith unto her, Woman, what hav I to do with thee? Mine hour is not yet come. His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it. And there were set there six water-pots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece. Jesus saith unto them, Fill the water-pots with water. And they filled them up to the brim. And he saith unto them, Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast. And they bare it. When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was was made wine, and knew not where it was (but the servants which drew the water knew), the governor of the feast called the bridegroom, and saith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men hav well drunk, then that which is worse; but thou hast kept the good wine until now" (John ii, 3–11).

"Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities" (1 Tim. v, 23).

Here we see that God regulated the weather to suit winemakers; that he commanded his people to buy strong drink when they desired it; that the slave set free in the seventh year should be liberally furnished with wine (Deut. xv, 12–14); that David, a king whom God valued highly, distributed wine to the women by flagonsful; that God accepted offerings of wine as graciously as offerings of oil and flesh; that the wisest man advocates drunkenness in order to forget poverty; that a man may drink wine with a merry heart when God has accepted his works; that wine is a measure with which to compare kisses; that the Lord himself promises to keep a vineyard; that the first miracle that Jesus ever performed was to make wine, and that Exhorter Timothy urged the use of wine in moderation. These quotations from the Bible—that "great remedy for all"—could be largely extended, and whole chapters quoted which plainly prove that drinking wine was common among the Lord's people and prophets and regarded by them and the Lord as a wholesome and necessary indulgence. In addition to what we hav written, we commend to Mrs. Prather's studious attention a little pamphlet published at this office called, "Bible Temperance."

Respecting woman suffrage the Bible is equally clear to those who "look and search." Woman suffrage is a movement to giv to woman the right to help choose her rulers. We are loth to think that Mrs. Prather does not know how the church has regarded this movement. There cannot be an issue raised about it. The church in all lands, in all times, has been determinedly opposed to woman's taking any part in the government of either church or state. The opponents of woman suffrage to-day are the orthodox; its advocates, the Infidels. This Mrs. Prather will probably admit, so we may turn once more to holy writ and see what that has to say about allowing woman to choose her rulers.

In Genesis—from which book to Revelation Mrs. Prather says the Bible teaches woman suffrage—woman is told,

"Thy desire shall be to thy husband and he shall rule over thee."

This, it seems to us, does not effectivly support Mrs. Prather's statement. If the husband shall rule over his wife, the choice of rulers would appear to be settled, and she need not vex her heart about it. In Exodus we are further told that "If a man sell his daughter . . . [and] if she please not her master, then shall he let her be redeemed."

Does the daughter hav any choice in selecting her ruler in this instance? In Deuteronomy, we find the Lord's command,

"When thou comest nigh unto a city, . . . and when the Lord thy God hath delivered it into thy hands . . . the women thou shalt take unto thyself."

Anything about letting them choose their own rulers in that?

"And David took him more concubines and wives out of Jerusalem."

Did those ladies hav a chance to "pop the question" and pick out the husband to rule over them? In Numbers the law for woman is laid down by a "Thus saith the Lord" to the effect that

"Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the soul, her husband may establish it, or her husband may make it void."

Would a married lady, when that law was in force, possess much independence of thought? In the second book of Samuel there is another "Thus saith the Lord." It reads:

"Thus saith the Lord, Behold, . . . I will take thy wives before thy eyes and giv them unto thy neighbors."

A neighborly act, truly, but the germ of the woman suffrage movement is not to be found in that threat. Turning to the New Testament, we find in some books preceding the nightmare of Revelation this advocacy of the movement:

"Wives, submit yourselvs to your own husbands" (Col. iii, 18).

"As the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything" (Eph. v, 24).

"Let your women keep silence in the churches, for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for a woman to speak in the church" (1 Cor. xiv, 34, 35).

"Ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands. . . For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselvs, being in subjection to their own husbands; even as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord" (1 Pet. iii, 1–6).

"Let woman learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression" (1 Tim. ii, 11–14).

These are but a few of the hundreds of passages in the "great remedy for all," showing how woman is viewed by the Lord, whose "every word that proceedeth out of his mouth" is regarded by Mrs. Prather as the "true, pure religion of Christ." Had we room, Mrs. Prather could be overwhelmed with passages discoverable by a very brief "search and look." Her failure to find them herself is remarkable in a person who can see thousands of souls and bodies in hell.

We fear that Mrs. P. is a good woman who feels much more than she reasons, and concludes from prejudices rather than from facts.

The Ministers Don't Want to Be Righteous.

Perhaps the attempted revision of religious standards that will most sensibly commend itself to the public is that of the Episcopal Prayer-book, made by the general convention last week. The proposed amendment was in the gymnastic exercises of the morning and evening prayer, at the thirteenth and twenty-fifth pages of the big print (the manufacturers of our Prayer-book forgot to page it), following a prayer composed of lines from the Apostles', Athanasian, and Nicene creeds, to be said by the minister and the people standing. After this, as our Episcopalian readers know, they all kneel, devoutly, and the minister says:

"The Lord be with you.
Answer. And with thy spirit.
Minister. Let us pray.
O Lord, show thy mercy upon us.
Answer. And grant us thy salvation.
Minister. O God, make clean our hearts within us.
Answer. And take not thy Holy Spirit from us."

Between the answer, "And grant us thy salvation," and the versicle, or little verse, following, the revisers wanted to put in several things for the minister and people to say, the important addition being this, addressed to the Lord by the minister:

"Endue thy ministers with righteousness."

It is a great pity that the measure fell through by a negativ vote of 152 to 129, and that the church must continue to struggle along without the help of the Lord to keep its ministers in the straight and narrow path. It was a good and needed amendment.

Spiritualism Not Insanity.

Our Spiritualistic readers and friends will undoubtedly be greatly gratified to learn that the New Jersey Prerogativ court has decided that a belief in Spiritualism is not insanity. The question came up as to whether a believer in that other-world philosophy could make a valid will, and the august Prerogativ court has decided that he can. The case was that of Middleditch vs. Williams, and the court said:

"The testator's belief in Spiritualism was not a morbid fancy, but a conviction produced by evidence. The proofs show that when he first commenced attending what are called 'séances' he was inclined to be skeptical. Afterward his mind seemed to be in an unstable condition; he sometimes believed and at others doubted, and it was not until the spirits gave an extraordinary exhibition of their power by printing or painting on a pin worn by his mother-in-law on her neck, in brilliant letters which sparkled like diamonds, the word 'Dickie,' a pet name of his dead wife, that his last doubts as to the reality of the manifestations were removed. Believing, as I do, that these manifestations were correctly described by Vice-Chancellor Gifford in Lyon vs. Home, L. R., 6 Eq. 655–681, when he called them 'mischievous nonsense, well calculated on the one hand to delude the vain, the weak, the foolish, and the superstitious, and on the other to assist the projects of the needy and of the adventurer,' still it seems to me to be entirely clear that it cannot be said that a person who does believe in their reality is, because of such belief, of unsound mind or subject to an insane delusion. No court has yet so held. No cases on this subject were cited on the argument. Those which I hav examined uniformly hold that a belief in Spiritualism is not insanity. The court, in Robinson vs. Adams, 62 Me. 369, said: 'Belief in Spiritualism is not insanity, nor an insane delusion. The term "delusion," as applied to insanity, is not a mere mistake of fact, or the being misled by false testimony or statements to believe that a fact exists which does not exist.' And in Brown vs. Ward, 53 Md. 376, it was said: 'The court cannot say, as matter of law, that a person is insane because he holds the belief that he can communicate with spirits [of the dead], and can be and is advised and directed by them in his business transactions and in the disposal of his property.' Substantially the same view was expressed in Otto vs. Doty, 61 Iowa, 23, and also in the matter of Smith's will, 52 Wis. 543. The utmost length to which any court has gone on this subject is to declare that a belief in Spiritualism may justify the setting aside of a will, when it is shown that the testator, through fear, dread, or reverence of the spirit with which he believed himself to be in communication, allowed his will and judgment to be overpowered, and in disposing of his property followed implicitly the directions which he believed the spirit gave him, but in such case the will is set aside, not on the ground of insanity, but of undue influence."

"For all the favors which we hav received and are about to receive, make us, O Lord, truly thankful."

THE well-known comic paper Puck has often given cartoons representing the evil acts of the Catholic churchmen, and exposed these acts in its letter-press as well. The Irish Catholics of our cities hav raged against it long, and hav now started a boycott against it. Fanatical young Irishmen go about to the saloons and barber-shops where that paper is kept, and threaten the proprietors with loss of custom. A Freethinker friend of ours was in a barber-shop the other day when one of the papist agents walked in, picked up a Puck, glanced angrily at the first-page cartoon representing a villainous-faced priest dragging American children out of our public schools, and said: "Let me tell you, if you don't stop taking this paper all your customers will be taken away and you will hav to shut your shop. If you don't stop it I'll never come here again!" Our friend spoke up: "I'll never come here again if you do stop." So the poor barber was in a sorry quandary. As the larger part of the population of his neighborhood is Catholic, he will probably stop.

(Continued from page 697.)

10. Resolved, That we oppose the National Reform Association in its attempt to enact national marriage and divorce laws conformed to the principles of the Christian religion; that as marriage is a civil contract the assumption of ecclesiastical supervision therefore is an impertinence to be repelled.

11. Resolved, That as the life work of Secularists is frequently belied at death by burial with ecclesiastical rites, we recommend all who would avoid this kind of misrepresentation, after they are powerless to prevent it, to compel observance of their wishes by testamentary provision making inheritance depend upon compliance with and respect for their wishes.

12. Resolved, That after various experiments in devising methods for promoting our objects, we hav by the action of this Congress endeavored to put the Union on a practical, business basis, in shape for continued effectiv work, and we therefore invite the earnest coöperation of all Liberal or Secular persons and societies, and contributions to the treasury which shall make it possible to forward all our projects expeditiously.

Mr. Savage, who sat on the platform, kept his right foot beating subdued approbation of most of the resolutions as they were read. Dr. Westbrook added to these a resolution thanking THE TRUTH SEEKER particularly, and the Investigator, Freethought, and Truth, for the space they hav devoted to the work of the Union. The resolutions were then voted on and carried. At the conclusion of the proceedings several persons joined the Union as annual members.

SUNDAY EVENING.

The lecture Sunday evening was by T. B. Wakeman, of New York, on "Our Nine Demands—a Plea for Simple Justice, Nothing More." He pointed out that the great gift of America to the world, and for which its discovery and settlement should be celebrated throughout the centuries, was not Indian corn, nor the potato, nor the turkey, but the practical gift of the idea that all "just powers" of government rested upon "the consent of the governed"—that this is the cornerstone of all American republics, and completely retires from politics all gods, popes, priests, and kings. That idea made the great difference between the Old World, Europe, and America, the New—between authority and consent, "subjects" and citizens, obedience and coöperation, tyranny and freedom, ignorance and education. The Declaration inspired by Paine and written by Jefferson was the greatest document, for this reason, ever written. To this new foundation of consent the Secularists only are practically and consistently true. On this their Nine Demands rest; by it they insist that the unjust powers of government, by which they are by indirect taxation compelled to support churches and sectarian charities, pay for chaplains, hav Bibles read in schools, and are compelled to take religious oaths, and observe religious fasts and festivals, and the religious Sabbath, etc., are all infractions of the American idea of government, and of the Declaration of Independence, and of the Constitution of the United States.

The present attempts of the religious National Reform Association to put God and Christ and the Bible into our state and national constitutions and laws compel us to examin the truth and value of that Bible and those conceptions for which we are compelled to pay. In so doing it is not our fault if the sawdust falls out of the idols or dolls, because they cannot stand scientific examination.

Mr. Wakeman then took up the theological conceptions of God, Christ, the Bible, etc., and insisted that their advocates were not at all agreed upon what they were, or their age or locality, and that they were names used by their worshipers only as a means of retaining and obtaining money and power by unjust powers "not resting upon the consent of the governed."

Christians of the United States: you differ as to everything in theology; do you really agree in anything except this robbery and tyranny over those who differ from you? Can you not hav the simple, American justice to cease to use these unjust powers which do not rest upon the consent of the governed? Before you make us pay more money to worship your God, you must giv us some accurate description or definition of him by legislativ authority. You ought not to make us take a God like a pig in a poke. How does money exacted for him do us any good? Was it for want of money or praise that he stayed not the earthquake at Charleston or the waters at Johnstown? All this attempt to change the order of nature in this scientific age is merely a blasphemous fraud. But sometimes it has a ludicrous side in its grim irony. A few weeks ago a stroke of lightning burnt up Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle in Brooklyn. Why? Was it to escape the blasphemy of that morning's "service?" Why not? Yet the doctor at once moves into a more appropriate theater and informs the world that God burnt his church because it was too small, and as a hint to beg money to build a larger one. But may he not be wrong in this? May not the logic of the traditional Pennsylvania Dutchman be nearer the truth? He had contributed largely to build a church which had been destroyed by lightning. When asked to re-subscribe he said: "You say God knows everything?" "Yes." "Well, then, if he don't know enough not to thunder on his own house, he ought to go without one!"

The speaker then took up each of the other theological conceptions, as Christ, devil, heaven, hell, Sabbath, Bible, etc., and pointed out that in the light of modern science it was the simplest kind of robbery to go on exacting money and oaths and time and worship by public authority, when everybody knew that the old notions in regard to the meaning of these words had been exploded forever.

He then took up the religious National Reform Association founded on the idea that "God is the source of all power and authority in civil government and that the Lord Jesus Christ is the ruler of nations, and that the revealed will of God is of supreme authority in civil affairs." He showed that the clergy of the country were largely committed to these notions which were directly in the teeth of the Declaration of Independence, and the new era of consent of the governed; that their advocates had captured the woman suffrage and the Prohibition parties; that they had crushed out Liberal Leagues, Liberal editors, and that they now dictated to the postal department of the United States the service it should render the people on Sunday, and the Liberals and Spiritualists it should persecute under United States laws really enacted at its behest. Things hav gone so far in the revival of this old religious authority as the basis of government, that an instant rebuke must be made by the people.

The Liberal and effectiv means of doing this is to revive the Liberal Leagues and Secular Unions throughout every state of the Union, and hav them express their views to the public authorities at Washington, the state capitals, through the press, private letters, and by every means possible. Mr. Wakeman spoke with great earnestness for over an hour, and was warmly approved by the audience.

Mrs. Lucy N. Colman then made a short address showing how the God in the Constitution clergy had captured the woman's rights movement. But liberty was priceless and above all. If necessary, the women and the temperance reformers must wait until their good objects can be attained without violating the fundamental principles of American liberty.

Then Miss Susan Wixon read an admirable address on the influence of true Liberalism on the home and family. It would drop authority out of the home as it had out of the government, and replace it by a noble love and coöperation in which each would find his and her happiness in devotion to the welfare and happiness of all its members. She followed out this idea with illustrations which pleased the audience immensely.

President Dr. Westbrook then said it was so late, and the last paper was so good, that nothing should be allowed to break the spell and good influence it must hav cast over all, and he declared this most successful and harmonious Congress adjourned.

J. E. REMSBURG's Eastern appointments:

Savanna, Ill.	Mon., October 28.
Polo, Ill.	Tues., 29.
Farmer City, Ill.	Wed., Thur., Fri., 30, 31, November 1.
Covington, Ind.	Sat., 2.
Crescent City, Ill.	Sun., Mon., 3, 4.
Scircleville, Ind.	Tues., Wed., Thurs., 5, 6, 7.
South Bend, Ind.	Fri., 8.
Wayland, Mich.	Sat., 9.
Hopkins, Mich.	Sun., 10.
Dorr, Mich.	Sun., 10.
Grand Rapids, Mich.	Mon., 11.
Scotts, Mich.	Tues., 12.
Port Huron, Mich.	Wed., 13.
Tipton, Mich.	Thurs., 14.
Fremont, O.	Fri., 15.
Toledo, O.	Sat., 16.
North Baltimore, O.	Sun., 17.
Quincy, O.	Mon., 18.
Bucyrus, O.	Tues., 19.
Greenwich, O.	Wed., Thurs., Fri., 20, 21, 22.
Granger, O.	Sat., Sun., 23, 24.
Hinckley, O.	Mon., Tues., 25, 26.
Warren, Pa.	Wed., 27.
Kinzna, Pa.	Thurs., 28.
East Randolph, N. Y.	Fri., 29.
Newark, N. Y.	Sat., 30.
Lyons, N. Y.	Sun., December 1.
Utica, N. Y.	Mon., 2.
Schenevus, N. Y.	Tues., 3.
Worcester, N. Y.	Wed., 4.
Poughkeepsie, N. Y.	Thurs., 5.
New York, N. Y.	Fri., 6.
New London, Conn.	Sat., 7.
Brooklyn, N. Y.	Sun., 8.
Pine Grove, Pa.	Mon., 9.
Coalport, Pa.	Tues., Wed., 10, 11.
Greensburg, Pa.	Thurs., 12.
Wheeling, W. Va.	Fri., 13.
Millersburg, O.	Sat., Sun., 14, 15.
Boston, Ind.	Mon., Tues., 16, 17.
Strasburg, Ill.	Wed., 18.
Newton, Ill.	Thurs., Fri., 19, 20.
Olney, Ill.	Sat., 21.
Centralia, Ill.	Sun., 22.
St. Louis, Mo.	Mon., 23.

Mr. Remsburg was obliged to omit the following towns from his program, either because they failed to notify him in time, or because particular dates were requested which he was unable to grant: Alliance, O.; Vineland, N. J.; Bradford, Pa; Portsmouth, O.; Sturgis, Mich.; Angola, Ind.; Ekin, Ind.; Cairo, Ill.; New Castle, O.; Bladensburg, O.; Ithaca, N. Y.; Watkins, N. Y.; Garretsville, O.; Knightstown, Ind.; Spiceland, Ind.; Yonkers, N. Y.; Yates City, Ill.; Renfrew, Pa.; Sing Sing, N. Y.; Martinsburg, W. Va. Philadelphia, Pa.; Doylestown, Pa.: Pomeroy, O.

EVOLUTION:
A SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.
By Capt. R. C. Adams.
"One of the cheapest and best books on the subject."
Paper, 15 cents.

Advancement of Science
The Belfast Address.
By PROF. JOHN TYNDALL.
With Portrait, Biographical Sketch, and Articles on Prayer.
Paper, 12mo, 105 pp., 25 cents.
Address and Portrait only, 69pp. 10 cents.

AGE OF REASON.
INVESTIGATION OF
TRUE AND FABULOUS THEOLOGY.
By THOMAS PAINE.
Paper, 8vo, 112 pages, 15 cents; 6 copies, $1.
With Examination of the Prophecies, pap. 40c.

ALAMONTADA,
THE GALLEY SLAVE.
By J. H. D. Zschokke.
"A philosophical romance."
Paper, 25 cents.

LIFE OF JESUS.
His Character and Doctrin.
Being a chapter from "Analysis of Religious Belief."
By Viscount Amberley.
Paper, 8vo, 170pp., 25 cents.

Answers to Christian Questions and Arguments.
By D. M. BENNETT.
Paper, 146pp., 25 cents.

AWFUL DISCLOSURES OF MARIA MONK.
CONVENT MYSTERIES.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

GHOST OF ST. JOHNS.
By M. Babcock.
Price, 15 cents.

RELIGION OF HUMANITY better than
ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.
By M. Babcock.
Price, 10 cents.

ROARING LION ON THE TRACK.
By M. Babcock.
Price, 10 cents.

SUPERSTITION:
RELIGION OF
"BELIEVE OR BE DAMNED."
By M. Babcock.
Price, 15 cents.

Why Don't God Kill the Devil?
By M. Babcock.
Price, 25 cents.

THE CLERGYMAN'S VICTIMS.
A LIBERAL STORY. By Mrs. J. E. Ball.
Price, 25 cents.

JESUS CHRIST:
His LIFE,
TEACHINGS, and IMPERFECTIONS.
By W. S. Bell.
Price, 25 cents.

RESURRECTION of JESUS:
CONTRADICTIONS Involved In.
By W. S. Bell.
Price, 10 cents.

FIRST EPISTLE of
BENNETT, Apostle, to TRUTH SEEKERS.
By D. M. Bennett.
Price, 10 cents.

GODS OF SUPERSTITION.
By D. M. Bennett.
Price, 8 cents.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

BURGESS-UNDERWOOD DEBATE
ON CHRISTIANITY.
Between B. F. Underwood and Prof. O A. Burgess, Pres. of N. W. Christian Univ.
Paper, 188pp., 50 cts.; clo., 80.

COMMON SENSE
By THOMAS PAINE.
Written in 1776.
Price, . . . 15 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity.
By B. F. Underwood.
Price, 10 cents.

IS AMERICA THE NEW WORLD?
By L. L. Dawson.
Price, . . 10 cents.

DEACON SKIDMORE'S LETTERS.
(Zion Hill Baptist.) His Evolution out of Christianity. By D. M. Bennett. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

ECCE DIABOLUS.
Jehovah-Worship and Devil-Worship Identical—i.e., Bloody Sacrifices and Burnt Offerings.
By the Very Rev. Evan Davies, Arch-Druid of Great Britain.
Price, . . 25 cents,

RELIGIOUS POSITIVISM;
OR, Positivist Calendar. Brief Exposition of the Comtean System.
Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50.

Eight Scientific Tracts.
EVOLUTION, DARWINISM, etc.
By B. F. Underwood and others.
Price, 20 cents.

EPIDEMIC DELUSIONS.
By F. R. Marvin, M.D.
Price, 10 cents.

Essay on Miracles.
By DAVID HUME.
Price, 10 cents.

ESSAYS AND LECTURES
By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Paper, 300pp., 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.
By T. E. Longshore.
5c., 50c. per doz., 25 for $1.

THE UNSEEN WORLD.
By Prof. John Fiske.
Price, 10 cents.

GOSPEL OF ATHEISM.
By Annie Besant.
Price, 10 cents.

GOTTLIEB: HIS LIFE.
A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell.
By S. P. Putnam.
Price, 25 cents.

Heathens of the Heath.
RADICAL ROMANCE.
By Wm. McDonnell.
500pp., paper, 80 cents.

HOLY BIBLE ABRIDGED.
The passages unfit for family reading.
Pap., 30c.; clo., 50.

THE LOGIC OF DEATH,
OR,
Why Should the Atheist fear to Die?
By J. G. Holyoake.
Price, 5 cents.

THE LOGIC OF LIFE,
DEDUCED FROM
The Principle of Freethought.
By G. J. Holyoake.
Price, 5 cents.

Secular Responsibility
By G. J. Holyoake.
Price, 5 cents.

GENESIS I, II:
BIBLE NARRATIVE OF CREATION.
By A. R. Grote, A.M.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

Godly Women of the Bible,
A History of
ALL THE WOMEN WHO FIGURE IN THE BIBLE.
BY
An Ungodly Woman of the XIXth Century.
Pap., 50c.; clo., 75.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

DID MAN FALL?
The Location and Topography of the Garden of Eden a Fact.
IS THE GARDEN ALSO A FACT?
$5,000 REWARD.
By ISRAEL W. GROH, Author of "Is the God of Israel the True God?"
Paper, 10 cents.

The Candle From Under the Bushel
(Mark iv, 21); or,
1,306 Questions to the Clergy:
And for the Consideration of Others.
Instructive, Interesting, and Laughable.
By WILLIAM HART.
Price, - - - - 50 cents.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS
OF
THE BIBLE.
144 PROPOSITIONS, Theological, Moral, Historical, and Speculative, each proved affirmatively and negatively by quotations from scripture, without comment; embodying the most palpable and striking self-contradictions of the so-called inspired word of God.
By W. H. Burr. 72 pages. Price, 15 cents.

DANIEL THE DREAMER.
By A. Holyoake.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

Specimen of The Bible. Esther.
By A. Holyoake.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

Acts of The Apostles. A Farce.
By A. Holyoake.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity.
By A. Holyoake.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.
By M. D. Conway.
Price, - - - 5 cents.

EVOLUTION OF ISRAEL'S GOD.
By A. L. Rawson.
Price, - - 10 cents.

THE NEW AGE.
By W. S. Bell.
Price, - - 10 cents.

If You Take Away My Religion What Will You Give Me Instead?
By Martin.
Price, - - - 10 cents.

A PLEA FOR ATHEISM
By Charles Bradlaugh.
Price. 10 cents.

Dialogue Between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin.
Price, 10 cents.

Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian.
Price, 10 cents.

Men, Women, and Gods,
And Other Lectures.
By Helen H. Gardener.
With an Introduction by R. G. Ingersoll.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

WOMAN:
Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs.
By B. F. Underwood.
Price, 10 cents.

MATERIALISM:
Its History and Its Influence upon Society.
By Dr. Louis Buchner, Author of "Force and Matter," etc.
Translated from the German.
Paper, 12mo, 15 cents.

Christian Absurdities.
BY JOHN PECK.
Price 20 cents; six copies for $1.

Confessional: Romish and Anglican.
An Exposé.
By Saladin. Price, 30 cents.

Did Jesus Christ Rise From the Dead?
By Saladin.
Price, - - - 25 Cents.

WILL THE COMING MAN WORSHIP GOD?
By B. F. Underwood.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

SISTER LUCY
AND HER AWFUL DISCLOSURES.
As to New Hall Convent.
And a Few Words on Auricular Confession.
Price, 10 cents.

POSITIVIST CALENDAR.
Each day and month of the year being named after the great benefactors of the race, whose portraits are given. Instituted by Aug. Comte.
Cards, 11x14; printed on both sides, 25 cents; on two cards, 35 cents.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH.
J. E. Remsburg.
Price, 10 cents; per dozen, 75 cents.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE.
Liquor-Drinking Commended, Defended, and Enjoined by the Bible.
By E. C. Walker.
10 cents.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES.
A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.
By J. K. Ingalls.
Price, 25 cents.

Science and Theology.
ANCIENT AND MODERN.
By J. A. Froude.
Price, . . . 25 cents.

Ingersoll on McGlynn
3c., 30c. per dozen, $2 per 100.

LAY SERMON.
On the Labor Question.
By R. G. INGERSOLL.
Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per doz.; $1 for 25.

ROBT. G. INGERSOLL'S
OPENING SPEECH TO THE JURY
in the suit of the Bankers' and Merchants' Telegraph Company against the Western Union Telegraph Company
Price, 10 cents.

THE STAGE AND THE PULPIT.
By R. G. INGERSOLL.
Price, 3 cents; 30 cents per dozen; $2 per 100.

THE TRUTH OF HISTORY.
By R. G. INGERSOLL.
Price, 3 cents; 30 cents per dozen; $2 per 100.

Is the God of Israel the True God?
Narrative of the Five Books of Moses, Joshua, Judges, and the New Testament.
Price, 25 cents.

Masonic Vindication of Right.
Protest Against Persecution.
By O. B. Whitford, M.D.
Price, 15 cents.

MIRACLES
AND MIRACLE-WORKERS.
By JOHN PECK.
Price, . . 10 cents.

THE ORDER OF CREATION.
A DISCUSSION BETWEEN
GLADSTONE, HUXLEY, MULLER, LINTON, REVILLE.
On the Conflict between Genesis and Geology.
12mo, 178 pages, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

"Our Father in Heaven."
By Chas. Stephenson.
1 cent; 50 cents per hundred; $3 per thousand.

PERSONAL EXISTENCE AFTER DEATH IMPROBABLE.
By L. R. Smith.
10 cents.

WHAT LIBERALISM OFFERS IN PLACE OF CHRISTIANITY.
By B. F. Underwood.
Price, 10 cents.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

MATERIALISM AND CRIME.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 5 cents.

AN OUTLINE OF THE
French Revolution
ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.
By W. S. BELL.
Paper, 12mo, 25 cents.

MORTALITY OF THE SOUL.
IMMORTALITY OF ITS ELEMENTS.
By A. S. de Pellegrini.
Paper, - - - 15 cents.

PHILOSOPHY of SPIRITUALISM
AND TREATMENT OF MEDIOMANIA.
By F. R. Marvin, M.D.
Cloth, . . . 50 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY.
By VOLTAIRE.
Terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of theological terms.
Price, 25 cents.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY EXPOSED.
By REV. G. T. FOX, M.A.
15 cents.

PRO AND CON OF Supernatural Religion.
Have We a Supernatural, Inspired, Miraculous Religion?
By E. E. GUILD.
Paper, 20 cents; cloth, 30 cents.

PYRAMID OF GIZEH.
Ancient Egyptian Civilization and Hebrew Narrative in Genesis and Exodus.
By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D.
Price, 15 cents.

QUESTION SETTLED.
BIBLICAL and MODERN SPIRITUALISM.
By MOSES HULL.
Price, 60 cents.

Rational Communism.
THE PRESENT AND FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.
Advocates associate life and employment as a preventive of vice, crime, poverty, etc.
By A CAPITALIST.
Paper, 498pp., 50 cts.; clo., $1.

Relation of Witchcraft to Religion.
By A. C. LYALL.
Price, 10 cents.

Fruits of Philosophy.
POPULATION QUESTION.
By Dr. Knowlton. Edited by Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant.
25 cents.

TRUTH. A Poem. By E. N. Kingsley. 10 cents.

POVERTY: Its Cause and Cure.
How the Poor May Attain Comfort and Independence.
By M. G. H.
Price, . . 10 cents.

Religion of Inhumanity.
With a Glance at the Religion of Humanity.
BY FREDERIC HARRISON.
Price, 15 cents.

RELIGION:
The Gibraltar of the World, as Now Constituted.
By George T. Bondies.
With
Exceptions to the Character of Christ as a Gentleman.
By W. T. Purviance.
25 cents.

IMAGE BREAKER.
By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Six Lectures.
Decline of Faith.
Protestant Intolerance.
Washington an Unbeliever.
Jefferson an Unbeliever.
Paine and Wesley.
Christian Sabbath.
Each, 5 cents; bound, pap., 25 cents; per doz., 40.

SABBATH BREAKING.
By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Price, 25 cents.

St. Matthew Before the Court
FOR THE CRIME OF FORGERY.
By SECULARIST.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.
Including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, Bible.
By D. M. BENNETT.
(From Vol. II. "Gods and Religions.")
333pp., pap., 60 c.; clo., $1.

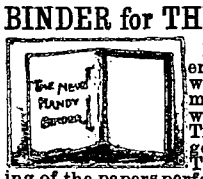
For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.
MEN, WOMEN & GODS.
BY HELEN H. GARDENER,
Introduction by
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.
Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.
The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.
Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

THE STRUGGLE
FOR
Religious and Political Liberty.
In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.
By THEO. C. SPENCER.
Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.
A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.
Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.
For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Career of Jesus Christ.
An Expos tion of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.



ROMANISM,
OR DANGER AHEAD.
The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.
By A. J. GROVER.
Price, paper, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.
Ten Cents Each.
1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By D. ROSSITER RAYMOND.
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth. By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES.
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL.
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR HOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

AN HOUR WITH THE DEVIL.
By D. M. BENNETT.
Price. - - - 10 cents.

THE
UNIVERSE ANALYZED
By JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,
Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.
The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productiv of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav tho immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.
Cloth, 12mo, $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

NEW EDITION.
The Secret of the East,
OR,
The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.
BY FELIX L. OSWALD.
Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.
Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

SAKYA BUDDHA.
A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.
With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."
BY E. D. ROOT.
I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.
The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.
Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

L. K. Washburn's Works.
Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.
The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.
The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.
Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.
Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.
Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.
Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.
Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.
The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.
The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.
Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.
Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

Essence of Religion.
By L. FEUERBACH.
Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.
The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Argument by R. G. Ingersoll
IN THE
TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS
FOR
"BLASPHEMY,"
At Morristown, New Jersey.
Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.
Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.
By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES:
A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.
By J. K. INGALLS.
Price, - - 25 cents.

The Forum.
Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257
meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,
Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.
Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.
The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 7 o'clock.

The Minneapolis Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.: CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association
Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Elizur Wright Secular Union
Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10:30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

DIAMONDS.
Unprecedented offer. No other house so fair In order to giv my Liberal friends throughout the United States an opportunity to examin, test, and compare my goods and prices with those of other diamond merchants, I will sell any piece of Diamond Jewelry, accompanied by contract that cash in full will be refunded any time within one year from date of purchasing if goods are not entirely satisfactory. No other dealer will do it. None will sell as cheap. Carrying a large stock, being an expert, close buyer, and doing business on smallest possible expense, you will positivly save twenty to thirty per cent by purchasing of me. Diamond Pins and Eardrops, worth $600. for $400; Pins, Rings, Eardrops, Studs, Hair Ornaments, Pendants, worth $300, for $200; do., worth $200, for $140; do., worth $150, for $110; do., worth $100, for $70; do., worth $80, for $60; do., worth $60, for $45; do., worth $40, for $30; do., worth $30, for $22; do., worth $20, for $15. You can wear these goods daily for one year. It will not cost you a cent. If in the mean time you are not satisfied that the goods are better and cheaper than sold elsewhere return and get your cash in full.
Selections sent to responsible parties on approval; to any banking-house or C.O.D., privilege of examination.
The "Otto Wettstein" Watch,
sixteen jewels, finely adjusted to heat and cold, patent regulator, Breguet hair-spring, beautiful double-paneled dial, and all modern improvements. Perfect, and no watch will compete with it! In silverine case, $19; in four-ounce coin silver case, $23.50; five-ounce, $25; six-ounce, $27. In open face, best filled gold case, $27; hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV., $35. In fourteen carat solid gold, $50 to $150. Sent prepaid, and cash refunded if not satisfactory.
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.
Established 1857.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.
Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 160 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.
Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, Eng.

ANTICHRIST.
PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ I crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

LIFE OF
Joshua Davidson:
MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,
As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.
BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,
Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.
Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.
☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

News of the Week.

A LARGE number of Socialist publications hav been seized just as they were being brought across the frontier into Russia.

THE recent French citizenship law in effect would make a Frenchman's son born in the United States a citizen of France, which conflicts with our Constitution.

MEXICO has had an extensiv earthquake.

BY refusal of tithes in Wales many clergy hav been brought to the verge of starvation.

THE private bank of the Rev. J. W. Powell at Fostoria, O., has suspended payment.

LONDON is threatened with a strike of bakers, who work very long hours in exceedingly hot rooms.

NEW YORK regiments in their drills practice subduing riots with the new Gatling guns devised for such purposes.

AT Greenbush, Minn., Mrs. Hiram Whittier has been burnt to death while helping save property from prairie fires.

THE Canadian government will send a steamer to the Labrador coast to relieve the hundreds of starving fishermen.

THE forty thousand Second Adventists of this country were grievously disappointed on the 25th ult., the day set for the end of the world.

HERBERT SPENCER'S autobiography, written up to date, has been put in type, and will be published at his death on both sides of the Atlantic simultaneously.

ON the 25th ult., at Kokomo, Ind., three men were burnt to death in a railway accident caused by train-wreckers who hav long been making attempts.

WISCONSIN, Minnesota, and North Dakota hav suffered with prairie and forest fires. The village of Menoken, N. D., near Bismarck, was totally destroyed.

THE pope recently addressed a party of French pilgrims, advising the formation of a Catholic association to benefit labor. It is to be hoped that our troubles will not be increased by any such body.

THE old link-and-pin car coupling, which brakemen hav petitioned Congress to replace by an automatic apparatus, caused the death or injury of 325 men in Iowa last year, which is at the rate of 6,000 for the whole country.

WHILE Prince William of Wurtemburg was driving to church at Ludwigsburg on Sunday, the 20th ult., he was fired at by a man named Klaiber, who exclaimed: "It is high time Wurtemburg had a Catholic king!" The would-be assassin is supposed to be deranged.

AT the Protestant Episcopal convention the Rev. Paulus Moort, colored, of Cape Palmas, Africa, in soliciting attention to the labor problem, said: "If the church had taken a more activ and decided part regarding the suppression of slavery it would hav obviated the shedding of so much human blood, for the war would hav been unnecessary."

THE death is announced of Joule, the scientist who made the discoveries, among the greatest of the century, of the conservation of energy and the mechanical equivalence of heat. He illustrates the saying that the world knows nothing of its greatest men, for, while he is ranked by men of science with Darwin and Newton, the public knows nothing of him, but thinks its great men are preachers and politicians.

GRAAFSCHAP, Mich., peopled by Dutch, attributes several late sicknesses to some concealed witch. Pillows and feather beds are opened and carefully examined. The bunches formed inside in time are called crowns, wreaths, chickens, or any imaginable thing. The "feather devils," as they are called, are burnt. In some cases live chickens hav been put in kettles and slowly boiled to death, in order to counteract or repel the evil one.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Gems of Thought.

CERTAIN feelings there are of our common nature, which even the slavish loyalty of the Spanish cannot eradicate, and which, from time to time, urge them to resist injustice. Such instincts are happily the inalienable lot of humanity, which we cannot forfeit, if we would, and which are too often the last resource against the extravagances of tyranny.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

How lucky it is for us all that it is somewhat unnatural for a human being to obey!—Ingersoll.

AGNOSTICISM asserts that it is wrong for a man to say that he is certain of the objectiv truth of any proposition unless he can produce evidence which logically justifies that certainty.—Huxley.

OUR great trouble is that most teachers are dishonest. They teach as certainties those things concerning which they entertain doubts. They do not say, "We think this is so," but "We know this is so."—Ingersoll.

IF a man, holding a belief which he was taught in childhood or persuaded of afterward, keeps down and pushes away any doubts which arise about it in his mind, purposely avoids the reading of books and the company of men that call in question or discuss it, and regards as impious those questions which can not easily be asked without disturbing it—the life of that man is one long sin against mankind.—Wm. Kingdon Clifford in The Scientific Basis of Morals.

A MAN may be a heretic in the truth; and if he believe things only because his pastor says so, or the assembly so determin, without knowing other reason though his belief be true, yet the very truth he holds becomes his heresy.—Milton.

EVERY mind should be true to itself—should think, investigate, and conclude for itself. This is a duty incumbent alike upon pauper and prince.—Ingersoll.

WOMEN govern us—let us render them perfect; the more they are enlightened, so much the more shall we be. On the cultivation of the mind of woman depends the wisdom of man. It is by women that nature writes on the hearts of men.—Sheridan.

MAN'S wild force, in constant motion,
Spurns the bounds by truth assigned;
And, on passion's stormy ocean,
To and fro is tossed his mind.
Peace his bosom visits never,
As he heaps up scheme on scheme,
And through space pursues forever
Each vain phantom of his dream.

But with her sweet look, so soft and enchaining,
Woman, the fugitiv gently restraining,
Summons him back to the regions of earth;
The daughter of nature, with meekness unshaken,
The home of her mother has never forsaken—
Has ever been true to the place of her birth.
—Schiller.

As I see my soul reflected in Nature,
As I see through the mist one with inexpressible completeness, sanity, and beauty,
I see the bent head and arms folded on the breast—
The female form I see.
—Walt Whitman.

WILL anyone, save the most bigoted, contend that it is not certain gain to humanity to spread unbelief in the terrible doctrin that eternal torment is the probable fate of the great majority of the human family?—Bradlaugh.

Is it not enough to fill the brain with a happiness unspeakable to know that the words, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire," will never be spoken to one of the children of men?—Ingersoll.

IF religion were necessary to all, it ought to be intelligible to all.—D'Holbach.

YOU may reply: God knew that his book would be understood differently by each one, and intended that it should be understood as it is understood by each. If this is so, then my understanding of the Bible is the real revelation to me. If this is so, I hav no right to take the understanding of another. I must take the revelation made to me through my understanding, and by that revelation I must stand. Suppose, then, that I read this Bible honestly, fairly, and when I get through am compelled to say, "The book is not true." If this is the honest result, then you are compelled to say, either that God has made no revelation to me, or that the revelation that it is not true is the revelation made to me, and by which I am bound. If the book and my brain are both the work of the same infinit God, whose fault is it that the book and brain do not agree? Either God should hav written a book to fit my brain, or should hav made my brain to fit his book.—Ingersoll.

AN INSPIRED DREAM.

And when Gideon was come, behold, there was a man that told a dream unto his fellow, and said, Behold, I dreamed a dream, and, lo, a cake of barley-bread tumbled into the host of Midian, and came unto a tent, and smote it that it fell, and overturned it, that the tent lay along.—Judges vii, 13.

Odds and Ends.

GOOD dogs, when they die, go to the happy land of canine, of course.

WHEN he has a cold in his head is the only time Colonel Ingersoll is on his sneeze.—Texas Siftings.

ONE could fire a gun into that crowd of Adventists and kill a fool without taking aim.—New Haven Palladium.

IT is understood that we are to hav an open winter. The ground hogs are not wearing sealskin sacques.—New Orleans Picayune.

MINISTER: "Johnny, is your father a Christian?" Johnny: "Not since last week, sir. He has bought him a cheap typewriter."—Burlington Free Press.

"Do you believe in the faith cure?" asked a Washington man of an office-seeker. "No," replied the latter, "I believe in the sinecure."—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

LAWYER; "Do you understand the nature of an oath, madam?" Witness: "Well, I should say I did. My husband took off the screens yesterday, and is putting up the stovepipes to-day."

A MISUNDERSTANDING.

"And I want to say, 'To my husband,' in an appropriate place," said the widow, in conclusion, to Slab, the gravestone man. "Yessum," said Slab, "To my husband, in an appropriate place."—Chicago Liar.

MR. SMART (as the church-goers pass): "I am surprised that Miss Sweet permits Bodworth to accompany her. He's about the freshest young fellow I know." Mrs. Smart: "Perhaps that's the reason why she lets him carry her Psalter."—Boston Times.

VISITOR: "You don't mean to say that you do sewing Sundays? How can you do such a wicked thing?" Lady of the house: "Oh, but you know I always sit at the back window." Visitor: "Oh, well, that's a different thing, of course."—Boston Transcript.

"YOUNG man," said a minister to a member of his congregation, "do you know what relations you sustain in this world?" "Well, just at present the only relation I am sustaining in this world is my father-in-law, but you can just gamble on it I am not going to sustain him very long," was the reply.—Texas Siftings.

THE Hight of Cruelty: Professor (in the history class): "Mr. Fizzler, what was the torture on the wheel as practiced in the Inquisition?" Fizzler (who has not the faintest idea): "I reckon they made a fellow ride a bicycle, when they found he'd never been on a machine."

NEW PROVERBIAL PHILOSOPHY.

It is an ill wind that blows about itself.
There is no fool like a young dude.
Put a beggar on horseback and he will ask, "What's the matter with the family carriage?"
Wine is a mocker at a fifty cent table d'hote dinner.
Answer a fool according to his folly, but don't vote the Prohibition ticket with him.

AFTER THE WHIPPING.

"Pa, why am I like Jonah?"
"I'm hanged if I know. I'll hav to giv it up."
"Because I've just been whaled."

BALL DRESSES.

Mr. MacDuff: "You've been over an hour dressing and you said it wouldn't take you over twenty minutes!"
Mrs. MacDuff: "Now, don't say a word! I thought I should never get into this new gown."
Mr. MacDuff: "Well, judging from appearances, you hav not more than half succeeded."

THE parish priest
Of Austerity
Climbed up in a high church steeple,
To be nearer God
So that he might hand
His word down to his people.

When the sun was high,
When the sun was low,
The good man sat unheeding
Sublunary things,
From transcendency
Was he forever reading.

And in sermon script
He daily wrote
What he thought was sent from heaven
And he dropped this down
On his people's heads
Two times one day in seven.

And now and again,
When he heard the creak
Of the weather vane a-turning,
He closed his eyes
And said, "Of a truth
From God I now am learning."

"The Gladstone" LAMP

Is the finest lamp in the world. It gives a pure, soft, brilliant white light of 85 candle power. Purer and brighter than gas light; softer than electric light, —more cheerful than either. A Marvelous light from ordinary kerosene oil!

Seeing is Believing.

A "wonderful lamp" it is indeed. Never needs trimming, never smokes nor breaks chimneys, never "smells of the oil;" no gumming up, no leaks, no sputtering, no climbing of the flame, no annoyance of any kind, and cannot explode. And besides all these advantages it gives a clear, white light, 10 to 20 times the size and brilliancy of any ordinary house lamp! Finished in either Brass, Nickel, Gold or Antique Bronze. Also for Clergymen, Editors, College Students, Teachers, Professors, Physicians and other professional men.

The Gladstone Extension Study Lamp,

The Gladstone Banquet Lamps.
The Gladstone Piano Lamps.

Send for price list. Single lamps at wholesale price, boxed and sent by express. ☞Get our prices. "Seeing is believing."

GLADSTONE LAMP CO.,
10 East 14th St., New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 45. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, November 9, 1889. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

THE GENII WHO PRESIDE OVER THE ROADS TO KNOWLEDGE.

Notes and Clippings.

THE old report that Mr. Gladstone has secretly gone over to the Roman Catholic church is again in circulation to a certain limited extent. It comes from Roman Catholic sources.

THE bishop of St. Asaph's, in Wales, appeals to English churchmen to aid the clergy of his diocese, whose resources hav been nearly cut off by the tithe agitation. "Starvation," he says, "is an ugly word, but it represents the condition to which several of the Welsh clergy hav been reduced."

PRESIDENT CARNOT of France is an enthusiastic Shaksperian scholar. He has piles of manuscript containing his notes on the Shaksperian plays, and he has translated into French "Macbeth," "Romeo and Juliet," and "A Winter's Tale." Carnot is not a Baconian, but is willing to acknowledge that Shakspere was a magnificent plagiarist.

ON October 15th, the day of the holy St. Theresa, the patron saint of the Carmelite order, the latter was the recipient of the hunting-castle Mayerling, where the pious Don Juan, Crown-prince Rudolph of Austria, was killed by an enraged husband. The castle, a gift of the imperial family, is to be converted into a cloister for the Carmelite order.

A GENTLEMAN who died recently near Berlin desired to hav his tombstone decorated by the following legend: "I believe in one savior—in him everybody must believe, of whatever religion he may be—and he is Death, for he releases us from all our troubles." This has been done, and now the parish authorities hav requested the heirs to remove the gravestone.

AT the Universalist convention in Lynn, Mass., this resolution was accepted without demur: "Resolved, That the Universalist church of America, in general convention assembled, reaffirms the position which it has consistently held from the beginning, to wit, that it rests on and believes in the historical veracity of the New Testament records of the life and words and works of our Lord Jesus Christ." The Universalist church believes a good deal on very little evidence!

THE Jews are not very good Sabbath keepers. The Hebrew Journal says: "The mass of Hebrews of this city go no further in Sabbath support than in offering decided opposition to a Sunday movement. They do not observe the seventh day, or rather the majority do not; they make it a chief business day, but, nevertheless, they are always anxious to 'support' it in argument. Whatever words can do to support the Sabbath they are willing to supply in generous quantity, but when it comes to deeds, they beg to be excused."

HITHERTO it has been supposed that English miners in the middle of the eighteenth century first utilized parallel rails, like the modern railway tracks, in the transportation of burdens. In a "Description of the World," by Sebastian Münster, 1541, a woodcut has been found containing a representation of a little four-wheeled car loaded with ore, and with a man behind shoving it along parallel rails. The scene of the woodcut is an Alsatian mine of the first part of the sixteenth century. Münster calls the car in question instrumentum tractorum, and mentions that its four wheels were of iron.

THE Washington correspondent of the Chicago Herald writes home: "The Lord did it." That is what the president of the United States said the other day concerning the influences which brought about his nomination and election. "The Lord willed it and it had to be so. Nothing could hav stopped it. The will of the Lord has always prevailed." So says Mr. Harrison. He has said as much with different forms of expression to half a dozen or a dozen prominent politicians. He is in earnest about it, too. He has really led himself into the faith that he is one of the chosen of the almighty, and that the Lord had a hand in the campaign.

THE new census of India givs the population in March, 1888, as 269,477,728, of which 60,684,378 belonged to the nativ states. Distributed according to religion, in round numbers, the Hindoo population, in millions, is about 190; the Mohammedans, 81; "aboriginals," 6½; Buddhists, 3½; Christians, nearly 2; Sikhs, nearly 2; Jains, 1¼; while Parsees, Jews, and others are comparativly very few. The Church of England has nearly 360,000 members; other Episcopalian churches, 20,000; the church of Scotland, the same number; "other Protestants," 138,000; Roman Catholics, nearly 1,000,000; and Syrians, Armenians, and Greeks, over 300,000. About 106,000,000 males and 111,000,000 females are neither under instruction nor able to read or write. Details are given of 109 different languages spoken. Hindustani comes first with over 82 millions; then Bengali, with nearly 40; Telugu, with 17; Mahratti, also 17; Punjabi, 16; Tamil, 13; Gazrati, Canarese, Ooriya, Malayalum, Sindi, Burmese, Hindi, Assamese, Kol, Southali, and Gondi, come next in order. Next to Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras, Hyderabad is the most populous city in India, Lucknow coming next.

THE Marlboro, Mass., Times is a heretical sheet. It pokes fun at the Nicene creed, saying: "At the Episcopal convention in New York, after a long and exciting debate, it was voted by a large majority to require the Nicene creed to be recited in all the churches in public worship not less than five times in each year. The part of that creed which relates to the late lamented Lord Jesus Christ is as follows hereinafter: 'I believe in one Lord Jesus Christ, the only begotten son of God, begotten of his father before all worlds; God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God, begotten, not made, being of one substance with the Father, by whom all things were made.' If any adherent of that faith, either lay or clerical, thinks he knows what the above extract means, we should like to hav him or her furnish us with an understandable exegesis. Of course, if the belief above outlined is founded on fact, it leaves the late Mrs. Joseph, the reputed virgin mother of Christ, in a very unpleasant predicament, because she couldn't possibly hav been alive 'before all worlds;' and then, too, it is claimed that her son was the result of an overshadowing by the Holy Ghost. But perhaps the Lord Jesus Christ above referred to is not the Judean gentleman of that name. There hav been a great many Christs."

Communications.

Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?

CHAPTER VI.

TESTIMONY OF HON. WILLIAM H. HERNDON. UNPUBLISHED TESTIMONY.

Extracts from Herndon's Letters—The Books Lincoln Read—His Philosophy—His Infidelity—Refutation of Christian Claims—Attempts to Invalidate Herndon's Testimony—Reed's Calumnies—Vindication.

In the preceding chapter has been submitted the evidence of Mr. Herndon that has already been published. In this chapter will be presented some hitherto unpublished testimony.

The writer has corresponded with Mr. Herndon for many years. Much of this correspondence has related to Abraham Lincoln, and no inconsiderable portion of it to the subject under consideration. Permission has been granted by Mr. Herndon to use such parts of this correspondence as may be deemed of value. The limits of this work preclude the presentation of much that is really interesting, but no apology is needed for devoting space to the following extracts from his letters, written at various intervals between 1880 and 1889:

I was the personal friend of Mr. Lincoln from 1834 to the day of his death. In 1843 we entered into a partnership which was never formally dissolved. When he became unpopular in this congressional district because of his speeches on the Mexican war, I was faithful to him. When he espoused the antislavery cause and in the eyes of most men had hopelessly ruined his political prospects, I stood by him, and through the press defended his course. In these dark hours, by our unity of sentiment and by political ostracism we were driven to a close and enduring friendship. You should take it for granted, then, that I knew Mr. Lincoln well. During all this time, from 1834 to 1862, when I last saw him, he never intimated to me, either directly or indirectly, that he had changed his religious opinions. Had he done so—had he let drop one word or look in that direction, I should hav detected it.

I had an excellent private library, probably the best in the city for admired books. To this library Mr. Lincoln had, as a matter of course, full and free access at all times. I purchased such books as Locke, Kant, Fichte. Lewes; Sir Wm. Hamilton's "Discussions on Philosophy;" Spencer's "First Principles," "Social Statics," etc.; Buckle's "History of Civilization," and Lecky's "History of Rationalism." I also possessed the works of Parker, Paine, Emerson, and Strauss; Gregg's "Creed of Christendom," McNaught on Inspiration, Volney's "Ruins," Feuerbach's "Essence of Christianity," and other works on Infidelity. Mr. Lincoln read some of these works. About the year 1843 he borrowed "The Vestiges of Creation" of Mr. Jas. W. Keyes, of this city, and read it carefully. He subsequently read the sixth edition of this work, which I loaned him. Mr. Lincoln had always denied special creation, but from his want of education he did not know just what to believe. He adopted the progressiv and development theory as taught more or less directly in that work. He despised speculation, especially in the metaphysical world. He was purely a practical man. He adopted Locke's notions as his system of mental philosophy, with some modifications to suit his own views. He held that reason drew her inferences as to law, etc., from observation, experience, and reflection on the facts and phenomena of nature. He was a pure sensationalist, except as above. He was a materialist in his philosophy. He denied dualism, and at times immortality in any sense.

Before I wrote my Abbott letter I diligently searched through Lincoln's letters, speeches, state papers, etc., to find the word immortality, and I could not find it anywhere except in his letter to his father. The word immortality appears but once in his writings.

If he had been asked the plain question, "Do you know that a God exists?" he would hav said: "I do not know that a God exists."

At one moment of his life I know that he was an Atheist. I was preparing a speech on Kansas, and in it, like nearly all reformers, I invoked God. He made me wipe out that word and substitute the word Maker, affirming that said Maker was a principle of the universe. When he went to Washington he did the same to a friend there.

Mr. Lincoln told me, over and over, that man has no freedom of will, or, as he termed it, "No man has a freedom of mind." He was in one sense a fatalist, and so died. He believed that he was under the thumb of providence (which to him was but another name for fate). The longer he lived the more firmly he believed it, and hence his oft invocations of God. But these invocations are no evidence to a rational mind that he adopted the blasphemy that God seduced his own daughter, begat a son on purpose to hav mankind kill him, in order that he, God, might become reconciled to his own mistakes, according to the Christian view.

Lincoln would wait patiently on the flow and logic of events. He believed that conditions make the man and not man the conditions. Under his own hand he says: "I attempt no compliment to my own sagacity. I claim not to hav controled events, but confess plainly that events hav controled me." He believed in the supreme reign of law. This law fated things, as he would express it. Now, how could a man be a Christian—could believe that Jesus Christ was God—could believe in the efficacy of prayer—and entertain such a belief?

He did not believe in the efficacy of prayer, although he used that conventional language. He said in Washington, "God has his own purposes." If God has his own purposes, the prayer will not change God's purposes.

I hav often said to you, and now repeat it, that Lincoln was a scientific Materialist, i. e., that this was his tendency as opposed to the spiritualistic idea. Lincoln always contended that general and universal laws ruled the universe—always did—do now—and ever will. He was an Agnostic generally, sometimes an Atheist.

That Mr. Lincoln was an Infidel from 1834 to 1861, I know, and that he remained one to the day of his death, I honestly believe. I always understood that he was an Infidel, sometimes bordering on Atheism. I never saw any change in the man, and the change could not hav escaped my observation had it happened.

Lincoln's task was a terrible one. When he took the oath of office his soul was bent on securing harmony among all the people of the North, and so he chose for his cabinet officers his opponents for the presidential candidacy in order and as a means of creating a united North. He let all parties, professions, and callings hav their way where their wishes did not cut across his own. He was apparently pliant and supple. He ruled men when men thought they were ruling him. He often said to me that the Christian religion was a dangerous element to deal with when aroused. He saw in the Kansas affairs—in the whole history of slavery in fact—its rigor and encroachments, that Christianity was aroused. It must be controled, and that in the right direction. Hence he bent to it, fed it, and kept it within bounds, well knowing that it would crush his administration to atoms unless appeased. His oft and oft invocations of God, his conversations with Christians, his apparent respect for Christianity, etc., were all means to an end. And yet sometimes he showed that he hated its nasal whims.

A gentleman of veracity in Washington told me this story and vouched for its truthfulness: "A tall saddle-faced man," said he, "came to Washington to pray with Lincoln, having declared this to be his intention at the hotel. About 10 o'clock A.M. the bloodless man, dressed in black with white cravat, went to the White House, sent in his card, and was admitted. Lincoln glanced at the man and knew his motivs in an instant. He said to him angrily: 'What, hav you, too, come to torment me with your prayers?' The man was squelched—said, 'No, Mr. Lincoln'—lied out and out. Lincoln spoiled those prayers."

Mr. Lincoln was thought to be understood by the mob. But what a delusion! He was one of the most reticent men that ever lived. All of us—Stuart, Speed, Logan, Matheny, myself, and others, had to guess at much of the man. He was a mystery to the world—a sphinx to most men. One peculiarity of Mr. Lincoln was his irritability when anyone tried to peep into his own mind's laboratory. Considering all this, what can be thought of the stories about what he is said to hav confided to strangers in regard to his religion?

Not one of Lincoln's old acquaintances in this city ever heard of his conversion to Christianity by Dr. Smith or anyone else. It was never suggested nor thought of here until after his death.

I never saw him read a second of time in Dr. Smith's book on Infidelity. He threw it down upon our table—spit upon it as it were—and never opened it to my knowledge.

My opinion is, from what I hav heard and know, that these men—Gurley and Simpson—refused to be a party to a fraud on the public touching Lincoln's religion. I think that they understood each other the day that the remains of Lincoln were put to rest.

Holland came into my office, in 1865, and asked me this question: "What about Mr. Lincoln's Christianity?" To this, I replied: "The less said about it the better." Holland then said to me, "Oh, never mind, I'll fix that," and went over to Bateman and had it fixed.

Lincoln never revealed to Judge Davis, Judge Matheny, Joshua F. Speed, Joseph Gillespie nor myself, that he was a Christian, or that he had a change of heart, or anything like it, at any time. Now, taking into consideration the fact that he was one of the most non-communicativ of men—that Bateman was, as it were, a mere stranger to him—that Bateman was frightened, excited, conscience-smitten when I approached him on the subject, and that in after years he confessed to me that his notes in Holland's "Life of Lincoln" were colored—taking all this into consideration, I say, can you believe Bateman's story to be true?

I see quoted frequently a supposed speech made by Mr. Lincoln to the colored people of Baltimore, on the presentation of a Bible to him. This supposed speech contains the following: "All the good from the savior of the world is communicated to us through this book." This idea is false and foolish. What becomes of nine-tenths of the life of Jesus of which we hav no history—nine-tenths of the great facts of this grand man's life not recorded in this book? Mr. Lincoln was full and exact in his language. He never used the word savior, unless in a conventional sense; in fact, he never used the word at all. Again, he is made to say: "But for this book we could not know right from wrong." The lowest organized life, I was about to say, knows right from wrong in its particular sphere. Every good dog that comes into possession of a bone, knows that that bone belongs to him, and he knows that it is wrong for another dog to rob him of it. He protests with bristling hair and glistening teeth against such dog robbery. It requires no revelation to teach him right from wrong in the dog world; yet it requires a special revelation from God to teach us right from wrong in the human world. According to this speech, the dog has the advantage. But Mr. Lincoln never uttered such nonsense.

I do think that anyone who knew Mr. Lincoln—his history—his philosophy—his opinions—and still asserts that he was a Christian, is an unbounded falsifier. I hate to speak thus plainly, but I cannot respect an untruthful man.

Let me ask the Christian claimant a few questions. Do you mean to say, when you assert that Mr. Lincoln was a Christian, that he believed that Jesus was the Christ of God, as the evangelical world contends? If so, where do you get your information? Do you mean to say that Mr. Lincoln was a converted man and that he so declared? If so, where, when, and before whom did he declare or reveal it? Do you mean to say that Mr. Lincoln joined a church? If so, what church did he join, and when did he join it? Do you mean to say that Mr. Lincoln was a secret Christian, acting under the cloak of the devil to advance Christianity? If so, what is your authority? If you will tell me when it was that the creator caught with his almighty arms, Abraham, and held him fast while he poured the oil of grace on his rebellious soul, then I will know when it was that he was converted from his Infidel views to Christianity.

The best evidence this side of Lincoln's own written statement that he was an Infidel, if not an Atheist, as claimed by some, is the fact that he never mentions the name of Jesus. If he was a Christian it could be proved by his letters and speeches. That man is a poor defender of a principle, of a person, or of a thing, who never mentions that principle, person, or thing. I hav never seen the name of Jesus mentioned by Mr. Lincoln.

Mr. Lincoln never mentioned the name of Christ in his letters and speeches as a Christian. I hav searched for such evidence, but could not find it. I hav had others search, but they could not find it. This dead silence on the part of Mr. Lincoln is overwhelming proof that he was an unbeliever.

While Lincoln frequently, in a conventional way, appeals to God, he never appeals to Christ nor mentions him. I know that he at first maintained that Jesus was a bastard, and later that he was the son of Joseph and not of God.

Lincoln was not a Christian in any sense other than that he lived a good life and was a noble man. If a good life constitutes one a Christian, then Mill and a million other men who repudiated and denied Christianity were Christians, for they lived good and noble lives.

If Mr. Lincoln changed his religious views he owed it to me to warn me, as he above all other men caused me to be an unbeliever. He said nothing to me, intimated nothing to me, either directly or indirectly. He owed this debt to many young men whom he had led astray, if astray the Christian calls it. I know of two young men of promis, now dead and gone—gone into endless misery, according to the evangelical creed—caused by Mr. Lincoln's teachings. I know some of the living here, men in prominent positions of life, who were made unbelievers by him.

One by one, these apocryphal stories go by the board. Courageous and remorseless criticism will wipe out all these things. There will not be a vestige of them in fifty years to laugh at or to weep at.

Mr. Herndon's testimony, even in the absence of all other evidence, is conclusiv. This was recognized by the Christian claimants after the appearance of his "Abbott Letter." They employed various measures to break the force of his testimony by trying to induce him either to retract or modify his statements. But they were not successful. He was not to be coaxed, he was not to be purchased, he was not to be intimidated. He had stated the truth and by the truth he proposed to stand. Foiled in these efforts, their last resort was to destroy his credibility as a witness by destroying his character. The most brazen falsehoods were invented and the most cruel calumnies circulated in order to crush him. Some of these stated that he was a drunkard, others that he was a pauper, and still others that he had become insane.

These defamatory statements were usually first noticed in some religious paper or periodical. From this they were naturally copied into the secular papers and sent broadcast over the land. Journalists who had once known Mr. Herndon, either personally or by reputation, were surprised and shocked at the announcements, and wrote articles like the following which appeared in a Kansas paper:

Bill Herndon is a pauper in Springfield, Ill. He was once worth considerable property. His mind was the most argumentativ of any of the old lawyers in the state, and his memory was extraordinary. For several years before Lincoln was nominated for the presidency, Herndon was in some respects the most activ member of the firm, preparing the greatest number of cases for trial and making elaborate arguments in their behalf. It is said that he worked hard with Lincoln in preparing the memorable speeches delivered by the man who afterward became president, during the debates between Lincoln and Douglas in 1858, and in constructing the Cooper Institute address delivered by Lincoln a short time before the war. Herndon, with all his attainments, was a man who now and then went on a spree. This habit became worse after Lincoln's death, and, like poor Dick Yates, he went down step by step till his old friends and associates point to him as a common drunkard.

I was in Springfield the very week that this article was published, and passed a day with Mr. Herndon at his home. I was prepared to testify, as all his neighbors were, that the charges it contained, together with others that were being circulated, were false. I knew that he still possessed a sound and vigorous intellect; I knew that he was in comfortable circumstances financially; I knew that he was an earnest advocate of temperance, and that he practiced what he preached; in short, I knew him to be a man of pure morals and exemplary character. At the very time that he was declared to be an inmate of the insane asylum, the Old Settlers' Society selected him to examin and report upon the correctness of the "History of Sangamon County," which, as it included a history of the capital of the state where, at one time or another, had resided a majority of Illinois's most gifted sons, was an important work, and one whose revision would not likely be intrusted to a lunatic. At the very time that he was said to be a pauper in the county poorhouse, he was entertaining such distinguished guests as William Lloyd Garrison. At the very time that he was reported to be a common drunkard, his neighbors had just appointed him guardian of the educational interests of their children.

All efforts to trace these slanders to their source and discover their author proved futil until 1880, when the writer of this saw in an Ohio paper an article on Lincoln, in which was quoted a portion of a letter which the contributor of the article stated had just been received from the Rev J. A. Reed, of Springfield. It related wholly to Mr. Herndon, and did not contain one fair, truthful statement. In thirty brief lines were concentrated, in addition to several statements calculated and intended to deceive, no less than sixteen deliberate falsehoods, some of them of the most cruel and infamous character that it is possible for the mind of man to conceive. It was evident that Reed had intended that the substance of his letter should be given to the public without disclosing its authorship. But, thanks to the innocent credulity and indiscreetness of the friend to whom it was sent, the defamer was discovered and exposed. And this sneaking, cowardly assassin was the "defender of Lincoln's Christian faith!" Could the inanimate remains of Abraham Lincoln hav been revivified when this exposure was made, he would hav arisen from his mausoleum at Oak Ridge, hav come into the city, and hav kicked this pretended "defender," this base calumniator of his beloved friend and associate, out of Springfield.

The cause of all the vituperation which for years had been heaped upon Mr. Herndon was now apparent. He had replied to Reed's lecture, and openly, honestly, and courteously, but effectivly, refuted it; and because the latter could not come forward with a successful rejoinder, he was thus heartlessly and covertly plunging a dagger into the reputation of his chivalrous opponent.

The intercession of friends secured for the culprit immunity from arrest for libel, but in the newspapers of his city he received such a castigation as he will not soon forget. The Daily Monitor, in an editorial replying to the slanders that were being circulated concerning Mr. Herndon, said:

Mr. Herndon is not a pauper, is not a drunkard; whisky did not ruin him, and, in a word, the whole thing is a lie. Mr. Herndon livs on his farm near this city. He is a great admirer of nature, loves flowers, and spends his whole time on the farm, except when doing his trading, or coming into the city to see his children and grandchildren. He don't drink, he don't chew tobacco, he don't gamble, he is honorable and truthful, and he is highly respected by his fellow-citizens. He is a great reader, a great thinker, loves his neighbors, and his neighbors love him. He has a great, big, kind heart for his fellow-man in distress, and, while never worth "considerable property," he has always had enough for his generous purposes. Just why this thing should be allowed we are at a loss to know, and hav waited to see if some of those who profess so much of the Christ-like in their composition would not hav enough of the man-like to be men, and not allow a good and true man as Mr. Herndon is to be thus infamously maligned and belied by those whose works in the salvation of men would hav more effect if more akin to Christ in practice.

After a life of honest toil, much of it in behalf of the poor and the weak, without reward and without the expectation of reward, to be in his old age thus shamefully robbed of his good name, was an outrage almost without a parallel, save in the treatment received by Thomas Paine. That Mr. Herndon was keenly sensitiv to this great wrong is disclosed by the tone of his letters written at the time. In one he says: "I hav done nothing in the spirit of self-laudation. I prefer moving down the grooves of time unnoticed and unknown, except to friends. I hav no ambition for fame or money. My ambition is to try to do good. I spent ten or more years of my best life for the negro, liberty, and union, not forgetting Kansas and her brave people. But let it all go; I make no complaint. I try to liv a moral and a manly life, love my fellow-man, love freedom, love justice, and would die for the eternal right."

As an index of public sentiment in the community where the defamed and the defamer resided, I will state two facts. On a pleasant September evening, in 1882, I attended Dr. Reed's church in Springfield. In that commodious edifice, built to accommodate an audience of nearly one thousand, I found assembled to listen to this renowned "defender of Lincoln's Christian faith," an audience of forty-four persons. About the same time, in the published report of a public meeting held near Springfield, appeared the following: "Five thousand people hovered around the speaker's stand for the purpose of listening to the able, eloquent, and well-known Hon. W. H. Herndon."

It has been charged that Mr. Herndon's statements concerning Lincoln's unbelief were inspired by a spirit of revenge in consequence of Lincoln's not having recognized him with an appointment. This charge and this assumption are both false. There is now on file at Washington and at Springfield a telegram from Lincoln tendering him a judgeship, which he declined.

To know Lincoln was to love him. None knew him better than Mr. Herndon, and none entertains a deeper affection for his memory. In a letter to me, dated Nov. 4, 1881, he pays this tribute to his dead friend:

Some people say that Mr. Lincoln was an ungrateful man. This is not true, and especially when applied to myself. He was always kind, tender, and grateful to me—clung to me with hooks of steel. I know that I was true to him. It is said that no man is great to his valet. If I was Mr. Lincoln's valet, the rule does not apply in this case, for my opinion of him is too well known. His was a grand, noble, true, and manly life. He dreamed dreams of glory and glory was justly his. He was growing and expanding to the day of his death. He was slow in his development, but strong and big when he did come. The last letter which I ever received from him concluded thus: "God bless you, says your friend.—A. Lincoln." He felt what he expressed, and in return I say, God bless you, Lincoln.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?

This question repeated conspicuously in these columns induces me—for I well knew him at the bar, from 1836 till his inauguration in 1860, and then his administration—to answer briefly. Attending a Presbyterian meeting in the winter of 1837–1838, on my return to Brushville, T. L. Dickey, my law partner, advised me of our engagement to defend a bad steamboat deck-hand of eighteen years for killing a German. Their names were Fraim and Neathammer. At the preliminary examination I found the case hopeless, inexcusable murder. Being then a Presbyterian and trying to keep a conscience void of offense, I declined to argue the case before the traverse jury, and Mr. Lincoln was engaged to take my place. At court he interviewed me, said he pitied the poor neglected youth, and suggested that I argue the question of law on his trial, that my influence by a square backout might not be construed against him, while he and Dickey would take the witness and go to the jury. Under this arrangement the case was taken up the next morning, and finished the same evening at 10—or 11—o'clock, with a verdict of guilty. The next day Mr. Lincoln expressed dissatisfaction over his efforts, and the deepest regret over the impending fate of the poor culprit. I reminded him that from the first I had seen, and to him said, the case is hopeless, and that he must hav expected to work a miracle to save the accused. He answered, that I did him injustice, since he had no faith in miracles, but was mortified at the hasty finding of the jury, as though Mr. Dickey and he had said nothing worthy of their consideration.

Afterward, in taking the part of a young lady against General Shields, he had to meet and accept a challenge. Some of my special friends and brethren in the church hastened to remonstrate, telling him to decline as he should, like a Christian—his honor would not suffer. He told them, as they told me, that he was not, nor could be, a Christian. He did not believe, nor had been baptized. General Shields in the code of honor demanded the combat, and he reluctantly, to vindicate their mutual honor, had to giv it. As is known, just before the fight the matter was settled. Strange that the lack of self-respect in Christians will try to gulp down the absurdity, no less than a camel, that Abraham Lincoln was a believer in the Bible of Christianity! He never changed a sentiment on the subject up to his final sleep.

W. PERKINS.

Mr. Thomas Lewis.

In reference to the pious Tom Lewis, of Springfield, Ill., who testifies to the conversion of Mr. Lincoln to Christianity, I relate this incident, the truth of which will not be questioned. Prior to 1874 there had not been an honest letting of state contracts for many years at Springfield. A syndicate had been formed of all professed bidders, and leading ones of the syndicate would "buy the bids" of the lesser ones. Tom Lewis, who was then an insurance agent, and not one of the syndicate, happened to come upon the scene just at the critical moment of the closing of the bids. He was carrying a large envelope, and one of the syndicate, supposing that he had come to put in a bid, asked him what he would take for his bid. Taking in the situation at a glance, he replied, "$500." "I will giv you $300," replied the leader of the syndicate, the bargain was struck, and Tom walked off with $300 in exchange for a large envelope, containing some unimportant insurance papers. I heard these facts brought out in an investigation by the legislature, and they are a matter of record. Of course Tom kept his $300. It was a fraud all around, but it never disturbed Tom's conscience or impaired his standing in the church. JAMES K. MAGIE.

That "Blessed Book."

The papers say that there is a fatal disease among the cattle in the West—that many of them are dying. This is bad for Infidels and others who desire to liv honest lives and do to others as they would hav others do to them; but rogues and those ignorant enough to accept the Bible as an inspired book need not lose by the cattle plague; for that blessed old book—that strange piece of men's crazy patchwork, to which and its artificial God each writer gave a patch of his own character—will tell the pious owners of the diseased meat what to do with it, and here it is: "Thou shalt not eat of the flesh of the animal that dieth of itself, but mayest sell it to the stranger within thy gates, or to the heathen round about thee"—a very handy way to dispose of it. Doubtless the pious railroad and steamship owners would rejoice at the privilege of carrying such freight to Europe. And then the blessed book tells them what they may do with the money they get for such meat: "With thy money thou mayest buy bondmen and bondwomen of the strangers within thy gates, or the heathen round about thee;" and "if thou beat thy bondman that he die," nevertheless if he liv a day or two after beating it is nobody's business, "for he is thy money."

What a blessed book to be written by the inspiration of a being supreme in power, wisdom, justice, impartiality, love, and mercy!

Again: "With thy money thou mayest buy wine or strong drink, or whatsoever thy soul lusteth after." What more liberty could the greatest drunkard, libertin, debauchee, or harlot ask for?

"Wine cheereth the heart of God and man." "Drink thy wine with a merry heart, for God now accepteth thy works." "Giv strong drink to him that is ready to perish. Let him drink and forget his poverty." "Drink, yea, drink abundantly, O believers." How was it possible for such a book to be palmed off on rational beings capable of thinking as the inspired words of a supreme being? And how has it been possible for priests to so deceive the people for thousands of years, as to still keep such a book in existence—a book that has caused many millions of the best people of their time to be put to death by the most excruciating tortures that the ingenuity of men could devise? Who can answer? A book that is still dividing the world into contending sects and parties and causing ill-will and enmity between members of the same family. A book that has caused more suffering and sorrow than any other ever published. Who can answer? J. HACKER.

Berlin, N. J.

The Discovery of America.

IN THE TRUTH SEEKER of October 19th an article appeared signed, Henry Stone, of Boston, Mass., on the discovery of America, slandering, from beginning to end, the memory of Christopher Columbus, and praising Martin Alonso, who, as the whole world knows, was not only a traitor to Columbus but something else besides. While on the coast of Santo Domingo he separated from the other vessels, went to Hayti, obtained gold from the cacique (chief) of said country, distributed half among the crew of his vessel the Pinta, and kept for himself the other half. After doing this, he started for Spain, but for reasons not explained, he had to return, meeting the other two vessels, the Santa Maria and the Nina, opposit Monte Christy. As excuse for his strange proceedings, he said that contrary winds had compelled him to go eastward. This, of course, was not true, as the wind prevailing there at the time was from the east, but to avoid a contention, and perhaps mutiny, Columbus, being the only Italian on board, abstained from remonstrating or making Martin Alonso understand that his intentions in separating from the other vessels were known. Columbus nevertheless advised him to put on shore four females and two men whom Martin Alonso intended to carry to Spain as prisoners.

It is also a well-known fact that after they had taken possession of the land in the name of Queen Isabella, both Las Casas and Columbus had frequent discussions with some of the Spaniards, to prevent the latter from ill-treating the Indians. By this, all readers of the paper will perceive that whatever may be said to the contrary is a mere fabrication of falsehoods, for the sole purpose of slandering names which hav already passed into history without stain.

A true Freethinker should not hav written the article to which I refer, as by doing so he has not only committed a gross slander, but also is apt to annul the enthusiasm of the whole country for the Exposition of 1892, which, as every impartial mind will readily understand, cannot but do good in every sense to this republic.

What happened to Christopher Columbus after the discovery of America only shows the ingratitude of some people to a person after he had undergone so much suffering, and was not a punishment for his great crimes, as Messrs. Stone, Yure, and Goodrich allege. JOSEPH FELIX GONZALES.

IN the fourth century there arose monachism, and in the sixth century the Christians succeeded in cutting off the last ray of knowledge, and shutting up the schools of Greece. Then followed a long period of theology, ignorance, and vice.—Buckle.

The Brutal American Hierarchy.

From the Argonaut.

Pope Leo the Thirteenth has been deeply grieved that the government of Italy has permitted the people of Italy to erect a monument of marble to the memory of Giordano Bruno, an Italian philosopher of the sixteenth century, a monk of the Dominican order—which order he abandoned by reason of his skepticism—a lecturer against the philosophy of Aristotle, a friend of Sir Philip Sidney, a lecturer on mathematics in the Universities at Magdeburg, Prague, Helmstead, and Frankfort; arrested by the Inquisition, imprisoned for seven years at Rome, tried, degraded, excommunicated, sentenced to death, tortured, and burnt at the stake in Rome, February 17th, in the year 1600. He was a profound scholar, a learned philosopher and thinker. He believed in the existence of God,* and did not believe that the pope or the church of Rome had any other, or higher, or more divine authority than was conferred upon any other intellectual or moral earthly power. When Pope Pius the Ninth was driven from Rome and became a prisoner in the Vatican; when the sovereignty of the Papal States was taken from the papal power and conferred on the king of Italy; when Leo the Thirteenth succeeded to the spiritual and not civil jurisdiction of the city of Rome and its little patch of adjoining campagna and salt-marsh; when emancipated Italy resolved to honor the philosopher and Freethinker, whom Rome had tortured, imprisoned, and murdered by burning at the stake—Leo XIII. sulked, and fasted, and prayed through three days, while the students of the universities of free Italy and emancipated intelligence rejoiced that the memory of Bruno was lifted from the dishonored grave where ignorance, superstition, and priestly malice had ignominiously buried it. And now comes his holiness the vicegerent of God, the representativ of the meek and lowly Jesus, with an attack upon the memory of the dead Bruno, and Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, an American by birth, issues this pastoral letter—to be read in all his pulpits—which we copy from the New York World, and which the World styles "forceful and dignified," but which, in our opinion, is blasphemous, brutal, and blackguardly, and altogether unworthy of the American source from which it comes. The sentiments expressed in this pastoral communication could be endured coming from Italy, but as the expression of the American hierarchy, are contemptible exhibitions of cowardice and malignity, utterly unworthy of an American.

*The Argonaut is mistaken in thinking that Bruno believed in "God," as the word is defined by any religionist. Bruno was a Pantheist.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Vice-President, 120 Lexington ave., New York city.
T. B. WAKEMAN, Vice-President, 92 Nassau street, New York city.
J. E. REMSBURG, Vice-President, ... Oak Mills, Kan.
JULIET H. SEVERANCE, Vice President, . . . Milwaukee, Wis.
IDA C CRADDOCK, Secretary, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
F. C. MENDE, Treasurer, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, Ida C. Craddock, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
TREASURER, F. C. Mende, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The American Secular Union.

DEAR MR. MACDONALD: You gave us a most admirable report of the congress last week, and it is a wonder to all of us how you could prepare and publish so much matter in so short a time. You are certainly entitled to our thanks and hearty commendation.

The congress was a good one, and from the first meant business. I hav hardly yet recovered from the surprise at finding myself in the presidential chair again, with a secretary and treasurer of my own selection.

I telegraphed Miss Craddock at San Francisco, and she is now en route for Philadelphia, while Mr. Mende, our new treasurer, drives around to my home almost every morning to know what is to be done about an office, that we may organize our campaign. We shall select one this week, of which due notice will be given. Perhaps it is not generally known that Philadelphia was a "port in a storm" in the matter of the late congress, as we had selected Minneapolis as the place of meeting, and the official call for that place was already in print, when, owing to some local difficulty, the invitation to meet there was withdrawn. We had been coquetting with Des Moines and several other Western places until it had become too late to do anything else but meet in Philadelphia. Then it was known to some of us, in July, that Secretary Stevens would hav to resign, and so without a secretary and with an empty treasury and general distrust throughout our ranks, all the work of getting up the congress had to be done in less than two months. The result of the congress is now known, and we hav reason to be satisfied with the result. Here are some of the figures:

Otto Wettstein, Esq., reports receipts for the Union, $1,508.39. To this amount must be added $150 for the Bruno monument and $1,100 for the Prize Manual, making the sum total of our contributions to September 1st, $2,758.39. To this must be added $372 32, collected and received from September 1st until October 26th, making $3,130.71. Did the Society ever do more in one year? But this does not satisfy us. We must hav twice this amount this next year, and we shall show you how to get it! Meanwhile let us not forget that November is passing. Who will be among our liberal contributors for the first month of the coming year?

The "Unitarian and other Christian churches" hav just closed a large conference held in this city immediately after ours. They said many Liberal things. I rather like the Unitarians, particularly of the Chadwick, Savage, and Clifford stripe. They do not know what is the matter with them. They hav too much Bible, and an orthodox Bible, too. The Bible found in their pulpits teaches the trinity, the fall of man, the incarnation of Jesus, vicarious atonement, eternal punishment, etc., and they do not believe a word of these dogmas. They take just as much of the Bible as they think ought to be true, and no more. Why not regard the Bible as a historical record (more or less fanciful) showing what men said and did and believed at certain periods, and thus use it as a sort of guide—as men use fossils in the examination of geological strata? Some of the preachers feel this dreadfully, and are looking where to jump. But let us be patient with them, as they cannot get along with the Bible much longer. Many go in for the religion of nature already.

R. B. WESTBROOK,
Pres. American Secular Union.

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 1, 1889.

The New Treasurer.

Mr. F. C. Mende, of the Mende Brothers German Cheese Company, recently elected treasurer of the American Secular Union, of Philadelphia, was born in Prussia in the year 1821. He is not one of those who, early in life, had to contend with poverty and the disadvantages of a restricted education, being a son of a farmer in easy circumstances and having attended school from childhood up to fifteen years of age.

Mr. Mende's early training abroad was in the grocery business. He subsequently was engaged for some time as a commercial traveler, making business trips in Poland, Prussia, Austria, and Russia. In the year 1849 he set out for America and arrived in New York possessed of some means, but knowing little of the English language. In New York, after many applications, Mr. Mende finally succeeded in obtaining employment in a dry goods store kept by a Scotchman, who was desirous of cultivating the trade of the German residents. Although this business was a different one from that to which he was brought up, a short time sufficed to make Mr. Mende quite an expert in selling dry goods, and as he was especially qualified to attend to the wants of German customers, his services were appreciated and his salary was soon increased.

While in Boston Mr. Mende had made the acquaintance of a pianoforte manufacturer, which proved indirectly the stepping-stone to his advancement in life. This gentleman, about six months later, made him an offer of a situation in his establishment, which was readily accepted. In this new employment Mr. Mende's first duties were in the counting-house, but a taste for music, and likewise his aptitude as a salesman, led to a change in his occupation, and he evidently found more congenial work in the exhibition and sale of pianos.

We therefore find him on a southern plantation essaying to add to the ordinary bill of fare by the addition of cheese to the planter's dessert. Years after this, when an opportunity presented itself in Philadelphia, Mr. Mende turned his attention again to amateur cheese-making.

Repeated experiments were tried in the making, curing, and packing of the cheese, the old system being entirely abandoned and a new one substituted, based on scientific principles. With this appliance cheese could be made at the rate of six thousand per hour, and soon the demands of the growing business warranted the erection of a large factory in which all the operations of cheese-making could be carried on, the machinery for the purpose being driven by a steam-engin of twenty horse power. With all these facilities for the business, the Messrs. Mende can turn out as many as four thousand boxes, or about sixty-five thousand pounds, of cheese per week, utilizing the product of from five to six thousand cows.

Mr. Mende is a gentleman rather under the medium hight, and his manner bespeaks the energy of which his career is a proof. He is a shrewd business man, exceedingly affable in his conversation, and conveying at once the impression of large acquaintance with the world and its ways. His personal contact with men in many countries has imbued him with broad and liberal views, and his love of individual liberty and toleration is most marked. The abundant means which he now possesses enable him to enjoy not only the comforts but the elegances of life, which he does to the full, and a friend recently remarked to us that no equipage makes its appearance in Fairmount park more complete in its appointments or more satisfying to the eye of a connoisseur than Mr. Mende's. * * *

The Oregon Convention.

The First Annual Convention of the Oregon state Secular Union met at Masonic Hall, Portland, Saturday, October 12th, at 10 A.M. The meeting was called to order by President C. Beal, and music was rendered by Roose and Hodgson's orchestra. As a preliminary measure Mr. George H. Dawes moved the appointment of a Committee on Resolutions, which motion was carried, and the following committee was chosen:

Committee on Resolutions.—Geo. H. Dawes, M. Fitzgerell, Robert Laughlin, Mrs. Jennie Vose Graham, and G. W. Tiffany.

Upon motion of Dr. J. W. McClure, of Silverton, the Convention appointed the following:

Committee on Nominations.—Dr. J. W. McClure, S. P. Putnam, Mrs. S. C. Todd, B. F. Hyland, and H. Arnold.

Music by the orchestra ensued, and then Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel, of Kansas City, Mo., was introduced, and gave the opening address. After thanking the Convention for the honor of being the first speaker, Mrs. Krekel proceeded to giv a definition of Secularism, to point out its necessity and the causes which had brought a Secular party into existence, and finally to present an exposition of its object. In closing she said, "In our deliberations of how most successfully to advance Secular work, let us be temperate, practical, and conscientious. Let us remember, as the French convention declared, that 'one man's right ceases where another's begins.' Let us devise some method, adopt some system, through which we can utilize means, energy, and ability toward accomplishing work in the interests of which this convention is called."

After this appropriate, eloquent address, which was frequently and heartily applauded, a banner was presented to the Oregon state Secular Union by Miss Mattie Blaisdell. The banner was elegantly embroidered with gold on a dark background—the eagle with the stars—and those noble names of Freethought, Hypatia, Bruno, Paine, and Ingersoll, with the legend "Universal Mental Liberty," about the spread wings of the eagle. Below is blazing the torch of civilization, and underneath this flame are the words "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity." On the reverse side of the banner the stars and stripes float above the prostrate cross.

President Beal accepted the banner in behalf of the Oregon Union with a characteristic address.

The presentation and acceptance of the banner were the signal for loud and prolonged cheers. Mrs. Seip next gave a thrilling recitation, and repeating "A Thousand Years, My Own Columbia," that noble hymn was sung by the whole vast audience, with accompaniment by the orchestra.

Mrs. Lois Waisbrooker followed in a fine address to a most appreciativ audience. The following letter from B. F. Underwood was read:

ON THE CENTRAL PACIFIC, Oct. 4, 1889.

DEAR MR. BEAL: I write, as you requested before I left Portland, a few suggestions to be read at the convention. Those that now occur to me are the following:

Since the clearly stated object of the Oregon Secular Union is to secure the total separation of church and state, and since in this work the coöperation of all, irrespectiv of religious belief, is invited, see that the speeches, discussions, and the action taken are confined to this purpose.

After declaring in its constitution and in its public announcements that the sole purpose of the Union is to secularize the state—that is, to remove all vestiges of the union of church and state, and to resist all legislation inconsistent with secular government, and asking all in favor of this purpose to join the Union, it would be clearly inconsistent and even dishonorable to make the convention an occasion for advocating or assailing theological belief and institutions, as such. Whether the Christian, Jewish, Buddhistic, or other religions are true or not, whether Materialism or Spiritualism is the correct philosophy, whether Saturday or Sunday is more sacred than other days and should be so observed as a religious duty—these are questions beyond the province of the Union to decide. The object of the Union is to oppose governmental indorsement or discrimination in favor of any religious systems or dogmas, and to maintain that the function of the government in regard to religion is to hav nothing whatever to do with it one way or the other, except to defend all in the expression of their views, and in their right to worship (or not to worship) as they see fit.

Some persons do not distinguish between state secularization and Secularism. One means the separation of the church and the state—making the state entirely secular in its character, leaving all religions to the voluntary support of their adherents. The other means a system of philosophy and ethics, which it is not necessary to accept in order to be in sympathy with state secularization.

The discussion of Secularism comes no more within the scope of the Union than the discussion of Spiritualism or Calvinism—that is, considered as systems.

The provisions for work during the coming year should be limited to such as is required to advance the cause of state secularization. The officers should be selected with reference to their qualifications for this work. To select men merely because they are zealous opponents of theological beliefs would be in violation of the spirit of the constitution of the Union. Most of the members are probably Freethinkers (in the common meaning of that word), but opposition to Christianity or Judaism is no part of the work of the organization. Christian and non-Christian are alike eligible to office.

The office of secretary is an important one. The person elected to this position should be unpartisan and fair-minded, one who knows the difference between the movement for secularizing the state and the work of merely attacking theological creeds. To elect to this office a man who would make it serve his purpose of securing opportunities for himself and others to lecture for or against religious beliefs would be a great mistake. To make any particular paper the official organ of the Union unless that paper is devoted entirely and exclusivly to state secularization would not, think, be wise.

My own convictions on religious subjects are radical and pronounced, but I should not think of advocating or advancing them if I were to be present at the convention. An exposition of Adventism by Mr. Jones would be just as appropriate.

We cannot bring together people of different views on various subjects for a specific purpose, and expect harmony and success, unless the discussions and proceedings are confined to the purpose announced in the call.

There is a strong sentiment in Oregon in favor of secularizing the state, especially in favor of taxing church property, maintaining secular schools, and opposing restrictiv Sunday laws. I hope the convention will serve to strengthen this sentiment, organize it, and make it powerfully felt in the legislation of the state. Very truly yours,

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

The convention met at 2 P.M., Saturday, October 12th, pursuant to adjournment. A motion by J. Henry Schroeder, of Coos county, that Messrs. Reynolds, Putnam, and Bell be appointed a committee on introduction, was adopted. A telegram was then read from Moses Hull, sending greetings to the convention. Geo. H. Dawes was then introduced and gave an address on "The Principles of American Liberty." C. B. Reynolds, being introduced, gave an animated and eloquent speech emphasizing the positions taken by the previous speakers, and defending the principles and acts of Liberals. The convention then adjourned to evening.

The evening session, Saturday, was opened by an address by Rabbi Block. After the address of the rabbi, W. S. Bell gave his lecture on "Liberty and Morality," the convention adjourning to Sunday.

The meeting was called to order Sunday morning at 9:30 by President Beal. Music was furnished by the band. Short speeches were made by members of the convention. Dr. A. K. Olds, of McMinnville, spoke enthusiastic words of encouragement and urged persistent action. The doctor is seventy-eight years old, and has been for many years a pronounced Freethinker. T. S. Derrick, of Benton, made a short address on practical work. J. Henry Schroeder spoke of the necessity of Liberal organization. He urged that efforts be directed solely in the line of state secularization, and that all elements be organized in harmony with this prime object. Professor Seymour spoke of the strength and growth of Liberalism upon the Pacific coast, and urged vigilance in the protection of our public school system from the blight of ecclesiasticism. The president read a letter from W. H. Breese, of Talent, Ore., on the work of the convention. Mr. Priestly, of Milwaukee, spoke of the business and social tyranny of the churches. Mr. Elliott, of Portland, spoke of the distinction won by Liberals in the defense of the Union. Dr. Olds said that he had been an Infidel ever since Hacker published the Pleasure Boat. Mr. Rawson, of Olympia, said: "I stand before you an ex-preacher now sixty years of age. I spent forty years preaching Methodism." He gave an extended history of his experience, and of the work he had done since he espoused Liberalism. B. F. Hyland, of Corvallis, spoke of the results he attained by investigation of the Bible itself. Dr. A. D. Martis, of Ohio, said: "After organization what are we going to do? To a certain extent churches do a good work. The Liberals must educate in truth and morality." Mr. Fuller, of McMinnville, said: "I agree in everything with my Liberal friend, Dr. Olds, except as to a future life. He says he doesn't know. I say, I do know. But in questions of right, of duty, of justice, we are one." Mrs. F. C. Reynolds, being called upon, made an impromptu speech setting forth clearly and forcibly the situation and the demands of the hour. Ex-Rev. C. B. Reynolds, being introduced, gave the address of the morning upon the objects of the convention.

At 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon the hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, and the great audience, with frequent bursts of applause, listened to a masterly exposition of state secularization, from Rev. Alonzo T. Jones, of the Advent Christian church. He spoke for two hours, and it was a remarkable address, coming from a Christian clergyman. Following is an abstract:

True Christianity, as represented by Jesus, does not resort to force, but to persuasion. A union of church and state is destructiv of its very principles. If the Bible is a divine book, it does not need any official recognition. Such a recognition degrades it. A government is for natural rights. It is only for this world. No state will survive and flourish in heaven. It is for the affairs of life as it now is. The natural rights of the non-Christian are equal to those of the Christian. No amount of belief in or attainment of the supernatural can alter natural rights. They exist with the man himself and are not the product of any faith. Government cannot distinguish between citizens on account of religion. It cannot go to the intentions of a man. It can only treat of actions. To the government, actions are neither religious or non-religious, moral or immoral, but simply civil and uncivil. The state can restrain uncivil action, but nothing else. It can prevent that which is an infringement upon the rights of any individual. It must therefore solely deal with the action. This is open and can be witnessed. But if government is to deal with intentions, with the heart and head, as well as the doing of a deed, it must resort to the Inquisition and by torture wring from a man his secret thoughts and then punish or acquit as these secret thoughts are judged to be good or bad. Can this be done? It is impossible, and if it could be done tyranny of the most cruel kind would be the result. God rules in righteousness, but he does not rule by the actions and opinions of men who profess to be his representativs. God rules, but he does not require the sword of state. These men, these Christians who are for the union of church and state, claim to stand for God. Their will is the will of God. They wish to judge and condemn, as if they sat upon the throne of the universe. The Demands of Liberalism are just. They are measures of self-defense. They are not aggressions upon the Christian religion. They formulate justice between citizen and citizen. They are impartial.

I am a Christian. I believe in Christianity. I believe it is a divine and supernatural religion, but it must win by persuasion and by no other means. I grant the right of every man to differ from me. If I take away his right to disbelieve, then I logically take away my right to believe. If I take the right to punish one for non-belief, then I surrender my own right to protest when he gets the power and punishes me for belief. To maintain my right as a Christian I must equally maintain the right of the non-Christian. Rights are universal, and if denied to one are denied to all. To maintain my Christian liberty, therefore, I must maintain the liberty of all. If I use the sword against the Infidel, by that act I say to the Infidel, You can use the sword on me when you get a chance.

Justice is universal. It is not for one or for a part, but for all. Christianity can survive by justice and without destroying the rights of a single individual. Christianity that resorts to force is a human invention, and so imperfect and tyrannical. It professes to represent God by acts of despotism. This is not Christianity. The Christianity of Jesus is peace and good will. If one can be persuaded to become a Christian that is right, but to force one to be a Christian, or to act in any way publicly or privately as if he were a Christian, is an infringement of human rights and therefore wrong, and according to the teachings of the New Testament anti-Christian. The demands of Liberalism are as much for the protection of genuin Christianity as for the protection of Infidelity. They are for the protection of the rights of conscience. They are for the protection of religious belief. Christianity must accept these demands in order to be true to its own divine mission.

Sunday evening the hall was also crowded, there being scarcely any standing-room. Mrs. Krekel gave an able exposition of the principles of natural morality, the only basis of human legislation. Mr. S. P. Putnam followed with an address upon "The American Republic."

The Convention then adjourned until Monday.

The Convention was called to order at 10 o'clock Monday morning by President Beal, and motion was made by Dr. Calder, of Walla Walla, to receive the report of the joint committee appointed by the informal caucus of Friday afternoon. After some opposition the motion was ruled to be in order by the president. The motion being put, it was unanimously resolved not to receive the report of the committee. Geo. H. Dawes, chairman of the committee on resolutions, made a report. A special committee of three—Mr. Bucher, Mrs. S. C. Todd, and L. Ames—was appointed to consider the report. Professor Seymour, being called upon, made a brief speech against religious legislation; spoke of the dangers of the encroachments upon the freedom of the mails; of the persecutions of D. M. Bennett, Dr. E. B. Foote, Mrs. Slenker, Harman and Walker, and others. After Professor Seymour's address the special committee on resolutions reported, and, after some discussion, the following were adopted:

1. Resolved. That the rights and dignity of labor are necessary for the perpetuity of the American republic, and this convention recognizes the great importance of all reforms the purposes of which are for the advancement of the working people. But the power of the government cannot be made conducive to the success of these measures until all Christian and ecclesiastical usurpations in the state are successfully resisted, and civil and religious liberty are secured to all, regardless of religious belief or non-belief.

2. Resolved, That the subjection of woman by the Christian and all other religion has been a gross injustice to her, and has hindered in countless ways the civilization of mankind, and therefore we, as lovers of liberty and equality, recognize woman to be the equal of man in all the relations of life; not only as a matter of justice to her as an individual, but as necessary for social purity and the further elevation of the human race and the establishment of equal rights and Secular principles in our republic.

3. Resolved, That this Convention urges upon all Liberals the importance of organizing local societies, the building of Freethought halls, the establishing of libraries and reading-rooms, for the purpose of disseminating Secular principles and the advancement of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty. And also urges the generous support of Freethought and Secular papers and lecturers.

4. Resolved, That while this Convention recognizes the importance of working for all the demands of state secularization, it would advise that special efforts be made to secure the taxation of church property, and instructs the board of directors to provide, from the funds of the Union, petitions to be circulated among the people of Oregon for their signatures, asking the legislature of Oregon to repeal the law exempting church property from taxation. And it also asks the board of directors to outline for the next convention a plan of work by which the influence of the Secularists may be concentrated for legislativ action at the next session of the state legislation, and continue the efforts already made in this direction.

5. Resolved, That this convention pass a resolution of sympathy with the relativs and friends of, and respect to, him who was a thinker of pure thoughts; the doer of good deeds; who was for more than half a century the intrepid torch-bearer of liberty; who was one of nature's noblest sons; whose genius has moved the intellect of two hemispheres; whose heart and sympathies were with the poor and the oppressed; who always sided with the weak against the strong; whose purity of mind and nobleness of character hav given peace and joy to thousands of human hearts; whose memory will be cherished and revered as long as there are men and women who love the truth and battle for the right—the lamented Horace Seaver.

It was voted that the board of directors be authorized to employ a special reporter for the use of the convention at the next annual meeting in order to furnish complete reports for the papers.

The committee on nominations reported. The report was received, and the following were elected officers of the Oregon state Secular Union for the ensuing year:

Treasurer: A. F. Neunert, Portland.

Secretary: J. K. Sears, McCoy; assistant secretary, Elva Davidson, Oswego.

Executiv committee: Lee Laughlin, North Yamhill; R. Wright, Molalla; B. W. Huffman, La Grande; Gertrude Vose Meserve, Ranier; J. K. Olds, Lafayette.

Finance committee: L. Ames, Silverton; O. Jeldness, Portland; Mrs. M. J. Olds, McMinnville.

A motion to pay the assistant secretary out of the funds of the Union for work at the discretion of the board of directors was adopted. A partial report of receipts and expenses was made. Receipts, about $500; expenses, about $200. Full report will be published in Freethought. The following motion of S. B. Huston, of Hillsboro, after some discussion, was adopted:

WHEREAS, The Liberals of Washington territory in generosity hav contributed a large amount of money to the funds now in the treasury of this organization. And whereas, there are probable grounds for believing that some of it was contributed under the belief that a joint organization would be effected, and the same has not been done; and

WHEREAS, It is the desire of this convention to avoid all grounds for offense or ill-feeling, and to display to our friends the same liberal spirit that they hav shown, and which should and does characterize Liberals everywhere; therefore be it

Resolved by this convention, That the treasurer of this organization be authorized to refund all money received from Washington Liberals who so desire, and that the secretary be instructed to notify them of this resolution.

Professor Seymour's resolution of sympathy with Harman and Walker was laid upon the table, action in this case not lying within the demands of Liberalism as understood by the convention. It was voted that the board of directors be authorized to fix the time for the next convention. A motion by J. Henry Schroeder that the convention resolve itself into a committee of the whole for the purpose of receiving the report of joint committee appointed by informal caucus of Friday afternoon was carried, J. Henry Schroeder being called to the chair. The report of the committee was called for. Mr. Bucher, chairman, reported that the committee was practically adjourned without date and he had no report to present. A general discussion ensued, and a motion that the committee of the whole now rise was carried. The convention then adjourned. During the proceedings the following resolutions of thanks were unanimously passed:

Resolved, That this convention tender its sincere thanks to Miss Mattie Blaisdell for her generous and beautiful gift to the Oregon state Secular Union of the Freethought banner.

Resolved, That the thanks of this convention be tendered to the officers of the Union, especially to our worthy president, C. Beal, for his untiring efforts to make the convention a success; and also to all the speakers.

Resolved, That this convention extends its thanks to the press of the city for the full and fair reports of the speeches and proceedings of the convention.

Resolved, That the thanks of the convention be tendered to Decker Bros. for their generosity in giving the free use of a fine piano for our meetings.

The convention closed with a concert and ball. The following is from the Oregonian:

CONCERT AND BALL.

Last night Masonic Hall was again well filled for the concert and grand ball which closed the Secular convention. The first number on the program was an overture by the Aerial orchestra.

Messrs. Haehlen and Turk followed with a beautiful zither duet entitled "Echo im Thal," by Conrad. These melodious instruments were handled in a masterly manner, and the sweet, soft notes made such music as could be appreciated by the most critical listener.

Mrs. Reynolds, of Walla Walla, recited "The Tramp Soldier" with feeling and effect, and then Mr. Louis Dammasch sang "When the Quiet Moon is Beaming," Schondorff. Mr. Dammasch's rich tenor voice was displayed to the best advantage in this selection, and his efforts received the enthusiastic applause of the audience.

Professor Joseph Stebinger next stepped upon the stage with his violin, and in his own masterly manner he favored the audience with a composition by Henri Wieniawsky, entitled "Legende." He, too, received well-deserved applause.

Mrs. Seip recited a poem entitled "Questions," and S. P. Putnam closed the literary exercises with a recitation entitled "Why Don't He Lend a Hand?"

The chairs were then removed from the center of the hall and the orchestra struck up the grand march. A waltz followed, and polkas, lancers, schottisches, mazourkas, and quadrils followed in quick succession.

The dancing-program consisted of twenty-four numbers, and the evening was pleasantly and happily spent. Lunch was served at Turn Halle from 11:30 to 1 o'clock.

The floor committee consisted of Dr. Paul Semler, Captain Charles DuBois, Mrs. Dr. Semler, and Mrs. McCann.

On the whole the Secular convention has been a success. Considerable interest has been awakened in the principles of Secularism and more activ work in the cause will follow. Local Unions will be organized throughout the state, and a more largely attended convention will be expected next year.

S. P. Putnam lectured on Tuesday evening to a large audience. At the close of the lecture the Portland Liberal Association was organized for the purpose of local effort in union with the state work. Great interest was manifested, and without doubt the Liberals of Portland will keep up an activ campaign through the winter.—S. P. P. in Freethought.

Lectures and Meetings.

CHARLES WATTS will lecture in Shenandoah, Ia., on the 27th and 28th of this month.

THE Chicago Secular Union will be addressed on the 10th instant by W. F. Furry. Subject, "Orthodoxy." On the 17th Henry D. Loyd, of the Chicago Tribune staff, will speak upon the Labor Movement. The Union meets Sunday evenings at 8 o'clock in Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street.

W. F. JAMIESON and Rev. G. F. Devol closed their six nights' debate in Clarksville, Ia., October 26th. The attendance from first to last was very large; on the closing night the audience filled the aisle, and all standing-room was fully occupied. Many from surrounding towns were present. The people are certainly on the side of these debates in spite of old-fogy ministers who denounce them as "faith-unsettling." The Christians, it was learned, expected that the Infidel would indulge in coarse abuse, and their surprise was general to find that the Freethinker, while discussing, most pointedly, their sacred convictions, treated them, and his opponent, with courtesy throughout. The debate was an event in Clarksville history. The decorum of the listeners was excellent, and the community in general is gratified with the manner in which the earnest controversy was conducted. At the close, Mr. Jamieson was immediately called to giv two lectures in Greene, Ia. He writes: "In Greene, in a splendid hall, I gave two lectures, 'What Will You Giv in Place of Christianity?' and 'Thomas Paine, Religious Reformer and American Patriot.' Both lectures called out large audiences. I am getting a more favorable opinion of Iowa the more I become acquainted with it. I would hav liked to make the Clarksville debate ten sessions instead of six. From here I go to Perry, Ia., where I am to giv two lectures on Sunday, November 10th. Friends may address me at Des Moines, Ia. The Clarksville debate created a commotion. Some Freethinkers think I was not caustic enough in my debate with Rev. Devol. Some others reported before my visit that I was abusiv, etc. Well, I always feel it my duty, which I owe the public, to deal with all questions pointedly, plainly, but to treat my fellow-men with courtesy. A joke: The last evening of the debate, I think it was, when Rev. Devol finished a speech a lady remarked, 'That is good.' When your correspondent spoke his piece, she exclaimed, 'That is good, too.' Tapping a lady on the shoulder, she inquired, 'Will you tell me which is the Infidel?' I hardly know whether the joke is on Brother Devol or myself. It is not the first time I hav been taken for a preacher! But, if I mistake not, it will not be the last time Rev. Devol will be judged an Infidel."

Is Divorce Wrong?

From a Discussion in the North American Review.

Question (1). Do you believe in the principle of divorce under any circumstances?

The world for the most part is ruled by the tomb, and the living are tyrannized over by the dead. Old ideas, long after the conditions under which they were produced hav passed away, often persist in surviving. Many are disposed to worship the ancient—to follow the old paths, without inquiring where they lead, and without knowing exactly where they wish to go themselvs.

Opinions on the subject of divorce hav been for the most part inherited from the early Christians. They hav come down to us through theological and priestly channels. The early Christians believed that the world was about to be destroyed. or that it was to be purified by fire; that all the wicked were to perish, and that the good were to be caught up in the air to meet their Lord—to remain there, in all probability, until the earth was prepared as a habitation for the blessed. With this thought or belief in their minds, the things of this world were of comparativly no importance. The man who built larger barns in which to store his grain was regarded as a foolish farmer, who had forgotten, in his greed for gain, the value of his own soul. They regarded prosperous people as the children of Mammon, and the unfortunate, the wretched, and diseased, as the favorits of God. They discouraged all worldly pursuits, except the soliciting of alms. There was no time to marry or to be given in marriage; no time to build homes and hav families. All their thoughts were centered upon the heaven they expected to inherit. Business, love, all secular things, fell into disrepute.

Nothing is said in the Testament about the families of the apostles; nothing of family life, of the sacredness of home; nothing about the necessity of education, the improvement and development of the mind. These things were forgotten, for the reason that nothing, in the presence of the expected event, was considered of any importance, except to be ready when the son of man should come. Such was the feeling, that rewards were offered by Christ himself to those who would desert their wives and children. Human love was spoken of with contempt. "Let the dead bury their dead. What is that to thee? Follow thou me." They not only believed these things, but acted in accordance with them; and, as a consequence, all the relations of life were denied or avoided, and their obligations disregarded. Marriage was discouraged. It was regarded as only one degree above open and unbridled vice, and was allowed only in consideration of human weakness. It was thought far better not to marry—that it was something grander for a man to love God than to love woman. The exceedingly godly, the really spiritual, believed in celibacy, and held the opposit sex in a kind of pious abhorrence. And yet, with that inconsistency so characteristic of theologians, marriage was held to be a sacrament. The priest said to the man who married: "Remember that you are caught for life. This door opens but once. Before this den of matrimony the tracks are all one way." This was in the nature of a punishment for having married. The theologian felt that the contract of marriage, if not contrary to God's command, was at least contrary to his advice, and that the married ought to suffer in some way, as a matter of justice. The fact that there could be no divorce, that a mistake could not be corrected, was held up as a warning. At every wedding feast this skeleton stretched its fleshless finger toward bride and groom.

Nearly all intelligent people hav given up the idea that the world is about to come to an end. They do not now believe that prosperity is a certain sign of wickedness, or that poverty and wretchedness are sure certificates of virtue. They are hardly convinced that Dives should hav been sent to hell simply for being rich, or that Lazarus was entitled to eternal joy on account of his poverty. We now know that prosperous people may be good, and that unfortunate people may be bad. We hav reached the conclusion that the practice of virtue tends in the direction of prosperity, and that a violation of the conditions of well-being brings, with absolute certainty, wretchedness and misfortune.

There was a time when it was believed that the sin of an individual was visited upon the tribe, the community, or the nation to which he belonged. It was then thought that if a man or woman had made a vow to God, and had failed to keep the vow, God might punish the entire community; therefore it was the business of the community to see to it that the vow was kept. That idea has been abandoned. As we progress, the rights of the individual are perceived, and we are now beginning dimly to discern that there are no rights higher than the rights of the individual. There was a time when nearly all believed in the reforming power of punishment—in the beneficence of brute force. But the world is changing. It was at one time thought that the Inquisition was the savior of society; that the persecution of the philosopher was requisit to the preservation of the state, and that, no matter what happened, the state should be preserved. We hav now more light. And standing upon this luminous point that we call the present, let me answer your questions.

Marriage is the most important, the most sacred, contract that human beings can make. No matter whether we call it a contract, or a sacrament, or both, it remains precisely the same. And no matter whether this contract is entered into in the presence of magistrate or priest, it is exactly the same. A true marriage is a natural concord and agreement of souls, a harmony in which discord is not even imagined; it is a mingling so perfect that only one seems to exist; all other considerations are lost; the present seems to be eternal. In this supreme moment there is no shadow—or the shadow is as luminous as light. And when two beings thus love, thus unite, this is the true marriage of soul and soul. That which is said before the altar, or minister, or magistrate, or in the presence of witnesses, is only the outward evidence of that which has already happened within; it simply testifies to a union that has already taken place—to the uniting of two mornings that hope to reach the night together. Each has found the ideal: the man has found the one woman of all the world—the impersonation of affection, purity, passion, love, beauty, and grace; and the woman has found the one man of all the world, her ideal, and all that she knows of romance, of art, courage, heroism, honesty, is realized in him. The idea of contract is lost. Duty and obligation are instantly changed into desire and joy, and two lives, like uniting streams, flow on as one. Nothing can add to the sacredness of this marriage, to the obligation and duty of each to each. There is nothing in the ceremony except the desire on the part of the man and woman that the whole world should know that they are really married and that their souls hav been united.

Every marriage, for a thousand reasons, should be public, should be recorded, should be known; but, above all, to the end that the purity of the union should appear. These ceremonies are not only for the good and for the protection of the married, but also for the protection of their children, and of society as well. But, after all, the marriage remains a contract of the highest possible character—a contract in which each givs and receives a heart.

The question then arises, Should this marriage, under any circumstances, be dissolved? It is easy to understand the position taken by the various churches; but back of theological opinions is the question of contract.

In this contract of marriage, the man agrees to protect and cherish his wife. Suppose that he refuses to protect; that he abuses, assaults, and tramples upon the woman he wed. What is her redress? Is she under any obligation to him? He has violated the contract. He has failed to protect, and, in addition, he has assaulted her like a wild beast. Is she under any obligation to him? Is she bound by the contract he has broken? If so, what is the consideration for this obligation? Must she liv with him for his sake? or, if she leaves him to preserve her life, must she remain his wife for his sake? No intelligent man will answer these questions in the affirmativ.

If, then, she is not bound to remain his wife for the husband's sake, is she bound to remain his wife because the marriage was a sacrament? Is there any obligation on the part of the wife to remain with the brutal husband for the sake of God? Can her conduct affect in any way the happiness of an infinit being? Is it possible for a human being to increase or diminish the well-being of the infinit.

The next question is as to the right of society in this matter. It must be admitted that the peace of society will be promoted by the separation of such people. Certainly society cannot insist upon a wife remaining with a husband who bruises and mangles her flesh. Even married women hav a right to personal security. They do not lose, either by contract or sacrament, the right of self-preservation; this they share in common, to say the least of it, with the lowest living creatures.

This will probably be admitted by most of the enemies of divorce; but they will insist that while the wife has the right to flee from her husband's roof and seek protection of kindred or friends, the marriage—the sacrament—must remain unbroken. Is it to the interest of society that those who despise each other should liv together? Ought the world to be peopled by the children of hatred or disgust, the children of lust and loathing, or by the welcome babes of mutual love? Is it possible that an infinitly wise and compassionate God insists that a helpless woman shall remain the wife of a cruel wretch? Can this add to the joy of paradise, or tend to keep one harp in tune? Can anything be more infamous than for a government to compel a woman to remain the wife of a man she hates—of one whom she justly holds in abhorrence? Does any decent man wish the assistance of a constable, a sheriff, a judge, or a church, to keep his wife in his house? Is it possible to conceive of a more contemptible human being than a man who would appeal to force in such a case? It may be said that the woman is free to go, and that the courts will protect her from the brutality of the man who promised to be her protector; but where shall the woman go? She may hav no friends; or they may be poor; her kindred may be dead. Has she no right to build another home? Must this woman, full of kindness, affection, health, be tied and chained to this living corpse? Is there no future for her? Must she be an outcast forever—deceived and betrayed for her whole life? Can she never sit by her own hearth, with the arms of her children about her neck, and with a husband who loves and protects her? Is she to become a social pariah, and is this for the benefit of society? or is it for the sake of the wretch who destroyed her life?

The ground has been taken that woman would lose her dignity if marriage could be annulled. Is it necessary to lose your liberty in order to retain your moral character—in order to be pure and womanly? Must a woman, in order to retain her virtue, become a slave, a serf, with a beast for a master, or with society for a master, or with a phantom for a master?

If an infinit being is one of the parties to the contract, is it not the duty of this being to see to it that the contract is carried out? What consideration does the infinit being giv? What consideration does he receive? If a wife owes no duty to her husband because the husband has violated the contract, and has even assaulted her life, is it possible for her to feel toward him any real thrill of affection? If she does not, what is there left of marriage? What part of this contract or sacrament remains in living force? She cannot sustain the relation of wife, because she abhors him; she cannot remain under the same roof, for fear that she may be killed. They sustain, then, only the relations of hunter and hunted—of tyrant and victim. Is it desirable that this relation should last through life, and that it should be rendered sacred by the ceremony of a church?

Again I ask, Is it desirable to hav families raised under such circumstances? Are we in need of children born of such parents? Can the virtue of others be preserved only by this destruction of happiness, by this perpetual imprisonment?

A marriage without love is bad enough, and a marriage for wealth or position is low enough; but what shall we say of a marriage where the parties actually abhor each other? Is there any morality in this? any virtue in this? Is there virtue in retaining the name of wife, or husband, without the real and true relation? Will any good man say, will any good woman declare, that a true, loving woman should be compelled to be the mother of children whose father she detests? Is there a good woman in the world who would not shrink from this herself? and is there a woman so heartless and so immoral that she would force another to bear that from which she would shudderingly and shriekingly shrink?

Marriages are made by men and women; not by society; not by the state; not by the church; not by supernatural beings. By this time we should know that nothing is moral that does not tend to the well-being of sentient beings; that nothing is virtuous the result of which is not good. We know now, if we know anything, that all the reasons for doing right, and all the reasons against doing wrong, are here in this world. We should hav imagination enough to put ourselvs in the place of another. Let a man suppose himself a helpless woman beaten by a brutal husband—would he advocate divorces then?

Few people hav an adequate idea of the sufferings of women and children, of the number of wives who tremble when they hear the footsteps of a returning husband, of the number of children who hide when they hear the voice of a father. Few people know the number of blows that fall on the flesh of the helpless every day, and few know the nights of terror passed by mothers who hold babes to their breasts. Compared with these, all the hardships of poverty borne by those who love each other are as nothing. Men and women truly married bear the sufferings and misfortunes of poverty together. They console each other. In the darkest night they see the radiance of a star, and their affection givs to the heart of each perpetual sunshine.

The good home is the unit of the good government. The hearthstone is the corner-stone of civilization. Society is not interested in the preservation of hateful homes, of homes where husbands and wives are selfish, cold, and cruel. It is not to the interest of society that good women should be enslaved, that they should liv in fear, or that they should become mothers by husbands whom they hate. Homes should be filled with kind and generous fathers, with true and loving mothers; and when they are so filled, the world will be civilized. Intelligence will rock the cradle; justice will sit in the courts; wisdom in the legislativ halls; and above all and over all, like the dome of heaven, will be the spirit of liberty.

Although marriage is the most important and the most sacred contract that human beings can make, still when that contract has been violated, courts should hav the power to declare it null and void upon such conditions as may be just.

As a rule, the woman dowers the husband with her youth, her beauty, her love—with all she has; and from this contract certainly the husband should never be released, unless the wife has broken the conditions of that contract. Divorces should be granted publicly, precisely as the marriage should be solemnized. Every marriage should be known, and there should be witnesses, to the end that the character of the contract entered into should be understood; the record should be open and public. And the same is true of divorces. The conditions should be determined, the property should be divided by a court of equity, and the custody of the children given under regulations prescribed.

Men and women are not virtuous by law. Law does not of itself create virtue, nor is it the foundation or fountain of love. Law should protect virtue, and law should protect the wife, if she has kept her contract, and the husband, if he has fulfilled his. But the death of love is the end of marriage. Love is natural. Back of all ceremony burns and will forever burn the sacred flame. There has been no time in the world's history when that torch was extinguished. In all ages, in all climes, among all people, there has been true, pure, and unselfish love. Long before a ceremony was thought of, long before a priest existed, there were true and perfect marriages. Back of public opinion is natural modesty, the affections of the heart; and in spite of all law, there is and forever will be the realm of choice. Wherever love is, it is pure; and everywhere, and at all times, the ceremony of marriage testifies to that which has happened within the temple of the human heart.

Question (2). Ought divorced people to be allowed to marry under any circumstances?

This depends upon whether marriage is a crime. If it is not a crime, why should any penalty be attached? Can anyone conceive of any reason why a woman obtaining a divorce, without fault on her part, should be compelled as a punishment to remain forever single? Why should she be punished for the dishonesty or brutality of another? Why should a man who faithfully kept his contract of marriage, and who was deserted by an unfaithful wife, be punished for the benefit of society? Why should he be doomed to liv without a home?

There is still another view. We must remember that human passions are the same after as before divorce. To prevent remarriage is to giv excuse for vice.

Question (3). What is the effect of divorce upon the integrity of the family?

The real marriage is back of the ceremony, and the real divorce is back of the decree. When love is dead, when husband and wife abhor each other, they are divorced. The decree records in a judicial way what has really taken place, just as the ceremony of marriage attests a contract already made.

The true family is the result of the true marriage, and the institution of the family should above all things be preserved. What becomes of the sacredness of the home, if the law compels those who abhor each other to sit at the same hearth? This lowers the standard, and changes the happy haven of home into the prison-cell. If we wish to preserve the integrity of the family, we must preserve the democracy of the fireside, the republicanism of the home, the absolute and perfect equality of husband and wife. There must be no exhibition of force, no specter of fear. The mother must not remain through an order of court, or the command of a priest, or by virtue of the tyranny of society; she must sit in absolute freedom, the queen of herself, the sovereign of her own soul and of her own body. Real homes can never be preserved through force, through slavery, or superstition. Nothing can be more sacred than a home, no altar purer than the hearth.

Question (4). Does the absolute prohibition of divorce where it exists contribute to the moral purity of society?

We must define our terms. What is moral purity? The intelligent of this world seek the well-being of themselvs and others. They know that happiness is the only good; and this they strive to attain. To liv in accordance with the conditions of well-being is moral in the highest sense. To use the best instrumentalities to attain the highest ends is our highest conception of the moral. In other words, morality is the melody or the perfection of conduct. A man is not moral because he is obedient through fear or ignorance. Morality livs in the realm of perceived obligation, and where a being acts in accordance with perceived obligation, that being is moral. Morality is not the child of slavery. Ignorance is not the corner-stone of virtue.

The first duty of a human being is to himself. He must see to it that he does not become a burden upon others. To be self-respecting, he must endeavor to be self-sustaining. If by his industry and intelligence he accumulates a margin, then he is under obligation to do with that margin all the good he can. He who livs to the ideal does the best he can. In true marriage men and women giv not only their bodies, but their souls. This is the ideal marriage; this is moral. They who giv their bodies, but not their souls, are not married, whatever the ceremony may be; this is immoral.

If this be true, upon what principle can a woman continue to sustain the relation of wife after love is dead? Is there some other consideration that can take the place of genuin affection? Can she be bribed with money, or a home, or position, or by public opinion, and still remain a virtuous woman? Is it for the good of society that virtue should be thus crucified between church and state? Can it be said that this contributes to the moral purity of the human race?

Is there a higher standard of virtue in countries where divorce is prohibited than in those where it is granted? Where husbands and wives who hav ceased to love cannot be divorced, there are mistresses and lovers.

The sacramental view of marriage is the shield of vice. The world looks at the wife who has been abused, who has been driven from the home of her husband, and the world pities; and when this wife is loved by some other man, the world excuses. So, too, the husband who cannot liv in peace, who leaves his home, is pitied and excused.

Is it possible to conceive of anything more immoral than for a husband to insist on living with a wife who has no love for him? Is not this a perpetual crime? Is the wife to lose her personality? Has she no right of choice? Is her modesty the property of another? Is the man she hates the lord of her desire? Has she no right to guard the jewels of her soul? Is there a depth below this? And is this the foundation of morality? this the corner-stone of society? this the arch that supports the dome of civilization? Is this pathetic sacrifice on the one hand, this sacrilege on the other, pleasing in the sight of heaven?

To me, the tenderest word in our language, the most pathetic fact within our knowledge, is maternity. Around this sacred word cluster the joys and sorrows, and agonies and ecstasies, of the human race. The mother walks in the shadow of death that she may giv another life. Upon the altar of love she puts her own life in pawn. When the world is civilized, no wife will become a mother against her will. Man will then know that to enslave another is to imprison himself. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Pessimistic Atavism.

It is a characteristic peculiarity of some types of the genus homo, to be able to see, to appreciate and assimilate, the things that are congenial to their tastes, their prejudices and habits; and not to see, or to ignore or underrate, that which does not harmonize with their partisan notions, their selfish proclivities, their bigoted or fixed opinions. Our religion, called Christianity, according to history has its bright side as well as its dark or black one. If there had been nothing bright, attractiv, and inspiring in it, it never would hav taken such a hold of the affections, the tenderest feelings and sublimest interests, of such a large portion of the best of the human family.

That character or personification of virtue and unselfish devotion to conviction that stood firm to a sense of duty in the face of death; that love and tenderness for the poor and erring, that spirit of forgivness and self-sacrifice for friend and foe, that enthusiasm for humanity, which is represented in the name Joshua or Jesus, could not fail to exercise a power over the human mind in the direction of what the world calls goodness.

Taking the record of this character as we find it in the gospels, it is not perfect nor as consistent as we would expect, but this is largely owing to corrupting manipulation in the interest of creed and craft, of gentile barbarism, of literary pride, disregard of accuracy and partisan interests of uninformed and bigoted translators. Read commentary, revised New Testament.

It was the ethics of these Judean lessons, so far as they were or are pure, that has enamored good people, and riveted them with almost an infatuation to the teacher. It is on this account, and for this reason, not wisest and best to discard the teacher and his lessons and to denounce them as a fraudulent imposition, when the facts of history and the discoveries of critical scholarship are defied and outraged by so doing. Such pessimistic blindness and intolerance will never succeed in enlightening, reforming, and saving the world. Why not take the good with the qualifications and limitations that such high critical authority grants and justifies, and keep with the better classes of the people in our work, rather than make ourselvs hostil and hated by our dishonest and gratuitous antagonisms?

The dangers and threats of Communism, or any other ism, hav no terror in them. If some of the semi-barbarians of Judea were good enough to liv happily in a commune, or if they were miserable from want of adaptation to such a life then, or if those who some time in the future attempt it should fail in the experiment, that has nothing to do with the question of ethics as a guide to conduct in aggregation or segregation, only so far as wisdom and experience shall establish the best methods of practicing these moral virtues. If we are not good enough for the commune, are we afraid to trust our posterity with the experiment? Is it dangerous for us to accept these simple but sublime ethics, or to commend them to others, lest they should lead to Communism, or to an abandonment of all wars, and to a happy adjustment of the conflict between capital and labor, and to harmonious coöperation?

If "Scrutator" will look into this subject, with the aids and light of modern scholarship, and probe it to the bottom, instead of commending it "to the critical analysis of more learned contributors," we might infer, he would hav a better title to his name, and the investigation might possibly enable him "to overlook the position the impregnability of which he doubts without attacking."

In view of the great interest, the vast expenditure of energy and wealth, in maintaining and propagating Christianity, it becomes a subject in which we are all involved. Embracing as it does the future of civilization, the destiny of free government, and the stability of liberal institutions, it is well for those who are dissatisfied, and are denouncing it, to know precisely what to do, and how to do it the best, to correct or expose what is false and erroneous, and not condemn the good with the evil.

The gospels as such hav no authority, nor had they for the first three centuries; for then they were without date or known authorship, as they really are now. They are neither historical nor authentic.

The practical, ethical truth they contain has been their chief value in the past, and should be their only value and authority now.

There can be nothing gained by us turning monks or priests, and building up doctrins and creeds, theories and schemes, out of the miserable arrangement of words that writers, copyists, or translators hav seen fit to offer to the superstitious, the ignorant, and credulous. We can use only the pure and rational ethics they teach for a "hobby-horse," on which individuals and nations can ride out of the brutal and bloody habit of butchering one another, and see their interest and the wisest economy consists in settling their differences amicably instead of by the savagery of wholesale slaughter. When men use their reasoning faculties and moral sense instead of passion, muscle, and brute force, "the economic falsehoods in the relations of capital with labor, and the political falsehoods in the relations of peoples with governments, which determin wars," will not exist.

We may cavil, contend, and vituperate over these minor evils that oppress and threaten the stability of institutions and governments, but they can never be eradicated or corrected, nor should they be, while we glorify or tolerate human butchery and the people giv it their sanction. Yes, my "hobby-horse" has carried me to this conclusion.

"Scrutator" will pardon me for saying his style of reasoning and methods of discussing this subject are rather too flippant and superficial; his innuendoes, inferences, and groundless suspicions are all gratuitous and impertinent. His time would hav been better spent in examining his subject, in compiling and collating the facts of h story, and in acquainting himself with the discoveries and conclusions of modern scholarship. He then might hav given us something to rely on as instructiv and edifying.

T. E. LONGSHORE.

Slaves in a Free Country.

From the Cleveland News and Herald.

The last number of Puck contains an admirable cartoon on the contest between the parochial and the public schools. In the background at the left is a large dingy-looking building, surmounted by three crosses and labeled, "Parochial Schools." At the right is a large, airy, well-lighted edifice, over which the stars and stripes are flying, the words "Public Schools" being painted in large letters in the front above a commodious playground. In the foreground is a Catholic woman with her two children and beside her is an Irish bishop, with hair on his teeth, cross and beads dangling from his neck, an excommunication held in the left hand, while the right hand points to the parochial school. Under the cartoon are the words: "No freedom for Catholic parents in a free country."

Nothing could more forcibly illustrate the cruel despotism exercised in this free country by the Roman Catholic church. It is the parochial school or excommunication; deprive your children of the inestimable blessings of our free public education; giv from your meager earnings to support parochial schools or accept the tortures of hell-fire hereafter. Thousands of Catholic citizens would like to send their children to the public schools if they were not restrained from so doing by the terrors of the church. We know personally of an instance where a poor old Irishman in this city lived upon the charity of Protestants while paying to keep his children in a parochial school. When asked why he did it he answered that "the priests made such a damned row with him that he couldn't help it." The teachers in our public schools report that the Catholic children are withdrawn and sent to the parochial schools a few years, and when they come back again they hav forgotten nearly all they hav previously learned. Some Catholic parents hav the courage and independence to brave the terrors of the church and to keep their children permanently in our public schools. Unfortunately this class is not numerous. The great mass of Catholic parents are frightened into obedience by the priests. While having no freedom in this free country, they are trying to giv freedom to Ireland; and in this state they belong, as a rule, to that party which is howling to the winds in favor of home rule in politics.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - NOVEMBER 9, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Secular Effort in Washington.

A committee of the Walla Walla Liberal Club has gone to work in the right way to affect the action of the legislature of that state now in session. The constitution of Washington leaves the taxation of church property in the hands of the legislature. The Walla Walla Liberal Club desires to see justice done to all taxpayers, and issues a circular to the Freethinkers of the state, reciting:

"Our legislature will convene November 6th, and we hav every reason to anticipate the church organizations will be on hand and combine in exerting their utmost power and influence to induce the legislature to exempt church property from taxation, and secure enactment for rigid Sunday observance.

"To counteract the nefarious schemes of the various powerful combinations of fanatics, whenever they shall attempt to influence legislation, will you help, by inducing every Liberal, and every liberal-minded voter in your neighborhood, to write urgent letters to their members of the legislature to oppose such schemes?

"The Walla Walla Liberal Club—so as to lighten your labors in accomplishing this work—will furnish you with a number of copies of letters, so that when you cannot induce persons to write letters of their own composition, you can offer them a form of letter to copy; and those who plead lack of time to do so you can giv a letter ready written, only needing their signature, of which letters we will furnish you a supply, upon request to A. W. Calder, box 696, Walla Walla, Wash.

"Urge all Liberals to persuade their friends and neighbors to send similar letters.

"The receipt of such letters, from so many voters of their own election district, will certainly insure favorable action on the part of the legislature, for every member will be in receipt of a large number of such letters.

"This is, beyond doubt, the surest and most effectiv method to check the designs of the enemy until our organization is accomplished.

"Insidious, vigilant, urged by fanaticism, with unlimited means, the powerful church organizations, united for mutual help, will assuredly succeed unless the Liberals of our state arouse to action."

This is business, and the people of Washington ought to respond heartily and zealously for the sake of their own pockets if for no nobler reason. There is no justice and no sense in exempting church property from taxation. The injustice of it is apparent to anyone who considers robbery to be wrong, for every dollar's worth of exempt property adds to the tax to be borne by the rest, and such excess, wrenched from the citizen against his will, is as much a theft as the act of the highwayman who "holds him up" and relieves him of his money. It is simply a robbery by the state of one citizen for the benefit of another too mean to pay his own religious bills. There is no sense in exempting churches, because there is no benefit to be derived from it. Churches add nothing to the industrial wealth of a town, and the claim that they conserve morality has long ago been exploded. Who ever heard of a reduction in a police force or the curtailing of penal resources or the razing of foundling asylums because a new minister had come to town, or a revival started, or a new church had been built?

It is not the least encouraging sign for the Washington Liberals that in one locality the election of a member of the legislature hinged upon the Sunday observance question, and that the no-Sunday-law candidate won. Mr. A. K. Clark, of Rockford, Spokane county, was nominated by the Republicans, but because of his broad views upon Sunday observance was opposed by the church-members of his party, and gained the election by the suffrages of Democrats who shared his opinions and voted for him because of those opinions. He is pledged to oppose the puritans, and the Liberals of his state should uphold him and other legislativ advocates of no Sunday laws in all possible ways. We urge upon everyone in Washington who believes that church and state should be separate the duty of making his opinion known to his representativs in both houses of the legislature and to the governor. Let the impolicy and injustice of exempting church property and of passing Sunday laws be made so manifest that the Christians will not be able to trade off concessions in other things for these two measures.

At the same time, the Walla Walla Club has taken the initiativ in forming a state organization, and the Liberals of the state are requested to inform Mr. A. W. Calder, secretary of the club, of their views upon the advisability of holding a state convention at Seattle on Paine's birthday, January 29, 1890. The attendance and success of the Oregon convention justifies the Washington Liberals in thinking that they, too, can effect a permanent organization which shall be a strong influence in achieving state secularization. Oregon already possesses its state constitution and laws, but Washington's laws are now to be made, and the work is urgent. If the Liberals of Washington do not make a great effort this winter, they deserve to be forced to support the churches and to be bound by Sunday laws. It is almost infinitly easier to prevent the passage of a law than to repeal one. Secular sentiment was strong enough to compel the constitutional convention to leave these matters to the legislature, and there is now more than a good fighting chance to defeat the enactment of these unjust laws.

Wyoming's Proposed Constitution.

Wyoming will knock at the door of the Union this winter, and ask to be admitted as a full-grown state. To hasten her admission she prepared in September a Constitution, and submitted it to her people last Tuesday, with what result we had not learned when THE TRUTH SEEKER went to press.

Of course the Christians were busy in the convention which framed this organic instrument, and their handiwork is plainly visible. If the constitution be adopted churches and church lands and parsonages will pay no taxes and the legislature will be allowed to exempt as much other religious property as the church can influence the members to include in their exempt lists. The schools, too, can be used as a means of familiarizing children with Christian tenets, for while sectarian instruction is forbidden, the constitution allows religious instructions, providing only against compulsory attendance thereon. With a strict Sunday law, the church will hav Wyoming pretty well under her thumb.

On the other side, the constitution contains some admirable provisions, the best of which are these:

"No money of the state shall ever be given or appropriated to any sectarian or religious society or institution."

Good as far as it goes, but the prohibition should hav been extended to counties and towns and cities. The use, however, of the word religious will bother the churches when they apply to the Wyoming legislature for aid.

Another good clause is section 18:

"The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference shall be forever guaranteed in this state; and no person shall be rendered incompetent to hold any office of trust or profit, or to serve as a witness or juror, because of his opinion on any matter of religious belief whatever."

Unless the legislature shall elect some asinine laws on the matter of oaths, that clause will put citizens on an equality. Religious persecution of one sect by another, such as the Christians of Massachusetts used to indulge in, is prohibited.

"Section 2 [Ordinances]. Perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant of this state shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship."

Freedom of speech is also guaranteed, and every person may speak, write, and publish on all subjects. Heresy, therefore, will hav free swing in Wyoming unless the legislature adopts some old code containing blasphemy laws.

One of the best, because most just, provisions of this proposed constitution for the proposed new state is this:

"The rights of citizens of the state of Wyoming to vote and hold office shall not be denied or abridged on account of sex. Both male and female citizens of this state shall equally enjoy all civil, political, and religious rights and privileges."

Though this clause will probably prevent any revision of the constitution so as to secure equality of taxation, yet the Liberals will welcome it, for it is better to submit to injustice than to perpetrate it. And perhaps poor woman will not forever be the slave and dupe of the church, giving it strength that she may be kept weak, keeping it alive that it may kill her aspirations to be something besides a dressmaker's model and a plaything for man. Into whatever religious excesses woman may rusb, or however weak she may be in practical affairs, there is as much injustice in ruling her without her consent as there was in King George's attempt to rule male Americans against their will.

On the whole there is a vast difference between such a constitution as that proposed for Wyoming in 1889 and that adopted one hundred years ago, say by New Jersey!

Direct or Indirect.

In the late strike in London, Cardinal Manning offered his services in mediation between the strikers and the employers. He managed to make himself quite a prominent figure on the side of the workmen throughout the whole affair. He has long been conspicuous in charities to the poor of London. His church will claim much credit for all this, and will receive much from the unthinking masses. But it deserves none. The cardinal's actions represent direct methods as distinct from indirect methods. Things may be done by two methods, direct or indirect. The church has always employed direct; Rationalists and all men of brain hav always agitated for employment of indirect. Small brains, capable of grasping only one idea at a time, can use only direct; larger brains, taking in at once and holding in one comprehensiv grasp a numerous and complex collection of ideas, expedients, designs, use the indirect. A dog seeing meat before him can run straight forward toward it; that is, is capable of simple direct action; but he cannot grasp and put into action varied indirect means of getting at the meat if it is a little removed from him, as for instance, unlatching doors, setting traps to kill game, or raising stock. Taking a second stage, the inferior class of humans can strike out blindly when oppressed too far, as we see them in revolutions, by which means, though hitting friend as often as foe, they sometimes do chance to deliver themselvs temporarily from the evil. They can, when endangered by pestilence, beg relief of a supposed supernatural helper. They can, when members of their societies do wrong, visit on them extreme penalties, which to some extent check that doing wrong. They can, when they hav ignorantly allowed things to be so badly managed that able men are out of work and suffering, somewhat alleviate that suffering by charity. They can, when employers are too hard, strike and to some extent better their condition. But all these are simple direct methods. All these are about as simple and single and direct as those of the dog or other brutes. Larger minds, capable of holding more than one idea, of penetrating behind appearances, of holding and glancing over and manipulating a large number of the elements of the situation, endeavor to hav adopted schemes of greater complexity, of greater indirectness, of more difficulty to administer certainly but giving results incomparably superior. They endeavor to hav adopted indirect methods in place of direct. In place of letting oppression reach its brutalizing and intolerable limit, and then throwing it off with violence and bloodshed, they endeavor to hav adopted indirect preventiv methods of having the people civilized, enlightened, and informed so that they can keep the government just all the time. In place of praying for abatement of a pestilence, they endeavor to hav adopted indirect preventiv methods of scientific investigation of the causes of pestilence, and their removal. Instead of the imperfect expedient of deterring criminals by threats of fierce punishments, they endeavor to hav adopted indirect preventiv methods of investigating scientifically the causes of crime and removing them, such as ignorance, poverty, the example set by the state in wars, and the atonement belief. In place of the wasteful and degrading administering of charity, they endeavor to hav adopted indirect preventiv methods of scientifically investigating to the end of discovering some method of opening employment to all able men. In place of the wasteful industrial wars called strikes, they endeavor to hav adopted indirect preventiv methods of scientifically investigating the proper distribution of the products of labor, and apportioning those products on the basis of equity revealed by thus investigating.

In place of ignorance, these Rationalists, these men of sense of whatever belief, would substitute knowledge. In place of cure, they would substitute prevention. In place of blindness, they would sub stitute foresight. In place of neglect, they would substitute provision. In place of violence, they would substitute reasoning. In place of instinct, simple and single perception, they would substitute wider and profounder comprehension and capacity. In place of emotion, they would substitute judgment. In place of impulse, they would substitute deliberation. To retain the phrase with which we commenced, in place of direct methods they would substitute indirect.

All these direct methods are supposed by most to do good. Most would be surprised if told that they do not do good, but harm. But this is the truth. They do do harm. Charity, for instance, has long been judged by the best thinkers to do as much harm as good, perhaps more harm than good. Another of the practices spoken of, severe and cruel punishment, is beginning to be seen to do harm. At the time when punishment was most severe and cruel, crimes most abounded. As punishment is mitigated, crime decreases. The reason perhaps is, that barbarous punishments familiarize the people with barbarity. The taking of a life by law, even the life of a murderer, breaks a sentiment which should be encouraged, the sentiment of the sacredness and inviolability, under all circumstances, of human life. But still we hav not given the chief reason why direct methods do harm, as we said they do. That chief reason is, that they prevent the adoption of indirect methods. The case in which they prevent the adoption of indirect methods in the most striking manner, is that of the use of prayer against pestilence, instead of science. For centuries the dupes of priests, though dying like flies under their pestilences, systematically burnt every physician who in defiance of the ecclesiastics dared to suggest those physical preventions and remedies that now are steadily approaching the elimination of such diseases. While this is the most striking case, the other cases on a little thought will disclose equal harm done in prevention of the adoption of successful indirect methods.

So Cardinal Manning is doing harm to all those people who think he is doing them good. For his professions of friendship will warm many hearts toward his church, and that church is the chief of all powers tending to the perpetuation of the unsuccessful direct methods and the repression of the successful indirect ones.

One Right Secured in New York State.

Mr. William Harrington, of Frankfort, N. Y., queries:

"How am I to become an American citizen without proving false to my present convictions, which are Atheistic? Will the authorities require me to swear by that insane petrifaction of Jewism, which is most decidedly contrary to my honest conceptions?"

Mr. Harrington is informed that as he livs in New York state he can affirm in these words: "I do solemnly and sincerely declare and affirm," and he need not hold up his hand, bow his head, or do any other thing of a superstitious or degrading nature. But he may hav to go to law to obtain his rights, as officials and judges sometimes think themselvs gifted with omniscience and bound to maintain the alleged sovereignty of a "Supreme Being." Judge Barrett of the supreme court decided this question last year in the case of "The People ex rel Macdonald vs. Nuss et al inspectors of election," in the 34th election district of the 20th assembly district of the city of New York. The judge said:

"The inspectors had no right to require the relator to affirm with the uplifted hand, nor was it within their province to exact a religious test. Indeed, their interrogation upon the subject of the relator's belief in the existence of a deity was an impertinence to which no citizen in the absence of any suspicion of his truthfulness should be subjected."

And that relator this year visited the same place of registration, with the same Nuss on the board, and affirmed with his hat on and both hands thrust deep into his trousers pockets. Next year, if the police commissioners shall appoint gentlemen in the place of Nuss et al, the relator will use them with respect, as he did in the first instance before they denied him the right to register because he refused to tell what he believed about "God."

Mr. Harrington should respectfully but firmly maintain his right to affirm without any religious demonstration, and, if refused, resort to the courts.

Charles Bradlaugh.

Just before the Secular Union Congress, telegrams announcing the serious if not fatal illness of Charles Bradlaugh were received at the daily newspaper offices in this country. On the 27th another cablegram brought the good news that he was again on his feet. However, the brief but severe attack of lung congestion served one good purpose: it called forth from the member of Parliament who sends letters to a syndicate of daily papers in the large cities here, this tribute to Mr. Bradlaugh:

"I am far enough from agreeing with many of the opinions on social and religious questions held by Mr. Bradlaugh, but as a politician I do not believe there is a more upright or more conscientious man alive to-day. I hav often seen him take up a course which was directly opposed to his own interests, but I hav never seen him do any underhand or unfair thing. His word is absolutely to be trusted, and he will take no part in the discreditable tactics of parliamentary obstruction or mean intrigue. More than once I hav known him to incur great unpopularity with his party, simply by adhering honestly to an understanding he had made with the government on some detail of business. He cannot be cajoled or bullied into doing what he believes to be a dishonorable or even unfair act. He is perfectly candid, straightforward, and aboveboard in all his transactions.

"Of how many leading men in Parliament, whose pretensions and standing are much greater than Mr. Bradlaugh's, could as much as this be truthfully said? I should be sorry to hav to reckon them up. I hav served on committees with Mr. Bradlaugh, and hav never failed to remark not only the great acuteness he displayed in sifting facts, but the immense industry he brings to bear upon the investigation of any subject to which he addresses himself. That is one secret of his success with the House of Commons. He rarely speaks without having thoroughly mastered a question. He never wastes the time of the House. Thus it has come to pass that many who had a bitter prejudice against him on account of some passages in his career, which did not look well from the outside at any rate, now hav a genuin respect for his character as well as for his abilities."

Only a few days previous to the receipt of the news of his illness we received a letter from Mr. Bradlaugh promising an article for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL now being prepared. The latest news enables us to hope that the promis can be kept. American Freethinkers are about as proud of their champion in England as they could be if they themselvs benefited from his successes; and in sending to him its resolution of sympathy the Secular Union spoke for tens of thousands.

P. T. Barnum on God.

At Stamford, Conn., a few weeks before he left for Europe Phineas T. Barnum made an address on religion before the state convention of the Universalist church. Mr. Barnum said that Christians had a different way of thinking about God now from that of fifty years ago. "When I first heard of the doctrin of the Universalists," said he, "I felt so utterly astonished that I thought I'd drop dead in my boots. The orthodox faith painted God as so revengeful a being that you could hardly distinguish the difference between God and the devil. If I had almighty power and could take a pebble and giv it life, knowing beforehand that fifty-nine seconds out of every sixty would be extreme misery, I would be a monster. Yet this is how God was described, and people talk about loving such a being."

This is strong sense and good, true feeling. It is the strong sense and good, true feeling of Thomas Paine and Colonel Ingersoll. It is the sense and the feeling that we Freethinkers hav been beating into the people of this country for one hundred years, and at last they hav got beaten in so extensivly that a man can express Freethought opinions and not be certain always of losing his public patronage and perhaps his liberty too. Few will revile Mr. Barnum now for saying this, but those who were first in the path of reform, those who said it a few generations ago, those who said it when no one else dared, are the ones that suffered. They suffered then, that Mr. Barnum and all might say it now. Had it not been for them, we could not say what we say now. The first are always the ones that get the blame and the pain, and they are never adequately thanked. What we hav done for Bruno is not half of what he deserves. A statue to Thomas Paine in every town in the United States would not be half what we owe that noble pioneer. Paine's memory comes down to us blackened, and his fame is diminished, his name kept out of school-books, and his service ignored in our commemorations, because he said a century ago what Mr. Barnum says to-day.

Editorial Notes.

THE trial of the Messrs. Harman and Mr. Walker has been postponed till April. We hope that then the district attorney will hav the goodness and sense to discontinue the prosecution entirely.

MR. VICTOR LENNSTRAND, of Stockholm, Sweden, seems bound to wear his prosecutors out. The most recent advices, via London, inform us that he is still at liberty and working as energetically as ever for Freethought. An accusation was delivered against the September number of Fritankaren for its containing a parody on one of the Psalms, but the accusation was unheeded by the authorities.

MR. WATTS'S Literary Guide, of London, has found another candidate for the honor of writing "Supernatural Religion." It believes the author to be Mr. Walter Richard Cassel, a nephew of Dr. Pusey. Whether this is authentic or not, the book stands as a monument of scholarship and research, and its conclusions as to the meagerness of support Christianity can derive from history are not likely to be overthrown.

THE London Freethinker records that Kristopher Janson, the Norwegian poet and Unitarian divine, has translated Remsburg's "Bible Morals" into the Norwegian language. J. C. Forsberg, a Swedish Freethinker, is translating the same work into the Swedish language. Mr. Foote adds, "Mr. Remsburg has a son who, from his contributions to the 'Children's Corners' of THE TRUTH SEEKER and Boston Investigator, is evidently a chip of the old block."

ABOUT six weeks ago the editor of the Elmira Telegram attacked what he was pleased to designate the Ingersollian philosophy. He was, however, fair enough to insert in refutation a communication from L. Dewitt Griswold, and Mr. Griswold's letter called out over thirty screeds from ministers, laymen, and bishops. The Telegram editor now wants to order a halt. Mr. Griswold writes with a big pen and both hands, and as he has one of the best collection of Freethought books in the country to draw upon, he is a particular object of wrath to the Christians in his neighborhood.

THE Herald, of this city, on the 1st instant printed these editorial paragraphs:

"You wouldn't think it possible, but Mary Baron was driven crazy by the want of food. She was yesterday taken to Bellevue Hospital.

"New York—nineteenth century—five hundred churches—nothing to eat."

What hav the churches to do with it? Their business is to feed folks on the bread of life—which is an unsubstantial food for another world. But if the city had all the money the church has swindled from our treasury it could feed all the Mary Barons likely to appear within the next million years.

THE general synod of the Dutch Reformed church has presented an address to President Harrison, following the example of the same synod which one hundred years ago impertinently attempted to wring from President Washington some expression which could be construed into a promis that he would run his administration in the interest of Christianity. The present synod has distinguished itself by this remark in its address: "The people and government alike must render willing submission to the wholesome restraints and directions of the religion of the Bible." The statement means, when its honest purpose is got at, that the church must be allowed to make the laws of the country. Every bigot calls his tyranny "wholesome restraint."

THE Horace Seaver Memorial Volume is a handsome book with large pages, wide margins, big type, and fine paper. It contains a portrait of Mr. Seaver, his biography by Ernest Mendum, the Eulogy by Colonel Ingersoll, the resolutions passed by the Chicago and Boston societies, a sketch of his work by L. K. Washburn, tributes from the press, and letters of condolence received at the Investigator office. The book makes his friends better acquainted with Mr. Seaver dead than they were with Mr. Seaver living—so modestly did he keep himself from public view—and in preparing this volume Mr. Mendum has enabled the admirers of his lifelong companion to obtain a souvenir which they will undoubtedly value highly. The book can be had for one dollar.

THE New York Sun agrees with the American Secular Union that Mr. Wanamaker is slightly out of place in his present position. He is confessedly a failure in the cabinet, says the Sun, and confessedly a success as a Sunday-school superintendent, inasmuch as "it was in his capacity as a Sunday-school manager and instructor, and not in his secular aspect as a successful collector of the sinews of war or as an eminent Philadelphia literary man, that he is closest to the business and bosom of General Harrison." Therefore the logical conclusion is that "Mr. Wanamaker is the right man for Bethany Sunday-school, and some other man is the right man for the postmaster generalship." We agree thoroughly and heartily with our daily contemporary. Let Holy John go back to his Sunday-school and let a man be appointed postmaster-general.

Letters from Friends.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 26, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3, for which you will please send your ever so dear paper to me for one year. I hope the time will come that your paper will be found in every house, for it is the most truthful paper on earth. It shines like the evening star between dark clouds. Keep on with your noble mission. Humanity can be proud of you, as long as you keep an open field for every mind to express itself openly. Every person, under any flag, religion, or nationality, under the name "man," is with you, for your fundamental principle is reason and truth. D. THORNE.

COALTON, KY., Oct. 20, E.M. 289.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find money to pay for Ingersoll's Debate with Field. I am indeed sorry that Liberals hav not established an American tract society for the circulation of Liberal literature. I would be in favor of making THE TRUTH SEEKER headquarters, and establishing a fund for that purpose. There are many people who would like to read our literature, but are waiting for the necessary funds to purchase it. This tract society would hasten the dawn of Liberal light. Let us be up and doing. Any person wishing to send Liberal literature to me will please address it to Newcomb, Tenn. S. P. HERRON.

AURORA, IA., Oct. 17, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Wm. Redfield died on the 8th instant, being sick only three days, of pneumonia. His desire was to be cremated, but he would not believe that he was sick unto death, hence we buried him at West Union for the present. He was all ready to go to the convention, and was busy building a library—probably the cause of his being sick. He was the seventh white man that made settlement in this county, and rose from a journeyman painter to be one of the first merchants in West Union, then a builder and mill-owner, and last a farmer, where he died, in the midst of the finest collection of Freethought books and ancient coins. He was honest, truthful, and just. ALEX RISK.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Oct. 22, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: This day my subscription for the noble TRUTH SEEKER expires. I hasten to renew for another year. The only fault that can be found with it is that it contains too very much, especially for those who hav continual pressing business matters, as is the case with ourselvs. It contains so much that is too good and instructiv to be lost, that in order to read it with a purpose to understand and remember it in its entirety it actually requires more time than business men hav to devote, especially one like myself who sorely regrets to let any good thing pass unread, unlearned. It is a great instructor, and should hav a circulation of several hundred thousand. My home would be incomplete without it. I will continue it so long as I continue to liv. It is accomplishing a mighty revolutionary work.

L. DEWITT GRISWOLD.

CINCINNATI, O., Oct. 29, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: There are a great many phases to religion, but only one great truth; and the powers of reason and the most modern and advanced scientific philosophy, together with the most solid arguments, point directly to that truth, which is Materialism. There is nothing that has so firm a basis to rest on as this intellectual and sure foundation. Where, oh, where, I ask, can any one thing be discovered which is not material? The most attenuated atom is as much material as an article of large bulk. There are many things invisible to the sight, that yet are material. There is no vacuum in the whole of nature. In a word, what is not material is nothing. Sir, as time rolls round and the minds of the great multitudes of people become more and more enlightened this grand truth will triumph over supernaturalism in all it's queer and meaningless nothings. Sir, anti-Materialism has driven vast numbers insane. It is time to stop it. It is not rational, but full of errors.

THOMAS WINTER.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., Oct. 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The Italians of our town press themselvs forward more prominently than any other nationalities in San Antonio. Their members of the cosmopolitan population here are bent on celebrating something. If they cannot celebrate the capture of the Eternal City, they will celebrate the landing of Christopher Columbus on the American shore on October 12th, the 397th anniversary of America's birthday.

The Italian organizations, in conjunction with some Mexicans, paraded imposingly through some of the streets, escorted by military bands of music, and marched to the park and San Pedro Springs. A salute of twenty-one guns was fired by the United States artillery.

Orator Hon. John Copeland was introduced by Mr. D. Quasso, master of ceremonies. The orator had it that Rome was the center of learning. Their republic swayed the then known world. Christopher was deeply impressed that westward must lie a continent. He asked for money and help at courts of Italy, France, and England in vain, but was assisted by the court of Spain, and received there $20,000, which sum was great at that time. The event of the discovery of the American continent cannot be comprehended nor properly understood, even by our best philosophers, while its grandeur, its glory, will be revealed in a hundred years from now.

You announce in THE TRUTH SEEKER a book, "How to Strengthen the Memory; or, Natural and Scientific Methods of Never Forgetting, Keeping our Memories in Good Working Order." Price by mail, $1. Please find within $1, and mail the book to me, and to my address, and oblige,

Yours truly, CARL E. KREISCHER.

NICKERSON, KAN., Oct. 17, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Being somewhat a traveler, I was wanting THE TRUTH SEEKER for good, solid reading. Not having seen much of the paper since Bennett's time, and not wanting to subscribe for a year, I got the news-agent here to get it for me, which has been done nearly a year, costing me ten cents a week. I would offer this as a suggestion to all those wanting the paper, that they order it through their news-agent. Of course it costs more for the year, but one will not feel ten cents as much as $3. Besides, the interest on the $3 will nearly balance up, anyway; that is, if paid in advance. I am taking the only Liberal paper I know of in this town, of any kind, that is strictly so. But five hundred names were obtained for the remonstrance petition to the Blair bill by Mr. Hendry, a Seventh Day Adventist. Out of the three ministers he got one, the Methodist. He also got the Baptist, but after two days' reflection he had his name erased. Heap brave, as the Indian would hav it. Please send by mail "Giordano Bruno: His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument." I place all my papers after reading in other hands, where I think the most good may be accomplished. L. WELTY.

VAN BUREN, ARK., Oct. 23, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad that you are going to publish that lecture of Mr. Bennett's on "The Bible in the Public Schools." I know it will be a treat to us old-time subscribers who read the paper through Mr. Bennett's management of it. I don't say it to disparage your management of the paper, but I don't think it has ever hit such hard blows since his time as it did during the time he was at the head. He not only handled things without gloves, but seemed to hav his whole arms naked to the shoulders. I think he could say more with fewer words than any other writer I ever read. He was one of the few writers whose lectures I could read and not grow tired.

Though I hav written the above, I still think THE TRUTH SEEKER the best paper published, and I never want to be without it as long as I am able to pay for it.

I must speak a word for Mr. Heston. I don't see how he can find subjects for so many funny and telling pictures. He seems to be ready every week with something new and to the point in the way of pictures. As I wrote once before, I still think the cartoons admirable.

Wishing THE TRUTH SEEKER and all connected with it great success, I remain, Yours truly, JAS. R. NEAL.

KIRKSVILLE, MO., Oct. 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The editor of New Thought, in his notice of the book, "The Candle from Under the Bushel," winds up by saying, "Our criticism then, is that the book is defiled with Bible filth." I believe the best way to rid the country of legalized obscenity, or that which is tolerated or permitted, as found in the Bible, is to stir up the filth until the people become disgusted with its stench, and until by law the matter is condemned, or until it is by another revision entirely expunged from the "word of God." Is the effect of reading the matter outside of the Bible, any worse than that of reading it in the Bible? How can popular opinion be brought to bear against an evil without showing the evil up, or showing that the evil exists? D. M. Bennett did something in the direction of eradicating the evil in question by publishing "The Bible Abridged" and showing the evil up. The matter touched upon in the book of questions extends along from one end of the Bible to the other, and but few questions are founded upon the obscenities of the book. The position of the editor of New Thought is to let the filth of the Bible alone. This is just what the clergy want. Would not the editor of New Thought do well to handle the stuff with gloves, as he is not inclined to handle it "without gloves?" WM. HART.

PURDY'S STATION, N. Y., Oct. 27, 289

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Remsburg, in his review of Christian testimony concerning the religious belief of Abraham Lincoln, says that Chambers's Encyclopedia states that Lincoln wrote a pamphlet against Christianity. In Belford, Clarke & Company's edition of Chambers's Encyclopedia, printed in 1885, I can find no such statement. Will Mr. Remsburg be k nd enough to tell us where it is to be found? With regard to the general character of his papers I must say that they please me very much. They promis to be of great interest. As Mr. Remsburg writes nothing which cannot be proved by facts, his present work will surely be exhaustiv.

Mr. Tuttle seems to think that I associate selfishness with inhumanity. He is mistaken. In my letter to Miss Gardener I said nothing of that kind, and in another article I insisted that egoism, far from being an absolute evil, is the cause of all our good works. I am of the opinion that the egoism of the uncivilized man is of no benefit to humanity, but the egoism of the civilized man is a blessing. I agree with Mr. Tuttle that if selfishness is the cause of man's inhumanity to man, the human race must be exterminated, which is by no means desirable. As to the question, How to do away with poverty? I leave it to people more competent than I am. CLEMENS P. BERYLSON.

FRANKFORT, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I am sorely disappointed at not receiving a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER for last week, but being a new subscriber I suppose I must expect to be forgotten once in a while. If it was not for the great interest I take in the efforts of the small band of brave and noble hearts, who are endeavoring, with brain and nerve, to exterminate man's most gigantic foe, I would patiently wait without sending you a reminder, but to be deprived of THE TRUTH SEEKER for one week is, to me, too cruel a sacrifice, especially when it can be so easily prevented. This reminds me of the old song, "You never miss the water," etc., and this time with a reality that is somewhat uncomfortable.

I take great pleasure in reading occasional sketches of Mr. Ingersoll's writings in some of the weekly papers, and I think his words are grander and sublimer, and his sentiments loftier and nobler—because they are true and genuin—than all the sermons and harangs gobbled up by these papers to fill up vacant advertising space, and, alas! vacant orthodox heads. Surely a few more such grand displays of brain and heart, such eloquent appeals to pathos and intellect, will awaken the slumbering reason of many to inquire deeper, to investigate, and, if they are but once led to investigate, truth, with its sunlit face of honesty, will perform the rest.

Yours fraternally, WILL HARRINGTON.

NEW CAMBRIA, KAN., Oct. 20, 289.

MR. EDITOR: It is amusing, and also an encouraging sign of the times, to hear old Rome howl. The feelings of the "vicar of Christ" are sensitiv, and badly hurt over the Bruno statue at Rome. Once they had it all their own way, and to keep it so and not hurt the feelings of their opponents, or those who differed with them, they just, by the application of a little fire, took the feeling out of their bodies and sent their souls to fire eternal. So I say it is an encouraging sign of the times when they can no longer exercise power over those who differ with them—when all they can do is to howl. Let them do it, and continue to giv them opportunity. If Liberals were having no effect, there would be no outcry.

It seems to me that some of our "Liberal" men are very orthodox to oppose woman suffrage. I think they should vote to kill our catering, hypocritical politicians. Woman suffrage is doing that here in Kansas, and is experiment enough to show what the outcome would be. Many women are getting dissatisfied with the churches, because the hard work is all the privilege they get, outside of sociability, and that does not depend on the church. And if Liberalism does not mean equal rights regardless of sex, it does not mean anything. And if we are not to enjoy the full privileges of Liberalism many women will remain in the church for the want of a more attractiv field. Something in the place of the church and the position she offers socially must be forthcoming. Few will consent to be socially ostracized for a few Liberal opinions. MRS. FLORA A. ABBOTT.

BRISTOL, CONN., Oct. 23, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I cheerfully send you $3 toward my subscription, and $2 for books. You may look for the same amount every year as long as THE TRUTH SEEKER and I liv. The last time I wrote I was living beside the broad blue lake, Ontario. This year finds me back among the old hills of New England, breathing again the delicious air of the best climate under the sun. I come home to find the advocates of Prohibition in all their political grandeur, their arrogant assumption, their insipid ignorance, their pious prejudice, and their total disregard for facts. Their campaign has been the usual abusiv, slanderous crusade. The result shows how many are in favor of temperance and the number of hypocrits that are "agin" Prohibition. Twenty-seven thousand is the figure the Nutmeg state rolls up against the ruling of priestcraft. The hated Infidel, who heard the many prayers that were offered to their God, wonders where he was all the time, and why he failed to count the votes, as our Postmaster-general Wanamaker said he would. I think Mr. Wanamaker made a mistake. It looks as if these sacred loafers will hav to ride into power on some other hobby than Prohibition. Will Mr. De Witt Talmage please explain? If I remember right, his shop has been burnt down twice. If it was a dancehouse you would hear him shout against the immoral stage, but now we hear a pitiful whine for funds to build a new josshouse. It looks to me as if it was a waste of money. However, the ashes of the Tabernacle will make the grass grow, and the reverend gentleman had better take along some with him in his intended visit to Palestine to sow upon the barren fields of Judea. I was sorry to learn that the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER had been sick, and happy to learn that he is well once more. Good wishes to all. Yours truly, J. E. COY.

ONONDAGO HILL, N. Y., Oct. 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: All kinds of epithets by both Freethinkers and Christians are showered upon the heads of hypocrits. Most people object to being called hypocrits with much the same feeling as when called liars.

Now, if there is a man upon this earth who is not to a certain extent a hypocrit, I would like to see him. A man's circumstances and situation in life largely regulate hypocrisy.

It is not as easy for a Freethinker to obtain or retain a situation in the employ of others as it is for a Christian to do the same. Therefore should we heap our condemnations upon a man who has a family dependent upon his earnings, if he does not go on the warpath against Christianity, even if at heart he is an Atheist?

From the time I was ten years of age until now I hav constantly been in hot water, just because I am an Atheist. Even at eight years of age I was the black sheep in a Baptist Sunday-school class, because I possessed a natural admiration for his satanic majesty. I never had read or heard a word against the Christian religion before twelve years old, yet ever since I can remember I felt as much antipathy toward it as a bovine entertains toward a scarlet vestment. Now, this was not conduciv at all to my success, as has always been plainly evident to me, and I hav tried in vain to cultivate a little hypocrisy for policy's sake, yet to no avail. I hav envied my companions the art which they possessed of concealing their views, which were often like mine. I had the will to be the hypocrit, but I lacked the art. I hav a certain measure of respect for the man who can play the part of the Christian, and play it well enough to accomplish what is called success by it. Such a man certainly has some intellect which can hardly be credited to the man who has received a fair education, yet at the same time blindly believes and worships. The men who sell the Christian humbugs are no such fools as some people are inclined to think. They know their merchandise is a sham if they hav as much as a high school education. To argue with them is like arguing with a man who is trying to sell a brass ring for one of gold. He never will quit his business until it becomes legally unsafe, or until it is regarded with contempt by the multitude.

Freethought needs more artists like Heston and writers like John Peck. Christian fakirs laugh at us in their sleeves when we treat them as though we regarded them as sincere. "This world is a stage and the people its actors," and this is particularly true of the pulpit men. Hypocrisy is a factor of the human character. A man may hav too much of it, or, like myself, too little of it, but he should hav a certain amount for the sake of self-protection.

C. E. BOYNTON, B.S., M.D.

STEUBENVILLE, O , Oct. 28, 289.

MR. EDITOR: On reading the first issue of the American Journal, in Steubenville, O., I addressed the inclosed letter to the editor. To-day they returned it to me, saying they could not publish it, as it was directly opposed to the principles of their order, one of which was the support of Bible-reading in the public schools—although they profess at the same time to believe in keeping the schools non-sectarian. I used all the logic I was master of to show them the inconsistency. They are both strong Methodists, and they could not see how reading the Bible in the schools could be called sectarianism. Blind leaders of the blind!

JOHN DOWNES.

THE LETTER.

MR. EDITOR: I accidentally came across a copy of your first issue of the American Journal, and was pleased to see that the people's attention was being called to the imminent danger of our republic through the attacks of the Roman Catholics and others on our public schools. That church especially has organized sectarian schools with the avowed object of breaking down our public school system all over the country, from Maine to California. Now, if they trained the children of their schools to be good and loyal citizens, who would object? But instead, they train them to believe and to act in opposition to what all right-thinking men believe to be the very bulwark of our liberties, our public school system. And not only that, but they teach that the decrees of the pope and the teaching of the priest are paramount and must be obeyed, whenever they conflict with the laws of the land. What is this but treason? And I believe that your organization must insist on the abolishment of the parochial school system as a treasonable institution. The Catholics are coming into this country by thousands from all the Catholic countries, ignorant even of our language, we foolishly allowing them to vote at the bidding of the priest. And they are raising their children in their schools to be as much aliens as themselves. What folly in us to spend millions of money to keep up unsectarian schools so we may hav an intelligent constituency and at the same time giv these ignorant aliens a vote to overwhelm the votes of our intelligent citizens! I believe you cannot get to the root of the evil until the naturalization laws are repealed, and a law is passed that the children of these aliens shall not vote unless they hav passed through the unsectarian public school. Indeed, it should be made compulsory on all. And this brings to mind one thing I notice in the Fifth Motiv you giv for your organization, which is, to sustain the public schools and to prevent sectarian influence therewith, and uphold the reading of the Bible therein. Now, how you are to prevent sectarianism and uphold the reading of the Bible in the schools is beyond my comprehension. What Bible do you suppose would satisfy all the people who pay the school tax? The Catholic would want his, the Protestant his, the Jew his, and so on through the whole list of isms. No, my friend, once establish that and your whole school system goes to pieces. Keep the schools free of the semblance of sectarianism or you may giv them over to the sects altogether.

J. D.

GOODWYNSVILLE, VA., Oct. 29, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I notice in your issue of October 26th a communication from "G. N." containing about as much vindictiv spleen to the line as could be found in any production of any orthodox in the land. What sense can there be, twenty-five years after peace, in opening anew the cruel wounds of war? Can good will and fellowship between the two sections of our great country grow under such unnecessary and unmanly treatment of the victim by the victor? I often see in Northern journals, especially political journals, these flings at the "rebel enemies of our government." Now we, the rising generation of the South, can see that slavery is wrong, that it is cruel and heartless, but when it comes to a persecuted people wanting to secede from their persecutors, it is quite a different matter. Were we not rebels when we carried on the war of the Revolution? Were not Washington and all the host of those great and good men, including Thomas Paine, rebels? Were not all of the first settlers of this country rebels? After all, is it not a matter of opinion? If "G. N." had been born south of the Mason and Dixon line, in all probability he, too, would hav been a "rebel." Is it not somewhat of a geographical question after all? After all, "we all are but poor, frail creatures of circumstances, environments, knowing that which we do know by and through circumstances, compulsion. By and through compulsion we believe all that we do believe, and do all that we do." Are we not all, then, "dishrags" in the hands of circumstances? "Had Washington been a thorough and veritable Rationalist he would hav drawn that salary and distributed it among the poor people." This seems more Christian than Rational to a rebel. "By Christianity Washington was commanded to submit to George III. of England, under penalty of damnation. He knew this and heeded it not." Now, in the foregoing, let us in imagination substitute Jeff. Davis for Washington, and Lincoln for George III. of England, and see how it would work. Does "G. N." not see that the thing depends on whose ox is gored? He talks of "confiscated property" of rebels very much in the way we would expect of some South-hating Christian. He slanders the beloved and good Lincoln for "pardoning and pampering and patting" our brave and loyal people who were at his mercy. I suppose "G. N." would, Christian-like, hav burnt them at the stake. "His logic is like unto a Talmage or a Roman Catholic priest." Is it not high time that people who claim to be Rationalists stop this abuse of our section simply because we happen to differ in opinion? "G. N.," and all other South-haters, should remember that the young South will be all right if let alone, and also that even an Infidel journal is sometimes read down South. But if this spirit of abuse and slander and vilification is to be kept up, how in the name of common sense can we be expected to "fall in ranks?" Whenever I ask a friend or neighbor to subscribe to our paper he refers me to some piece like "G. N.'s" that he has seen in some copy that I hav, by dint of persuasion, induced him to read. Stop calling us murderers and thieves and "enemies of decency," and all such Christian arguments, gentlemen, and we will some day boom our cause down South, but keep it up and Infidelity will ever remain North. And now, as to whether Lincoln was or was not a Christian, I do not care. I know he was one of the world's best men, and in my heart to-day he is second to none of our great men but "Our Bob"—not even to R. E. Lee. We down South can see, now that the smoke of battle has been swept away for a quarter of a century, that the old scabby-heads of both sections will hav to die of scab-head, or something as loathsome, before true peace can be restored. Stop abuse, especially in our paper. Leave the South alone until you know she is doing some wrong. Don't look at some political paper for what we are doing down here. I sometimes meet with a Northern man who has been down here for a few years and he tells me invariably that the "Southern people are misrepresented up North. That we do allow the negro to vote, and, what is more, allow his vote to be counted; that we even let negroes sit as judges of elections," etc. It is a shame that sensible people should believe these absurd things simply because they are alleged to hav happened "down South."

G. W. BARNES.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., Oct. 24, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I send you an editorial taken from a recent issue of the St. Louis Republic. When a great daily, which has for years upheld the church as the one thing sacred above all others, becomes alarmed at the aggressions of God's servants, it is certainly time for us, the avowed champions of equal rights, to assume the offensiv.

In his essay on "The Policy of the Massachusetts Colonists Toward Quakers and Other Dissenters," Mr. Henry L. Southwick of Boston states, with the precision of a lover of historical truth, facts that will never cease to hav a contemporaneous interest while there remains a possibility of oppression through public opinion expressed in legislativ enactment. These facts hav been often examined. It is well enough known that very soon after landing on Plymouth Rock the "Pilgrims" banished John and Israel Brown for being Episcopalians: that they drove out Roger Williams, elder of Salem church, for declaring "the new and dangerous doctrin" that "the magistrates should restrain crimes and not control opinions;" that Mrs. Hutchinson was also banished for a similar offense of dissent; that when the Baptists proclaimed that "Christians ought to tolerate Christians," Obadiah Holmes was whipped for the heresy; that Clark, Crandall, Gorten, and many others were fined or banished; that under the general acts against Quakers they were to be arrested on their entrance to the colony; "committed to the house of correction;" "severely whipped;" "kept constantly at work and none suffered to converse or speak with them during their imprisonment:" that under a still severer law, every Quaker returning from banishment should "for the first offense suffer the loss of one ear; for the second offense the loss of the other ear, and for the third offense hav his tongue bored through with a hot iron;" and that under these and similar laws Mary Dyer, William Robinson, Marmadnke Stevenson, and William Leddra were hanged, while others, men and women, were whipped, branded, and maimed.

The impartial examination of this record shows that the question back of it was the difference between "liberty of conscience" and "license." The political principle asserted was the absolutism of the majority to decide where liberty ends and license begins. This principle is still practically asserted in our politics—even in our constitutions made for the express purpose of denying the existence of absolute or inherent right in the majority. And it is curious that these expressions wherever found relate to matters of religion. The constitutions adopted during the first fifty years of the Union tend more and more toward that of Virginia, in which there is no qualification whatever of Roger Williams's declaration that it is the duty of magistrates to restrain crimes, not to control opinions. The rise of Mormonism in the West checked this tendency and caused a reaction toward the opinion that the majority is absolute judge of what is or what is not religious license. This opinion is expressed in the constitutional qualification that "liberty of conscience shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, nor to justify practices inconsistent with the good order, peace, or safety of the state."

This limitation is inserted in American constitutions of most recent adoption. It may, therefore, be called the more modern view of religious liberty in distinction from the unqualified declaration of the old Virginia bill of rights, but it must not be forgotten that it is precisely the view for the practical assertion of which the Puritans hav been so generally condemned. It makes the public opinion of the majority the judge of what constitutes "licentiousness" and endangers society. The Puritans thought that it endangered society for the Quakers to be "moved by the spirit" to speak from the benches in church. They considered all acts inconsistent with their own views of liberty as nothing more than licentiousness, dangerous to civil peace and religious order.

While we retain their theory, it is inconsistent to condemn their practice. It is unwise because it is untruthful to assert that we hav outgrown their theory when we revive it and embody it in our constitutions and bills of rights, where it is only innocuous for lack of an issue to vivify it with the strength of a persecuting public opinion.

The above is respectfully referred to the weak-kneed Infidels who object to anything that is calculated to "hurt the feelings" of the pious snivelers and holy Pharisees who are howling for Sunday laws and whining because they can not hav everything their own way.

Yours for aggressiv action, S. G. MORGAN.

PORTSMOUTH, O., Oct. 13, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: As you notice, I always pen my letters on Sunday. In this respect, as in many others, I am unlike the Christian God, who, they claim, rests on the seventh day. Poor fellow! He should not be blamed for taking a rest; the company he is surrounded with—the Davids, and the Abrahams, and the Jeremiahs, and the Lots, the Jonahs, the Jobs, and the Noahs, and that portion of Canada's population which fled from under the patriotic folds of America's flag in a hurry—is enough to make almost anybody tired, very tired. Oh, what a horrible time the good angels hav in such a crowd—the females with a close watch on their virtue, and the males with hands on their pocketbook! Perhaps a good plan would be for Jehovah to discontinue the manufacture of souls for hell, and put in the time exclusivly improving the police regulations of his so-called holy city. Perhaps a better move would be for him to resign, and, with his hosts of heaven, turn into that out of which he made life and worlds; that which one sees with eyes closed tight—simply "nothing," that and nothing more.

Passing to my next memorandum I find the question, Why did God turn his spinal column to Moses? Why did he show him only his back parts? Did his back hav the power of reflection? Was it done for the sole purpose of showing Moses what he really was? Just how Moses felt on this occasion, I know not. Had it been myself I would hav used my boot with vim and vigor.

My next note speaks of a colored professor we hav in our midst. His name is Robert Hurd, and he came originally from Kentucky. He poses as a great religious specimen, a sort of reformer as it were. He is head officer of the colored Knights of Pythias, and, at the same time, is not what I would call a true soldier in the fight for "friendship, charity, and benevolence," the tenets of that order. A saying, and a true one, is, "that common sense without an education is better than an education without the common sense." Hurd has neither. He is as dumb as an oyster. Yet, notwithstanding this lack of brains and reason, he is employed by Portsmouth's Christian board of education to teach the young ideas how to read and write in the colored school. Having what I call an empty skull, a head, as it were, with pump-handle attachments, he is brutal and cruel. He whips the scholars under him with a ratan. He recently punished Jimmy Carter, son of a poor colored washerwoman, for a trivial offense. The blows he applied were heard distinctly in an upper room of the building, and also by a lady some distance away. After the dismissal of the school, Hurd pranced about in the vicinity of the school building, shaking his fist in the air, and raving like a madman because some humane person had reprimanded him for his harsh use of the lash—a stamp, so to speak, that scarred the backs of his race for years in payment for honest toil. The mother of the punished boy reported to Officer McAleer, of the Humane Society, and they in turn applied to Mayor Waller, who is an Episcopalian, and therefore an old fool, for a warrant for Hurd's arrest. Waller said the Humane Society had no jurisdiction. As for himself, he flatly refused to issue a warrant. A city magistrate, also an Episcopalian, would not giv the poor colored woman law, and as a result her boy is out of school, cut off entirely from the advantages of a public and free schooling. Hurd continues to teach, and treat his wife meanly, if what is said can be believed. Some hav reported that he has whipped her.

While I am reporting and displaying "behind the scenes," I might as well drop in a few words relativ to Mrs. Sarah Peters, a colored neighbor of mine, who excels the New Jersey scold recently ducked in a puddle of water because of a too free use of her tongue This Mrs. Peters calls me a wicked Infidel, and has made herself offensiv, not only to me, but to almost everyone in the neighborhood, by her heathenish talk. She goes to church regularly and used to beat her children unmercifully. She quit the latter business after I had warned her to desist under threat to prosecute her if she continued her parental barbarity. As Gabriel sings the "old, old story," I imagin he would break down in the middle of the verse if called upon to tally a merit mark for Mrs. Sarah Peters, of Portsmouth, O.

Yesterday afternoon Judge Dever in the court of common pleas sentenced the following "believers" to the Ohio penitentiary for crimes committed: Job Gross, forgery, ten years; John Jaminson, burglary (two cases), five years in each; Charlie Miller, burglary and larceny, eight years; Lafayette McGraw, perjury, five years; Sallie Webb, bigamy, one year; Firmin Webb, burglary and larceny, seven years. His two sons, who were connected with his crooked work, were sentenced to the reform farm. Firmin Webb is the first and rightful husband of Sallie Webb, and the two boys above mentioned are the fruit of that union. She will enter the state's prison with a six-months-old baby boy in her arms, whose name is John Sullivan McGraw, his father being Sallie Webb's second husband, Lafayette McGraw, sentenced above for perjury. This is what might appropriately be called a family matter. It is the first case on record where a wife with two husbands and three children were in jail together, and all under sentence to prison. And all this lawlessness, this breaking of the statutes, has occurred in Christian Scioto county, a territory bedecked with churches and a few fanatical Prohibitionists. With a Liberal society organized here, and a lecture by that talented and able orator of the West, J. E. Remsburg, I think the light would begin to fall briskly in the dark places, made hideous and frightful by religious fears and superstitions.

Yours Liberally, etc., WILL S. ANDRES.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a panse in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A Housekeeping Song.

FOR LITTLE HOUSEKEEPERS.

Oh! hav yon heard the housekeeping song?
For, if yon've not, we won't be long;
It tells the right way from the wrong
Of keeping the house in good order.
Brooms and brushes, dust-cloths, too,
All these we hav, and so must yon;
Dust, dirt, and cobwebs, yon know, will not do
When keeping a house in good order.

Don't make your bed as soon as yon rise,
'Tis neither nice nor very wise;
Fresh air and sunshine you won't despise
When keeping the house in good order.
Sheets and blankets neatly spread,
Coverlet, too, for every bed,
Bolsters and pillows, of course, for the head
When keeping the house in good order.

Though very plain your food, perhaps, be,
The table set most carefully;
For better taste the toast and tea
In a house that is kept in good order.
Table cloth and napkins white,
Plates, saucers, cups, glasses all bright,
Knives, forks, and spoons—you will lay them just right
In a house that is kept in good order.

And when the table you wish to clear,
Obey the rules, nor ever fear
But you will yet do well, my dear,
With keeping a house in good order.
Dishpans, towels, soapsuds hot,
Water for rinsing never forgot;
"Wash cleanest things first," and then you will not
Miss keeping your house in good order.

Oh! don't you think it is pleasant to know
About the daily work just so,
And what's the way we all must go
When keeping a house in good order?
Heads and hearts are houses, too.
(May they be wise, may they be true!)
Let each one try the best we can do
Toward keeping these houses in order.

—Pansy.

Particular Notice.

As it may be difficult for some who would like to contest for the prize essay alluded to in the last issue of The Truth Seeker to select a suitable thesis, we will offer the following: "What is Morality? Is it sufficient as a guide for conduct in human affairs?"—Ed. C. C.

Practical.

Certain over-delicate sensibilities may well be shocked by brutally practical suggestions. Mrs. Cook had been superintending her poodle's bath, and, after the operation was concluded, sat down in the back yard to rest.

"I can't help thinking Elise is careless with dear Fido," she said to the washerwoman, a broad-shouldered, good-natured creature, who was hanging out the clothes.

"Elise makes him nervous every time she does anything with him. I begin to think I shall hav to trust his bath to some one else. How would you like to undertake it, Mrs. McLean?"

The washerwoman shook her head.

"Beggin' yer pardon, mum, I ain't hankerin' afther that kind of a job."

"No, but really," said Mrs. Cook, bending forward in interested consideration, "let us think it over. Now, how would you begin to giv Fido his bath?"

The washerwoman thought it over, as she was requested to do. Then she smiled broadly.

"If 'twas left to me, mum," she announced, "I think I'd put him a-soak over night, an' then run him through the wringer!"

And, strange to say, she was never asked to perform the operation.

Rev. Chas. E. Stowe Astonished.

Harriet Beecher Stowe's son, the Rev. Charles E. Stowe, of Hartford, Conn., met with an experience recently which completely nonplussed him. One evening quite recently he dined with Mrs. J. W. Boardman, proprietress of the Hotel Woodruff. Visiting Mrs. Boardman is a 'cute little niece about five years of age. She is a regular chatterbox, and makes many bright remarks during a day. Fearing lest the child would astonish the preacher by some outlandish saying, her aunt warned her to keep mum during the dinner.

The admonition was listened to with awe, and at the table the little one scarcely dared look at Mr. Stowe, not wishing to commit a supposed sin. While the servant was absent from the room, the little girl noticed there was no butter on her small pink dish.

She didn't mind holding her tongue, but to eat bread without butter—that would never do. She took a survey of the table and lo and behold, the butter-dish was directly in front of the preacher. Wistfully she gazed at both for a few seconds. Never in her brief existence did she appear so pensiv. Then gathering all her courage and clearing her throat she said: "Dear pastor, won't you please, for Christ's sake, pass the butter?"

The Rev. Mr. Stowe never received such a shock. He leaned over in his chair to pick up his napkin, which, of course, had not fallen. Mrs. Boardman must at that moment arrange a window curtain, and the other guests were troubled with a friendly cough.

Little Mabel, self-satisfied that she had done the proper caper, was the only one at the table who could positivly prove that she was alive.

Correspondence.

Shane's Crossing, O., Oct. 19, E.M. 289.

Dear Miss Wixon: I take pen in hand to let my little friends know that I hav not forgotten the old and reliable Truth Seeker, but there is one vacancy in the Children's Corner letters, and I think it is our fault for not writing. Now, I am going to write every month a letter to the Corner, and I want to read some letters from the wise little heads every week. I am home from the fair grounds and going to school. Professor Johnson gave three lectures here on "Prehistoric Man," "Evolution," and "Science." They were heartily embraced by those living in sunshine, and condemned by those standing in the way of progress. Mr. Johnson handed me a book entitled "Origin of Species," by Charles Darwin. I wish some of my little friends would read this book and tell me through our column what they think of it. I hav just received a pricelist from the Franklin Publishing Company of a book entitled "The Story of Man." If my friends hav read it, tell me if it is a good investment.

Wishing all truth-seeking friends health and prosperity, I remain,

Yours truly, Solomon P. King.

[An excellent catalog of books can be obtained from the Truth Seeker Publishing Company. Liberals should patronize Liberal publishing companies before others.—Ed. C. C.]

Oak Mills, Kan., Oct. 16, 289 E.M.

Miss Wixon, Dear Friend: Among the books that I hav lately read are Putnam's "Glory of Infidelity," which I regard as one of the best Freethought works in our language, and H. L. Green's Bruno pamphlet, which I found very interesting, and I advise everybody to get a copy of it. I also hav just finished reading "The History of the Johnstown Flood." It is very interesting.

We hav just subscribed for two more good papers, Freethought and the American Sentinel. The latter is doing valuable work in the Secular field, and Freethought is working ardently in the interests of all true reforms.

Sunday, September 22d, was my eighteenth birthday. I arose from my bed on that bright Sunday morning and watched the sun in its majestic glory slowly creep over the eastern hill and cast its glorious rays into the window where I was standing; and it was while standing there in solitary delight that I realized that another year had just been added to my term of existence. Whether or not those eighteen years hav reaped anything that will help to shape my future destiny, I cannot tell, but I hav tried to do my duty; I hav tried to do the best I know how to do.

Col. John A. Martin, ex-governor of Kansas and proprietor of the Atchison Champion, died lately. He was an honest, upright man, and in his death the state has lost one of its best citizens. I hav had the pleasure of meeting him several times and I was favorably impressed with the manner in which he bore himself. The funeral was one of the largest in the history of the state.

I send best wishes to all the Cornerites, and remain,

Your friend,
Geo. J. Remsburg.

[We extend congratulations to our friend on his eighteenth birthday. Before those years are doubled we incline to think the world will hear from our friend George in a tangible and progressiv way. We shall watch his career with interest. Success and many bright years to him.—Ed. C. C.]

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 333pp., $1.25

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller: large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

Science Column.

The Desert Ship.

A strange creature indeed is the camel, with his long neck and legs, two toes, calloused knees, his hind legs seemingly quite out of proportion in length, and two humps on his back.

He is one of the most curious among mammals. Note how gently and softly he steps. He is not a nativ of our part of the world, but is common in Arabia, Persia, India, and Africa.

Let us take a peep in that hump on his back. Some species hav two humps, others but one. Just look at the grain and hay tucked away in the hump. Why, it's a regular pantry. Now, what is that food put there for?

You must know that the camel is used to traveling long distances over sandy deserts and could not always find a "tavern" at meal times; so he puts away considerable food at a time, in his hump; and on a long march he can absorb his food from his hump store at his leisure. Otherwise, he might starve to death. In the first stomach there exists a partition wall, which by a muscular contraction can be closed at will. The walls of the stomach contain several cavities, in which the camel can carry water enough to last him a whole week. Sometimes, when his master, who is not so well provided for, is almost ready to perish with thirst, and no water is near, he is obliged to take the life of his camel in order to refresh himself with water from this internal well.

The clumsy foot of the camel is especially adapted for travel in sand, and his nostrils he closes when the wind drives the sand in clouds over the desert. It would be difficult to cross the deserts were it not for this useful creature. Did you observe the hard spots on his breast and knees? These indicate the points he rests upon when he, with great politeness, kneels, as he always does, to receive his burdens.

Because he is so strong, can hold out for so long a time, can carry such heavy loads (from six hundred to one thousand pounds, but about three hundred and fifty pounds when going long distances), is so sure and steady, the camel is justly termed "the ship of the desert."

The camel is naturally gentle and intelligent. Treat him well, and he will treat you well; but treat him unkindly, and he will show you that he knows how to bite and to kick. So useful a being should be treated with great kindness. He walks with a swing and a jerk, and you would think his rider would be thrown to the ground at every step. The milk of the camel is said to be good, and the flesh resembles beef and is used for food. The hair of the camel is used for blankets, shawls, and other fabrics, while the skin is tanned for boots and shoes. S. H. W.

Questions.—Describe the camel. Where is the camel found? What does he carry in his hump? For what purpose? Describe his stomach. For what is his foot adapted? his nostrils? Why are the callonsed spots on his knees and breast? What is the camel called? Why? Is he gentle or savage? Ought he to be treated with uniform kindness? Describe his gait. Of what other uses is the camel besides a beast of burden?

The Agnostic Annual

FOR 1890.

Edited by CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS.

Agnosticism and Immortality.....Samuel Laing.
A Sonnet.....Joseph Ellis.
Who Was Moses?..H. J. Hardwicke, M.D., F.R.C.S.
The Comfort of Agnosticism.....E. Lynn Linton.
Are Miracles Credible?...Constance C. W. Naden.
The Contest Between Agnosticism and Theology, John Wilson, M.A.
Above: A Poem.....W. Stewart Ross.
The Evolution of the Agnostic Idea, R. Bithell, B Sc., Ph.D.
The New Fatalism.....B. Russell.
Descartes's Proof of the Existence of a God. F. J. Gould.
A Poem.....W. B. McTaggart.
The Free Expression of Opinions..G. F. Underhill.
Fragments.....William Maccall.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

Wonderful Scientific Notice.

THE BOOK OF BOOKS.

Truthful instructions for curing all diseases that man or beast is subject to, without medicin. All curable diseases can and hav been cured by this method, for over twenty years tested by the author, and thousands of others hav cured themselvs by the instructions of this book of books. Breaks off fevers, cold, coughs, rheumatic troubles, malaria, and diphtheris. Every family should hav a copy. Price, 35 cents, by mail.

Address N. N. PIERCE, Philmont, N. Y.

The Liberty of Printing, and Reply.

By Hurlbut and Wakeman,

Price, 10 cents.

MATERIALISM AND CRIME.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 5 cents.

AN OUTLINE OF THE
French Revolution
ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.
By W. S. BELL.
Paper, 12mo, 25 cents.

MORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

Immortality of Its Elements.
By A. S. de Pellegrini.
Paper, - - - 15 cents.

PHILOSOPHY of SPIRITUALISM

And Treatment of Mediomania.
By F. R. Marvin, M.D.
Cloth, ... 50 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY.

By VOLTAIRE.

Terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of theological terms.
Price, 25 cents.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY EXPOSED.

By Rev. G. T. Fox, M.A.
15 cents.

PRO AND CON OF Supernatural Religion.

Have We a Supernatural, Inspired, Miraculous Religion?
By E. E. Guild.
Paper, 20 cents; cloth, 30 cents.

PYRAMID OF GIZEH.

Ancient Egyptian Civilization and Hebrew Narrative in Genesis and Exodus.
By Van Buren Denslow, LL.D.
Price, 15 cents.

QUESTION SETTLED.

BIBLICAL and MODERN SPIRITUALISM.
By Moses Hull.
Price, 60 cents.

Rational Communism.

The Present and Future Republic of North America.
Advocates associate life and employment as a preventive of vice, crime, poverty, etc.
By A Capitalist.
Paper, 49spp., 50 cts.: clo., $1.

Relation of Witchcraft to Religion.

By A. C. Lyall.
Price, 10 cents.

Fruits of Philosophy.

POPULATION QUESTION.
By Dr. Knowlton. Edited by Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant.
25 cents.

TRUTH. A Poem. By E. N. Kingsley. 10 cents.

POVERTY: Its Cause and Cure.
How the Poor May Attain Comfort and Independence.
By M. G. H.
Price, . . 10 cents.

Religion of Inhumanity.

With a Glance at the Religion of Humanity.
BY FREDERIC HARRISON.
Price, 15 cents.

RELIGION:
The Gibraltar of the World, as Now Constituted.
By George T. Bondies.
With
Exceptions to the Character of Christ as a Gentleman.
By W. T. Purviance.
25 cents.

IMAGE BREAKER.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Six Lectures.
Decline of Faith.
Protestant Intolerance.
Washington an Unbeliever.
Jefferson an Unbeliever.
Paine and Wesley.
Christian Sabbath.
Each, 5 cents; bound, pap., 25 cents; per doz., 40.

SABBATH BREAKING.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Price, 25 cents.

St. Matthew Before the Court

For the Crime of Forgery.
By Secularist.
Price, ... 10 cents.

SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.

Including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, Bible.
By D. M. Bennett.
(From Vol. II. "Gods and Religions.")
333pp., pap., 60 c.; clo., $1.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 558 West Madison st., Room 1, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 32½ Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler. cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 723 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

FAITH AND REASON.
A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.
With elaborate index.
By HALSEY R. STEVENS.
A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained in such compact form.—[Literary Review.
Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

THE HUMBOLDT LIBRARY
—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

No. 1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.

No. 2. Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. (19 illustrations). By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, author of "The English Constitution."

No. 4. Man's Place in Nature, (with numerous illustrations). By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Rev. Charles Kingsley.

No. 7. The Conservation of Energy, (with numerous illustrations). By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.

No. 8. The Study of Languages, brought back to its true principles. By C. Marcel.

No. 9. The Data of Ethics. By Hebert Spencer.

No. 10. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music, (numerous illustrations), By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.

No. 11. } The Naturalist on the River Amazons. A record of 11 years of travel.
No. 12. } By Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S. (Not sold separately).

No. 13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alex. Bain, LL.D.

No. 14. The Wonders of the Heavens, (thirty-two illustrations). By Camille Flammarion.

No. 15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.

No. 16. The Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 18. Lessons in Electricity, (sixty illustrations). By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 20. The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.

No. 21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes and Men. By Samuel Wainwright, D.D.

No. 24. Popular Scientific Lectures, (illustrated). By Prof. H. Helmholtz.

No. 25. The Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo Rawlinson, Oxford University.

No. 26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.

No. 27. The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.

No. 28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. (numerous illustrations). By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.

No. 29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology, (numerous illustrations). By Andrew Wilson, Ph.D.

No. 30. } The Study of Words.
No. 31. } By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen.

No. 34. The Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird, Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and Others.

No. 36. Lectures on Evolution. (Illustrated). By Prof. T. H. Huxley.

No. 37. Six Lectures on Light. (Illustrated). By Prof. John Tyndall.

No. 38. } Geological Sketches. By Archibald
No. 39. } Geikie, F.R.S.

No. 40. The Evidence of Organic Evolution. By George J. Romanes, F.R.S.

No. 41. Current Discussions in Science. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S.

No. 42. History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock.

No. 43. Darwin and Humboldt. By Prof. Huxley, Prof. Agassiz, and others.

No. 44. } The Dawn of History. By C. F. Keary,
No. 45. } of the British Museum.

No. 46. The Diseases of Memory. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

No. 47. The Childhood of Religion. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.

No. 48. Life in Nature. (Illustrated). By James Hinton.

No. 49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. By Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.

No. 50. } Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By Prof. W. Stanley Jevons,
No. 51. } F.R.S.

No. 52. The Diseases of the Will. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.

No. 53. Animal Automatism, and other Essays. By Prof. T. H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.

No. 55. The Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 56. } Illusions. By James Sully.
No. 57. }

No. 58. } The Origin of Species. By Charles Darwin. } Two Double Nos.
No. 59. }

No. 60. The Childhood of the World. By Edward Clodd.

No. 61. Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 62. The Religions of the Ancient World. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Univ. of Oxford. (Double number).

No. 63. Progressive Morality. By Thomas Fowler, LL.D., President of Corpus Christi Coll., Oxford.

No. 64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russell Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.

No. 65. Conditions of Mental Development: and other essays. By Wm. Kingdon Clifford.

No. 66. Technical Education: and other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. By J. F. C. Hecker, M. D.

No. 68. Three Essays. By Herbert Spencer. Special Number.

No. 69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze, Ph.D. Double number.

No. 70. Essays Speculative and Practical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 71. Anthropology. By Daniel Wilson, Ph. D. With Appendix on Archæology. By E. B. Tylor, F. R. S.

No. 72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.

No. 73. Evolution in History, Language and Science. Four Addresses delivered at the London Crystal Palace School of Art, Science and Literature.

No. 74. } The Descent of Man, and Selection in
No. 75. } Relation to Sex. (Numerous Illustrations)
No. 76. } By Charles Darwin. Nos. 74, 75, 76 are
No. 77. } single Nos.; No. 77. is a double No.

No. 78. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. By William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.

No. 79. Scientific Aspect of some Familiar Things. By W. M. Williams.

No. 80. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work By Grant Allen. (Double number).

No. 81. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two Essays by J. Allanson Picton.

No. 82. Illusions of the Senses: and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 83. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six Essays. By Sedley Taylor, M.A.

No. 84. Studies of Animated Nature. Four Essays on Natural History. By W. S. Dallas, F.L.S.

No. 85. The Essential Nature of Religion. By J. Allanson Picton.

No. 86. The Unseen Universe, and the Philosophy of the Pure Sciences. By Prof. Wm. Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 87. The Morphine Habit. By Dr. B. Ball, of the Paris Faculty of Medicine.

No. 88. Science and Crime and other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

No. 89. The Genesis of Science. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 90. Notes on Earthquakes: with Fourteen Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 91. The Rise of Universities. By S. S. Lauric, LL.D. (Double number).

No. 92. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the Action of Earth Worms. By Charles Darwin, LL.D. F.R.S. (Double number).

No. 93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. By J. Mount Bleyer, M.D. (Special number).

No. 94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 95. The Diseases of Personality. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

No. 96. A Half-Century of Science. By Prof. Thomas H. Huxley, and Grant Allen.

No. 97. The Pleasures of Life. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart.

No. 98. Cosmic Emotion: Also the Teachings of Science. By William Kingdon Clifford. (Special number).

No. 99. Nature Studies. By Prof. F. R. Eaton Lowe; Dr. Robert Brown, F.L.S.; Geo. G. Chisholm, F.R.G.S., and James Dallas, F.L.S.

No. 100. Science and Poetry, with other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

No. 101. Æsthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. By Jas. Sully and Geo. Croom Robertson.

No. 102. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-operation. By William Nelson Black.

No. 103. The Coming Slavery; The Sins of Legislators; The Great Political Superstition. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 104. Tropical Africa. By Henry Drummond, F.R.S.

No. 105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. By Ernst Haeckel, of the University of Jena. With a Prefatory Note by Prof. Huxley.

No. 106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. By Grant Allen.

No. 107. Ultimate Finance. A True Theory of Wealth. By William Nelson Black.

No. 108. English, Past and Present. Part. I. By Richard Chenevix Trench, (Double number).

No. 109. English, Past and Present. Part II. By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. By Edward Clodd. (Double number).

Single Nos. 15 cents; Double Nos. 30 cents.
Nos. 1 to 111 inclusive, cloth, plain edges—separately or together—10 vols., $2 per vol
Also same in cloth, extra, red edges, gold back—in sets only—13 vols., $1.75 per vol.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

The Reign of the Stoics.
THEIR
History, Religion, Philosophy, and Maxims of Self-Control, Self-Culture, Benevolence, and Justice.
With Citations of Authors Quoted from on Each Page.
BY FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.
Read the philosophers, and learn how to make life happy, seeking useful precepts and brave and noble words which may become deeds.—Seneca.
OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.
This book shows that many Christians might learn much from these ancient heathen.—American Bookseller.
One of the most valuable helps for those who would understand the character of human progress in all ages.—National Quarterly Review.
The author has shown himself a diligent student, an ardent admirer, and a faithful interpreter, of some of the most remarkable monuments of ancient thinking.—New York Tribune.
Reading this book, we find the doctrins of the Stoics to be almost identical with the views held by the broadest and most enlightened minds of the present day.—Cincinnati Commercial.
Lecky says of Marcus Aurelius: "The purest and gentlest spirit of all the pagan world." Merivale says: "Of all the line the noblest and dearest." Taine says: "The noblest soul that ever lived." John Stuart Mill says: "He preserved through life not only the most unblemished justice, but the tenderest heart."
Extra Cloth, 12mo, 248 pp., $1.25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LITERATURE OF THE INSANE.
BY F. R. MARVIN.
Price, . . . 5 cents.
Pertinent and interesting.—Freethought.
Will be handed to my Christian friends that they may, by finding the garden of Eden, get the $5,000 reward.—Editor Sequachee Times.
Raises the devil with the garden of Eden yarn.—Hastings, Mich., Plaindealer.

WHAT KIND OF A MAN CLARK BRADEN IS.
BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 10 cents.

BLASPHEMY AND THE BIBLE.
BY C. B. REYNOLDS.
Price, 5 cents.

ICHABOD CRANE PAPERS.
Daringly witty and inexpressibly laughable onslaughts on Christianity.
Price, 10 cents.

Natural Rights, Natural Liberty, and Natural Law!
AN INQUIRY INTO THE CAUSES OF SOCIAL MALADJUSTMENTS THE RATIONAL, JUST, AND ADEQUATE REMEDY.
A work that treats of basic principles, and should be read carefully by all Liberal and social reform thinkers.
It is highly commended by Samuel P. Putnam, Henry George, Hugh Pentecost, Herbert Spencer, and other men of note.
Price, 25 cents.
Address, F. Q. STUART, Editor the Arbitrator.
1653 Blake St., Denver, Col.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Degeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.
It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Sixteen pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $2. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

DR. FELLOWS
STAR OF HOPE
Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N.J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.
VINELAND, N.J.
Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 Cents.

The Humboldt Library of Science.

In this series are well represented the writings of DARWIN, SPENCER, HUXLEY, TYNDALL, PROCTOR, CLIFFORD and other leaders of thought in our time, at 50 to 75 per cent. lower than usual prices.

We have the Library bound in Complete Sets, as follows:

OLD STYLE.—In this style the volumes average 640 pages 8vo, and are arranged thus:

Vol.	I.	Nos. 1-12	Vol.	VI.	Nos. 60-70.
"	II.	" 13-24	"	VII.	" 71-80.
"	III.	" 25-36.	"	VIII.	" 81-91.
"	IV.	" 37 48	"	IX.	" 9 -103
"	V.	" 49-59.	"	X.	" 104-111.

Cloth, plain edge, $2 vol. (Separately or in sets.)
Half seal, marble edges, $2.75 vol. (In sets only.)

NEW STYLE.—Nos. 1 to 111 inclusive, are bound in 18 vols., averaging 492 pages each, 8vo, thus:

Cloth, extra, red edges, $1.75 per vol.		$22 75 per set.
Half seal, plain edges, 2.25	"	29 25	"
Half seal, marble edges, 2 50	"	32.50	"
Hlf Mor., marble edges, 2.75	"	33 75	"

In sets only.

All of the following are octavo, cloth:

WORKS BY PROFESSOR HUXLEY.

Man's Place in Nature. Numerous ill.; &
The Origin of Species. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
The Physical Basis of Life & other Essays.
Lectures on Evolution. Illustrated. 2 books in 1 vol. 75
Animal Automatism, and other Essays.
Technical Education, and other Essays. 2 books in 1 vol. 75

WORKS BY CHARLES DARWIN.

Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection; or, the Preservation of Favored Races in the Struggle for Life. New edition from the latest Eng. edition, with additions and corrections. . 1.25
Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. With illustrations. New edition revised and augmented. . . 1.50
Formation of Vegetable Mold Through the Action of Worms, with Observations on their Habits. With illustrations. .75

Charles Darwin: His Life and Work. By Grant Allen. 75

SELECT WORKS BY GRANT ALLEN.

The Evolutionist at Large;
Vignettes from Nature; and
Force and Energy: A Theory of Dynamics 3 books in 1 vol. . . 1.00

WATER, ELECTRICITY, AND LIGHT. BY PROFESSOR TYNDALL.

Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers 19 illustrations.
Lessons in Electricity. 60 illustrations.
Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

WORKS BY HERBERT SPENCER.

The Data of Ethics. 60
Education: Intellectual, Moral, and Physical; and Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other Disquisitions. 2 books in 1 vol. . .75
The Genesis of Science.
The Factors of Organic Evolution. 2 books in 1 vol. 75

SELECT WORKS OF RICHARD A. PROCTOR, F.R.A.S.

Light Science for Leisure Hours.
Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.
Hereditary Traits, and other Essays.
Miscellaneous Essays.
Illusions of the Senses, and other Essays.
Notes on Earthquakes, with 14 miscellaneous Essays. 6 books in 1 vol. 1.50

SELECT WORKS OF WM. KINGDON CLIFFORD, F.R.A.S.

Seeing and Thinking.
The Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays.
Conditions of Mental Development, and other Essays.
The Unseen Universe, and the Philosophy of the Pure Sciences.
Cosmic Emotion: Also the Teachings of Science. 5 books in 1 vol. 1.25

SELECT WORKS OF EDW. CLODD, F.R.A.S.

The Childhood of Religion.
The Birth and Growth of Myth.
The Childhood of the World. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

SELECT WORKS OF TH. RIBOT,

Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

The Diseases of Memory.
The Diseases of the Will.
The Diseases of Personality. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

THE MILKY WAY.

The Wonders of the Heavens. 32 illus. By Camille Flammarion.
The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.
The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. By Nathan T. Carr, LL.D. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

POLITICAL SCIENCE.

Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, author of "The Eng. Constitution," and History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock. 2 books in 1 vol. . .75

THE LAND QUESTION.

The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.; and Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. By William Lloyd Birbeck, M.A. 2 books in 1 vol. . .75

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Mystery of Matter, and The Philosophy of Ignorance; and
The Essential Nature of Religion. By J. Allanson Picton. 2 books in 1 vol. . .75
Science and Crime; and
Science and Poetry, with other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E. 2 books in 1 vol. 75

[Continued in next column.]

HUMBOLDT LIBRARY (Continued).

Current Discussions in Science; and Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S. 2 books in 1 vol. 75
The Black Death. An Account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century; and
The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker, M.D. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
The Naturalist on the River Amazon. A Record of Adventures, Habits of Animals, Sketches of Brazilian and Indian Life and Aspects of Nature Under the Equator, during Eleven Years of Travel, by Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S., Assis. Sec. to the Royal Geographical Society of England. 75
The Rise and Early Constitution of Universities, with a Survey of Medieval Education. By S. S. Laurie, LL.D., Professor of the Institutes and History of Education in the University of Edinburgh. .75
The Religions of the Ancient World, including Egypt, Assyria and Babylonia, Persia, India, Phœnicia, Etruria, Greece, Rome. By George Rawlinson, M.A., Camden Professor of Ancient History, Oxford, and Canon of Canterbury, author of "The Origin of Nations," "The Five Great Monarchies," etc. 75
Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze. Translated from the German by J. Fitzgerald, M.A. . . .75
Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons, M.A., F.R.S., Professor of Logic and Political Economy in the Owens College, Manchester. . . .75
On the Study of Words. By Richard Chenevix Trench, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin. 75
The Dawn of History: An Introduction to Pre-Historic Study. Edited by C. F. Keary, M.A., of the British Museum. .75
Geological Sketches at Home and Abroad. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., Director-General of the Geological Surveys of Great Britain and Ireland. .75
Illusions: A Psychological Study. By James Sully, Author of "Sensation and Intuition," "Pessimism," etc. 75
The Pleasures of Life. (Parts I. and II.) By Sir John Lubbock, Bart. 2 parts in 1. .75
English Past and Present. (Parts I. and II.) By Richard Chenevix Trench 2 parts in 1, Complete. 75
The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S. Over 80 Illus. 75

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York

IN THE SELECTION OF

A CHOICE GIFT

For Pastor, Parent, Teacher, Child, or Friend, both elegance and usefulness will be found combined in a copy of Webster's Unabridged.

Besides many other valuable features, it contains

A Dictionary of 118,000 Words, 3000 Engravings,
A Gazetteer of the World
locating and describing 25,000 Places,
A Biographical Dictionary of nearly 10,000 Noted Persons,
A Dictionary of Fiction
found only in Webster,
All in One Book.

3000 more Words and nearly 2000 more Illustrations than any other American Dictionary.
Sold by all Booksellers. Pamphlet free.
G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Pub'rs, Springfield, Mass.

"JUST LET ME SHOW YOU"
DR. FOOTE'S
Hand-Book of Health Hints
AND READY RECIPES.
Worth $25. Cost 25c
By the author of "PLAIN HOME TALK" AND "MEDICAL COMMON SENSE."

128 PAGES of Advice about Daily Habits and Recipes for Cure of Common Ailments; a valuable Book of Reference for every Family. Only 25 cents.
The Handbook contains chapters on Hygiene for all seasons, Common Sense on Common Ills, Hygienic Curative Measures, How to Avoid Undesirable Children, Knacks Worth Knowing, Hints on Bathing, on Nursing the Sick, on Emergencies, Hints for Pregnant Women, together with some of the Private Formulæ of Dr. FOOTE, and other physicians of high repute, and directions for preparing food for Invalids. AGENTS WANTED.
Murray Hill Book Publishing Company,
Box 788. NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

"The Gladstone" LAMP

is the finest lamp in the world. It gives a pure, soft, brilliant white light of 85 candle power. Purer and brighter than gas light; softer than electric light,—more cheerful than either. A Marvelous light from ordinary kerosene oil!

Seeing is Believing.

A "wonderful lamp" it is indeed. Never needs trimming, never smokes nor breaks chimneys, never "smells of the oil;" no gumming up, no leaks, no sputtering, no climbing of the flame, no annoyance of any kind, and cannot explode. And besides all these advantages it gives a clear, white light, 10 to 20 times the size and brilliancy of any ordinary house lamp! Finished in either Brass, Nickel, Gold or Antique Bronze. Also

The Gladstone Extension Study Lamp,
for Clergymen, Editors, College Students, Teachers, Professors, Physicians and other professional men.
The Gladstone Banquet Lamps.
The Gladstone Piano Lamps.

Send for price list. Single lamps at wholesale price, boxed and sent by express. Get our prices. "Seeing is believing."
GLADSTONE LAMP CO.,
10 East 14th St., New York.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND,
LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

GIRARD'S WILL AND Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Ingersoll and the Deist.

BY
A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."

Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW

All about the human body in health and disease, nature's secrets revealed, How life is perpetuated, health maintained, disease induced, death delayed. How to marry your own mate, and transmit wealth of health to posterity.

READ cheapest, best popular medical book in English or German. Dr. Foote's "Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. Writ in PLAIN language in a style that is pleasing to all classes. All made by 200 wood cuts and 6 plates of fine lithographs. Should be in every HOME in the land, say its enthusiastic readers. It aims to perfect life by teaching of duty to self and others. It contains plain TALK for young and old of both the sexes. Necessary & important for everyone, married or single. The work is priceless in value AND calculated to regenerate society, Says Dr. Eadon, of Scotland, so say editors and clergymen. Original ideas of disease and its MEDICAL treatment at home. By a prosperous physician of large practice for 30 years. Treats of lung, heart, liver, and all chronic COMMON ailments. Especially blood & nervous derangements & debility. 500,000 sold; probably a million readers among people of 1888 edition has new "Origin of Life," in 21 chromographs SENSE. Great discounts to AGENTS A. K. Bryant, Barre, Vt., ordering 110 writes, "Took 78 orders in 7 days: sold 7 in 1½ hours." Standard, $3.25; Popular, $1.50; (difference is in binding). PRICES Both editions cloth bound. Circulars & sample pages FREE.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO., 129 E. 28th St., N.Y.

NEW HUMAN FACES; how to read character. by Dr. J. Simms, 250 pages, 225 Illustrations, 50 cents.
PUB Dr. Foote's Hand Book of Health Hints and Ready Recipes, 128 page pamphlet, 25 cents.
MEDICAL SENSE and Nonsense. Try the Laugh Cure. 96 pages. 50 Illustrations, 10 cents.
GYNECOLOGY, or Diseases of Women. 48 pages. $10 worth of doctors advice for 10 cents.
All four of these paper cover books with Popular Edition of "Plain Home Talk" for $2.00.

GLOVES

Direct To You.

I have decided to place my gloves (the best made) within the reach of every purchaser, no matter where he or she may live. You purchase DIRECT FROM THE MANUFACTURER, get better gloves for the money, saving intermediate expenses of traveling salesmen, wholesale and retail dealers. My gloves are made from selected skins suitable for different grades of service and are made with the best skill by the most experienced operators. They are perfect in style and fit and the most serviceable gloves that can be made. My gloves are warranted and if not as represented you can return them and receive back your money.

Twenty-seven Years Before the Public.

I offer my gloves for ladies and gentlemen, with assorted colors, real dog skin, kid, cheverette, and fur. SEND stamp for illustrated book about gloves giving full description with prices of over fifty patterns, simple guide for self measurement; thus enabling you to order by mail as safely as if measured in our store.

REMEMBER, perfect fit and satisfaction guaranteed.

Refer to Johnstown Bank, American Express Co., or Postmaster, all of Johnstown, or Commercial Agencies.

JOHN C. HUTCHINSON,
JOHNSTOWN, N. Y.

OBSERVE. I send a good glove measure above book to those who mention this paper FREE of Charge with when writing.

THE DECKER & SON PIANO.

GRAND, UPRIGHT AND SQUARE.

Unrivaled in Tone, Touch and Workmanship.

FACTORY & WAREROOMS,
No. 1550 Third Avenue,
Cor. 87th St. New York.

THE

Bible of Nature,

OR, THE

Principles of Secularism.

A CONTRIBUTION to the RELIGION of the FUTURE.

BY PROF. FELIX L. OSWALD,

Author of "The Secret of the East, or the Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline," "Physical Education, or the Health-Laws of Nature," "Household Remedies," "The Poison Problem, or the Cause and the Cure of Intemperance," etc., etc.

Felix L. Oswald is a well-known and vigorous writer on scientific and social subjects.—[Cin. Com. Gazette.

Cloth, 12mo, 240pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York

VICK'S

FLORAL GUIDE.

1889—Pioneer Seed Catalogue of America. Complete list of Vegetables, Flowers, Bulbs and Small Fruits, with descriptions and prices. New Shape, New Type, completely revised and improved. Contains more varieties than any other catalogue printed. 3 elegant colored plates 8x10½ inches, and a frontispiece. Every person who owns a foot of land or cultivates a plant should have a copy. Price of VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE, containing a certificate good for 15 cents worth of Seeds, only 15 cents. JAMES VICK SEEDSMAN, Rochester, N. Y.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER
tf

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO

EVERY LADY WANTS A SILK DRESS

This is your opportunity. A new departure. SILKS direct from the manufacturers to you.

Our reduced prices bring the best goods within reach of all.

We are the only manufacturers in the U. S. selling direct to consumers. You take no risk. We warrant every piece of goods as represented, or money refunded. See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the U.S. Established in 1838, with over 50 years' experience. We guarantee the

CHAFFEE DRESS SILKS,

for richness of color, superior finish and wearing qualities, to be unexcelled by any make of Black Silks in the world. We offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grains, Satins, Surahs, Faille Francaise and Aida Cloths, in Blacks only.

Send us a 2c.-stamp (to pay postage) and we will forward you samples of all our styles free with prices, and you can see for yourselves.

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON,

Mansfield Centre, Conn.

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank, Windham National Bank, Dime Savings Bank, Willimantic Savings Institute, of Willimantic, Conn.

RECOLLECT we send to all parts of the U.S. With each Dress Pattern we present the buyer with 1000 Yards Sewing Silk, and enough Silk Braid to bind bottom of dress.

THE GOODS are delivered to you all carrying charges PREPAID

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place. New York

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Expos tion of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo. 25 cents.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By D. ROSSITER RAYMOND.
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR BOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

AN HOUR WITH THE DEVIL.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Price. - - - 10 cents.

THE

UNIVERSE ANALYZED

By JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,

Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.

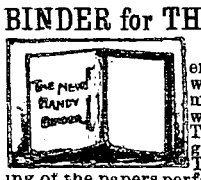
The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productiv of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,



OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.

Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Argument by R. G. Ingersoll

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

At Morristown, New Jersey.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES:

A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.

BY J. K. INGALLS.

Price, - - 25 cents.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhatian Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 7 o'clock.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec

---

Brooklyn Philosophical Association

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Elizur Wright Secular Union

Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10 30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

DIAMONDS.

Unprecedented offer. No other house so fair In order to giv my Liberal friends throughout the United States an opportunity to examin, test, and compare my goods and prices with those of other diamond merchants, I will sell any piece of Diamond Jewelry, accompanied by contract that cash in full will be refunded any time within one year from date of purchasing if goods are not entirely satisfactory. No other dealer will do it. None will sell as cheap. Carrying a large stock, being an expert, close buyer, and doing business on smallest possible expense, you will positivly save twenty to thirty per cent by purchasing of me. Diamond Pins and Eardrops, worth $600. for $400; Pins, Rings, Eardrops, Studs, Hair Ornaments, Pendants, worth $300, for $200; do., worth $200, for $140; do., worth $150, for $110; do., worth $100 for $70; do., worth $80, for $60; do., worth $60, for $45; do., worth $40, for $30; do., worth $30, for $22; do., worth $20, for $15. You can wear these goods daily for one year. It will not cost you a cent. If in the mean time you are not satisfied that the goods are better and cheaper than sold elsewhere return and get your cash in full.

Selections sent to responsible parties on approval: to any banking-house or C.O.D., privilege of examination.

The "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

sixteen jewels, finely adjusted to heat and cold, patent regulator, Brequet hair-spring, beautiful double-paneled dial, and all modern improvements Perfect, and no watch will compete with it! In silverine case, $19; in four-ounce coin silver case, $23.50; five-ounce, $25; six ounce, $27. In open face, best filled gold case, $27; hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV., $35. In fourteen carat solid gold, $50 to $ 50. Sent prepaid, and cash refunded if not satisfactory.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.
Established 1857.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 160 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, Eng.

ANTICHRIST.

PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

LIFE OF

Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order or Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

GODS AND RELICIONS
OF
ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.
Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.
Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo. 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

News of the Week.

ANOTHER deadly battle between the Hatfield and the McCoy factions has taken place in Lincoln county, W. Va.

HERBERT SPENCER is in better health, and will resume work on his great exposition of evolution, the "Synthetic Philosophy."

EMPEROR WILLIAM is visiting the sultan.

DOOK laborers at Antwerp struck last Saturday.

NORTH AND SOUTH DAKOTA were declared states on the 2d.

TCHERNYCHEWSKY, author of "What's to be Done?" is dead.

IN the Cronin trial evidence is being developed that shows Burke to be guilty.

LONDON bakers will strike on the 14th unless their demands are granted.

A SLIGHT earthquake was felt in southern Illinois, southern Missouri, and Kentucky.

AT Wilkesbarre, Pa., on the 31st ult., railroad laborers had a fight in which twelve were injured, four it is thought fatally.

AT Danbury, Conn., on the 2d, a bank of sand caved in upon workmen who were digging sewers, and killed one and injured two.

AT Glasgow on the 1st the wall of a building that was being erected beside a carpet factory blew over and crushed through the factory roof, killing forty or fifty girls.

AT Passaic, N. J., two buildings being erected fell and seriously injured eight workmen. Examination showed that the mortar was little better than pure mud, and the timber and foundations worthless.

Westphalia, Germany, the scene of the strikes, the manufacturers and mining companies now blacklisting troublesome hands, boycotting publicans who rent rooms for workmen's meetings, and asking the government to suppress the meetings altogether.

LATELY, at Coaticooke, Can., the supposed corpse of Auguste Archambault was being lowered into the grave when a groan from the coffin led to its being opened and its tenant being found alive. His disease had been typhoid fever, and physicians hope to save him.

MERCIER, the premier of Quebec, accompanied by Mgr. Labelle, a deputy minister of the Quebec government and Catholic clergyman, will soon start in a special car to attend the Catholic convention at Baltimore, Md. The object is to gain favor for the Catholic cause in Canada.

THE Catholics of Axtell, Kan., created considerable disturbance at a late lecture by a Presbyterian minister, "Priestcraft Exposed." The mayor received reports that the Catholics threatened violence, and telegraphed for troops, but Adjutant-general Roberts on arriving found that the militia were not required.

THE men that we hav elected to perform certain civil duties, hav, as is usual at this season, stepped outside their legitimate spheres and enjoined observance of the festival of a particular religion. November 28th is the day on which we are directed to "assemble in places of worship and giv thanks to God."

THE earl of Galloway was tried recently at Dumfries, Scotland, for criminal conduct toward a little girl, whose testimony was corroborated by several witnesses. Lord Galloway does not even seem to hav put in an appearance, but contented himself with submitting a written declaration asserting that his offense had been "unintentional." It is scarcely necessary to add that the court hastened to acquit the millionaire peer.

JEPHTHAH VOWETH A VOW.

Then it shall be, that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt-offering.—Judges xi, 31.

Gems of Thought.

RELIGION counteracts morality and universal philanthropy in so far as it sets men against each other by diversity of doctrins and theories of belief, thus fostering and nourishing the worst impulses of human nature.—Buchner.

WHAT effect has this religion had upon the nations of the earth? What hav the nations been fighting about? What was the Thirty Years' War in Europe for? What was the war in Holland for? Why was it that England persecuted Scotland? Why is it that England persecutes Ireland even to this day? At the bottom of every one of these conflicts you will find a religious question. The religion of Jesus Christ, as preached by his church, causes war, bloodshed, hatred, and all uncharitableness; and why? Because they say a certain belief is necessary to salvation.—Ingersoll.

THE growth of physical science is not an exclusiv prerogativ of the present age. Its present strength and volume merely indicate the highest level of a stream which took its rise, alongside of the primal founts of philosophy, literature, and art, in ancient Greece; and, after being dammed up for a thousand years, once more began to flow three centuries ago.—Huxley.

WE hav to explain the apparent anomaly of two epochs of comparativ sanity and civilization separated by the disease and delirium of the Catholic episode.—Professor Clifford.

THE foundations of our civilization were laid centuries before Christianity was known. The intelligence of courage, of self-government, of energy, of industry, that uniting made the civilization of this century, did not come alone from Judea, but from every nation of the ancient world.—Ingersoll.

THEY who crouch to those who are above them, always trample on those who are below them.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

AS a rule, arrogance and humility go together. He who in power compels his fellow-man to kneel, will himself kneel when weak. The tyrant is a cringer in power; a cringer is a tyrant out of power.—Ingersoll.

IT has often been repeated that the abolition of slavery among modern people is entirely due to Christians. That, I think, is saying too much. Slavery existed for a long period in the heart of Christian society, without its being particularly astonished or irritated. A multitude of causes, and a great development in other ideas and principles of civilization, were necessary for the abolition of this iniquity of all iniquities.—Guizot's History of Civilization.

I AM unaware of any religion in the world which in the past forbade slavery. The professors of Christianity for ages supported it; the Old Testament repeatedly sanctioned it by special laws; the New Testament has no repealing declaration. It is impossible for any well-informed Christian to deny that the abolition movement in North America was most steadily and bitterly opposed by the religious bodies in the various states.—Charles Bradlaugh.

IF the devil had written upon the subject of slavery, which side would he hav taken? Let every minister answer. If you knew the devil had written a book on human slavery, in your judgment would he uphold slavery, or denounce it? Would you regard it as any evidence that he ever wrote it, if it upheld slavery? And yet, here you hav a work upholding slavery, and you say it was written by an infinitly good God! If the devil upheld polygamy, would you be surprised? If the devil wanted to kill men for differing with him, would you be astonished? If the devil told a man to kill his wife, would you be shocked? And yet, you say, that is exactly what God did. If there be a God, then that creed is blasphemy. That creed is a libel upon him who sits on heaven's throne. If there be a God, I ask him to write in the book in which my account is kept, that I denied these lies for him.—Ingersoll.

GOD is infinitly good, but it has been found expedient to make him more wicked and vicious than the devil himself. With a too lenient God, the priests would do but a sorry trade.—Voltaire.

IF there is no hell, from what are we saved? To what purpose is the atonement?—Ingersoll.

MANKIND bestows more applause on her destroyers than her benefactors.—Gibbon.

TO-DAY we are not honoring some butcher called a soldier—some wily politician called a statesman—some robber called a king—nor some malicious metaphysician called a saint. We are honoring the great Humboldt, whose victories were all achieved in the arena of thought.—Ingersoll.

MOTION, heat, light, magnetism, electricity, chemical affinity, pass one into the other; they are only different modes of one and the same original energy, and each, if not directly, can yet indirectly be converted back again into the old form out of which it has been evoked.—Du Prel.

OUT of nothing no energy can arise.—Liebig.

Odds and Ends.

THE orator is made, but the poet is borne with.—Life.

THE monkey goes to the sunny side of the tree when he wants a warmer climb.—Merchant Traveler.

AFTER the heathen are converted, it might be well to bring them over to do a little missionary work in our cities.—Puck.

AN old maid said she wished she was an auctioneer, for then it would be perfectly proper to say, "Make me an offer."—Texas Siftings.

JOHNNIE: "Is God Irish?" Sunday-school teacher: "Why, no, my dear. Why do you ask such a question?" Johnnie: "Coz, he always says 'ye.'"

FOND mother (with ugly child): "Well, Dr. Baxter, what do you think of that for a baby?" The Rev. Dr. Baxter (who has his own ideas of beauty, but is conscientious): "Well, that is a baby."—Life.

'Tis very true th' electric sparks will kill
An upright, tender lineman sure enough,
But may not adequately fill the bill
When tried on criminals of fiber tough.
—Life.

MABEL (to Jack, who is about to drink her health for the ninth time): "Oh, I wouldn't, Jack. 'Drink to me only with thine eyes' instead." Jack: "All right. Well—er—here's looking at you."—Harvard Lampoon.

LADY of the house: "No, I make it a principle never to giv away money at the door." Tramp: "Very well, madam, if you hav any feeling about it; I am perfectly willing that you should hand it to me out of the window."—Yale Record.

CLOGSEY: "How with such a perfect show
You should let that heiress go,
I don't know."
Grogsey: "I'll tell you how I missed her;
I merely stooped and kissed her—Younger sister." —Town Topics.

FIRST citizen: "What hav they arrested the Chinaman for?" Second citizen: "Oh, some boys smashed his windows and he shook his fist at them." "And they arrested him?" "Certainly. These moon-eyed Mongolians must be taught that they cannot shake their fists at our American boys."—Boston Courier.

"A STATESMAN'S heart lies in his head,"
Or so the great Napoleon said;
But hearts which in the head reside,
Just like the skull, grow ossified,
And thus Napoleon's chilly heart
Grew hard in such a Bony-parte.
—Pittsburgh Bulletin.

ST. PETER: "Havn't I heard your name before?" Western boomer: "Of course you hav. Everybody has heard of the founder of Hustlerville, Dakota." St. Peter: "You can come in, Mr. Boomer, but you mustn't write any pamphlets about this place. You re liable to make statements that the attractions won't warrant."—Munsey's Weekly.

I GATHER here and there a pie,
And here and there a biscuit;
I snatch a spoon when no one's by,
It always pays to risk it.
I sleep at noon where waters flow
To soothe the weary comer,
For men may come and men may go,
But I go on all summer.

I ride beneath the rushing freight
From Boston to Chicago;
I watch each chance to desecrate
The box of Wells and Fargo.
I sing and whistle as I go—
November'll find me lonely,
For in November falls the snow—
I walk in summer only. —Exchange.

IT is understood that the following letter has been received by the president of the Senate:

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 15, 1889.

To the Pres. of the Senate,

I see bi the paypers that the Senate is a milyun air's club. Now I wood like to jine, for I am a milyun air. Plees hev mi name proposed at the next meeting and see that it goze thru i am wurth moren a milyun and made it myself, too.

Yours trooly, RICH. B. GOLDBAG.

I GRANT we wandered off alone,
And stayed until the falling dew;
But, dear, I only went because
I fancied that she looked like you.

I grant my arm around her waist
Unwisely strayed. What could I do?
I had to draw her close to see
If, in the dusk, she looked like you.

I grant upon her cheek I pressed
A single kiss—no more? well—two.
You never were content with one,
And she—she looked so much like you.
—Bentley Pauker.

MARY'S LITTLE LAMB—NEW VERSION.

Mary had a little lamb,
'Tis called the lamb of God,
You must believe this priestly sham
Or feel the avenging rod.

He ran against a fool one day,
Who said he was possessed
Of all the devils out of hell
And imps, till he couldn't rest.

And so this teacher turned 'em out,
But still they lingered near,
And roamed impatiently about
Till the imps "got on their ear."

On Grampian hills a frugal swain
Was herding swine close by,
Christ let these devils into them,
'Twas then "root hog or die."

He wandered through a field of grain,
This meek and lowly lamb,
When reminded 'twas the Sabbath day,
Said he didn't care a—cent.

He sent his pals to steal an ass,
Of course, 'twas against the rule,
But hence the saying came to pass,
"John Morgan, here's your mule!"

What makes the Jews hate Jesus so?"
The eager Christians cry,
"Why, Jesus damned the Jews, you know,"
The preacher makes reply. KILPOSY.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 46. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY. {New York, Saturday, November 16 1889} 28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

THE OLD TIGER AND HIS WHELPS—THE BRUNO MONUMENT.

Notes and Clippings.

A WESTERN newspaper humorist, being desirous of starting his column in the Sunday issue with a verse appropriate both to day and column, asked the religious editor to furnish him "something funny about God."

THE continued exposition of the unharmonious sentiments in the English church, says the Sun, cannot fail of having considerable influence upon its status, disestablishment being a final result which even within the pale of the institution itself is contemplated with equanimity.

THE Chicago Times devotes four columns to a description of the spread of Anarchy in that city. It says that the Anarchists are twice as numerous as they were in 1886, and that they are fully armed. "There is no doubt," says the article, "that there is a great deal of dynamite concealed in 'Little Hell.'"

MR. TALMAGE seems to hav been a little tricky in his begging for cash to rebuild his tabernacle. He wrote to men in Omaha, St. Louis, and Kansas City offering to each to name the new building after some dead relativ providing he would giv a hundred thousand dollars. It is fortunate that none responded, or the Brooklyn preacher would hav been slightly embarrassed.

THE soul, says Dr. A. H. Stevens, of Philadelphia, is located in the corpus callosum, a little spongy body situated at the base of the brain, which has defied the efforts of physicians in their endeavors to ascertain its uses in the human anatomy. "The corpus callosum," said the doctor, "is the seat of the imperishable mind, and is the great reservoir and storehouse of electricity, which is abstracted from the blood in the arteries, and conveyed through the nerves up the spinal cord to the corpus callosum."

THE Rome correspondent of the London Standard writes: "There is much preoccupation in the Vatican respecting the future conclave, and the pope, who was for some time averse to taking any anticipatory measures, has consented to let the following questions be examined: 1. Whether, in the present state of things, it is expedient to take measures now so that the cardinals may find the ground prepared for them if they should wish to hold the conclave out of Rome. 2 Whether any step shall now be taken to obtain assurances from the powers that the cardinals shall hav absolute liberty of choice in this matter. 3. Whether it would be possible to hav the conclave safeguarded by the other powers if held in Rome."

THE Christian Advocate says: "Possibly it will be answer enough to the argument in favor of relieving Catholics who support parochial schools of the tax for public schools, that they need the public school as an incentiv and an example. We might feel a good deal more like listening to their arguments, did we not know that education by the Catholic church has proved a complete failure. We only hav need to ask the Catholic nations of the world their experience. Every independent nation in the two Americas, except ours, is Catholic; and with one insignificant exception, they hav all been compelled to remove education from the church and giv it to the state. It is so equally in Europe. When we read an argument to prove that arithmetic and grammar must be taught in a specially Catholic way, that all the five school-days in the week must be devoted to teaching Catholic virtue, then we feel inclined to bid our critics leave us alone and first convert their own people in Italy and France and Mexico and Brazil and the Argentine Republic."

THE English bishop of Peterborough, presiding at a diocesan conference, in summing up a discussion on Socialism, said: Christianity made no claim to rearrange the economic relations of men in the state and in society, and he hoped he would be understood when he said plainly that it was his firm belief that any Christian state carrying out in all its relations the Sermon on the Mount could not exist for a week. It was perfectly clear that a state could not continue to exist upon what were commonly called Christian principles, and it was a mistake to attempt to turn Christ's kingdom into one of this world. To introduce the principles of Christianity into the laws of the state would lead to absolute intolerance.

THE Hebrew Journal says: "Sir Julian Goldsmid, one of England's Jewish philanthropists, has just been visiting America, and it was naturally deemed fitting to tender him a reception in New York as a mark of esteem from his transatlantic brethren. All the leaders of our charitable institutions, of our public organizations, and all eminent Hebrews in large fields of usefulness were invited. But the Jewish ministers were conspicuously omitted. Why? The indifferent attitude of the prominent Hebrews of this city toward their clergy has been painfully noticeable for some time. It has given rise to much unpleasant experience. It compels certain pertinent questions. Are the ministers worthy of social recognition and general esteem? If not, then they should not hav been selected in their various positions. But they were selected, and by the very people who ignore and slight them. Then 'there is something rotten in the state of Denmark.'"

A WRITER in a daily paper says: "When we reflect that but a few years ago the church was the power which held everything in subjection in Mexico—land, people, and government alike in the hollow of her hand—and that the entire population of Mexico were in fact what they are in name to-day, Catholics, it seems a change too great to be credited, even in this land of changes. How has it been possible to shut the church out from all temporal power, to degrade her from her high estate, to disgrace her priests below the level of a common citizenship, and all this in the plain view and in the very midst of a people overwhelmingly Catholic? Fancy an edict that should strip the Quaker of Philadelphia of his garb and citizenship, despoil the lowliest church in our land of its real estate and other possessions, or deny to any religious denomination, however small a minority it might be of our people, the legal validity of the marriage sacrament, even in the face of a popular demand for such exclusion, if need be, and then turn the imagination loose to picture out the revolution which would be sure to follow. But in Mexico not a drop of blood has been shed over the separation of church and state, nor in the displacement and degradation of church sovereignty in political and civil affairs."

Communications.

Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?

CHAPTER VII.

TESTIMONY OF COL. WARD H. LAMON.

Lamon's "Life of Lincoln"—Lincoln's Early Skepticism—His Investigations at New Salem—His Book on Infidelity—His Religious Opinions Remain Unchanged—Holland's Condemnation of Lamon's Work—Holland's and Lamon's Works Compared.

In 1872, seven years after the president's assassination, appeared the "Life of Abraham Lincoln," written by Col. Ward H. Lamon. As a faithful record of the life of one of the most sublime characters in the world's history, this work stands unrivaled. More accomplished writers hav written biography—hav written the biography of Lincoln. But no writer has ever been more thoroughly informed respecting his subject, and no writer has ever made a more conscientious use of the information in his possession than has Colonel Lamon in his "Life of Lincoln." In Illinois he was the friend and confidant of Lincoln. When the time approached for Lincoln to take the executiv chair, and the journey from Springfield to Washington was deemed a dangerous undertaking, to Colonel Lamon was intrusted the responsible duty of conducting him to the national capital. During the eventful years that followed, he remained at the president's side, holding an important official position in the District of Columbia.

The following extract, from the preface to his work, shows what an inexhaustible mine of materials he had with which to prepare a full and authentic record of Lincoln's life and character:

At the time of Mr Lincoln's death, I determined to write his history, as I had in my possession much valuable material for such a purpose. . . . Early in 1869, Mr. Herndon placed at my disposal his remarkable collection of materials—the richest, rarest, and fullest collection it was possible to conceive. . . . Mr. Herndon had been the partner in business and the intimate personal associate of Mr. Lincoln for something like a quarter of a century; and Mr Lincoln had lived familiarly with several members of his family long before their individual acquaintance began. New Salem, Springfield, the old judicial circuit, the habits and friends of Mr. Lincoln, were as well known to Mr. Herndon as to himself. With these advantages, and from the numberless facts and hints which had dropped from Mr. Lincoln during the confidential intercourse of an ordinary lifetime, Mr. Herndon was able to institute a thorough system of inquiry for every noteworthy circumstance and every incident of value in Mr. Lincoln's career. The fruits of Mr. Herndon's labors are garnered in three enormous volumes of original manuscripts and a mass of unarranged letters and papers. They comprise the recollections of Mr. Lincoln's nearest friends; of the surviving members of his family and his family connections; of the men still living who knew him and his parents in Kentucky; of his schoolfellows, neighbors, and acquaintances in Indiana; of the better part of the whole population of New Salem; of his associates and relatives at Springfield; and of lawyers, judges, politicians, and statesmen everywhere, who had anything of interest or moment to relate. They were collected at vast expense of time, labor, and money, involving the employment of many agents, long journeys, tedious examinations, and voluminous correspondence. Upon the value of these materials it would be impossible to place an estimate. That I hav used them conscientiously and justly is the only merit to which I lay claim.

Lamon's evidence concerning Lincoln's unbelief is complete and unanswerable. He did not present it because he was himself an unbeliever and wished to support his views with the prestige of Lincoln's great name. While the Freethinker regards Lincoln's rejection of Christianity as in the highest degree meritorious—a proof of his strong logical acumen, his sterling common sense, and his broad humanity—Lamon considered it a grave defect in his character. He states the fact because it is a fact, and because the purpose of his work is to disclose and not conceal the facts of Lincoln's life. If he devotes considerable space to the subject, and exhibits a special earnestness in its presentation, the misrepresentations of Lincoln's Christian biographers hav furnished a reasonable pretext for it.

In the pages immediately following will be given the individual testimony of Colonel Lamon:

Any analysis of Mr. Lincoln's character would be defectiv that did not include his religious opinions. On such matters he thought deeply; and his opinions were positiv. But perhaps no phase of his character has been more persistently misrepresented and variously misunderstood, than this of his religious belief. Not that the conclusiv testimony of many of his intimate associates relativ to his frequent expressions on such subjects has ever been wanting; but his great prominence in the world's history, and his identification with some of the great questions of our time, which, by their moral import, were held to be eminently religious in their character, hav led many good people to trace in his motivs and actions similar convictions to those held by themselvs. His extremely general expressions of religious faith called forth by the grave exigencies of his public life, or indulged in on occasions of private condolence, hav too often been distorted out of relation to their real significance or meaning to suit the opinions or tickle the fancies of individuals or parties.

Mr. Lincoln was never a member of any church, nor did he believe in the divinity of Christ, or the inspiration of the scriptures in the sense understood by evangelical Christians (Life of Lincoln, p. 486).

Holland and other Christian biographers hav represented Lincoln as a youth of extreme piety, whose constant companion was the Bible. The concurrent testimony of the friends of his boyhood compels Colonel Lamon to affirm that the reverse of this is true—that Lincoln, at an early age, was noted for his skepticism. He says:

When a boy, he showed no sign of that piety which his many biographers ascribe to his manhood. . . . When he went to church at all, he went to mock, and came away to mimic (Ibid, pp. 486, 487).

At an early age he began to attend the "preachings" roundabout, but principally at the Pigeon Creek church, with a view to catching whatever might be ludicrous in the preacher's air or matter, and making it the subject of mimicry as soon as he could collect an audience of idle boys and men to hear him. A pious stranger, passing that way on a Sunday morning, was invited to preach for the Pigeon Creek congregation; but he banged the boards of the old pulpit, and bellowed and groaned so wonderfully, that Abe could hardly contain his mirth. This memorable sermon was a great favorit with him; and he frequently reproduced it with nasal tones, rolling eyes, and all manner of droll aggravations, to the great delight of Nat Grigsby and the wild fellows whom Nat was able to assemble (Ib, p. 55).

His chronicles were many, and on a great variety of subjects. They were written, as his early admirers love to tell us, "in the scriptural style;" but those we hav betray a very limited acquaintance with the model (Ib., p. 63).

Of his Freethought reading and theological investigations at New Salem, and of his book on Infidelity, Lamon says:

When he came to New Salem, he consorted with Freethinkers, joined with them in deriding the gospel history of Jesus, read Volney and Paine, and then wrote a deliberate and labored essay, wherein he reached conclusions similar to theirs. The essay was burnt, but he never denied or regretted its composition. On the contrary, he made it the subject of free and frequent conversations with his friends at Springfield, and stated, with much particularity and precision, the origin, arguments, and objects of the work (Ib, p. 487).

The community in which he lived was pre eminently a community of Freethinkers in matters of religion; and it was then no secret, nor has it been a secret since, that Mr. Lincoln agreed with the majority of his associates in denying to the Bible the authority of divine revelation. It was his honest belief, a belief which it was no reproach to hold at New Salem, Anno Domini 1834, and one which he never thought of concealing It was no distinction, either good or bad, no honor, and no shame. But he had made himself thoroughly familiar with the writings of Paine and Volney—the "Ruins" by the one, and "The Age of Reason" by the other. His mind was full of the subject, and he felt an itching to write. He did write, and the result was a little book. It was probably merely an extended essay, but it is ambitiously spoken of as "a book" by himself and by the persons who were made acquainted with its contents. In this work he intended to demonstrate—

"First, that the Bible was not God's revelation;

"Secondly, that Jesus was not the son of God."

No leaf of this little volume has survived. Mr. Lincoln carried it in manuscript to the store of Mr. Samuel Hill, where it was read and discussed. Hill was himself an unbeliever, but his son considered this book "infamous." It is more than probable that Hill, being a warm personal friend of Lincoln, feared that the publication of the essay would some day interfere with the political advancement of his favorit. At all events, he snatched it out of his hand, and thrust it into the fire, from which not a shred escaped (Ib., pp. 157, 158).

Colonel Lamon is confident that while Lincoln finally ceased to openly promulgate his Freethought opinions, he never abandoned them. He says:

As he grew older, he grew more cautious; and as his New Salem associates, and the aggressiv Deists with whom he originally united at Springfield, gradually dispersed, or fell away from his side, he appreciated more and more keenly the violence and extent of the religious prejudices which freedom in discussion from his standpoint would be sure to arouse against him. He saw the immense and augmenting power of the churches, and in times past had practically felt it. The imputation of Infidelity had seriously injured him in several of his earlier political contests; and, sobered by age and experience, he was resolved that that same imputation should injure him no more. Aspiring to lead religious communities, he foresaw that he must not appear as an enemy within their gates; aspiring to public honors under the auspices of a political party which persistently summoned religious people to assist in the extirpation of that which is denounced as the "nation's sin," he foresaw that he could not ask their suffrages whilst aspersing their faith. He perceived no reason for changing his convictions, but he did perceive many good and cogent reasons for not making them public (Ib., pp. 497, 498).

But he never told anyone that he accepted Jesus as the Christ, or performed a single one of the acts which necessarily follow upon such a conviction. At Springfield and at Washington he was beset on the one hand by political priests, and on the other by honest and praverful Christians. He despised the former, respected the latter, and had use for both. He said with characteristic irreverence that he would not undertake to "run the churches by military authority;" but he was, nevertheless, alive to the importance of letting the churches "run" themselvs in the interest of his party. Indefinit expressions about "Divine Providence," the "Justice of God," "the favor of the Most High," were easy, and not inconsistent with his religious notions. In this, accordingly, he indulged freely; but never in all that time did he let fall from his lips or his pen an expression which remotely implied the slightest faith in Jesus as the son of God and the savior of men (Ib., p. 502).

Lamon was Lincoln's intimate and trusted friend at Washington, and had he changed his belief, his biographer, as well as Noah Brooks and the Illinois clergyman, would hav been in possession of the fact.

In 1851 Lincoln wrote a letter of consolation to his dying father, in which he counseled him to "confide in our great and good and merciful maker." This letter was given to the public by Mr. Herndon, and has been cited by the orthodox to prove that Lincoln was a believer. Adverting to this letter Lamon says:

If ever there was a moment when Mr. Lincoln might hav been expected to express his faith in the atonement, his trust in the merits of a living redeemer, it was when he undertook to send a composing and comforting message to a dying man. . . . But he omitted it wholly. He did not even mention the name of Jesus, or intimate the most distant suspicion of the existence of a Christ (Ibid., p. 497).

Lincoln's mind was not entirely free from superstition, but though born and reared in Christendom, the superstitious element in his nature was not essentially Christian. His fatalistic ideas, so characteristic of the faith of Islam, hav already been mentioned by Mr. Herndon, and are thus referred to by Colonel Lamon:

Mr. Lincoln was by no means free from a kind of belief in the supernatural. . . . He lived constantly in the serious conviction that he was himself the subject of a special decree, made by some unknown and mysterious power, for which he had no name (Ibid., p. 503).

His mind was filled with gloomy forebodings and strong apprehensions of impending evil, mingled with extravagant visions of personal grandeur and power. His imagination painted a scene just beyond the veil of the immediate future, gilded with glory yet tarnished with blood. It was his "destiny"—splendid but dreadful, fascinating but terrible. His case bore little resemblance to those of religious enthusiasts like Bunyan, Cowper, and others. His was more like the delusion of the fatalist conscious of his star (Ibid, p. 475).

When Lamon's work appeared, Holland, backed by the Christian element generally, fell upon it like a savage and sought, as far as possible, to suppress it. Lamon had committed an unpardonable offense. He had declared to the world that Lincoln died a disbeliever, and, what was worse, he had proved it. Holland's attack was made in an eight-column review of Lamon's "Life," which was published in Scribner's Monthly for August, 1872. In order to giv an air of candor and judicial fairness to his venomous criticism, he opens with this flattering recognition of its merits:

It is not difficult to see how Colonel Lamon, who during Mr. Lincoln's presidency held an office in the District of Columbia, which must hav brought him into somewhat frequent intercourse with the president, and who, indeed, had come with him from Springfield to the capital, should feel that there rested on him a certain biographical duty. And certainly he was in possession of a mass of material so voluminous, so original, and so fresh that in this respect at least his fitness for the work was remarkably complete. Moreover, Mr. W. H. Herndon, who was Mr. Lincoln's partner in the practice of the law at Springfield, and was, of course, closely intimate with his partner in a business way, . . . added to Colonel Lamon's material the valuable documents which he had himself collected, and the memoranda which, with painstaking and lawyer-like ability, he had recorded from the oral testimony of living witnesses.

As far as the story of Mr. Lincoln's childhood and early life is concerned, down to the time when his political life began, it has never been told so fully, with such spirit and zest, and with such evident accuracy, as by Colonel Lamon.

Nearly the entire review is devoted to a denunciation of Lamon's exposition of Lincoln's religious opinions. He repeatedly pronounces this "an outrage on decency," and characterizes Lincoln's Freethought companions as "heathen," "barbarians," and "savages." The review concludes as follows:

The violent and reckless prejudice, and the utter want of delicacy and even of decency by which the book is characterized, in such instances as this, will more than counterbalance the value of its new material, its fresh and vigorous pictures of Western life and manners, and its familiar knowledge of the "inside politics" of Mr. Lincoln's administration, and will even make its publication (by the famous publishers whose imprint imparts to it a prestige and authority which its authorship would fail to giv) something like a national misfortune. In some quarters it will be readily received as the standard life of the good president. It is all the more desirable that the criticism upon it should be prompt and unsparing.

Christianity must hav the support of Lincoln's great name. To secure it Holland is willing to misrepresent the honest convictions of Lincoln's lifetime, to traduce the characters of his dearest friends, and to rob a brother author and a publisher of their just reward.

Lamon states that during the last years of Lincoln's life he ceased to proclaim his Infidel opinions because they were unpopular. Referring to this statement, Holland says: "The eagerness with which this volume strives to cover Mr. Lincoln's memory with an imputation so detestable is one of the most pitiable exhibitions which we hav lately witnessed."

This outburst of righteous indignation, coming from the source it does, is peculiarly refreshing. To appreciate it, we hav only to open Holland's work, and read such passages as the following: "I am obliged to appear different to them." "It was one of the peculiarities of Mr. Lincoln to hide these religious [Christian] experiences from the eyes of the world." "Who had never in their whole lives heard from his lips one word of all these religious convictions and experiences." "They [his friends] did not regard him as a religious man." "All this department of his life he had kept carefully hidden from them." "There was much in his conduct that was simply a cover to these thoughts—an effort to conceal them" (Holland's Life of Lincoln, pp. 239, 240).

Consummate hypocrisy in a Christian is all right with this moralist; but for a Freethinker to withhold his views from an intolerant religious world is a detestable crime.

As a biographer of Lincoln, Holland possessed many advantages over Lamon. His work was written and published immediately after the awful tragedy, when almost the entire reading public was deeply interested in everything that pertained to Lincoln's life. So far as Lincoln's religious views are concerned, he advocated the popular side of the question; for while those outside the church cared but little about the matter, the church desired the influence of his great name, and was ready to reward those who assisted her in obtaining it. Holland had an established reputation as an author—had nearly as large a class of readers as any writer in this country. His name alone was sufficient to guarantee a large circulation to any book he might produce. Lamon, on the other hand, possessed but a single advantage over his rival, that of having the truth on his side. And while "truth is mighty" and will in the end prevail, yet how often is it "crushed to earth" and for the time obscured. In view of all this, it is not strange that the public should be so slow to reject the fictions of Holland and accept the facts of Lamon.

That Lamon's "Life of Lincoln" is wholly undeserving of adverse criticism, it is not claimed. He has, perhaps, given undue prominence to some matters connected with Lincoln's private affairs which might with propriety hav been consigned to oblivion. A larger manifestation of charity, too, for the imperfections of those with whom Lincoln mingled, especially in the humbler walks of life, would not hav detracted from its merit. And yet, those who desire to know Lincoln as he really was, should read Lamon rather than Holland. In Lamon's work, Lincoln's character is a rugged oak towering above its fellows and clothed in nature's livery; in Holland's work, it is a dead tree with the bark taken off, the knots planed down, and varnished.

In the New York World appeared the following just estimate of these two biographies:

Mr. Ward H. Lamon is the author of one "Life of Lincoln," and Dr. J. G. Holland is the author of another. Mr. Lamon was the intimate personal and political friend of Mr. Lincoln, trusting and trusted, from the time of their joint practice in the Illinois quarter sessions to the moment of Mr. Lincoln's death at Washington. Dr. Holland was nothing to Mr. Lincoln—neither known nor knowing. Dr. Holland rushed his "Life" from the press before the disfigured corpse was fairly out of sight, while the public mind lingered with horror over the details of the tragedy, and, excited by morbid curiosity, was willing to pay for its gratification. Mr. Lamon waited many years, until all adventitious interest had subsided, and then with incredible labor and pains, produced a volume founded upon materials which for their fulness, variety, and seeming authenticity are unrivaled in the history of biographies. Dr. Holland's single volume professed to cover the whole of Mr. Lincoln's career. Mr. Lamon's single volume was modestly confined to a part of it. Dr. Holland's was an easy, graceful, off-hand performance, having but the one slight demerit of being in all essential particulars untrue from beginning to end. Mr. Lamon's was a labored, cautious, and carefully verified narrativ which seems to hav been accepted by disinterested critics as entirely authentic.

Dr. Holland would probably be very much shocked if anybody should ask him to bear false witness in favor of his neighbor in a court of justice, but he takes up his pen to make a record which he hopes and intends shall endure forever, and in that record deliberately bears false witness in favor of a public man whom he happened to admire, with no kind of offense to his serene and "cultured" conscience. If this were all—if Dr. Holland merely asserted his own right to compose and publish elaborate fictions on historical subjects—we might comfort ourselvs with the reflection that such literature is likely to be as evanescent as it is dishonest, and let him pass in silence. But this is not all. He maintains that it is everybody's duty to help him to deceive the public and to write down his more conscientious competitor. He turns up the nose of "culture" and curls the lip of "art" at Mr. Lamon's homely narrativ of facts, and gravely insists that all other noses and all other lips shall be turned up and curled because his are. He implores the public, which he insulted and gulled with his own book, to damn Mr. Lamon's, and he puts his request on the very ground that Mr. Lamon has stupidly gone and narrated undeniable truths, whereby he has demolished an empty shrine that was profitable to many, and broken a painted idol that might hav served for a god.

The names of Holland and Lamon are not of themselvs and by themselvs illustrations; but starting from the title-pages of the two Lives of Lincoln, and representing, as they do, the two schools of biography writers, the one stands for a principle and the other for the want of it.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

The Divorce Problem.

In the November number of the North American Review is a discussion on the question, "Is Divorce Wrong?" It is very interesting to compare the views of Colonel Ingersoll with those of the Roman Catholic church and the Protestant Episcopal church, as set forth by Cardinal Gibbons and Bishop Potter. The former breathe the spirit of the living present, of liberty and humanity; the latter are voices from the grave. The church has no respect for the rights of men and women. It knows that divorce is absolutely wrong, and its first and last and best reason is this, "Thus saith the Lord." According to the Catholic church, divorce can be granted only on account of adultery, but with no right to either party to marry another. Nothing can be more inhuman than this. Why should an honest man be deprived of the pleasures of love, because his wife was unfaithful? Why should a good woman be induced to liv a single life, because her husband was immoral? Why should she suffer the consequences of his acts? But this doctrin, monstrous as it is, is still consistent with the fundamental teaching of the Christian church. If a man can justly be rewarded with an eternity of joy through the merits of another being, why cannot he justly be punished for the crime of another? Compare with this inhuman and antinatural view the sentiments of Colonel Ingersoll: "A true marriage is a natural concord and agreement of souls, a harmony in which discord is not even imagined. When two beings thus love, thus unite, this is the true marriage of soul and soul. . . . The death of love is the end of marriage. Upon what principle can a woman continue to sustain the relation of wife after love is dead? Is there some other consideration that can take the place of genuin affection? Can she be bribed with money, or a home, or position, or by public opinion, and still remain a virtuous woman?" Grander words than these hav probably never been written. What a difference between the Agnostic and the champions of the church! Cardinal Gibbons and Bishop Potter are slaves to their creeds; they hav no right to express their own opinions; like parrots they must repeat the teachings of their churches and say, Amen. But the Agnostic speaks for himself; he allows no one to control his mind; he claims liberty for himself and his fellow-men.

The church tells us that marriage cannot be dissolved. If a man and a woman were once united, they must liv together all their life, whether they can do it or not. But where did the church, or the state, or society get the right to control the passions of one's heart? Who can compel me to liv with a woman for whom I hav no real affection? Who has a right to compel a woman to be my wife, if she does not love me? Love is beyond our control. No one can love a woman simply because he is told that he must love her. There are no duties, no obligations, in love. Why should it be a crime for a man to love several women during his life, and why should it be a virtue to love only one? Suppose that a young man loves a young woman. She shares his feelings. They are both happy. Everything in nature looks beautiful to them; everything speaks of love and joy. It seems impossible that their love could ever cease. But time rolls on, and their love loses its heat by degrees. They know each other better than they did before, they analyze their characters, they penetrate the depths of their souls, and become convinced that their love was a mistake. They know now that they cannot make each other happy, and so they separate and remain friends. Will anyone accuse them of being immoral wretches? Will anyone say that their separation injures the moral purity of society? Now, suppose that they were married and then they separated. What of it? Does the ceremony of marriage make any changes in their natures? Can they really love each other forever simply because, on a certain occasion, they promised to do so? When they made that promis they were sincere; they thought that the future cannot be different from the present, they believed that their love is not a dream which vanishes together with the darkness of night, but a splendid reality, the bright dawn itself. They were mistaken. Is it a crime to make a mistake? Should they be punished for it? Is it in the interest of society that they should liv together and be miserable? Will it add to the happiness of mankind?

There are a certain class of people who are not opposed to divorce, but they think that divorce is right only when the husband and the wife quarrel and fight and actually hate each other, or when one of the married party is cruel or unfaithful. They also insist that the cause of divorce should be made public. But if so, why should not the cause of marriage be known also? Will anyone demand that a man, while going through the ceremony of marriage, must tell whether he marries the woman who stands by his side for her beauty and kindness, or wisdom and learning, or simply because he had to marry some one? Must society know whether Miss A. marries Mr. B. on account of love or for wealth and position? I deny the right of society to catechize me about my feelings. It may be admitted that it is desirable that the fact of marriage or divorce should be known. But as to the cause, it is a private affair, and society has no right to take a look at one's private life.

My opinion is that if a woman wants to leave her husband because he is cruel or does not support her, she ought to be protected by society, whether the husband wants her to leave his house or not. Humanity cannot afford to see tyranny triumphant, and stand still with folded arms. The rights of the victim must be defended. I also think that if the husband and wife voluntarily agree to separate, it is their right to do so. No matter how good and kind they both might be, if for some reason or another they cannot enjoy mutual happiness, they should separate, if such is their desire. Society has nothing to do with it. It has no right to demand the reason why they hav done so. The cause that led to separation is their private matter.

Let us take a case. A young couple liv together under the contract of marriage for several years. Their life seems to be a perfect harmony. But it does not last long. They grew older, their characters got developed, and the conflict came. Their natures differ, and further harmony is impossible. The wife does not hate her husband. On the contrary she has the highest respect for him. She thinks that a nobler man has never existed on the face of the earth. She knows that he is worth her love, but her heart is silent. She does not want to leave him; she does not want to cause him any grief; she accuses herself of being ungrateful to the man who loves her with all his heart. Her mind teaches her a lesson of obedience and duty, but the heart does not listen; it rebels, and recognizes no laws. Let us now suppose that she gets acquainted with a man whose nature is a duplicate of her own. She makes a comparison between her husband and her new acquaintance and feels that the latter has found a warmer place in her heart than the former; she feels that she loves him. This feeling givs her pleasure and pain. The thought of separation from her husband seems terrible to her. She earnestly wants to be happy with the man with whom she lived so long, and make him happy. She struggles against the impulses of her heart, but in vain; she cannot resist. What is she to do? Is not separation the best means to solve this problem? The persons concerned in this affair are her husband and herself. No one else has any right to interfere and tell them what to do. The only person who may suffer a little from the effects of separation is her husband. But if he is a man in the true sense of this word, he will gladly giv his consent. Surely he cannot liv with her and be happy, while she is unhappy. I ask, Is there anything bad in this separation? Does it affect the well-being of society?

It may be said that the happiness of children is effected by the separation of their parents. But what happiness may children expect to find in a family where love is absent? And if the conflict between the parents comes to such a degree that hatred takes the place of love, will it not make the children miserable?

We know that perfectly honest men change their opinions on various subjects. One may be a Republican and then a Democrat, and afterward a Socialist or a follower of Henry George. He may be a Catholic and then a Protestant, and finally become an Agnostic or a Positivist. Will any sensible person say that he is dishonest or immoral on account of it? Is there a rational being in the universe who insists that a man has no moral right to change his political creed or religious views? If one was a Republican in his youth, is he bound to support the Republican party all his life? If he becomes satisfied that the Republican party will not lead the people to the promised land of material prosperity, is it still his duty to vote the Republican ticket? If he is a protectionist and after a careful study becomes convinced that free trade is just in principle and profitable in practice, must he still rally for protection? In other words, must a man act in accordance with his honest convictions, or is it his duty to be a hypocrit? Does he lose the respect of society by being honest?

Suppose that one is a sincere Catholic. He examins the claims of the Catholic church and comes to the conclusion that they are without foundation. What should he do? Must he still declare that the Catholic church is the only true church and the pope is the real representativ of Jesus Christ? Will any intelligent person denounce him as immoral, if he becomes a Protestant? Now let us suppose that even Protestantism does not satisfy his mind. He reads the scriptures carefully, and his mind tells him that they are not the works of God. He abandons Protestantism and becomes an Agnostic. Any crime, any immorality, in this? Certainly not. He was honest when he was a Republican, and so he remained when his political opinions were changed. He was sincere while being a Catholic, and when he became an Agnostic his sincerity did not part with him. On the other hand we know that many good, honest men preserve the religious, social, and political opinions which they hav formulated in their youth till their last day. But is there any virtue in it? Do they deserve more respect than those whose opinions went through several stages of development?

Now let me ask, cannot the same be truthfully said with regard to our relations to the opposit sex? Cannot a man be as honest, noble, and faithful when he loves Agnes as when he loved Eva? Cannot a woman love John with the same purity with which she once loved George? Does her purity diminish because she finds out that John's nature is in greater harmony with hers than George's nature is? Does she retain self-respect only by losing her individuality? Why should she sacrifice her happiness for the benefit of no one? Surely, no civilized man wants to keep a woman unless she truly loves him; no honest man wants to accept love in the way of charity, and no truly humane man desires that the woman he loves should suffer the least pain for his sake.

The question whether divorce is right or wrong is a question of civilization. The real question is, whether men and women ought to hav freedom or be bound in chains of slavery. There can be only one answer. I stand for liberty, and in resuming this subject let me quote the words of Colonel Ingersoll: "When the world is civilized, no wife will become a mother against her will. Man will then know that to enslave another is to imprison himself."

CLEMENS P. BERYLSON.

Purdy's Station, N. Y., Nov. 3, 289.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
E. B. FOOTE, Jr., Vice-President, 120 Lexington ave., New York city.
T. B. WAKEMAN, Vice-President, 92 Nassau street, New York city.
J. E. REMSBURG, Vice-President, ... Oak Mills, Kan.
JULIET H. SEVERANCE, Vice President, . . . Milwaukee, Wis.
IDA C. CRADDOCK, Secretary, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
F. C. MENDE, Treasurer, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, Ida C. Craddock, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
TREASURER, F. C. Mende, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Subscriptions Received

FOR THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION FROM SEPT. 1 TO OCT. 31, 1889 BY R. B. WESTBROOK.

M. Reiman, New York	$ 5 00
Robert Stein, Washington, D C	1 00
John A. Smith, Hudson N. Y	50 00
Alexander Cochran, Franklin, Pa	15 00
John Engstrom, Aspen, Col	5 00
John K. McIntyre, Greensburgh, Pa	5 00
Herman Bohda, Martinsburg, W Va	1 00
Louis Wolfes, Martinsburg, W. Va	1 00
Joseph Stahl, Stanton, Neb	3 00
C. M. Buck, East Milton, Mass	1 00
Leonard Geiger, Hudson, N. Y	50 00
Wm. H. Tyree, Lexington, Ky	5 00
George E. Andrews, Pleasant Prairie, Wis	5 00
Mrs. Elizabeth Kredel, Pine Grove, Pa	5 00
I. F. Wernty, Pine Grove, Pa	5 00
W. J. Haldeman, Pine Grove, Pa	5 00
F. C. Mende, Philadelphia, Pa	5 00
Richard Mueller, Denver, Col	5 00
John Turner, Philadelphia, Pa	20 00
Mrs. L. P. Langley, Santa Barbara, Cal	5 00
C. Putnam, Gibbon's Roller Mills, Gibbon, Neb	1 00
John Maxfield, Boonton, N. J	1 00
L. R. Titus, San Jose, Cal	2 00
Samos Parsons, San Jose, Cal	10 00
N. F Griswold, Meriden, Conn	25 00
G. G. Beck, Rockport, Mo	1 00
W. A. Fisher, Fresno, Cal	5 00
Joseph Sedgebeer, Painesville, O	5 00
R. H. Scott, Scott's Mills, Ore	5 00
Thomas Scott, Scott's Mills, Ore	2 00
Pittsburgh Secular Union, by Harry Hoover	25 00
Miss Cuttsall	5 00
German Secular Society, Philadelphia, Pa	5 00
Cleveland Secular Union, by F. S. Dean	10 00
M. Risk, Maynard, Ia	5 00
E. Frost, Maynard, Ia	5 00
Carl Newman, Locust Dale, Pa	10 00
Joseph Sedgebeer, Painesville, O	5 00
Mrs. E J. Harker, Philadelphia, Pa	1 00
Zenas Kent, Ithaca, N. Y	1 00
James S. Stevens, M.D , Philadelphia, Pa	1 00
Collections at Anniversary	51 32
Total	$378 32

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE PRIZE MANUAL.

R. B. Westbrook, Philadelphia, Pa	$100 00
George E. Swan, Beaver Dam, Wis	100 00
Joseph Sedgebeer. Painesville, O	100 00
W. H. Forwood, U. S. A	100 00
W. H. Pepper, Petaluma, Cal	100 00
Almond Owen, Milwaukee, Wis	100 00
N. F. Griswold, Meriden, Conn	100 00
Leonard Geiger, Hudson, N. Y	100 00
Leonard Geiger, Hudson, N. Y	50 00
F C. Mende, Philadelphia, Pa	25 00
George Stephens, Moline, Ill	25 00
O Childs, Moline, Ill	25 00
R Butterfield, Sacramento, Cal	25 00
W. D. Fisher, Attleboro Falls, Mass	25 00
William Smith Geneva, N. Y	25 00
Burgess Monroe, St Paul, Minn	25 00
E B Foote, New York	25 00
John D. Powers, Woodstock, Vt	25 00
Photius Fisk, Boston, Mass	20 00
C. W. Sanders, Portland, Ore	5 00
Total	$1,100 00

If any omissions hav been made we should be very happy to be informed. R. B. WESTBROOK,
Pres. American Secular Union.
Philadelphia, Pa, Nov. 8, 1889.

Mrs. Severance's Vigorously-Stated Views.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Being unable to attend the Secular Union Congress, as was my expectation, I watched anxiously for the outcome, and am pained to see one more retrogressiv move ment; one more bending of the knee to popular opinion theologically.

At Cassadaga the grievous mistake was made of renouncing its allegiance to the principles of mental liberty by st fling its voice that had been raised against church invasion of the rights of the people to the safe, sure transit of the matter deposited in the mails. It did this with the hope of winning to its support those who had deserted the ranks, be cause, forsooth, the church and Mother Grundy might call them names if they demanded the repeal of the iniquitous Comstock laws. How many did this bid bring back? Not one that I know of. Now, what has been done? and for what purpose? The Nine Demands, that hav always been considered conservativ enough so that all Secularists could unite on them, hav been changed, and a resolution, declaring we are not "disbelievers," adopted, for the alleged purpose of uniting Christians with us in the work of Secularization. The Union always was ready to receive any person who could subscribe to the Nine Demands.

How many Christians will join the Union? Not as many, I will venture to say, as there will be Liberals driven out of it by their distaste for the religious hash dished out to them by the clergy who will, of course, be invited to lead in the meetings.

Look at the change in the third demand. What difference does it make to the individual whether his liberty is abridged on Sunday because of a decree of the church, or by any other power, or for any other reason?

If my right to do as I please a seventh part of the time is to be denied me, what do I care what the pretense may be upon which such denial is based? Whether it be religious or "physiological," my right is invaded, and if I possess a spirit of independence I will resist such invasion.

Just imagin a meeting of such a union as proposed. Christians and Infidels all agreed upon no union of church and state. A Christian gets up and tells the convention what God designs his children to do; hat God governs and controls the universe, etc. They are sure to do it. Will, or ought, those that believe all the despotism and superstition of the world is based upon the God idea, keep silent and "take their medicin" like little men?

But I am reminded the union is neither religious nor irreligious. Can two classes unite in any society when one believes all knowledge and authority is from God and all should be subj ction thereto, and the other disclaims all evidence of any such being, and declares reason is the highest authority in the universe, and should be the sole arbiter of human destiny? Can harmony exist in any possible way except by the utter and complete subjugation of one or the other? Can an amalgam be made between those who believe in authority and those who believe in liberty and logic? I think not. I can listen with patience to any views, no matter how absurd they may appear to me, if I am allowed a chance "to talk back." I believe in free discussion. But what would hav been the feelings of Dr. McGlynn and the Rev. Mr. Savage had some one got up and asked them to furnish evidence that such a person or power as they had been talking about existed? They would hav felt insulted, of course, and I should hav felt insulted to hav been obliged to sit in silence and hear from our platform doctrins I, for years, hav been laboring, as best I could, to educate out of people, and to hear this with no word of protest from anyone being in order.

Why do we want a separation of church and state? To rid us of being compelled to observe rites and ceremonies we do not believe in, or pay others for doing so. Could Christians unite with us for Secularization, which they will not do, and when in our meetings leave out all religious ideas (which would leave them bankrupt in the community) we might get along to work in a society together. But they will not—cannot—do it, and I for one do not propose to be stuffed with the effete orthodox pabulum they would dish out, even if it has a little of the savor of "separation of church and state" mixed in to make unsophisticated Liberals swallow it.

The Union, if it survives, will soon become, as has the once Infidel woman suffrage movement, a Christian affair—be opened with prayer and closed with the Doxology. Why not? If we should any of us object it might drive our orthodox friends, we hav sacrificed so much to gain, away—"hurt the cause." I am sick unto death of all this truckling to the ruling powers, whether of church or society. I had rather trust to the beneficent results of a dozen honest, earnest, intelligent persons who would "stand by the truth though the heavens fall," than all the truckling namby pamby Liberal orthodox or orthodox Liberals that could be massed together by any possible means. JULIET H SEVERANCE, M.D.
Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 4 1889.

The Prize Book.

I feel such a deep interest in the success of the proposed Manual of Natural Morality, that I should like to offer a suggestion to those who expect to compete for the prize. As a student of mental science for many years, I hav had abundant opportunities to test the truth and value of phrenology as a scientific basis for a complete system of moral philosophy; and I hope that all of our friends will examin this subject before submitting their manuscripts to the committee.

As to the substantial correctness of the Gallian doctrin of the mental constitution, I will simply say that the facts upon which it rests are as solid as the rock of Gibraltar. The church has been the greatest enemy of this science, and Freethinkers who oppose it commit a serious mistake; for when rightly interpreted, it may be made a powerful weapon in our war for liberty, and especially in our constructiv work. It demonstrates this great truth: that in the highest type of the human brain—that is, the form which may properly be considered the standard—the seats of the moral faculties are supreme in position and influence. Thus we hav here an unanswerable argument to prove that morality is simply obedience to a law of our nature, and of course independent of the supernatural.

Unfortunately, most people hav the impression that phrenology is simply a method of reading character by measuring hills and hollows upon the skull; and, excepting the influence of superstition, this absurd "bumpological" idea has done more than anything else to retard the progress of the science. We do not estimate the development of the brain centers by the size of the cranial protuberances, but by the expansion of the head from the ears, or by diameters, taking into account the temperament, condition of the cranial integuments, etc.

In reading the character of individuals, phrenology is an estimativ science, much like the practice of medicin, and the accuracy of the phrenologist in this respect will be determined by his natural aptitude and acquired skill. And as in the case of the physician or surgeon, mistakes are liable to occur in judging the form of the brain. But it is not only in the sense of an art that the discovery of Gall is of great value. By determining the number and nature of the elementary mental faculties, phrenology gives us a model of human nature more specific, definit, scientific, and complete than the character of Christ, or any other standard to which we can refer. And it is in this sense that I wish especially to recommend it here.

Hitherto, our systems of philosophy, religions, ethical codes, social institutions, in a word our civilizations, hav been founded simply upon the fragments of human nature which from time to time hav protruded from the characters of angular individuals such as Moses, Jesus, Mohammed, Luther, and others. These great teachers all became popular because they represented or defended some angle or angles, some part or fragment of philosophy with which a portion of the people, equally and similarly angular, could sympathize.

The great work before us to-day is to establish a civilization, not upon some one isolated factor in human thought and hope; not upon some single whim or caprice of an individual; not upon the narrow philosophy of the Jehovah who instituted slavery, or the Nazarene who, ignoring the influence of his (?) law of heredity, temperaments, and special brain development, commanded the whole world to think one thought, and to believe one creed; not upon the vagaries of any one-sided enthusiast, whether in Palestine, Italy, or Utah; but upon the needs of the whole nature of man.

We do not guess at the constitution of the body, for we hav a science of physiology. And we should no longer theorize and dream about the faculties of the mind; for in phrenology we hav a system of mental science which, though not a key to the mystery of the absolute, will help us greatly in developing a true, rational, and practical philosophy of life.
Cincinnati, O. Oct. 18 1889. EDGAR C. BEALL.

Concerning the Early Gospels.

The author of "Supernatural Religion" proves that there is no distinct trace of the existence of any one of the three synoptic gospels prior to the recognition of the "four gospels" by Irenæus about the year 190. But he finds that Theophilus of Antioch, about A D. 180, quotes the first verse of the fourth gospel.

The third volume of "Supernatural Religion" was issued after five editions of the first two had been published; and in the "Preface to the Sixth London Edition" the author says:

> The second point to which I desire to refer is a statement which has frequently been made that, in the second and third parts, I endeavor to prove that the four canonical gospels were not written until the end of the second century. . . . It is difficult to understand how anyone who had taken the slightest trouble to ascertain the nature of the argument, and to state it fairly, could hav fallen into it. The fact is that no attempt is made to prove anything with regard to the gospels. The evidence for them is merely examined, and it is found that, so far from their affording sufficient testimony to warrant belief in the actual occurrence of miracles declared to be antecedently incredible, there is not a certain trace even of the existence of the gospels for a century and a half after those miracles are alleged to hav occurred. . . .
>
> It has been argued that, even if there be no evidence for our special gospels, I admit that gospels very similar must early hav been in existence, and that these equally represent the same prevailing belief as the canonical gospels, consequently that I merely change, without shaking, the witnesses. Those who advance this argument, however, totally overlook the fact that it is not the reality of the superstitious belief which is in question, but the reality of the miracles and the sufficiency of the witnesses to establish them.

Not only does the author disclaim any attempt to show that there were no gospels prior to the year 180, but the very first verse of the third gospel is prima facie proof that there were many.

And yet we continue to read dogmatic assertions like the following in THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 2 1:

> Neither the crucified Jesus nor our gospels had been then (A D. 140-160) imagined. Marcion knew nothing of them.

Admitting that the earliest distinct quotations from the four canonical gospels are by the trio of contemporary fathers, Irenæus of Lyons, Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian of Carthage, in the latter part of the second century and beginning of the third, it is nevertheless conceded that frequent quotations were made by the earlier fathers from gospels very similar to the present four.

But now, in the light of Father Hardouin's assertion and partial proof that the writings of all these fathers are modern forgeries, the question arises, What do we know about Christianity in the first four or five centuries?

The earliest "Ecclesiastical History," purporting to be written in Greek by Eusebius about A D 324 is believed by recent critics to be a later fabrication. If so, we hav little doubt that it was forged after the revival of learning. On this subject we may prepare a brief article for THE TRUTH SEEKER. ANTICHRIST.

Our London Letter.

The illness with which Charles Bradlaugh has been attacked has been indeed a severe one, but he has, thanks to a good constitution and careful nursing, at last turned the corner, and unless anything unforeseen happens, will pull through all right. He has worked far too hard for a long time past—no man harder—and will hav to study himself more than he has hitherto done. His death would hav been felt as severe loss to others than the Freethought party and his parliamentary constituents would hav found it very difficult, if not impossible, to get such another member. But it is to be hoped he will be spared many more years to carry on the work he has so much at heart.

The National Secular Society organization, of which G. W. Foote is chairman, is actively engaged in stirring up the party, which appears to hav been somewhat drowsy of late. Effete branches are to be renovated, or if they are past that operation, will be dissolved; fresh life will be put into the concern, so that we may expect soon to see a well organized army of militant Freethinkers. The British Secular Society is in the same inert state as ever apparently, and only exists in name, so that the National Secular Society has no rivalry to encounter. Perhaps there is no one better qualified than Mr. Foote to carry out the work he has taken in hand.

I regret to hear the Radical has been allowed to drop, but I expect Geo. Standring has his hands too full to be able to devote the attention he considers necessary to giv to a paper. He is ably seconding G. W. Foote and is also otherwise engaged in literary work. I see he has commenced a series of articles in the National Reformer entitled, "An Atheist at Church." His first article describes a visit to a Roman Catholic chapel, one which I attended pretty frequently some years ago, so I can guarantee the correctness of his description. I can well call to mind, while reading his account, the impression made upon myself, and I can quite understand why a Catholic would never be likely to be induced to attend a Protestant church in preference to his own. If he should perchance find out the fallacy of Christianity, he must become an Atheist.

Mrs. Besant's pamphlet, "Why I Became a Theosophist," is somewhat disappointing, as it does not appear to me to giv any clear and sufficient reason for becoming one. The chief point seems to be that there are other incarnations for all human beings, and therefore it will be as well to be as careful as possible as to one's acts in the present state of existence for fear of being born into a lower sphere next time. The impulses to act according to the generally accepted ideas of right are therefore simply induced and carried out through fear of punishment hereafter, which is the same principle that actuates the professing Christian, making hell and reincarnation practically convertible terms. Mr. Foote's rejoinder has in my estimation fully answered the arguments put forward in favor of Theosophy. Mrs. Besant's article on this doctrin is not written with the same force and conviction as her "Path to Atheism." It is claimed that Atheists can as well become members without altering their opinions as a member of any of the religious sects, but most Freethinkers fail to see how this can be, and would certainly require much more information on the subject before becoming converts. Madam Blavatsky certainly does not show a very good record, and her works are scarcely likely to be taken as text-books of faith.

The candor of the bishop of Petersborough must hav startled his hearers somewhat. At the diocesan conference at Leicester the other day, he is reported to hav affirmed that no state could exist for a week if it acted on the teachings of "the Sermon on the Mount," and that the principles of Christ, if applied to legislation, would lead to absolute intolerance. True enough, no doubt, but where is the man's honesty, if he still keeps his post and draws a large salary from public money while repudiating the doctrins he has engaged to teach? It is most likely that the vast majority of well-read clergymen think as he does, though they hav not the courage to state their opinions, but this only shows what an organized hypocrisy the whole system has become, and proves the necessity for speedy disestablishment. The vicar of Hoo St. Werbergh, near Rochester, has more honesty. He refused to administer the "holy communion" to a parishioner because she attended a Wesleyan chapel, and in consequence has been suspended from officiating for twelve months. If a man is to be punished for carrying out the dogmas of his church, it is a decided premium on hypocrisy; this is indeed an age of humbug. The parent who calls in an elder and uses prayer and the laying on of hands to cure a sick child, is found guilty of manslaughter if the child dies, and the parson who faithfully acts up to his ordination oaths is inhibited, while he who takes pay for preaching doctrins which he asserts to be false is speedily marked out for preferment.

The archbishop of Canterbury is of opinion that present social dangers are great, and it will perhaps be as well that wealth devotes some portion of itself to a religious solution of the problems, which, if left to themselvs, can be solved only in whatever might be the natural outcome of despair. He is evidently in fear that, unless he can get some one else to throw a sop to Cerberus, there is a risk that his palaces may be looted, and he may hav to disgorge some of his ill-gotten wealth. J. D.

Fatal Effect of the Papal Blessing.

Translated from the Spanish of El Combate, by E. A. Stevens.

Here are a few instances, in Europe and America, where the papal benediction has had anything but a salutary result, and, if thoroughly comprehended, might change the current of superstition, so that the pope's blessing may be considered more in the light of a curse.

It will be remembered that the pope gave his blessing to Maximilian, as emperor of Mexico, and in a short time thereafter he, the blessed one, was shot to death at Queretaro.

His empress Carlotta was received with great consideration in Rome, where she was granted his benediction by the pope in person, but before she left the Vatican she was hopelessly insane.

Isabella II. of Spain was showered with papal blessings, and inside a month after the most imposing ceremony she was dethroned.

The pope blessed Francis Joseph, emperor of Austria, and a few days afterward he, and "his blessed" army, were completely routed at the battle of Sadowa.

Napoleon III. received the papal blessing just in time to hav the Prussians gobble up his army, and take him a prisoner at Sedan. As a means of salvation the pope's blessing is immense.

For "a pious daughter of the church" none received more frequent blessings than the empress Eugenie, and it is claimed, with considerable force, that she, at the request of the Jesuits, fomented the war which left her without a throne and an exile in England.

An English steamer, the Santa Maria, having on board a cargo of Sisters of Charity, en route for Montevideo, which in 1870 was blessed by the holy father, burnt to the water's edge, and all on board perished, all on account of the pope's benediction.

The floating palace which sailed between Montevideo and Buenos Ayres, the steamer America, received the blessing of St. Peter's successor, and went down with all on board on Dec. 24 1871.

Upon the formal inauguration of the great house of the Jesuit order in Buenos Ayres, in 1875 the papal benediction was a leading card at the ceremony. but in less than a week thereafter it took fire, and the effect of the holy father's blessing was so remarkable that the more water was thrown on the burning building the more it blazed and the faster it was consumed. It was afterward discovered that the water which had been reserved for purposes of extinguishing fires was no more or less than petroleum.

Old Pio Nono blessed the empress of Brazil and it broke her leg four days afterward.

The pope blessed the princess of Brazil in her confinement before her delivery, and the child when born was deformed.

In 1870 the French army received the papal blessing, and in less than a year it was utterly routed by its hereditary enemy, the German legions. The French army at the present time puts little faith in holy boluses.

That poor devil, the offspring of an inglorious sire, Prince Napoleon, received the pope's blessing only to meet a horrible death by Zulus, who had no respect for "a holy son" of the church any more than for a "son of a gun."

The pope blessed the empress of Austria, who, of course, like Carlotta, became demented.

He blessed Prince Rudolf, and he, shortly after, committed suicide on the strength of it.

Don Alfonso, of Spain, received the papal blessing, but he died all the same.

Queen Mercedes received the unctuous benediction and it killed her in a few days.

The pope blessed the archbishops of Perá and Pernambuca, and in one month thereafter they were sentenced to prison with hard labor in Rio Janeiro.

He blessed the archbishop of Peru and he drank a deadly poison from the sacred chalice at the altar, so it is uncertain whether it was a case of murder or suicide.

Senor J. J. Terrazes, of Mexico, for his assistance to the papal propaganda, received the benediction, but now that individual is insulted by all the bishops in Mexico.

On the other hand, the pope excommunicated Victor Emanuel, who shortly thereafter formally occupied the city of Rome against the papal troops and declared the 'Eternal City" the capital of Italy.

To-day, Humbert, son of the excommunicated Victor, is king of Italy with a regal residence in Rome, and his sister is queen of Portugal. Humbert is an advanced Freethinker, and his prime minister, Senor Crispi, is one of the most radical of Europe's reformers. Humbert's substantial reforms for the welfare of Italy show that one king, at least, has proved a blessing. This son of an outcast from the church makes "the prisoner of the Vatican" toe the mark in temporal matters.

The pope excommunicated England and all her colonies, but England and the United States (the latter being nominally a secular government, which, according to the pope, is an Atheistic government) are the most powerful nations on the globe.

The pope blessed the Republic of Colombia, and it is the most unfortunate country on the face of the earth.

Ireland has ever been blessed by the pope, but it will never know peace as long as two Romanists remain and one of them is a priest.

The head of the holy Roman church and vicar of Christ excommunicated Garibaldi, and now he shines the most revered and illustrious of any soldier or statesman of modern Italy. This excommunicated hero was elected as a deputy to the first assembly, and now a grand monument is projected to the Italian liberator in the city of Rome. What a fortunate circumstance an excommunication may become, even in Italy!

The pope excommunicated all who favored the reform laws in Mexico, still those laws are in operation in spite of all the Romish opposition. Mexico is beginning to feel that a papal curse is preferable to a papal blessing.

IN England (1840) a distrust and contempt for reason prevails amongst religious circles to a wide extent; many Christians think it almost a matter of duty to decry the human faculties as poor, mean, and almost worthless; and thus seek to exalt piety at the expense of intelligence.—Morell's Hist. of Speculative Phil.

What the People Will and Won't.

From the Jewish Times and Observer.

There is a conflict of opinion in this country as to whether the Sunday sermon, or the Sunday newspaper, is the most conducive to the mental health of the public, and as to which in the end will illustrate the inexorable law of "the survival of the fittest." The sermon of the average dominie is, I am told, a rather dull attempt to induce a peaceful sleep on the part of the congregation, and for this reason I think the Sunday newspapers are more stimulating mentally. As to the survival features of the question, I think the sermon and the Sunday newspapers are here to stay, at least so long as in either case the thing is a paying speculation. The serious phase of the subject is that the preachers are attempting to suppress the Sunday paper on purely religious grounds, that is, that its publication is an enemy of the Christian Sabbath, because thousands find pleasure in reading the Sunday editions instead of going to church. The editors of the secular press think they hav as much right to deliver their papers on Sunday as the preachers hav to deliver their sermons. This is a matter of greater importance, to all classes, and all sects, than it seems on its face, for the reason that if the ministers should succeed in suppressing the Sunday newspapers, the suppression of other great public necessities would follow, as, for instance, the street cars, cable lines, ferry boats, etc. The public want no Puritan Sabbath, but they will hav their Sunday elixir—the Sunday newspaper.

The Idea of God Must Go.

From a Lecture by H. O. Pentecost.

I think it is not a good thing for people to believe in God. I think it is a bad thing for them to do so. I think the belief in God is one of the things that is helping very strongly to keep knaves in power and honest people in weakness; it is one of the things that is preventing the people from thinking for themselvs and helping themselvs. The human mind will never be perfectly free, and peasants and mechanics and day laborers will never be perfectly fairly treated in this world, until the church is utterly destroyed. I do not want to see the church reformed. I want to see her utterly destroyed, because as long as she exists the ruling classes in society will always hav in her a faithful ally to help them carry on their infernal schemes of pillage. I do not want people to hav a better idea of God or an idea of a better God. I want the idea of God entirely rooted out of the mind, because I know that as long as any idea of God remains in the mind, the priest and the politician will hav something to work upon, and this world will never be free and happy until the priest and the politician are gone.

One man will tell you that God is a Roman Catholic, another that he is a Presbyterian, another that he is a Baptist, and so on. One man will say that he is a Republican, another that he is a single taxer, another that he is a Socialist, and so on. What we must come to see is, that nothing is done in human society that is not done by men. Poverty must be destroyed, not because it is God's will that it should be, but because it is best for the human race that it should be. And general wealth must be achieved, not because it is God's will that it should be, but because it is best for the human race that it should be. Beware of those men who tell you what is or what is not the will of God. In every case you will find a person who is intellectually asleep, or half asleep, or mentally dishonest, or else you will find—and this is more likely—a priest or a politician, a person who wants to get you to not think about what he is teaching you. We hav been dragged through enough mire and blood and darkness doing things according to the will of God. It is now time we began to think things out for ourselvs.

Communications.

Respects to R. M. Robinson.

Thy name and purpose, Saxon.

A man may make a good anchor who cannot polish a needle. The man who takes the rough stone from the quarry may be as useful as the man who shapes the marble. That which is easy to one may be impossible to another. What is suited to one man's taste may be abhorrent to the taste of another.

> He even calls us different ways, on these bestows
> Some proper gift, another grants to those.

I do not claim that I hav a better brain than Friend Robinson, or that he is not a more effectual worker. I only claim that I cannot see things through his spectacles as he sees them. "I am not built that way." I can only write thoughts as they are manufactured in my brain.

It would be a wonderful brain indeed that could grind out thoughts to please everybody, and in imitation of everybody. It should not make one feel uneasy if many differ from him, especially if it is an honest and innocent difference. To mold every mind after our own pattern is an old Christian idea, and the inspiring motiv in all the persecutions.

Every man may fill some niche and be useful, but he is generally a failure if he gets into the wrong niche. For some purposes the ass may be as useful as the horse, but it is all folly to attempt to convert the one into the other. Whenever the experiment has been tried a mule has been the result. I never had a very high notion of hybrids all the way from saviors down.

In a moral as well as in a political revolution different men are fitted to play different parts. The bitter denunciations of Thomas Paine against the British government were just as necessary to arouse the colonists to a sense of their situation as the sword of Washington in achieving their independence.

The love and kindness, the gentleness and forbearance, which Friend Robinson talks so much about, are well enough when properly directed. They are nice things to hav lying around loose in a family or among one's friends, but it doesn't do to deal them out too lavishly on our enemies, as the supply might run short. "Love your enemies," said a preacher to a lawyer. "Love my enemies?" exclaimed the lawyer. "I love my friends, and I hate my enemies. Damn 'em. I am inclined to think that where there is a great deal of love professed for enemies there is an abundant store of hypocrisy. Love and gentleness to friends are about as far as they can be made to go without stretching. I do not like even my 'neighbor' as myself, and if I should say that I love my enemies I should be guilty of falsehood."

I do not mean to giv to any just cause to be my enemies, and I cannot see how I am bound to show kindness and gentleness to those who sustain that relation to me. I do not believe that kindness and gentleness toward enemies can always be made a success. I am sure it was sufficiently tried by the colonists, and the mother country would hav been well pleased if other and more potent measures had not been adopted. Combativness and destructivness are still necessary to our well-being. The time may come when they need not be called into exercise, but I fear it is far in the future. There are times when all the latent fire in one's disposition is aroused; when all the energies of mind and body are bent to a single purpose; when the most tender natures are wrought up to such a pitch that they seem like a consuming fire, and one would be led to think that there was nothing but combativness and destructivness in their natures. So my feelings hav been wrought up in reading about the burnings and tortures and murders of the church.

To think of houses being set on fire and fleeing women with their children thrown back into the flames still tingles to the ends of my fingers. The man who talks about "gentleness and kindly reason" for such human tigers, ought to be shot for treason to his kind.

It may be that I hav studied the history of the Christian religion more closely than many others, and this no doubt sometimes prompts me to use language not warranted by discussion. For there is no crime in the calendar that the bloody old church has not been guilty of.

I tell you, Friend Robinson, these good Christians that you are so very tender of hav destroyed libraries—they hav altered or destroyed valuable books which would shed great light on the world if we had them to day.

They hav abolished schools of learning; they hav been the enemies of science; they shrouded all Europe in mental darkness for more than a thousand years.

They hav sent out into the world hundreds of commissioned robbers and murderers to plunder and enslave the people. Some of the most populous countries hav been reduced to a desolation by these Christian marauders. Cortez, Pizarro, Albuquerque, and many others were simply Christian robbers and plunderers. They were attended by their priests, and were sent out under sanction of the church, and had regard for neither age, sex, or condition.

Every man who had a hand in hanging a woman as a witch was a Christian murderer. Every man who laid a lash on the shoulders of a woman in colonial times on account of her belief was a Christian beast. Every man who had a hand in punishing man or woman for not attending church, or for a violation of the Sabbath, was a Christian tyrant.

Yes, Friend Robinson, these Christians whose "feelings" and "prejudices" you so much regard, who were never right by system and rarely right by chance, hav torn out the tongues, burnt or bored out the eyes, disemboweled, roasted, racked, imprisoned, starved, stoned, whipped, and otherwise tortured countless thousands of human beings, when there were none to pity or to defend.

I hav anything but soft words for the Christian fiends who burnt the house and library, the apparatus and valuable papers, of Dr. Priestly. And what is worse, they intended that he should perish in the flames. Is it any wonder that such outrages on humanity should put "fire" in a man's "eye," if he has a place in the scale of being above that of a mollusk?

If calling things sharply by their right names, and using strong language against such barbaric practices, is a mark of "brutality," then I am willing to be classed with the four-footed beasts of the field. If denouncing a system so utterly at war with human interests and so terrible in its consequences, shows a lack of "civilization," banish me from civilized society.

Now I want to show you, Friend Robinson, that there are some who hav gone before, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose, who showed the same "coarseness" and lack of "civilization" which you complain of in me, and from whom perhaps I received a part of the "fire" which you hav seen in my "eye."

All of my age and older will remember the burning, blistering words of William Lloyd Garrison, Samuel R. Ward, Frederick Douglass, and many others, in old antislavery times. Man-stealers, woman-whippers, baby-thieves, were names frequently applied to slaveholders. Garrison, in alluding to the American flag, said, "Its blood red stripes are emblematical of our slave-driving cruelty." He told the slaveowners that they were "thieves and robbers—robbing the cradles and selling their own uncles, aunts, nephews, nieces, yea, their own children, into bondage."

At first these truths made the people mad, and they offered a bounty for his head. Ultimately the truth found lodgment in the hearts of the people, as truth always will. Humanity triumphed, and Garrison lived to see the last slave emancipated.

It took these terrible denunciations and this "fire in the eye" to wake up the people to the abominations of slavery. Nobody believes to-day that these men were "coarse" or "brutal," or that they lacked "civilization."

On the contrary, it was their tender natures and their innate love of justice which made the awful wrongs of slavery rise up like mountains before them, and caused them to pour out their torrents of invectiv against the authors and abettors of these tremendous wrongs.

Because a man shows "fire in the eye" when his rights are invaded, or when humanity is trampled in the dust, it does not do to say that he is "brutal," or that he lacks civilization. In such cases, talk about "gentleness and kindly reason" is suicidal nonsense. Your plan would work on a slimy, designing old Jesuit just about as fresh eggs would work in breaking up a nest of young skunks.

The way to do away with these pious pests is "to up and at 'em," and giv them no quarter. Let them understand at once and for all time that their profession is an imposition—like a disease, something to be got rid of. Kindness to a public enemy is wicked; to giv them aid and comfort is treason.

Say, Friend Robinson, when you were talking about "gentleness and kindly reason." didn't you get in a little too much "sweetenin'?" You ought to be more guarded in your expressions, because if you should hav a pair of wings sprout out on your shoulders, you might be bothered to get your shirt on.

It may be that I hav too much mettle and not quite enough putty in my composition, but I would rather hav too much mettle than too much putty. I do not think that there is much real good stuff in me to make angels of, but I do not believe that I am the hangman that you take me to be. If I had a "halter around every Christian neck," the first thing I would do would be to take it off again. The army of priests and ministers costs this country untold millions of money; and they know that I know that they do no good. Yet, if I had the power, I would not silence one of them by force, much less would I "strangle" them.

You may hav heard of a man who once said, "The world is my country, to do good my religion." During the French Revolution the people clamored for the king's head. He said: "Save the king, but behead the system."

Though Garrison and his compeers had "blood in their eyes," as most earnest men do, and although the slaveholders had offered a bounty for Garrison's head, yet it is doubtful if any slaveholder would hav been "strangled" if they had had a halter around every slaveholder's neck.

I would "strangle" the system which has enslaved the people and held them down in ignorance so long, but I am not much on the "strangle" when Christians or anybody else are in the play.

I might "strangle" a few ministers and priests who are entirely too good to liv in this world, and who are anxious to take the "rope route" to the New Jerusalem, or, in other words, who pine to be jerked to Jesus, and are in too big a hurry to take the old route across the river Jordan.

Though I would be kind and gentle to most animals, I would wage a war of extermination upon those which endanger human happiness, health, or life. And I would apply the same rule to priestcraft, kingcraft, and every system which is detrimental to human well-being.

> Though space and law the stag we lend
> 'Ere hound we slip or bow we bend,
> Who ever recked where, how, or when
> The prowling fox was trapped or slain?

I hav no soft words for designing priests and no excuse for the system they promulgate, but I suppose Friend Robinson can be as "gentle" and "considerate" of their "feelings and prejudices" as he pleases. It has been said that if a man make a sheep of himself the wolves will devour him. Now, Friend Robinson, if you don't get gobbled up, you will probably slip through the world as slick as an eel through soft mud.

I am naturally a high kicker, and when anything comes in the way of human progress it is liable to get lifted out of the way on the toe of my No. 10 boot. And it is not a mark of brutality, either. Neither is it an indication of "civilization" to stand admiring the beautiful colors of the anaconda until we are crushed in its folds. There is every indication that in a few years the very life will be crushed out of our free institutions by the anaconda of Romanism. I do not propose to warm into life a serpent which will one day sting me to death.

Where is the sense in talking about "gentleness and kindly reason," when Blair, Wanamaker, and Comstock stand with raised lash over the backs of the people, and Talmage and Sam Jones and the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and hundreds of other go-betweens and cajolers are counseling the people to submit with "kindness and gentleness," above all to avoid "harsh names" and bow down under the yoke submissivly? The times are sadly out of joint when men counsel gentle means when a tiger is ready to spring upon them.

Away with all such nonsense. Giv me the jolts and jars and rough and tumble of life, even the white foam of the tornado of revolution, rather than the stagnant waters of the dead sea of quiet submission. Let me be out in front, on the cow-catcher of the car of progress, breathing the pure air of freedom, rather than be a bound slave in the cushioned palace car.

I do not propose to exchange "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" with a common enemy. My plan is to deal out such sturdy Saxon blows as will paralyze him and leave him stone blind with the last tooth down his throat. If an enemy is to be killed and not scotched, it is an act of kindness to dispatch him in the quickest way possible.

I hav no doubt, when I represented God leaning back in his big chair and smoking his old meerschaum, that men so "gentle" and "considerate" as Friend Robinson were greatly shocked. But I did not make him as ridiculous as the Bible makes him. If anyone can conceive anything more ridiculous than a God putting his "back parts" on exhibition, he has a more fertil imagination than I hav been blessed with. No doubt he had a right to exhibit his most presentable parts. But it is likely that, like old Noah, he had taken "one" too much.

If a man march up and down the streets in calico pants and a coat of many colors, and with a feather in his cap, singing "Jack and Jill went up the hill," am I bound to treat him with gravity and even awe?

Nobody would take me to task for ridiculing the old bull-god of Egypt. And yet everyone who has studied the subject knows that the Bible God is not entitled to more respectful consideration. The whole Christian scheme is too ridiculous to merit anything but a horse-laugh.

Coming down from the ancient Cushites, through Babylonia, Phœnicia, Greece, and Rome, how many gods and systems of religion hav swayed the minds of men and then died out, to say nothing of the thousand and one systems with their good and bad gods or spirits now in vogue!

The sun, planets, and nearly every beast and reptil, hav been worshiped. So, too, hundreds of men hav had divine honors paid to them. We know to-day that all of these gods were myths. We know that all of these systems of religion were founded in superstition, and not in truth or reason.

In spite of these lessons, the Christian is sure that his religion is the genuin. Of all the bibles which hav ever been written, the Christian knows that he has the only one which God has ever written. Of all the saviors and go-betweens which hav had divine honors paid to them, the carpenter's son is the only one that can take the foul spots out of a Christian's garments and make it a success.

As all the old systems of religion hav passed away, so must every system of supernatural religion perish. There is nothing above or beyond nature. Nature is the giv all, the do all, and the mother of all, and the "all in all." And to this complexion sooner or later all must come.

The truth is, we were all rocked in the cradle of superstition, and in spite of ourselvs the old slime sticks to us yet and shapes our minds and warps our judgments. As we are lifted out of the mire of superstition, the old religious notions will appear more and more ridiculous to our minds. The reason why anyone is shocked when the Bible God is ridiculed is because he or she is still influenced by the old myths.

I hav no way of judging Friend Robinson only by his letter. He intimates that I am low in the scale of "civilization." He makes the "brutality" burst out of me like the rottenness from a pear. I am a quack and a butcher, with "blood in my eye." I hav a "brutal nature" and resort to "brutal measures," making use of "ridicule" and calling "harsh names." Moreover, I am a general hangman, and "rave" because I cannot get "every Christian's neck in a halter," so that I might "strangle" them all at one time. According to his showing I hav not risen above an "eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" way of treating my opponents. If these terms do not apply to me, then I cannot see to whom they can be made to apply. Are not these terms quite as "harsh" as any which I hav applied to my "opponents?"

His "gentleness and kindly reason" are not conspicuous when dealing with those who oppose Christians and the Christian religion. By the epithets which he has applied to me has he shown "gentleness and kindly reason and considerateness of my feelings and prejudices?"

Oh, no. It is only when he deals with the church and Christians and their religion that his "gentleness and kindly reason" are made apparent.

If my way is the wrong way and Friend Robinson has the right way, let him send out his apostles of "gentleness" and convert the world. It will afford me infinit pleasure to hear of his success.

I hav the satisfaction of knowing that I am doing a little good, if one-half the reports are true. From different parts of the country I am informed that copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER containing my articles are circulated in different neighborhoods until they are entirely worn out. That they are talked about and discussed for a long time after the articles appear.

The truth is, I hav been on the "war-path," and the Christian religion got a poke in the "wame." And Friend Robinson drools and blubbers over it like a child cutting teeth.

There is a paragraph in Friend Robinson's letter to which I wish to call particular attention. It is in effect that the statement "that man has become civilized in spite of Christianity is misleading, not to say untrue."

Here is the key to the whole matter. And it shows plainly enough that his most precious jewels and most costly robes are still in the keeping of the church, while he has flung his old cast-off rags to the Liberals.

Now, Friend Robinson, in all seriousness I would like to ask you if you believe that God ever wrote a book? Do you believe that God, like all the rest of the gods. is anything more than a creation of the brain? Do you believe that he ever begat a son? that the son was as old as the father? Do you believe that a ghost or spirit could be the father of blood, flesh, and bones? Do you believe that a man ever stopped the planets or caused them to vary in their courses the hundredth part of a second? That a giant ever lost his strength by having his hair cut? That solid walls of masonry were ever blown down with rams' horns? That all the waters of a great country like Egypt were ever turned to blood? That a man was ever enveloped in the gastric juice of a big fish's stomach for three days and three nights, and came out in a good state of preservation? That a man ever lived who could foretell future events? That a woman ever turned to a pillar of salt? That God ever put his "back parts" on exhibition? That human beings ever went through a superheated furnace without being scorched? That God ever brought a child into existence only to consign it to everlasting torments? That the gift of speech was ever bestowed upon a snake or an ass? That one man can justly suffer for the crimes of another? That a vast multitude can be fed and hav more provisions left after the feast than before it commenced? That God ever commanded children to be murdered? and mothers to be ripped up alive? In short, do you believe that God ever wrote a book containing barbaric nonsense?

Then why take me to task for exposing in the severest terms a system that enchains the mind of man and makes him a slave to such superstition and folly? Why blame me for holding up to scorn and contempt a class of men who liv by teaching absurdities so glaring and ridiculous? Why attempt to bring down upon my back the lash of public censure because I do not treat this holy balderdash with gravity and "kindly reason?"

Can anyone doubt that I am earnestly striving to do away with this superstition, and to turn the minds of men from an imaginary heaven ruled by a tyrannical and imaginary God, to the interests of mankind, where their efforts may be crowned with some measure of success?

I do not ask Friend Robinson to work in my way, or with my tools. If he thinks a soothing poultice will bring lunatics to their normal condition, and turn idiots into sensible men, and convert designing knaves to honest men, let him apply it. Let him put one on every priest and bishop and archbishop and cardinal, and the biggest kind of a poultice on the old pope, and if it proves a success, I'll go into the poultice business.

But I am inclined to think that he will find out that the most that Christians, the clergy in particular, ask is just such soothing poultices, and "gentleness and kindly reason and considerateness of their feelings and prejudices."

The "War Path" put the church and the clergy in the same predicament that the Dutchman was in when arraigned before the court for knocking a man down.

"Did you strike him?"

"Yes, I dit."

"Why did you strike him?"

"Vell den, he calt me von tam rascal—he calt me von tam liar—he calt me von tam tief—he calt me everytings shust vot I be."

And that's what hurt Friend Robinson.

It is time to bring the exercises to a close. Arise, Friend Robinson, and receive the benediction.

Now may the love and grace of the Holy Whangdoodle be and abide with us now and evermore. Amen.

JOHN PECK.

Eminent Women.

HARRIET MARTINEAU—CONCLUDED.

There is so much to say about this noble woman, that the question is what to select so as not to be too lengthy.

The Chicago Journal said of her: "Probably no living English writer has been more activ or more efficient in molding British opinion, and certainly none has been more beneficent in lifelong influence. England would be less humane and enlightened than she is to-day, if the brave and wise heart of Harriet Martineau had not for nearly fifty years helped to push forward the great cause of popular progress."

In one of her letters to Atkinson, she shows the highest and best rule of action. She says, "Oh, what an insult it is to our best moral faculties, to hold over us the promises and threats of heaven and hell, as if there was nothing in us higher than selfish hope and fear."

The world is only just beginning to fully appreciate her best work for humanity, and work she did while waiting for death.

There were two acts of Parliament—one passed in 1866, the other in 1869—called the Contagious Diseases acts. These acts were in force in some of the garrison towns and some of the large districts around them. Unlike all other laws for the repression of contagious diseases, to which both men and women are liable, these two apply to women only, men being wholly exempt from their penalties. This law is ostensibly formed for a certain class of women, but in order to reach these, all the women residing in the districts where it is in force, are brought under the provisions of these acts.

Any woman can be brought into court and required to prove that she is not a common prostitute.

The magistrate can condemn her, if a policeman swears, only, that he has good cause to believe her to be one. The accused has to rebut, not positiv evidence, but the state of mind of her accuser.

Now in all reforms there must be some noble, farseeing, self-sacrificing individuals, who will throw themselvs into the work, and become pioneers if not martyrs to the cause.

These devoted workers open and blaze away, for the public press and other powerful agencies to take up the cause and push it onward without much danger or loss of prestige to themselvs.

In this great war for moral purity, Harriet Martineau was one of the first, as well as the most activ, in her efforts and her labors.

In writing to Mrs. Chapman she says: "Day by day information reaches me which satisfies me that this question of national purity plunges us into the most fearful moral crisis the country was ever in, involving our primary personal liberties, and the very existence, except in name, of the home and family. It struck me (and I was so cowardly as to almost wish it had not) that some letters in the Daily News, explaining the state of the case, and the grounds of the protest of the women of England, against the acts, would do more to rouse the country to inquire and act, than any amount of agitation by individuals. It was sickening to think of such work; but who should do it if not an old woman, dying, and in seclusion? I felt that I should hav no more peace of mind, if I did not obey the inward witness; so I did it last week—wrote four letters signed the English Woman, and sent them to Mr. Walker, who still manages the editing of the Daily News, till the proprietors decide how to fill the office for which alone he seems fit. He was ill in bed when the packet arrived, and his wife read the letters to him. He says, 'At first she was horrified, but she ended by demanding the instant publication of every word of them' [here we see a woman's brain and a woman's will no doubt carried the day as to the printing of these valuable letters]

"One of the proprietors was dead against the insertion of any part of them; but Mr. Walker writes, that he approves them so strongly that he cannot but print them, but he doubts being able to support them by any leader. Still, I shall not be surprised if he manages it when the opposing proprietor has seen the letters themselvs. I could not hav undertaken in my sick condition to write them, and though done under impulse, they cost a dreadful effort. Happily I thought of Godiva, and that helped me through. . . . . I knew it was the right thing to do, and that it is the fault of the other side, if modesty in others and myself is outraged, yet it turns me chill in the night, to think what things I hav written, and put in print."

In 1871 she wrote thus rejoicingly of the work: "The conspiracy of silence is broken up and the London papers hav burst out. Our main point now is to secure every variety of judgment, inside and outside of the commission. The Daily News came out clearly and strongly on the right side, before any other London paper broke the silence. The satisfaction to us all is immense to see the paper uphold its high character—the very highest—in this hour of crisis. I feel unusually ill in consequence of heart failure, but I must make you know something of what you shall know more of hereafter. . . . Samuel J. May! How well I remember that snowy day he came over to Hingham to open the cause to me."

Again in 1871 she writes: "I must tell you—though so feeble to-day—that our cause is, for this time, safe. The packed commission, supplied with packed evidence, came out thirteen to six in our favor. The conversions under every disadvantage are astonishing. Huxley's delights me. He and two others—Sir Walter James, military, and Admiral Collinson, naval—made speeches on the commission, declaring that they had verily believed in the good of the Contagious Diseases acts, but they hav been compelled to see that they are thoroughly mischievous. We never could hav dreamed of such a victory. As victory no matter. But what a prospect is opened for the whole sex in Old England! For the stronger and safer sort of women will be elevated in proportion as the helpless or exposed are protected."

She wrote to Mrs. Butler, "Nearly two years ago I saw and felt the first stir—saw the first steps taken in the wrong direction to suppress the evils of prostitution. . . . The few dark years that are past, will be remembered as a warning when the acts that disgraced them are repealed. Once understood, such legislation can never be renewed."

This noble woman died at Ambleside Jan. 27, 1876. The world well may mourn

> The loss of her whose noblest pangs
> Were all devoted to the common good.

ELMINA D. SLENKER

The Church Superior to the State.

From the Springfield Republican

A singular battle is now in progress in the courts of Montreal, where church and state are again fighting for the mastery. The Ville Marie bank having brought an action against the hotel Dieu, it became necessary to obtain certain evidence from nuns of the convent. But the archbishop refused to allow their appearance. Their counsel presented an affidavit by Sister Bonneau, superioress, stating that she had formally asked Archbishop Fabre's permission to attend court and giv evidence, but had been refused on the ground of her being a cloistered nun; that the appearance at court of such nuns would be a violation of their constitution. Their counsel argued that the hotel Dieu was a corporation, existing at the time Canada was ceded to England, and their by-laws were established by the pope; it had been their privilege, moreover, to giv their evidence by examination in the convent, and that right was not to be called in question at this late day. The opposing counsel filed an affidavit that to his own personal knowledge the nuns of the hotel Dieu did leave their cloister to visit various places, including J. B. Rolland & Sons' paper factory at St. Jerome. He pertinently argued that if they could leave their cloister to inspect a paper mill, they might appear in court, and as to their evidence given within the convent, it was not to be relied on; that he had taken such evidence when he was obliged to threaten a discontinuance of the case on account of their agent continually prompting the nun under examination. The decision of the court has not yet been handed down, but it will be looked for with great interest. The question resolves itself into this simple proposition: Shall the church be allowed to disobey and defy the statutes of the state?

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - NOVEMBER 16, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

FOR THE

Truth Seeker Annual for 1890

HELEN H. GARDENER

HAS WRITTEN A STORY, WITH A VERY SUBSTANTIAL BASIS OF FACT, AND WHICH WILL APPEAL TO THE WORLD MORE FORCIBLY EVEN THAN "THE LADY OF THE CLUB," ENTITLED

THE BOLER HOUSE MYSTERY.

It is a GREAT STORY that all will read with interest and profit.

In renewing your subscription to The Truth Seeker inclose 25 cents and the Annual will be forwarded as soon as issued.

A Fund for the Distribution of Literature.

Mr. H. H. Bohda, of Martinsburg, W. Va., met the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER at the late Congress of the Secular Union, and through him made a donation to the Union which was duly handed over to the new treasurer. When the memorandum recording this transaction had been made, Mr. Bohda selected a ten-dollar bill from an ample roll, and passed it over with the remark that he wanted it used where, in the Editor's judgment, it would do the most good. The Editor put it in his pocket and said it should go to the enlightenment of the heathen.

Several people, since reading Mr. Parsons's letter in a recent TRUTH SEEKER, hav spoken to us so earnestly in favor of a fund to distribute Liberal literature that we hav concluded to afford those who like the scheme the opportunity to gratify their desires. Mr. Bohda's $10 hav gone to the credit of that fund, and their value in pamphlet and papers will be distributed where such literature will exercise a good influence. And there is no lack of opportunity to use Liberal literature with good effect. Especially should documents bearing on the taxation of church property, the Sunday question, and other issues included in the Nine Demands of Liberalism, be scattered broadcast. Every man who has anything to do with making laws for any state should be given and asked to read such pamphlets as John Remsburg's "Sabbath Breaking," the "Plea for Impartial Taxation" by Messrs. Duryea, Wakeman, and Hawes, L. K. Washburn's pamphlets, E. A. Stevens's "God and the State," and innumerable other documents of the same description. Secretaries of Freethought societies and individuals could also use tracts and papers of a Liberal character, scattering them at meetings and around the neighborhoods where they reside. There are not many men like Dr. Owen, of Joplin, Mo., who can afford to print ten thousand anti-sabbatarian circulars and storm the town with them. Scores of people are willing to do missionary work if they can be supplied with the means, and a good many people hav the means and desire the work to be done who do not feel like doing it themselvs. THE TRUTH SEEKER will be the middleman for these parties. Donations will be recorded in these columns, and the use made of them stated. The account stands:

Samos Parsons, San Jose, Cal.	$ 5 00
H. H. Bohda, Martinsburg, W. Va.	10 00

What the Presbyterians are Doing.

A report made last month to the Presbyterian synod at New York by a committee appointed at a previous meeting reveals some facts of as much interest to Freethinkers as to Christians. The committee was on "Religion and Public Education," and it is the working-hand of the Presbyterian synod in its attempts to make our public schools Protestant Christian in character. The instructions of the synod under which the committee performed its labors during the past year were to report at last October meeting "the full legal status of the question before them, in the state of New York, and the actual practice of its schools in the chief cities and towns." That is, to tabulate the plunder already in hand, and so prepare for further raids upon the liberties of the people.

There are 31,726 public school teachers in this state, indicating the existence of over thirty thousand schools—the precise number of schools is nowhere stated—not including nine normal schools, seven Indian reservation schools, seven deaf and dumb institutions, one blind institution, and one nautical school. Of the teachers, 9 108 are employed in cities and 22,618 in towns. The city schools are each under a superintendent of public instruction; the town schools are governed by school commissioners. The state Superintendent of Public Instruction, who has an office at Albany, has general supervision of the whole.

The synod committee prepared a circular bristling with interrogations directed to each of the city superintendents and town commissioners. Twenty-two of the twenty-five city superintendents responded, and in the schools under their charge the status of religion is as follows:

In the schools of fourteen cities the Bible is read daily; in two occasionally. In the schools of nine cities prayer is offered daily; in two, occasionally. The Lord's Prayer is the common form. In the schools of six cities Christian hymns are sung daily; in three, occasionally. In three cities "positiv religious teaching" is required. In seven cities the teachers are expected to giv occasional religious teaching.

On the other side, in the schools of five cities the use of the Bible is forbidden; in nine, prayer is never heard; in eleven, Christian hymns are not sung; in fifteen, "positiv religious teaching" is forbidden, and in the same number no religious instruction is given.

In the town schools, the report includes replies received from sixty-eight of the one hundred and fourteen commissioners to one or more of the questions. Thirty-one commissioners report that the Bible is read in the schools under their care; twenty-three, that it is read occasionally. Thirteen commissioners reply that prayer is offered in at least two-thirds of their schools; twelve, that it is offered daily; thirty-one, that it is offered occasionally. Twelve commissioners report that in their schools Christian hymns are sung daily; six, occasionally. Positiv religious teaching is allowed by forty-three commissioners; two require such teaching, while the rest practically leave it to the teacher, neither forbidding nor commanding it. Commissioner Suydam, of Queens county, says: "As a subject it should hav no place in the public school. As a means to perfect public teaching, religious instruction should be brought into use judiciously whenever occasion arises. Every teacher should be a Christian, so as to teach by example as well as by precept." Another commissioner writes: "Whenever an opportunity is offered, it is seized upon." J. Thyne, of Fulton county, says that "positiv religious instruction in encouraged and urged."

Per contra: Of those who report that the Bible is read in fewer than two-thirds of their schools, many add, "In a few," "in one-fourth," "six per cent," "four out of one hundred and seventy-four," "ten out of eighty-nine," etc. It is evident that in the larger part of the town schools religious instruction is not considered necessary, and not practiced. Commissioner Jared Sandford, of Westchester, says: "Religious instruction is excluded. It is manifestly impracticable and impossible under our public school system," and "cannot be properly required under the rulings of the state department, made by such men as General Dix, John C. Spencer, Randall, Ruggles," etc. Four commissioners prohibit "positiv religious teaching" in "a few" of their schools. Daily prayer does not obtain in more than half the schools, probably in less. The singing of Christian hymns is not a general habit.

Commissioner Sandford is a politician of Westchester, and his exclusion of the Bible and religious exercises is because of his subserviency to the Romish politicians of the Westchester Catholic Protectory. It is about the only case we ever heard of where Roman influence worked for good; and the motiv in this case is not a worthy one, but arises from the fact that the Romish church is not strong enough to control the curriculum of the school, but is strong enough to prevent the Protestants from doing so. No better illustration of the truth of the adage about quarreling rogues can be found. The decisions referred to by Commissioner Sandford are the ones in the cases of several Brooklyn parties who jointly appealed to the state department from the edicts of the trustees of a ward school wherein religious exercises and Bible-reading formed a part of the school education, and an appeal from a Board of Education which controled a school in the interior of the state. The decisions were made by State Superintendents Abram B. Weaver and W. B. Ruggles. They are, the present state superintendent, A. S. Draper, assures us, the decisions "in accord with the holdings of various superintendents from General Dix (in 1837 8) down to the present time. Mr. Weaver said, June 5, 1872:

"The question presented by these cases is not a new one in the history of the public schools of this state. The claim by trustees, of the right to enforce the attendance of pupils in the public schools upon religious exercises therein, has been frequently passed upon in this department by my predecessors in office and by myself, and it has uniformly been held that no such right legally existed.

"The following observations in a former decision rendered by me are equally applicable here: 'The object of the common school system of this state is to afford means of secular instruction to all children over five and under twenty-one years of age, resident therein. For their religious training the state does not provide, and with it does not interfere. The advantages of the schools are to be free to them all alike. No distinction is to be made between Christians, whether Protestants or Romanists, and the consciences of none can be legally violated. There is no authority in the law to use, as a matter of right, any portion of the regular school hours in conducting any religious exercise, at which the attendance of the scholars is made compulsory. On the other hand, there is nothing to prevent the reading of the scriptures or the performance of other religious exercises by the teacher in the presence of such of the scholars as may attend voluntarily, or by the direction of their parents or guardians, if it be done before the hour fixed for the opening of the school or after the dismissal of the school. These principles were set forth by Secretary Spencer more than thirty years ago. In a decision made by that able officer in the year 1839, in which he sustained the action of the trustees of a school district in permitting a teacher to hav prayers in the school, on condition that they should be had previous to school hours, the following remarks occur: Both parties hav rights; the one to bring up their children in the practice of publicly thanking their creator for his protection, and invoke his blessing; the other, of declining, in behalf of their children, the religious services of any person in whose creed they may not concur, or for other reasons satisfactory to themselvs. These rights are reciprocal, and should be protected equally, and neither should interfere with the other. Those who desire that their children should engage in public prayer hav no right to compel other children to unite in the exercises against the wishes of their parents.

"'Neither the common school system, nor any other social system can be maintained, unless the conscientious views of all are equally respected. The simple rule, so to exercise your own rights as not to infringe on those of others, will preserve equal justice among all, promote harmony, and insure success to our schools' (Code of Public Instruction, p. 355). The same view of this subject was expressed by my immediate predecessor. The late Hon. V. M. Rice, in a decision rendered by him Feb. 5, 1866, said: 'A teacher has no right to consume any portion of the regular school hours in conducting religious exercises, especially where objection is raised. The principle is this: Common schools are supported and established for the purpose of imparting instruction in the common English branches; religious instruction forms no part of the course. The proper places in which to receive such instruction are churches and Sunday-schools, of which there is usually a sufficient number in every district. The money to support schools comes from the people at large, irrespectiv of sect or denomination. Consequently, instruction of a sectarian or religious denominational character must be avoided, and teachers must confine themselvs, during school hours, to their legitimate and proper duties' (Code of Public Instruction, p. 349)."

Mr. Ruggles said on this question, under date of May 27, 1884, in the case of the Board of Education of Union Free School District No. 4, of Orangetown, Rockland county:

"This application represents that the above-named board of education 'wish to move unerringly, but firmly in the matter of sustaining the reading of scripture and prayer as a part of the exercises in opening the daily sessions of our public school;' that the board has 'not required the children of non-Protestant families to participate in repeating scripture or the Lord's prayer, but hav simply required them to behave with decorum;' that a number of Catholic families 'ask that their children be allowed to remain outside until the devotional exercises are concluded,' and that 'this interference causes much disorder outside of the room, and the subsequent entrance of these pupils causes a loss of time and disturbance to class work.'

"By the constitution of this state all people, in respect to the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, stand upon a footing of absolute equality. Interference therewith, in the way of discrimination or preference, even by legislativ enactment, is, by the express words of that instrument, prohibited.

"Under our public school system, within the legal limitations of age and residence, instruction is free. The material resources necessary for the maintenance of this immense and complicated system are drawn at large from a population characterized by dissimilar religious beliefs, observances, modes of worship, and preferences. With such a public furnishing the money to support the schools, supplying them with the children in attendance, and having equal rights to the full and equal enjoyment of all the benefits of the schools, if it were possible to devise some limited measure of religious instruction for adoption in the schools, upon which all these diverse classes and sects could harmonize, it would be a gratifying result.

"But this is manifestly impracticable and impossible. The only alternativ, therefore, to preserve the benefits of the constitutional guarantees, in letter and spirit, and to secure to all absolute equality of right in matters of religious predilection, must be, however reluctantly the conclusion is arrived at, to exclude religious instruction and exercises from the public schools during school hours."

Returning to the synod committee's report, we find that supplementary to the questions as to the practice of the schools in teaching religion, the committee asked:

"Would public sentiment within the bounds of your jurisdiction favor habitual instruction in the following truths as an essential part of the curriculum, viz:

"The existence of a personal God;

"The responsibility of each soul to God;

"The immortality of the soul;

"The reality of a future state of rewards and punishments; and

"The authority of the Ten Commandments and of the Sermon on the Mount?"

In these questions is seen the drift of the movement, and what our children would hav to learn in school should the Protestant church obtain its objects. These are considered common Christian tenets, and their teaching would be considered unsectarian. Senator Blair's Education bill would compel the states to teach these dogmas to all scholars.

Six city superintendents return an affirmativ answer to this question; five a negativ one; four don't know. Twenty-nine town commissioners say Yes; eleven say No; seventeen think it would in portions of their districts, and eleven say nothing. All agree that the opposition would come chiefly from the Roman Catholics.

As to moral teaching, the schools generally are officially without it. In answering the question bearing on this some commissioners conspicuously show their unfitness for the positions they hold by defining moral teaching as instructions in "a proper observance of the Sabbath," and similar Christian peculiarities. But in the larger part of the schools, the teachers are expected to giv such teaching, and it is probably done; though, of course, such instruction is incomplete and partial.

The conclusions of the committee, from the facts gathered, are such as might be expected, and their remedy is also not difficult to guess. The committee holds that the children are "disgracefully" neglected on the spiritual side, and recommends the passage of a law "suitably providing for the incorporation with the school curriculum as an essential part of it, of those theistic truths" expressed in the questions regarding a personal deity, "and of those moral virtues which legitimately spring out of them." This would include Bible reading, daily prayer, and Christian hymns in all our schools. In regard to this, it is unnecessary to state that common sense, justice, and general decency in the conduct of man to man forbid any such religious law. Theism is as much a sectarianism as Methodism, and to a large part of the people of this country these "theistic truths" are no truths at all; and to any one they can be only beliefs. Not one of the four dogmas is undisputed. We do not know, and no man can prove, that there is a personal God; consequently our responsibility to such a being is a dogmatizer's myth. We do not know that the soul is immortal; and consequently we do not know that there is a future state where rewards and punishments are meted out. To teach such dogmas to children is, therefore, absurd. But even if they are all true, so long as the teachers can only believe but not demonstrate them, they must be kept out of the curriculum. They should not be taught even as theories, for he who fanatically accepts a theory always teaches it as a fact. The only true and just course is to instruct the children only in what is known.

We feel obliged to the synod committee for revealing the object of their investigation. What it wants is what the Protestant church generally wants; and it is just what those who believe in a secular government should see that it does not get.

Mr. Bradlaugh's Illness.

Mr. Bradlaugh's illness is likely to prove more serious than the cable news a week ago would lead us to think. The National Reformer of the 3d instant contains sickroom reports from Mrs. Besant and Mrs. Bonner, Mr. Bradlaugh's daughter. The disease is congestion of the lungs and kidneys, with fever carrying his temperature at times to 104 2°, a dangerous altitude, as the normal human temperature is about 98°. The patient is secluded, and of course can concern himself in no affairs, quiet and rest being absolutely necessary. However, the doctors hope for a speedy convalescence, when Mr. Bradlaugh will, by their direction, take a sea voyage. It is probable that he will go to Bombay to the Indian National Congress, journeying by water.

Mr. Bradlaugh is considered by the natives of India their special champion against the misrule of the Christians, and since he was stricken ill the Hindoos hav been praying for him. Mrs. Bonner prints an extract from a letter from an Indian gentleman in London: "Some of us at this temple hav prayed in private for Mr. Bradlaugh's recovery—in the interests of India—and, God willing, he will be restored to health." Mrs. Bonner also received a telegram from Simla: "India sorrowing: universal prayer father's recovery;" and later another from Poona to Mr. Bradlaugh: "Poona Sarvajanik Sabha profoundly grieved hearing your illness; prays speedy recovery—Chairman." The London correspondent of the Times of this city reports also that the clergy of Northampton united in prayer for the restoration to health of their representativ in Parliament. If prayers, heathen or Christian, are of any avail, Mr. Bradlaugh is in little danger. It is needless to add here that Mr. Bradlaugh continues to hav the sympathy and love of all Americans who admire integrity of character and reverence justice between and for all races, creeds, and conditions of men.

Editorial Notes.

THE Rev. Samuel Jones recently remarked in one of his sermons: "John the Baptist was the bravest type of Christian I know of. He just jumped on Herod and pawed his feathers out." Poor Herod! But he was fortunate compared with the people of this country who hav to endure such Christian revivalists as Mr. Jones.

THE Sunday cranks of Boston hav been snubbed by another judicial opinion. In a case brought to test the legality of towing on Sunday, Judge Thompson, in the superior court, held that "vessels coming to the port of Boston hav a right to come to docks on Sunday, and that it is a work of necessity to bring the vessel in whether by the sailors on board or by those in another boat towing her." The prosecution was instituted by religious fanatics of the Elliot Shepard kind.

THE Adventists are about to remove the American Sentinel from Oakland, Cal., to this city. This paper and the Advent churches are doing heroic work in opposing Sunday legislation, having adopted Secular instead of sectarian principles, and instead of asking exemption from penalties for "Sabbath" violation of all who observe Saturday, they demand that no special Sunday laws shall be passed. In opposing the Blair "Sabbath Rest bill" they will be a great help indeed to the Secular Union.

"THE TRUTH SEEKER of September 28th has scattered over its columns repetitions of the question, Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian? The answer to this query may be found in Mr. Wheeler's Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers, and is found more at full in the 'Lives of Lincoln,' written by Lamon and also by his friend and partner W. Herndon.—London Freethinker."

A VERY much more complete answer will be found in Mr. Remsburg's consideration of the question. Mr. Remsburg is going to settle the question, for no man has given the time and labor to it that the Kansas Freethinker has.

THE Christian Advocate, Methodist organ, Dr. Buckley chief grinder, says:

"If the Mormons obey the [anti-polygamy] law, they hav the same right to be Mormons in this country that we hav to be Christians, and their troubles will end the moment they will be content with one physical wife, whatever theory they may choose to hold concerning spiritual wives."

It is to be hoped that no Mormon will see this statement, for he might make our James uncomfortable by asking why the government, at the instigation of the Christian sects, confiscated the property of the Mormon church. When that was done it looked very much as though the Christians had animosities against the Mormons as well as against polygamists.

IN deciding that drug stores must be registered the court of appeals of this state said:

"The public safety must be regarded as superior to any private rights, and his business must yield to the necessities recognized by proper legislation."

There can be little objection to the particular application of this principle in this instance, but our dogmatizing jurists may well remember that it was under the plea for public safety that Catholics burnt Protestants; that the Puritans of New England hanged and banished obnoxious heretics, and in our own times the New Jersey courts fined C. B. Reynolds $25 and costs for talking heresy. Public safety, when that safety is to be defined by a majority, is a very unsafe criterion by which to measure human rights. Better let private rights alone until the individual injures, or is indubitably about to injure, some one.

"AND they shall become a prey and a spoil to all their enemies." The Catholics and Protestants are again by the ears over the "Indian problem." It will be recollected that a few years ago the United States government gave the churches license to go among the red men and drive them into religious schools and make Christians of them. The Catholics, by virtue of their superior organization, captured the most of the spoil, and the Protestants are wroth. They hav now devised a device, and propose to operate it through the head of the Indian bureau. The device is to establish day schools, primary schools, grammar schools, and high schools so related that promotions can be made from grade to grade and from schools of a low order to those of a higher. It is to be non-partisan and non-sectarian, and teachers are to be employed and dismissed solely on the basis of efficiency or inefficiency. That at least is the program, but the "non-sectarian" part means undoubtedly that the schools are to be evangelical Christian schools, and only non-sectarian so far as the churches in the Alliance are concerned. The Catholic News, of Washington, charges that the Rev. Dr. Dorchester, the superintendent of Indian schools, represents a spirit so hostil to Catholic thought that he is unable to do justice to the Catholic Indians. Commissioner Morgan, it is asserted, has proved equally as bigoted as the superintendent, and appears equally anxious to exclude Catholics from the Indian schools. The News charges also that the present management of the Indian school is sectarian, and that recently eleven out of the fourteen Catholic teachers were discharged. This specific charge has been supported by Senator Plumb, and there is no doubt that the Protestants are as anxious as the Catholics to obtain exclusiv jurisdiction over the Indians. The anxiety of both sects is explained by the fact that for every Indian gathered into these schools the government pays a large reward in the shape of cash and lands. Hence the zeal to convert poor Lo. But it's tough on the Indian!

Lectures and Meetings.

A BUSINESS meeting of the Chicago Secular Union was called November 31 for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing term. An extra large attendance of interested members filled the room when the president, Mrs. M. A. Freeman, called the meeting to order, announcing the purpose for which it was called. Two candidates were nominated for president—Prof. James Milleson and Elliot N. Geer—the contest being a hearty, good natured one, and a full vote being polled. Professor Milleson gaining the office with four majority. Mrs. Augusta A. Holmes was named for secretary, and was re-elected by acclamation. Vice-presidents were nominated in the following order: John M. Stiles, first vice-president; Mrs. Mattie A. Freeman, Elliot N. Geer, John F. Geeting, John Barr, elected by acclamation, as were the following officers: Mrs. Carrie Piper, financial secretary; Leopold Hoerp'e, treasurer; executiv board, Albert Schaffner, Snelson, J. J. Harrison. Secretary instructed to notify Secular papers.

The Swedish Victim of the Christian Church.

From the London Freethinker.

We regret to announce that Mr. Victor Lennstrand's appeal to the king of Norway and Sweden has proved fruitless. He is now immured in prison, being committed on two prosecutions for three months each, and he expects sentences on three more accusations, which are only too likely to terminate in an additional three months for each case, making fifteen months in all. Mr. Lennstrand is as undaunted as ever. He lectured on Oct. 27th, the day before his imprisonment, and will, we are glad to hear, be able to edit the Fritänkaren from his prison. His address is Langholmens, Kronohakte, Stockholm, Sweden, and he will, we believe, be able to receive letters.

The Almighty Three.

From the Melbourne, Aus., Liberator.

The Rev. W. D. Gray has preached a farewell sermon in Fitzroy, in the course of which he refers feelingly to the "almighty three." We may be wrong, but we suppose he means £. s. d. We do not know any other three that are almighty. If it refers to Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva; to Osiris, Isis, and Horus; to Odin, Vili, and Ve, or to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, we are sure they are not almighty; they are as weak as the poor pope in face of Giordano Bruno's statue.

Letters from Friends.

WALNUT GROVE, KAN., Oct. 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER has become the one fixture of our establishment we think that we cannot do without. It just suits me, and I lend my papers to my neighbors to read. They like to read them and I hope to be able to get some of them to subscribe. W. H. NOAH.

WILKESBARRE, PA., Nov. 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I find on reading my article in reply to Mr. Tuttle, that I said, "To convey a bar of iron out into space seven miles its weight would diminish to about twenty-five pounds." I intended say "about twenty-one miles," or to about half the depth of our atmosphere. J. R. PERRY.

CINOINNATI, O., Oct. 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: There seems to be a call for some fearless and honest-minded Materialist to utter a few words over the dead bodies of genuin Infidels. I claim to be Materialistic through and through, and hav been for sixty-nine years, and I hav performed such duties by request, and should I liv, I can do so again. And I hope some noble brother will do the same for me when I fall into the eternal sleep. I am a strong cremationist. It is the proper method of disposing of the dead.

Uncle Sam would better wake up quick or he may find himself in the grasp of a cruel tyrant whose only object is to rule or ruin. Let all true patriots be on guard.

T. WINTER.

SEDALIA, MO., Oct. 29, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I did not get my TRUTH SEEKER last week. Please send it, as I cannot get along very well unless I hav it. I hav read the paper since 1887, and hav made many converts to our faith. When I came here, in 1877, there was only one man in the town who dared say that he differed with the church. He was a doctor, and was starved to death. But now I can easily find a hundred that would stand up and say they are proud of not believing any of the church humbug. If we had a lecturer here for a week, we could hav a Secular Union sure. The churches here are simply immense in their power, and they run the whole thing.

J. C. JOHNSON.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Oct. 28, 289.

MR. EDITOR: There hav been times when I hav thought of giving up THE TRUTH SEEKER, but either I hav grown to properly appreciate it or the paper has developed wonderfully. I feel quite dependent upon it now and should miss it very much if it were stopped. It seems to me that the paper has altered somewhat since I first saw it—that it has become more dignified in its war on superstition and superstitious beliefs. At all events, I like it very much and believe it is doing a great work, if only in preparing Freethinking people for controversy with the blindly faithful.

I am much interested in Mr. Remsburg's articles on the belief of Lincoln, and wish my memory were a little better that I might add something to the testimony. Two years ago I was associated with Major Geo. H. Norris, a wealthy orange-grower of Florida, in that state, and was in a degree his confidant. In earlier years, while a lawyer in Illinois, Major Norris (he was at one time mayor of Ottawa, Ill.) was quite closely associated with Mr. Lincoln, and he gave me to understand that Mr. Lincoln was an extreme skeptic. They were thrown together a good deal at Springfield, where they were trying cases before the supreme court, I believe, and slept together often on a floor in a building in that place, Stephen A. Douglass being of the number. Lincoln would frequently keep them from sleep by his stories and arguments, and frequently spoke of religious matters in a way that showed he was convinced of the delusion of faith. Major Norris was in later years an unbeliever, although in no sense aggressiv on that point. I wish I could quote the major's words as to Lincoln's remarks on religion, but will not venture to frame them, as this is a subject that demands truth and exactness.

With best wishes for the success of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I am, Sincerely, FREDERICK HEATH.

DETROIT, MICH., Oct. 31, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: My friend O. S. Barrett has sent me his Au revoir, after making another false statement which I can not let pass.

I would like to believe that Mr. Barrett is a man of truth and honesty, but unless he corrects his statement he must stand convicted. Mr. Barrett in the last TRUTH SEEKER says that I hav finally come down to a Greenback basis, which does not accord with (his) my former plan of individual scrip as money. Now, Mr. Barrett, you either know that this statement is false, or your memory and intelligence are unfit for any controversy. I told you in my last letter that I had no other basis for money but the government or head of the nation, and now I challenge you or anyone else to find an expression in any of my letters in favor of individual scrip as money or any other kind of scrip. Ever since I saw the first greenback money issued by the government I hav always held that there should never be anything else allowed in circulation, and neither in writing nor in speech hav I ever favored anything else. In my last letter I said the same in answer to your previous false statement that I was in favor of the promis of every jackass to pay, to be used as money. Now, either act the manly part and acknowledge that you hav never seen any such talk in my letters, or else tell where it was. I hav every letter I hav written at hand, and know that you never saw the least intimation in favor of anything to be used as money but the issue of government. You do not seem to be able to understand what you read, nor remember either what you read or write, beyond one or two sentences, and they are so jumbled together that they contain four or five different subjects, and are a sum in fractions to separate. Next time you put your hoe in between two other workmen you had better read the question of St. Peter to the eunuch as they rode together. Perhaps you may think better of it.

With the best wishes for your conversion to truth and honesty, I will imitate you and say, so long, Mr. Barrett.

J. H. WOOD.

DANBURY, CONN., Oct. 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I cannot possibly allow my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER to expire, so I hasten to renew it. THE TRUTH SEEKER has now become an old friend, whose weekly arrival is hailed with delight. The articles in it are sound, based on good common sense. The cartoons by Heston are excellent. They show the absurdity of the old Bible stories at a glance, and the abuses introduced by the Christian bigots of the present day. This town (or city now) has always been a strict Christian community. They are divided now into two classes, the activ and the indifferent. The latter are called by the former Infidels, because they do not attend church, and do play cards, attend horseraces, and go to balls. But these so-called Infidels are no Infidels at all, for when trouble, or sickness, or death comes they are the first ones to send for the minister, and hav him deal out to them a little piece of dry bread and a swallow of grape-juice—called by courtesy wine, for the Christian churches hav become so much better than their founder that good wine is no longer dealt out to the faithful, but a little thick grape-juice boiled down almost to a jelly, insipid and sweet, now answers for the blood of the lamb. But of late I hav found a few who are free, who are Infidels from conviction, who never bow the knee to any God or man. These men stand erect, and looking into the faces of the cringing, hypocritical Christians, declare to them the bold principles of Freethought, based on reason; and when I meet such men, I can almost believe the golden age of reason, desired so much by the noble son of liberty, Thomas Paine, is about to be ushered in. And to the lovers of humanity everywhere I would say, Let us work while the day lasts—your day and mine. Work with tongue and pen and brain for freedom of thought and speech, until the sun of liberty shall burst forth with tropical splendor and the dark shadows of bigotry and intolerance shall creep away until they are lost. Then shall the hosts of Freethought rejoice, and sing with new meaning the song of humanity, "Peace on earth, good will to men." And as the wind of freedom wafts the song along from peak to peak, it shall echo and re-echo from continent to continent until the whole earth shall join in the grand chorus, and the sons of men shall be forever free. C. HAWTHORNE HOYT.

ST. JOHNS, ILL., Oct. 24, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: After a lapse of some time, and considerable affliction, I write a few words to the grand old TRUTH SEEKER and its noble band of correspondents and readers. When I read the issue of the 19th of October, how rejoiced I was in the anticipation of the forthcoming articles on the topic of "The Bible in the Common Schools," the product of a mind, I think, not excelled in any age for sound common sense—of one whose writings reached the masses of thinkers—whose physical hand lies cold in the grave, no doubt prematurely hastened there by the persecutions of pious hypocrits who are a disgrace to the nineteenth century. But all true Liberals are rejoiced to know that the thought from that grand old philosopher's hand is like Banquo's ghost—it "won't down at the bidding." And again, I was very much pleased with the promis from our esteemed Editor of his experience in the slate-writing phenomenon. In giving this he will at least gratify a very strong desire I hav had through several anxious months of waiting to hear more fully explained what knowledge he and Mr. McArthur gained in their investigations. I hardly think it selfishness in me to be possessed of this solicitude, for I am persuaded there are a vast number of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER as anxious as myself. I greatly regret that we hav in the ranks of Freethinkers so many, probably otherwise good Liberals, who pose as critics, that will hav recourse to such harsh unreasonable replies as Mr. Baker indulged in with our Editor and Mr. McArthur. It is our duty to investigate, when we hav the opportunity, any and every phenomenon. And it is best to giv credit only to those things that are within the domain of reason, for certain it is that reason should be our guiding star. But there is a limit to criticism, and it is possible to become hypercritical. Now for the reasons that those two forthcoming articles will so appropriately meet my requirements. First, in regard to the one on "The Bible in the Public Schools" I was elected as one of the directors here last spring. We hav two schools here at St. Johns—one white, requiring a principal and an assistant; also a colored school. Our colored teacher uses the Bible in his school. I protested against its use. His excuse is that some of the patrons of the school requested him to use it. I hav asked him to get those who wish the Bible read in the school to meet me at the school-house and discuss this matter. Our deceased Brother Bennett's philosophical dissertation on this (at the present time) very important subject, no doubt will aid me in my efforts to keep our schools on a Secular basis. And, last but not least, I am a Materialist, or Agnostic, or whatever any choose to term one who opposes orthodox Christianity. But I am in reality an investigator; a seeker of truth regardless of where it is found; one who occupies his thoughts to some extent on the subject of so-called Spiritual philosophy, for I feel that I cannot do justice to my mental requirements to ignore or treat with contempt any doctrin or ism. I am unfortunately, or fortunately, as the case may be, so constructed as to feel myself incompetent to condemn a proposition until I hav given it a thorough investigation. Consequently I am very anxious to peruse our worthy and esteemed Editor's experience in his investigation of the phenomena of slate-writing. I can afford and am ready to hear pro and con on all subjects. With ardent wishes for progress in all true reforms, I am,

Fraternally yours, WM. A. THOMPSON.

LEXINGTON, KY., Oct. 26, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: In Asia before the time of Christ, as well as in America at the present period, nearly every expounder of a new doctrin could soon boast of a "respectable congregation." There is no end to Christs, opinions, and variations of the same. The tenets of the Essenes were soon modified by Greek and Roman culture. The prayers addressed to the Sun-god, in Persia, had a Presbyterian flavor. Mr. Blair worships the Sunday God with the same fervor. Cardinal Gibbons hints that the holy spirit should not be worshiped—that is, all alone by himself. Heraclitus the philosopher liked the idea of a trinity, and this taste ruled the council of Nice. The etherealisms of the Buddhists were retained by Basilides, a leader of a Gnostic sect, who believed that Christ was not really crucified; while, according to Gibbon, the Paulicians permitted only a shadowy species of baptism.

But for the worship of Cottyta in Germany in the fourteenth century, we should never hav heard of immersion. Where would be the chants of the Episcopal church but for the worship of Isis, in Egypt, mentioned by Taylor in his "Diegesis"—a noble and fascinating book? Where would be the "power" of the Methodists but for the insane ranting of the Druids, or the dance at Ephesus around the statues of Serapis, Venus, or Adonis? Old deacons, in those days, descanted upon the charms of two of these deities, and pronounced sacred the lovely timidity of Daphne pursued by Apollo. When romance and grace ruled the hour, there was some hope for the world, for cruelty is always out of taste.

Some writers suppose that God holds a lens in his hand and magnifies the least holy wish of the soul which has been taught to obey him. The next thing is a proselyte.

Bolingbroke says that rude shocks from without produce the soul in full power, and the ancients supposed that as soon as it was created some god took possession of this gem—or magnetized it, we should say. Strange that in all religions there is a powerful, supernatural influence, which is able to take the soul captiv!

We are told to abase ourselvs, to lean upon God. Our nativ powers are cast into the shade, which operation tends to weaken them. We must be perfectly submissiv at the feet of a divinity—that is, helpless in the hands of a holy priest. The obedience required by Francis D'Assisi, Calvin, and Knox; the African fire of St. Augustine—what hav they made of the human being? In many instances, almost a raving maniac. How glorious in construction must be the mind of man, which has survived this tampering with its natural constitution, and retains so many marks of splendor even in its ruin and decay! For centuries human beings hav lived under the supposition that the holy spirit was pouring a steady stream upon the brain, which has occasionally reduced it to the condition of a mill-wheel, and still man retains the semblance of an intellect, with reasoning powers not wholly obscured and destroyed. We might as well say that we were inspired by the moon or the North pole. What gentleman would wish to obtrude a secret influence upon our experience? None but an undermining, long-headed sneak. The great majority of our opinions rest upon a basis of falsehood and uncertainty, calling into exercise a credulity which would not keep us out of the poorhouse one day. As to Spiritualists, we cannot deny that the creeping of electricity attends every sensation and every movement in the moral or physical world, causing a powerful and suggestiv inner life, which seems to connect them with a superior world, and enables them in a happy way to advance our civilization.

ALHAZA.

FOREST GROVE, ORE., Oct. 27, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: You will doubtless be deluged with letters, by far abler pens than mine, describing our grand convention in Portland, but nevertheless I shall giv your numerous readers a brief sketch, and shall try not to occupy too much of your valuable space.

Liberalism, you must know, has come out here to stay and "grow up with the country." People are finding out that it is really respectable to be Liberals. Consequently we were treated handsomely while in Portland.

The Masonic fraternity gave the free use of their commodious hall, on the corner of Third and Alder streets, for the use of the convention—both for the lectures and the ball on Monday night, which was a brilliant affair.

Kohler & Chase furnished a valuable piano free, for the entire time, and I understood Turn Hall was also free for the use of Mrs. Carrie Haight and the other Liberal ladies of Portland and East Portland, who spread an appetizing and bountiful supper free for all who attended the ball. Music was furnished by Roose & Hodgson's band, and was very fine. There were over three hundred delegates from the different Unions in this state, and our sister state, Washington, sent a splendid delegation of her best and noblest sons and daughters to assist in our deliberations and help to make our first convention a success.

There was a proposition to reorganize as the Northwestern Liberal Association, but as we were already organized as the Oregon state Secular Union the proposition was almost unanimously voted down, and our Washington friends kindly and strongly urged to organize as the Washington state Secular Union, which they will certainly do, being far stronger than we are, financially and in numbers. We look for grand work in our sister state before our next annual convention. And we will not be disappointed, either, for as long as such grand workers as Prof. C. B. Reynolds and wife, and others equally able and determined to keep the good work advancing, are there among our friends, they are sure of success. Among the many friends I met in convention who will always hold a place in my heart is Mrs. Jennie Vose Graham, who writes such sweet letters for the "Children's Corner," and has such "dear babies" to write about. I think her youngest has the sweetest brown eyes, the loveliest face, and the finest head I hav ever seen a "four-year-old" blessed with. Miss Mary Forward, of Silverton, is a lovely girl—is the great, great, great, granddaughter of Jonathan Edwards, of the old times of witch-burnings and whipping-post fame. The young lady has got too far away from "the old man" mentally to be scared at any of the "blue flames" or "caustic potash" that used to be dealt out impartially to all but the "elect." And she is proud and glad to be one of our vice-presidents, and a noble worker in the Liberal ranks.

Miss Mattie Blaisdell, of Portland, who presented us with that splendid banner, is a very bright, sweet, intelligent girl, an ardent Liberal, as might be known by her present. I despair of giving a good description of that beautiful and expensiv banner, so that your many readers will appreciate it. One side is of dark Nile green silk plush, with the American eagle and stars embroidered in gold; the grand and noble names of Hypatia, Bruno, Paine, and Ingersoll, with the legend, "Universal Mental Liberty," about the spread wings of the eagle. Below is the torch of reason, copied from our Freethought badge; beneath this are the words, "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity," and as the banner was presented each name was received with a round of applause. The work on this side is very fine Kensington embroidery in bright-colored silks. But the enthusiasm reached its hight when Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel, our finest lady orator, in her most impassioned manner presented with words of highest praise, the reverse side of the banner, which was composed of fine cream satin, with the American flag floating above the prostrate cross. The cheers were deafening. This work was hand-painted and excellently done.

Miss Elva Davidson, our youngest vice-president, also elected assistant-secretary of our state Secular Union, is a splendid girl, and one we Liberals will hav good reason to be proud of in the near future. Silverton sent a fine delegation. Dr. J. W. McClure, the president of the Union, is a fine-looking and intelligent physician, not afraid to giv his time and influence on the side of advanced Freethought; Mr. L. Ames, on our finance committee, is another young, strong mind enlisted in the good cause; in fact, we are very proud of Silverton Secular Union. With its one hundred and fifty members, it is the banner Union in the state.

Next year I hope every Union in the state will meet in convention with a banner to represent their Liberal sentiments. Our county will hav one, but our initials are rather bad for a banner. You see, W. C. S. U. is very similar to W. C. T. U., and we would not be "caught dead" with that crowd. Among others I met was my oldest brother G. J. Trullinger, of Molalla Secular Union (Union Mills). He is the oldest and I the youngest of a minister's family of ten children. S. P. Putnam made a rather pleasant allusion to our advanced position in Freethought, for which he has our thanks.

It is impossible to mention all the friendly faces that greeted me there. One dear old lady shook hands and kissed me, and said: "I don't need to be introduced to you. I hav heard your name so often that I feel I know you." I did not find out her name, but would be glad to know who she was. We were in love with Mrs. Krekel. She is a splendid speaker and a warm-hearted, loving woman. We hope to hav her lecture for us if she is in the state next summer. Mrs. Seip is a very fine speaker and a beautiful woman, with a crown of pure golden hair, dark blue eyes, and lovely complexion. We had fine lectures from all our speakers, and a time of "refreshing" from the fountain of wisdom.

Yours for Universal Mental Liberty, SARAH C. TODD,
Sec. Washington Co., Secular Union.

PORTSMOUTH, O., Oct. 20, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: In as brief space as possible I desire to touch on the newspaper war which is being waged in our midst with vim and vigor. Viewed from a religious standpoint it becomes deeply interesting. The principals in the battle are J. E Valjean, editor and publisher of the Portsmouth Daily and Weekly Blade, and Nelson Wyllie Evans, the mainspring and wishbone of an alleged paper called the Portsmouth Press. Valjean is a man of Liberal views. He loves his fellow-beings, and believes in them. Some eighteen years ago he landed here poor and penniless. He had a wife and family of little ones. Their daily bill of fare for months consisted mainly of corn bread. Poverty was staring him in the face. But he looked strongly forward and pressed upward to the hills of hope. From the moment he touched Portsmouth's shores he set out to win for wife and child a home and the comforts thereof. Thus he energetically forged his way. He enjoyed the present and gathered the rosebuds along his path. He was happy and hopeful, and in a few years was enabled to found and start upon its mission the Portsmouth Weekly Blade, and three years ago the Portsmouth Daily Blade. Having an intense, almost a passionate, sympathy with humanity, he has a strong hold upon the hearts of his readers and all those who know him. As the saying goes, "heart-throbs beat within his brain." Such a man as this—one who believes that God never made a poor investment, who discards the idea of a burning hell filled with innocence, purity, and virtue, and who believes that on the morning of the resurrection every mother's son will be saved—such a man, I say, this fellow, Nelson Wyllie Evans, seeks to ruin and drive away. The question now comes up, Who is Evans? I will tell you. It will not take long, as he is "little" both in deed and stature. Be patient and mark every word upon memory's page. To begin with, he is a shyster lawyer. He is a fungus growth. He is a human fog. Discontent mars his face, despondency spoils the music of his tones. He makes the Press a dreary sheet to comers and goers, and worse to households. He is assisted by two believers, viz., Barlow and Mann, the former an alleged idiot, and the latter a goody-goody who, they say, wears corsets, goes to church, and plays poker behind the scenes. Evans himself is a regular attendant at church. He goes to the All Saints Episcopal God-house, and is therefore a "mugwump Catholic." He is of the anti-Bruno order, and would burn Infidels, no doubt, if he could. He is a "Great I Am" with the brothers and sisters; none can play the hypocrit better than he. In the Press's efforts (of which paper Evans has the controling stock) to injure and chase away this Liberal editor, J. E. Valjean, who is fearless alike of king, pope, priest, and preacher, occasion has been taken to go to the resting-place of his mother and over her grave, as it were, place the charge of dishonor. Of this, and Chancellor Evans, as he is sometimes called, Mr. Valjean has this to say:

> The above is intended as a reflection upon a sainted mother, whose life and character was as pure as that of an angel. Do the stockholders in the organ of N W. Evans indorse it? We denounce the writer of it and those connected with the paper who subscribe to the sentiment here uttered—well, there is no epithet in the English language that will express our abhorrence and contempt for them. Supposing it were true, who but a low-down, ill born, ill-bred, unmanly, mangy cur would ever allude to it? Yet this fellow pretends to be a Christian. Go to the Episcopal church on Court street next Sunday and you will see this putrid, loathsome, bald headed leper and slanderer of a pure Christian mother, dead in her grave forty-eight years ago on the 14th of the present month—father and mother—both in the same grave—passing a contribution-box for alms for the heathen. Look narrowly into the face of the fellow as he passes down the aisle and you will hav no trouble in discovering why it is this fellow digs into the grave of a woman who never did him harm, who never did harm to any living being, to charge her with dishonor. You can dig down into the grave of a pure woman, chancellor, and drag her to the light for the purpose of blackening her good name. That of itself stamps you a vagabond. That of itself is justification for calling you an ill-bred hound. That of itself, if there was no other evidence, would convict you among all honorable men of being a man unfitted to associate with gentlemen.

In this fight Valjean is backed by the thinking people both in and outside the city. A few nobodies are prompting the chancellor. In short, Valjean is cheery and comfortable, carrying a halo of sunshine about him. He knows how to make the best of things—how to boil one's peas.

> Look not mournfully into the past, says Longfellow. This is all very well, but if a fellow does peep that way with tears in his eyes, and has his weeping changed to merry laughing, is he not better off in having looked back? I answer yes, and will endeavor to prove it by an incident which occurred when I was quite a boy. Let a mourning mortal approach. I talk to him and carry him back to the time of Judge William Reed, who sleeps to-night in Greenlawn. He was an able jurist and at times was quite funny. To one of his witty sayings I desire to introduce him who mourns, in order that his eyes may be dried and his sides tickled, as it were, instead. Judge Reed's wife was a great Christian; she was one of the workers of the church, taking part in all the celebrations and crusades; she was a liberal giver and did not confine donations to her own denomination. One day she started on a tour of "giving to the church." To the Bigelow Methodist Episcopal she gave $50; to the Sixth street Methodist Episcopal, $25, and to the Presbyterian church, $15. The amounts were to be collected from her husband. In a few days the Bigelow Methodist Episcopal bill for $50 was presented, and Judge Reed paid the half hundred without a murmur. Shortly after that in came the Sixth street Methodist Episcopal bill and also that of the Presbyterian church. It was more than the judge could stand, and he refused to pay, saying that the churches would break him up. The matter was reported to Mrs Reed, who at once dressed herself and went to her husband's law office to seek the reason why. The judge was at his desk wrestling with some knotty legal question, when Mrs. Reed entered.

"Judge Reed," said she, "you ought to be ashamed of yourself for not paying those bills. Don't you know that the Lord owns everything. He owns the churches, he owns the cattle on the hills, he ——"

Up jumped the judge, cutting his wife short with, "Mrs Reed, you stop right there. You just go tell the Lord to sell some of his damned old bulls and pay his debts."

WILL S. ANDRES.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Oct. 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Perry notes that I gave a reason for not accepting the evidence of my physical senses when reason rejects; but he rejects the reason I gave, and substitutes another that he thinks will serve his purpose better. The ponderosity of matter being the only cause of gravitation that is perceptible to or conceivable through our physical senses, he obviously rejects the evidence of his physical senses when he denies that ponderosity is the cause of gravitation; and there being no other positivly known cause, he has not the pretense that reason rejects the evidence of his physical senses. Consistency is a jewel that Mr. Perry has evidently not yet discovered.

If attraction is the cause of gravitation, it is obviously the cause of all motion, and all motion is attraction. Hence, attraction, gravitation, and motion are synonyms. That appears to be Mr. Perry's theory as nearly as I can make it out, and, assuming that attraction is the cause of gravitation, I shall admit that it is perfectly logical. Therefore, when he moves toward an object he supposes himself to be attracted; by what? When he goes to an entertainment to see and be edified, he supposes himself to be moved by attraction. When a lady and gentleman desire to be nearer to each other, "we say they are attracted." Having had some personal experience in such matters I know how it is myself, but I never had a suspicion that I was influenced by attraction, unless perchance desire is attraction, or a synonym of attraction. Not being regarded as good authority on such questions, I shall not offer an opinion, nor should there be any occasion for my doing so.

When a boy I was walking along a road in the country on a bright, moonlight evening, and hearing a rustling of the leaves by the fence that inclosed a piece of woodland. I directed my attention to the spot with a view to ascertaining the cause. I presently perceived a small quadruped who has the reputation of dispensing unpleasant odors. Thinking discretion the better part of valor, I hurried away from him. Mr. Perry and his popular theory of gravitation will suggest that I was attracted by the dirty, stinking brute. A few years later, when I had grown to manhood, I was returning home on a bright, starlight night over a double-track road through the woods. One track was sand of a light color, the other was loam on which I preferred to travel. Perceiving a dark object apparently moving along the sandy roadway in the direction I was going, I halted; so did the other fellow. Having a desire to know what kind of company I was in at that time of night, or morning, I went for it, and that apparently came for me. I braced myself for a collision just in time to get a slap in my face by a bunch of cedar leaves that were on the top of an otherwise leafless sapling that was growing between the tracks. Mr. Perry and his popular theory of gravitation will suggest that I was attracted by a cedar bush.

It is generally supposed that the motion of a ball when projected from a cannon is caused by the expansion of exploding gunpowder, but that theory is virtually denounced by Mr. Perry and his popular theory of gravitation, who virtually assert that all motion is caused by attraction. Whew! I hav managed to get over the afore-mentioned minor absurdities with but little difficulty, but am now confronted by an absurdity of greater magnitude than I can surmount, or my credulity can take in, and I shall not offer to go around it, for I can never get there. But I hav a suspicion that Mr. Perry has himself demonstrated that his popular theory of gravitation is one of the most ridiculous absurdities that imagination could be capable of conceiving or credulity of accepting, his "illustrious Kepler and immortal Newton" and a host of "lesser" lights to the contrary notwithstanding. Therefore, I shall award him the merit of instructing us in a knowledge of "what a set of theorizing numskulls our Newtons, Keplers, Humboldts, and the like hav been," and I trust he will duly appreciate the honor that his peculiar talent and persevering industry has accidentally won, for it is obvious that he has built better than he knew, or would hav done if he knew, and has evidently presented a more cogent reason than he suspected for exclaiming, "Alas for the myth of attraction!"—inadvertently slain by a friend and advocate. Peace to its ashes! His method of defending his theory is suggestiv of Esop's bear who crushed the head of his sleeping master with a boulder in a vain attempt to kill a fly that annoyed him. Mr. Perry being more dangerous to friends than to foes, I hav cause for congratulation that he is not on my side. Moreover, he has served my side of the question satisfactorily by reasoning from the other. He could not do otherwise.

Having "knocked" Mr. Perry "out the first round" on the spirit question, I shall claim the merit of being a more proficient "slugger" than he gave me credit for. He has not answered my questions, or even noted but one of them, viz: "Spiritology involves the question of whether facts that are known to exist in nature, or facts that are known to be manufactured by art, are the more reliable authority on questions of natural phenomena?" He responds thusly: "Here is a gentleman who claims to understand science and to be so thoroughly attached to it that he is willing to ignore his own senses of hearing, seeing, and feeling when he meets with phenomena which he has reason to think are not supported by his notions of science, which is an admission that he is not competent to investigate anything outside of his preconceived notions; while, as above shown, he ignores almost every acknowledged fact in science, and sets up speculations and theories about attraction, gravitation, and planetary formation of his own." If anybody can see in that rigmarole a logical answer to the question that is made the pretense for offering it, he will confer a favor if he will point it out and make it intelligible, for I cannot.

He entirely ignores my other question, notwithstanding its importance to the discussion of Spiritism. Without a clear and correct understanding of whether spirit is an organic and personal individuality independent of physical matter, or an inorganic and universal property of physical matter, the discussion of Spiritism will be more absurd and incomprehensible than the play of "Hamlet" with the part of Hamlet left out. If spirit is an organic and personal individuality, the Christian God is evidently not a myth, and we had best join the church, go to heaven, and sit down together in the father's kingdom, as I was recently exhorted by one of the Methodist brotherhood to do. But on my suggesting that it will be more convenient to hav the father's kingdom right here on this planet, where we are enjoined to pray in faith and hope that it shall be, the deceitful old hypocrit got away from me as fast as he could. He probably suspected me of being one of "those wicked Socialists" who do not appear to be in good repute with either Christians or Infidels, but are prepared to "hold the fort" against both and wish them joy with their being in perfect accord on the most important fundamental principle of Bible philosophy. If spirit is an inorganic and universal property of matter, there can be no spirit organisms, and pretended spirit manifestations are necessarily caused by living physical organisms. Unless Spiritists decide which horn of the dilemma they will hang upon, I shall agree with Mr. Perry that further discussion of the subject will be a waste of time. And it being probable that Mr. Perry needs rest and good nursing after his laborious and successful effort to win glory and renown in the field of science, I will commend him to the tender care of the spirits, and with good wishes and kind regards bid him and the spirits and Spiritism, adieu.

J. A. TUTTLE.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Millie's Babies.

Six little timid kittens,
Out in the cold alone,
Their mother is always gadding about,
And brings them not even a bone;
She's off in the morning early,
She's off till late at night;
A mischievous, selfish old pussy,
That never does anything right.
The kittens are always hungry,
They're too timid to catch a mouse,
And their mother is such an old gadder,
They won't keep her in any house.
She never petted nor played with them,
Nor washed them nice and clean,
Such six little dirty faces
I'm sure I hav never seen;
Six little sad, sad kittens,
All sitting in a row,
Cold and hungry and dirty,
From tip of each nose to each toe.
Twelve little ears and six little tails
Hanging and drooping low,
So out on the steps I found them,
Sitting all in a row.
And Millie begged hard to keep them,
And fed them and washed them so clean,
Such six bright, cunning kittens
I'm sure I hav never seen.
The boys laughed at Millie's babies,
She cared not a whit, would you?
If she hadn't adopted those kittens,
What in the world would they do?

—M. F. Nolan in School and Home.

Angry Words.

Angry words are lightly spoken
In a rash and thoughtless hour;
Brightest links of life are broken
By their deep, insidious power.
Hearts inspired by warmest feeling,
Ne'er before by anger stirred,
Oft are rent past human healing
By a single angry word.

Poison-drops of care and sorrow,
Bitter poison-drops are they,
Weaving for the coming morrow
Saddest memories of to day.
Angry words, oh, let them never
From the tongue unbridled slip;
May the heart's best impulse ever
Check them ere they soil the lip.

Love is much too pure and holy,
Friendship is too sacred far
For a moment's reckless folly
Thus to desolate and mar.
Angry words are lightly spoken,
Bitterest thoughts are rashly stirred,
Brightest link in life are broken
By a single angry word.

The Table Fork.

It hardly seems possible that there was ever a time in civilization when forks were not in use. Yet such is the fact. Before the fifteenth century, nobody thought of conveying food to the mouth by means of a fork. In fact, there were no forks. They were first used in Italy, but they created a great storm of indignation. Ministers preached against their use, and warned their hearers not to be guilty of so great a sin as to use a fork in eating, for hadn't the Lord made fingers to eat with? It was thought to be flying in the face of divinity to employ a fork at the table. In France, the monks split into two different factions, all on account of the fork, and there was a great war of words on that theme. Thus the fork may be considered one of the early weapons used against ecclesiasticism. The battle was waged long, but the fork conquered, and now it would be flying in the face of good manners and good taste to decline a fork at the table, whereas once it was considered wicked, or else a mark of weakness, to use a fork at all. Thus customs change, the useful obtains, humanity improves, morals and manners gain ground, and the world gradually grows wiser and better.

S. H. W.

War Among Words.

I was awakened in the middle of the night by a disturbance in the library, writes a Washington Post correspondent. It did not seem to be the noise of burglars. It was more like the murmuring sound of many tongues engaged in spirited debate. I listened closely and concluded that it must be some sort a discussion being held by the words in my big unabridged dictionary. Creeping softly to the door I stood and listened. "I don't care," said the little word Of, "I may not be very big, but that is no reason why everybody should take advantage of me. I am the most mercilessly overworked word in the whole dictionary, and there is no earthly reason for it, either. People say they 'consider of' and 'approve of' and 'accept of' and 'admit of' all sorts of things. Then they say, 'All of us' and 'both of them' and 'first of all,' and tell about 'looking out of' the window, or cutting a piece of bread 'off of' the loaf, until I am utterly tired out."

"Pshaw!" said the word Up, "I am not much bigger than you, and I do twice as much work, and a good deal of it needlessly, too. People 'wake up' in the morning, and 'get up' and 'shake up' their beds, and 'dress up' and 'wash up' and 'draw up' to the table, and 'eat up' and 'drink up' their breakfast. Then they 'jump up' from the table and 'hurry up' to 'go up' to the corner, where the street-car driver 'pulls up' his horses and the passengers 'ascend up' the steps and 'go up' into the front seats, and the conductor 'takes up' the tickets. All this is done even before people 'get up' town and 'take up' their day's work. From that time until they 'put up' their books and 'shut up' their offices I do more work than any two words in this book; and even after business hours I am worked until people 'lock up' their houses and 'go up' to bed and 'cover themselvs up' and 'shut up' their eyes for the night. It would take a week to tell what I hav to 'put up' with in a day, and I am a good deal 'worked up' over it."

"I agree that both Up and Of are very much overworked," said the word Stated, "but I think I myself deserve a little sympathy. I am doing not only my own legitimate work, but also that which ought to be done by my friend Said. Nobody 'says' anything nowadays, he always 'states' it."

"Yes," chipped in the funny little word Pun, "these are very 'stately' times"

Some of the words laughed at this, but Humor said: "Pun is a simpleton."

"No," said Wit; "he is a fellow of duplicities."

"He makes me tired," said Slang.

Then the discussion was resumed.

"I do a great deal of needless work," said the word But. "People say they hav no doubt 'but that' it will rain, and that they shouldn't wonder 'but what' it would snow, until I don't know 'but' I shall strike."

"What I hav most to complain about," said the word As, "is that I am forced to associate so much with the word Equally. Only yesterday a man said he could 'see equally as well as' another man. I don't see what business Equally had in that sentence."

"Well," retorted Equally, "men every day say that something is 'equally as good' as something else, and I don't see what business As has in that sentence."

"I think," said Propriety, "you two should be divorced by mutual consent."

There was a fluttering sound and a clamor of voices.

"We, too, ought to be granted divorce," was the substance of what they said, and among the voices I recognized those of the following named couples: Cover Over, Enter In, From Thence, Go Fetch, Hav Got, Latter End, Continue On, Converse Together, New Beginner, Return Back, Rise Up, Sink Down, They Both, Try And, More Perfect, Seldom Ever, Almost Never, Feel Badly, United Together, Two First, An One, Over Again, Repeat Again, and many others.

When quietude had been restored the word Rest said: "You words all talk of being overworked, as if that were the worst thing that could happen to a fellow, but I tell you it is much worse to be cut out of your own work. Now, look at me. Here I am ready and willing to perform my part in the speech of the day, but almost everybody passes me by and employs my awkward friend Balance. It is the commonest thing in the world to hear people say they will pay the 'balance' of a debt, or will sleep the 'balance' of the night."

"I suffer considerably from the same kind of neglect," said the word Deem. "Nobody ever 'deems' a thing beautiful any more; it is always 'considered' beautiful, when, in fact, it is not considered at all."

"It is no worse," said the word Fewer, "than to hav people say there were 'less' men in one army than in another."

"No," added More Than, "and no worse than to hav them say there were 'over' one hundred thousand men."

"It seems to me," said the word Likely, "that nobody has more reason for complaint than I hav. My friend Liable is doing nearly all my work. They say a man is 'liable' to be sick, or 'liable' to be out of town, when the question of liability does not enter into the matter at all."

"You're no worse off than I am," said the little word So; "that fellow Such is doing all my work. People say there never was 'such' a glorious country as this, when, of course, they mean there never was 'so' glorious a country elsewhere."

I saw there was likely to be no end to this discussion, since half the words in the dictionary were making efforts to put in their complaints, so I returned to my couch, and I will leave it to any person who has read this account to say whether I had not already heard enough to make me or anybody else sleepy.

A Strong Writer.

"Stephen," said the colonel, speaking to an old negro who had come to cut the grass in the yard, "I am told that you intend to giv your son a good education."

"Dat's what I does, sah. I knows what it is ter struggle erlong widout l'arnin', an' I is 'termined dat my son shan't travel b'arfoot ober de same flint rock road dat I did."

"A noble resolution, Stephen. There is something beautiful in the uncultivated mind that has a reverence for knowledge. Is your boy learning rapidly?"

"Ez fast ez er hoss ken trot, sah. W'y last week he writ er letter ter his aunt dat libes mo' den twenty miles frum yere, an' atter while he gwine write ter his udder aunt dat libes fifty miles erway."

"Why doesn't he write to her now?"

"Oh, he kain't write so fur yit. He ken write twenty miles fust rate, but I tole him not ter try ter write fifty miles till he got stronger wid his pen. But he gwine ter git dar, I tell you. Won't be mo'n er year fo' dat boy ken set down at one eend o' de guberment an' write er letter cl'ar ter de udder eend."

Bible or No Bible.

Rosy, reading in her Bible, came across the passage, "Love your enemies," and inquired of her grandpa its meaning.

"Why, it means," said the old gentleman, "that if any of your little schoolmates treat you badly and hurt you, you must love them the same as if they were good to you"

"Then," said Rosy, "I must love Katie R. and Mamie B., who hav treated me meanly—is that it?"

"Yes," responded the grandpa.

"Well, now, look here," and Rosy's eyes began to snap and flash, "I can't love Mamie B. and Katie R, and I'm not going to make believe that I do—Bible or no Bible. There."

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1 25

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth—the Only Free thinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full page illustrations and 25 smaller: large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers: 4to. 224pp., boards. $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

The Agnostic Annual

FOR 1890.

Edited by CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS.

Agnosticism and Immortality.....Samuel Laing.
A Sonnet.....Joseph Ellis.
Who Was Moses?..E. J. Hardwicke, M.D., F.R.C.S.
The Comfort of Agnosticism.....E. L. de Leuton
Are Miracles Credible?...Constance. W. Naden.
The Contest Between Agnosticism and Theology, John Wilson, M.A.
Above: A Poem.....W. Stewart Ross.
The Evolution of the Agnostic Idea. R. Bithell, B Sc., Ph D.
The New Fatalism..... B Russell.
Descartes's Proof of the Existence of a God. F. J. Gould.
A Poem.....W. R. McTaggart.
The Free Expression of Opinions. G F. Underhill.
Fragments..... .....William Maccall.

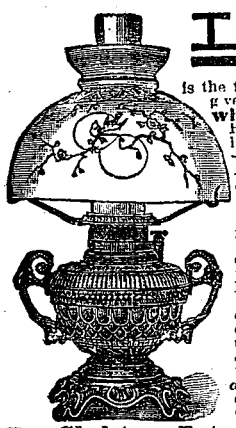
Price, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

Situation Wanted.

GARDENER, aged 27 (Agnostic), just arrived from England, with ten years' experience from Sweden Denmark, England, France, and Germany. First class references. Write soon to "Hortulanus," Shorthills, N J.

BLASPHEMY AND THE BIBLE.

By C. B. REYNOLDS.



Price, 5 cents.

ICHABOD CRANE PAPERS.

Daringly witty and inexpressibly laughable onslaughts on Christianity.

Price, 10 cents.

"The Gladstone" LAMP

is the finest lamp in the world. It gives a pure, soft, brilliant white light of 85 candle power. Purer and brighter than gas light; softer than electric light,—more cheerful than either. A Marvelous light from ordinary kerosene oil!

Seeing is Believing.

A "wonderful lamp" it is indeed. Never needs trimming, never smokes nor breaks chimneys, never "smells of the oil;" no gumming up, no leaks no sputtering no climbing of the flame, no annoyance of any kind, and cannot explode. And besides all these advantages it gives a clear, white light, 10 to 20 times the size and brilliancy of any ordinary house lamp! Finished in either Brass, Nickel, Gold or Antique Bronze. Also for Clergymen, Editors, College Students, Teachers, Professors, Physicians and other professional men.

The Gladstone Extension Study Lamp,

The Gladstone Banquet Lamps.
The Gladstone Piano Lamps.

Send for price list. Single lamps at wholesale price, boxed and sent by express. Get our prices. "Seeing is believing."

GLADSTONE LAMP CO.,
10 East 14th St., New York.

GLOVES

—DIRECT TO YOU.—

PURCHASE FROM THE MANUFACTURER; get BETTER GLOVES and SAVE MONEY. My gloves are made from selected skins, with the best skill, by the most experienced operators.

They are perfect in style and fit, the most serviceable gloves made, are warranted and if not as represented you can return them and receive back your money.

A splendid Holiday or complimentary present.

27 YEARS Before the Public

I offer my gloves for Ladies and Gentlemen, with assorted colors, real dog skin, kid, cheverette and fur gloves made to order if desired. SEND stamp for illustrated book "About Gloves," giving full description, with prices of over fifty patterns, simple guide for self-measurement; thus enabling you to order by mail as safely as if measured in our store, and as perfect fit and satisfaction are guaranteed

YOU TAKE NO RISKS.

Refer to Johnstown Bank, American Express Co., or Postmaster, all of Johnstown, or Com'l Agencies.

JOHN C. HUTCHINSON,
Johnstown, N. Y.

SPECIAL NOTICE:

I send a good glove measure Free of charge with above book to those who mention this paper when writing.

FAITH AND REASON.

A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.

With elaborate index.

By HALSEY R. STEVENS.

A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained in such compact form.—[Literary Review.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

The Reign of the Stoics.

THEIR

History, Religion, Philosophy, and Maxims of Self-Control, Self-Culture, Benevolence, and Justice.

With Citations of Authors Quoted from on Each Page.

BY FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.

Read the philosophers, and learn how to make life happy, seeking useful precepts and brave and noble words which may become deeds.—Seneca.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This book shows that many Christians might learn much from these ancient heathen.—American Bookseller.

One of the most valuable helps for those who would understand the character of human progress in all ages.—National Quarterly Review.

The author has shown himself a diligent student, an ardent admirer, and a faithful interpreter, of some of the most remarkable monuments of ancient thinking.—New York Tribune

Reading this book, we find the doctrins of the Stoics to be almost identical with the views held by the broadest and most enlightened minds of the present day.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Lecky says of Marcus Aurelius: "The purest and gentlest spirit of all the pagan world." Merivale says: "Of all the line the noblest and dearest." Taine says: "The noblest soul that ever lived." John Stuart Mill says: "He preserved through life not only the most unblemished justice, but the tenderest heart."

Extra Cloth, 12mo, 248 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
[illegible] Lafayette Pl[illegible] New York

THE JEWS AND THEIR GOD.

"The Jews and their God stood on the lowest plane."

Price, 10 cents.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago
E. A. Stevens, 558 West Madison st., Room 1, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Ediuger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade. 3.706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick. Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street. London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St. New York.

Wonderful Scientific Notice.
THE BOOK OF BOOKS.
Truthful instructions for curing all diseases that man or beast is subject to, without medicin. All curable diseases can and hav been cured by this method, for over twenty years tested by the author, and thousands of others hav cured themselves by the instructions of this book of books Breaks off fevers, cold, coughs, rheumatic troubles, malaria, and diphtheria. Every family should hav a copy. Price, 35 cents, by mail.
Address N. N PIERCE, Piedmont, N. Y.

WHAT KIND OF A MAN CLARK BRADEN IS.
BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 10 cents.

THIS MAN

ASTONISHED THE WHOLE WORLD by the marvelous sagacity with which he conducted his early campaigns; he was criticised by military geniuses all over Europe because he departed from laid-out rules of war, and adopted methods of his own. He could well afford to laugh at the criticisms of others, since in those same campaigns he was uniformly successful.

Our departure from the usual methods of selling Soap astonishes everybody, the prescribed rule being that soap must reach families through the different drug and grocery stores with all the colossal expenses attached thereto. Now we have cut right off from all of this, and sell direct from the factory to the family and for a limited time, give away as an advertisement all the profits and savings which are usually lost or expended in selling through the wholesale and retail stores.

Send us your name and address on a postal card, and we will send you, freight prepaid, a large box of "Sweet Home" Soap—100 CAKES. The Box also contains:

SIX BOXES BORAXINE.—For cleaning woodwork, washing dishes, dairy utensils, removing grease spots or stains from carpets, etc., or general house-cleaning. Saves half the labor of washing; a blessing to every house-keeper who uses it.

One-fourth Dozen Modjeska Complexion Soap.
One Bottle Modjeska Perfume.
One Bottle Modjeska Tooth Powder.
One Stick Napoleon Shaving Soap.
One-fourth Dozen Ocean Bath Toilet Soap.
One-fourth Dozen Artistic Toilet Soap.
One-fourth Dozen Creme Toilet Soap.
One-fourth Dozen Elite Toilet Soap.

We hereby promise that in addition to the 100 Cakes of Laundry Soap and all the fine assortment of Toilet Articles given above, to include in the box everything named below to every reader of this paper who will send us instructions to forward a trial box of "SWEET HOME" Soap, and don't forget that you are under no obligations to keep the Soap if, when you see the box and its contents, it does not in every way meet your entire expectation. We know the great value of our articles, as we make them ourselves, and are willing to put them to the severest kind of a test, hence will send you the box on thirty days' trial, and if you are not fully satisfied with it, send us word and we will remove it at our own expense. If there is anything more we can do to convince you of the honesty of our motives as well as the liberality of our methods of doing business, let us know.

Yours truly, J. D. LARKIN & CO., Buffalo, N. Y.

SILVER-WARE,
One fine Silver-plated Sugar Spoon.
One fine Silver-plated Child's Spoon.
One fine Silver-plated Butter Knife.
One fine Silver-plated Individual Butter Plate.
One fine Silver-plated Button Hook.
One Lady's Celluloid Pen Holder (very best).
One Arabesque Mat.
One Turkish Towel.
One Wash Cloth.
One Glove Buttoner.

PICTURES, ETC.,
One Package Assorted Scrap Pictures.
Two Celluloid Collar Buttons, (patented).
Twenty-three Photo-engraved Pictures of the Presidents of the United States.
Twenty-four Pictures.—Many of which are Copperplate Engravings, suitable for framing, and are handsome decorations for the parlor, entitled:
Desdemona. Owl'd Lang Syne.
Our Boys. Our Pets.

MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES,
One Package Pins.
One Spool Black Silk Thread.
One Japanese Silk Handkerchief.
One Gentleman's Handkerchief, large.
One Lady's Handkerchief.
One Child's Lettered Handkerchief.
One Biscuit Cutter.
One Cake Cutter.
One Doughnut Cutter.
One Handsome Scrap Book or Portfolio.

GIVEN AWAY.
Doe's Head. The Darlings.
Morning in the Highlands. Evangeline.
Evening in the Highlands. La Petite Babette.
A Faithful Friend. The Maid of Orleans.
Marguerite. After the Storm.
Sunshine and Shadow. Love's Young Dream.
Jockey Joe. Futurity.
Skye Terrier. The Interview.
Phunny Fellows. On the Sands.
The Monkeys. Yachting.

OUR PRICE FOR THE GREAT BARGAIN BOX IS ONLY SIX DOLLARS.

IT COSTS ONLY ONE CENT to buy a postal card on which to write your name and post-office address, mentioning this paper, and secure our Great Bargain Box, all freight charges paid. Write your name and address plainly on a postal card, mail same to us, and a case of these goods will be delivered at your house on thirty days' trial. We pay freight only to points in the United States east of the Rocky Mountains.

J. D. LARKIN & CO., 659, 661, 663, 665 and 667 SENECA STREET, BUFFALO, N. Y.

☞ Some people prefer to send cash with order; we do not ask it, but in such cases we place one extra present of value in the box and ship the same day the order is received, freight prepaid; all other orders being filled in their turn.

REMEMBER "Sweet Home" Family Soap is an extra fine, pure soap, made from refined tallow and vegetable oils. On account of its firmness and purity each cake will do double the work of the common cheap soaps usually sold from groceries.

HOW TO Strengthen the Memory,
OR,
NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.

The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order.' Price by mail $1.

Parturition Without Pain.
BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Godey's Lady's Book says: "We giv our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY
AND HYGIENE, or, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN. Carefully revised edition, with 111 illustrations. The most perfect book for men and women ever published. 50,000 sold. Price $2, by mail. Illustrated catalog free.

Marriage and Parentage.
In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations and in Their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.
BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

The Scientific American says: "This work is scientific, sober, clean, and worthy of conscientious consideration by every possible parent, and particularly by the young." $1.

EATING FOR STRENGTH;
OR,
FOOD AND DIET IN RELATION TO HEALTH AND WORK.

The New York Herald says: "Dr. Holbrook's book is among the very best of its kind."
The Home and Garden says: "A study of this book will enable any intelligent reader to make a choice of food which may save the cost of the book every day in providing for a family, besides increasing health, strength, and longevity." $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LITERATURE OF THE INSANE.
BY F. R. MARVIN.
Price, . . . 5 cents.

Pertinent and interesting.—Freethought.
Will be handed to my Christian friends that they may, by finding the garden of Eden, get the $5,000 reward.—Editor Sequachee Times.
Raises the devil with the garden of Eden yarn.—Hastings, Mich., Plaindealer.

Very Cheap Pamphlets.

We hav on hand a large number of the following of COLONEL INGERSOLL'S pamphlets, which will be disposed of at cost, as follows:

Ingersoll Catechised:
His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the "San Franciscan;" singly, 3 cents; per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $2.00.

ORTHODOXY.
A lecture, fifty-four closely printed large 12mo pages, 10 cents; fifteen, $1; and $6 per hundred.

Civil Rights Speech.
Including the address of Frederick Douglass, fifty-three-large octavo pages, singly, 10 cents; fifteen for $1; and $6 per hundred.

The Truth of History.
This is a comment by Colonel Ingersoll upon the religious lies that hav been told about himself, and first made its appearance in these columns. Price 3 cents; 30 cents per dozen; $2 per hundred.

BIBLE IDOLATRY.
A letter Colonel Ingersoll wrote to the editor of the London "Secular Review." Price 3 cents; 30 cents per doz., or $2 per hundred.

INGERSOLL ON McGLYNN.
Being the comments and opinions of Mr. Ingersoll upon the fight in the Catholic church between the late pastor of St. Stephen's and his employer, the pope. Price 3 cents; 30 cents per doz., or $2 per hundred.

We suggest that these be purchased in quantities, and given away to Christians, and it is with that not unreasonable expectation that the prices hav been placed so low.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Natural Rights, Natural Liberty, and Natural Law!
AN INQUIRY INTO THE CAUSES OF SOCIAL MALADJUSTMENTS. THE RATIONAL, JUST, AND ADEQUATE REMEDY.

A work that treats of basic principles, and should be read carefully by all Liberal and social reform thinkers.
It is highly commended by Samuel P. Putnam, Henry George, Hugh Pentecost, Herbert Spencer, and other men of note.
Price, 25 cents.
Address, F. Q. STUART Editor the Arbitrator,
1653 Blake St., Denver, Col.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.

It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Sixteen pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $2. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

DR. FELLOWS
STARKEOHOPE
Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.
VINELAND, N. J.

Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a staunch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

The Liberty of Printing, and Reply.
BY HUBBUT and WAKEMAN.
Price, 10 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL
Price, 25 Cents.

Home-Made Poetry.

Bible Science.

And God divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament (Gen. i, 7).

Below an ocean in the sky
Behold the firmament on high,
Wherein the sun and moon are whirled
Above a flat, four-cornered world;
That firmament the stars, too, sprinkle,
For man on purpose made to twinkle.
That ocean from, the rain is sent
Through windows in the firmament,
And once through them a flood God hurled
To drown the people of the world;
He made his pretty rainbow then
As sign he'd not drown them again.

Although that theory is wild
As the ideas of any child
Upon it founded is the church,
We find when we "the scriptures search,
Which are as true as truth can be,
Declares the sapient D.D.

None could attribute a book worse
To one who made the universe;
It must hav been some bungling clerk
Or journeyman helped plan the work,
Or Moses, God's amanuensis,
And other scribes who'd lost their senses,
For priests are nearly every age
Compelled to tinker up its page,
To twist, explain, or retranslate
Much of it that gets "out of date,"
As truthful science it o'erthrows
Or common sense its nonsense shows.

It is a pitiful thing to see
Some new work on geology,
From Dawson, say, or Duke Argyll,
Within which either halts oftwhile
To rescue from its slimy pit
That Jewish fossil, holy writ,
And with hard fact try to square it,
For in the muck 'tis held so fast,
By irreverent science overcast,
In their attempts to lift it higher
Ah, how they flounder in the mire!

These men profound in Bible science,
On whom the church does place reliance,
Had best essay an explanation
Of that queer nautical narration
Concerning Jonah and the fish,
And other tales Munchausenish,
Say God's creating his fac-simile,
The first one of the human family,
All perfect, yet far less to know
The serpent than his deadly foe.

The feats of Samson, whose great strength
Lay in his hair, when of great length—
He gave his foes a deadly tussle
With small expenditure of muscle—
Once killed a thousand men alone
His weapon just an ass's jaw-bone!
But oh, the blandishments of women
Hav caused men tears enough to swim in!
Even Samson loved not wise, though well,
And, worse for him than Adam, fell;
For, after false Dalilah's fleecing him,
The gentiles swallowed without greasing him.

Then there's the holy episode
Of "Balaam and the ass" he rode;
A miracle! exclaims the priest,
Man's language spoken by a beast!
Pshaw! 'tis not strange these days at all
That talk should such an animal,
For many a speaking ass I've seen
The desk o'er of a pulpit lean;
Yea, on it with his forefeet drum,
His hearers' slumbers to o'ercome. SABUKA.

Gems Discovered by Master Remsburg.

MR. EDITOR: Before me lies a large bundle of magazines and papers, and looking over them I find the following items:

There is not a fashionable church in any city of our land that has not within gunshot of its door great masses of starving, sinful, poverty-stricken humanity.—Belford's Magazine, Jan., 1889.

The present generation of men in all Christian nations is fairly steeped in Materialism.—Farmers' Voice, Chicago. Jan. 19, 1889.

A bigot has declared that the Johnstown flood was a visitation of providence. He deserves to be tarred and sprinkled with a buzzard's feathers. What about the idle men who owned the dam? Has providence said anything to them?—The Young American, Portland, Conn.

Isn't it about time we were awakening from our indifference to combat with the powers that will employ their craftiest devices toward securing us in the bonds of religious slavery? Freedom of conscience is our constitutional and God-given right. Shall we surrender without a struggle our hard-earned liberty, and become the slaves of a corrupt religious despotism?—Moral and Scientific Companion, Florence, Ariz., June, 1889.

There is nothing quite so much needed in religion as a little reason.—The New Ideal, Duluth, Minn., May, 1888.

It seems that the faith cure works both ways. A Georgia woman prayed that her husband might fall sick and die, and away he went with typhus fever in less than four weeks.—Detroit Free Press.

There was considerable excitement in an Atchison Sabbath-school last Sunday, when the teacher discovered one of her real good boys trading off his reward of merit cards for cigaret pictures. Investigation revealed the fact that the bad boy who smokes cigarets took home more evidences of saintly diligence than any other boy in the school.—Atchison, Kan., Globe.

A correspondent of the English Churchman furnishes the following statistics copied from a papal source, viz.: L'Amico di Casa Almanico Populare, published at Turin:

BIRTHS.

	Legit.	Illegit.
London	75 097	3 207
Paris	19 921	9 707
Brussels	3 448	1,833
Monaco	1 854	1,760
Vienna	8.821	10 350
Rome	1,215	3 160

Rome, therefore, as regards the standard of illegitimacy, is six times worse than Paris, and sixty-six times worse than London. In relation to murders the statistics are equally unfavorable. Here they are, taken from the same source:

MURDERS.

England has 1 in 178 000 people.
Holland has 1 in 163.000 people.
Prussia has 1 in 100 000 people.
Austria has 1 in 77.000 people.
Spain has 1 in 4.113 people.
Naples has 1 in 2,750 people.
Roman States has 1 in 750 people.

Comment is needless, unless it be to say that two-thirds of the murders which occur in Great Britain are committed by professed Catholics.—Buchanan's Journal of Man, Boston, March, 1889. GEO. J. REMSBURG.

Oak Mills, Kan., Oct. 30, 1889.

GIRARD'S WILL AND Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Ingersoll and the Deist

BY

A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."

Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND,
LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

Cosmian Hymn Book,

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

PRICE, - - - $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

The Humboldt Library of Science.

In this series are well represented the writings of DARWIN, SPENCER, HUXLEY, TYNDALL, PROCTOR, CLIFFORD and other leaders of thought in our time, at 50 to 75 per cent. lower than usual prices.

We have the Library bound in Complete Sets, as follows:

OLD STYLE.—In this style the volumes average 640 pages 8vo, and are arranged thus:

Vol. I.	Nos. 1-13	Vol. VI.	Nos. 60-70.
" II.	" 13-24	" VII.	" 71-80.
" III.	" 25-36.	" VIII.	" 81-91.
" IV.	" 37 48	" IX.	" 9 -103
" V.	" 49-59.	" X.	" 104-111.

Cloth, plain edges, $2 vol. (Separately or in sets.)
Half seal, marble edges, $2.75 vol. (In sets only.)

NEW STYLE.—Nos. 1 to 111 inclusive, are bound in 13 vols., averaging 492 pages each, 8vo, thus:

Cloth, extra, red edges, $1.75 per vol. $22 75 per set.
Half seal, plain edges, 2 25 " 29 25 "
Half seal, marble edges, 2 50 " 32.50 "
Hlf Mor., marble edges, 2.75 " 33 75 "
In sets only.

All of the following are octavo, cloth:

WORKS BY PROFESSOR HUXLEY.

Man's Place in Nature. Numerous ill.; &
The Origin of Species. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
The Physical Basis of Life & other Essays.
Lectures on Evolution. Illustrated. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
Animal Automatism, and other Essays.
Technical Education, and other Essays. 2 books in 1 vol. .75

WORKS BY CHARLES DARWIN.

Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection; or, the Preservation of Favored Races in the Struggle for Life. New edition from the latest Eng. edition, with additions and corrections. 1.25
Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. With illustrations. New edition revised and augmented. 1.50
Formation of Vegetable Mold Through the Action of Worms, with Observations on their Habits. With illustrations. .75

Charles Darwin: His Life and Work. By Grant Allen. .75

SELECT WORKS BY GRANT ALLEN.

The Evolutionist at Large;
Vignettes from Nature; and
Force and Energy: A Theory of Dynamics. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

WATER, ELECTRICITY, AND LIGHT. BY PROFESSOR TYNDALL.

Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. 19 illustrations.
Lessons in Electricity. 60 illustrations.
Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

WORKS BY HERBERT SPENCER.

The Data of Ethics. .60
Education: Intellectual, Moral, and Physical; and Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other Disquisitions. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
The Genesis of Science.
The Factors of Organic Evolution. 2 books in 1 vol. .75

SELECT WORKS OF RICHARD A. PROCTOR, F.R.A.S.

Light Science for Leisure Hours.
Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.
Hereditary Traits, and other Essays.
Miscellaneous Essays.
Illusions of the Senses, and other Essays.
Notes on Earthquakes, with 14 miscellaneous Essays. 6 books in 1 vol. 1.50

SELECT WORKS OF WM. KINGDON CLIFFORD, F.R.A.S.

Seeing and Thinking.
The Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays.
Conditions of Mental Development, and other Essays.
The Unseen Universe, and the Philosophy of the Pure Sciences.
Cosmic Emotion: Also the Teachings of Science. 5 books in 1 vol. 1.25

SELECT WORKS OF EDW. CLODD, F.R.A.S.

The Childhood of Religion.
The Birth and Growth of Myth.
The Childhood of the World. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

SELECT WORKS OF TH. RIBOT.

Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

The Diseases of Memory.
The Diseases of the Will.
The Diseases of Personality. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

THE MILKY WAY.

The Wonders of the Heavens. 32 illus. By Camille Flammarion.
The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kerry Miller, M.A.
The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. By Nathan T. Carr, LL.D. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

POLITICAL SCIENCE.

Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, author of "The Eng. Constitution," and History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock. 2 books in 1 vol. .75

THE LAND QUESTION.

The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.; and Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. By William Lloyd Birbeck, M.A. 2 books in 1 vol. .75

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Mystery of Matter, and The Philosophy of Ignorance; and
The Essential Nature of Religion. By J. Allanson Picton. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
Science and Crime; and
Science and Poetry, with other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E. 2 books in 1 vol. .75

[Continued in next column.]

HUMBOLDT LIBRARY (Continued).

Current Discussions in Science; and
Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
The Black Death. An Account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century; and
The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker. M.D. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
The Naturalist on the River Amazon. A Record of Adventures, Habits of Animals, Sketches of Brazilian and Indian Life and Aspects of Nature Under the Equator, during Eleven Years of Travel, by Henry Walter Bates F.L.S., Assis. Sec. to the Royal Geographical Society of England. .75
The Rise and Early Constitution of Universities, with a Survey of Medieval Education. By S. S. Laurie, LL.D., Professor of the Institutes and History of Education in the University of Edinburgh. .75
The Religions of the Ancient World, including Egypt, Assyria and Babylonia, Persia, India, Phœnicia, Etruria, Greece, Rome. By George Rawlinson, M.A., Camden Professor of Ancient History, Oxford, and Canon of Canterbury, author of "The Origin of Nations," "The Five Great Monarchies," etc. .75
Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Scholtze. Translated from the German by J. Fitzgerald, M.A. .75
Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons, M.A., F.R.S., Professor of Logic and Political Economy in the Owens College, Manchester. .75
On the Study of Words. By Richard Chenevix Trench, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin. .75
The Dawn of History: An Introduction to Pre-Historic Study. Edited by C. F. Keary, M.A., of the British Museum. .75
Geological Sketches at Home and Abroad. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., Director-General of the Geological Surveys of Great Britain and Ireland. .75
Illusions: A Psychological Study. By James Sully, Author of "Sensation and Intuition," "Pessimism," etc. .75
The Pleasures of Life. (Parts I. and II.) By Sir John Lubbock, Bart. 2 parts in 1. .75
English Past and Present. (Parts I. and II.) By Richard Chenevix Trench. 2 parts in 1. Complete. .75
The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S. Over 80 Illus. .75

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God.—[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE

MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 833pp., silk cloth, $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

Bible of Nature,

OR, THE

Principles of Secularism.

A CONTRIBUTION to the RELIGION of the FUTURE.

BY PROF. FELIX L. OSWALD,

Author of "The Secret of the East, or the Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline," "Physical Education, or the Health-Laws of Nature," "Household Remedies," "The Poison Problem, or the Cause and the Cure of Intemperance," etc., etc.

Felix L. Oswald is a well-known and vigorous writer on scientific and social subjects.—[Cin. Com. Gazette.

Cloth, 12mo, 340pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist, 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS

OF

HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in the Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

POINTERS:

A POCKET CYCLOPEDIA,

CONTAINING

Tables, Rules, Practical Hints, and Historical Sketches, for Farmers, Mechanics, Machinists, Merchants, Housekeepers, and the Public Generally, with

Numerous Maps, Illustrations, and Diagrams

Illustrating some of the more Important Comparativ Statistics of the World.

More Information for Less Money than has ever been offered.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

For $50 worth of "Cold Facts" boiled down in a Nutshell. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place. New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By D. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR HOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place. New York.

AN HOUR WITH THE DEVIL.

By D. M. BENSETT.

Price. - - - 10 cents.

THE

UNIVERSE ANALYZED

By JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,

Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.

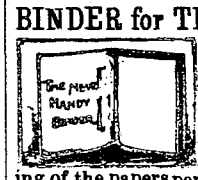
The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productiv of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,



OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.

Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Argument by R. G. Ingersoll

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

At Morristown, New Jersey.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES:

A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.

BY J. K. INGALLS.

Price, - - 25 cents.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhatian Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 7 o'clock.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Elizur Wright Secular Union

Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10 30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

DIAMONDS.

Unprecedented offer. No other house so fair In order to giv my Liberal friends throughout the United States an opportunity to examin, test, and compare my goods and prices with those of other diamond merchants, I will sell any piece of Diamond Jewelry, accompanied by contract that cash in full will be refunded any time within one year from date of purchasing if goods are not entirely satisfactory. No other dealer will do it. None will sell as cheap. Carrying a large stock, being an expert, close buyer, and doing business on smallest possible expense, you will positivly save twenty to thirty per cent by purchasing of me. Diamond Pins and Eardrops, worth $600, for $400; Pins, Rings, Eardrops, Studs, Hair Ornaments, Pendants, worth $300, for $200; do., worth $200, for $140; do., worth $150, for $110; do., worth $100 for $70; do., worth $80, for $60; do., worth $60, for $45; do., worth $40 for $30; do., worth $30, for $22; do, worth $20, for $15. You can wear these goods daily for one year. It will not cost you a cent. If in the mean time you are not satisfied that the goods are better and cheaper than sold elsewhere return and get your cash in full.

Selections sent to responsible parties on approval; to any banking-house or C.O.D., privilege of examination.

The "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

sixteen jewels, finely adjusted to heat and cold, patent regulator, Breguet hair-spring, beautiful double-paneled dial, and all modern improvements Perfect, and no watch will compete with it! In silverine case, $19; in four-ounce coin silver case, $23.50; five-ounce, $25; six ounce, $27. In open face, best filled gold case, $27; hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV., $35. In fourteen carat solid gold, $50 to $ 50. Sent prepaid, and cash refunded if not satisfactory.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.
Established 1857.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 160 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, Eng.

ANTICHRIST.

PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

LIFE OF

Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

News of the Week.

CATHOLICS in the province of Quebec recently bought New Testaments of a traveling Bible society agent, against the command of their priest, whereupon he collected the books to the number of hundreds and burnt them on the square before his church.

A GENERAL assembly of the Knights of Labor opened at Atlanta on the 12th.

LOUDON county, Va., is threatened with a race conflict.

THE region about Reading, Pa., is terrorized by bands of tramps.

WYOMING has adopted the constitution on which we commented last week.

KING CARLOS I. of Portugal is becoming anxious to modernize his country.

P. T. BARNUM attended the banquet at the inauguration of the new lord mayor of London.

LABOR advocates charge Commissioner Wright's national industrial statistics with perversion.

THE $400,000 that was awarded the church in Canada by the Jesuit Estates bill has finally been paid over.

"KNEEL with me and pray," said a well dressed man to Policeman Southeimer in a New York street on the night of the 9th. He was taken from his knees and conveyed to the asylum.

ON the 8th fifteen convicts attempted to escape from the Huntsville, Tex., penitentiary, but were prevented, one being killed and three wounded.

A NINE days' storm, with snow, has just ceased in New Mexico. Twenty thousand sheep and hundreds of cattle, with several cowboys, perished. The storm extended into Kansas and Texas.

AT the trial of a Frenchman named Labadie at Franklin, Mass., on the 9th, for assault on his daughter, the judge said, "This is a matter beyond my jurisdiction." "Mine, too," exclaimed Labadie, and drawing a pocket-knife he severed his jugular vein and died.

ON the 10th, in commemoration of the Anarchist execution, Nov. 11, 1887, Lucy Parsons hung a red flag from her window in Chicago, in defiance of the police prohibition. A policeman was sent to order its removal, to whom she said, "This is a free country. Why can't I wave the flag of my doctrin?" The officer removed it. On the 11th the commemoration was observed with meetings.

ON the 8th two widely known politicians, Colonel Goodloe and Colonel Swope, met in a post-office corridor at Louisville, Ky., and having long had political animosities, attacked each other, one with a revolver and the other with a knife. Swope was instantly killed. The other murderer, surviving a day or two, on being told at last that he must die, expressed a desire immediately to become a communicant of the Episcopal church.

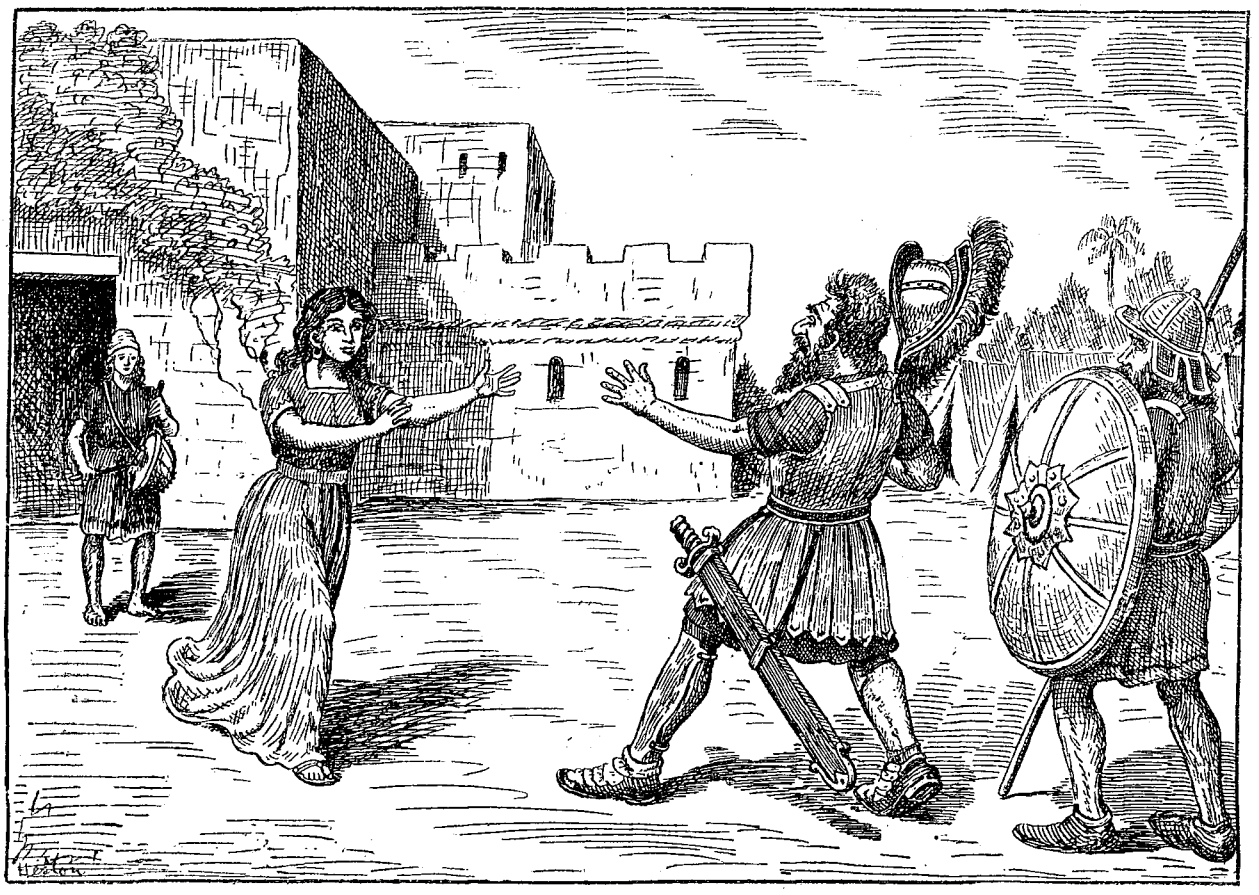
IN the elections Iowa and Ohio, formerly Republican, were carried, the former Democratic as to governor and Republican as to legislature and the latter wholly Democratic. In Nebraska, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania the result was Republican. In New Jersey, mixed, but mainly Democratic. In Virginia and Maryland a close contest with Republicans ended in Democratic victory. New York state was carried by the Democrats, and this city by Tammany.

IN Canada the English province of Ontario demands that the French language shall be abolished, and that the church shall be deprived of all its ancient privileges in Quebec. The agitation has spread even to the Northwest, and there the English are demanding the total abolition of the French language and of the Roman Catholic separate schools. So bitter has the feeling become that many of the more far-seeing of the population are looking to annexation as the only preventiv of war.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo. 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.



THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

JEPHTHAH SEETH THE FOLLY OF MAKING FOOLISH PROMISES TO GOD.

And Jephthah came to Mizpah unto his house, and, behold, his daughter came out to meet him with timbrels and with dances. . . And it came to pass, when he saw her he . . said, Alas, my daughter, thou hast brought me very low, . . for I hav opened my mouth unto the Lord, and I cannot go back.—Judges xii. 34 35.

Gems of Thought.

THERE is but one protection against the tyranny of any class; and that is, to giv that class very little power. Whatever the pretensions of any body of men may be, however smooth their language, and however plausible their claims, they are sure to abuse power, if much of it is conferred on them. The entire history of the world affords no instance to the contrary.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

PHILOSOPHERS, having no particular interest, can only speak in favor of reason, and of the public good.—Voltaire.

IGNORANCE is not bliss.—Dr. McGlynn.

IGNORANCE is not the corner-stone of virtue.—Ingersoll.

THERE had, indeed, come into the Middle Ages an inheritance of scientific thought. The ideas of Hippocrates, Cœlius Aurelianus, Galen, and their followers, were from time to time revived; the Arabian physicians, the school of Salerno, such writers as Salicetus, Guy de Chauliac, and even some of the religious orders, did something to keep scientific doctrins alive; but the tide of theological thought was too strong—it became dangerous even to seem to name possible limits to diabolical power. To deny Satan was Atheism; and perhaps nothing did so much to fasten the epithet "Atheist" upon the medical profession as the suspicion that it did not fully acknowledge diabolical interference in mental disease. Of this feeling we hav a monument in the medieval proverb, "Where there are three physicians there are two Atheists." Following in the lines of the earlier fathers, St. Anselm, Abelard, St. Thomas Aquinas, Vincent de Beauvais, all the great doctors in the medieval church, some of them in spite of occasional misgivings, upheld the idea that insanity is largely or mainly demoniacal possession, basing their belief steadily on the sacred scriptures; and this belief was followed up in every quarter by more and more constant citation of the text, "Ye shall not suffer a witch to liv." No other text of scripture—save, perhaps, one—has caused the shedding of so much innocent blood.—Prof. A. D. White.

EVERY philosopher, every mathematician, every naturalist, had to keep the secret of his discoveries, if he wished to keep his head. The night of the Middle Ages was not the natural blindness of unenlightened barbarians, but an unnatural darkness, maintained by an elaborate system of spiritual despotism.—Prof. Felix L. Oswald.

WAR is harvest to governments, however ruinous it may be to a nation. It serves to keep up deceitful expectations, which prevent people from looking into the defects and abuses of government. It is the lo here! and the lo there! that amuses and cheats the multitude.—Paine.

THE figure of a murderer is not changed because, instead of a gallows cap, there is placed upon his head an emperor's crown.—Victor Hugo.

BUT independently of the influence of the Old Testament teachings, the Christian system makes persecution inevitable in proportion as the system is believed. Intolerance and persecution are a natural result of the doctrin that certain religious opinions involve moral guilt. The Bible declares, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be damned." This makes unbelief and heresy a crime, and unbelievers and heretics criminals. It makes it the religious duty of Christians to legislate for the extirpation of the former and the punishment of the latter. Can man treat with charity and kindness those with whom they believe God is displeased—those who are spreading doctrins that are regarded as plainly an offense to God?—B. F. Underwood.

THE truth is, Christianity has not made friends; it has made enemies. It is not, as taught, the religion of peace, it is the religion of war. Why should a Christian hesitate to kill a man that his God is waiting to damn? Why should a Christian not destroy an Infidel who is trying to assassinate his soul? Why should a Christian pity an unbeliever—one who has rejected the Bible—when he knows that God will be pitiless forever?—Ingersoll.

THEOLOGY has a marked tendency to concentrate the attention upon conduct which affects, or is supposed to affect, the God alone, and which is useless to our fellow-creatures.—John Wilson.

THINK of the schools that hav been founded for the more general diffusion of useless knowledge! Think of the colleges wherein men are taught that it is dangerous to think, and that they must never use their brains except in the act of faith! Think of the millions and billions of dollars that hav been expended in churches, in temples, and in cathedrals! Think of the thousands and thousands of men who depend for their living upon the ignorance of mankind! Think of those who grow rich on credulity and who fatten on faith!—Ingersoll.

THOUGHT is a motion of matter.—Moleschott.

Odds and Ends.

THE "private entrance," Algernon, is private only on six days of the week. On Sundays it is public.

SHE: "What do you suppose supports the vast arch of the heavens?" He: "The moonbeams, I guess."—Lowell Citizen.

"IT will be better for me in the long run," remarked the cashier, as he humped himself for the Dominion.—Kearney Enterprise.

A MAN doesn't look at a salary as he does at a wheelbarrow. He thinks it ought to be drawn in advance.—Burlington Free Press.

THE Mormon men are innocent enough. They would never hav more than one wife apiece if it were not for the women.—New Orleans Picayune.

A CONVEYANCE of real estate signed on Sunday is not legal, and yet we were always taught to believe that "the better the day, the better the deed."—Yonkers Statesman.

SMITH: "Well, Jones, how are you getting on, old fellow?" Jones: "Poorly—lost $10,000 yesterday." "How was that?" "By fire. Maria's father fired me."—Minneapolis Times.

"WHAT? Is the widow Brown going to be led to the altar for the third time?" "No, I guess not. She ought to be able to find her way there herself by this time."—Fliegende Blatter.

JENKINS: "The loss of your wife must hav been a hard blow to you, Binks, but why do you wear such a wide mourning-band on your hat? When you take it off the hat will be spoiled." Binks (sadly): "Ah, Jenkins, it is worth it, it is worth it."—Life.

"I'M an insurance man, sir." "What do you want now? You've made me insure my life, insure the title to my real estate, insure my plate glass, and everything else I own." "True, sir, but the next thing to get insured is your policy of insurance."—Society.

SMITHERS: "When I make a promis and fail to keep it, it worries me ever afterward." Withers: "Well, I made a promis once and kept it, and it's been worrying me ever since." Smithers: "What was it?" Withers: "To marry the woman who is my wife."—Munsey's Weekly.

SPIRIT of great physician (in the other world): "Oh! Oh! Oh! Ouch! Ooo! What did you kick me that way for? Ouch!" Unknown form: "I am Nature, and, seeing you tired and weary, I thought I would assist you along the way you used to assist me."—Puck.

BETWEEN clerks in a big counting-house: "Did you hear the news, George?" "No; what is it, Billy?" "The cashier has skipped to Canada with three hundred thousand dollars belonging to the boss." "Well, well; pretty smart, ain't it?" "And he also took away your silk umbrella you left here yesterday." "Confound the rascal."—New York Sun.

IN a small town in Baden a minister closed his sermon the other day with these words: "We would be pleased, moreover, to hav the young man who is now standing outside the door come in and make certain whether she is here or not. That would be a great deal better than opening the door half an inch and exposing the people in the last row of seats to a draught."—Frankfurter Zeitung.

"GRANDMOTHER, you look quite spruce to day," remarked the young lady. There was no response. "What are you thinking of, grandmother?" The old lady came out of her dreamy reverie for a moment, and inquired: "Wasn't—wasn't Maggie Mitchell married again the other day, my child?" "She was, grandmamma. What of it?" "Nothing, child, nothing." But the good old grandmother looked placidly at herself in the glass and kept on dreaming.—Chicago Tribune.

TEN years ago, while passing through Stratford-on Avon, Mr. Toole, the English comedian, saw a rustic sitting on a fence. "That's Shakspere's house, isn't it?" he asked, pointing to the building. "Yes." "Ever been there?" "No." "How long has he been dead?" "Don't know." "Brought up here?" "Yes." "Did he write anything like the Family Herald, or anything of that sort?" "Oh, yes, he writ." "What was it?" "Well," said the rustic, "I think he wrote for the Bible."—Stage.

HE (during the ballet): "Yes, I think men are more considerate than women." She: "What makes you think so?" He: "Well, you see that young lady in front of us? She wears a high crowned hat, and the man behind her can't see over it." She: "Well?" He: "Now see the man in front of her who is so earnestly watching the pretty girl in tights?" She: "Yes." He: "He is so considerate of those behind him that he does not even wear his hair, let alone his hat."—Boston Budget.

"'SCUSE me," he said, as he leaned across the aisle of the car, "but I presume you are reading the morning paper?" "Yes, sir," replied the other. "Published here in the city?" "Yes, sir." "Will you hav the kindness to tell me if you hav as yet come across an article headed: 'A Distinguished Visitor to Detroit. The Hon. Benjamin Perkins in Town. Let Us Do this Famous Man all Honor?'" "No, sir, I haven't." "Some oversight, probably. Probably be in to morrow. That's all. Much obliged." And he settled back, buttoned up his threadbare overcoat, and realized that thirteen passengers were sizing him up and wishing that fame would also come to them.—Detroit Free Press.

"SEE this coat?" he queried as he entered a Michigan avenue clothing store yesterday. "Yes, I see dot coat. Vhas sometings wrong?" "I should remark! See how it is all shrunk up!" "I see. How did she come?" "I got caught out in the rain." "Exactly. Did I sell you dot coat for waterproof?" "No, but it hadn't ought to shrink up like this." "Dot may be, but suppose dot coat swell out und vhas so big dot she vhas worth $2 more—would you pay me extra?" "Of course not." "Exactly. She vhas even. If she shrinks you doan' blame me; if she swells you doan' pay any more. Please doan' block oop der shtore, my frends—dis vhas my busy day."—Detroit Free Press.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 47. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY. {New York, Saturday, November 23, 1889} 28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

THANKSGIVING AND GIVING THANKS.

Notes and Clippings.

LORD RANDOLPH CHURCHILL has become one of the foremost champions of the eight-hour movement in England.

THE return of land grants made in western Australia shows that one man owns and controls nearly 4,000,000 acres.

A PAMPHLET has been published at St. Petersburg and largely circulated, recommending reunion with the holy see as the only means of saving Russia from revolution and ruin.

A WESTERN rabbi once prayed: "O Lord, we thank thee for the goodly number here tonight to listen to our Friday lecture, and that thou also art here notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather."

THE Catholic church still endeavors to incite Italians to hostility to their government by denouncing its heavy taxes, while the necessity of defense against that church itself is in great part the cause of the taxes.

KATE FIELD, writing somewhat adversely against woman suffrage, charges against women that they hav already, without votes, committed the misdeeds of inciting the Southern rebellion, instigating Mormon insubordination, and instituting despotic Prohibition.

A RUSSIAN archbishop has been speaking his mind very plainly concerning his countrymen. "You never see," he said, "an intoxicated Jew or German, while Russians will fall over the gin-cask rather than not drain it to its dregs. They are strong in times of war and great excitement, but in peace they sink into helplessness and instability of mind and morals, and instead of being above they are below the other people of Europe." These remarks hav been received with much disfavor in influential quarters.

CREMATION is coming more and more into vogue in Germany, in spite of the expense and certain legal difficulties which render its performance in some parts almost an impossibility. At Gotha no fewer than one hundred bodies hav been cremated during the present year.

THE Mexican secretary of the interior has issued a circular to the state governors urging them to enforce all the provisions of law which require the suppression of monastic orders or secret religious associations that require the temporary or permanent seclusion of their members from society.

CARDINAL GIBBONS has just issued a book in which he says that although "our government and legislation are permeated and fortified by divine revelation and Christian traditions," we are assailed by unbelief, and evils among which is "an imperfect and vicious system of education, which undermines the religion of our youth."

ON the 10th Charles Thibaut said in a speech at Montreal that the French Canadians were God's people; that it was the design of providence that they should build up a new France upon this continent. The French Canadians were in the majority in five cities in New England. They would soon be in a majority in the whole of New England. They would control Catholicism in the United States. Protestantism in the United States to-day was a negation, a house divided against itself, which must fall. Catholicism was growing all the time in a solid body, which, he continued, would soon control the continent.

THE New York commissioner of labor statistics reports for that state during 1888 716 strikes, of which 253 resulted in an increase of wages, and 41 in a decrease, while 422 are reported as without change. But in many cases "no change" means a maintenance of the old rate, the strike having been against an attempted reduction. Wages lost, $1,083,653.

ARCHBISHOP CLEARY, of Montreal, has excommunicated a divorced woman who married again. In denouncing her from the pulpit, he said: "She has offered as a pretext of justification a bill of divorce from her husband, procured in some court of the United States. There is no such thing as divorce under the Christian law. God has peremptorily laid it down that Christian marriage can exist only between 'one man and one woman,' and he excludes all right and power of any state or any government on this earth to dissolve the matrimonial bond on any pretense. It follows that not all the judges and juries in the United States, nor all the senates and courts, parliaments and governments, or crowned monarchs, were they all to combine together, hav the power to sever the bond of wedlock between this woman and her husband any more than they hav the power to pull down the sun, moon, and stars from the firmament."

SENATOR WADE HAMPTON of South Carolina has written a letter to Holy John Wanamaker, postmaster-general of these United States. It is a comment upon the removal of Mr. Gibbs from the postmastership of Charleston, and the appointment of Mr. Clayton. Senator Hampton says: "Hon. John Wanamaker: The inclosed extract from a South Carolina paper has caused me great surprise. Perhaps you may remember, if your memory is not treacherous, your assurance to me a few days ago that Mr. Gibbs should not be removed until the expiration of his term in February next. Not only did you do this, but you voluntarily assured me that inasmuch as Columbia was my post-office you would, when a successor to Mr. Gibbs was to be appointed, consult me. It is a matter of small importance to me who takes the place of Mr. Gibbs, but as I informed him in passing through Columbia of the promis you had made, you may perhaps understand how your action has placed me in a false position. But it is fortunate for me that Mr. Gibbs will know that I at least told him the truth, though I was grievously deceived in believing what was said to me. I shall know better in future what reliance to place on statements emanating from the same source. The newspapers state that besides managing the great department over which you preside you are running a Sunday-school in Philadelphia, and it occurs to me that you might with profit to yourself select as the most appropriate subject of a lecture to your pupils the instructiv story of Ananias and Sapphira. This would giv you a fine field for your eloquence in explaining to your young charges the importance of confining themselvs to the truth—except when some fancied advantage might be obtained over a political opponent. I am, Your obedient servant, WADE HAMPTON."

Communications.

Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?

CHAPTER VIII.

TESTIMONY OF LAMON'S WITNESSES.

Testimony of Hon. John T. Stuart—Testimony of Col. James H. Matheny—Stuart's Disclaimer—Matheny's Disclaimer—Examination and Authorship of Disclaimers, Including the Edwards and Lewis Letters.

Besides his own testimony concerning Lincoln's unbelief, Colonel Lamon cites the testimony of ten additional witnesses: Hon. Wm. H. Herndon, Hon. John T. Stuart, Col. James H. Matheny, Dr. C. H. Ray, Wm. H. Hannah, Esq., Mr. Jas. W. Keys, Hon. Jesse W. Fell, Col. John G. Nicolay, Hon. David Davis, and Mrs. Mary Lincoln. The testimony of Mr. Herndon having already been presented, the testimony of Mr. Stuart and Colonel Matheny will next be given. This testimony was procured by Mr. Herndon for the purpose of refuting the erroneous statements of Dr. Holland.

Hon. John T. Stuart, who was for a time a member of Congress from Illinois, was the first law partner of Lincoln. He says:

Lincoln went further against Christian beliefs and doctrins and principles than any man I ever heard: he shocked me. I don't remember the exact line of his argument—suppose it was against the inherent defects, so called, of the Bible, and on grounds of reason. Lincoln always denied that Jesus was the Christ of God,—denied that Jesus was the son of God, as understood and maintained by the Christian church. The Rev. Dr. Smith, who wr te a letter, tried to convert Lincoln from Infidelity so late as 1858, and couldn't do it (Lamon's Life of Lincoln, p. 488).

Col. James H. Matheny was one of Lincoln's most intimate friends, and was for many years his chief political manager. He testifies as follows:

I knew Mr. Lincoln as early as 1834-7; know he was an Infidel. He and W. D. Herndon used to talk Infidelity in the clerk's office in this city, about the years 1837-40 Lincoln attacked the Bible and the New Testament on two grounds: first, from the inherent or apparent contradictions under its lids; second, from the grounds of reason. Sometimes he ridiculed the Bible and New Testament, sometimes seemed to scoff it, though I shall not use that word in its full and literal sense. I never heard that Lincoln changed his views, though his personal and political friend from 1834 to 1860. Sometimes Lincoln bordered on Atheism. He went far that way and shocked me. I was then a young man, and believed what my good mother told me. Stuart and Lincoln's office was in what was called Hoffman's Row, on North Fifth street, near the public square. It was in the same building as the clerk's office, and on the same floor. Lincoln would come into the clerk's office, where I and some young men—Evan Butler, Newton Francis, and others—were writing or staying, and would bring the Bible with him; would read a chapter; argue against it. Lincoln then had a smattering of geology, if I recollect it. Lincoln often, if not wholly, was an Atheist; at least, bordered on it. Lincoln was enthusiastic in his Infidelity. As he grew older, he grew more discreet, didn't talk much before strangers about his religion; but to friends, close and bosom ones, he was always open and avowed, fair and honest; but to strangers, he held them off from policy. Lincoln used to quote Burns. Burns helped Lincoln to be an Infidel, as I think; at least he found in Burns a like thinker and feeler.

From what I know of Mr. Lincoln and his views of Christianity, and from what I know as honest, well-founded rumor; from what I hav heard his best friends say and regret for years; from what he never denied when accused, and from what Lincoln has hinted and intimated, to sav no more, he did write a little book on Infidelity, at or near New Salem, in Menard county, about the year 1834 or 1835 I hav stated these things to you often. Judge Logan, John T. Stuart, yourself, know what I know, and some of you more. Mr. Herndon, you insist on knowing something which you know I possess, and got as a secret, and that is, about Lincoln's little book on Infidelity. Mr. Lincoln did tell me that he did write a little book on Infidelity. This statement I hav avoided heretofore; but, as you strongly insist upon it—probably to defend yourself against charges of misrepresentations—I giv it to you as I got it from Lincoln's mouth (Life of Lincoln, pp. 487, 488).

The evidence of Stuart and Matheny, as recorded in Lamon's work, having been presented, it is now proper to state that this evidence has, in a measure, been repudiated by them. Dr. Reed, in his lecture, produced letters from them disclaiming in part or modifying the statements imputed to them. Dr. Reed says: "I hav been amazed to find that the principal persons whose testimony is given in this book to prove that their old friend lived and died an Infidel, never wrote a word of it, and never gave it as their opinion or allowed it to be published as covering their estimate of Mr. Lincoln's life and religious views." Alluding to Stuart's evidence, he says: "Mr. Lamon has attributed to Mr. Stuart testimony the most disparaging and damaging to Mr. Lincoln's character and opinions—testimony which Mr. Stuart utterly repudiates, both as to language and sentiment." Regarding Matheny's testimony, he says: "Mr. Matheny testifies that he never wrote a word of what is attributed to him; that it is not a fair representation of either his language or his opinions, and that he never would hav allowed such an article to be published as covering his estimate of Mr. Lincoln's life and character."

The following is the disclaimer of Mr. Stuart:

SPRINGFIELD, Dec. 17, 1872.

REV. J. A. REED,

Dear Sir: My attention has been called to a statement in relation to the religious opinions of Mr. Lincoln, purporting to hav been made by me, and published in Lamon's "Life of Lincoln." The language of that statement is not mine; it was not written by me, and I did not see it until it was in print. I was once interviewed on the subject of Mr. Lincoln's religious opinions, and doubtless said that Mr. Lincoln was in the earlier part of his life an Infidel. I could not hav said that "Dr. Smith tried to convert Lincoln from Infidelity so late as 1853, and couldn't do it." In relation to that point I stated, in the same conversation, some facts which are omitted in that statement, and which I will briefly repeat. That Eddie, a child of Mr. Lincoln, died in 1848 or 1849, and that he and his wife were in deep grief on the account, That Dr. Smith, then pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Springfield, at the suggestion of a lady friend of theirs, called upon Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln, and that first visit resulted in great intimacy and friendship between them, lasting till the death of Mr. Lincoln, and continuing with Mrs. Lincoln till the death of Dr. Smith. I stated that I had heard at the time that Dr. Smith and Mr. Lincoln had much discussion in relation to the truth of the Christian religion, and that Dr. Smith had furnished Mr. Lincoln with books to read on that subject, and among others one which had been written by himself, sometime previous, on Infidelity; and that Dr. Smith claimed that after this investigation Mr. Lincoln had changed his opinions, and became a believer in the truth of the Christian religion; that Mr. Lincoln and myself never conversed upon that subject, and I had no personal knowledge as to his alleged change of opinion. I stated, however, that it was certainly true that up to that time Mr. Lincoln had never regularly attended any place of religious worship, but that after that time he rented a pew in the First Presbyterian church, and with his family constantly attended the worship in that church until he went to Washington as president. This much I said at the time, and I can now add that the Hon. Ninian W. Edwards, the brother-in-law of Mr. Lincoln, has, within a few days, informed me that when Mr. Lincoln commenced attending the First Presbyterian church he admitted to him that his views had undergone the change claimed by Dr. Smith. I would further say that Dr. Smith was a man of great ability, and on theological and metaphysical subjects had few superiors and not many equals. Truthfulness was a prominent trait in Mr. Lincoln's character, and it would be impossible for any intimate friend of his to believe that he ever aimed to deceive, either by his words or his conduct. Yours truly, JOHN T. STUART.

Colonel Matheny's disclaimer is as follows:

SPRINGFIELD, Dec. 16, 1872.

REV. J. A. REED,

Dear Sir: The language attributed to me in Lamon's book is not from my pen. I did not write it, and it does not express mv sentiments of Mr. Lincoln's entire life and character. It is a mere collection of sayings gathered from private conversations that were only true of Mr. Lincoln's earlier life. I would not hav allowed such an article to be printed over my signature as covering my opinion of Mr. Lincoln's life and religious sentiments. While I do believe Mr. Lincoln to hav been an Infidel in his former life, when his mind was as yet unformed, and his associations principally with rough and skeptical men, yet I believe he was a very different man in later life, and that after associating with a different class of men, and investigating the subject, he was a firm believer in the Christian religion.

Yours truly, JAS. H. MATHENY.

This disclosure startles you, my dear reader. But be patient. I will show you that this apparently mortal thrust of Dr. Reed's was made, not with a lance, but with a boomerang.

When Reed made his assault upon Lamon's witnesses, all stood firm but two—two old Springfield politicians whose political aspirations had not yet become extinct—John T. Stuart and James H. Matheny. These men had been among the first to testify in regard to Lincoln's unbelief. His Christian biographers had misrepresented his religious views; they believed that the fraud ought to be exposed, and they were willing and ready to aid in the work. Their testimony exhibits a frankness that is truly commendable. They knew that lying was a vice, but they did not know that truth-telling was a crime. They had yet to learn that the church tolerates murder more readily than the promulgation of a truth that is antagonistic to her creed. But this fact they were destined to learn. Lamon's work had scarcely been issued from the press before he was anathematized and his book proscribed. The merciless attack that had already been commenced upon Herndon portended danger to them. Nor had they long to wait. In December, 1872, they were approached by Reed and his coadjutors. They were informed that the idol which their ruthless iconoclasm had helped to break must be repaired. They were given to understand that if they repented of the part they had performed and recanted, that peace would be their portion here and endless bliss hereafter; but that if they did not, endless misery would begin on Jan. 1, A.D. 1873.

The situation was critical. They did not like to tell the world that they had borne false witness against the dead, nor did they, any more than Galileo, wish to wear a martyr's crown. A compromise was finally effected It was incidentally ascertained by Reed that their evidence as presented by Lamon was not originally given in the shape of a letter or a written statement, but orally. A happy thought suggested itself—one worthy of the unscrupulous theological pettifogger that he is. The thought was this: "Say to the public, or rather let me say it for you, that you did not write a word of the testimony attributed to you." Just as a witness in court might point to the stenographer's report of his testimony and say, "I did not write a word of that."

In addition to this, Mr. Stuart, in endeavoring to explain away, as far as possible, the obnoxious character of his testimony, declared that some things which he did say at the time his testimony was given had been omitted; while something he did not say was inserted. They were both trivial matters, hardly worthy of notice, even if true, and having no especial bearing upon the case. But they served an admirable purpose in enabling Reed to say that the testimony adduced by Lamon was "abridged and distorted."

Stuart's disclaimer, then, divested of its misleading verbiage, contains but two points. In the first place, he says: "I could not hav said that 'Dr. Smith tried to convert Lincoln from Infidelity so late as 1858, and couldn't do it.'" This sentence, like everything else in these disclaimers, is cunningly worded and intended to deceive. One would naturally suppose the idea he intends to convey is that he never declared that Dr. Smith tried to convert Lincoln and couldn't do it. This, it has been ascertained, is not his meaning. What he means is this: "I could not hav said that 'Dr. Smith tried to convert Lincoln from Infidelity, so late as 1858, and couldn't do it.'" His denial is a mere quibble about a date. He did undoubtedly say just what he is reported to hav said. But admitting a doubt, and giving him the benefit of this doubt, by throwing out the disputed date, the passage is not less damaging than it was before: "Dr. Smith tried to convert Lincoln from Infidelity, and couldn't do it." But let us omit the entire sentence, and the testimony of Mr. Stuart that remains, about which there is no dispute—that portion of his testimony which he admits to be correct, is as follows:

Lincoln went further against Christian beliefs and doctrins and principles than any man I ever heard; he shocked me. I don't remember the exact line of his argument; suppose it was against the inherent defects, so call d, of the Bible, and on grounds of reason. Lincoln always denied that Jesus was the Christ of God—denied that Jesus was the Son of God, as understood and maintained by the Christian church.

In the second place, Mr. Stuart complains that the rumors concerning Dr. Smith's attempted conversion of Lincoln which he had mentioned to Mr. Herndon at the time of giving his testimony, were omitted. They were; and very properly, too. Mr. Stuart, or any other good lawyer, would hav omitted them. Mr. Herndon desired him to testify about what he knew, and not about what he had heard, especially as he was going to headquarters in regard to these rumors. He wrote to Dr. Smith himself about them, received his testimony, and gave it to the public.

Stuart affects to believe that this story, which Minian Edwards is dragged around by Reed to verify, may possibly hav been true. But in the same sentence, he refutes this idea, and refutes the claim itself, by saying: "I had no personal knowledge as to his alleged change of opinion." Stuart was a family connection of Lincoln, and if Lincoln had been converted, he, as well as every other person in Springfield, would hav known it.

He states that Dr. Smith's first visit to Lincoln was "at the suggestion of a lady friend." To hav avoided another glaring contradiction in the evidence of his witnesses, Reed should hav had Major Stuart state that this "lady friend" was Thomas Lewis. As it is, the account given by Stuart of Dr. Smith's first visit and acquaintance with Lincoln is entirely at variance with the account given by Mr. Lewis in his letter, quoted in chapter I.

Mr. Stuart evidently entertained no very kind opinion of Colonel Lamon's work, and this made him all the more disposed to accede to Reed's demands. His position on the slavery question, for a time, was one which, in the light of subsequent events, he had no reason to be proud of, and Lamon in narrating the acts of Lincoln's life found it necessary frequently to refer to this. Such passages as the following were calculated not only to make him offended at Lamon, but jealous of Herndon: "John T. Stuart was keeping his eye on Lincoln, with the view of keeping him on his side—the totally-dead conservativ side." "Mr. Lincoln was beset by warm friends and by old coadjutors, and besought to pause in his anti-slavery course while there was yet time. Among these there was none more earnest or persuasiv than John T. Stuart, who was but the type of a class. . . . But Mr. Herndon was more than a match for the full array against him. An earnest man, instant in season and out of season, he spoke with the eloquence of apparent truth and of real personal love" (Life of Lincoln, pp. 374, 352).

Colonel Matheny was not prepared to deny the correctness of a single statement in his testimony, but was forced to modify its bearing as a whole. He was made to say: "It does not express my sentiments of Mr. Lincoln's entire life and character." Now, anyone who reads his evidence cannot fail to observe that he did intend to cover Lincoln's entire life and character. There is not in it the slightest intimation that he referred merely to a part of his life. Indeed there is one statement in his evidence which utterly precludes such an assumption. He expressly says: "I never heard that Lincoln changed his views, though his personal and political friend from 1834 to 1860." But Reed must hav a sufficient portion of his life reserved in which to inject the story of his alleged conversion; and so Matheny's offense was condoned on the condition that he retain the earlier part of Lincoln's life for his testimony to rest upon, and concede the remainder to Reed for "The later life and religious sentiments of Lincoln."

(CHAPTER CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

Giordano Bruno.

From the Freethinkers' Magazine.

THOSE WHO OBJECT TO THE MONUMENT JUSTIFY THE MURDER.

The night of the Middle Ages lasted for a thousand years. The first star that enriched the horizon of this universal gloom was Giordano Bruno. He was the herald of the dawn.

He was born in 1550, was educated for a priest, became a Dominican friar. At last his reason revolted against the doctrin of transubstantiation. He could not believe that the entire trinity was in a wafer, or in a swallow of wine. He could not believe that a man could devour the creator of the universe by eating a piece of bread. This led him to investigate other dogmas of the Catholic church, and in every direction he found the same contradictions and impossibilities supported, not by reason, but by faith.

Those who love their enemies threatened his life. He was obliged to flee from his nativ land, and he became a vagabond in nearly every nation of Europe. He declared that he fought not what priests believed, but what they pretended to believe. He was driven from his nativ country because of his astronomical opinions. He had lost confidence in the Bible as a scientific work. He was in danger because he had discovered a truth.

He fled to England. He gave some lectures at Oxford. He found that institution controled by the priests. He found that they were teaching nothing of importance—only the impossible and hurtful. He called Oxford "the widow of true learning." There were in England at that time two men who knew more than the rest of the world. Shakspere was then alive.

Bruno was driven from England. He was regarded as a dangerous man—he had opinions, he inquired after reasons, he expressed confidence in facts. He fled to France. He was not allowed to remain in that country. He discussed things—that was enough. The church said, "Move on." He went to Germany. He was not a believer—he was an investigator. The Germans wanted believers; they regarded the whole Christian system as settled; they wanted witnesses; they wanted men who would assert. So he was driven from Germany.

He returned at last to his nativ land. He found himself without friends, because he had been true, not only to himself, but to the human race. But the world was false to him because he refused to crucify the Christ of his own soul between the two thieves of hypocrisy and bigotry. He was arrested for teaching that there are other worlds than this; that many of the stars are suns around which other worlds revolve; that nature did not exhaust all her energies on this grain of sand called the earth. He believed in a plurality of worlds, in the rotation of this, in the heliocentric theory. For these crimes, and for these alone, he was imprisoned for six years. He was kept in solitary confinement. He was allowed no books, no friends, no visitors. He was denied pen and paper. In the darkness, in the loneliness, he had time to examin the great questions of origin, of existence, of destiny. He put to the test what is called the goodness of God. He found that he could neither depend upon man nor upon any deity. At last the Inquisition demanded him. He was tried, condemned, excommunicated, and sentenced to be burnt.

According to Professor Draper, he believed that this world is animated by an intelligent soul—the cause of forms, but not of matter; that it livs in all things, even in such as seem not to liv; that everything is ready to become organized; that matter is the mother of forms, and then their grave; that matter and the soul of things together constitute God. He was a Pantheist—that is to say, an Atheist. He was a lover of nature—a reaction from the asceticism of the church. He loved the fields, the woods, the streams. He said to his brother priests: Come out of your cells, out of your dungeons; come into the air and light. Throw away your beads and your crosses. Gather flowers; mingle with your fellow-men; hav wives and children; scatter the seeds of joy; throw away the thorns and nettles of your creeds; enjoy the perpetual miracle of life.

On the seventeenth of February, in the year of grace 1600, by the triumphant beast, the church of Rome, this philosopher, this great and splendid man, was burnt. He was offered his liberty if he would recant. There was no God to be offended by his recantation, and yet, as an apostle of what he believed to be the truth, he refused this offer. To those who passed the sentence upon him he said: "It is with greater fear that ye pass this sentence upon me than I receive it." This man, greater than any naturalist of his day, grander than the martyr of any religion, died willingly in defense of what he believed to be the sacred truth. He was great enough to know that real religion will not destroy the joy of life on earth; great enough to know that investigation is not a crime—that the really useful is not hidden in the mysteries of faith. He knew that the Jewish records were below the level of the Greek and Roman myths; that there is no such thing as special providence; that prayer is useless; that liberty and necessity are the same, and that good and evil are but relativ.

He was the first real martyr—neither frightened by perdition, nor bribed by heaven. He was the first of all the world who died for truth without expectation of reward. He did not anticipate a crown of glory. His imagination had not peopled the heavens with angels waiting for his soul. He had not been promised an eternity of joy if he stood firm, nor had he been threatened with the fires of hell if he recanted. He expected as his reward an eternal nothing. Death was to him an everlasting end—nothing beyond but a sleep without a dream, a night without a star, without a dawn—nothing but extinction, blank, utter, and eternal. No crown, no palm, no "Well done, good and faithful servant," no shout of welcome, no song of praise, no smile of God, no kiss of Christ, no mansion in the fair skies—not even a grave within the earth—nothing but ashes, wind-blown and priest-scattered, mixed with the earth and trampled beneath the feet of men and beasts.

The murder of this man will never be completely and perfectly avenged until from Rome shall be swept every vestige of priest and pope, until over the shapeless ruin of St. Peter's, the crumbled Vatican, and the fallen cross, shall rise another monument to Bruno—the thinker, philosopher, philanthropist, Pantheist, and martyr. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Rome in America.

From the immigrants neither national patriotism nor a sense of civic duty can as yet be expected; the pity is that they hav been allowed civic power. Political opinions they can hardly be said to possess, for they hav not had time to learn to know the institutions of their new country. Such of them as are Roman Catholics are ready to stand by whatever party may obtain the favor, or be ready to serve the interests, of their church.—Prof. James Bryce, M.P., in the American Commonwealth, vol. iii, p. 72.

The plea that onlookers sometimes see more of the game than the players must be my excuse, says J. M. Wheeler, one of the editors of the London Freethinker, for uttering a word of warning to our American friends on the growth of the Catholic church in their country. On any question of party politics or personal rivalries it might be impertinent to offer an opinion. Every country has its own difficulties with which it is itself fittest to deal. On such important questions as Mormonism, the Chinese immigrants, negro illiteracy and superstition, laws of marriage and divorce, our views, though definit, would be expressed to Americans with some reserve. But in the case of the Roman Catholic church in America we are dealing with a great religion, whose principles are clearly defined, hav often been manifested in history, and are in blank opposition to those principles upon which the Constitution of the great republic of the West has been founded. No sincere admirer of the republic can regard with unconcern the growth within her midst of an enemy who, if strong enough, must inevitably destroy her, nor should the proverbial sensitivness of our transatlantic friends prevent us from asking them not to disregard with apathetic indifference the lessons gained by the experience of older countries. The danger may not be imminent. That is but the more reason for looking at it in time. A few figures will show that it is growing.

In 1776 the total population of the United States was 3,000,000, and the Roman Catholic population 2,500, or 1-120th. In 1800 total population 5,300,000, Catholic 100,000 or 1-53rd. In 1830 population had increased to 13,000,000, Catholic 600,000, or 1-21st. In 1876 with 40,000,000 the Catholics were 6,500,000, or 1-6th, and they now claim a population of over 7,000,000. In 1840 they had but 18 bishops, they now hav 85. Increase of population and emigration is everywhere encouraged by the Catholic priests with a view of overwhelming by sheer force of numbers the heretics, who restrain their population, and America is the great dumping-ground of what must, with all deference, be considered the scum of Europe.*

In 1883 there were, according to the official report, 6,546 fully ordained Romanist priests in the United States, but the seminaries at Baltimore, Milwaukee, Woodstock, Cincinnati, etc., are turning them out so fast that the number must now approach 8,000. There are also in Europe, American colleges at Rome and at Louvain for the purpose of preparing candidates for the United States. Many are also sent from the Missionary College of All Hallows, Drumcondra, Ireland. All these are virtually an army of occupation under orders from Rome, and owning allegiance by no means to the land of their residence, but to the pope at Rome.

The United States is considered not as a Christian but as a heathen land to be missionized. Hence the whole of the affairs of the Catholic church are legally conducted at Rome through the Congregation De Propaganda Fide. No parishes hav been canonically instituted as in Canada and Mexico, and consequently there are, save in few instances, no parish priests properly so-called. The priests are ordained sub titulo missionis, and are bound in obedience only to the bishops, who, in their turn, are bound to Rome. They are citizens of the American republic in no other sense than that they dwell there to propagate their master's power. To this end they use without scruple the Roman Catholic vote.

Now the Roman Catholic voter is a factor in politics, which those who most dislike him cannot afford to leave out of account. He is a power to be courted and dreaded. His name is Legion. He votes en masse, and his vote can never be surely counted on until Sunday mass before the election, when the word is passed round "so and so is the man"—under penalty of spiritual censures. The man, of course, is the one who has privately engaged to procure the largest subsidy for the institutions of the church. Wherever the Catholic vote is a power there is political corruption. When the Tweed ring in New York was exposed, its managers were politely invited to subscribe to the Catholic cathedral. The invitation brought nearly $200,000, and, to the astonishment of good citizens, Tweed was, despite his exposure, reëlected to the state senate. The city contractors under Tweed obtained double prices from the public treasury for their work; but before they secured a contract they were invited to subscribe large sums to Roman Catholic institutions and did so. The condition of the Catholic vote is always the same—aid to the church; grants of real estate and donations from the public funds to its schools and charities, many of which hav been instituted with the express purpose of subserving the interests of the church under pretexts of benevolence. In New York alone in one year the Roman Catholic church obtained more than $400,000, or £80,000, from the public treasury, and throughout New England (which might now as appropriately be called New Ireland) the same practice of virtually establishing and endowing a sect extensivly prevails.

The continual acquisition of real estate by the church, or indeed by any corporation, is a serious matter. Priests having no heirs among whom to divide the wealth, often gained by threatening the aged and sick with the terrors of the next world,* it accumulates in a rate altogether disproportionate with that of the rest of the community. All the old countries hav experienced this. In England before the stringent statutes of mortmain the church had got possession of one-third of the property of the kingdom, and Blackstone says that but for these statutes ecclesiastical corporations would hav engulfed the whole real estate of the country. Once allow a church the right to acquire, hold, and use property without taxation and without limit, and resort must finally be had to confiscation to preserve something for the people. The Catholic countries, Italy, Spain, and Mexico, hav found this, and hav been forced in their need to fall back on the stores accumulated by their black armies of non-producing priests, monks, and nuns.

An equally serious matter is the recognition of sects in the matter of public education, and the division of the public funds among sectarian schools. To this end all the efforts of the Catholic authorities in America are now being directed. The motto of the republic has been Free Religion, a Free State, and Free Schools. Break down the last and the former may soon follow. Here again America should heed the experience of Europe. Wherever the Catholic church has had the power it has permitted no schools to exist, and allowed no one to teach unless approved by ecclesiastical authorities. Indeed in all things it places ecclesiastical laws above civil ones, and anathematizes all who say the state has any authority over the church. On the all-important question of marriage it declares that no true union can be contracted without the participation of the church. Civil law holds it bigamy for a man to hav two wives. The church holds that if the first wife is not a Catholic, and the first marriage not performed by the church, there has been no true marriage, and consequently no true bigamy. The first allegiance of the Catholic must ever be paid to his church. His duties as a citizen hav a secondary and wholly subordinate position, as inferior indeed as man is supposed to be to God. It is just because Catholicism is the most consistent in its pretensions that it is the most dangerous of religions.

The church of Rome in America is, indeed, an imperium in imperio. Difference of religious belief holds the Catholics together and makes them retain a body of separate opinion able to resist the solvent power of its American environment. The proof is in the Catholic journals, which, for instance, when recently the American legation at Rome intervened to prevent the sale of the American College by the Italian government, boasted that Signor Crispi had been ordered to halt under threat of war, and declared that the concession was but a prelude to a crusade which would restore the pope his temporal power.

* Mr. Dexter A. Hawkins, of the New York bar, gives figures showing that a child trained by Catholics is three and a half times as likely to become a pauper, and more than three and a quarter times as likely to get into jail, as a child trained in the free public American schools.

*The instructions given in the secret manual of the Jesuits, are to be on the watch for aged people of large estates who hav no children; or if they hav children, then to excite prejudice against them, and obtain wills, if possible, giving their estates to the institutions of the church.

Our friends in the United States should note what the Jesuits hav been doing in Canada. The recent act, by which $400,000 hav been paid out of the public funds to the Society of Jesus, is, as Prof. Goldwin Smith points out in the current number of Macmillan's Magazine, but one of a series of steps, having for their object the establishment of the Catholic church, with the pope as the recognized head. The act, indeed, by submitting the settlement to the pope for sanction, formally recognizes his authority in Canadian legislation, and no government is strong enough to exercise its veto against this innovation. Protestants and Freethinkers are divided or apathetic, but the church, which knows what it wants, can, barring its illiterates, show its power at the polls to the very last man.

I hav called this a note of warning. It is not one of fear. America has the strength of youth. Let it but heed the experience of age, and it will soon grapple with and overthrow the power that threatens to nullify its grand experiment of a self-governing people.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Vice-President, 120 Lexington ave., New York city.
T. B. WAKEMAN, Vice-President, 93 Nassau street, New York city.
J. E. REMSBURG, Vice-President, ... Oak Mills, Kan.
JULIET H. SEVERANCE, Vice President, . . . Milwaukee, Wis.
IDA C CRADDOCK, Secretary, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
F. C. MENDE, Treasurer, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, Ida C. Craddock, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
TREASURER, F. C. Mende, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

What are the Facts?

Several persons seem to hav misapprehended the real action of the Congress of the American Secular Union, recently held in Philadelphia; and I desire to set them right.

1. The preamble to the Constitution was not changed, save to affirm that the government and Constitution of the United States are founded upon "no religion"—least of all upon the Christian religion. No fault can be found with this.

2. Articles I and II are precisely as in the old constitution, except that "American Secular Union" is substituted for "National Liberal League."

3. Article III was only changed so as to make the "Nine Demands" more emphatic, as regards the "not reading of any Bible" in the public schools, and considering Sunday not as a religious, but as an economic institution, for which many "physiological and other secular reasons can be given." How any one can suppose that this can infringe upon the rights of a man to do just what he pleases on Sunday, provided he does not interfere with the rights of others, I cannot imagin.

4. But Article IV seems to be the great stumbling-block, and needs to be examined very carefully. The whole article reads thus:

"Article IV. The American Secular Union is strictly unsectarian and non-partisan in both politics and religion, but will use any and all honorable means to secure its objects as above stated. It is not either publicly or privately committed to the advancement of any system of religious belief or disbelief, but honestly welcomes all persons, of whatever faith or party, to its membership, on the basis of 'no union of church and state.' The word secular is here used in its broadest sense, as applied to the state, and not to any system of religion or philosophy."

Certainly this is true. Are we sectarian or partisan, and are we in any way committed to a creed? Do we not welcome all persons, on the one condition of "no union of church and state?" But the objector's difficulty with this article lies in the closing paragraph. Let us look at this. Please to point out one single word in the old constitution at variance with this statement. Is not the whole object of our society state Secularization? I said this at first, in accepting the presidency; and no man for a whole year has made any objection. There is not a word from beginning to end regarding Secularism as a religion or philosophy in our constitution, old or new.

If by Secularism we mean a system of religion or philosophy, why not say so in so many words, and not attempt to say one thing while we mean another? Let there be no disguises, no cloaking of our real faith by false pretense. I hav no objections to make to those who regard Secularism as a religion and a philosophy; but, in the matter of the Demands of Liberalism for state Secularization, we cannot insist upon everybody else accepting this view, provided they are right on the question of state Secularization.

I see no compromise in thus acting—no "retrogressiv movement" nor "bowing of the knee." Moreover, those who wish can hav all of Secularism as a philosophy that they desire, in their local organizations, as these are declared "absolutely independent," and as the "effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient coöperation of the freest kind with the American Secular Union and with other local societies." If Spiritualists, or Unitarians, or Jews, or even orthodox Christians see proper to organize a Secular society, let them do so, without giving up any of their peculiar beliefs; and so long as they go for state Secularization we will fellowship them, without accepting their doctrinal tenets. Indeed, there can be no hope of Secularizing the state unless we can enlist those who are far from accepting Secularism as a religion and philosophy, as they are a very large majority, while those who do accept it are as but one in a thousand. Why take such a narrow view of this subject, and practically ruin a great movement, for the sake of that which we are at perfect liberty to hold as individual local societies? Already, in the city of Philadelphia, we hav as an auxiliary a German society, who own their own building, and who hav two thousand children in their Liberal Sunday-school! Instead of having one Secular society, we hav two, and shall hav ten! Let others go and do likewise, instead of sulking in their tents, or openly throwing stones.

Some other amendments were adopted, all tending to unify and giv greater efficiency to our society, and to none of which hav any objections been made.

We hav a great work before us. The Blair bills will soon come up again, and we must be prepared to "beard the lion in his den." The National Reform Association has seven district secretaries, and even the Women's Christian Temperance Union has recently resolved in Chicago that "God in Christ is the king of nations, and as such should be acknowledged in our government, and his word made the basis of our laws." If we cannot get the American Secular Union out of the rut in which it has accomplished little or nothing for the last several years, we might as well giv up. We had two or three hundred auxiliary societies a few years ago. Now we hav only a dozen or two that are alive—and doing nothing.

I did not desire the presidency of the society, as is well known, and Miss Craddock can command several hundred dollars more than we hav agreed to giv her. Giv us a fair trial, and if we do not do something you need not turn us out next year, but we will go out. I think it very unfair to criticise Dr. McGlynn and Rev. M. J. Savage, as they both planted themselvs upon our platform, fair and square. Our congress did not cost us much more than $100, and our collections amounted to nearly one-half of this sum. Mr. Washburn was invited to speak with Mr. Wakeman, but was prevented by sickness from accepting.

R. B. WESTBROOK,
Pres. American Secular Union.

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 16, 1889.

Washington Liberals to Organize.

FRIEND MACDONALD: Your kind letter of October 30th is to hand, and in behalf of the Walla Walla Liberal Club and the Liberals of Washington allow me to thank you for your interest and efforts in our behalf.

The Liberals of the Northwest are awaking to the fact that organization is a necessity if we would preserve our liberties as guaranteed by the United States Constitution.

The domination of the church party in many of the Eastern states, culminating in the passage of laws inimical to our liberties as citizens of free America, has taught us of the Pacific coast what to expect if we fail to assert and maintain our constitutional birthright of freedom. And we intend to profit by your sad experience.

A call has been issued by a committee appointed by the Walla Walla Liberal Club, to all the Liberals of Washington, to meet on the anniversary of Paine's birthday, in 1890, at Seattle, to there form a state Secular Union, on a sound, practical, business basis.

From the many replies, all promising financial aid and coöperation, we hav every reason to hope that our efforts at organization will be a success.

We expect a grand rally of Liberals at Seattle.

We are under obligations to Mr. R. B. Westbrook, president of the American Secular Union, for the valuable information he has given us in his last annual report to the Union.

We wish every Liberal in our state of Washington to get THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 2d, in which this report can be found, and giv the suggestions and proposed methods of Mr. Westbrook their earnest consideration.

The American Secular Union, Mr. Westbrook says, was not the success it should hav been, because it was not run on strictly business principles. His outlines of the duties of the Union are just what Unions are formed to do.

The duties of the corresponding secretary are clearly defined, and meet our hearty approval.

And we ask the Liberals of Washington to avail themselvs of the valuable practical suggestions of the worthy president of the American Secular Union.

We are pleased that your valuable paper has such a wide-spread circulation in our state, and again thank you for your kind interest in our success.

A. W. CALDER, Sec. Walla Walla Liberal Club.

Do They Believe in Free Speech?

The clergy, with comparativly few exceptions, denounce debate on the ground that it begets ill-will. On this account they profess to look upon it with disfavor.

That much of the debating which Christians hav conducted among themselvs, and against Antichristians, was, and is, ill-natured, no one who has carefully studied ecclesiastical history will deny. The newspapers report that the late Women's Christian Temperance Union national convention, assembled in Chicago, composed of refined—yes, refined—Christian women, was characterized by very uncharitable proceedings. "Women and mothers, professing to be Christian and temperance workers, in a large, public hall, hissing to the echo a public spirited woman of their ranks because she, with thousands of others, differed in her opinion, about the best method of work, from the convention"—this is the description of the Des Moines Register.

Why could they not treat that lady respectfully, at least? I will tell you why. Because Christians are not instructed in the basic principles of mental liberty. Had they understood the meaning of free speech those ladies would hav abstained from those disgraceful hisses which will cover them with shame before the nation, for he or she who believes in free speech can never consistently hiss a speaker, or otherwise misbehave, in public or private assemblies.

I would suggest to those ladies that they spend less time in "worshiping" God and study Hedge's "Rules of Logic," Rev. Dr. Buck on Controversies, and Jamieson's "The Bible in Favor of Debate." This last-mentioned tract will be sent free to all who choose to send to me for it. Address,

Des Moines, Ia. W. F. JAMIESON.

Senselessness of Theology.

True, in all things pertaining to created and creating existences embracing matter, form, and force, nature has stood and stands alone supreme, infinit, everlasting, invariable, and never wrong. Its functional ways as marked on every side giv to philosophy and science the pathway to occult cosmic existences which otherwise would hav remained in obscurity, to the serious obstruction of man's general enlightenment. Its manifest works alone display its faithful character, the stay and director of the universe; and, above all, it among other essential gifts gave and givs to all sensate organisms the faculty of reason, wherewith their lines of life might be chosen for the attainment of truth and highest happiness as well as for the benefit of society at large. Still the channels of perversity were left open, soon to be filled by the votaries of superstition and of baseless religion. We hold religion to be but a form of worship put to use by impulses of fear or favor irrespectiv of gods or men, and naturally having no relationship to the beneficent dicta of nature's ethics. The organisms of alleged piety sustained by God, however, hav ever claimed all and sought the control of all, too successfully it should be noted.

Let us traverse this case a bit. It has been long noted that its outer presentments hav studiously put on to view the show and mood, though "meek and lowly," of the armored attractions of God's commissioned crusaders, having also the charge of Jesus. There are two or more considered important institutions besides, which are held by them to the same responsibility. These are the peopling of heaven and enlarging the torments of hell. Either of these, even as a myth, is a model of irrationalism. Not one square foot of support could be found for either among the props of reason or science; yet they hav long served to help on the perversions, in the minds of countless millions of our race, relating to the affairs of religion.

What, then, may fairly be said touching the inner aims and motivs amid these works spoken of as a whole? The nature and force of man's regard for his own interests is too well known to call for a fresh measure of it now. It may simply be said that, as a rule, it flushes all. Deacons, priests, bishops, cardinals, and popes are and hav ever been in this same category. Mammon, power, and private grandeur must constitute the prime factors of the whole range of their undertakings. These first, souls to be saved next to be considered. N.B.—They add, when brought under clerical domination, in some degree to the enlargement of the first desire. The examples and admonitions of the alleged Jesus pale now, shadowed by mammon. No gospel crusader at this stage will allow himself, like his alleged Jesus, to liv in poverty and but barely covered, depending upon corn and fish not in part his own for sustenance; and should this state of the case be now enforced generally by rule against the Christian propagandists, at least, surely its whole fabric would soon fall. D.

MR. F. NEWMAN, who looks on toleration as the result of intellectual progress, says: Nevertheless, not only does the Old Testament justify bloody persecution, but the New teaches that God will visit men with fiery vengeance for holding an erroneous creed.—Buckle.

Priest-Ridden Quebec.

Ever since the circumstances attending the Jesuits' estates legislation by the National party of the province of Quebec, by which $400,000 from the public funds was conferred upon a secret order of the church, were made public, the keenest inquiry, says a correspondent of the Times of this city, has been made into the workings and organization of that system which is able for its own endowment to lay hands upon the revenues of the country in defiance of the constitution, which is alleged to guarantee equal rights to all. Attention has lately been centered upon the extent and ramifications of the operations of the church, and every means has been used to obtain an exact estimate of its numerical and financial strength. Its own organs are endeavoring to show that the ecclesiastical establishment, with its tithes and fabrique taxes, is not a burden upon the people; that the habitant is living under an easy yoke, and that he regards these impositions with a large measure of satisfaction.

The same view was put forward by the ecclesiastics of France prior to the Revolution, when the population was 27,000 000. There were then, according to Taine and Delbos, in the Gallican church 18 archbishops and 113 bishops; 28 religious communities, inhabiting 24,089 convents; 60,000 members of the regular clergy and 70,000 of the secular clergy. This gave 1 cleric to every 200 persons in those halcyon days of clericalism; but in Quebec now there is 1 for every 130 persons, or for every 26 families. This conclusion is arrived at after a careful study of a variety of sources, but no outsider can ascertain the exact figures, for the obvious reason that the church is at pains to keep them to herself; and though the church collects her tithes and assessments and is allowed to handle, directly and indirectly, one-fifth of the revenue of the province, and to hav absolute control of public education, it is not permitted to inquire what disposition is made of the money or to learn anything of her financial affairs.

While the anti-Jesuit controversy was at its hight, the Rev. Principal MacVicar made a computation of the value of the property held by the church, and his figures are corroborated by a prominent French Canadian lawyer who has had much to do with clerical investments. From the most reliable sources it appears that the holdings of the church and her orders, including sacred edifices, priests' houses, bishops' residences, convents, seminaries, hospitals, the real estate attached to these structures, and in the form of farm, town, and city property, is worth in the aggregate between $90,000,000 and $110,000,000. By the same calculation it is estimated that the revenue from all sources, including tithes, fabrique taxes, sacramental fees, ordinary dues, pew rents, revenue from real property, from mortgages, and general investments, amounts to not less than $10 000,000, and probably more than $12,000 000.

The property of the church in France just before the Revolution amounted to four milliards of francs and the annual revenue to 200 000 000f., or $41,000 000. There was a population of 27,000 000 to support the burden by paying $1.50 apiece, while in Quebec it is borne by 1,000 000 persons, who are obliged to pay from $10 to $12 each. It is impossible to obtain by ordinary methods an exact estimate of the numerical strength of the church, but the following statement, as far as it goes, is a correct enumeration:

The priesthood is divided into two classes; in one are included the secular or parish clergy, who are subordinate to the bishops and archbishops; in the other are the members of orders who owe allegiance only to their superior, and through him to the pope. Over them the bishops hav no control. Indeed, in Quebec the bishops are comparativly unimportant, for they exercise no functions whatever. Where the orders are established one order is adapted for parish work, as the Sulpicians, and by the mildness of their rule they are usually in high regard among their people. For instance, the church of Notre Dame in Montreal, one of the finest edifices in America, is merely a parish church, and not a cathedral, for it contains no cathedra or bishop's chair, and the bishops hav no control over its adherents. The Trappists are more adapted for frontier work and for undertaking the pioneer work of the church. The power of the church in Quebec rests in the orders and not among the secular clergy, as in the United States. These orders differ from each other merely in disciplin. The Sulpicians are comparativly bon vivants, hale fellows, going in and out among their flock, while the Trappists are very severe in their lives. They rise at 2 o'clock, after sleeping on an uncovered board, and spend twelve hours of the day in devotional exercises, and six hours in manual labor, usually in the fields; and when the brethren meet they hav little or no conversation with each other, except the usual formula as they pass, Memento mori, remember death.

The Jesuits are less strict and devote their lives to the political work of the church. Each order has its own specialty and does the work to which it is best suited. Of male communities and orders in Quebec there are 15, including 1,267 members.

The female religious communities, including superiors, professed nuns, novices, and postulants, number 27, with 4,723 members.

There are, according to the above statement, in Quebec 37 religious communities of females, with 4,723 professed nuns, novices, and postulants. This brings the whole number of male and female communities to 42, with a membership of 5,900, as far as returns can be obtained, but it is certain the number is much greater. Most of these orders and communities are in charge of convents, hospitals, asylums, colleges, seminaries, and clerical academies, of which the following is a return as complete as can be made.

Diocese.	Convents.	Hospitals.	Seminaries, etc.
Quebec	65	11	4
Three Rivers	11	3	4
Rimouski	6	1	2
Chicoutimi	5	1	2
Nicolet	18	3	2
Montreal	84	27	9
St. Hyacinthe	21	7	14
Sherbrooke	...	1	2
Ottawa	12	2	2
Pontiac	13	3	...
Total	225	63	41

In the second class came the parish clergy, who hav no connection with the orders, and it may be well to giv their numbers with the churches which they own:

Diocese.	Priests.	Churches.
Quebec	358	184
Three Rivers	70	33
Rimouski	92	95
Chicoutimi	55	44
Nicolet	85	50
Prefecture of the Gulf	11	23
Montreal	553	310
Sherbrooke	69	55
Ottawa	81	89
Vicariat of Pontiac	29	14
St. Hyacinthe	156	...
Total	1,559	902

In the diocese of St. Hyacinthe there are 68 parishes, which will giv about 100 churches and bring the number of church edifices in the province up to 1,000. The total number of parishes, exclusiv of those in the diocese of Ottawa, is 671, and for that district no returns are available. Add now the number of parish priests, 1,559; the regular clergy in orders, 1 267; the members of the female communities, 6,250, and a total is obtained of 9,076 persons directly engaged in the service of the church, without including the bishops, and depending for the maintenance of themselvs and their institutions upon the Roman Catholic population of the province. This gives 1 cleric for every 130 persons, when in France even in the pre-revolutionary days it never exceeded 1 for 200. According to the same proportion it would require to look after the spiritual interests of the people of the United States 461,538 members of the clergy. With such an army it would be strange if the Catholic church did not make its influence felt in the political life of Canada.

A Heretical Republican Wail.

The Concordia, Kan., Blade is a Republican paper edited by a Freethinker, and the editor is angry clear through at the result of the recent elections. Hear him:

"Leavenworth county gone Democratic by a large majority." "Sedgewick county gone Democratic by a large majority." "Ford county gone Democratic by a large majority."

The above are nice reports to go forth to the world.

Fanaticism is a nice thing when it gets in its fine work.

When the Prohis get the Democratic party installed in all parts of the country, what will they do next?

When you undertake to decide by law what people shall eat, drink, and wear, you are "looking backward" worse than Bellamy.

Well, Prohi cranks, how do you like it? The Blade has been telling you all along what you might expect, but you were joined to your idols and refused to listen. The Republican party has always claimed to be a party of progress. But when it tries in Kansas, or anywhere else, to carry a principle of retrogression on its back, it is doomed to defeat. The world is progressing and no political party can hope to stay that progress. The Prohibition law is un-American, and totally contrary to the basic principles of our government. It is engineered by a set of men who are unpractical and visionary, and many of them only seek after power and aggrandizement. They do not care two straws whether whisky is sold or not. Their aim is to open the way for the enactment of laws that will inure to their own personal benefit, and keep the people in ignorance and servility. Unable longer to cope with the unbelief of the age, they cast about them for some mode of silencing their opponents by force. The National Reform Association that seeks to incorporate the Jewish Jehovah and his alleged "word" in the Constitution, and secure a more strict observance of the Sunday of the butcher, Constantine, furnishes the inspiration of the Prohibition party. They want religious liberty for themselvs, but they are not willing that everybody else may enjoy liberty. This is the animus of the whole rotten scheme, and this is why people who appreciate American institutions rise in rebellion against them. Unfortunately the present administration is largely dominated by this element. John Wanamaker bought his way into the cabinet and one of his first acts is to try to prevent Sunday mails. If your wife is sick or in trouble in your absence, and writes to you, should the letter be in transit when the "holy" Sabbath comes, you must wait an additional twenty-four hours to hear from your loved ones. This to please the God that Mr. Wanamaker thinks you ought to serve.

If the Republican party attempts to carry all the hypocrisy and cant of the present age it will surely sink under the burden. It has enough to do to settle the great economic problems in the way of finance and taxation which confront it, without helping to regulate the private affairs of the people. A little more of Sunday-school and Presbyterianism, of Prohibition and protection, and the Democrats will hav a walk-away in 1892.

Pleasant Words.

From the London Freethinker.

THE TRUTH SEEKER of New York may claim to be the largest and most influential of American Freethought organs. Established by the late D. M. Bennett in 1876, his persecution gave an impetus to its sale, and his "Letter from Albany Penitentiary," and after his liberation his "Voyage Round the World," put it in the front rank. Mr. Bennett had the good fortune to be assisted by the brothers Macdonald, Eugene and George; the former the present Editor of the paper, and the latter editor of Freethought of San Francisco. Both brothers are men of decided journalistic talent. The former has a ready pen, and hits straight and hard at religious shams; the latter has a quaint, frolicsome humor which places him beside Dod Grile and Artemus Ward. As "The Man with the Badge Pin," George Macdonald's reports of the proceedings of the New York Liberal Club made that body followed with interest on both sides of the Atlantic. THE TRUTH SEEKER, it should be said, was the first journal to follow in the wake of the Freethinker in introducing religious cartoons and comic Bible sketches. Mr. Watson Heston is the artist, and his productions are always quaint in their humor and pointed in conception, and in their execution he has steadily improved.

Lectures and Meetings.

W. F. JAMIESON gave five lectures in Ryan, Ia. One evening the lecture was disturbed by some Roman Catholics. Jamieson was advised to discontinue his lectures because of the excitement among the Catholics, which, it was feared by some, might lead to violence. Mr. Jamieson, before commencing his next evening's lecture, took the pope's bull by the horns, and plainly, but kindly, told the audience that he was an American citizen, and had exercised his inalienable right as such for thirty years to speak his honest convictions, and if any did not like them they were not compelled to be present. "I will not surrender this right if I drop dead in my tracks. When the time comes that I cannot hav free speech I do not want life." He was not further interfered with in the two lectures which followed. He will deliver three lectures in New Hampton, Ia., November 28th, 29th, and 30th. Address, Des Moines, Ia.

ON Friday, the 1st of November, a debate was held at the Liberal League Hall, Newark, N. J., between John R. Charlesworth, of New York, and James Caffrey, of Newark. The subject under discussion was the "Genius of Christianity, and the Inconsistencies of Infidelity." Mr. Caffrey was in the affirmativ, being a Roman Catholic, and Mr. Charlesworth in the negativ side of the question; each speaker was to speak three times in a speech of twenty minutes' duration. The debate was the outcome of a long correspondence in the local newspapers, and consequently a great interest was awakened among the people who came in crowds to hear it. By 8 o'clock the hall was well filled, and when Mr. J. G. Hunter, the president of the Newark Liberal League, who occupied the chair, called for order, there was scarcely standing-room to be obtained. Among the audience were several ladies who seemed deeply interested in the proceedings. One noticeable feature during the meeting was the presence of the police, who had been applied for by Mr. Caffrey "to preserve order," although their services were not needed, still the Liberals did not object, because they were "Irish Catholics," and as they were compelled to stay and listen to Mr. Charlesworth as well as Mr. Caffrey, they probably heard something which they had never heard before, and which might possibly set them pondering and thinking. The debate was a one-sided affair throughout, for Mr. Caffrey had no other object in view than to "waste his allotted time," and this he carried on to such an extent that he wearied the audience, and, indeed, they seemed to gladly welcome the end of his remarks, for he never advanced an argument, nor even attempted to meet one of the many put before him by Mr. Charlesworth. Once, during his remarks, Mr. Caffrey grew so grossly personal to his opponent that the audience interrupted him with cries of, "Look out there!" "Stop that!" and it was only when the chairman was compelled to interpose that he desisted. He gave as a reason for indulging in personalities that Mr. Charlesworth was an Englishman and he was an Irishman, and he looked upon this debate as a continuation of the old fights that took place between the Saxon and the Celt. However, Mr. Charlesworth talked on as best he could under the circumstances, and severely rebuked him for introducing race hatreds and prejudices during that discussion. However, Mr. Charlesworth found plenty to say, and gave Mr. Caffrey such a conglomeration of Infidel arguments that, if he endeavors to investigate them, he will hav sufficient work before him to last him a lifetime. At the conclusion of the discussion large crowds rushed up to the platform to congratulate Mr. Charlesworth upon his success. Although the reporters were present, still the local papers did not publish what could be called an impartial report, for they attributed sayings to Mr. Charlesworth which he never uttered, or omitted to publish what he really did say. Among the company present were a few Roman Catholics, and one of them, an old lady, would frequently giv vent to the remark, "May God forgiv you!" whenever Mr. Charlesworth said anything that sounded to them like blasphemy. The result was an overwhelming success for the Liberals, who were highly pleased with Mr. Charlesworth's part of the debate, and they hope that the effect will be to keep Mr. Caffrey quiet in the future, for he had previously been very offensiv in his remarks toward them, rushing into print at the least thing, and challenging all Infidels to a debate. At last he got one to meet him, and was literally vanquished. Mr. Charlesworth now proposes to issue a challenge to any Christian in Newark that may be willing to meet him.

Communications.

The World's Fair and the Discovery of America.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 9th, John Felix Gonzales charges me with slandering Christopher Columbus and unduly praising Martin Alonzo, in my article which was published October 19th. He does not specify in what I hav slandered Columbus, but devotes the most of his article to abusing Martin Alonzo, whom he calls a "traitor to Columbus," etc. Now, the fact is, that I hav told nothing but the truth, which is bad enough, about Columbus. He started, probably, as a murderer of the pilot, and the others who he says "happened to die in his house," and then continued as a robber of the reputation of the dead pilot, whose name he concealed, while using the knowledge obtained from his chart to trade on and to sail by. No historian says that Columbus ever claimed to hav discovered a continent. No one says that he ever visited North America. All the early historians out of Spain say that he sailed by a chart to the West Indies. He always insisted, until he died in the year 1506, that the islands he had visited were a part of India in Asia. He called the nativs of the islands "Indians," who retained the name, which was afterward extended to the nativs of the continent upon its discovery by Americus. In Spain the Inquisition had full control, and would not allow any accounts to be published of new lands visited by voyagers until after its approval. The "History of Columbus" by Fernando, the illegitimate son of Columbus, was called by Irving "the corner-stone of the American continent." From this history came many of the fictitious stories about Columbus that infest our school geographies. Fernando was biased to glorify his father as much as possible, and so much so as to be unreliable.

Alexander VI., who was then pope, and a Spaniard by birth, granted to Spain, after the first voyage of Columbus, all the lands that he should conquer, which, perhaps, a pope who was born in some other country would not hav done.

As to Martin Alonzo, I did not particularly praise him, but merely quoted from the logbook of Columbus his recorded words about the chart by which he sailed, and the advice given him by his chief, Captain Martin Alonzo, and also what numerous witnesses testified about his having the course changed to the southwest to reach the lands down on the chart.

The story coined by Fernando about the queen of Spain offering to pledge her jewels to defray the expense of the expedition, was ridiculous on the face of it. "The treasury of the queen had received an extraordinary increase from her perfidious conduct toward the Moors of Malaga, from whom she had obtained millions, holding out the hope of ransom, who, when they had given up all the treasure they possessed, were sold into slavery." The expense of the expedition was first levied upon the little town of Palos by a royal order dated April 30, 1492, to provide "two caravels, at your own expense, for the space of twelve months," etc. These two vessels were soon scuttled by some of the populace who had no confidence in Columbus. Then Martin Alonzo Pinzon and Vincent Yanez Pinzon, honorable citizens of the town, came forward and equipped a somewhat larger vessel, the St. Mary, in which Columbus himself went as "admiral," while the two Pinzons went in the smaller vessels, one Martin Alonzo as captain of the Pinta, and the other, Vincent Alonzo, as captain of the Nina. But during the voyage the Pinta and Nina always went ahead, while Columbus, who was a poor navigator, and in his various voyages usually lost the vessel he was in, followed after them as best he could, for his logbook frequently states that the other vessels had to "lie by for the admiral."

Land was first discovered from the "Pinta, being far ahead," by a sailor usually called "Roderigo de Triana," who was defrauded of his justly earned pension of thirty crowns a year, which was yearly paid to Columbus in the shambles of Seville, because he said that he had seen about 10 o'clock on the previous evening a light. He, however, said nothing about it until the next morning after the sailor had seen the land. From the rate they were sailing, and as his vessel was "far in the rear," the St. Mary must then hav been at least fifty miles from the flat shores of San Salvador, the first land reached.

The light that he said he saw, his son Fernando explained was a "spiritual light," due to his Christ-bearing character, which his name, Christopher, was especially taken on to indicate.

Christopher was made a saint in the Roman Catholic church in the year 1525, usually stated to be some other "Christ bearer," but when the crimes of Columbus shall be forgotten, if ever, the church will say it was always intended for him.

Mr. Gonzales also finds fault with me because he says what I hav written "is apt to annul the enthusiasm of the whole country for the exposition of 1892," which he says "cannot but do good in every sense to this republic."

On the contrary, I think that as Columbus has been demonstrated to be a robber and a fraud, all the expositions possible in his favor could only do harm to the republic, while only a small exposition in 1497 in honor of Americus the real discoverer would do a great deal of good.

It may be proper for Mr. Gonzales, who, from his name, is probably a Spaniard, and may probably also be a papist, to follow the lead of the Spanish born pope, Alexander VI., but why "Freethinkers" should follow the same lead does not fully appear.

We can properly criticise Christopher the bogus discoverer, who sailed by a chart and went west, or Polo the longbow-man, who is said to hav gone east, whose memoirs, though dated back to the thirteenth century, were first published soon after the death of Columbus, as properly as we may criticise Christ and Paul, of the Syrians, Castor and Pollux, of the Latins, Bacchus and Apollo, of the Greeks, or Crishna and Kapila, of the Hindoos, or any other public characters, whether mythological or real. A Freethinker in America need not follow the lead of the Spanish Inquisition. As for me, I will not.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 12, 1889. HENRY N. STONE.

More Testimony Concerning Lincoln.

By chance I was handed a TRUTH SEEKER of October 26th. The first thing I met on opening the paper was, "Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?" chapter iv, by John E. Remsburg. In the spring of 1859 we moved into Livingston county, Mo., near Chillicothe. We at once became acquainted with a man by the name of William Jeeter. Mr. Jeeter was a nativ of Kentucky, and, if I mistake not, was born and raised in the same part of the country that Mr. Lincoln was, but about that I am not sure. Mr. Jeeter told me that Lincoln and himself settled in Illinois when they were young men, and boarded and roomed together for a number of years. He said he knew every act of Lincoln's life up to the time he (Jeeter) left Illinois, a few years before Mr. Lincoln's nomination for the presidency. I was helping Jeeter build a house for himself when we received the news of Mr. Lincoln's nomination; that is why we came to speak so particularly about him. Mr. Jeeter told me that Mr. Lincoln was not a believer in the Christian religion; that is, he did not believe the Bible was an inspired work, nor that Jesus Christ was the son of God. "Nevertheless," said Mr. Jeeter, "he was one of the most honest men I ever knew. If I had a million dollars I wouldn't be afraid to trust it to Lincoln without the scratch of a pen, I know the man so well." Mr. Jeeter was a strong believer in the Christian religion and a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, and a very fine and reliable man. I hav never heard from Mr. Jeeter since the war. If he is still living he is quite an old man, as he was several years my senior, and I am sixty-four. He also told me a number of anecdotes about Mr. Lincoln, some of which I still remember. If Mr. Jeeter is still living, from what I learned of him, I do not think there is a man in the United States that is better posted concerning the early life of Mr. Lincoln than he is. In conclusion, if Mr. Remsburg or any-one else wishes to know of my reliability concerning this matter, if they will write to me at Santa Ana, Orange county, Cal., I will refer them to reliable parties living in Leavenworth and Leavenworth county, Kan., that hav been acquainted with me between twenty and thirty years, that, I think, will satisfy them. WILLIAM BISSETT.

Santa Ana, Nov. 4, 1889.

The Name "Jesus."

THE TRUTH SEEKER for Oct. 26, 1889, publishes an article "from the New Orleans Daily States," written by one "G. W. D.," dated at "Mexico, Sept. 19, 1889." The burden of the whole song as sung by "G. W. D." seems to be the implied sacrilegious blasphemy in the words, "Jesus, get me a cocktail." The name "Jesus," in Spanish, is pronounced as though spelled Hay-soos, the accent on the second syllable, and the first syllable pronounced short. "G. W. D." goes off into holy fits, or sanctimonious spasms, simply because his Indian mozo was very properly named Jesus de Git-over-the-Fence; and in giving vent to his horror at this specimen of sacrilege "G. W. D." calls it "such hideous blasphemy." Will "G. W. D.," or some one else, please explain why this is "hideous blasphemy?" Had his copper-colored mozo been named John, James, or Joshua, would this fact, too, hav been "hideous blasphemy?" The name Jesus is just as common as is either James, John, or Joshua, and if "hideous blasphemy" in one case, it is the same in all three cases. To tell the unvarnished truth, "though the heavens fall," "G. W. D." simply shows to the public his utter ignorance of a very plain and simple fact. At the time that the alleged "Jesus" of the Christians was on earth, and hundreds of years prior thereto, as also up to the present time, there were then and are now, many persons bearing the name Jesus; many of these were of sufficient importance, politically and religiously, to deserve mention of Josephus, in his history of the Jewish nation. Are we then to infer that "G. W. D." is so ignorant of these simple historical facts that he believes there was only one Jesus, and that one "his Lord and savior," and for anyone else to bear that "holy" name is "hideous blasphemy?" If not this, what then, please?

In Josephus's "Antiquities of the Jews," book 18, chapter iii, in the third verse, he says: "Now, there was, about this time, Jesus, a wise man, . . ." However, the whole of chapter three, with the exception of the third verse, treats of a sedition amongst the Jews; the second verse of this chapter ends with these words: "And thus an end was put to this sedition." The fourth verse of this same chapter begins with these words: "About the same time also another sad calamity put the Jews into disorder." The language of the whole chapter, exclusiv of the third verse, goes to prove conclusivly and without doubt, that the third verse is unquestionably an interpolation; as neither the preceding, nor the verse following, hav any intelligent relation to the third verse; and, furthermore, this third verse can be left out in toto, leaving the sense and continuity of the chapter complete. In book 15, chapter iii, the following language is used: "It was Antiochus Epiphanes who first brake that law, and deprived Jesus, and made his brother Onias high priest in his stead." This Antiochus Epiphanes was a Syrian monarch, by many considered the God of the prophet Ezekiel, who made war against the Jews, overcoming them in battle, captured their capital city Jerusalem, plundered the temple; and, in a word, made himself superlativly obnoxious to the circumcised. The "law" referred to by the distinguished author, which was "first brake" by the Syrian monarch, was the Jewish ecclesiastical law, which denies the authority of the secular powers to interfere with the rites and ceremonies of the church; in other words, the right to remove the high priest and to substitute another. The author says this was done by "Antiochus Epiphanes who first brake that law." In book 6, chapter v, "Wars of the Jews," after first speaking of the many curious and remarkable phenomena which occurred at various times, for a period of several years prior to the siege of Jerusalem by Titus, and during the procuratorship of Albinus, amongst other matters he says: "But, what is still more terrible, there was one Jesus, the son of Ananus, a plebeian and a husbandman, who, four years before the war began, and at a time when the city was in very great peace and prosperity, came to that feast whereon it is our custom for everyone to make tabernacles to God in the temple, began on a sudden to cry aloud, 'A voice from the east, a voice from the west, a voice from the four winds, a voice against Jerusalem and the holy house, a voice against the bridegrooms and the brides, and a voice against this whole people.'" However, certain of the populace becoming tired of this ominous yell, they caught the crazy fellow, and gave him severe whippings, but all to no purpose, for the crank continued his warning cry. "Hereupon," says the author, "our rulers, supposing, as the case proved to be, that this was a sort of divine fury in the man, brought him to the Roman procurator, where he was whipped till his bones were laid bare." Finally, "Albinus took him to be a madman, and dismissed him." In the twelfth book of "Antiquities," chapter v, which relates principally of the expedition of Antiochus against Jerusalem, the author says: "About this time, upon the death of Onias the high priest, they gave the high priesthood to Jesus, his brother. But this Jesus, who was the brother of Onias, was deprived of the high priesthood by the king, who was angry with him, and gave it to his younger brother, whose name also was Onias." In book 2, chapter xx, we find another Jesus, son of Sapphias, who was made a general of the Jewish army. Again, in book 20, chapter ix, the historian says: "Festus was now dead, and Albinus was but upon the road. Ananus the high priest assembled the Sanhedrim of judges, and brought before them the brother of Jesus, whose name was James, and some others, and when he had framed an accusation against them as breakers of the law, he delivered them to be stoned to death." In book 4, chapter v, we find mention of another "Jesus, the eldest of the high priests," who makes a speech to the seditious. Notwithstanding this harang, it seems the seditious element overcame the priest party; "for they," says the author (Jesus and others), "were cast out naked, and seen to be the food of dogs and wild beasts. And this at last was the end of Ananus and Jesus." There was also a Jesus of Gamala. Josephus also gives an account of a "Jesus, son of Shaphat, who was the principal head of a band of robbers." This robber Jesus had a band of eight hundred men, but all of these were finally subdued or killed by Vespasian, who afterward became emperor of Rome, and whose son Titus, as general, destroyed the city of Jerusalem.

The name Jeshua was the original root of the name Jesus, but this was afterward changed into Joshua, and finally into plain Jesus. The name "Jesus" is just as common a name to-day, in all the Latin countries, as is the name of John or James amongst the Anglo-Saxon people. Our esteemed friend, "G. W. D.," must needs hunt up something else besides simple "Jesus" if he expects to raise a "hue and cry" of "hideous blasphemy."

All of the foregoing facts are so well known that it does seem superfluous on my part to make mention of them, and, in truth, I really am ashamed to do so; but presuming there are others as ignorant of these matters as "G. W. D." writes himself to be, must be my only excuse to the public. ALBERT F. BANTA.

St. Johns, Ariz.

Of the Heart and of the Soul.

Strangely, in the light of so much intelligence as exists, the human heart, by almost universal acceptance, is held to be the source, the receptacle, and the dispensatory of the qualities which go to the make-up of one's individuality, mentally considered. Writers, statesmen, gospel expounders, all refer to the heart when a point of sincerity is thought to be in demand to make good their arguments. Are there rational grounds for this? We think not! Let us see. The heart has but one function, which is the distribution of the vital fluid—blood—throughout the system. Its function suspended, death ensues.

There are those educated into deep thought who hold to the opinion that animal life is dependent upon an electrical action passing from the stomach to the heart, created by the mastication of food connected with the attendant natural fluids which invariably take part in the process. This idea must hav come from a knowledge of the fact that, so far as is known, electricity is caused by the dissolution of solid substances, caused by destructiv processes. And, as to the theories pertaining to the mental powers of the heart, it is safe to say that dissection shows not a vestige of an organism of this kind in anywise connected therewith. They are marvelously grouped within the surroundings of the skull.

Of the soul.—Passing what the lexicographers may hav said in this connection, who hav ever leaned to religious sentiments in the discharge of their vocation, we are now compelled to treat of a presumptiv, phantom conception. To say that the phrase "soul" is a common reference implying the existence of such a thing, mental attachment or what not, is known to all; but to say that there is or ever was substantial proof of such an existence, cannot truly be said by anyone. True, constructivly, it is commonly joined to Spiritualism by gospel association, but this jointure adds no strength to the case, for the reason that Spiritualism is also of phantom origin. No one has seen a soul; no one has consciously been wafted away by the fans of Spiritualism, and, indeed, there has never been one, there will never be one, capable of rationally defining the forms and functions of these alleged existences. Aberrations of mind and imaginations run wild hav in countless numbers filled the ears of superstitious ones with observed vagaries of these kinds, but these instances were in nearly every case chargeable to ill founded religious sentiment. Oh, indeed! it is pitiful beyond measure to look back over the miseries which hav been imposed upon humanity from earliest times until now by misled and selfish men, inspired by religious phantasies.

Recurring to the soul. Is the soul endowed with form? No, so far as known. Is it endowed with independent will and action? No evidence. Its activities are credited to phantomatic spiritual concepts by the superstitious; it is not recognized by science. Well then, fortunately, there is the book of nature ever open to all, which ever guides to truth and is ever stable. Let us resort to it for knowledge of the soul. It informs us that in every form of life there is provided visible organisms which act upon and facilitate severally the functionary workings of each and every part of the form to which they are attached, save the induction of life itself. This lapse has so far withheld science.

In closing the argument there only remains to be said that nature has developed no form or presentment in any way related to the phantomistic soul or to Spiritualism. D.

Indictment of W. E. Reid, Second Count.

And the grand jurors aforesaid upon their oaths aforesaid further present, that heretofore, to-wit: On the first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred eighty-nine, at, to-wit: the city of Grand Rapids, in the Southern Division of the Western District of Michigan aforesaid, within the jurisdiction of this court, Walter E. Reid, late of said city, had conceived and devised unlawfully and feloniously a scheme and artifice to defraud various persons to the jurors unknown, which said scheme was to be effected and carried out by opening correspondence and communication with divers persons to the grand jurors unknown throughout the United States by means of the Post Office establishment of the United States; said scheme and device being as follows, to-wit: That said Walter E. Reid falsely pretended that he was able to secure communications from the spirit land and from the spirits of persons who had before that time died, from the spirits of the deceased friends of any person who should apply to him and pay him for such pretended services of procuring spirit communications with the spirits of such deceased persons; and falsely pretended that he could procure answers from the spirits of such persons who were deceased and from the spirit land, to questions that should be sent to him in sealed envelopes and without opening said envelopes or causing the same to be and without inspecting the contents of the same, thus falsely pretending that he could communicate with the spirits of such persons and that such spirits would know of the contents of said sealed envelope and giv intelligent and direct answers thereto, which should be of value as information and advice to the persons applying therefor; and a part of said unlawful scheme was to, by means of such pretenses, induce various persons throughout the United States to forward and send to said Walter E Reid the sum of one dollar as a fee for procuring such spirit communication and answers to such questions so to be placed in sealed envelopes in case said envelope was sealed in the ordinary way, that is, without wax or sewing; and to forward for such pretended answers to questions that should be inclosed in an envelope sewed or sealed with wax the sum of five dollars; that said Walter E. Reid, having devised said scheme, then and there, at to-wit, the city of Grand Rapids, in the Southern Division of the Western District of Michigan aforesaid, caused to be printed and caused to be circulated by means of the Post Office establishment of the United States a certain publication or newspaper called the Banner of Life, and in said publication published an article in furtherance of said scheme to so defraud persons out of said sums of one dollar and five dollars respectivly, as above set forth, and which said article so published is substantially as follows:

"DR. W. E. REID, SPIRIT POST-MASTER,
OR
HOW TO OBTAIN A SEALED LETTER FROM YOUR SPIRIT FRIENDS.

"In the first place, take a moment's time to understand fully what a sealed letter consists of. If you are troubled about financial matters, sickness of any description, family trouble, or are undecided what to do about any special matter, think your matters over carefully and then follow the directions given below explicitly, and you will receive prompt attention.

"1st. Write the full name of your spirit friends on the slips of paper.

"2d. Address by the terms of relationship or friendship.

"3d. Ask your question.

"4th. Sign your own name in full.

"When this is done place your questions in an ordinary envelope and seal it. Write a few lines on another slip of paper, giving instructions to whom the reply should be sent, and place your sealed letter and note of instructions in a larger one and address, Dr. W. E. Reid, 28 Canal street, Grand Rapids. Personal in one corner.

"Dr. Reid has answered several thousand letters during the past two years and has been uniformly successful. Of course there are cases when nothing can be obtained, and invariably the money will be refunded if no answer can be given.

"Fees for answering sealed letter, $1, if above directions are followed, and six cents extra for postage.

"If sewed in any manner, $5.

"If sealed with wax, $5."

That in further pursuance of his said scheme to defraud the said Walter E Reid caused to be deposited in the Post Office at Grand Rapids, Michigan, for transmission by the Post Office establishment of the United States to the persons to whom they were directed, said publication called the Banner of Life containing said above described article, with intent to defraud the persons to whom said Banner of Life should be so mailed out of said sums of one dollar and five dollars each in the manner above described, and caused said Banner of Life to be sent by means of the Post Office establishment of the United States to the following named persons at the addresses named, as follows, to-wit: C. Grove, Pewamo, Mich; Charles D. Fisher, rooms 72 and 73 Court Block, St. Paul, Minn; Mrs. J. E. Davidson, St. Paul, Minn.; Henry Imhoff, 244 Main street, room B, Buffalo, N. Y.; Mercy M. Parkhurst, Nunica, Mich.; Fannie B. Arthur, Three Rivers, Mich.; Julius Chaffee, Flint, Mich.; H. H. Deane, Edmore, Mich.; Nathias Joseph, Barnston, Gage county, Neb.; J. H. Wade, Cleveland, O.; Pinckney Dodge, Washington, D. C.; John Rutledge, Montague, Mich.; Amanda Coffman, Pentwater, Mich.; Dewitt C. Curtiss, Dowagiac, Mich.; R. C. Walpole, Kansas City, Mo.; E. R. Cumings, Muskegon, Mich.; James Vincent, Tabor, Ia.

And a large number of other persons within the United States whose names are to the grand jurors unknown. That by means of the Post Office establishment of the United States the said publication containing the said article above set forth, was conveyed to and reached each of the above-named parties, and the other persons to the grand jurors unknown, as aforesaid. And they further find that each of the said persons above named forwarded, in accordance with the invitation in said article so published in the Banner of Life, to said Walter E. Reid, at Grand Rapids, Michigan, a sum of money in amount to correspond with the amount requested in said publication; and the said Walter E. Reid received the said answers, together with the money inclosed in said envelopes, by means of the Post Office of the United States, and did not, as proposed therein, return to said persons or any one of them any such communication from the spirits of any departed persons, as he alleged in his said article so published in the Banner of Life. but falsely and knowingly represented that he could procure such answers for the express purpose of defrauding the said persons out of their said money, and with intent to use the Post Office establishment of the United States in furtherance of and to carry out his said scheme to defraud. That to each of said persons named, and those persons to the grand jurors unknown. said Walter E. Reed forwarded said Banner of Life containing said article above set forth, by means of the Post Office establishment of the United States in the form of a packet and in the form it is usual to forward newspapers through the mails of the United States; all of which is contrary to the form, force, and effect of the act of Congress, in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the United States of America.

Miss Eva R. Ingersoll's Wedding.

There was intense curiosity and interest among the numerous friends of the Ingersoll and Brown families, says the World, relativ to the marriage of Walston Hill Brown and Miss Eva Ingersoll. Colonel Ingersoll himself and all his family hav an intense dislike to any publicity, and as in addition to this Mr. W. H. Brown, who is the head of the well-known firm of W. H. Brown & Brothers, has recently lost his mother, no pains were spared to keep the wedding strictly private.

The handsome drawing-rooms of the Ingersoll home at No. 400 Fifth avenue wore that air early on the morning of the 13th that is sure to pervade on the occasion of an approaching festivity. The decorations were entirely composed of palms and La France roses. The bride came downstairs leaning on her father's arm, he remaining by her during the whole ceremony and giving her away.

Justice George C. Barrett, of the supreme court, who has for many years been a personal friend of Colonel Ingersoll's, officiated, and his address was so beautiful and impressiv that one of the family remarked that it would hav done credit to the colonel himself. Only twelve people, members of the immediate families, witnessed the ceremony. These were Mrs. B. W. Parker, the mother of Mrs. Ingersoll; Colonel and Mrs. Robert G. Ingersoll; Miss Maud R. Ingersoll; Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Farrell; Miss Eva I. Farrell; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Brown; Mr. Herbert Brown; Miss Augusta Brown, and another younger brother of Mr. Brown. After the ceremony, which took place at 9 o'clock, a wedding breakfast was enjoyed.

Mr. Brown is not only well known as head of the banking firm of Walston H. Brown & Brothers, but he has been prominent as the moving spirit of the big contracting firm of Brown, Howard & Co. This firm had big aqueduct contracts, and they are now in litigation with the city for large amounts claimed by them.

The newly married couple left for the West in a private car on the New York Central road. They will make quite an extensiv trip, lasting for several weeks, and on their return will liv with the bride's parents. Colonel Ingersoll, as everyone knows, is devoted to his family, and enjoys nothing more than listening of an evening to his daughters' singing or playing. They are both accomplished musicians.

Colonel Ingersoll has always said that his girls should marry whom they loved, with the condition, however, that they should afterward come home, as he was willing to gain two sons, but not to lose two daughters. They, in their turn, laughingly would say that he should pick out their husbands.

UNFALTERING belief being taught as the first of duties, and all doubt being usually stigmatized as criminal or damnable, a state of mind is formed to which we find no parallel in other fields. Many men and most women, though completely ignorant of the very rudiments of biblical criticism, historical research, or scientific discoveries, though they hav never read a single page, or understood a single proposition of the writings of those whom they condemn, and hav absolutely no rational knowledge either of the arguments by which their faith is defended, or of those by which it has been impugned, will nevertheless adjudicate with the utmost confidence upon every polemical question, denounce, hate, pity, or pray for the conversion of all who dissent from what they hav been taught, assume, as a matter beyond the faintest possibility of doubt, that the opinions they hav received without inquiry must be true, and that the opinions which others hav arrived at by inquiry must be false, and make it a main object of their lives to assail what they call heresy in every way in their power, except by examining the grounds on which it rests. It is possible that the great majority of voices that swell the clamor against every book which is regarded as heretical, are the voices of those who would deem it criminal even to open that book, or to enter into any real, searching, and impartial investigation of the subject to which it relates. Innumerable pulpits support this tone of thought, and represent, with a fervid rhetoric well fitted to excite the nerves and imaginations of women, the deplorable condition of all who deviate from a certain type of opinions or emotions; a blind propagandism or a secret wretchedness penetrates into countless households, poisoning the peace of families, chilling the mental confidence of husband and wife, adding immeasurably to the difficulties which every searcher into truth has to encounter, and diffusing far and wide intellectual timidity, disingenuousness, and hypocrisy.—Lecky.

WE are continually told that civilization and Christianity hav restored to woman her just rights. Meanwhile the wife is the actual bond-servant of her husband; no less so, as far as legal obligation goes, than slaves commonly so called. She vows a lifelong obedience to him at the altar, and is held to it all through her life by law. Casuists may say that the obligation of obedience stops short of participation in crime, but it certainly extends to everything else. She can do no act whatever but by his permission, at least tacit. She can acquire no property but for him; the instant it becomes hers, even if by inheritance, it becomes ipso facto his. In this respect the wife's position under the common law of England is worse than that of slaves in the laws of many countries; by the Roman law, for example, a slave might hav peculium, which, to a certain extent, the law guaranteed him for his exclusiv use.—Mill.

The clergy, with a few honorable exceptions, hav in all modern countries been the avowed enemies of the diffusion of knowledge, the danger of which to their own profession they, by a certain instinct, seem always to hav perceived.—Buckle.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - NOVEMBER 23, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00

Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

FOR THE

Truth Seeker Annual for 1890

W. STEWART ROSS (SALADIN),

Editor of the London Agnostic Journal, author of "God and His Book," "Did Jesus Rise from the Dead?" "Woman," etc.,

HAS WRITTEN AN ARTICLE ENTITLED,

"MOSTLY FOOLS."

Every Freethinker in the country will want to read it.

In renewing your subscription to The Truth Seeker inclose 25 cents and the Annual will be forwarded as soon as issued.

The Catholic Lay Congress.

The Catholic lay congress which met in Baltimore last week is represented by the daily papers to hav been a large and enthusiastic assemblage, and to hav aroused Baltimore as the city has not been aroused since Northern soldiers marched through it to Washington at the beginning of the late war. Of course the laymen could do nothing practical in church affairs, as only the clergy are allowed to direct church policy and plans, but the laymen showed themselvs willing and subservient tools to the general purposes of the hierarchy. And as all speeches made were first submitted in writing to a committee of ecclesiastics, their purport may be taken as indorsed by the church.

There was a great deal said about the pope's temporal sovereignty, and various heated demands were made upon secular governments to guarantee it, but the resolutions epitomizing the sentiment of the Congress and calling out the greatest applause were those on education, Sunday observance, and labor.

"With the church we condemn Nihilism, Socialism, and Communism, and we equally condemn the heartless greed of capital. The remedy must be sought in the mediation of the church through her action on the individual conscience and thereby on society, teaching each its respectiv duties as well as rights, and in such civil enactments as hav been rendered necessary by these altered conditions. As stated by his eminence Cardinal Gibbons: 'Labor has its sacred rights as well as its dignity. Paramount among the rights of the laboring classes is their privilege to organize or to form themselvs into societies for their mutual protection and benefit. In honoring and upholding labor the nation is strengthening its own hands as well as paying a tribute to worth, for a contented and happy working class are the best safeguard of the republic.'"

Simmered down, and allowing for the inability of the laymen to equal the clergy in Jesuitical adroitness of expression, this means just what we hav shown, in the editorial on "Charity as an Economic Remedy," the pope meant in his address to the French workingmen, namely, that the laborer must be content with the position in which God has placed him, obey the church, raise more Catholics, and not aspire to positions above his station in life. The tin-pail brigade of laborers, obedient, careless, happy in poverty, earning just enough to coarsely feed and indifferently clothe the family, with a few dollars over each month for church needs, is what the Catholics mean in this resolution. Charity, guided by the church, will do the rest. The right to organize is the right to organize under the church's domination. It means the guilds of the Middle Ages, when the trades had each its separate guild, but all practically run by the priests. Let the workingmen organize in any other way, and they would stay in the church about as long as Cardinal Taschereau allowed the Knights of Labor to flourish in Quebec.

On Sabbath observance the congress declared:

"There are many Christian issues at which Catholics could come together with non-Catholics and shape civil legislation for the public weal. In spite of rebuff and injustice, and overlooking zealotry, we should seek alliance with non-Catholics for proper Sunday observance. Without going over to the Judaic Sabbath we can bring the masses over to the moderation of the Christian Sunday."

The congress also maintained—and this will not be disputed, we think—that the Catholic church is especially interested in criminals and paupers, and that it should, therefore, take a share in the management of the prisons and charity hospitals controled by the state. Inasmuch as the majority of the inmates of these institutions are Catholics, those who oppose this must necessarily do so on the ground that the church, having reduced the inmates, by keeping them ignorant, to their present condition, has already done them sufficient harm, and may well be prevented from proceeding farther with its work. And we are not prepared to say that the opposers are not right.

But the great emphasis of the congress was placed on the education of the children. This was the subject which the orators found most congenial, and the auditors most heartily applauded when the Catholic idea was advanced. The sentiment of the congress was to the effect that the Catholics believe in public education; they wish the state to enforce it; they are not willing to intrust the performance of so great a matter to the free will of parents or the moral influence of the clergy, but they wish the schools to be denominational, with an equitable distribution of the school fund among the several denominations. As an alternativ to this they would do away with all taxation for school purposes, and leave the providing of the means of education to the piety and zeal of the denominations and the worldly wisdom of unbelievers. That is, they want to unreservedly turn the children over to the sects to educate. Only one delegate spoke in favor of retaining the public schools, and he thought the public schools could be made to answer their intended object by the addition to their curriculum of religious teaching framed upon a classification of the community into Catholics, Protestants, Israelites, and Agnostics. That would necessitate at least four schools for every one now established, and the taxpayers would certainly rebel, even if the scheme were not absurd and futil on its face. There are sects without number within Protestantism; the Jews are divided into orthodox and reform bodies; and the Agnostics could unite on philosophical schools only when the schools did not teach religious philosophy at all, or taught equally all shades of religious speculations—a most useless waste of time for the great body of scholars.

It is, however, well to hav such explicit statements of the intentions and desires of the Romanists regarding our public schools. We hav found out from Senator Blair and the Presbyterian synod of this state just what the Protestants are after, and therefore we now know what we hav to expect from both branches of the great iniquitous religious system which is striving to make the American people Christian by statute.

Charity as an Economic Remedy.

Recently the pope received a deputation of French workingmen, and talked to them concerning the struggles between them and their employers, the capitalists. Here is his solution of the labor problem:

"I am persuaded that the salvation of the laboring classes is to be the work of the church, whose teachings will be held up to the respect of all in our modern society.

"Paganism of old undertook to solve the social problem by confiscating the rights of a portion of the human race—by introducing slavery. Christ came down on earth to teach that the entire human family, nobles and plebeians alike, is called to a share in his divine inheritance; proclaiming that all men are on the same ground the children of his heavenly father, and that all hav been redeemed by the same price.

"This same Christ, our Lord, has taught that to work is the natural condition of man here below; that this condition must be accepted courageously and held in honor, and that to decline to labor is to betray one's duty.

"To giv to the toiler a more efficacious encouragement, Christ added to his teaching his example. Hence it is that, in the words of Tertullian, the rich man who would imitate Christ, has been created to be God's treasurer on earth.

"But even that did not suffice. It was needful to bring together the two extreme social classes—the rich and the poor. This labor Christ intrusted to Charity, and Charity soon found remedies for all social evils, consolation for every grief, creating for that purpose good works and institutions without number, and enkindling the zeal of all in favor of the unfortunate.

"Thus Charity could alone solve the social problem. In former ages her mission was acknowledged and accepted by all."

The burden of this song is, Charity! The workingman must be content with what the charity of the rich, the powerful who hav robbed him, will giv and do to ameliorate his condition. He should not strive for himself, for those appointed by God will look after him and dole out charity under the guidance of the church! That is, they will in the good time coming when the church is restored to her former position in the world.

The time that the pope sighs for was when the church owned about one-half of all the land, and the kings and robber barons and earls and dukes owned the rest. The laboring man then was a serf or peasant, the former owned by the church or lord whose land he was employed in tilling, the latter a tenant of the church or nobles. He was indeed an object of charity, and was cared for as slaveholders usually care for their slaves. He was given a cell to sleep in, coarse bread to eat, and muddy ale to drink. To keep him alive and to fill her coffers the church appointed a large number of holidays—saints' days—when the serfs and peasants could dance on the piece of ground which the church or the lord allowed for common use, drink deep draughts of the ale provided free, and giv any money he might be possessed of to the priests. Both peasants and serfs were taught to be content with the station in life in which God had placed them; taught to labor hard, liv on almost nothing, giv everything to the servants of the church, raise children to take their places when death should take them, and dying, giv anything of value they might hav withheld in their lives to the church to get them through purgatory and along into paradise. The church also ruled the nobles—when she was not fighting them to prevent confiscation of the vast properties she had stolen—and pretended to be a divine arbiter between them and their serfs. It was here that the "charity" of the church came in, for, to gain popularity with the masses, the church would occasionally take the part of the people; but this interference always ended by a substitution of rulers—the church in place of the secular tyrant. The people were a spoil and a prey to both: the one ruling by force of arms, the other by a pretended divine right. And it is this state of society that the pope has in mind when he recalls the time that the church "created good works and institutions without number."

In a true civilization there is no place for charity. One man's right to wring from the earth the means of subsistence is just as good as another's. If the pope has ever heard the word Justice, he will find in it the only permanent solution of the labor question. The kingly and divine robbers hav at last been made to giv up part of their spoil, and now the laborer is clamoring for justice in its distribution. Charity he repudiates; justice he demands. And in abolishing the slavery of pre-Christian and feudal days Christ and the church hav had no part. The doctrins of Jesus are the doctrins by which the church kept the serfs in subjection; had they not been Christians they would hav been rebels ages sooner, and such uprisings as the French Revolution would hav been scattered all through the centuries. The church never opposed slavery until it had been abolished. Indeed, in Mexico, to-day, the Catholic church holds lands and peon slaves just as six hundred years ago she held lands and their peasant cultivators in Europe and England. The talk of the pope about Christ's "efficacious encouragement of the toiler" and the church's improvement of his condition by "charity" is simple rot. What the workingman needs to-day is not faith in the church, but faith in science, in the ability of the human being to find a way of life, a social condition, in which nine-tenths of the people will not be kept miserable that the other tenth may riot in luxury. Justice, justice, justice, must be his cry; not the pitiful whine of "charity, good masters." And it is notable that the poorest and most degraded of the laboring class are now those who accept the doctrins that the pope taught the French workingman—the Roman and Greek Catholics. They are the ones who are content with their station in life, with dirty houses, insufficient food, and rags for clothing. Given plenty of whisky and priests, and such human rubbish as follows the pope would set the world back ten centuries. A man who believes and is satisfied that it should be so—that God made him to be a poor, slothful, hand-to-mouth creature, mentally dependent upon another for the very thoughts he thinks, is not good material out of which to make world-movers. What the world wants is doubt, struggle, discontent, heresy, effort, experiment. These will bring knowledge and wisdom, and out of a social condition wherein one part are robbers and the other part the robbed—a heritage from savagery and religion—man may at last evolve a system of society in which Justice shall be absolute and no man shall take to himself that which belongs equally to all. The labor question will never be settled by faith and charity, and never be very near settlement of any kind until religion is laid aside, and man is free from the influence of the "other world." The French workingmen went to exactly the wrong place for advice.

The Medium Reid's Case.

We print elsewhere the second count of the indictment against W. E. Reid, the medium who alleges that he is a spirit postmaster and can obtain and transmit messages from and to the alleged spirit world. About the time this is being read Mr. Reid will be on trial for using the mail of the United States to advertise his capacity to send and receive such communications, the claim of the postal authorities being that such use of the mails constitutes a fraud, as Mr. Reid can do, and knows he can do, no such thing. The other counts in the indictment are like unto the one we print, but not quite so strongly worded.

We believe that the maxim of the law is that all accused persons are held to be innocent until proven guilty, and therefore it devolves upon the prosecution to prove that Mr. Reid cannot do what he advertises. The prosecution, being Christian, must believe in spirits, must believe that spirits hav communicated with men, and that it is possible for them to do so again. The assumption by Mr. Reid's lawyer that the defendant is required to prove the genuinness of his letters is not, it seems to us, in accord with the spirit of the common law. The indictment alleges that he falsely pretended to obtain letters from the dead; the prosecution should therefore show that such pretension is false; for if not false, no fraud is committed. If there are spirits, and they ever hav communicated with living men, who shall say that they cannot do so now? and who shall determin what is spurious and what is genuin of that which comes from the spirit world?

On the Christian ground, then, Mr. Reid's business is between himself and the believers in mediumship, as paying money for masses is between the humbug priests and the believers in the efficacy of incantations. If Mr. James Vincent, Senior—himself a Spiritualist and author of a book fully as fraudulent in its other-world pretensions as any act of Mr. Reid's can be—is not satisfied with what he got for his dollar, he has only himself to blame for the loss of the money. Mr. Reid's letters from the other world are undoubtedly as genuin as Mr. Vincent's revelations from his dead wife. If Mr. Reid is a fraud, so is Vincent. But what would Mr. Vincent think of a prosecution of himself for "falsely pretending" that his book is the result of inspiration from spirits? Yet if Reid is convicted what is to stop prosecutions of all Spiritualist authors who claim to hav received their words from ghostland? What is to prevent the prosecution of our good old friend Luther Colby for printing in the Banner of Light a "Message Department," in which it is distinctly claimed that the messages are from spirits?

The fact is, all these matters are in the realm of faith, as the Secular Union resolution puts it, and government can rightfully and constitutionally hav nothing to do with them. In our own minds we may hav no doubt that Mr. Reid opens the letters received, and writes the answers from his own knowledge of their contents, or that Mrs. Shelhamer-Longley delivers the spirit-messages printed in the Banner of Light from her own inner consciousness, and according to knowledge she has acquired in this world, but if the folks who pay for these things are satisfied, the government has no business to intervene. Spiritualism is a faith founded on what Spiritualists deem incontestable facts, precisely as Christianity is a faith founded on alleged facts, and people hav an inalienable right to hold any faith they please, no matter how absurd, grotesque, or false it may seem to others. Mr. Reid may be an unlovely person, with curious notions of honesty and fair dealing, as Mr. Colby insinuates in the Banner of Light; and Mrs. Shelhamer-Longley may be pretending to giv as spiritual messages what she evolves from her own mind, as we hav heard many people allege, but they are not frauds to the hundreds who do believe in them, and these people hav the same right to their mode of religion that the Christian, or the Mohammedan, or the Mormon, or any other person who accepts a faith based on supernatural occurrences, has to his. To deny this is to lay the foundation for religious tyranny—to subvert our Constitution—to obliterate the distinctiv American principles for which our forefathers contended—and to go back to the horrible blackness of medieval Christianity, when the church of Christ was the foulest oppressor of any organization known in the annals of man. The man who, when with the majority, draws the sword of persecution, justifies his own murder by his victims when they shall become the majority.

We may discourage the credulity of those who send a dollar to a man, expecting in return a letter from the other world; we may point out how improbable it is that such a thing can occur, and we may cite absence of any affirmativ proof by religious sects, and various exposures of pretended mediums as grounds for denying spiritual existence and communication with human beings, but for all that the legal status of Spiritualism and mediumship is unaffected. To submit to a jury the question whether the belief of any person is based on fraud or reality is absurd. The answer would always be according to the jury's own belief and not its knowledge, for on these things no one possesses positiv knowledge sufficient to demonstrate it to everyone. A jury of Spiritualists would say, reality; a jury of Materialists, fraud; a jury of Christians would answer according to the teaching of their priests, who know nothing at all about it. The only fair way, therefore, is for the government to let all religions alone, and hav nothing whatever to do with their support or destruction.

For these reasons we hope to see Mr. Reid discharged from custody. To imprison him is to commit an outrage upon a number of citizens, and an outrage upon even one man should be resented by all who love liberty and demand equal rights for all.

The Burning of Liberal Hall at Waco, Texas.

The November number of the Independent Pulpit givs fuller particulars concerning the loss by fire of the Liberal Hall in Waco, Texas, than we hav been able to heretofore make public. The structure was burnt on the morning of October 5th. During the past year the Liberals had used it but little, as the Liberal Association had become weakened by death and removal so that it was unable to meet the expenses of regular lectures, though the popular Mr. Shaw never lacked for hearers. The building was rented to a congregation of orthodox Jews, who used it on the evening previous to its destruction for an atonement service. The flames were discovered a little before daylight, and efforts were made to put them out, but being a wooden structure it was impossible to save it.

The hall was built in the latter part of 1883, and occupied first in January, 1884. During the summer of 1883 the directors of the Religious and Benevolent Association bought and paid for the ground on which the building was afterward erected. To secure the means necessary for its completion, certificates of stock were issued in shares of ten dollars each, making the holders joint owners of the house, which was to be used by the association as a lecture hall. It cost a little over three thousand dollars, and was neatly fitted up with lights, a rostrum, tables, bookcases, five or six hundred books, and seated with chairs. Last summer most of the shares were presented to or purchased by Mr. Shaw, and he had arranged to use the building for the double purpose of a lecture hall and publishing office for the Pulpit. The remodeling was well under way when the fire occurred. There was an insurance of fifteen hundred dollars on the building, but nothing on the contents, and after paying off a few hundred dollars of indebtedness there will be something left toward rebuilding.

As usual, in affairs of this kind, the Christians are rejoicing at the loss. Early in the history of Mr. Shaw's Liberal lecturing, one old lady charitably said that she would burn the building in a minute if she were not afraid to, and on hearing of the fire another Christian lady greeted a neighbor with, "Oh! I hav some good news for you. Liberal Hall was burnt this morning, and I just wish Shaw had been in the middle of it." Still another good Christian, but of the other sex, exclaimed on being told of the fire, "I am glad of it! In all probability some Christian father burnt it to save his children; and if it could be proved upon him no Christian jury would punish him for it." These expressions show very plainly how the gospel affects its believers.

Mr. Shaw's purpose now is to rebuild in brick if he can secure the needed aid, and he asks those who can and will help to signify the amount each will giv and when it may be expected. It is his object to found a lecture hall and publishing house that shall be a home and center of activity for Southern Liberalism. He feels, he says, that let what will happen, the Liberals of the country will sustain him so long as he is devoting all his time, energy, and means to the work of emancipating the minds of the race from theological bondage.

Mr. Shaw is a brave, patient, earnest laborer, and everybody who knows him must love and sympathize with him. Away off in one corner of the country—where a few years ago the only Infidel in one town was taken out in the woods in the night and flogged because of his belief—Mr. Shaw has labored undauntedly for the new faith he acquired when compelled to renounce his position as Christian preacher, and has succeeded in civilizing the state of Texas so that now it contains hundreds of Freethinkers, who express their sentiments without fear of midnight visits from zealous defenders of the Christian religion. He has already done a splendid work; he will do still more and better if he is helped in this emergency.

For Horace Seaver's Monument.

John E. Remsburg will lecture before the Manhattan Liberal Club of this city for the fifth time on Friday evening, December 6th. The subject will be Thomas Paine, selected because when Mr. Seaver presided on the occasion of its delivery before the Boston society six years ago he admired it above all other of Mr. Remsburg's addresses.

There will be a collection taken at this lecture, all of which will be given by Mr. Remsburg and the club to the monument fund being raised by Mr. Mendum, some $450 being already in hand. Monuments are costly—the one erected to the Founder of THE TRUTH SEEKER costing nearly $2,000—and much more is needed. Mr. Seaver deserves a splendid shaft, both for his own bravery and virtues and to show the world that Infidels are not forgotten by their friends. Mr. Seaver had many admirers in this great city, and they should all attend Mr. Remsburg's lecture with as big a greenback ready for the hat as they can spare.

A handsome sum ought to be raised for the monument at this meeting.

Editorial Notes.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH is steadily improving, according to the latest issues of the English papers, and since their publication the cable has brought no news, which is good news. Mr. Bradlaugh has, however, a long convalescence in prospect, and will sail for Bombay, India, as soon as his strength permits.

WE CONGRATULATE Mr. Walston Hill Brown upon his marriage to Miss Eva Robert Ingersoll, eldest daughter of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll. His wife is one of the most charming young ladies that ever lived, and in winning her Mr. Brown is the luckiest man in the world except the one who shall win his wife's sister.

THE following, credit and all, is from the last Investigator:

"Thomas Paine lived a long, laborious, and useful life. The world is better for his having lived. For the sake of truth he accepted hatred and reproach for his portion. He ate the bitter bread of sorrow. His life is what the world calls failure, and what history calls success.—The Better Way."

We advise dearly beloved Mr. Washburn to read Colonel Ingersoll's lecture on Thomas Paine, and then the bad Spiritualist papers can't impose on him again in the same way.

Letters from Friends.

LEXINGTON, MO., Nov. 9, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: One of your contributors lately referred to the "slavemongers' rebellion." I will not take up, analyze, and criticise his expression, but will only suggest that THE TRUTH SEEKER'S columns are not the place for such language. This paper is devoted to another purpose. Its Southern readers could hurl quite as choice a selection of epithets at Northern people as its Northern readers can at us, if it is to be a billingsgate match. We do not propose that Liberal people North and South be kept apart like Northern and Southern Presbyterians until we settle whether slaveholding was a sin or not. That is not what we are here for. In order to free ourselvs from the slavery of ecclesiasticism and others from the slavery of superstition, we need ex-African "slavemongers" and everyone else who will work for our common object. Our own rebellion against the tyrannies named in the Nine Demands is what concerns us, and in it we need all who can help us, whether they were in any other "rebellion or not." W.

JOPLIN, MO., Oct. 27, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find twenty-five cents, for which please send me the "Bible Inquirer." I want it for pocket artillery. I am the only Freethought physician in the city of Joplin. The clergy are all dead-set against me. Inclosed I send you my compliment to the preachers and priests of the city of Joplin. I borrowed some from THE TRUTH SEEKER, some from Mr. Remsburg, and added a few of my own pleasant words for the clergy, and had ten thousand copies of this printed over my own signature, as you see, and billed the town with them. I sent every preacher and priest in the town one through the post-office. You can imagin how the town boiled with religious indignation a few days after the distribution of these Sunday-school tracts. I was informed that the preachers got together and held war council, and after due deliberation concluded that Dr. Owen was a skunk and should be shunned by the holy people who had themselvs washed white in the blood of the lamb. The appearance of this sheet in the dooryards of the Christians was an unexpected bombshell, and an unwelcome visitor in the Christian camp. DR. F. D. OWEN.

LOUISPORT, KY., Nov. 3, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I must thank you for sending me your paper of August 17th. It came a few days ago as a sample copy. I will try and get some of my friends to subscribe. Your cartoon of the sayings of Solomon will get one of my neighbors, and I hope for several. I am taking several Liberal papers. If I can get some of my friends to take yours it will giv us a greater variety. I want you to send me twenty-five cents' worth of your late numbers.

But, my friend, if there were no laws to collect debts and never had been, the state of society would not make THE TRUTH SEEKER an absolute necessity now. And besides, if our federal government and the states had left off the senates, and every law had been referred to the people for their adoption or rejection for at least two years, the country would hav been free of superstition, poorhouses, priests, preachers, and lawyers of the kind we hav.

The Bible good will is hell on earth.

If the church was compelled to liv by direct means, it would soon die even now.

The opinions I now entertain are the same I hav had as far back as I can recollect, though I was seventy-four last March.

GEO. SMITH.

KANSAS CITY, MO., Oct. 30, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I am happy to say that I am well pleased with your paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hav been reading it for some time. I borrowed a copy or two from Mr. A. B. Goss, and you may be sure that, being a Freethinker all my life, I could not help liking the paper, so I went to the news-stand and had the paper ordered, and I intend to read it as long as I am able to pay for it. It is a splendid paper.

I hav had some experience among different kinds of people in my time, and, being a workingman, know something about the selfishness and badness of many kinds of men and women, so I would say to Mr. Tuttle that he is wrong in his statement that ownership is the cause of man's inhumanity to man; and I would ask Mr. Tuttle, how is it that man is inhuman in his conduct toward woman?

If any of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER hav ever read Rider Haggard's novel, "She," I will ask them for the benefit of this school question, viz., the Bible in public schools, to compare Rider Haggard's "She" with the Bible and giv us their candid opinion through THE TRUTH SEEKER which they would prefer to be forced into the schoolroom. I would prefer "She." If anyone wishes it, I can giv good reasons for my preference. JOHN R. KNEELAND.

CONOORD, N. C., Nov. 7, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I am alone here as an open, outspoken Liberal. There are others, but they do not show the flag of Liberalism as I do. Yet they are fond of reading my literature. In sending for the herein named book, I want and expect to get information to meet and silence these broadcloth, white-chokered, lazy, do nothing sky-pilots (only seven here), who fleece poor ignorant people out of money they should spend for good literature that will enlighten them and do them service now and always. When I get in argument with any of these long-faced, pious frauds, who kneel down and pray to the mythical God through Mary's bastard son Jesus, I ask them to read carefully Genesis xxxviii, and ask their pastor to preach a sermon to his congregation from the ninth verse. I want to be enlightened and at the same time be possessed of convincing and clinching arguments.

The press and the people are beginning to see the two theological money-grabbers and evangelists, Sam Jones and R. G. Pearson, in their true light, money being their God. In Raleigh (says a Raleigh paper) out of four hundred of the Rev. R. G. Pearson's converts of eighteen months ago, three hundred and ninety-eight hav gone back to the world and their sins as the sow to her wallowing.

Yours outside of the Lord J. C.,

J. W. MEHAFFEY.

EAST RANDOLPH, N. Y., Nov. 3, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: All day long I hav read your last paper—an intellectual treat, I can assure you. Your letter-writers—the expressions many of them used, the grand and uplifting thoughts they penned so freely—had a peculiar charm, and were as refreshing to my soul as cheerful words and pleasant greeting smiles of those we love.

"Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?" I carefully read every word of it, and think Mr. Remsburg showed up how absurd the Christians are in claiming the grandest president of the United States as belonging to their flock. Mr. Remsburg will lecture here Friday night, Nov. 29, 1889, and I hope all who are interested in the truth will giv this eloquent and able apostle of the truth a large hearing.

The report of the thirteenth annual congress of the American Secular Union was simply immense.

"The Bible in Common Schools," on pages 694 and 695, was replete in good arguments, and established beyond doubt the sound judgment of one whose stainless life casts a gleam of purity and brightness around the world. D. M. Bennett's sacred dust rests in Greenwood cemetery, Brooklyn. He has left us a wealth of noble thoughts, and deeds of charity and kindness—the memory of a brave, intellectually honest man, who battled with tongue and pen for the rights and liberty of all.

The kind advice, Mr. Editor, you gave Mrs. Prather, of Olympia, W. T., was all in order, and it seems to me she ought to appreciate it. As you say, "We fear that Mrs. Prather is a good woman who feels much more than she reasons, and concludes from prejudices rather than from facts." But, Mr. Editor, this woman is not alone in this way of thinking. I often pity her compeers more than I can blame them. Born as they are from wombs of prejudice, nursed upon fear, can you wonder that these mental slaves act as they do? Deep down in my heart I pity them, one and all. R. R. JONES.

CLARKSVILLE, IA., Nov. 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The debate, as announced in THE TRUTH SEEKER, with the Rev. G. F. Devol and W. F. Jamieson as disputants, came off as appointed, and was an immense success. The first proposition, Jesus the Christ is the Son of God, Devol affirmed. Early in the discussion of this question it was narrowed down by the indisposition of Mr. Jamieson to follow his opponent into an examination of the evidence produced by his opponent as to what the followers of Christ taught or said of him, as a waste of valuable time to no purpose. Such testimony as one could produce from that source was without value and could prove nothing. In this way the question was narrowed down to what Christ himself taught, and his claims to godship. The Reverend Devol rested his case on Christ's superior wisdom and intelligence above all other men, and the purity of his life and teaching. On this line the battle was fought. But little if any stress was laid on the miracles or on his miraculous birth, but all was laid on his immense superiority in intelligence and wisdom. W. F. Jamieson paralleled every maxim or important teaching of value by Christ, and in many things proved rather a lack of wisdom than otherwise; and of course the Reverend Devol did not prove the proposition.

W. F. Jamieson affirmed the second question. The second proposition was more closely contested. It reads thus: Modern civilization is more indebted to skepticism and Infidelity than to the Christian religion. An exhaustiv examination and comparison between Christian and non-Christian nations was made—the influences of their religions on the character of the people, their modes of life, their industries and arts, their education and morals. It was assumed by the negativ that all we hav that distinguishes us as a progressiv nation is the direct result of Christianity. The affirmativ showed that Christianity as such had obstructed every discovery and every advance made in science, and that when backed by the civil power it did not hesitate to use the thumbscrews and fagot. Still the negativ claimed, notwithstanding the efforts of Antichrist and all his powers, that the great central truths of Christianity keep alive righteousness, humility, and love. The affirmativ showed them to rest on an altogether different basis, and that really and truly Christianity and its teaching had caused more misery and mischief than all other causes combined. The interest in the debate was kept up to the last, and it was orderly and conducted in the best of spirit, and much good will flow from it. E. FOWLE.

ONONDAGA HILL, N. Y., Nov. 12, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Of the twenty-eight young men who, this year, graduated from the Syracuse College of Liberal Arts, twelve hav declared their intention of becoming pulpit-pounders; five, lawyers; two, teachers; one a scientist; one a chemist; one a librarian; one a doctor; one a cashier; one a surveyor, and one an architect; three are undecided.

To observe the development from the tadpole freshman to the pulpit frog is an interesting biological study, but it would not be a wise policy for our Christian universities to turn out nothing but ministers. The five lawyers of the class of 1889 will be five politicians working in the interest of church legislation. The two teachers will see that our public schools retain the Holy Queer as a text-book. The one scientist will strive to Bibleize science. The cashier will engineer a slick financial scheme for getting money to convert the poor heathen. The librarian will yet be the head of a Methodist book concern. The architect will plan God's houses. The three undecided ones will strike some soft snap in the Lord's vineyard. While the doctor and the chemist will probably drift along with the wicked world.

These young men all hav the powerful influence of the Methodist church to back them. They will be successful, for the Methodist brethren will say the Lord is on their side. These twenty-eight young men hav all given their hearts to Christ—a very good business investment for them.

When I graduated from the medical department of the Syracuse University my college mates knew that I was an Atheist. They often urged me to go with them on the road to success by joining the Methodist Episcopal church and the Young Men's Christian Association.

To be an Atheist seemed to them to be inviting ruin upon myself. They did not think my logic poor, but they deemed my policy unwise, nay, reckless. Any means that only involved profession of belief to them seemed to be justified by the ends—success, wealth, a gentlemanly occupation, and popularity. Well, I struck a good appointment the day after graduating. My merits were only my class standing. I hav retained the same for seventeen months. Now I am looking for something more remunerativ where I can come more in contact with Liberals. Does any reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER know a good place for a doctor to locate. If so, will he kindly inform me of the same? One thing I will guarantee, that I shall never doctor the ills of divinity and expect mankind to pay the bills. CHAS. E. BOYNTON, B.S., M.D.

MARTENSBURG, W. VA., Oct. 31, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: In the great controversy between Christianity and skepticism, what is the evidence produced by either side in all the past up to this time? The hidden truth of life and death has not been revealed. The mystery cannot be solved by either side. Life is thrust upon all. We find ourselvs in real existence in a world material and natural. We are born; some reach old age, some die in their infancy, others in youth or middle age. The inexorable law of the fittest surviving is here demonstrated. Natural selection is also shown. This universal law of nature, the fittest surviving; is everywhere manifested. The Bible claims to be the word and gospel of God and that all must conform to its teachings or be lost in eternal punishment. Its assumption is that God made all things as the Bible records; that there is a heaven to gain and a hell to escape; that there is no appeal outside of the Christian religion. Faith only is required, even though based on nothing. An unconditional surrender of reason, common sense, and individuality is demanded of all who want to inherit eternal life. This is Christianity. This assumption, though, is not as powerful as it has been in the misty past of religious tyranny and superstition. Honest skepticism, born of honest inquiry and doubt, is bravely and boldly disputing this Christian assumption which has held millions in mental slavery. I understand clearly that the churches are opposed to liberty. The right of private judgment and individual sovereignty they deny. The Freethinker is the only person actually free—as far as it is possible to be in these days. Independent thinking is the only safety. Christianity says the Bible is all the evidence required of the supernatural; that it is an inspired book of God, who rules the destinies of men and nations; that God is the only refuge; that he that believeth on him shall not perish but hav everlasting life. As I said, we all come into existence; we either die early or survive in a world of inequality—cruel and unjust conditions. If God made men and is no respecter of persons, why did he make them so unequal in strength, looks, disposition, shape, and mental ability? This inequality, with many other cruel and evil conditions in life, is constantly shown. All desire, no doubt, to liv a future life after death. If there is such a place as heaven it is worth while to sacrifice all in this life, for millions liv whose lives are failures. There is hell enough in this world for many, while many are enjoying heaven as far as wealth and influence go. How came these cruel and unjust inequalities? The only answer is—by unjust conditions, circumstances, influence, and mental superiority; the powers that be; might making right. This life is nothing if not full of inequalities, imperfections, and incompleteness. Faith in a future life is based on nothing. It is simply belief. Unbelief is based on something—on negativ testimony from all that is revealed so far as man can go. The rational thinker sees no evidence to support the popularly accepted idea of God. As life and death is a mystery, then one man or woman knows as much about the unknown as all the world, and the truth is that all die absolutely ignorant about the supernatural. The only honest doctrin is Agnosticism, which neither affirms nor denies. All must agree to liv to do right. Pure morality is the best code to liv by. Experience is the best teacher. Folly is sin; wisdom is goodness. It is simply a question of profit and loss. Knowledge is power, and he or she who happens to hav the most wisdom has the most power. All that is sensible is right; all that is folly is wrong. With caution, prudence, and calculation upon results of words and actions, is the safe way to liv.

THOMAS A. CONNERS.

WHEELING, W. VA., Nov. 3, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me space, and I will answer Dr. Boynton's and Wm. Johnson's articles, which appeared in your issue of September 28th.

Gentlemen, you will please pardon my long silence. I am a creature of circumstances, and cannot do as I wish. I hav now an ample opportunity for writing, and am willing to pursue this argument with you or any other Materialist, as long as it will prove interesting and instructiv.

I am emphatically a Liberal. I am not at war with any individual, for his or her belief. I feel it my duty to use my pen and tongue against false doctrins, and to defend what to me is true. I do not claim what I write to be evidence to anyone of a continued state of existence; but if I can induce one person to step out of the ruts of bigotry, and giv Spiritualism a fair investigation and pursue it until evidence of life beyond the grave be obtained, I shall feel amply paid for my time and labor.

Well, doctor, you no doubt knew my meaning when I asked if there were any full-fledged, intelligent Spiritualists in the asylums. I mean this, Do you know of a single person who had accepted Spiritualism, who was considered intelligent, and became insane on account of becoming a Spiritualist? Just mention one if you can. You say: "In my judgment, more than fifty per cent of the insane hear and see things awake." Then you go on to speak of "subjectiv sensations," "excited nerve," "the victim of narcotization believes his sensations real." You say: "Alcohol, morphia, nicotine, belladonna, or hasheesh, may induce the subjectiv action of nerve tissue," "every subjectiv process is pathological," etc. What has all this to do with Spiritualism? Why all this beating around the bush with a lot of jaw-breaking words that not one in ten will understand? I do not know what you are driving at by all this stuff, unless you wish to convey the idea that those who hav witnessed and accepted Spiritual manifestations take alcohol, morphia, nicotine, belladonna, etc. Do you think we do? Do you think we are victims of narcotization? Do you think we are subject to excited nerves, more than others? Now, doctor, this won't do. I shall pass it by without further notice.

I asked you to please tell me how you know Spiritualism to be a fallacy, and here is your answer: "Observe the equation that expresses, in mathematical language, the law that the potential energy expended is equal to the kinetic force developed, and remember that any discussion of the action of force upon matter must be founded on this equation. By measurements show if you can that the 'forces' to which the Spiritualist refers conform to this formula. Until you, or some one else, do this, 'spirit force' must stand as a fallacy in the light of mathematical physics." Do you really call this an answer to my question? What hav equations, potential energy expended and kinetic energy developed, or mathematical physics to do with spiritual manifestations, pray tell? The fact is, doctor, when you said Spiritualism is a fallacy, you said what you can in nowise prove; hence you hav talked about "energy expended," "energy developed," mathematics, and equations. It won't do. I hope every Materialist in the land will read your answer to my question. I still hold you to the question. Please tell me how you know Spiritualism to be a fallacy, and a base illusion.

Don't beat around, and use so many tall words, but tell me in plain English, how you know.

Why does death end individual existence? Your answer in part is this: "Because the potential energy of the organism reaches an equi-potential with inanimate matter when death occurs." This is about as clear as mud. If it is satisfactory to Materialists, all right.

I must now notice some remarks and inquiries by Wm. Johnson in the same issue. What I mean by full fledged is this—anyone who has investigated, studied, and understands the philosophy of Spiritualism. Mention one of this kind, if you can, who became insane simply by understanding and accepting Spiritualism. Please mention one if you can. There is not anything in Spiritualism to drive one mad, but to the contrary. It takes away the terrors of the grave. It teaches there is no death. It assures us that our friends, so-called dead, still liv, and that all will meet on the other shore. Anything about it to produce insanity? I think not.

No, sir, Friend Johnson, Spiritualism is not a belief. It is knowledge. I hope our Materialistic friends will do us the justice to cease speaking of it as a belief. We are just that much ahead of our Materialistic and orthodox friends. We hav a demonstrated fact, while you believe the grave ends all, and the Christian believes he will liv hereafter. Yes, if I know a thing, I can tell how and why I know it. A person must hav immortality demonstrated to him in order to become a Spiritualist. I do not claim to know more than other Spiritualists on the one point of a continued existence. I am not at all chagrined at your flying to the doctor's assistance. If he needs you to bolster him up, all right.

You ask me to show my smartness by answering a question or two. I do not know why you should hav alluded to me in such an uncourteous manner; however, I will answer to the best of my ability.

I do say that Spiritualism is a science, and has demonstrated itself to millions of intelligent people in this country. You ask: "Why, then, are Spiritualists unable to giv this one demonstration, and prove the fact that the grave does not end all?"

Certainly none come back from the grave, for the man, the soul, does not go into the grave; only the outside covering goes there.

I wish you Materialists would remember one thing. You assert that the grave ends all. Ingersoll said: "Countless millions hav listened in vain for a whisper from the other shore." How does he know this? How do you know the grave ends all? If you would giv it as your opinion, no one would object. You cannot tell how you know it. It can not be told. It is undemonstrable, and you know it. You Materialists want facts. Yes, you say, "Giv us solid facts." You don't know one thing about the grave ending all, yet you keep asserting it. Can you discern the difference? I ask you how you know the grave ends all. Can you say it has been demonstrated to you? Ah, no, you are up a stump and you know it, and I know you know it. You ask me how I know Spiritualism to be true. I can say it has been demonstrated to me. I hav seen, heard, and felt those who once lived in gross, physical bodies, but are now denizens of another sphere. Can you say I hav not? I hav been told many times that I never had any evidence; I never talked with those from the other shore, etc. When I am told this, I wonder how our Materialistic and orthodox friends came in possession of such a remarkable degree of wisdom as to know what Spiritualists hav or hav not experienced. Please tell me, Friend Johnson, how you know that I never heard, saw, felt, or talked with those whose gross bodies hav been buried. Come now, you wished me to show my smartness, now I wish you to show your smartness in telling me how you know I hav not had evidence of a continuation of life. Now you are treed. You say: "Giv the readers a good, square answer." I hav told you plainly, and squarely, how I know. I never promised to demonstrate it to you. The fact of a continued existence all must find out for themselvs, if they wish to know.

You say: "The simple assertion of your saying, 'We know our friends liv in the spirit world,' does not suffice." I am aware my saying it is no evidence to you. Spiritualism is not hearsay evidence. We hav the right to assert a fact which has been demonstrated to us, and when you say it has not, you giv the lie to millions of investigating, thinking, intelligent people. You say you love the truth. If you do, quit sneering at Spiritualists for having a fact you hav not got, and go to investigating for yourself. The evidence can be had, if you will but seek it.

As to your liberal offer of $500 to the Secular Union, and $100 for my trouble, for producing a sealed or open letter—I will not say from the dead—from anyone having passed to the higher life, I may try it. I hav no control over the spirit world; hence, do not know what can be done for you. Before closing I must once more allude to the doctor's closing sentence. Well, doctor, you seem to think my remarks a little more personal than necessary. You Materialists seem to be quite sensitiv, quite tender-footed. I, as a Spiritualist, must be very careful how I speak, but you hav conveyed the idea that I take drugs—a victim of narcotization—and hav subjectiv sensations. You speak of Spiritual phenomena as induced somnambulism, human imagination, etc. By these assertions you giv me the lie, when I say I hav had evidence of a continued existence. THE TRUTH SEEKER and Boston Investigator very frequently contain articles calling Spiritualists "poor deluded dupes," "cranks," "troubled with softening of the brain," "running after a delusion," etc. All this is quite well enough on your part. It makes quite a difference as to whose ox is being gored. I claim to be rather good-natured in an argument, but I do not relish being called crack-brained, credulous dupe every week in the year. I hav investigated for thirty-seven years, at a cost of over $300. I made an honest, earnest effort to get the truth, and, doctor, I hav got it so far as a continuation of life is concerned. If I don't know that, I don't know anything, and what I know I know as well as anybody. You Materialists admire THE TRUTH SEEKER. You admire its founder. The name of D. M. Bennett is dear to you—as well as to Spiritualists—yet you use the paper he founded to ridicule Spiritualism, while he himself was a Spiritualist. I will conclude by again insisting upon your telling me just how you know Spiritualism to be a delusion. All your talk about potential energy, kinetic energy, equations, equipotentiality, mathematics, somnambulism, mesmerism, alcohol, belladonna, hasheesh, narcotization, "pickled," old, worn-out men, or burnt-out flames of gas, did not answer the question. No, it won't do. Giv us something more direct, more pointed. There is too much gas in your answer. Back up your assertion, or hoist the white flag. Let us hear from you. A. ALLEN NOE.

PORTSMOUTH, O., Nov. 3, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The past two months hav been unusually interesting as regards my reportorial duties. The Ohio Military Academy has started upon its mission, and has been visited by Rev. C. L. Work, pulpit orator at the Second Presbyterian church, and by him pronounced good; Dr. J. F. Clarke, a Catholic veterinary surgeon of New York state, charged with horse-stealing, has secured his freedom, and Patrick Gleason, a local Catholic, has been jailed for committing a rape on his granddaughter; Fathers Boniface and Timothy, of Hoboken, N. J., hav held a "mission" at the church of the Holy Redeemer; Rev. W. W. Mix has arrived with his family from Missouri, and he has assumed the rectorship of Christ Episcopal church; Bigelow Methodist Episcopal church has had a "fiddling" exhibition, and "Zozo" has come and gone.

Going back sixty days I find the Ohio Military Academy (mentioned first in my list of occurrences and curious incidents) being elegantly furnished and fitted by a fine-appearing stranger, who came into the city like a Christ. He put up at the finest hotel, and at once set about to make Portsmouth the West Point of Ohio. He registered Major Burgess, and claimed to hail from Virginia. The Old Dominion accent was with him, and served him to advantage. He was a charmer, a church attendant, and a drinker of good liquors. The ladies got sweet on him, and, 'tis said, severa became his, Solomonistically speaking. He never missed going to church, and could say Amen as loud as any other hypocrit. His presence at the Godhouses enabled him to win the confidence of the sanctified ones, and his moving among saloon men and gamblers made him a shining light with the sporting fraternity. He played his cards well, and raked in chips from all sides of the table, around which were seated the deacon and the crusade sister, the faro king and the bawdy-house queen. He purchased furniture on credit, and likewise the finest of Brussels carpets. He also bought on tick a brand-new major's uniform, attired in which he rode horseback through the principal streets of this Christian city. This of itself was an offense against the government, he being no commissioned officer of the regular service. A story he frequently told, however, was that he was formerly in Uncle Sam's army, and was sent by the United States government to South America to establish a military school, which he did, and with great success. Such tales as these led the good people to smell a mouse, but not until Burgess had borrowed money from prominent citizens, barkeepers, and hotel clerks. When the mist was cleared from their eyes and they could see, Burgess left the city between the going down and the rising of the sun. He fled to other and unknown parts to worship other and unknown gods. Creditors appeared on the banks of the Christian sea of inquiry, and listened to the whisperings of the wild gospel waves.

Soon after Burgess's sudden departure Captain A. L. Bressler, a young German graduate of a European military academy, appeared in our midst and proposed to take hold of our West Point and make it a go. To do this he assumed the debts contracted by Burgess, and paid the same. He could well afford to do it, as his father, who resides in Detroit, Mich., is rated at $800,000. Among the numerous debts cashed by Bressler was one which came through the post-office in a letter addressed to Burgess. Bressler lifted this, opened it, and read. It demanded that Mr. Burgess pay $12.50 due for services rendered. The letter bore the signature of Lillie Hayward, who is a believer in God, and who inhabits a West Eleventh street bagnio. Bressler did not know this, and seeing the feminin signature exclaimed: "Oh, mine Got! Didn't he pay the typewriter either?"

Bressler recently married an Italian miss of New York city. He is very Christian, and keeps the Bible in the class rooms of his school. Rev. C. L. Work, in a recent visit to the institution, pronounced it good, and distributed invitations to come hear him talk about Calvin first and God next. That is the order in which the average Presbyterian worships. The first order posted at the military school was warning the boys not to pluck apples from the trees on the academy grounds. This Work saw, and on his departure from the place remarked to his company, "I could not see the sense in that apple order." And so Liberals everywhere regard the Eden order. They are thankful that the "breathing dust," alias Adam, and the "moving, walking bone," alias Eve, did taste the forbidden pippin. Ever since pippins hav been masticable and digestible.

My next subject is the Catholic veterinary, Dr. J. F. Clark. He came here, was drugged and robbed by gamblers, and in this delirious condition rode a horse not his own away. He was arrested for horse-stealing, was tried and convicted. A new trial, however, was granted him, and subsequently the case was nollied. Being a Catholic he wears a charm about his neck, and carries on his person thirty prayers warranted to do wonderful things. He says he would never hav escaped but for the charm and the thirty parables. Before leaving the prison he provided the remaining jailbirds with a charm and a copy of the superstitious prayers, informing them they would get clear if they were only faithful in the use of the same.

Patrick Gleason, spoken of above, is a devout Catholic, according to the purgatorial creed, and a veritable demon and brute according to the American way of putting things. He would not eat meat on Friday, but on the same day he would take his granddaughter, aged thirteen years, and rape her. He was caught in the act by Officer Flannigan, who was informed by reliable people of what was going on—people who were watching the man of God through a hole made in a partition wall of the house that he lived in.

The Catholic "mission" held by Fathers Timothy and Boniface lasted one week. Catholics poured in from all directions, and many old sinners like Gleason were claimed to be made pure through the prayers and foolishness of the Hoboken priests. I hav often thought how glorious it would be if all the priests and preachers of the world could be mummified, and in their stead be given the people in the pyramids, who for three thousand years hav been awaiting the call of Gabriel's trumpet. Such a change would benefit mankind; the mummies alive and doing would be a blessing to the cursed teachers of theology and ignorance.

Rev. W. W. Mix, the new rector of Christ Episcopal church, is away ahead of the teachings of his creed. He is grand enough and broad enough to believe in diminishing instead of increasing the tears and groans of mankind. For this he will be invited in the course of several months to take a walk. That is our prediction. The bigots and brainless leaders of that church are not in favor of making a heaven of this dull, dreary life; they relish long faces, having no sympathy for barbers and hairdressers. Misery here and happiness hereafter is what they want preached. They emphatically believe in a God without "body, passions, or parts," and a devil of the Catholic pattern.

A few evenings since Bigelow Methodist Episcopal church had a few musicians of the Christian stripe on exhibition. They charged a fee to get into this "fiddling" affair. It was, so they said, for the benefit of the poor heathen. I wasn't there, and I don't know whether the proceeds hav been shipped away yet or not. If not, a part might be appropriated to John Dungen, a poor, dying colored man in the back part of the city, who is sadly in need of something to eat and hide his nakedness. Dungen has prayed for both, but as yet his prayers hav wafted in no bread, no ham, and the Lord hasn't come around to sew even "fig-leaves" about his body. Unfortunately for starving John Dungen, the day of miracles is over, and Jehovah does not dabble in the affairs of men.

"Zozo" is a great spectacular play. It was presented here to a large audience notwithstanding the churches' opposition. Among the performers of the "Zozo" company are J. Leon and Tommy O'Brien, both friends of mine, and both disbelievers in miracles, devils, and Gods. The first named is an old veteran to the show world. He has traveled the globe over, and in his opinion this is a splendid country to reside in. In fact, he says he would like to stay here always. And so would I. WILL S. ANDRES.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Going West.

Our father harnessed Nell and Fan,
In years so long ago,
And drew the wagon-cover white
Upon each bended bow;
The Eastern farms were small and poor
And men for money pressed,
And he would take his girls and boys
And hasten to the West.

First gathering up a store of books,
My father's only pride,
A civilization there to plant
Upon the prairies wide;
A school-house reared from linden logs,
Of treasures far the best—
Then sang we our farewell to friends,
And started to the West.

The neighbors soon would be as proud
As people in the town;
We could not bear their haughty ways,
Nor liv beneath their frown;
So mother spun through summer days,
And me in linsey dressed.
We'd never known what freedom was
Till traveling to the West.

Our woolen shawls were warm and bright,
Of blue and crimson plaid,
Wrought by a dear and loving hand.
Yet we, so wild and bad,
Would often pain her tender heart,
And I with all the rest
Was frantic with such mad delight
That we were going West.

Could you hav heard the merry din
As twilight fell apace,
And father spread the tent's white wings
Upon a grassy place,
You must hav thought that joy had come
From islands of the blest,
And care would never find us more
Now we were moving West.

We fashioned tents and camp-fires, too,
Like those built by the folks,
Unheeding that the night-wind sighed
In all the branching oaks.
Brown nuts and berries in the wood
We gathered with a zest,
And life was such sweet make-believe
While hurrying to the West.

MARY BAIRD FINCH.

A Visit to Philadelphia.

You know I hav been to the City of Brotherly Love, and presuming you would like to hear about the trip, if you will gather up close I'll tell you all about it.

"City of Brotherly Love!" Is not a fine thought contained in the sentence? How it fills and thrills our human hearts to the center! How it softens and shades the hard, cold, rough ways of life, making a beacon-light that charms and allures at every step! What a millennium it would be if all men could think of each other as brothers! Wouldn't it? The great-souled Wm. Penn realized the meaning of that word—brothers—two hundred years ago, when he planted the seedling of a new city.

The Indians who lived about there in the region where Philadelphia now stands, swayed by the modest, gentle bearing of the genial Quaker, declared they would liv in love forever with Wm. Penn and his children. "We meet," said the great man, Penn, to the children of the forest, "on the broad pathway of good faith and good will; no advantage shall be taken on either side, but all shall be openness and love. The friendship between you and me I will not compare to a chain; for that the rains might rust, or the falling tree might break. We are the same as if one man's body were to be divided into two parts; we are all one flesh and blood."

A monument marks the spot where these memorable, these grandly eloquent, words were spoken, and, as you may know, this treaty that Penn made with the red men is the only one never sworn to, and the only one in connection with the Indians never broken. And I must say that the same sweet spirit of good faith and good will seems to linger like a benediction upon the city and its people. It is apparent in the beauty, architecture, and magnificence of its public buildings, in the cleanly, well-kept streets, and, more than all, in the courtesy and culture of those with whom the stranger comes in contact. If there are dividing lines of sect, or birth, or position, they are so hidden and concealed by the sweet blossoms of natural kindness and hospitality as not to be apparent.

The new city building for public offices is on a scale of grandeur and beauty seldom surpassed by any city in a similar work. The view from its tower, which, however, I did not take, is said to be very fine. Our party was passing along Chestnut street immediately on our arrival, when we noticed many people entering a large building. "What is going on in there?" we questioned of a passer-by.

"United States mint," was the reply.

Another traveler, overhearing the answer, said: "This is the hour for visitors, now's your chance, go right in, free to everybody."

Thinking this was our opportunity, in we went. In the vestibule stood a number of ushers or porters. Thrusting our satchels and handbags under a settee, we inquired, "Will they be safe there?" The man looked at me as much as to say, "Aren't you in Uncle Sam's building?"

"Go on," said Bethia; "course they're safe in here."

I thought of numerous official steals in Washington and of things the Indians in the West had lost, of land-grabbers, etc., and remarked, humbly, "I don't know anything about these folks, and I don't want to lose my night-gown or my new waterproof."

The day was fine and the crowd dense, so, amid much pushing, squeezing, and treading upon toes, we made our way along, staring at the tons and tons of silver bricks lying around as plenty as Globe street railway paving-stones. It was a silver day, i.e., the day on which silver is worked, and such cartloads and cartloads of silver dollars, half dollars, quarters, and ten-cent pieces I never saw before. How the coins were tumbled out like buttons—silver dollars rolling out all stamped and ready for use at the rate of eighty per minute. Within reach of my hands lay $17,000,000, a trifle over fifty-one thousand pounds. I did think what lots of good might be done with it all, but it is not of much account just to keep. It is a pretty sight to see the boiling silver, clear and white, and then to watch it being rolled out like yards of ribbon to be cut and fashioned by nimble fingers, by several processes, into coin for use. Anna Dickinson once worked in this mint, trying to get money to send her brother to college. There are a number of bright girls employed in this mint, and you think, probably, as they work just as many hours as the men that they get just the same wages, do you? No, they don't. Uncle Sam, with his pockets bulging with money, cannot afford to compensate his faithful, energetic girls for their work exactly the same as he does the boys. Shame on you, Uncle Sam! You are not quite up to the fair principle of equal rights yet.

Sputtering away my indignation, we followed the crowd upstairs to the museum. There were cases of medals, all the different kinds in the world, ancient and modern. Cabinets of coins, curious and queer, old as the hills, and representing all grades of intelligence and wisdom, were here and there, all about the rooms. There were specimens of wampum, Indian money, just as good as any for barter, if one has a mind to think so; shells and beads; coins of Siam; a shekel that we read of in scripture, worth about forty cents of our money, and a "widow's mite," of pathetic history. Only a hard-hearted man could take such a piece from a poor widow who, no doubt, needed it for bread. The oldest coin was an odd-looking piece, said to be in use sixty-seven hundred years before Christ. It was of some sort of dark metal, with a tortoise rudely stamped upon it, showing the idea of worship of that period. Some numismatologists dispute the antiquity of this coin, but, although in use at a later period of the world's history, there is no doubt of its great age, although it may clash somewhat with the biblical theory of creation.

We came away from the money-making machinery, found our luggage, and went on to the Washington Hotel. Here we met handsome Lucy Colman, who wears her years with the superb grace of a queen, strong, brave, and self-reliant. She is full of memories, incidents of stirring times, and charms everybody by her wonderful and happy conversational powers. Here also were Leonard Geiger, a bluff, hearty, honest man, as good as gold, and of whom you would say at once, "His word is as good as his bond." And dear Mrs. Geiger was there, too. Her kind and lovely influence draws one like sun-rays, and instinctivly you feel like cuddling close to her and laying your head on her motherly bosom, to be caressed and blessed by her sweet sympathy and kindness. Mrs. Macdonald, bright, wide-awake, and cheerful as a song-bird, was in the happy company. She is the mother of the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and G. E. M., also, the editor of Freethought and a poet, is her son. You would think her more a sister than a mother of such brave men. She is strong and self-reliant, and inspires love and confidence at once. The Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, of course, was with the others, quiet, not talking much, but thinking a great deal all the time. And Mr. Charlesworth, too, was with him, bright and sparkling, and finding his way all about the city without a pilot. Indeed, he was pilot himself, although never before in the city. S. H. W.

(CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.)

Correspondence.

AUSTIN, NEV., Oct. 27, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I like to read THE TRUTH SEEKER. Papa has taken it for many years. I read the Children's Corner. I will send you a piece about a funny mule and a negro. I think the piece about the girls' tasks is nice. I am a boy ten years old, and I study geography, grammar, spelling, writing, reading, arithmetic, and singing. I hav a cat and a little baby one year and eleven months old. I guess I will close.

HARRY MOSS.

GOLDENDALE, WASH., Oct. 28, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write a letter to the Corner for the first time. I am ten years of age. I go to school, but it is closed this week because diphtheria is in town. I hav four sisters and one brother, and he is one month old to-day. We hav not named him yet; mamma wants to name him "Wixon." Papa attended the Secular convention at Portland, Ore. Papa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER; we all like it very much. Will quote a few lines at the close. Hoping to see this in print, I remain,

Your Freethinker friend,
JESSIE M. PARROT.

Refrain from contentions of evil design;
In bettering conditions hew close to the line;
Avoid superstition and a paralyzed mind;
Promote all actions for the good of mankind.

J. M. P.

XENIA, O., Oct. 29, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My father, who is a very strong Liberal, takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and, as I was looking at it, I thought you would like to hav a new correspondent, so I sit right down and write you a letter. My father does his best to enlighten the people who do not think that the earth is round, but that it has four corners, such as the Bible teaches. There are three men here that I know of, that think as my father.

I hope that you will continue n health, and to edit the Children's Corner, as it enlightens the boys' and girls' minds.

I like to read the letters that the boys and girls write. I go to school, and am thirteen years old. My teacher's name is Mrs. Lizzie Thomas.

Well, as I hav written about enough, I will close, wishing all the children who write for the Corner good health. FRED FISHERING.

FRENCHTOWN, NEB., Nov. 21, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My nieces Lottie and Stella were very much pleased with the poem of "Motherless." I inclose another written from the memory of the time when my father started from Ohio to the West, in 1843, when I was six years of age. To travel in a covered wagon, to sleep in a tent as our older brothers told us the Arabs did, made such a bright spot in our lives it can never fade. To enhance our joy there was another family with us with the same number of boys and girls (six) that there were of us. The younger members, being too small for work, had but to play and "fashion tents and camp-fires," etc. If children could only realize their happiness!

I am glad to hear all that has been said in reference to the death of our noble Seaver. He may be said to be the father of Freethought in America. And now his labor is done and he has gone to rest. The Investigator has fallen into good hands, that will keep the flag of Freethought still far above the cross of superstition. Peace to the memory of Horace Seaver!

Your story of the rabbits was very entertaining. There were some things you told in regard to them I had not known before. We hav many jack-rabbits here, and it seems almost like seeing a flying creature to see them run, they leap so far.

Yours fraternally, MARY BAIRD FINCH.

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 333pp., $1.25.

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL
Price, 25 Cents.

The Reign of the Stoics.

THEIR
History, Religion, Philosophy, and Maxims of Self-Control, Self-Culture, Benevolence, and Justice.
With Citations of Authors Quoted from on Each Page.
BY FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.

Read the philosophers, and learn how to make life happy, seeking useful precepts and brave and noble words which may become deeds.—Seneca.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This book shows that many Christians might learn much from these ancient heathen.—American Bookseller.

One of the most valuable helps for those who would understand the character of human progress in all ages.—National Quarterly Review.

The author has shown himself a diligent student, an ardent admirer, and a faithful interpreter, of some of the most remarkable monuments of ancient thinking.—New York Tribune.

Reading this book, we find the doctrins of the Stoics to be almost identical with the views held by the broadest and most enlightened minds of the present day.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Lecky says of Marcus Aurelius: "The purest and gentlest spirit of all the pagan world." Merivale says: "Of all the line the noblest and dearest." Taine says: "The noblest soul that ever lived." John Stuart Mill says: "He preserved through life not only the most unblemished justice, but the tenderest heart."

Extra Cloth, 12mo, 248 pp., $1.25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God.—[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ANTICHRIST.

PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

LITERATURE OF THE INSANE.

BY F. R. MARVIN.

Price, . . . 5 cents.

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

THE JEWS AND THEIR GOD.

"The Jews and their God stood on the lowest plane."

Price, 10 cents.

WHAT KIND OF A MAN CLARK BRADEN IS.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 10 cents.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 558 West Madison st., Room 1, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.
Horace Haynes, Leslie.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick. Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

The Individualist.

A LIBERAL AND REFORM JOURNAL, ADVOCATING SOCIAL REGENERATION AND INDUSTRIAL EMANCIPATI N.

Devoted to the rational exposition of the philosophy of Freedom, mental, moral, and physical; social, industrial, and sexual. Commands the pens of the best writers in America on these subjects. Sixteen pages. $2 per year. Trial subscription three months, 50 cents. Each yearly subscriber will receive a copy of Mr. Stuart's book, "Natural Rights, Natural Liberty, and Natural Law." Address F. Q. STUART, Editor and Proprietor, 1653 Blake street, Denver, Col.

THE HUMBOLDT LIBRARY
—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

No. 1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.

No. 2. Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. (19 illustrations). By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, author of "The English Constitution."

No. 4. Man's Place in Nature, (with numerous illustrations). By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Ceral and Coral Reefs. By Rev. Charles Kingsley.

No, 7. The Conservation of Energy, (with numerous illustrations). By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.

No. 8. The Study of Languages, brought back to its true principles. By C. Marcel.

No. 9. The Data of Ethics. By Hebert Spencer.

No. 10. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music, (numerous illustrations), By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.

No. 11. } The Naturalist on the River Amazons. A record of 11 years of travel.
No. 12. } By Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S. (Not sold separately).

No. 13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alex. Bain, LL.D.

No. 14. The Wonders of the Heavens, (thirty-two illustrations). By Camille Flammarion.

No. 15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.

No. 16. The Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 18. Lessons in Electricity, (sixty illustrations). By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 20. The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.

No. 21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes and Men. By Samuel Wainwright, D.D.

No. 24. Popular Scientific Lectures, (illustrated). By Prof. H. Helmholtz.

No. 25. The Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Oxford University.

No. 26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.

No. 27. The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.

No. 28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. (numerous illustrations). By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.

No. 29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology, (numerous illustrations). By Andrew Wilson, Ph.D.

No. 30. } The Study of Words.
No. 31. } By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen.

No. 34. The Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird, Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and Others.

No. 36. Lectures on Evolution. (Illustrated). By Prof. T. H. Huxley.

No. 37. Six Lectures on Light. (Illustrated). By Prof. John Tyndall.

No. 38. } Geological Sketches. By Archibald
No. 39. } Geikie, F.R.S.

No. 40. The Evidence of Organic Evolution. By George J. Romanes, F.R.S.

No. 41. Current Discussions in Science. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S.

No. 42 History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock.

No. 43. Darwin and Humboldt. By Prof. Huxley, Prof. Agassiz, and others.

No. 44. } The Dawn of History. By C. F. Keary,
No. 45. } of the British Muscum.

No. 46. The Diseases of Memory. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

No. 47. The Childhood of Religion. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.

No. 48. Life in Nature. (Illustrated). By James Hinton.

No. 49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. By Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.

No. 50. } Money and the Mechanism of Ex-
No. 51. } change. By Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.

No. 52. The Diseases of the Will. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.

No. 53. Animal Automatism, and other Essays, By Prof. T. H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.

No. 55. The Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 56. } Illusions. By James Sully.
No. 57. }

No. 58. } The Origin of Species. } Two Double
No. 59. } By Charles Darwin. } Nos.

No. 60. The Childhood of the World. By Edward Clodd.

No. 61. Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 62. The Religions of the Ancient World. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Univ. of Oxford. (Double number).

No. 63. Progressive Morality. By Thomas Fowler, LL.D., President of Corpus Christi Coll., Oxford.

No. 64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russell Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.

No. 65. Conditions of Mental Development: and other essays. By Wm. Kingdon Clifford.

No. 66. Technical Education: and other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. By J. F. C. Hecker, M. D.

No. 68. Three Essays. By Herbert Spencer. Special Number.

No. 69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze, Ph.D. Double number.

No. 70. Essays Speculative and Practical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 71. Anthropology. By Daniel Wilson, Ph. D. With Appendix on Archæology. By E. B. Tylor, F. R. S.

No. 72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.

No. 73. Evolution in History, Language and Science. Four Addresses delivered at the London Crystal Palace School of Art, Science and Literature.

No. 74. } The Descent of Man, and Selection in
No. 75. } Relation to Sex. (Numerous Illustrations)
No. 76. } By Charles Darwin. Nos. 74, 75, 76 are
No. 77. } single Nos.; No. 77. is a double No.

No. 78. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. By William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.

No. 79. Scientific Aspect of some Familiar Things. By W. M. Williams.

No. 80. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work By Grant Allen. (Double number).

No. 81. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two Essays by J. Allanson Picton.

No. 82. Illusions of the Senses: and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 83. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six Essays. By Sedley Taylor, M.A.

No. 84. Studies of Animated Nature. Four Essays on Natural History. By W. S. Dallas, F.L.S.

No. 85. The Essential Nature of Religion. By J. Allanson Picton.

No. 86. The Unseen Universe, and the Philosophy of the Pure Sciences. By Prof. Wm. Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 87. The Morphine Habit. By Dr. B. Ball, of the Paris Faculty of Medicine.

No. 88. Science and Crime and other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

No. 89. The Genesis of Science. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 90. Notes on Earthquakes: with Fourteen Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 91. The Rise of Universities. By S. S. Laurie, LL.D. (Double number).

No. 92. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the Action of Earth Worms. By Charles Darwin, LL.D. F.R.S. (Double number).

No. 93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. By J. Mount Bleyer, M.D. (Special number).

No. 94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 95. The Diseases of Personality. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

No. 96. A Half-Century of Science. By Prof. Thomas H. Huxley, and Grant Allen.

No. 97. The Pleasures of Life. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart.

No. 98. Cosmic Emotion: Also the Teachings of Science. By William Kingdon Clifford. (Special number).

No. 99. Nature Studies. By Prof. F. R. Eaton Lowe; Dr. Robert Brown, F.L.S.; Geo. G. Chisholm, F.R.G.S., and James Dallas, F.L.S.

No. 100. Science and Poetry, with other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

No. 101. Æsthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. By Jas. Sully and Geo. Croom Robertson.

No. 102. Ultimate Financc; A True Theory of Co-operation. By William Nelson Black.

No. 103. The Coming Slavery; The Sins of Legislators; The Great Political Superstition. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 104. Tropical Africa. By Henry Drummond, F.R.S.

No. 105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. By Ernst Haeckel, of the University of Jena. With a Prefatory Note by Prof. Huxley.

No. 106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. By Grant Allen.

No. 107. Ultimate Finance. A True Theory of Wealth. By William Nelson Black.

No. 108. English, Past and Present. Part. I. By Richard Chenevix Trench, (Double number).

No. 109. English, Past and Present. Part II. By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. By Edward Clodd. (Double number).

Single Nos. 15 cents; Double Nos. 30 cents.
Nos. 1 to 111 inclusive, cloth, plain edges—separately or together—10 vols., $2 per vol
Also same in cloth, extra, red edges, gold back—in sets only—13 vols., $1.75 per vol.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

The Agnostic Annual
FOR 1890.
Edited by CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS.

Agnosticism and Immortality.....Samuel Laing.
A Sonnet.....Joseph Ellis.
Who Was Moses?..H. J. Hardwicke, M.D., F.R.C.S.
The Comfort of Agnosticism.....E. Lynn Linton.
Are Miracles Credible?...Constance C. W. Naden.
The Contest Between Agnosticism and Theology, John Wilson, M.A.
Above: A Poem.....W. Stewart Ross.
The Evolution of the Agnostic Idea, R. Bithell, B Sc., Ph.D.
The New Fatalism.....B. Russell.
Descartes's Proof of the Existence of a God. F. J. Gould.
A Poem.....W. B. McTaggart.
The Free Expression of Opinions..G. F. Underhill.
Fragments.....William Maccall.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

TRY-SQUARE;
OR,
The Church of Practical Religion.
BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

ICHABOD CRANE PAPERS.
Daringly witty and inexpressibly laughable onslaughts on Christianity.
Price, 10 cents.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.

It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Sixteen pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $2. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only 1.50.
SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.
SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.
HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.
SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.
HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

DR. FELLOWS
STAR OF HOPE
Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.
VINELAND, N. J.

Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

The Liberty of Printing, and Reply.
BY HURLBUT AND WAKEMAN.
Price, 10 cents.

Poetry.

Chastity.

I heard a little voice say,
Keep me pure.
Amid the louder sounds of vice
The voice seemed low,
Yet through the ranks of immorality
The grand request passed safely through.

We may hav trials and troubles
On our way.
We will meet sorrow, care, and strife;
The darkness that so closely follows day
Clouds half our life.
And yet through light and gloom alike
Our souls can always be Shut from the grosser world apart
In the chamber of Chastity.

JOSIE HAMMOND.

Tribute to a Friend.

To Mrs. King, of Monte Vista, Col., these lines are fraternally inscribed by the writer:

O for a pen from some white wing
To tell of friendship's offering,
And bear the charm of all sweet words,
Gentle and low as singing birds,
To one who came a friend in need,
Moved by her own unwritten creed,
And gave sweet love and sympathy
To one sad soul out on the sea—
A weary, heartsick little daughter—
Where friendly hands humanely sought her,
And won her back to life and me,
Thus blessing all humanity.

May all sweet words their magic lend
To sing thy worth, my unknown friend;
Thy mountain home and sunny vales,
That whisper such enchanting tales.
May only flowers thy pathway know,
Free from the pain of frost and woe,
Strewn with the pearls of morning dew,
With rosy beams soft shining through;
And fragrant arms of evergreen
To clasp thee round with emerald sheen,
And fairest winds of Araby
To waft thee o'er life's evening sea.

Frenchtown, Neb. MARY BAIRD FINCH.

Danger to the American Government—Jesuits' Oath.

I [name]. now in the presence of almighty God, the blessed Virgin Mary, the blessed Michael the archangel, the blessed St. John the Baptist; the holy apostles Peter and Paul and the saints and sacred hosts of heaven, and to you, my ghostly father, do declare from my heart, without mental reservation, the pope (N.) is Christ's vicar-general and is the true and only head of the universal church throughout the earth, and that, by virtue of the keys of binding and loosing, given to his holiness by Jesus Christ, he hath power to depose all heretical kings, princes, states, commonwealths, governments, all being illegal without his sacred confirmation, that they may be safely destroyed, therefore to the utmost of my power I will defend this doctrin and his holiness's rights and customs against all usurpers of the heretical and Protestant authority whatsoever, especially against the now pretended authority of the Church of England and all adherents, in regard that they be usurped and heretic, opposing the sacred mother church of Rome. I do renounce and disown all allegiance as due to any heretical king, prince, or state named Protestant or obedience to any of their inferior magistrates or officers. I do further declare the doctrin of the Church of England, of the Calvinists, Huguenots, and other Protestants, to be damnable and those to be damned who will not forsake the same. I do further declare that I will help, assist, and advise all or any of his holiness's agents in any place wherever I shall be and do my utmost to extirpate the heretical Protestants' doctrin and to destroy all their pretended power, legal or otherwise. I do further promis and declare that, notwithstanding I am dispensed with to assume any religion heretical for the propagation of the mother church's interest, to keep secret and private all her agents' counsels as they entrust me, and not to divulge, directly or indirectly, by word, writing, or circumstances whatsoever, but to execute all which shall be proposed, given in charge, or discovered unto me by you, my ghostly father, or by anyone of this convent. All of which I do swear by the holy trinity and blessed sacrament, which I am now to receive, to perform and on my part to keep inviolably, and do call all the heavenly and glorious host of heaven to witness my real intentions to keep this my oath. In testimony hereof I take his most holy and blessed sacrament, of the Eucharist, and witness the same further with my hand and seal in the face of this holy convent.

The above oath comes into my hands from an ex-Jesuit father. J. H. RHODES, M.D.

722 Spring Garden st., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Infidel's Catechism.

Question. What is God?

Answer. "The vital force [electricity]* which pervades the universe is what the illiterate call God" (J. W. Draper).

Q. What is the trinity of paganism and Christianity?

A. It is either the three great vitalizing forces of nature, heat, light, and electricity, or it is nothing.

Q. What is Christ?

A. A pagan myth, an allegory of the sun, or the heat and light emanating from the sun.

Q. What is theology?

A. Talk about nothing, or the science of nothing.

Q. What is religion?

A. It is our ideas about something which we do not understand.

Q. What is superstition?

A. It is faith without any fact in nature to stand upon.

Q. What is a preacher?

A. It is one who pretends to teach others what he does not understand himself.

Q. What does D.D. signify?

A. D.D. as a caudal appendage to a man's name signifies in ecclesiastical parlance doctor of divinity; in common English, doctor of duplicity; in profane English, damned deceiver.

Q. What is the Bible?

A. It is the minister's saddle to ride asses with?

Q. What is sacred or holy?

A. Anything which cannot stand the test of free investigation and criticism.

Q. What is blasphemy?

A. An argument which the doctors of duplicity cannot answer. P. F. SHUMAKER.

* The brackets are mine.

Mrs. Eliza B. Burnz.

From the New York Press.

The great increase in stenographic work in this country is partly due to the efforts of a woman who for years has been "hiding her light under a bushel." This modest though able woman is Mrs. Eliza B. Burnz, the only female author of a system of shorthand in the world. Seventeen years ago Mrs. Burnz foresaw that shorthand would ultimately be commonly used, and with the courage of her convictions went to the late Peter Cooper and laid her plans before him. Mr. Cooper offered her a furnished class-room in the Cooper Union free, on condition that she would also giv the instruction gratuitously. This she at once agreed to do, and ever since that time has taught the evening classes in stenography at the institute. Miss Emma Parish, a pupil of hers, teaches the day classes. Mrs Burnz herself instructs a similar class at the Young Women's Christian Association. She has held the position at the association for nine years.

Mrs. Burnz has probably fitted more young men and women for business than any other one teacher. Her success in that particular has been remarkable. The Phonographic World ranks her foremost among women engaged and interested in the cause of shorthand. The "Burnz method" is the one used at all the schools over which Mrs. Burnz has jurisdiction.

Mrs. Burnz was born in England, but came here at the early age of thirteen. She is intensely American in all her ideas, and is nothing if not original. She is a thorough advocate of phonetic spelling, preferring "Burnz" to "Burns," "helth" to "health," also, wil, shal, hav, and giv to Webster's old style. Although over sixty-five years of age, she devotes her time to the study of Volapuk, the proposed international language, whose spelling is said to be strictly phonetic. While not a pronounced vegetarian she is a rigid hygeist, an ardent advocate of the ballot for women, and a strong believer in cremation. She is a stockholder in the Mt. Olivet Crematory at Fresh Pond, L. I. In character she is high-minded, unselfish, and anxious to do good as opportunity presents itself.

Mrs. Burnz is a delicate-appearing woman, with the lofty aims of her life imprinted on her countenance.

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 833pp., silk cloth, $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

GIRARD'S WILL AND Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

By CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO. 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Ingersoll and the Deist.

BY

A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."

Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND, LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

Cosmian Hymn Book,

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

PRICE, . . . $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FAITH AND REASON.

A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.

With elaborate index.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained n such compact form.—[Literary Review.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

THE

MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 548pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

MATERIALISM AND CRIME.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, 5 cents.

AN OUTLINE OF THE

French Revolution

ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

By W. S. BELL.

Paper, 12mo, 25 cents.

MORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

IMMORTALITY OF ITS ELEMENTS.

By A. S. de Pellegrini.

Paper, - - 15 cents.

PHILOSOPHY of SPIRITUALISM

AND TREATMENT OF MEDIOMANIA.

By F. R. Marvin, M.D.

Cloth, . . . 50 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY.

By VOLTAIRE.

Terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of theological terms.

Price, 25 cents.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY EXPOSED.

By REV. G. T. FOX, M.A.

15 cents.

PRO AND CON OF

Supernatural Religion.

Have We a Supernatural, Inspired, Miraculous Religion?

By E. E. GUILD.

Paper, 20 cents; cloth, 30 cents.

PYRAMID OF GIZEH.

Ancient Egyptian Civilization and Hebrew Narrative in Genesis and Exodus.

By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D.

Price, 15 cents.

QUESTION SETTLED.

BIBLICAL and MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

By MOSES HULL.

Price, 60 cents.

Rational Communism.

THE PRESENT AND FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

Advocates associate life and employment as a preventive of vice, crime, poverty, etc.

By A CAPITALIST.

Paper, 498pp., 50 cts.; clo., $1.

Relation of Witchcraft to Religion.

By A. C. LYALL.

Price, 10 cents.

Fruits of Philosophy.

POPULATION QUESTION.

By Dr. Knowlton. Edited by Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant.

25 cents.

TRUTH. A Poem. By E. N. Kingsley. 10 cents.

POVERTY: Its Cause and Cure.

How the Poor May Attain Comfort and Independence.

By M. G. H.

Price, . . 10 cents.

Religion of Inhumanity.

With a Glance at the Religion of Humanity.

BY FREDERIC HARRISON.

Price, 15 cents.

RELIGION:

The Gibraltar of the World, as Now Constituted.

By George T. Bondies.

With

Exceptions to the Character of Christ as a Gentleman.

By W. T. Purviance.

25 cents.

IMAGE BREAKER.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Six Lectures.

Decline of Faith.
Protestant Intolerance.
Washington an Unbeliever.
Jefferson an Unbeliever.
Paine and Wesley.
Christian Sabbath.

Each, 5 cents; bound, pap., 25 cents; per doz., 40.

SABBATH BREAKING.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, 25 cents.

St. Matthew Before the Court

FOR THE CRIME OF FORGERY.

By SECULARIST.

Price, . . . 10 cents.

SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.

Including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, Bible.

By D. M. BENNETT.

(From Vol. II. "Gods and Religions.")

333pp., pap., 60 c.; clo., $1.

For all of the above books address

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE

Bible of Nature,

OR, THE

Principles of Secularism.

A CONTRIBUTION to the RELIGION of the FUTURE.

BY PROF. FELIX L. OSWALD,

Author of "The Secret of the East, or the Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline," "Physical Education, or the Health-Laws of Nature," "Household Remedies," "The Poison Problem, or the Cause and the Cure of Intemperance," etc., etc.

Felix L. Oswald is a well-known and vigorous writer on scientific and social subjects.—[Cin. Com. Gazette.

Cloth, 12mo, 240pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co

---

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS

OF

HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in the Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1 00.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

POINTERS:

A POCKET CYCLOPEDIA,

CONTAINING

Tables, Rules, Practical Hints, and Historical Sketches, for Farmers, Mechanics, Machinists, Merchants, Housekeepers, and the Public Generally, with

Numerous Maps, Illustrations, and Diagrams

Illustrating some of the more Important Comparativ Statistics of the World.

More Information for Less Money than has ever been offered.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

For $50 worth of "Cold Facts" boiled down in a Nutshell. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Expos tion of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: ow suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By D. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR HOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

AN HOUR WITH THE DEVIL.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Price. - - - 10 cents.

THE

UNIVERSE ANALYZED

BY JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,

Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.

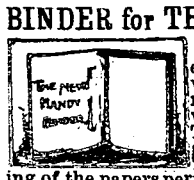
The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productiv of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,



OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.

Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Argument by R. G. Ingersoll

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

At Morristown, New Jersey.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES:

A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.

BY J. K. INGALLS.

Price, - - 25 cents.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhatlan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 3 o'clock.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Elizur Wright Secular Union

Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10 30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club

Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

DIAMONDS.

Unprecedented offer. No other house so fair In order to giv my Liberal friends throughout the United States an opportunity to examin, test, and compare my goods and prices with those of other diamond merchants, I will sell any piece of Diamond Jewelry, accompanied by contract that cash in full will be refunded any time within one year from date of purchasing if goods are not entirely satisfactory. No other dealer will do it. None will sell as cheap. Carrying a large stock, being an expert, close buyer, and doing business on smallest possible expense, you will positivly save twenty to thirty per cent by purchasing of me. Diamond Pins and Eardrops, worth $600, for $400; Pins, Rings, Eardrops, Studs, Hair Ornaments, Pendants, worth $300, for $200; do., worth $200, for $140; do., worth $150, for $110; do., worth $100 for $70; do., worth $80, for $60; do., worth $60, for $45; do., worth $40, for $30; do., worth $30, for $22; do, worth $20, for $15. You can wear these goods daily for one year. It will not cost you a cent. If in the mean time you are not satisfied that the goods are better and cheaper than sold elsewhere return and get your cash in full.

Selections sent to responsible parties on approval; to any banking-house or C.O.D., privilege of examination.

Tre "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

sixteen jewels, finely adjusted to heat and cold, patent regulator, Breguet hair-spring, beautiful double-paneled dial, and all modern improvements Perfect, and no watch will compete with it! In silverine case, $19; in four-ounce coin silver case, $23.50; five-ounce, $25; six ounce, $27. In open face, best filled gold case, $27; hunting, $28; do., Louis XIV., $35. In fourteen carat solid gold, $50 to $150. Sent prepaid, and cash refunded if not satisfactory.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.
Established 1857.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 160 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court E.C., London. Eng.

LIFE OF

Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

News of the Week.

JEFFERSON DAVIS is critically ill at New Orleans.

SOME German employers are serving free coffee and light beer to their men to keep them from drinking brandy.

THE law prohibiting the importation of contract laborers is usually evaded, but occasionally a gang of contract men is sent back.

MANY cities hav abandoned corporal punishment in the schools, but Boston continues the practice, and had eighteen thousand cases last year.

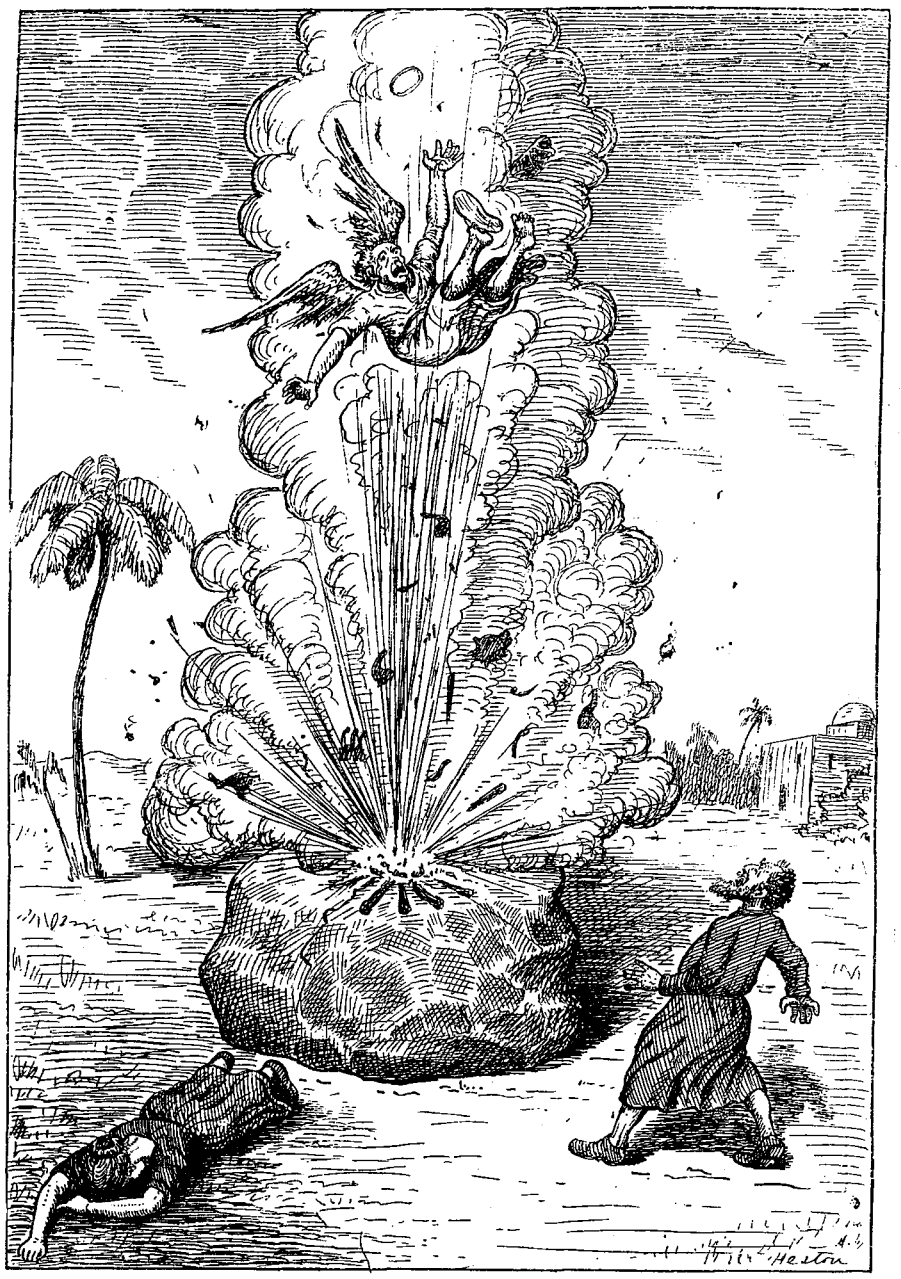
VAST amounts of money and time are being wasted in pilgrimages to the shrine at Lourdes, France, which the clergy advertise as working miraculous cures.

NEW YORK aldermen, to secure the votes of a musicians' union, hav forbid street bands and hand-organs, which the poor declare is tyrannical and wrong.

OF the many boys and girls under legal working age that are in Newark, N. J., factories, a few hav been looked up by officers and ordered to school.

A MONTREAL paper, L'Etendard, says: "Despite Great Britain's protest the French Canadians would send 5,000 zouaves to fight for the pope against Italy."

THE Mormons who hav settled in the Canadian Northwest are reported to hav announced their intention to continue polygamy, and the authorities are preparing to prevent them.



POLISH Roman Catholic soldiers in the Russian army complain that various underhand means are taken to induce them to receive the ministrations of Greek Catholic priests.

THE last week has been one of very unusual agitation of Socialism in England. A cable says that many of the middle class of merchants, Parliamentary parties, and men of the highest eminence seem to be embracing the new doctrin. Spencer is writing letters against it to the London Times.

THE Catholic centennial opened at Baltimore on the 10th with imposing ceremonials and adornments, among which were intermingled papal and American flags. Archbishop Ryan said the Catholics had here 9,000,000 population, 8,000 priests, 10,500 churches and chapels, and 650 colleges and academies.

AT the Episcopal convention a member said that two men, one an ecclesiastic and the other an unbeliever, had remarked to him: "The Protestant Episcopal church will never take up the cause of labor; she is too deeply compromised with wealth."

A REVOLUTION in Brazil has abolished the empire and instituted a republic. Emperor Dom Pedro was warned to leave in twenty-four hours, and sailed for Europe. He will be given an allowance for support. Almost no bloodshed has occurred. However, some may take place, as there are about 500,000 loosely organized militia in the empire, and it is rumored that they will assemble in some provinces that are said to be loyal. The regular army is for the revolution, and possesses the capital and all important points. The crown in the old flag has been replaced by a Phrygian cap. The imperfect news does not enable us to discern the true motiv at the bottom of the rising. It is true that some of the best minds there were for republicanism, but this revolution seems to hav arisen not from their action so much as from conservativ and landholding quarters. The new president is an army officer who was incensed at a recent correction given him. The army is corrupt, and has evinced resentment at rebukes of the press. The old slaveholders, who by emancipation were left at once without support and occupation, and aggrieved and unquiet, are engaged in the revolutionary party. And while many persons were disposed against the princess who was to succeed Dom Pedro, because she was under the thumb of the priests and Jesuits, yet these objectors do not seem to be the instigators of the movement. Dom Pedro was a liberal emperor, and traveled several years in Europe and America gathering inventions, and ideas, and men of practical skill, for introduction in his own land. His monarchy was constitutional, not despotic. There was envy and dissatisfaction among those who failed to be chosen in his conferral of distinctions of nobility. So it is not yet certain that the revolution is not a conservativ move under a liberal disguise.

ANOTHER ANGEL ASCENDETH.

For it came to pass, when the flame went up toward heaven from off the altar, that the angel of the Lord ascended in the flame of the altar: and Manoah and his wife looked on it, and fell on their faces to the ground.—Judges xiii, 20.

Odds and Ends.

A MAN may be as bold as a lion,
But how sheepish he will look
If his wife comes into the kitchen
And catches him kissing the cook!
—Argonaut.

CONJUGAL scene between Monsieur and Madam de Bondamaousse: "Why," said the husband, "do you put the hair of another woman on your head?" "Why," retorted his better half, "do you wear the skin of another calf on your hands?" —Le Voltaire.

SHE: "Ashburton O'Donohue, it is in vain you plead. I never kin be your'n. I am told you hav seven dollars and a half in the savings bank, and my fren's will say I married yer fer yer money. I am sorry yer wuzzent poor, for then—but no matter—depart and go—leave me!" (He does so to the slow music of a barrel organ played outside.) —Life.

MR. BIZNIS: "Whew! but I'm tired out!" Mrs. Biznis: "What is the matter?" Mr. Biznis: "The second bookkeeper asked me for a half-day off to attend his aunt's funeral, and like a smart Aleck I said I would go with him." Mrs. Biznis: "Was it a very good game? What was the score?" Mr. Biznis: "That's just where I got fooled myself. He was really going to his aunt's funeral." —Terre Haute Express.

EXTRACT FROM A SERMON OF THE REV. SIM GOOSEBERRY, 'POSSUM BOTTOM, W. VA.

"I hab ch'iced dese wo'ds for de tex': 'It am easiah fo' a camel to go troo de eye ob a needle dan fo' a rich man to entah into de kingdom.' An' dey am mighty oncouragin' for de rich man.

"I don't reckon it's likely dat any ob you bruddahs an' sistahs sittin' afo' me ebber seed a camel, 'less you been to de ci'cus on de sly, an' hain't gib it in in yo' 'sperience in de class meetin'.

"Dar am nothin' 'bout a camel dat you kin put a p'int on. Ef yo'd sta't wid de tail ob a camel fo' to thread a b'an do' wid, yo'd git fotched up wid a knot afo' you got two foot. Ef yo'd sta't wid the head fo' to pull him troo, you wouldn't git nowhar. You might jes' ez well try fo' to bore a hole in a bundle ob wool wid an augah. Dat am de kind ob job you'd hab puttin' a camel troo de eye ob a needle.

"All dem dat's restin' in der ca'nal secu'ity on dar piles ob money had bettah be a loosenin' de strings ob dar money-bags, an' gittin' de knots ob sin out ob demselvs, an' rubbin' down de humps ob onrighteousness, an' squeezin' in dar big feet ob wickedness, an' gittin' de crook ob pride out ob dar necks, an' p'intin' dar tails ob contempsity fo' to git ready fo' de threadin' match wid dat camel on de great day ob judgment; or de camel's gwine to beat 'em threadin', shoo. De Lo'd's gwine to fu'nish de needle, an' de debble's gwine to fu'nish de camel, an' de rich man's gwine to stick.

"You sinnahs ob 'Possum Bottom ain't gwine to scoot troo dat eye ob de Lo'd's needle like a haiah troo a bodkin—lettin' on yo' too poo' fo' to match wid the camel. Yo' gwine to stick right wha' dat money's bulgin' out yo' pockets, dat you ought to gib yo' preachah fo' greasin' you wid fac's, an' 'ilin' you wid p'ints dat 'ill beat the camel an' gib you a show fo' de kingdom.

"Ef de perspicity ob dis tex' am not cleah 'nough fo' to make you ondahstand dat de collection dis very mo'nin' 's got to git de bulgin' out ob yo' pockets fo' to pay dat fo' dollahs dat you owe me, I kin make it mo' perspicitous.

"De fust time dat I rose in de pulpit fo' to preach, I was so skead dat I fo'got de wo'ds ob de tex'. Dey was de very same wo'ds dat I hab ch'iced fo' dis mo'nin'. De camel bein' a new crittah to me, I couldn't fotch its name nohow. Dar I stood afo' a whole sanctua'y full of sinnahs, a-squi'min' an' a-wrestlin' wid a dumb spi'it dat had me by de tongue. I had de meanin' ob de tex' an' de kingdom, but de crittah an' de needle was furder. I saw de sin ob lebity creepin' into de sanctua'y. Dat riled me an' downed de dumb spi'it. So sez I: 'Fellow sinnahs an' sco'nahs, it am easiah fo' a cow to climb a tree an' hatch her calf in a bird's nest, den it am fo' a pusson to git into de kingdom wid money a-bulgin' him.' And so it am."—Tobe Hodge in Puck.

THE HEAVENWARD HOLD UP—AN ARIZONA HAIL AND FAREWELL.

Throw up my han's? Why, *sar*tin, pard!
Anything f'r accommudash'n!
Don't tickle them triggers quite so hard—
Buckshot 'n me ain't no relash'n!

I ain't huntin' no long-lost Bud,
Strawb'ry-marked in the left-hand bar'el!
Don't keer to change my name to Mud—
Durn sight ruther we wudn't quar'el.

I hain't got much stuff 'n my clo'es,
Only a span o' big iron dollars.
In course yo're welc'me, pard, to those—
Et's Jim-Crow luck us miners follers!

All I got? Yep! Sorry, Ol' Socks!
Look 'n see, ef yo're jubous 'bout et.
Say, now! Don't snipe thet little box—
I cain't git on nohow without et!

Shet up my jaw? Oh, shet et goes!
Only I hate to hev' yo' take et.
Don't go spile et under my nose—
Wot? Yo're tak'n a rock to break et? ! ? ! !

[To various aspiring fragments of highwayman.]

Oh, wal, good-bye, ef yo're dispersed!
Didn't 'llow yo s 'n no sech hurry!
'F I'd thought, I might 'a told yo' first,
Thet dynymite's fr'm Jim's stun-quirry!

By the way, ef yo're comin' down,
Fetch my boodle 'n that thar double-
Bar'el—they'd spile 'n yo'r new town,
But I c'n use 'm 'thout no trouble!
—Chas. F. Lummis in Life.

Gems of Thought.

OF course the opinions and habits belonging in common to the masses of mankind are to a great extent the results of sound judgment and practical wisdom. But to a great extent it is not so.—Edw. B. Tylor, F.R.S.

WE do not yet know how far we are beneath the Hottentots in certain matters.—Voltaire.

WHEN the church obtained the direction of the civil power, she soon modified or abandoned the tolerant maxims she had formerly inculcated.—Lecky.

AS long as their own necks were in danger, the clerics of the early Christian church inveighed against tyranny and intolerance; but as soon as that danger was past the doctrin of passiv submission to injustice bore its natural fruit, and the lot of the European peasantry became infinitly worse than that of the so-called slaves of the Grecian empire and the Roman republics.—Prof. Felix L. Oswald.

ADMITTING, for the sake of a case, that something has been revealed to a certain person, and not revealed to any other person, it is revelation to that person only. When he tells it to a second person, a second to a third, a third to a fourth, and so on, it ceases to be a revelation to all those persons. It is revelation to the first person only, and hearsay to every other, and, consequently, they are not obliged to believe it.—Paine.

WHAT should I obey? Another man's oracle? Shall I take another man's word—not what he thinks, but what he says some God has said to him?—Ingersoll.

EVERY new truth, which has ever been propounded, has, for a time, caused mischief; it has produced discomfort, and often unhappiness, sometimes by disturbing social or religious arrangements, and sometimes merely by the disruption of old and cherished associations of thought. It is only after a certain interval, and when the framework of affairs has adjusted itself to the new truth, that its good effects preponderate; and the preponderance continues to increase, until, at length, the truth causes nothing but good. But, at the outset, there is always harm. And, if the truth is very great, as well as very new, the harm is serious. Men are made uneasy; they flinch; they cannot bear the sudden light; a general restlessness supervenes; the face of society is disturbed, or perhaps convulsed; old interests, and old beliefs, are destroyed, before new ones hav been created. These symptoms are the precursors of revolution; they hav preceded all the great changes through which the world has passed.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

IT is the sense of power attached to a sense of knowledge that makes men desirous of believing, and afraid of doubting.—Prof. William Kingdon Clifford.

THE present generation will probably behave just as badly if another Darwin should arise and inflict upon them that which the generality of mankind most hate—the necessity of revising their convictions.—Huxley.

THE only common people are they who refuse to be led out of their own habit, notion, prejudice, willfulness, into higher, larger, better ways.—John H. Clifford.

THE pretension of philosophers to explain physical phenomena by physical causes, or to predict their occurrence, was, up to a very late period of polytheism, regarded as a sacrilegious insult to the gods. Anaxagoras was banished for it, Aristotle had to fly for his life, and the mere unfounded suspicion of it contributed greatly to the condemnation of Socrates. We are too well acquainted with this form of the religious sentiment even now, to hav any difficulty in comprehending what must hav been its violence then.—John Stuart Mill.

WOMEN were taught by the church and state alike that the feudal lord or seigneur had a right to them, not only against themselvs, but as against any claim of husband or father. The law known as Marchetta, or Marquette, compelled newly married women to a most dishonorable servitude. They were regarded as the rightful prey of the feudal lord from one to three days after their marriage, and from this custom the eldest son of the serf was held as the son of the lord, "as perchance it was he who begat him."—Gage's Woman, Church, and State.

IF you really wish to know the Bible estimation of woman, turn to the fourth and fifth verses of the twelfth chapter of Leviticus, in which a woman, for the crime of having borne a son, is unfit to touch a hallowed thing, or to come in the holy sanctuary for thirty-three days; but if a woman was the mother of a girl, then she became totally unfit to enter the sanctuary, or pollute with her touch a hallowed thing, for sixty-six days. The pollution was twice as great when she had borne a daughter. It is a little difficult to see why it is a greater crime to giv birth to a daughter than to a son. Surely, a law like that did not tend to the elevation of woman. You will also find in the same chapter that a woman had to offer a pigeon, or a turtle-dove, as a sin offering, in order to expiate the crime of having become a mother. By the Levitical law, a mother was unclean. The priest had to make an atonement for her. If there is, beneath the stars, a figure of complete and perfect purity, it is a mother holding in her arms her child. The laws respecting women, given by commandment of Jehovah to the Jews, were born of barbarism, and in this day and age should be regarded only with detestation and contempt. The twentieth and twenty-first verses of the nineteenth chapter of Leviticus show that the same punishment was not meted to men and women guilty of the same crime. The real explanation of what we find in the Old Testament degrading to woman, lies in the fact, that the overflow of Love's mysterious Nile—the sacred source of life—was, by its savage authors, deemed unclean.—Ingersoll.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 48. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY. {New York, Saturday, November 30 1889.} 28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

THE GLORY OF PREDESTINATION.

Notes and Clippings.

"KNEEL and pray with me," said a man to a New York policeman yesterday. Of course, comments the Sun, he was at once spotted as a lunatic.

RELIGION sometimes attacks young children as well as older ones. A dispatch from Chattanooga, Tenn., says: "Johnny Walters, aged twelve, has gone insane on religious subjects. He expects to be translated like Elijah."

THERE is no moral in this story, says the Lewiston Journal, but it is said that the Saco woman who had written several hundred scandalous anonymous letters was finally detected by her writing on an envelope dropped into the church contribution-box.

MR. WILLIAM RADCLIFFE writes to the Twentieth Century that Dr. McGlynn spoke in Youngstown on November 13th, and spent that night with Mr. Lemming, priest of the Catholic church of Hazelton, near Youngstown; and he says he wants to know what the propaganda will do about it.

CHIEF-JUSTICE BEASLEY, of New Jersey, decides that Henry George shall hav the $10,000 bequeathed to him with which to circulate "Progress and Poverty." It will be remembered that Chancellor Bird decided otherwise upon the ground that Mr. George's works were subversiv of established law, and thus won from Mr. George the title of an "immortal ass."

THE Buffalo Christian Advocate says: "We heard Dr. Parkhurst, one of the most thoughtful men of the New York pulpit, say, recently, that there are in the religious world two inclined planes—one leads toward Atheism, the other toward Rome." Dr. Parkhurst is right. Rome or Reason are the only logical alternativs. Protestantism has no rational standing-ground.

A QUESTION that has been agitating a portion of the community: How did Peter lose his hat?—Marlboro Star. If you mean the Peter who lied and swore so vehemently in a Jerusalem bar-room that he set the roosters to crowing, he probably never had one. At any rate, all the photographs of the tramps, of whom he was one, represent them as being bareheaded as well as barefooted.—Marlboro Times.

THE gentlemen who hav given us a new version hav not helped matters a particle. If they would only hunt around and find a codex in which the Lord's prayer would read, "Forgiv us our debts, and help us collect what is owed to us," they would mark a very decided epoch in the progress of mankind, and put that prayer into such a shape that most men could say it.—New York Herald.

A RETURNED missionary, who has been many years in Japan, has just been showing some curious effects of culture in that country. It seems that the Japanese hav seized upon the idea of secular education with great avidity. While only seven thousand children go to school where religious knowledge is a part of the curriculum, over three million attend where the teaching is purely Agnostic. The young men develop a keen love for metaphysical doctrin and research, but their favorit authors are Mill, Spencer, Darwin, and Huxley.

SAYS the Sunday Mercury: "The Christian Union is probably too pious to mention the name of a live secular paper like the Mercury, but it is not too honest to steal from the Mercury's columns and palm off the proceeds of its theft on its Christian readers as its own. It published last week a couple of columns of the Depew deadhead letters, and did some hypocritical moralizing. The religious paper is, generally speaking, the sneak-thief of journalism."

MR. GLADSTONE wrote a letter to the late so-called Sabbath congress in Paris advocating Sunday observance and laws for its enforcement, but he is as hypocritical in his advocacy as our own sniveling Shepard. This is shown by the fact that on the Sunday preceding the congress Mr. Gladstone, who was in Paris, after attending church in the morning, drove with a party of friends in the Bois-de-Boulogne, and in the evening visited the great Exposition.

PATROLMAN AUGUSTUS M. DENYSE, of the West Thirtieth street police station, New York, died two weeks ago. He was forty-two years old, and had been on the New York police force for many years. He was an Agnostic, and when he was near death one of his friends, Sergeant Crocker, asked him if he did not wish to make his peace with God. "No, John," said Denyse, "this is no time for hypocrisy." He was afflicted with heart disease, and had calmly made all his preparations for death. His obsequies were presided over by a police sergeant. It is interesting to know that some time there has been one man on the police force who was not a truckling tool of the Romish church.

THE St. Louis Republic has found out what the Japanese believe about hell. It says: "The Japanese language has no equivalent for our word 'hell,' but has the word 'jigoku' instead. Jigoku consists of (1) eight immense hot hells, ranging one beneath the other in tiers. Each of these hells has sixteen additional hells outside its gates, like so many ante-chambers, so that there are in all 136 hot hells. (2) There are eight large cold hells, each with its sixteen ante-hells, making the same number of cold that there are of hot hells. Besides these 272 hot and cold hells for offenders of the common sort, the wily Japs hav arranged for twenty mammoth hells of utter darkness, into which will be consigned the lost spirits of children who take the name of Dai Butsa, or Great Buddha, in vain."

I SAW a pregnant example of orthodox piety last Sunday, says one of the editors of the New York Truth. It was after early mass, at St. Patrick's in Mott street. The grocery store on the corner was open for the convenience of those who had been too happy on Saturday night to lay in their Sunday stores—a barrel of potatoes was on the sidewalk, open and full of tempting tubers. An old woman came out of the church blear-eyed and toothless. Her gaze was fascinated by the spuds. She approached the barrel, with one hand she spread her ragged shawl over it, with the other she crossed herself piously, then looking around, to make sure that no profane eye observed her, she quietly abstracted a dozen or so, and toddled off. She had "made her sowl," her moral slate was clean, and she lost no time in beginning a fresh score.

Communications.

Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?

CHAPTER VIII.—CONCLUDED.

Testimony of Lamon's Witnesses.

This division of Lincoln's life is quite indefinit, but Reed would hav us believe that Colonel Matheny's evidence relates wholly to that portion of his life anterior to 1848, when Dr. Smith began the task of Christianizing him. Matheny's disclaimer is dated Dec. 16, 1872. On Dec. 9, 1873, he made the following explanation, which was published in a Springfield paper:

What I mean, in my Reed letter, by Mr. Lincoln's earlier life, is his whole life and history in Illinois. In Illinois, and up to the time he left for Washington, he was, as I understand it, a confirmed Infidel. What I mean by Mr. Lincoln's later life, is his Washington life, where he associated with religious people, when and where I believe he thought he became a Christian. I told Mr. Reed all this just before signing the letter spoken of. I knew nothing of Mr. Lincoln's investigation into the subject of Christianity.

He says that his evidence "is a mere collection of sayings gathered from private conversations." It is doubtless true that he had many private conversations with Mr. Herndon on this subject; but his published testimony was all given at one sitting, and more, he signed that testimony. Every word attributed to him in Lamon's work, and repeated in this chapter, originally appeared above his signature.

The concluding words of his disclaimer are as follows:

While I do believe Mr. Lincoln to hav been an Infidel in his former life, when his mind was as yet unformed, and his associations principally with rough and skeptical men, yet I believe he was a very different man in later life; and that after associating with a different class of men, and investigating the subject, he was a firm believer in the Christian religion.

These words, as modified by the following, constitute a most remarkable statement:

In Illinois, and up to the time he left for Washington, he was, as I understand it, a confirmed Infidel. What I mean by Mr. Lincoln's later life, is his Washington life, where he associated with religious people.

Colonel Matheny confines Lincoln's Infidelity to that portion of his life "when his mind was as yet unformed," and affirms that this portion comprised all the years preceding his removal to Washington in 1861. Thus during the first fifty-two years of Lincoln's life, "his mind was as yet unformed." His enviable reputation as one of the foremost lawyers of Illinois was achieved while "his mind was as yet unformed;" when his friends sent him to Congress, "his mind was as yet unformed;" when he made his Bloomington speech, "his mind was as yet unformed;" when he delivered his famous Springfield speech, "his mind was as yet unformed;" when he conducted his masterly debates with Stephen A. Douglas, "his mind was as yet unformed;" when he prepared and delivered that model of political addresses, the Cooper Institute address, "his mind was as yet unformed;" when at the Chicago convention he outstripped in the race for presidential nominee such eminent leaders as Seward and Chase, "his mind was as yet unformed;" when he was elected chief magistrate of this great nation, "his mind was as yet unformed."

It was only by leaving Illinois and going to Washington that he was thrown into religious society. Washington politicians are noted for their piety, you know. According to Matheny et al., New Salem was a second Sodom, Springfield a second Gomorrah, and Washington a sort of New Jerusalem, inhabited chiefly by saints.

Neither in Matheny's letter, nor in his interpretation of this letter, is there a word to indicate that he recognized the fact that Lincoln went to Washington to assume the office and perform the duties of president. On the contrary, the whole tenor of his remarks is to the effect that he believed the people sent him there on account of his wickedness, and while "his mind was as yet unformed," to attend a reform school, and that subsequently he entered a theological seminary, and there died.

The most amusing feature of Matheny's letter is that he unwittingly certifies that his own character was not good. He declares that Lincoln was an Infidel because his associations were "with rough and skeptical men;" but that after removing to Washington and "associating with a different class of men" he became a Christian. Now, it is well known that one of the most conspicuous of his "rough and skeptical" associates in Illinois was James H. Matheny.

Colonel Matheny in his explanatory remarks says: "I believe he thought he became a Christian;" and in almost the next breath says, "I knew nothing of Mr. Lincoln's investigation into the subject of Christian ity." Can anything be more unreasonable than this? Colonel Matheny knowing that Lincoln was a confirmed Infidel—an Infidel when he went to Washington—knowing nothing about his having afterward investigated Christianity—knowing that he had no time for such an investigation, and yet believing that Lincoln thought he became a Christian! Why did he not mention this when he gave his testimony? The fact is, he did not believe that Lincoln became a Christian; but with an orthodox club raised above his head, he found it very convenient to profess to believe it.

As Mr. Reed has endeavored to prove that Lamon and Herndon did not faithfully report the evidence of Stuart and Matheny, it is but just that Mr. Herndon, who took down their testimony, be permitted to speak in his own defense. In his Springfield lecture, delivered in Major Stuart's town, if not in his presence, referring to Stuart's testimony, he says:

Mr. Stuart did not write the note and no one ever said he did. What is there stated was the substance of a conversation between Mr. Stuart and myself about Mr. Lincoln's religion. I took down in a note in his office and in his presence his words and ideas as I did in other cases. The conversation spoken of took place in Mr. Stuart's office, and in the east room. Mr. Stuart does not deny that the note is substantially correct. He simply says he could not hav said that Dr. Smith tried to convert Mr. Lincoln, and couldn't do it. I well remember that he did use this language. It seemed to do him good to say it. . . . It seems that Mr. Stuart had heard that Mr. Lincoln and Dr. Smith had much discussion about Christianity, but he failed to hear of Mr. Lincoln's conversion, or anything like it, and well might he say, as he did, that "Dr. Smith tried to convert Mr. Lincoln, but couldn't do it."

Any charitably disposed person, knowing the general good character of both men, instead of crying "Fraud," as Reed has done, will readily conclude that Mr. Herndon was mistaken, or that Mr. Stuart had forgotten just what he did say, and is it not more reasonable to suppose that the latter gentleman, in the lapse of six years, should hav forgotten some things he said, than that Mr. Herndon, who recorded them the moment they were uttered, should be mistaken?

Alluding to Colonel Matheny's evidence, in the same lecture, Mr. Herndon says:

The next gentleman introduced by Mr. Reed is Col. James H. Matheny. He is made to say, in a letter addressed to Mr. Reed, that he did not write the statement in Lamon's "Life of Lincoln." I do not claim that he did. I wrote it in the court house—this hall—in Mr. Matheny's presence, and at his dictation. I read it over to him and he approved it. I wrote it all at once as he spoke it to me; it is not made up of scraps—"a mere collection of sayings gathered from private conversations, that were only true of Mr. Lincoln's earlier life." I say that this statement was written all at one time and place, and not at different times and places. Let any critic, any man of common sense, read it and he will say: "This was all written at once." I appeal to the manner—the close connection of words and ideas in which it runs—word with word, sentence with sentence, and idea with idea, for the proof that it was made at one sitting. Mr. Matheny has often told me that Mr. Lincoln was an Infidel. He admits this in his letter to Mr. Reed. He never intimated in that or any other conversation with me that he believed that Mr. Lincoln in his later life became a Christian.

In a letter dated Sept. 14, 1887, Mr. Herndon writes:

I acted in this matter honestly, and I will always abide by my notes taken down at the time. I was cautious—very careful of what I did, because I knew that the church would damn me and prove me false if it could. I stood on the exactness of truth squarely.

I hav thus far assumed that Stuart and Matheny really wrote the letters of disclaimer addressed to Reed. Mr. Reed states that he is "amazed to find" that they did not write the statements attributed to them by Lamon. The reader is by this time sufficiently familiar with this reverend gentleman's methods that he will not be "amazed to find" that Stuart and Matheny did not write these disclaimers. I now affirm that James H. Matheny did not write a word of the letter purporting to hav been written by him. It was written by the Rev. J. A. Reed! We hav not the expressed declaration of Mr. Stuart that this is true of the letter imputed to him, but there is other evidence which makes it clearly apparent that this letter was also written by Mr. Reed.

Nor is this all. I shall now endeavor to show that the greater part of the evidence presented by Reed, in his lecture, was composed and written by himself. Let us take the four letters credited respectivly to Edwards, Lewis, Stuart, and Matheny. I shall attempt to demonstrate the common origin of these letters, first, by their form; secondly, by the language of their contents.

The different forms employed in epistolary correspondence are numerous, far more numerous than generally supposed. To illustrate: four hundred letters, written by as many different persons, and all addressed to the same person, were, without examination, divided into one hundred parcels of four letters each. They were then examined in regard to the form employed by the writer. The heading, the address, the introduction, and the subscription were noted—no attention being paid to the body of the letter, or the signature. In not one of these one hundred parcels were found four letters having the same form. The heading of these letters exhibited nine different forms; the address, fourteen; the introduction, eight; and the subscription, eleven.

Again, nearly every writer employs certain idioms of language that are peculiar to him, and which reveal his identity, even though he tries to conceal it.

Let us now institute a brief analysis of the four letters under consideration. Errors will be noticed, not for the purpose of reflecting upon the literary attainments of the writer, but solely with a view of discovering his identity. These are mostly of a trivial character, confined to marks of punctuation, etc.; and it is a recognized fact that a majority of educated persons, including many professional writers, are more or less deficient in the art of punctuation. In proof of the common authorship of these four letters the following reasons are submitted.

1. In all of them we recognize a stiff formality—a studied effort to conform to one ideal standard.

2. All of them were written at Springfield, and all omit the name of the state.

3. In each of them, the day of the month is followed by the suffix "th." This, if not wholly improper, is not common usage. Had these letters been written by the four persons to whom they are ascribed, at least three of them would hav omitted it.

4. In all, but one, the address is "Rev. J. A. Reed," and in the exception the writer merely substitutes "Jas." for "J."

5. In each of them the address is followed by a colon instead of a comma, the proper mark to use. Had they been written by four persons, it is possible that a part, or even all, would hav made an error, but it is highly improbable that all would hav made the same error.

6. In these letters, the introductory words are uniformly "Dear Sir"—the most common form of introduction, and the one that a writer, in drafting a letter addressed to himself, would most naturally employ.

7. In every instance, the introduction is followed by a dash instead of a colon—a uniformity of error, again.

8. In the subscription, the term, "Yours truly," is invariably used, except in the Lewis letter, which concludes with "Yours, etc."

9. The Edwards letter and the Lewis letter begin with the same idea, expressed in nearly the same words. Edwards is made to say, "A short time after the Rev. Dr. Smith," etc.; and Lewis, "Not long after Dr. Smith."

10. Omitting the introductory sentence in the Stuart letter, which is merely the expansion of an idea used in writing the Matheny letter on the preceding day, the Stuart and Matheny letters begin with the same idea. Stuart says: "The language of that statement is not mine; it was not written by me." Matheny says: "The language attributed to me . . . is not from my pen. I did not write it." Reed himself uses substantially the same language that is ascribed to them. Had their statements, as published in Lamon's work, been forgeries, or grossly inaccurate, they might hav used the language quoted above. Under the circumstances they would not hav used it. Major Stuart and Colonel Matheny were lawyers, not pettifoggers.

11. These prefatory sentences of Stuart and Matheny both begin with the same words—"the language."

12. In both the Edwards and Lewis letters, reference is made to a theological work which Dr. Smith is said to hav written. The writer of neither letter is able to state the name of the book; Dr. Reed is unable to state the name of it; Dr. Smith himself does not mention the name of it; but he does plainly state that it was a work on the Bible. For "the business he had on hand," however, it suited Reed's purpose better to giv a semi-erroneous impression of its character, and so he affirms that it was a work on "the evidences of Christianity." Curiously enough, in the Edwards letter and again in the Lewis letter, the book is described as a work on "the evidences of Christianity."

13. The Edwards letter reports Lincoln as saying: "I hav been reading a work of Dr. Smith on the evidences of Christianity." The Lewis letter represents him as saying that "He had seen and partially read a work of Dr. Smith on the evidences of Christianity." Here are ten consecutiv words in the two letters identical.

14. Mr. Reid, in his lecture, never once uses the word "Christianity," except as above noticed to describe Dr. Smith's book; he always uses the words "the Christian religion"—employing this term no less than seven times. This usage is not common. An examination of various theological writings shows that "Christianity" is used twenty times where "the Christian religion" is used once. Yet in these letters the word "Christianity" is not to be found, except in the same sense as used by Dr. Reed, while "the Christian religion" occurs in each of the four letters.

15. "The truth of the Christian religion" is a favorit phrase with Reed, occurring three times in his lecture. This phrase also occurs three times in these letters—once in the Edwards letter, and twice in the Stuart letter.

16. Reed has much to say about Lincoln's "life and religious sentiments;" in fact, his lecture is entitled, "The Later Life and Religious Sentiments of Abraham Lincoln." In the Matheny letter, too, we find "Mr. Lincoln's life and religious sentiments."

17. The words "earlier" and "later" are frequently used by Reed in connection with Lincoln's life. The same words are used in the Stuart and Matheny letters, and in the same connection.

18. The Stuart letter is, for the most part, devoted to the narration of "some facts" which Mr. Stuart is said to hav presented to Mr. Herndon, beginning with this: "That Eddie, a child of Mr. Lincoln, died in 1848 or 1849," etc. Now, Mr. Stuart well knew that, during all this time, Mr. Herndon was the intimate associate of Lincoln and thoroughly familiar with every event in his history. The "facts" given in this letter are not such as Mr. Stuart would hav communicated to Mr. Herndon, but they are such as Mr. Reed would naturally desire to place before the public.

19. Nothing in Dr. Reed's career has excited his vanity more than the fact that he was pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Springfield—the church which Lincoln once attended. Consequently, the "First Presbyterian church" is a conspicuous object in his lecture, and nowhere is it more conspicuous than in these letters. In the Stuart letter it appears three times, and the writer never fails to state that it was the "First Presbyterian church"—the church of which Dr. Reed was pastor.

20. According to the principle of accretion, if two articles or letters are written on the same subject, the second will usually be longer than the first. This is true of these letters. The Lewis letter, relating to Smith's reputed conversion of Lincoln, was written after the Edwards letter relativ to the same subject, and is longer. The Stuart disclaimer, which is the longer of the two, was written after the Matheny disclaimer.

From the foregoing, is it not clearly evident that these four letters were all written by the same person? If so, then knowing that Dr. Reed wrote one of them, the Matheny letter, does it not necessarily follow that he wrote them all?

In the Gurley testimony, such expressions as "the Christian religion" and "the truth of the Christian religion," together with the Reed story concerning Lincoln's intention of making a profession of religion, reveal the authorship of this testimony also.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

An English Estimate of Ingersoll.

Le bonheur appartient à qui fait des heureux.—Deliele.
Das Gerücht ist Köstlichler, den grosser Reichthum, und Gunst, denn Silber and Gold.—Die Sprüche.

Among Freethought leaders of this century none are entitled to greater honor than Colonel Robert Ingersoll, writes Mr. W. Irving in Saladin's Agnostic Journal. His writings and lectures are so well known in America and the United Kingdom that his name has become a household word. It would be difficult to over-estimate the impetus that he has imparted to Rationalism. That he has given orthodoxy a severe shaking, from which it is impossible for it to recover, may be gathered from the significant fact that the views of which he is so accomplished an advocate hav been deemed worthy of attempted refutation at the hands of distinguished ecclesiastical dignitaries versed in the subtleties and sophistries of theological polemics. Men respected on account of their scholastic attainments, political eminence, cultivated controversial skill, or literary fame, hav crossed swords with him in the dialectical arena. Out of every contest he has emerged radiant with triumph. He has not only parried the blows of his opponents, but returned their thrusts with interest. Exposed to the ceaseless play of his battery of eloquence, wit, sarcasm, pathos, and logic, the arguments of his critics hav been completely disintegrated and annihilated. Even those whose interests and prejudices predispose them to regard Colonel Ingersoll's principles with undisguised disfavor are fain to pay tributes to the marvelous ability and judgment with which he has for years conducted his advocacy of Freethought views. They admit that he is an intellectual colossus, the coruscations of whose genius hav served to stimulate thought, illuminate the highways of knowledge, and place the principle of freedom of discussion on a surer foundation. While vigorously combating the arguments he adduces in favor of his position as a Freethought propagandist, they cannot but acknowledge his transparent sincerity, purity of motiv, and the grandeur of his unique personality. Ingersoll is unquestionably a king among men.

The enormous sale that Colonel Ingersoll's lectures hav had in this country and on the American continent are a striking proof of the popularity that he enjoys. This popularity has been won by the judicious employment of a rare combination of mental gifts. His Freethought orations are read by members of every class. A variety of causes hav coöperated to gain for Colonel Ingersoll's published speeches a wide and varied audience. He is a consummate master of the English language. He speaks and writes in a style perfectly intelligible to any grade of intellect. There is no possibility of misunderstanding his meaning. For directness, incisivness, and lucidity of expression he has no living superior. His sentences are like deftly-cut diamonds, polished and pure, but retaining their nativ brilliance and intrinsic worth. Possessed of an almost inexhaustible flow of language, he finds no difficulty in investing his subjects with the charm of perennial interest. Though an iconoclast of the most uncompromising type, he has the faculty, in an extraordinary degree, of vindicating his cause without giving unnecessary offense. The chastity of his language is beyond commendation. There is not one of his published lectures but might safely be put into the hands of the most delicate and sensitiv-minded man, woman, or child. His speeches are redolent of common sense, pointed wit, good-natured humor, flashes of appropriate sarcasm, tear-moving pathos, and invincible reasoning. Henry Ward Beecher might well say, on a memorable occasion, that Colonel Ingersoll was the greatest living speaker on the globe. His lectures are the efforts of a man of intense feeling. He is inspired with a passionate desire for the welfare and upward evolution of humanity. His hatred of priestcraft is but equaled, if not overshadowed, by his pronounced humanitarian instincts. He delights in seeing and making his less favorably situated fellow-creatures, happy. The spectacle of wrong stirs him to indignation; sights of misery and wretchedness melt him to tears; ignorance, in its helplessness, arouses his pity, and despotism in any shape has in him an unwavering foe. These characteristics find their reflection in his numerous lectures, and, in combination with other qualities, afford an explanation of the almost unparalleled favor he has found in public esteem.

As a platform speaker Colonel Ingersoll, by the verdict of competent judges, has no superior among his contemporaries. That his lectures read well everyone knows who has enjoyed the pleasure of their perusal; but to listen to Ingersoll, as he paces the rostrum, is an intellectual and rhetorical treat. He possesses, to the fullest degree, those qualities of body and mind without which a reputation as a great orator cannot be attained. His personality is strangely magnetic. Power, kindness, good nature, and sympathy are indelibly stamped on his features. His very appearance, before he has spoken a word, irresistibly attracts and conciliates his audience. His hearers instinctivly recognize in him the possession of those ethical qualifications which endear a man to his fellows. He is not only a magnificent orator, capable, by the magic of his elcquence, of touching men's hearts, playing dextrously on their emotions, and molding their convictions; but he is essentially a great man, endowed with catholic sympathies and an inexhaustible fund of humanity. He believes and feels what he says. He has a mission to perform, and to its accomplishment he brings the trained resources of a mental giant's strength. He displays a thorough grasp of every subject he takes in hand. The masses love him for the sympathy he displays for them in their woes, vicissitudes, and aspirations. They respect his evident determination to devote the power of his mighty brain to the rectification of anomalies, and the dissipation of the virus of superstition. The learned and well-to-do admire his ability, applaud his courage, and eagerly seize the opportunities presented to them to listen to his flights of polished and passionate rhetoric. The results of his well-timed efforts are everywhere apparent. The clergy hav long given up the idea of neutralizing his influence by the preservation of an appearence of carefully assumed contemptuous silence. They hav tried and failed to check his triumphant career by an appeal to the tactics of spasmodic vituperation. They hav attempted to confute him by having resort to the armory of reason; and here again they hav been signally worsted. In spite of slander, misrepresentation, and abuse, Ingersoll has gone steadily on. He has never relaxed his efforts. He has besieged and stormed the citadel of superstition, and on its battlements he has placed the standard of Freethought.

As a forensic advocate, Ingersoll enjoys a first-rate reputation. His fame as a lawyer is equal to his celebrity as a platform speaker. As a consequence, his services are frequently called into requisition. His name has been identified with the conduct of some of the most important trials in America—trials involving vital and far-reaching consequences. It is, however, in criminal trials, where the questions of life and liberty or death are at stake, that Ingersoll preëminently shines. His powers of persuasion over the minds of a jury are proverbially remarkable. Conscientious to the highest degree, he throws the whole of his energies into every case for which he holds a brief. Every nerve is strained, not a point overlooked, witnesses submitted to crucial cross-examination, and his client's interests scrupulously observed, to gain a favorable verdict. Ingersoll's defense of Mr. Reynolds, charged with blasphemy, at Morristown, N. J., in 1887, must hav proved a congenial task to him, for in such a case he would be in his element. The speech for the defense is one of Ingersoll's most masterly efforts, the peroration being particularly impressiv. In it we are presented with a vivid picture of the manifold evils that owe their origin to superstition, the cruelties that hav been perpetrated through the operation of the spirit of persecution, the absurdities and immoralities of the Bible, and the barbarity of endeavoring to stifle freedom of thought and speech. The priceless value of liberty is painted in glowing colors. The right of one man to dictate the opinions of another is pointedly challenged. The dominance of ecclesiastical tyranny is demonstrated to be incompatible with a progressiv civilization, and mental freedom is proved to be essential, not only to the welfare of the individual, but to the solidity, prosperity, and happiness of the community.

The phenomenal popularity of Colonel Ingersoll's lectures and writings has induced some exceedingly distinguished men to subject his views to the test of hostil criticism. His discussion with Dr. Field is well known. Mr. Gladstone has ventured to pit his skill as a dialectician against Colonel Ingersoll. There may possibly be some difference of opinion as to who got the best of the encounter. Religious training and prejudices distort the vision of judgment. To an impartial observer, Mr. Gladstone was not only completely defeated, but his arguments were annihilated. Ingersoll throughout the whole discussion had him at his mercy. Ingersoll's reply to Cardinal Manning is a withering indictment of the Roman Catholic church. He shows that it has a history of blood, and has been a curse to the world.

Ingersoll is an honor to the land of his birth. Freethinkers should be and are proud of such a leader. He has won an imperishable renown as a superbly accomplished leader of men and molder of thought. He has made a name in history that time will never efface. The record of his life is beyond praise.

W. IRVING.

Giordano Bruno's Martyrdom.

As the pope has carefully removed the records of the Inquisition from the Holy Office to the Vatican, probably with the view that they shall never be used save in the papal interest, and some Protestant papers here hav fallen into the Jesuit trap of saying it is not quite certain that Bruno was burnt to death, it may be well, says the London Freethinker, to preserve the following summary of evidence given by Mr. C. E. Plumtre in the Antiquary for April. He points out that the evidences for the execution are the following:

1. A letter from Scioppius, giving a full and detailed account of the execution of Bruno, which took place on Thursday, Feb. 17, 1600, in the presence of Scioppius himself. This letter having been conclusivly proved to be genuin from internal evidence by Mr. R. C. Christie.
2. Mersenne's mention of Bruno as un athee brulle en Italie in a work printed in 1624.
3. The imperial embassador, Wacker, residing at Rome in 1600, informing Kepler of the event.
4. The full detail of the trial and sentence contained in the archives of the Inquisition.
5. The Avvisi di Roma (contained in the manuscripts of the Vatican, a sort of newspaper in those days) of Feb. 19, 1600, records the execution of Bruno as having taken place on the previous Thursday, the 17th.
6. The archives of San Giovanni Decollato, containing a notice of the execution of Bruno, given in all its details, The day of the week is said to be Thursday; the day of the month, February 16th; the year, 1600.

Against this there is only the fact that the last-mentioned archives giv the date as the 16th, instead of the 17th, of February, a mistake that might hav easily occurred through a misprint, or from careless writing or copying. Yet, on so slight a foundation as this, the apologists of Rome endeavor to explain away this instance of her infamy.

A Saul-like Conversion.

From a private correspondent the "Man of Sin" is informed that, some years ago, a Western journalist and lawyer bought a copy of "Antichrist." He was so shocked by it that one day, while crossing the bridge spanning the Missouri river, he flung the book into the water. But now he repents of the foolish act, and is himself engaged in writing a book which will take quite as extreme a position as

ANTICHRIST.

EVEN the extraordinary diversity of many religions diffused over the surface of the earth, suffices to show that they can stand in no necessary connection with morals, as it is well known that wherever tolerably well-ordered political and social conditions exist, the moral precepts in their essential principles are the same, whilst when such conditions are wanting, a wild and irregular confusion, or even an entire deficiency of moral notions is met with. History also shows incontrovertibly that religion and morality hav by no means gone hand in hand in strength and development, but even contrariwise the most religious times and countries hav produced the greatest number of crimes and sins against the laws of morality, and indeed, as daily experience teaches, still produce them. The history of nearly all religions is filled with such horrible abominations, massacres, and boundless wickednesses of every kind, that at the mere recollection of them, the heart of a philanthropist seems to stand still, and we turn with disgust and horror from a mental aberration which could produce such deeds.—Büchner.

Communications.

Lucy Colman Speaks.

I hardly know whether Dr. Severance's protest requires an answer, as the thing is done to which she objects, and cannot be abrogated for at least one year. But as one of the members of the Secular Union, voting cordially for all to which she objects, I beg the readers' patience while I, in as few words as possible, say why I feel that the broadening the constitution, so as to admit Christians, was right. The work emphatically before us at the present time is the taxation of church property, and the making the public schools entirely secular. If, when we shall hav succeeded in these two things, we hav any time left, we will go into the Sabbath question, and make the day Sunday.

There are many religious bodies that are with us in the first two Demands; why shall we not accept their help? As to listening to opening prayers, a respectable number of the Unitarians do not pray much in their own churches, but when they do their prayers are less obnoxious to me than the Spiritualists offer at the opening of their services. We had Spiritualists at the annual congress, and some speaking of that sort. I believe in "eternal vigilance," and am as displeased with the doings of our woman's rights people in allowing themselvs to be swallowed up by the Christian Union as is Dr. Severance, but while the doctor and myself are working members of the Secular Union, it will not fall into the church. Perhaps we could hav saved the woman's party if we had done our duty—"one shall chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight." I am very sorry to find a disposition in some quarters to find fault. We hav new officers, let us giv them our hearty support, and if they fail to accomplish what we hope they will succeed in doing, it will be time then to try some other way. LUCY N. COLMAN.

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 19th.

Mr. Burnham on the Union.

Those who for years fought the battle for Universal Mental Liberty can only feel deeply humiliated in the contemplation of the disgraceful attitude of the so-called American Secular Union congress in its recent session in Philadelphia. Behold its humiliation. Sacerdotalism on the rostrum—clergymen engaged to do the speaking. Can anyone imagin a deeper disgrace than to hav the cause which the Union was intended to represent forced into such an attitude?

Think of the heroism of our honored dead and of the ideas for which they lived and fought—Elizur Wright, D. M. Bennett, T. L. Brown, and T. C. Leland. Think of the men in their graves, and many like them living—and then of the last congress. Imagin those that are now dust sitting therein to witness the cowardly transformation of the old national Liberal League, in which these men worked, into an "Irish wake," with clerical dignitaries there by special invitation to celebrate the obsequies of the apologetical concern. Witness the bowing and cringing at the feet of clerical impudence. Then think of a call, formulated in the terms of distress, inviting the Christian world to come in and see this congress in its disgraceful position begging for help—founded upon the implication that these ecclesiastics are easily duped. Come, all ye soldiers of the cross, and help us "lay ye out" ready to be sacrificed upon the altar of liberty. Come, ye children of the Mother of Harlots, and giv us support. Come, ye children whose ancestors burnt Bruno, and help this new transformation to tax your churches and all of your sacred property—all of the places where you confess your sins and where the mother of God meets you. Come and help down your supernaturalism, and place Secularism in its place.

It is true your church is old—even as the Christ—but though you are the best organized ecclesiastical power in the world, you can see by the invitation that you are deemed supremely stupid, so much so that you will take the sop thrown out to you with thanksgiving. How kind it is to be invited by the transformed Secular Union to assist at your own funeral!

Of course it is presumed that you will not see through the plot and accept the kind invitation to come and help the Union turn you out-doors. We are safe, we think, in saying that such will be the inevitable result if Secularism succeeds. If it succeeds, it will be the death of supernaturalism. And then to think that the devotees of supernaturalism will turn in and lend a helping hand—what a monstrous absurdity! Men on our rostrum, who through prayer talk with the supernatural, to be coworkers with us—it is beyond rational belief. How a man's lack of wit has misled him when it allows him to indulge in such a stupid recreation! To imagin that the Christian church will assist in the overthrow of its supernaturalism is an intolerable imagination. The church must look with pity upon such credulity.

The followers of John Calvin, John Wesley, John Knox, and Martin Luther coming forward to desecrate the dust and cast burning discredit and disgrace upon their memory by rendering aid in supplanting that supernaturalism which was the soul of their faith-life! Its retirement is the foundation of Secularism, and this is what it means in the mind of ninety-nine hundredths of the Freethinkers of this country. It means a human providence instead of a divine providence. It means human aid and help and not divine aid and help. It means the divorcement of the supernatural from every phase of thought and action. Hence Secularism means a conflict. It means a war for a hundred years, and if need be for a thousand of them, between the ecclesiastical and Secular forces—between a dominant divine religion and human foresight and care for the welfare of the race. It means a conflict between a divinely appointed priesthood and its citadels of superstition, and free schools, free thought, and homes consecrated to the truth, all under a human providence. I can conceive of nothing more humiliating and degrading than hypocrisy and deceit in an honorable conflict. I scorn the man that will take the advantage of another in any way whatever. To try to fool or deceive a Christian devotee to pull an oar in our craft when by doing so he sinks his own, is unpardonable treachery. But they are not easily hoodwinked by the enemy. I imagin that they indulged in several smiles when they read the formulated invitation in the transformed Secular Union proclamation to attend and help the Secularists turn out their supernaturalism. This new Secular Union may be assured that the Christian church is in no danger by such an invitation. There is honor in conflict, honor in war—or at least there ought to be.

The difference between Christianity and Secularism is as wide as the world. If one succeeds, the other cannot. The church must understand that real Secularism antagonizes it upon a fundamental principle. And it must go down finally, or Secularism must go down. It is a conflict which is fundamental. It is a trinity of God, Christ, and Bible, or it is the human trinity, man, woman, and child. It is a divine guidance, or it is a human guidance. It is home here and now, mansions for the millions of our race, or it is an angry God and devil, a heaven and hell.

Secularism is on the side of the human alone, on the side of men, women, and children; while the church is on the side of God, Christ, Bible, heaven, and hell. True Secularism claims as its aim and object the raising of children so good and moral that they will not need to be born again, while the churchman has a corrupt babyhood, having been conceived and born in sin, and hence is only good and moral by being born again. The church has no good men, women, or children properly, only through regeneration by the power of the supernatural. Secularism, then, is in conflict with Christianity on fundamental grounds. It must strive to make of this earth a paradise, a home for the highest type of virtue, love, and goodness. The church makes no paradise here. Its paradise is in heaven. We hav no desire to deceive the church. We want it to understand that between Secularism and churchism there is a conflict, and there are no terms of peace. It is the success of one or the other. Both cannot be successful. One or the other must ultimately succeed. The churches hav for a long time ruled the world, but their reign is drawing to a close—at any rate, among the most enlightened people of the world. I hav spoken the sentiment of the Freethinkers of the world. Our conflict with the church must ever be honorable. An open warfare only is admissible. No concealed weapons in this campaign; no advantage taken. An open, square fight, founded upon a fundamental difference in principles; stating the principles of each other truthfully, with the understanding that the success of Secularism is the downfall of ecclesiasticism, and the continued ascendency of ecclesiasticism the suppression and the downfall of mental freedom and civilization. J. H. BURNHAM.

Mr. Wismer's Opinion.

I notice in THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 16th an attack on the new Demands as embodied in the platform or constitution and by-laws of the American Secular Union. I think that was a move in the right direction. I do not believe that Mrs. Juliet H. Severance is more radical than I am, or is more opposed to the church and clergy and all classes of religion generally, but I believe that the time has come to make an entirely Secular movement. It should be neither Christian nor unchristian. As far as the yearly congress is concerned, and the meetings of the local organizations, religion and all matters not pertaining to the movement should be prohibited or discouraged. It should be political, Secular. It is pure folly for Mrs. Severance to imply that a party could not be organized, embodying the principles of the American Secular Union, containing Catholics and Protestants, Jews, Spiritualists, Deists, Hindoos, Quakers, Freethinkers, etc. But what we principally need is the coöperation of the large number of people that are neither inside nor outside of the church, who will not attend the meetings of a society that does nothing in the main but attack the popular creeds which they approve in their principal features.

Do not the Republican and Democratic parties contain all classes and faiths? We should learn from other and older parties and movements. Take the Republican and Democratic parties. There is really only one issue between them, the one of tariffs and revenues, which is no issue at all. Other parties in power would not materially change those matters. It would necessarily hav to be left out of a new movement. Take the Revolution of our forefathers. They all fought for freedom, and arranged their self-government thereafter.

The only argument in the Abolition movement was for the freedom of the slave. It gained in power until the Republican party adopted it and made one strong stride in advance, and now the Democratic party has adopted the principle and is ready for something new, sufficiently just and advanced to place it in power, or vice versa. With new men and material we should make only one move; the rest will necessarily follow, or can be taken up by the future pioneers. Take equal taxation; compile all the statistics of exempt properties; place it in all the different views and connections possible; deliver lectures and addresses on it in all the cities, towns, and hamlets; make it the universal cry of the poor; show the exemption of property in all its different forms of robbery and injustice. It is waste of time and a destruction of vital power to spread your forces so thin that they will not be noticed. It will never do to spread out your efforts on equal taxation, abolition of chaplains in the army, etc., cessation of religious exercises in the public schools, abolition of Sunday laws and legislation, etc. Concentrate all your efforts on one object; hav one universal cry and hurrah for equal taxation and no exemption. D. C. WISMER.

Quakertown, Pa.

C. B. Reynolds's Tour of Washington.

Under the auspices of the Walla Walla Liberal Club, I hav agreed to make a tour of the new-born giant state to awake honest hearts to investigation of the reasons of their "faith and hope," and more especially to arouse the Liberals to the pressing need of practical organization, and elect delegates to the great Liberal convention to be held at Seattle for that purpose.

I left dear wife, and the generous, true friends of Walla Walla, who were all working with enthusiasm to insure a grand success of the complimentary lecture benefit, tendered to Mrs. Reynolds, to take place at the Opera House there the ensuing Sunday. Duty called and, not without reluctance, I departed and took the train for Seattle.

One reads of the terrible fires in cities like those of Seattle, Ellensburgh, Spokane, and Vancouver, so vividly described in the newspapers, but the best description utterly fails to convey to the mind the stern, startling reality.

When in Seattle, a year ago last May, I was astounded at the push, the activ enterprise, that everywhere prevailed. In all directions buildings were in course of erection—rented almost before the foundation was laid. Streets were being graded. Eager, hurrying crowds thronged the streets. Each day came a stream of new arrivals, who all imbibed the spirit of speculation, and added to the irresistible momentum of progress and improvement. And yet that was "sleepy hollow" stillness compared to the Seattle energy and bustle of to-day.

A fine harbor; the terminus of great railroads; proximity to iron mines; vast coal deposits; immense forests; unsurpassed fertil agricultural region, and abundant manufacturing facilities, combine to make Seattle the queen city of the Pacific coast.

There is hardly a steamer on the waters of Puget sound which does not make Seattle a trading center. Steamers, which hav their headquarters at Seattle, now penetrate to every portion of the intricate waterways of Puget sound, and find their way up the numerous tributary streams, carrying supplies from and bringing the products of an immense and wondrously fertil state back to its queen city. Steamships and sailing vessels from Seattle find their way to every part of the world. There is absolutely no limit to the capacity of this, the safest harbor of the world.

On the 6th of June last the fire fiend, in a few hours, destroyed buildings and property to the amount of $20 000 000, on which the total insurance was less than $3,000 000.

The burnt district included forty blocks, or over eighty acres, exclusiv of the water front comprising eighteen blocks, making the total devastation one hundred and sixteen acres. In this vast area not a single building escaped destruction. The loss, however, was confined entirely to the business portion of the city. Before the great fire had ceased to burn, meetings of the citizens were held, and the rebuilding of the city upon a scale of magnificence worthy of her proud preëminence as the queen city of the Northwest was decided on. And never was decision of public meeting more fully and faithfully carried out. From arrangements already made buildings will hav been erected, within one year from the date of the firs, amounting to $10,000,000. This is simply unprecedented by any city of its size.

Seattle, to-day, presents a marvelous, a most bewildering, appearance. The black and charred ruins are yet in many places discernible, despite the, at first sight, seeming indiscriminate jumble of new buildings and canvas "makeshifts." Bricks by the hundreds of thousands, lumber of all lengths, breadths, and thickness, immense masses of building-stone, barrels of limè, cement, and heaps of mortar, are everywhere. Grand, imposing structures are in every stage of construction.

The business of a great city is carried on mainly under canvas. In many of the tents half a dozen separate and distinct concerns are carried on. Every foot of space is economized. Yet to speak of the cotton-covered business places as tents givs a mistaken idea. I saw no center-poles, but a countless number of rough slat frames covered with heavy canvas, of every conceivable size. Restaurants, dining-room, kitchen, and private rooms, are all of canvas. Lodging-houses, barber shops, and dry goods stores, hardware and drug stores, are all of duck.

Very many brick buildings are completed, and every week addś to the number of happy merchants who desert their cotton makeshifts for the handsome, commodious brick building.

There is a very large force of men and teams engaged in grading the streets, an improvement which has resulted in leaving some buildings—houses outside of the burnt district—so high up from the new sidewalk that the earth has been dug out, and large stores built under quite a number of houses so situated.

The building work is not confined to the one hundred and sixteen acres comprising the burnt district. Go back where you will, for over three miles in any direction from the water front, and the eye rests on handsome dwellings in process of erection.

Ladies go shopping, dodging from sidewalk to street, in and out, up and down, around great piles of brick, barrels of lime, huge stones, mortar-boxes, galvanized iron cornices, and the dense throng of earnest, hurrying business men, as serenely as if upon the pavement of Broadway, New York. While the sounds of the many hundreds of hammers, axes, and tools of iron make loud, prophetic music, the overture to the great chorus of clerks and customers soon to be heard in each of the business palaces being hastened to completion.

Those desiring information in regard to business opportunities, investments in real estate, or starting any industrial enterprise in Seattle, will do well to write to that earnest, self-sacrificing worker for Liberalism, and energetic young business man, R. J. Wilson, Horton Block, corner of Third and Cherry streets, Seattle, Wash.

Freethought is well represented here. The best, most highly cultured and influential citizens of Seattle are Liberals. The fire broke up the very interesting and successful course of lectures by Dr. York. The Liberal friends are now arranging for me to lecture at the Turners' Hall on each Sunday evening during the winter.

I shall make Seattle my headquarters. I expect to visit all sections of the state in the interests of practical organization. When the distance renders it necessary for me to be absent over Sunday, Mrs. Reynolds will lecture at Seattle in my stead.

The Liberals of Seattle, despite the great tax on their time and energies resulting from the rebuilding of the city, are quite enthusiastic over the proposed convention on Paine's birthday, to effect organization.

There is only one rival to Seattle—Port Townsend. I will giv an account of my visit there, and state her claims to commercial and Freethought supremacy, next week.

Please address all communications for me to Seattle, Wash. C. B. Reynolds.

Lum Smith in Prison.

The great trial of Comstock vs. Lum Smith, with its succession of farce and tragedy, is over at last. I take it for granted some abler pen than mine kept you informed of the progress of the trial which culminated yesterday in the sentencing of L. Lum Smith to six months' imprisonment in the county prison. During those six days that intervened between the close of the trial, and the sentence, a report became wide-spread that sentence would be suspended, but on Thursday newspaper reporters interviewed the judge and district attorney and they disclaimed any such possibility. Notwithstanding, however, when the eventful Friday came around, not only was Mr. Smith promptly on hand, but "the modern inquisitor-general" as well. It soon became apparent that he was present, as was also District Attorney Graham, in order to rejoice over an expected apology from Mr. Smith. The judge tried his utmost to get Smith to publicly apologize, promising positivly that his sentence should be reduced, and, indeed, intimating that it should be suspended altogether if he should take that course. But they reckoned without their host. Smith's reply was, "That he was yet convinced of the truth of his charges, though he had been unable to prove them to the satisfaction of court or jury. That he believed time would vindicate him. He would sooner suffer imprisonment than put himself in such a false position." The judge said he still thought that Mr. Smith might say, "That when he heard the explanations of the defense his opinion had changed." Mr. Smith's reply was, "I could not do so conscientiously." Now, mark how the plot develops at this point. Mr. White, who represented the Comstock-Graham interests, finding that Smith would not retract, rose and asked the court to read the files of the Herald, and see how persistent Smith had been in maligning his client, not only in the articles for which action had been taken, but for a long period before and since. No one possessed of less cheek than Comstock could hav, at such a moment, made so astounding and disgraceful a move. Having failed in coaxing Smith into a retraction, Comstock's ghoulish Christianity shows itself in an effort, not only to punish him for that of which in law he had been found guilty, but, trusting to the easy good nature of the judge, proposes to get even for the thousand and one attacks for which he had not dared bring legal action. I ask The Truth Seeker to mark my words, that the imprisonment of this father of two motherless little ones will yet prove the worst day's work ever done by this vice manufacturing society and its infamous agent. Smith, with no legal knowledge, opposed by three shrewd Philadelphia lawyers, proved himself no mean opponent, and by his manly bearing has made himself hosts of friends who will, at no distant day, be proud to see him vindicate his honor and honesty from the unjust aspersions sought to be put upon it by these professing Christians. So might it be. John A. Wilson.

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 23, 1889.

Evolution Disproved—God Demonstrated.

A very original idea was propounded during the discussion at the regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club on Friday evening last. An Irish gentleman said, "I don't believe in evolution; I believe in creation. Geologists tell us that it takes fifty thousand years to form a strata (sic) of coal. How then could the world hav been made in six days, as the Bible states? Easy enough. Don't scientists also tell us that the world was originally much smaller than it is now? Then it follows that if God couldn't make a big world, he could, at any rate, make a little one. If he couldn't make a world as big as this, he could, I am sure, make one as big as a house. I believe in creation."

George Chainey's New Fad.

Saladin in the London Agnostic Journal.

George Chainey, of America, the mildest visionary that ever saw visions and dreamt dreams, called upon me again the other day. He has a coffee-colored face, and great black eyes like a gazel, and his kingdom is not of this world. He poses as a Christ, and is the most unruffled sort of Christ imaginable. When reviled he revileth not again. He gets into no scrapes with scribes or Pharisees, and is so far removed above human emotions and passions that he cares not a jot should some Judas betray him every hour of the day. I do not think that, if he were being even crucified, he would make any fuss about the matter whatever. Such is the advantage or disadvantage of living in the clouds.

Mr. George Chainey is engaged in producing a book to be called "Shusan"—not Susan, mark you, for George is now away a thousand miles over the heads of all mere Susans, although popular report hath it that he was not always so. This Shusan of his is the name of some old palace mentioned in the Bible, and which, being translated, according to George, meaneth roses and cat's whiskers. This book, George assures me, is being composed principally in his sleep. Whether revealed to him by the Lord, or quite the other party, he saith not. I hav to keep very wide awake when I am writing my books, such as they are; but it is quite otherwise with George. It was revealed to him in his sleep that the Bible has an esoteric meaning never dreamt of by Jehovah or the Holy Ghost when they wrote it. But then Jehovah and the Holy Ghost are poor benighted creatures when compared with George.

It is surely a grand thing to be able to go mooning about all day in vegetarian dining-places, and hav your work done for you in your sleep. I feel impatient to see what kind of work is done, or can be done, under such comatose auspices. Santa Claus is good enough to fill a child's stocking while the child sleeps; but just fancy some sort of literary Santa Claus filling our George's head, not his stocking. One book inspired in sleep I hav read—Anna Kingsford's "Clothed with the Sun." There is mush in that volume which arrested and interested me; still, it did occur to me that the work, upon the whole, owed more to the moon than to the sun.

I could draw a glowing picture of the mystic muse inspiring Anna Kingsford as her graceful head lay upon her snow-white pillow, one rounded arm and the swell of one lily breast half revealed, and her panting breath blowing to and fro a stray ringlet of her hair. But fancy the mystic muse inspiring in his sleep a coffee-colored and obese gentleman lik our George to find new meanings in the holy scriptures, and to write an occult work on the subject of roses and cat's whiskers! Fancy the mystic muse kissing the ruby, fine, full lips of George. But after all, why not? The most remarkable kiss on record is that which was given by Queen Margaret to Alain Chartier more than four hundred years ago. He was a poet, but the ugliest man in France. During his lifetime he enjoyed a wonderful reputation, but after his death he was forgotten. He is now chiefly remembered on account of the kiss which the queen pressed upon his dreaming lips one day as she found him sleeping, saying to her maid as she did so: "I kiss not the man; I kiss the soul that sings." And somehow thus it may be as regards George.

George tells me he has called on Madam Blavatsky to impress upon her the necessity of her undertaking the sublime task of digging profound esoteric truth out of a mixed mass of more or less illiterate and archaic drivels and bombasts. I must call upon the Arhat of the West and warn her to hav nothing to do with George, and not by any means to kiss his ruby lips, whether he be asleep or awake. I should not like to see Lucifer, at the dictation of the author of "Shusan," devoted to finding hidden and awful meanings in ram's horn's, the blood of heifers, fringes, ephods, snuffers thereof, and the terrible seven candlesticks of Asia.

Mr. W. E. Reid's Offense.

The Banner of Light requests us to copy the following:

"Bigotry in Office.—Indiana Spiritualists, in state convention, hav unanimously passed a very bitter resolution denouncing Postmaster-General Wanamaker for denying postal privileges to the Banner of Light and other publications of the Society."—Exchange.

The above statement is going the rounds of the secular press. It is false in every particular, in so far as this paper is concerned. We so stated in these columns some weeks ago under the heading "Answers to Correspondents." The paragraph was first started from a telegraph office in Indianapolis, under date of Sept. 28th. The resolution passed at the Indiana state convention was in the interest of a medium calling himself Dr. W. E. Reid, located at Grand Rapids, Mich. It seems that this man published there a small monthly advertising sheet, and unquestionably designedly named it The Banner of Life, giving the title of this paper as nearly as possible without actually infringing upon our copyright.

This Dr. Reid, it appears, sent out in his paper an advertisment offering to send spirit messages from deceased friends to anyone who would remit a dollar to his address. Some one who did not get a satisfactory answer entered complaint, the advertiser was indicted for what the government attorney considered a case of false pretense, and the paper was refused admission through the mails.

Then the doctor started a paper which he called The Spiritual Instructor. Under the heading: "A Shameful Outrage," this sheet said that three Spiritualist Societies of Grand Rapids hav given official indorsement to the cause of Dr. R.

Now, the doctor may, or he may not, be guilty of fraud; but we do emphatically object to his dragging the Banner—or endeavoring to—into his fight with a post-office inspector in Michigan. Why we especially object is, in the first place, from the fact of his naming his initial paper so near our own title as to deceive the public; second, that in the first "Whereas" to the resolutions the said convention passed, the true title of our paper is inserted; to wit: "that he [Dr. Reid] did, in a paper called the Banner of Light, 'knowingly and wrongfully propose to secure communications from spirit-land to order,'" etc. Does this insertion of our title instead of his own, as published by Dr. Reid in his new paper, the Spiritual Instructor, look like honest and fair dealing on the part of himself and his friends? If it does, then a precious few mortals know right from wrong.

A Secular Organization.

From the Wheeling, W. Va., Sunday Register.

Wheeling is to hav a local society, organized under a charter from the American Secular Union, the national headquarters of which is located at Philadelphia, with R. B. Westbrook, LL.D., president. Mr. D. G. Crow, of this city, who has taken a prominent part in effecting an organization here, has furnished the Register with the news of the local organization, and transmits the following list of members: T. A. Morris, J. Hutchings, Wm. Shields, Joseph Aultinger, Jacob Schaub, Robert Erp, D. G. Crow, O. C. Miller, Wm. Bussey, Chris. Beck, J. O. Brosick, Charles Bussey, George Robinson, Allen Noe, B. Dovener, and Mr. Ellson. As interpreted by Mr. Crow, the Secularists "hold to various shades of belief with regard to the future of man, a large majority of whom occupy a ground between the two extremes called Agnosticism, all, however, uniting on the one purpose, i.e., to defend our American institutions against religious encroachments, and to encourage a system of moral and mental culture, free from ancient superstition and modern dogmatism. They invite candid, independent thinkers, whatever may be their religious belief, who favor a liberal system, to join them in their labor for love, truth, and justice."

John P. Guild is to speak in Evangelist Hall, State street, Springfield, Mass., December 8th, 5 o'clock. Subject: Woman's Place in History.

J. E. Remsburg will speak before the Manhattan Liberal Club, Friday night, December 6th; before the Brooklyn Philosophical Society, Sunday afternoon, and before the Philadelphia Liberal League, Sunday night, December 8th.

Communications.

Egoism.

There are certain theories and doctrins which to the majority of mankind look chimerical and even dangerous and monstrous, and yet if the people could only be induced to giv these doctrins a careful examination they would find out that the thing which frightened them so much was their own shadow. They shut their eyes, and then they see monsters and horrible images. But let them open their eyes, and they will hav to confess that the monsters lived only in their imagination. Take, for instance, the words Socialism, Anarchism, Nihilism. To mention these terms is enough to make some people lose their heads, as if in every letter of these words is hidden a demon with a keen sword in his hand ready to stab them. But if they will get rid of their fear and study the literature devoted to these theories, and, what is still more important, get acquainted with the people who profess to be Socialists or Anarchists, they may yet learn that there is nothing frightful about them. Of course, there are some people for whom arguments do not exist. These people are called by Tchernychewsky "readers with penetrating eyes." You cannot convince them that they are ignorant of certain things, because they do not want to get convinced. As Pisareff said: "The simple reader when he finds in a book a new idea may agree or disagree with it; but the reader with the penetrating eye can by no means agree with it, and the reason is because the idea is not his own." With him progress is impossible. He thinks that all the knowledge worth knowing is stored in his head, and whatever cannot be found there is of no value to the world. Happily, the readers with penetrating eyes do not constitute the whole human race. Many are not ashamed to acknowledge their ignorance and are willing to learn; and often they find out to their great surprise that the horrible beasts from whom they wanted to keep at a far distance are harmless and, in some cases, even beneficent creatures.

Among the words which so terrify the world egoism is very conspicuous. It is denounced as the cause of our miseries, as a hideous thing which we should bury deep in the ground. It is egoism (so they say) that turns your heart into a stone in the very presence of want and suffering. It is egoism that induces you to liv in wealth and luxury while others are starving for want of bread. Good, charitable people who help others are declared to be free from egoism. To tell such a man that he is an egoist seems almost ridiculous. Still, I think that the word egoism is misrepresented and misunderstood. In my opinion, every man is an egoist, whether he is good, bad, or indifferent. To say that a man has no egoism at all is to say that he has no individuality.

When Tchernychewsky's romance, "What Is To Be Done?" was published in the Sovremennik, most of the Russian magazines and papers raised such a noise, as if the whole world was to be ruined on account of it. The heroes of this remarkable novel claim to be egoists; they think and work only for themselvs, and yet their deeds are grand and noble. Why, then, hav they been so condemned and denounced as monsters? Hav their critics been superior to them? Hav they ever acted more nobly and wisely? Did they hav greater esteem for the rights of others? I doubt it. Why, then, was such a cry? It was because the word egoism frightened the reviewers of Tchernychewsky's work. I can find no other reason.

Let us look for a while at the theory of egoism. We know that civilization, if it means anything, means happiness for all. A country where the people are unhappy cannot be called a civilized land. We know that a truly civilized man livs not only for himself, but also for his fellow-men. He does everything to the extent of his power to increase the happiness of mankind. He knows that human rights are the most sacred things in the world. He knows that nature has provided all with equal rights, and no excuse can be found just enough to deprive anyone of his or her right to enjoy "life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness." Some people may exceed others in many qualities. They may be superior in beauty, strength, wisdom, and knowledge. But the civilized man knows that physical deformity is not a crime for which a man can justly be punished. Weakness ought to be protected more than strength, for strength is able to take care of itself, and those who stand low on the ladder of intellectual development are entitled to all the rights which we receive from the hands of nature just as much as those whose heads reach the clouds.

A civilized man has sympathy for the weak and oppressed of all nations and races. He helps the poor to make the burden of life easier. He inspires the rich to pay more attention to the needs of the poor. He fights for liberty, enlightenment, and progress. He is an enemy of slavery, no matter in what form it may exist. He hates mental slavery no less than physical slavery. He does not want to see the body in chains and the mind set free, nor the mind in chains and the body free. He demands equal liberty for the mind and body, liberty to express any idea, even if the whole world is opposed to it; liberty to act as one pleases provided that he does not interfere with the rights of others. In the view of a civilized man limitation of one's liberty is justifiable only in one case, and that is when the liberty of another man is affected. In short, he believes that "happiness is the only good," and in his effort to do good he often robs himself of many comforts of life in order to help others to better their condition, to break the chains of tyranny, to rise above the prejudices of their time, to rise higher on the scale of intellectual growth.

Now let us see what are the motivs of his actions. Why should he labor and suffer and sacrifice his own pleasures for the sake of others? Is he moved by the spirit of so-called self-denial, or does he gratify his egoism? In other words, are his good deeds calculated to add something to the sum of his own happiness, or is his desire to make others happy without taking a thought of himself? A great deal has been written in praise of self-denial. It is regarded as heroism, as the greatest virtue ever practiced by men; it is recommended as a remedy against the evils of selfishness. But I think that self-denial does not and cannot exist. It is an impossibility. No one is good, virtuous, and benevolent because it is fair to be so, but because he cannot be otherwise, and no one can benefit others without benefiting himself—without increasing his own happiness. Egoism is denounced as the world's curse, and yet it is the foundation of all our noble works. If you do not love yourself, you cannot love others. If you do not claim any rights for yourself, you can not respect the rights of others. You cannot labor for humanity unless you regard yourself as a part of it. When you struggle for the freedom of others, it is because you desire to hav liberty for yourself. When you plead for mental freedom, it is because you want no one to control your mind, or, to use a favorit expression of our most popular orator, you want no one to kill the children of your brain. You cannot be free yourself, unless the whole human race is free. If the natural rights of a single person can be violated, the rights of everyone may hav the same fate.

A thoughtful physician, a lover of his profession, sitting hour after hour at the patient's side, watching the progress of the disease and using all his efforts to restore the sick person to health, is moved not by the spirit of self-denial, but of egoism, of his own interest. He wants to add to the store of his knowledge; he wants to solve some problem in the science of medicin.

Such a man was Kirsanoff. The first time when Vera Pavlovna, his sweetheart, was in his house, two medical students entered the room and said: "Alexander Matveitch, an interesting subject, an extremely rare and very curious subject, has just been brought in, and aid is needed immediately. Every half hour is precious." Vera Pavlovna hurried him to go and requested that from the hospital he should come to her, which he promised to do. But he did not come as soon as he expected. He remained all the night at the hospital, and succeeded in saving the life of the sick man. Kirsanoff was fond of saying that he loved no one but himself, and certainly he had no particular affection for the patient, who was an entire stranger to him. Just at that moment he was at the zenith of his happiness—Vera Pavlovna told him that she could not liv without him. Still he left her and went to the hospital. Nothing kept him from doing what he considered his duty. And why? What duty did he owe to the patient? An answer to this question can be found in his own words. "The case was very difficult and interesting," he explained to Vera Pavlovna. This was his reason. He benefited himself by benefiting the sick person.

A philanthropist, going to the hut of misery, listening to the sad tale of poverty, learning the causes of crime and degradation, and using his time and money to help the unfortunate and to correct the criminal, is also working for his own sake. For as Colonel Ingersoll says, A perfectly civilized man cannot be happy while there is one unhappy being in the universe. And besides, he finds satisfaction in the thought that he helped to solve some social question.

Giordano Bruno lived a noble life and died the death of a hero. Had he renounced his opinions, he would hav saved himself. Why did he prefer to suffer a terrible death at the stake? It was because he loved himself, because he had too much respect for himself to be a coward and tell a lie. Had he recanted, he would hav despised himself. There would hav been a stain on his conscience. Life bought at such a price had no value to him. Death had more attractions than such a life.

I venture to say that honest egoism is superior to self-denial, even if the latter had been possible. When in doing some benevolent act a man thinks that he is practicing self-denial, he prizes, or may prize, himself very highly, thus putting the one who was benefited by his act under obligation to him. "Am I not great? Am I not noble? Am I not entitled to the thanks of my fellow-men?" Such are his thoughts. But the egoist thinks nothing of this kind, no matter what great work he might hav done. "It is true," he says, "that but for me A would hav starved to death, B would hav sunk down in the pit of filth, C would not hav gained victory over his appetite, D would not hav his dreams realized. But why should they be thankful to me? What hav I done for them? Did I help them simply because I love them? No, I love myself; I seek my own pleasure. I do good because it pleases me to do so. I want the world to be happy to the end that I may be happy myself."

Such a man was Loponkhoff. In order to deliver Vera Pavlovna from her cellar, as she called the house of her parents, he had to renounce a brilliant career. Life became to Vera unbearable. Her mother looked upon her as a profitable thing for sale and wanted to sell her to a certain Storechnikoff, an unworthy man, who dreamed of having her as a mistress. "Daughters hav only to obey," such was the rule of Vera's mother. Storechnikoff, however, was informed that Vera should not be his mistress, and he determined to marry her. It mattered very little to him by what title he should hav her, so long as he could possess her. "To possess!" exclaims Tchernychewsky. "One may possess a pair of slippers, a dressing-gown, but who dares to possess a human being?" Indeed, human degradation can not go lower than this. Where did a man get the right to possess another man? But is not Storechnikoff a common type? Is he not to be found in every land? Doesn't he imagin that he really has the right to possess a woman? Doesn't he think that once he marries a woman she is obliged to stay with him all her lifetime, even if she becomes convinced that her union with him was a mistake? Does he hav any respect for her individuality? No, he has not and cannot hav any, because he is a "reader with the penetrating eye."

Vera Pavlovna happened to get acquainted with Loponkhoff, a young medical student, and fell in love with him. She could liv no longer with her parents. A day was to her an age of agony. The air in the "cellar" seemed to her more polluted than ever. Loponkhoff saw at once that he must take her away from the cellar and deliver her from suffering. "We ought not to leave in slavery one to whom we hav shown liberty," he said. If she could hav remained in the cellar only two months longer, he would hav at least finished his studies in the academy of medicin. But it was impossible. Now what were his thoughts? Did he think much of his goodness? Not the least. So far as he was concerned, he did not care whether he got a diploma or not. He was only afraid that he could not get out of her head the word "sacrifice." "Are you [meaning Vera Pavlovna] under any obligation to me?" he said to himself. "If in so doing I labored for my own happiness, I delivered myself. And do you believe that I would do it, if I did not prefer to? Yes, I hav delivered myself; I wish to liv, I wish to love, do you understand? It is in my own interest that I always act."

Perhaps the greatest act of so-called heroism in Loponkhoff's life was when he left his country in order that Vera Pavlovna may liv with his friend Kirsanoff. But he did not call it heroism. When he suspected that she was not quite happy with him, even before she had realized it herself, he began to analyze attentivly her character and manner of life, and became convinced that their union could no longer be harmonious. He was willing to violate his nature to put himself in greater harmony with her, but it was above his power. So when he discovered that the one whom she loved was Kirsanoff, a man entirely worthy of her, he was thoroughly happy. He loved her with all his heart and wanted to see her perfectly happy. He did not want her to suffer the least pain. "How did we define love the first time that we spoke of it?" he said to her. "To rejoice in whatever is good for the loved one, to take pleasure in doing everything necessary to make the loved one happier. Whatever is best for you, rejoices me. Seek this best. Why be sorrowful? If no misfortune has come to you, what misfortune can hav come to me? . . . You know my way of looking at these things. Do you expect to deceive me? Will you cease to esteem me? I might ask further: Will your feelings toward me, in changing their character, grow weaker? Will they not, on the contrary, become strengthened by this fact—that you hav not found an enemy in me?" How grand, how noble! One must possess a great deal of solid humanity to speak and act so. But Loponkhoff never thought for a moment that he was practicing self-denial. Whatever he has done, he always kept in view his own interest. A real harmonious life with Vera Pavlovna was impossible. She struggled hard against her feelings, but could not conquer them. Loponkhoff concluded that separation was the only remedy, and rejoiced that the man who was to replace him at her side was his friend Kirsanoff, whom he greatly esteemed. Separation meant happiness to her and freedom to him. His individuality was saved. He did not hav to violate his nature.

Loponkhoff is an egoist; he was proclaimed an apostle of egoism. But let us ask in all candor, is not such egoism better than self-denial? Is it not nobler to make the cause of your fellow-man your own, than to make him feel that, but for your goodness, he would not hav enjoyed the sunshine of life?

I do not know whether the reader agrees with me or not. But I am convinced that egoism is the true motiv of our works. However, some objections may be raised. It may be asked: Is egoism really the savior of the world? Can we trust the savage or any uncivilized man? Is not his egoism dangerous? I admit this. But my intention was to show that the civilized man is no less an egoist than the savage. True, his egoism is of the most beneficent kind, but still it is egoism. When one acts nobly because he cannot act otherwise without injuring himself, his conduct should not be called self-denial.

CLEMENS P. BERYLSON.

Purdy's Station, N. Y., Oct. 18, 289.

An Optimistic View.

I notice that a great many of our Liberal writers are too Radical in their views when criticising the course pursued by our very zealous orthodox friends. No doubt the proposed unison of church and state now being agitated by old grannies like Senator Blair has much to do in arousing their indignation. There seems to me no great cause for fear in this direction, for these reasons: The better-informed citizens of this great republic, even among the clergy, are bitterly opposed to any legislation that would tend to a uniting of church and state. In reviewing the past history of this progressiv nation every Freethinker should take in consideration the great truths brought to light through the aid of scientific research.

There exists to-day an impassable gulf between Puritan superstition and present realities. It is true that a great many persons yet hold to the old myth-history, and claim to hav had a second birth and to be chockful of a Holy Ghost religion, but Materialists certainly hav no cause to fear this class.

The most laughable thing I hav ever witnessed was a backwoods preacher exploding the Darwinian theory. It was a regular circus to see him saw the air and quote from holy writ.

Our friends undoubtedly take an extreme view of these matters when they speak of that old emblem of Catholicism, the cross, being placed above the stars and stripes. Such predictions as these would lead us to believe that we are retrograding had we not conclusiv evidence to the contrary. The thinking people of to-day exert too great an influence abroad in the land, which leads men to reasoning instead of swallowing every nonsensical assertion of shallow-minded so-called heralds of the gospel. Let all who would make their work effectiv aid in keeping before the eyes of the rising generation the inconsistencies recorded in that old book of fables called the Bible.

It is not an impossibility, but an easy matter, to take a class of beginners in mathematics and teach them that two plus two equal five, because they hav confidence in me as their instructor, and the young minds will never for a moment think that I am deceiving them; but they soon find out my deception, my influence is utterly destroyed, and my word no longer taken as authority. Now, this but illustrates what the narrow-minded preacher of to-day is doing. He can for a time make an impression on the young, for they will not at first question the genuinness of Jonah and the whale, the little problem that three are one and one is three, the snake story, and a thousand other things equally as absurd; but as they become thinkers a great many of them will reason from a sensible standpoint and openly express their contempt for the slush which they once accepted as something divine.

A little extract from the New York Independent attracted my attention by its ridiculous admonition. It charged everyone in reading the Bible to be exceedingly careful to seek its true and exact meaning, and then be content with that meaning. The truth in the matter is, that a great portion of that book is meaningless, and we are perfectly content with the parts which hav a meaning, but fail to see anything divine about it. We cannot help seeing that old theological ideas are losing ground; that the wave of enlightenment is fast sweeping over the old rotten craft of superstition, and on the banner of intellectual liberty we see the inscription: Seek for truths. The words skeptic, Atheist, and Infidel no longer carry with them an unpleasant significance, but a free speech and a free press are the only weapons needed to carry the day, and victory is ours in the end. There is no person entitled to more respect and confidence than the intellectual, conscientious man who is doing what he can toward the elevation of mankind. Long and happy may he liv, and when he passes from this earth he will be at rest. No God will ever damn him for making the world better by his having lived in it. There are a great many whose narrow hearts are as mean as their hissing, lying tongues. They growl and scowl at everything that gets in their way, and would ruin and destroy every scientific fact that conflicts with their silly doctrin, were it in their power to do so, but we find that this class of men are gifted with a very low order of intelligence, and lack the mental fiber to accomplish their vile purposes.

Men who desire their sons to enter the ministry dare not educate them beyond a little surface work. Giv them a thorough education, and nine times in ten they will renounce all affiliation with the believers in old-time traditions. Certainly, our national lawmakers will never enact laws which would place state subordinate to the church and her hypocritical followers.

When this is done we must bid farewell to free America, and with closed mouths and fettered hands bow to the will of fanatical bigots. We hav every reason to believe that the Blair Education bill now pending in Congress will receive its death-blow when it comes to a vote. So let us not borrow trouble, but trust to the intelligence of the land for protection.

H. F. DICKEY.

Hunt City, Ill., Nov. 8, 1889.

The Judicial Oath In New Jersey.

It is not known generally, even by many lawyers and judges of different courts, that the law regulating judicial oaths in the state of New Jersey (which was enacted but recently) was drawn and manipulated through the legislature by stanch Liberals. On page 904 of the Revised Statutes we can read the following: "I —— do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm," etc. This form is called affirmation. If a witness, who is about to be sworn, says, "I prefer to affirm," the foregoing words are repeated without placing the hand on a Bible or kissing it. But if a person says, "I prefer to declare," the following form is employed: "I —— do declare, in the presence of almighty God, the witness of the truth of what I say." Either of which forms (the law states) shall be as good and effectual in law as an oath taken in the usual form, in which affirmation or declaration, the words, "So help me God," at the close of the oath, shall be omitted.

"Every person who is, or shall be empowered, or required to tender, or administer an oath, in the usual form, shall be, and hereby is required and empowered to tender, or administer the affirmation or declaration aforesaid, when requested to do so by the person who is to affirm or declare."

Readers residing in other states beside New Jersey, can, doubtless, hav access to a copy of the Revised Statutes of New Jersey in the most public libraries in large cities. In New Jersey, the county clerk, and surrogate, and courts of every county are provided with copies of the Revised Statutes of New Jersey, which are accessible by any citizen in the county. Many justices of the peace own each a copy of the Revised Statutes. Yet there are not a few justices of the peace who discard entirely the use of a copy of the Revised Statutes. Recently, in conversation with a justice of the peace of the county in which I reside (Essex), he remarked: "I did hav a copy of the Revised Statutes, but I couldn't tell anything by it, whether I was proceeding according to law or not. So I sold the darned thing."

Jonathan Dixon, a resident of Jersey City, and one of the judges of the supreme court, allows a person to affirm, in lieu of the usual judicial oath, whether he is an Atheist, Deist, Infidel, Agnostic, or whether he entertains any opinions at all concerning God, heaven, hell, or any of the dogmas of the orthodox church. Yet, in most cases, every witness is sworn according to the long-time oath, by placing his right hand on the Bible and kissing it, after he has invoked God to help him.

The writer recently received a commission from the governor of New Jersey vesting him with legal and criminal jurisdiction coextensiv with Essex county, in which there are over one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants, to open court in any township, village, hamlet, borough, city, or ward; and when complainants, prosecutors, plaintiffs, and witnesses are to be sworn, my practice is, and has been from the commencement of my official duties, to ask if they will affirm, declare, or be sworn; and in every instance, but one, deponents preferred to affirm, without any appeal to God, and without the use of a Bible. I hav taken the Bible from the shelf only once in open court, and it was employed, at that time, to administer the oath to a man whom I know to be as dishonest as it is possible for a man to be, and who, I know from long personal intercourse in legal transactions, will lie as unblushingly as if he were a darling son of the father of lies. Yet he is a vestryman.

Many Liberals, when sworn, instead of affirming, fall in with the miserable and detestable practice of kissing the dirty, greasy, and begrimed lids of some book (not knowing whether it is the Bible or city directory) simply because they were not aware that there is a better and more intelligent mode of giving testimony.

Reader, the next time you are required to swear, say, "I will affirm." I am located in a hot-bed of orthodoxy. Yet I hav learned that a large proportion of witnesses prefer affirmation to the ludicrous and senseless practice of kissing the lids of a soiled book! What solemnity and validity can the act of kissing any book giv to the deposition or evidence of anyone? I pause for a reply.

Orange, N. J. SERENO E. TODD.

What Think Ye, O Liberals, of These Things?

On November 13th, in Washington city, the dedication ceremonies of a Roman Catholic University were graced by the presence of our president, vice-president and wife, Blaine, our secretary of state, Secretaries Rusk, Tracy, Noble, and Windom, and Attorney-General Miller.

The first toast was, His holiness Pope Leo XIII. One of the toasts following, so the dispatch says, was, Our country and her president, which was responded to by Secretary Blaine. He said: "I come to represent the United States, not in any political sense, much less in any partisan sense, nor in connection with any church or sect, but to speak for all and the great freedom which we enjoy. . . . I am glad of every college that is endowed. Every institution of learning increases the culture which I believe will build up the government of this great country of ours, under which we are all free and equal."

I think Secretary Blaine was not authorized to state, "I come to represent the United States." I think he went there to misrepresent it.

George Washington, in his message to Congress in 1796, on the treaty of Tripoli, said: "The government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion."

Blaine must know, as any intelligent reader of history knows, that sectarian colleges are not wholesale incubators for the perennial hatching-out of patriots and freemen. They are institutions for the forging of chains, fetters, and collars for dupes. The bondage of the Roman Catholic peoples is as fixed, their vassalage as abject, as any slavery that ever disgraced the jungles of Africa. How can freemen be evolved from such an institution designed to perpetuate human slavery?

The thing is ridiculous, and I for one say that Blaine does not represent the United States in that throng of aliens—aliens to our country—foes to every institution American, and would-be destroyers of every germ of manhood in the nation.

Our worthy president on his arrival at the banquet was accorded a seat at the left hand of Cardinal Gibbons, who presided, but the right-hand side—the seat of honor—was occupied by Monsignor Satolli, who represented the pope. How do you like this, O Americans?

The president had exacted as a condition to his gracing the banquet with his presence that he would not be asked to express himself in any way, but the wily priests, with their trained dupes, sought by a clamorous call to compel him to commit himself, but he had eaten humble pie—he had been given the left-hand seat—and he did not think he had anything to talk about. And I think so, too. So he did not say anything.

I do not think President Harrison is congratulating himself on the exalted position he occupied during the "imposing ceremonies" of that dedication. "Imposing" is a good word, and fits here excellently well. I would like to ask the American people, What next?

A. W. CALDER.

IN this tendency [to depreciate extremely the character and position of woman] we may detect in part the influence of the earlier Jewish writings, in which it is probable that most impartial observers will detect evident traces of the common oriental depreciation of woman. The custom of money-purchase to the father of the bride was admitted. Polygamy was authorized, and practiced by the wisest men on an enormous scale. A woman was regarded as the origin of human ills. A period of purification was appointed after the birth of every child; but, by a very significant provision, it was twice as long in the case of a female as of a male child (Lev. xii, 1–5). The badness of men, a Jewish writer emphatically declared, is b tter than the goodness of women (Ecclesiasticus xlii, 14) The types of female excellence exhibited in the early period of Jewish history are in general of a low order, and certainly far inferior to those of Roman history, or Greek poetry; and the warmest eulogy of a woman in the Old Testament is probably that which was bestowed upon her who, with circumstances of the most exaggerated treachery, had murdered the sleeping fugitiv who had taken refuge under her roof.—Lecky, European Morals, Vol. I, p. 357.

CERTAIN beliefs hav been inculcated, certain crimes invented, in order to intimidate the masses. Hence the church made free thought the worst of sins, and the spirit of inquiry the worst of blasphemies. . . . As late as the time of Bunyan the chief doctrin inculcated from the pulpit was obedience to the temporal power. . . . All these influences fell with crushing weight on woman.—Matilda Joslyn Gage.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - NOVEMBER 30, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

To the Subscribers in Arrears.

There are upon our regular subscription list some hundreds who hav not paid a cent for THE TRUTH SEEKER they hav been receiving and reading for the past year. Each one of these persons is earnestly asked to immediately remit the amount owed. The money is sorely needed. The tab on the wrapper of your paper shows when your subscription expired, and if that date is past a renewal is in order. Especially do we appeal to those whose time expired several months ago. They hav been trusted, and should reciprocate the courtesy by immediate response to this solicitation.

Truth Seeker Annual for 1890

When a man grows from orthodoxy to the most radical Infidelity within two years, leaving a five thousand dollar pulpit to preach to an audience which pays him only twenty-five dollars a week, the mental process by which he finds his error, and the facts which convinced him, are worth knowing; neither can his sincerity be questioned.

MR. H. O. PENTECOST,

Editor of the Twentieth Century, and Lecturer of the Independent Congregation of New York, Newark, and Brooklyn, will giv us in the Truth Seeker Annual all his reasons for such a course, which he entitles,

WHY I LEFT THE CHURCH.

In renewing your subscription to The Truth Seeker inclose 25 cents and the Annual will be forwarded as soon as issued.

The Brazilian Revolution.

The peaceful change just made by Brazil from an empire to a republic is one of the wonders of the decade, and shows very plainly the beneficent influence of civilized heresy. The change of government was made without bloodshed because the republicans who took possession were civilized heretics and not barbarous Roman Catholics. If the latter should by force regain the throne and place Dom Pedro's daughter thereon we should undoubtedly hear of wholesale executions.

The state of affairs in Brazil appears to be about as follows. The country is nominally Roman Catholic, being originally settled by Portuguese, and that religion is upheld by the state. Until 1811 no other religion was tolerated, and since then until very recently the toleration was legal but scarcely actual. The right of assemblage to other religious bodies was granted only a few months ago. Slavery was a legal institution up to about the same time. But as in France and Italy, and even in Spain, the educated classes, the statesmen and men of large affairs, grew gradually away from the church, and naturally imbibed republican ideas. The emperor Dom Pedro was one of this class. He has been known for years as a man of learning and of Liberal thought, a philosopher and humanitarian. The abolition of slavery was due to his humanitarian principles, and he was aided by the very people who hav now established the republic. He granted the people representativ government, a senate and assembly to make the laws, retaining to himself only the headship. He was as much of a republican as an emperor could be, and it is very generally believed, and is probably true, that he was himself the prime mover in his own deposition.

On the other side were the Roman Catholic church and Dom Pedro's daughter Isabella, the crown princess, married to a most truculent tool of the church and hater of popular rights. Dom Pedro is nearing the end of his life and his daughter must hav succeeded him. Isabella, like her husband, is completely under the control of the pope, and the Liberal people dreaded her accession to power. When the government recently passed a liberal bill for free religion, Isabella presented a petition, signed by fourteen thousand Catholic women, against the passage of the bill, and by this action increased tenfold the opposition to her. Her husband was also intensely activ against the anticlerical party.

The fanatical actions of these two, inspired by the church, helped the republicans to win over the people. Another powerful force coöperating with the new party was the works of Bocayura, the most popular writer in Brazil, a Freethinker, who has for five years been advocating civil and religious liberty. Dom Pedro was fully aware of the strength of the movement in favor of a republic, and sympathized with it. He felt, it is now said, that if he should outliv the republican advance his daughter would be unable to cope with it, more particularly under the pernicious guidance of her husband and the church of Rome. He, therefore, like a wise and philosophic monarch, anticipated the inevitable, and thus at least saved the prospectiv bloodshed which he felt would hav come with resistance, if not in his time, certainly in that of his successor. Hence his easy and calm acceptance of the situation, and the celerity with which he submitted to dethronement bears out the charge made by the royalists that he and the republican leaders had arranged the program beforehand. If so, it is all to his credit.

From these facts it is seen that Brazil has started on the path traveled by France and Italy, which leads from Rome to Reason, from a practical theocracy to a secular government. It is another blow to the pope—the serving of papers on him in proceedings of absolute divorce between the Vatican and Brazil. It is also another step forward to that time when kings shall be no more. Spain, perhaps, will be the next nation to move. Castelar, the great republican and Freethinker of that country, prophesies that not only Spain but all of Europe will soon be free, and thinks that the people of Spain would revolt at once were the government not of its own accord approaching a point where republicanism will assert itself as a matter of course by the universal consent of the people. Of the rest of the European continent he says: "The sway of autocracy on this old continent is nearly over. If there is any one thing I believe with all my heart, it is that before fifty years Europe will be republican from end to end, and I believe the change will be brought about without the horrors of war, as easily as it has just been brought about in Brazil; as naturally as a man lays aside one coat and puts on another, because he likes the other better. The peoples of Europe are growing wiser every year and seeing better what are their real interests. They will one day say to their kings, queens, emperors, and princes: 'We are masters here. After all, this country is ours, not yours. There is the door. Go!' And then kings, queens, emperors, and princes will go, and it will be a beautiful sight."

That is what the people of this country, led by Freethinkers, told George the Third of England, and they also served notice on the "kings of the air" at the same time. Ghosts were retired from politics, as Colonel Ingersoll puts it, at the same time the king of England was shown the door. France and Italy did the same, and Brazil has followed on. The example of America seems to hav been contagious—it was Colonel Ingersoll's test of world-improvement applied—good health catching instead of disease. There are, however, indications that the priestly disease is returning to infect the people here, though we hope they will awake to a knowledge of this fact pretty soon, and quarantine such plague-spreaders as Wanamaker, the National Reform Association, the Sabbath Union, and Frances Willard's association of hobbledehoys and begowned and betrousered old women.

The bloodless revolution in Brazil is a triumph of civilization over barbarism, of Freethought over superstition, of liberty over despotism. We believe with Castelar that its influence will be far-reaching and beneficent.

A Word About Our Pictures.

When we began the printing each week of the illustrations in THE TRUTH SEEKER we explained to our family at large that it meant a greatly increased expense of publication, which could not be borne without, also, a greatly increased subscription list. THE TRUTH SEEKER is so large, requiring so much typesetting, presswork, etc., that every copy sent out for a year actually costs very nearly the annual subscription price of $3, and deducting losses by delinquents (for it grieves us to state that there are some Infidels so deficient in honesty that they never pay the amounts we hav trusted them), papers printed but unsold, etc., the production of the paper consumes every cent we receive for it. For a few months after the introduction of the pictures our friends obtained a sufficient number of new subscribers to pay the increased cost of their publication, but since then their efforts hav slackened, and the pictures hav been an additional burden upon the paper.

We regret to be obliged to say that this condition cannot continue. The paper is unable to bear the burden, and unless at least five hundred new yearly subscribers are found at once, the next volume will hav to go without the pictures. We should regret exceedingly to see this. Mr. Heston's conceptions form a powerful weapon against the church; they speak plainer than words; and while they may occasionally offend, they also impress, and command the running wayfarer's attention, by exciting curiosity and so compelling thought. To sum it up, they are a splendid ally in the crusade against religious superstition and injustice, and we do not want to discontinue them.

This matter, however, rests with our friends. They can do more than we can; though we are doing all possible to increase the list. If each one will try to get a new subscriber, surely five hundred out of the thousands on the list will succeed. And supposing each one should succeed, what a lift to Freethought it would be, and what a splendid paper that would enable us to lay before our readers each week!

Aside from this limited and somewhat personal object, there is need for a revival in Liberalism. For two or three years a great part of the Liberal public hav been somewhat apathetic, and hav not, therefore, accomplished all that might hav been done with more unanimous and emphatic action. We really believe that had the Liberals displayed the enthusiasm they did when defending D. M. Bennett from his cowardly and bigoted enemies, the Christians would never hav gotten their God into the constitutions of the new states in any shape, and would never hav had their joss-houses exempted from paying a just share of the public burdens. The work done by a few Liberals points to what might hav been accomplished by the many. Let us hav a revival, and let the stricken in conscience go forth and get THE TRUTH SEEKER a new subscriber as evidence of his or her contrition and new birth.

By doing this, it will enable us not alone to maintain the pictures, but to aid the Liberals everywhere in resisting ecclesiastical encroachments upon the people's rights. We are willing to do the work and bear the Christian's contumely if proper support be given, but we cannot continue the pictorial war altogether upon our own charges. We hope to hear from the friends at once, for it is a matter that needs prompt action. We hav put off saying this for months, expecting better times, but it will bear postponement no longer. Friends, let us hear from you.

The Literature Fund.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 16th we acknowledged the contributions of Messrs. Parsons and Bohda to a fund to be used in disseminating Freethought literature. Mr. B. Sugenheimer, of Winnsboro, S. C., has added $2 to the fund, which is very welcome, for we hav used up considerable more than the amounts then acknowledged.

In South Dakota, as in all the other new states, the Sunday law is, or will be at once, under consideration by the legislatures. The Christians are on hand, endeavoring to procure the enactment of such laws as shall effectually deprive the people of the use for recreation of one-seventh of their time, and make a practical union of church and state by compelling an acknowledgment by law of the church's holy day. We hav procured through courtesy of A. H. Risdon, of Huron, a list of the members of the South Dakota legislature, and sent to each senator and assemblyman a copy of J. E. Remsburg's "Sabbath Breaking." There were one hundred and fifty-five of them, and we hav furnished that number of copies of the book, wrapped them, and paid the postage, for just one-half of the retail price. This is doing better than we promised, but the needs of the case were great, and THE TRUTH SEEKER has sacrificed all the profit and a little of the cost of these pamphlets in order to do some practical good. The account stands:

To 155 copies "Sabbath Breaking," at 12½ cts.....	19 50
By cash acknowledged.....	$17 00
Balance due TRUTH SEEKER.....	2 50

We hope the friends of state Secularization will make up the amount which we hav expended for the benefit of the people of South Dakota, and that in the other new states the Liberals will forward us the money to do the same thing. In North Dakota some Liberal workers hav promised to do it, but activ and prompt work is imperativly needed in Montana and Washington. In the latter state the legislators should also be labored with as to exempting church property from taxation. This work has been undertaken by the Walla Walla Liberal Club, and we shall aid them in every way possible. If this Literature fund is adequately increased, great good will undoubtedly be accomplished. In addition to all this, every Liberal in each of the four new states should at once write to his state senator and representativ, protesting against the enactment of any Sunday law; and in Washington, protests should also be made against any law exempting church property from taxation.

Besides this political work, there is much to be done in spreading the ideas of Freethinkers on religious subjects. One man writes us from the West: "Never were people so anxious and willing to read Liberal matter as now. But with the loss of two crops, people are hard up." That this is so is proved by the fact that almost every person in the neighborhood from which this comes signed the anti-Sunday-law petition. People willing to read our literature, and who will work for the cause of liberty, should somehow be supplied with books and papers, and afforded the opportunity to do something.

Will subscribers in Washington and Montana send us the names and addresses of their state senators and representativs?

A Crisis With the English Secular Society.

Charles Bradlaugh has announced that on returning from his voyage to India he will resign the presidency of the National Secular Society. The intimation was conveyed in a letter to the Executiv Committee of the Society. He desired a special meeting of the members of the Society to be called in February to receive the formal resignation and to listen to a statement of his reasons for his course, which are, it is believed by his close friends, to be that he has practically to make a choice between political and Secular work, and he chooses the former.

At the meeting of the Executiv Committee at which this notice was received, after some friendly discussion, the following resolutions were adopted, as expressing the feelings of the Secularists so far as they had considered the matter:

"(1) The Executiv Committee of the National Secular Society receives the notice of Mr. Bradlaugh's intention to resign the presidency with the deepest regret. It feels itself to be expressing the universal sentiment of the Freethought party in heartily thanking him for his many years of leadership, and in deploring the great loss that must be entailed by his resignation.

"(2) That a meeting of the members be convened early in February to receive the president's statement."

There are a good many good men in England to take Mr. Bradlaugh's place, but nevertheless his resignation will be a strain upon the Secular organization, so nearly synonymous hav been the names of the society and Mr. Bradlaugh. As a leader he is just the man for the members of the society, though occasionally he and his prominent assistants would "fall out," chiefly upon personal grounds. But if he shall still be willing to advise the party, and to devote some portion of his talents to its welfare—which it would be a reflection upon him to doubt—it will get along all right and still be an effectiv opponent to ecclesiastical misrule.

It is probable, from the position he now occupies in the Society and before the Secular public, that G. W. Foote, of the Freethinker, will be selected to succeed Mr. Bradlaugh. Mr. Foote is a practical man, a hard-working and very able editor, and a brilliant orator. He has, we believe, the affection of the masses of the party as has no other but Mr. Bradlaugh. If he "is in the hands of his friends," he will probably be chosen, and the choice will be wise.

If.

If the people hav regard for Sunday, they will observe it. If it is not observed by the great majority of the people, the fact shows what they think of it.

No man can be made to think well of anything by statute.

The Sabbath Union fanatics should think of this, if they possess anything to think with.

Editorial Notes.

WE extend to Mr. and Mrs. J. J. McCabe, of Albany, hearty congratulations upon the accomplishment of twenty-five years of married life and a united desire to celebrate it, which they did on November 23d. May peace still be with them, lo these many years!

THE New York Herald says:

"The great majority of Americans believe that the less our churches hav to do with secular affairs the better it is for the community at large."

We earnestly wish that the great majority of Americans would act on their belief.

L. K. WASHBURN'S good-looking physiognomy will be reflected by means of the engraver's art in the December number of the Freethinkers' Magazine, and a sketch of his life will make us more fully acquainted with the new editor of the Investigator. It is to be hoped that the sketch will be complete in detail, for he is as good as he is beautiful.

THE report that the Catholic church, at the Baltimore congress, had removed the ban upon secret societies, except the Freemasons, is not correct. The ban can only be removed by the archbishops, and this they hav no notion to do. The priests of Rome can tolerate no association of their followers which hides its action from them. They claim the right to rule in all things.

TALMAGE'S begging appeal for $100,000 to help rebuild the Tabernacle has not met with general approval even in his own denomination. A Presbyterian clergyman in the Presbyterian Banner reminds him that he and his congregation hav been rather stingy in giving to church work, and evidently thinks that his appeal under the circumstances is not a little cheeky. Thus do the brethren exchange amenities.

THE Lorain Exponent, of Lorain county, Ohio, prints this paragraph:

"The way to make great men is to put free whisky in their way. —Rev. Dr. Bob Ingersoll of the Devil's church."

The Exponent is an expositor not to be trusted. The man who wrote that sentence and put Colonel Ingersoll's name to it is a deliberate falsifier of facts and a Christian.

THE London Freethinker asks Freethinkers to remember their Swedish brother in prison, and to send him cheer. Mr. Lennstrand is allowed to read and to write, and as he reads English, he will be glad to receive English and American papers. We suggest that our heretical contemporaries put him on the X list, addressing Victor Lennstrand, Langholmens, Kronohakte, Stockholm, Sweden. Two-cent postage is required on each paper.

A FELLOW sends this query to a Christian Prohibition journal:

"I am a traveling salesman, and day after day see intoxicated persons step up to the bar, ask for rum, and generally receive it, contrary to the law. Is it my duty to notify such rumsellers of their violation?"

What in the world is that Christian Prohibitionist doing in the barrooms where he sees such sights?

A MADRID, Spain, jury has acquitted two journalists who were prosecuted for publishing articles attacking the Catholic religion. The acquittal has led to denunciation of the jury in the senate by a Carlist peer and a Romish bishop. They also expressed fear that the Brazilian revolution would soon find imitators in Spain, unless the government or the regency made a severer penal code to protect the state church. Perhaps these relics of medievalism would like to hav the Inquisition revived also to execute this severer penal code!

WE notice by a letter from Lyman C. Howe in the Spiritual Instructor that Medium Reid obtains messages on slates from the other world as well as answers to letters. And if Mr. Howe is to be believed Mr. Reid is a phenomenal slate-writer, for he says that all Mr. Reid's demonstrations given in public are under "absolute fraud-proof conditions," and that to private sitters he says, "Bring your own slates, privately marked and fastened as you like, screwed, nailed, riveted, or tied as strongly as you please, and keep them in your own hands, and under these conditions the slates are filled with messages." If Mr. Reid can do all that Mr. Howe claims for him, the next time he comes east we should like to hav him giv Mr. McArthur and the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER a sitting.

A CONFLICT of religions is on in Manitoba. It is over the attempt of the English Protestants to abolish separate schools (controled by the churches) and the official use of the French language. Secret meetings are being held almost daily in the Catholic village of St. Boniface. If the local government passes the measures which it says it will, an appeal will be made by the Catholics to the French government to step in and protect the rights granted to the French when Canada was ceded to the British. A desperate fight will be made before the French submit to hav their schools and language done away with. Should Sir John Macdonald disallow the acts of the Manitoba government in this matter he will lose the support of English-speaking Canada, and if he does not he will lose French Quebec. It is feared that the approaching crisis will break up the confederation of provinces. Archbishop Tache has received assurances from Sir John Macdonald that if the local government persists in its proposed legislation he will ask the British government to suspend the Manitoba act, which would leave the province without a constitution. Simmered down, the controversy is between French Canadian Roman Catholics and English Protestants, and explains plainer than words the impossibility of allowing churches to influence legislation and preserving peace. A purely secular government with public schools in which religion is ignored is the solution of the problem.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH has recovered sufficient strength to greet his friends through the National Reformer, though with but a few words. It was understood when the last English papers went to press that he was to sail for Bombay on the 28th inst., remaining there about two weeks, and then returning to England. As usual during the illness of prominent Infidels, statements hav been circulated that Mr. Bradlaugh had evinced some desire to "recant." Concerning these stories he says: "I am informed that several persons hav circulated statements implying that some change has taken place in my opinions on questions of theology. There is not the shadow of foundation or excuse for any such statement. It would be ill-becoming to boast, but I may say that my convictions and teachings hav not been with me subject of doubt or uncertainty. I note that the British Weekly states that 'on one occasion, he [Mr. Bradlaugh] said that he had almost been persuaded by a sermon of the Rev. Arthur Mursell.' There is no foundation whatever for this declaration." At one time during his illness Mr. Bradlaugh was pretty near the end of his life, but he never, he says, lost the desire to liv. He is still very weak, but is surely returning to health. May the sea voyage he is on do all for him that his most hopeful friend can desire!

THE Liberals of Salt Lake City are making things uncomfortable for the Saints who desire naturalization in order that they may vote. Objection is being made to the admission to citizenship of those who accept the Mormon tenets. The contention is that no Mormon who has taken the Endowment House oath can be a good citizen, because such person must necessarily hold his allegiance to the church above his allegiance to the state. In regard to the nature of this oath, John Bond swore he went through the Endowment House in 1868, and was required to take an oath which compelled him to obey every obligation of the church, especially in opposition to the United States, under penalty of his life. He was also required to take oath to avenge the blood of Joseph Smith on this nation, and to teach this to his children and children's children to the latest generation. Martin B. Wardwell took a similar oath about the same time, and said he was told that if he revealed any secrets his throat would be cut and his bowels torn out. He saw the death penalty enforced on a man named Green a number of years ago, and when some of the members of the band murmured John W. Young said that if they did not shut up they would be served the same way. Andrew Cahoon, a former subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, swore to the same obligations, and said that he took an oath that the highest allegiance was to the Mormon church. Polygamy was the command of God, and all must indorse it or be damned. The general teaching of the church is in hostility to the laws of the land. Brother Cahoon has heard leaders of the church party argue in favor of the overthrow of the United States government. It is common for Wilford Woodruff, the present head of the church, to do this. All the witnesses spoke of the murders they had either seen or heard of in consequence of these oaths. What was the result of this opposition to Mormonism we hav not learned.

Letters from Friends.

BALTIMORE, MD., Nov. 2, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: As many hav given their opinion of the good done by friend Heston's illustrations, and vice versa, I suggest that your subscribers vote for or against their continuance. In my opinion there is a stamp of vile vulgarity about them, injurious to the cause and to THE TRUTH SEEKER. Wishing you every success, I remain,

Very truly yours, E. R. SHEGOGUE.

NEOLA, IA., Nov. 12, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I want to say that we had Mr. W. F. Jamieson here a short time ago to lecture. He gave us seven lectures, which were all splendid. He is the most sound man and the best posted upon Liberalism I hav ever heard. I can safely say that anyone wishing to hav lectures will never regret getting Mr. Jamieson. No one can take any offense at what he says, no matter what they believe. He certainly ought to be kept busy, and at a good salary. Everyone that listened to him was well pleased.

Yours respectfully, D. W. WHITNEY.

CINCINNATI, O., Nov. 12, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: This morning I received a very pleasant letter from Brother Downes, of the town of Steubenville, O., one of your subscribers, and he states that he is greatly delighted on seeing the name of Thomas Winter once again on the page of THE TRUTH SEEKER, November 9th, and the fearless words there uttered thrill him with joy, inasmuch as they cover the whole ground as a rebuff and positiv repulse against every phase of Spiritualistic theory or craziness. I hope there may be deep thought and reflection on all these speculations of a perpetual existence, by which millions of people are deluded in the worst manner possible. By the law of nature we exist, and by the same law we cease to exist, and this is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. All theologies, in their tricks, cranks, and deceptions, are so many swindles on human credulity. Before we existed, we knew nothing; so also will it be when we cease to exist. THOMAS WINTER.

WATERVILLE, MINN., Nov. 11, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I send with my renewal three new subscribers. Freethought is slowly gaining here. Yet the indifference for the cause is a great drawback. It seems to me that Liberals might with safety take courage and move ahead when they see God's children making such frantic efforts to keep their lamp trimmed and burning. Only think of the numerous schemes they devise to raise the pastor's salary, even to the throwing open of their church doors to negro minstrel troupes if the troupe will agree to divide the gate-money. This has taken place here in the godly village of Waterville. We had Remsburg here for one lecture in September. He set the priests all to frothing at the mouth. One in particular has dug up all the old stale lies that he can recollect, stirred in a few new ones of his own manufacture, and served them up to his congregation as a new dish.

What shall we say to Heston for his noble work? Go on, Heston, go on to glory, honor, and immortality.

Long liv the glorious old TRUTH SEEKER, is my prayer.

Fraternally yours, ORANGE DURAND.

WEST WINFIELD, N. Y., Nov. 16, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I send this obituary: Passed away from his home in West Winfield, Oct. 29, 1889, after an illness of only twenty-two hours, Dr. E. F. Beals, aged seventy-two years. Those who knew him best say a good man has gone. Father was a subscriber to your paper from its start, and was a friend of D. M. Bennett. He began the investigation of Spiritualism at its earliest modern advent, and promulgated its doctrins till he said he outgrew them, and considered himself much in advance of them for several years. He was for several years president of the Central New York Association of Spiritualists, and was well and widely known among the lecture fraternity. He had been a resident of this village for thirty years, and will be missed by a large circle of friends. He leaves two daughters to mourn his departure, his wife having passed on eighteen years ago. For several years he had been in poor health and was obliged to giv over his dental practice to younger hands. His death was from heart failure, induced by a complication of diseases. The funeral was held Nov. 1, 1889, from his home, Rev. O. B. Beals, of New York city, an old friend of the family, officiating. MRS. Z. I. DOWNING.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Many thanks for the publication of my letter defending the memory of Columbus.

In order to crush the nefarious power of priesthood and church, especially of the Catholic church, it is absolutely necessary that Freethinkers of all nations be united in a body, and the most enlightened and moral gentleman appointed as the head of the society. The same system must be followed as the one employed by religious organizations; otherwise all that is done, spoken, or written, is entirely useless. Who ignores to-day that unity makes strength? There are thousands of Freethinkers scattered all over the world, who are the most enlightened gentlemen and ladies, but entirely powerless, for want of unity, against church and priests, because these last flock together the same on earth as in the sky.

How many of the other religious creeds, and other societies, would soon join that of Freethinkers, with the most enlightened gentleman or lady at its head, is to be easily conceived. I can safely say that the majority of the natives of Cuba and Porto Rico, both male and female, are Freethinkers, but, for lack of a recognized head, are under the clutches of the most ignorant and immoral priesthood that imagination can conceive. The same can be said of Spain, South American republics, and many other countries, of which priesthood, being properly organized, has taken possession. The United States are in danger of the same result. JOSEPH FELIX GONZALES.

WHEELING, W. VA., Nov. 4, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav had the opportunity of attending Christian science parlor meetings of late, and I wish to relate some of the ideas taught there.

One evening while the lady who conducts the meeting was trying to make it clear to our minds that there is no such thing as disease, that all disease is merely a false belief, a gentleman present propounded the following question: "Suppose one man should throw a piece of iron at another and knock one of his eyes clear out of his head. Now," said he, "would it be a real fact that that man's eye was out, or would it merely be a false belief?" The lady answered, "It would merely be a false belief."

I am so constituted that I cannot help believing that what I see and feel is substantial and real, and I cannot for the sake of me conceive of a state that enables one to so completely contradict the plainest evidences of the senses.

The lady furthermore claims that nothing the senses take cognizance of has a real existence. I suggested that probably she meant that nothing has a permanent existence, but she insisted that she was right in using the word "real." We may wake up some time in the indefinit somewhere to find this life a dream—"a fleeting show for man's illusion given." But when we remember all the false and foolish things believed in by the children of men, and what a big and uncertain world fancy has to revel in when it soars beyond the real and tangible, it is wisest and best to "keep pretty close to the grass" if we wou'd reap true knowledge.

CHAS. BURSEE.

LEADVILLE, COL., Nov. 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: An incident occurred here in Leadville a short time ago which may be interesting to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER. A few weeks ago, one of our leading clergymen went around soliciting funds with which to build a new church. One lady donated $50 and paid $25 down, and agreed to pay the balance in sixty days. At the expiration of thirty days this clergyman called on her again for the balance, when she told him that she would not pay it until the time came that she had agreed to do so. She had two or three five-dollar bills in her hand at the time, and the disciple of God, seeing them, asked her what she was going to do with them. She replied that she was going to giv them to a sick, destitute widow, who was in want of the necessaries of life, when this brute in human shape said, "Giv me that money for my church. God will take care of that widow." It is needless to say that he did not receive it. "God will take care of that widow." Yes, but in what way? The answer is seen every day, in the pitiful condition of our destitute and starving people. The answer is heard on all sides, in the agonized cry of starving unfortunates. Why does not God put food in the mouths of famishing, priest-ridden Irishmen in the Emerald Isle, and then allow the funds which are raised to relieve this distress and suffering to be put into houses of worship for him? No wonder that the church is growing weaker, and that Freethought and Infidelity are increasing in strength every day, when such cormorants as this one are allowed to hav their undisputed sway, bleeding the people in every way which they can. A SUBSCRIBER.

LE MOORE, CAL., Oct. 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: We hav had during the past year some fine treats, of which you hav probably been informed. Mr. Putnam came last spring through invitation, giving of his great wealth of inspiration and poetic life, awakening general activity in the minds of the Liberal and Spiritual departments in our village, to suppress further encroachment of theological institutions in the state or nation. There is a strong Liberal sentiment in this community, doing brave work for the Secular cause. However, church interests are in full working order for the support and upbuilding of dogmas and creed. In the month of September Mr. B. F. Underwood delivered three lectures here to appreciativ audiences. The evolution of religious ideas and kindred subjects were topics of discourse. We are highly gratified to hear all speakers of this particular school of thought. There is no prejudice in our mind toward any class, whatever their ideal platform, whether Christian or strictly Secular, as all are natural results of evolutionary principles and laws. Thus I see no ground for real antagonism. But all true wisdom and knowledge are sustaining powers, and the Liberal-minded seek to furnish a natural and spiritual basis on which to raise justice and hope. Supernatural tenets do not accord with scientific method. Work of this school and character lies outside of material service, having no real part with planetary progress. Having in early years been one passing through this same series of blind instruction, I think we know, and can giv, probable reasons in what we assert, by virtue of experimental and personal experience. As a rule we see no proper method but to agitate, to educate, and in our desire for knowledge and defined progress there appears to us a marked need as an additional complement of force above and beyond the sensuous objectiv reign.

SARAH G. FOX.

LEWISPORT, KY., Oct. 5, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav had a conversation with a minister who is supposed to be well informed. He has a large library of books, and is quite a debater on theological dogma. I am on better terms with him than any other preacher at this time. I asked him if he had an account of the unveiling of a monument to Bruno, in June last. He had seen only a notice, and could not tell me what he had seen it in. I believe he told me a story, though he is a reader of more than one Baptist journal. He has Paine's "Age of Reason," with the Observer's blasphemy against Paine's character pasted in the book. The moral is this—the religious and the party press do not, and will not, giv such current news, because they are in the interest of the monopolies of church and state. They do pull together. The rich delight to see the poor looking to the Gods for support and comforts. They are like the clergy in Ireland. They like to keep up a disturbance with the English government and landlords, which keeps their hands off the throats of the priests, and they know it. Whenever the people are about to win, the pope interferes. He wins on two sides. God made the world, and made man—an all-wise God. Still the people are paying perhaps five hundred thousand preachers, and countless strikes, to patch his perfections. I almost despair of a republic for my children. Jobbery, jobbery! Our revivals of religion are disastrous to society, to morals. Adultery and fornication are common. Then some good Christian doctor produces abortions, to cover a shame. O poor woman! Often I tell the Christians they feed the preachers too much; they should compel them to work, and they would be out of mischief, and besides we should hav less taxes. The study of theology as a trade, is a crime. GEO. SMITH.

FRESNO, CAL., Oct. 26, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to make a few remarks on the subject of the prize Moral Manual from my point of view. It does not seem fair or wise for any one essay to win the prize of $1,000, to the exclusion of all others who may compete for it.

Besides, this work is to be gems of truth in the science of morals, which need to be reflected from all sides, like the objects in a kaleidoscope, from different points, requiring expression and presentation from many minds.

Let me suggest that all who hav such gems of thought giv them out in the form of proverbs or the wise sayings of sages. Such are easy to remember, and make deepest impressions. Let the committee select and appropriate the best manuscript contributed, and the $1,000 be distributed according to the merits of the selections.

No one mind can perceive the many-sided perfection of truth; and while some may be able only to see the one side as presented to his or her view, others may see differently—as the travelers approaching from different directions a sign painted in various colors will contend for their own limited observations, when the whole truth demands the recognition of the fractional truths from each.

Many would be willing, no doubt, to send in some of their best ideas and aphorisms, to be embalmed in the hearts and lives of coming generations, with no other consideration than that they can thus be instrumental in leaving their footprints on the sands of time. As it is now proposed few will care to compete in so great an intellectual contest, to say nothing of how few are really competent to do so.

The morality of the Bible and churches needs to be reviewed by the light of reason and science, and the true relations of man to the universe made plain, instead of the myths of religious teachings in the past. L. HUTCHISON.

KENTON, O., Nov. 4, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I want to call your attention to some inspiration that won't wash. I will take for my text the four star apostles on the crucifixion of Christ. I will begin with Matthew xxvii, 32–37. He says they made Simon bear his cross; they gave him vinegar to drink—vinegar mingled with gall—and set up over his head the accusation, "This is Jesus the king of the Jews." Now we will hear Mark's testimony, Mark xv, 21–26. He agrees with Matthew that Simon bore the cross, but he says they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh. Note the difference in the superscription written over him—"The king of the Jews." Mr. Mark, will you take the stand? The two former witnesses do the crucifying at Golgotha, but Luke performs the operation at Calvary, and givs him just plain vinegar to drink. And the superscription is as follows, "This is the king of the Jews." Now we will take John's testimony, beginning xix, 17–19. John says he bore his own cross. Matthew, Mark, and Luke say Simon was made to bear it for him. And the title on the cross was, "Jesus of Nazareth the king of the Jews." John says nothing about giving Christ anything to drink. One of the others says they gave him vinegar and gall. The next one says they gave him wine and myrrh. The third one says they gave him vinegar. Three of these witnesses say Simon bore the cross. One says he bore the cross himself. Now, will the good people who pretend to believe that this was written by inspiration please explain to us why the four witnesses I hav just named did not tell this story just alike? If you know the meaning of the word inspiration, you must know that you are not honest when you say that this conflicting evidence came through inspired witnesses. If you believe every word of this inspired book called the Bible, as every good Christian must do, just practice its teachings right through and see how soon you will land in the penitentiary. GEO. BAKER.

OSHKOSH, WIS., Nov. 3, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I cannot go without THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best paper in the world, and I hav never read such a paper before, which made me understand the Bible as this one does. I could not understand till Mr. Hare explained to me, and let me hav this valuable paper. I can not thank him enough for it.

I think you will remember who I am. I wrote a letter before, about a year ago, that I was crippled in my hands and feet, and that I hav never been to school in my life. It is very hard for me to write, or else I would write a big piece about the Bible and what I think about it.

What is all the religion? Is it not all a pack of humbug? If not, why do not the ministers do according to their declaration that if a person prays to God in faith, he gets his stomach filled without work. If so, why do they lay up treasure on earth, and build such a big house to liv in? They did not get it through praying. Oh, no, they got it out of the poor folks' pocket—those that hav no bread in the house for the little ones, and no clothing. Is that not dreadful?

And another question I ask. Why don't they do as the Bible says in this: If any person is sick let him go and call the elders of the church and let them lay their hands on him and anoint him with oil, and he shall recover? Why don't they do so? Hav they not faith enough to do it? Why, how can they blame the other folks for not believing what they preach? I am glad that I hav my eyes opened and can see. The song comes true, "Once I was blind, but now I can see." While I believed all this, I did not make any money with my crocheting, but since I quit believing such nonsense I hav earned a little. That shows what God cares about his children, doesn't it?

I hav prayed night and day for my getting well, but I hav no answer yet, and I don't expect I ever shall.

My folks just came home from church and told me that in Lamiro the lightning struck the church and burnt it down, and that the church-members hav to pay next Sunday. That is a nice father. He cannot take care of his own house. Yours truly, HELEN H. DAHLE.

ROOHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 16, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find money order for D. M. Bennett's "World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," who were not Christians. Now, while thinking about who were and were not Christians, a perplexing doubt as to what a Christian—as the word goes—is, has presented itself. I was thrown into this train of thought by reading in this morning's Rochester Democrat and Chronicle the following editorial item:

Colonel Ingersoll must look to his laurels. Police-Seargent Tims, of New York city, has delivered a funeral oration over the body of Patrolman Denyse, that compared well with the colonel's best efforts. Seargent Tims's effort is not so ornate as the colonel's oratory, but is still eloquent and impressiv. Mr. Denyse was an honest man—a Christian, in fact, although he refused to be reckoned one.

It seems to me that a Christian is one who has full belief in the divinity and doctrins of Christ. Now, the only conclusion that can be reasonably arrived at is that the Christians who are honest are so scarce that it is necessary to claim for Christianity anyone who livs an honest and respectable life.

I attended the People's Mission in this place the other night, and found quite a little in the proceedings to interest and amuse, of which, however, I shall mention only one thing. Col. H. H. Hadley, of St. Bartholomew Mission in New York city, has been here for some time, and was in charge of the meeting. In the course of his remarks, after descanting on the beauty and blessedness of religion, he said (I quote as exactly as memory will permit): "And if you do not believe and accept this blessed redeemer you know the results, and just think of the awfulness of an eternal existence spent in the consequences of sin. If a bird were to light on the earth and carry away a grain of sand every thousand years, at the time it had the world all dropped out into space it would be scarce but the break of the day in the morning of eternity, and your suffering would hav just begun." I suppose this had a very marked effect on the believers of the "word of God." But as for me, it was the cause of my companion asking, "What are you laughing at?" HARRY G. RUFF.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 18, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: My reference to Mr. Berylson's letter was made from memory; if incorrect, I shall accept his correction with thanks. The terms, "Brutality and selfishness of man," occur in Miss Gardener's letter, and I hav the impression that they are repeated by Mr. Berylson and supplemented with remarks on selfishness that are creditable to their author. It being obvious that the world is indebted to the egoism of uncivilized man for the institution of ownership, I shall agree with Mr. Berylson that "the egoism of uncivilized man is of no benefit to humanity;" and will add the suggestion that the unanimity with which the worst mistakes of ignorant barbarians are fostered and perpetuated is an indication that our civilization is not morally an improvement upon or a step in advance of their barbarism, but is the same old devil in another disguise, and rechristened a Christian civilization. Therefore, I think it questionable if the egoism of our average civilized man is a blessing that should inspire us with gratitude or confidence.

If Mr. Berylson thinks that "How do away with poverty" is the question at issue, he has made a more serious and important mistake than he charges me with; for I hav heard no complaint of the world being poverty-stricken, nor do I believe he has; per contra, over-production and a superabundance of all things needful, causing enforced idleness in large numbers of those who are compelled by ownership to gain their daily bread by daily labor for the enrichment of others rather than themselvs, is the complaint that comes to us from every side. How to effect a distribution of the world's wealth that will best promote the well-being of the world's population and not impair the abundance, is the question that confronts us and urgently demands a solution. Can it be effected without abolishing ownership? If so, how? If not, then what? Has ownership effected an equitable and satisfactory distribution of the world's lands? Is ownership a necessity to an abundant production and equitable distribution of wealth?

Though blubbering and scolding about the outrageous and cruel wrongs that are suffered by the most useful and inoffensiv of the human race, carefully avoiding even a distant allusion to or a mild rebuke of the cause, may serve to acquire an unmerited reputation of being a friend and advocate of suffering humanity, it cannot in the least tend to abate their suffering. Having become surfeited and disgusted with such exhibitions of a pretense of sympathy for the unfortunate victims of a barbarous institution—a sympathy that if really felt is widely misdirected—I hav thought it expedient and apropos to invite special attention to the cause of the outrage that is justly complained of and deservedly protested against. I take it for granted that Mr. Berylson did not propound his question in mockery, but with an honest and sincere desire that it shall be satisfactorily answered. Probably, with a few suggestions from himself occasionally, we shall be able to answer his question to his entire satisfaction. J. A. TUTTLE.

MT. WASHINGTON, MD., Nov. 10, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav twenty-five cents to my credit with you, I believe. For it please send me the best book you can for the money—one that will be the most help in asking and answering such questions as you may suppose would occur from the following. About three years ago I first came to this place. I was then a very feeble Freethinker, and am not much better now—being but twenty-three years of age, having to work nearly all my life, and being raised almost in the shadow of three churches, receiving but fifteen months' schooling in a district log school-house. Well, shortly after my arrival here, having by sociability and a little musical talent earned some notice, I was invited by the ladies of the Methodist Episcopal choir to join them. I refused on the ground of not being a church-member. Then the pastor, several leading members of the church, and finally the leader of the choir, insisted that I should join. To all of them I gave the same answer, thinking that to join that choir would not be consistent with my belief or disbelief. Yet, being, as I hav said, of social nature, and there being no other Freethinkers near here, and not wishing to be left entirely alone, I finally consented and joined the choir—not the church. I did not try to hide my views, nor yet publicly make them known. Over a year ago I left here and was gone quite a while. During my absence some of my opinions became public, and I did not expect to be invited to take part again in the choir, yet such was the case, and everything was quiet until, a few weeks ago, one rainy day, the devil was raised and I hav been socially ostracised. On the day in question I plainly avowed my disbelief in a hell, in the presence of an "elder," who, as only a Christian can, with the greatest complacency consigned me to that region—not for crimes that I had done, but for the heinous crime of unbelief. This Christian elder has gone forth in "the strength of the Lord" to annihilate me, and yet, strange to say, there is no visible mark of "God's displeasure" on me.

The pastor, a few Sundays ago, said that of all the crimes in the sight of God the most heinous was or is the crime of unbelief. So murder, rape, lying, deceit, and all other crimes are nothing in the sight of the "gracious Lord" compared with unbelief, whether honest or otherwise. Hence my unbelief has branded me among the damned.

I may soon tell whether I may be allowed to stay here or not. I am told that my general qualifications and influence would make me a shining light in the "service of the Lord."

Yours for liberty, J. W. SLAYTON.

NEWCOMB, TENN., Nov. 10, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The mind of man is an intricate piece of machinery. I hav some curious experience with my thoughts. Sometimes they hav been inexpressible either by word or gesture. Yes, I hav had thoughts that I was satisfied could not be told by anyone, no matter what command of language he might hav. Perhaps many people hav had the same experience. I hav no doubt that the inability to express their thoughts has been the cause of the insanity of many people. Such, no doubt, is the case with that class of people who become deranged on the subject of the Christian religion. I believe that many become deranged through inability to reason out to the satisfaction of their own minds the cause for the faith that is within them, and to reason out the relation between Christ and God, the spiritual and the natural man. The Christian holds a belief that man has a kind of double life, a something more than a body of flesh; that when he dies it does not die; that a part of him livs after death called the spirit, or soul. When they begin to think they are, they think, possessed of the spirit, and moved by the spirit and not by the operations of their mind upon the body. Then it is that their sanity is becoming endangered. Everyone who claims he is born of the spirit and has had the second birth must feel a little at times that he has a supernatural power about himself that he did not possess previous to this second birth. He must feel that there is some mysterious thing about himself too wonderful to be explained, and he cannot understand it. If he tries to reason it out he is getting on dangerous ground. He cannot explain it satisfactorily to his own mind, and the more he dwells on the subject the worse it will be for him. I hav traveled on that road, and if I had not come to the conclusion that I was fog-bound, I might hav been where this same religion has sent its thousands of others, in the insane asylum. Some men say we cannot control our thoughts. That is an argument hard to refute or combat. It is something like the fore-ordination and predestination doctrin. I may say, "Well, I am going to take this pistol and blow my brains out," and I put the pistol up to my head, but fail to fire, and then take it away. Then the believer in the doctrin of fore-ordination can say to me, "You were not foreordained to shoot yourself," and vice versa, if I had shot myself he could say, "Well, you were foreordained to do so." How can you beat his argument? And so it is with the man who will claim you cannot help thinking. If you think a thought and pen it down, he can say, "Well, you could not help thinking what you did." How can you beat his argument? My experience leads me to think that man can to some extent control his thoughts and guide them in a direct way, although he cannot stop thinking. The mind thinks without our consent. It is in perpetual motion and goes whether we wish it to or not. And yet we can guide it. If not, how could we obtain an education? Mr. Ingersoll says to Mr. Field, "The truth is, no one can be held responsible for his thoughts." I am inclined to think that the civil law of this country holds us responsible for our thoughts. For when we commit a crime, which is only the fruit of our thoughts, we are punished. But if a man controls his thoughts and does not commit the crime which he has thought of doing, what right hav we to punish that man for what he thought? Yet Christ made the thought equal to doing the deed (Matt. v, 28). So then we are held responsible by the civil law of our country for thoughts that lead us to the commission of crime. "The brain thinks without our consent." That is true, but if we could not control our thoughts we would be insane. So, then, we can will, not to think whatever we please, but on whatever subject we wish. If it is otherwise, how do we obtain knowledge through experience?

The Christian says, "I will not think of anything that will lead me to doubt my Bible. I will not reason with myself, nor suffer anyone else to do so, to the opposit of my belief." And he closes his mind against doubt and against reason. He locks the door and throws the key away, and incloses his mind in his own narrow cell of credulity and belief. Safe he is in his own little fort. How can he be reached? Can he help his thoughts? He could, but he will not. Such is the working of the mind of one that is born of the spirit. No, no, you cannot tell whence his mind comes, nor whither it goeth. I once occupied that most enviable position, and know whereof I speak. If a friend would come to me and say anything that would lead me to thinking, or to doubting that precious holy book, I would immediately lock the door and say, "Get thee behind me, Satan." Then I could carry it to the Lord in prayer. Then you will wonder how I was ever approached and reasoned with so that I became an Agnostic. I will tell you how the scales fell from my eyes. In trying to reason out the cause for my faith, and taking the scriptures to mean what they said, I tried to practice its teachings, and be what I thought it took to be a Christian. I undertook to practice that which I am now sure was and is an impracticable thing, for me at least. And we all know that it exists more in theory than practice. In other words, the church is full of the most abominable hypocrits. Who is he that has a sane mind and can carry out this simple command, "Pray without ceasing?" I tried it. I prayed when at my work, and whatever I undertook I carried it to the Lord in prayer. And I was not long in making the happy discovery of where such a state of mind would lead to. The mind is not capable of performing such a task as riveting itself on any one subject so constantly. Yet you know we are serving a jealous God, and we must love him with all our soul, power, mind, and strength. The Christians tell me I was not required to do as I hav said, and that God does not require of me or any other man impossible tasks. Yet it is said in the Bible that he will judge us for every vain and idle thought we may hav had. Consequently we must guard our thoughts by putting them on him and asking him to keep us from thinking.

In my experience with this religion I never found a limit to the requests and tyrannies of this spirit government. And I am inclined to think that this is the experience of all men who try to practice what they preach. You will hear them complaining of the weight of the cross continually. Poor saints! poor sinners! I am thankful that I threw away the paganish mythical rule and am able to stand in the light of reason and judge, without fear of gods or devils, witches or wizards, the course I shall pursue for the remainder of my life. I shall hold myself accountable to nothing except humanity.

Now let us see how this idea of the spiritual man leads us into error and many bad things. 1 Cor. ii, 14, says: "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God, for they are as foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Now, as we are all at first natural men, how do we obtain the things of the spirit, or the spirit, since we cannot know them because they are spiritually discerned?

Now let us see what idea of morality some of those spiritually-minded gentlemen had. Rom. vii, 4, says, "Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ." Is that possible, that God so licensed men to do crime because of Christ's death? The fifteenth verse says, "For that which I do, I allow not; for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate that do I." The sixteenth, "If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good." The seventeenth verse, "Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." The eighteenth verse, "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing, for to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not." The nineteenth verse, "For the good that I would do, I do not, but the evils which I would not, that do I." Hear this spiritual man accounting for his misdeeds and excusing himself in the following verse, "Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." He does not seem to think that the Christian religion will cause him to stop sinning, but that it is to save him from the effects of his sins. The eighth chapter, verse thirty-third, says, "Who shall lay anything to charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth." Please emphasize that "no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." Do you see that the double man, the body of flesh, and the pretension to be in the possession of the spirit, which was to elevate him to a higher moral plane, is instead only licensing him to commit crime? Ah, Jesus paid it all, and I am saved if I only believe. By faith ye are saved, and not by works. S. P. HERRON.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

How It Pays.

Said Tom to Dick and Harry,
"The wind is sharp, to-day;
Surpose we hav a whisky-straight,
To keep the cold away?"
"All right"—the cheerful answer—
"That's just the talk for me!"
And the smiling landlord mixed the drinks
And pocketed his fee.

Another day, the comrades
Met at his door again;
And now 'twas heat, instead of cold,
That made them all complain.
"Thermometer at ninety,
And such a blazing sun!
Let's hav a drink to cool us off"—
No sooner said than done.

There stood the smiling landlord—
In his button-hole a flower;
He mixed for Tom a "whisky-straight,"
For Dick, a "whisky-sour."
And when he found that Harry
Preferred a "brandy-smash,"
He mixed it with as good a grace—
And pocketed the cash.

A boy looked on, and wondered
(A boy that was no fool)
How drink could warm men up one day,
And one day make them cool.
"It doesn't stand to reason
The thing can work both ways."
The smiling landlord answered him,
"No matter, if it pays."

"The whole thing in a nutshell—
When people want to drink,
It warms them up, or cools them off,
Just as they choose to think.
It pays—that's all I care for."
The boy thought, "Yes, that's so;
But how it pays the other folks,
Is what I want to know."

'Twas easy to discover,
For the downward road is quick
To men that drink for heat and cold,
Like Harry, Tom, and Dick.
Their business went to ruin,
And they to want and shame;
But the landlord mixed his liquors,
And sold them all the same.

And so the boy learned wisdom.
"He shan't grow rich on me;
For I'll quench my thirst with water,
Nature's free gift!"—thought he.
He kept his word and prospered,
In honest, sober ways;
And, rich in health and happiness,
His life shows "how it pays."

—Mary E. Bradley in the Young Reaper.

A Visit to Philadelphia.—Continued.

That evening we went to the meeting of the American Secular Union—you know it was holding its annual convention at that time in Philadelphia. Edward McGlynn, the advanced Catholic priest, lectured on "The Enemies of our Public Schools." Dr. McGlynn is a brave thinker, a good and honest man, and eharmed everybody by his fair judgment and calm, straightforward way of putting his arguments. He is a man of splendid physique and fine perceptions. He loves the public schools and would shield them from injury; believes them good enough for any and all children, as they are, and somehow you hate to hear him say he is a Catholic. I don't see how he can be, consistently. He is better than Catholicism—a man of whom America may feel proud. After the lecture we had a pleasant half hour with many new old friends, whom we had known long but had never met personally before. Mr. Clark, of Worcester; Horace and Sada Bailey Fowler; Mrs. Carl; E. W. Chamberlain, the good lawyer who stands for good causes; Dr. and Mrs. G. F. A. de Lespinasse, who came all the way from Iowa to attend the Congress, and whose son is one of our dear children of the Corner. Then there were Harry Hoover, Dr. James Stevens, Mr. Carter, and a handsome young man named Kline, who has read the Corner ever since it was started in THE TRUTH SEEKER. But I cannot begin to tell you half the number that I was glad to see, and who were glad to meet us all. The next day was Sunday, and Mr. (I don't like that word "Rev.") M. J. Savage (I guess he will pardon me for omitting the title—he's better off without it) gave a splendid discourse on the school question. It was a fine effort, and just what was expected from so good a scholar and gentleman as Mr. Savage. We all smiled a little when Lucy Colman said, in her calm, wise way, with her fine eyes fixed searchingly upon the eloquent preacher: "Mr. Savage, do you pray?"

"It would take me some time to answer that question," he smilingly replied.

"It is answered," said Mrs. Colman.

In the evening Mr. T. B. Wakeman gave his glowing lecture on the Nine Demands, and carried the audience by storm. The hall was well packed, too, as it was on the other occasions. Liberals may feel proud of their workers; they are, as one said in the audience, "of good mettle." Did I see Mr. Westbrook? Why, certainly. And you want me to tell you about him? His presence is fine, and the cast of his face and head indicates goodness and benevolence. He is the worthy president of the American Secular Union, and will do good service. And Mrs. Westbrook? well, you would feel like falling in love with her at once, her ways are so gentle and amiable.

Would you like me to tell you about my visit to Girard College? This, as you are aware, is a college for orpban boys, a magnificent gift from Stephen Girard, a well-known Freethinker who died in 1831. The college is said to be the finest specimen of Grecian architecture in the world. It is after the form of a Corinthian temple, and is surrounded by a portico or piazza of thirty-four columns, each being fifty-five feet in hight and eighteen feet in circumference. It is built of white marble, and is encompassed by a wall ten feet high. The inclosure contains forty-one acres—grass plots, play-ground, gardens—and besides the main building there are five or six other buildings for the use of the pupils, including a chapel in which, it is said, devotional exercises are held. This does not belong there, and is perverting the intention of Mr. Girard. The good president of the American Secular Union has written a book concerning the perversion of this property in one single direction, and will use every effort to restore it to its original uses. In the main vestibule of the college there stands a marble statue of the great philanthropist, beneath which rest his remains.

In a room above are the Girard relics, consisting of his household furniture, simple and modest. His old desks, pictures, wearing apparel, nautical instruments, and several boxes filled to the top with his correspondence and business papers, all fill quite a space, inclosed by an iron fence to keep off vandals. The carriage he used to drive around in is very noticeable, a "one-horse shay," and makes a striking contrast to the elegant vehicles of the present.

Girard arose from the ranks, a poor boy who, by care, industry, and good luck, accumulated a great fortune, which he left to be a blessing to many a fatherless lad, who has been, and will continue to be in the future, started on the road to good citizenship, the goal of all true education. At present there are about fourteen hundred orphan boys in the college between the ages of six and eighteen years, instructed by a corps of over fifty teachers, all of them, with four or five exceptions, being ladies.

The buildings cost three million dollars, and the endowment fund of three millions has increased to eight millions. It is all managed by a board of twelve trustees selected by the judges of the probate court. Bethia and Mr. A. accompanied me to the college, and as we entered the porter's lodge Mr. A., who has a venerable and ministerial air, was challenged by the porter. "Are you a clergyman, sir?" By the terms of Mr. Girard's will, no clergyman is permitted to enter the college.

Mr. A. said, with great dignity: "I am a Garrisonian Abolitionist, at your service."

"A what?" inquired the astonished porter.

"Garrisonian Abolitionist."

"Where from?"

"Massachusetts."

The porter hesitated somewhat, but permitted him to pass, seemingly half inclined to believe Mr. A. the pastor of some new faith or other.

S. H. W.

(CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.)

The Battle of Wilson Creek—General Lyon.

I suppose most of the young folks hav read about the great fight that occurred at Wilson Creek, Mo., during the first part of the civil war, and the brave General Lyon who fell gallantly fighting in that bloody battle. But how many of you are aware that this noble hero was a Freethinker? He was, and was also a subscriber to the Boston Investigator. The Freethinkers of America should do all within their power to honor this noble soldier. Although not one of the greatest, General Lyon was one of the bravest and truest officers in the Union army, and his name will ever be associated with the history of that stupendous struggle in which he fell gallantly fighting for his country.

Gen. Nathaniel Lyon took an activ part in the war in Missouri. This state was largely Union. The convention refused to pass an ordinance of secession, but Governor Jackson made a strong effort "to preserve, at least, an armed neutrality." Lyon defeated this attempt by breaking up Camp Jackson, saving the United States arsenal at St. Louis, and by defeating Colonel Marmaduke at Booneville, June, 1861. General Sigel was defeated by the Confederates at Carthage on July 5, 1861, and General Lyon was convinced that he must either fight the large armies of Generals McCulloch and Price, or else giv up that part of the state. Although the forces of McCulloch and Price were superior to his own, he decided to meet them in battle. His army numbered about six thousand men, but he met twice that number at Wilson Creek, and he fell while bravely fighting. His men were defeated.

In looking over a few historical works I find the following in praise of Lyon:

"At the head of about five thousand he attacked more than twice that number at Wilson Creek. He fell, gallantly leading a bayonet charge" (Barnes's United States History).

"Lyon was sturdily battling against enormous odds on the extreme right, and was frequently wounded. . . . General Lyon, bleeding from wounds on the leg and head, dashed to the front to lead on the Kansas troops, when a rifle-ball pierced his heart" (Popular History of the Civil War).

"General Lyon fell in the conflict, much lamented" (Tuttle's History of Kansas).

I could giv many more such notices, but space will not permit. The G. A. R. has erected a beautiful monument to the memory of General Lyon.

GEO. J. REMSBURG.

Correspondence.

WHEELING, W. VA., Oct. 30, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: It has been several weeks since I wrote for the Corner, and I feel as if I had neglected my duty. We young folks can never become writers unless we begin. I do not hav much time to read and write, for I hav to keep house for my pa, brother, and little sister. I do all the work except the washing. I like housework. We little folks must think, and write, so as to expand our minds. Our greatest writers had to one day make a beginning. We can only become writers by practice. I wish the Liberals here would start a lyceum. I should like to hav some place to go to, but I do not want to go to church and hear them preach me into a lake of fire and brimstone.

I hope more of the children will write for the Corner, for I like to read their letters. I will take the liberty to ask some of the Liberal girls to write to me, and I will answer.

Good bye, EMMA ADELLE NOE.

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25.

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FAITH AND REASON.

A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.

With elaborate index.

By HALSEY R. STEVENS.

A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained n such compact form.—[Literary Rev'ew.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Ingersoll and the Deist.

BY

A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."

Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

"The Gladstone" LAMP

is the finest lamp in the world. It gives a pure, soft, brilliant white light of 85 candle power. Purer and brighter than gas light; softer than electric light, —more cheerful than either. A Marvelous light from ordinary kerosene oil!

Seeing is Believing.

A "wonderful lamp" it is indeed. Never needs trimming, never smokes nor breaks chimneys, never "smells of the oil;" no gumming up, no leaks, no sputtering, no climbing of the flame, no annoyance of any kind, and cannot explode. And besides all these advantages it gives a clear, white light, 10 to 20 times the size and brilliancy of any ordinary house lamp! Finished in either Brass, Nickel, Gold or Antique Bronze. Also for Clergymen, Editors, College Students, Teachers, Professors, Physicians and other professional men.

The Gladstone Extension Study Lamp,

The Gladstone Banquet Lamps.
The Gladstone Piano Lamps.

Send for price list. Single lamps at wholesale price, boxed and sent by express. Get our prices. "Seeing is believing."

GLADSTONE LAMP CO.,
10 East 14th St., New York.

THE

Cosmian Hymn Book,

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

PRICE, . . . $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE

MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay. —[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ANTICHRIST.

PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

WHAT KIND OF A MAN CLARK BRADEN IS.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, 10 cents.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 558 West Madison st., Room 1, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.
Horace Haynes, Leslie.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 331 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.
C. Stocker, 29 Vauxhall Road, Liverpool.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

The Individualist.

A LIBERAL AND REFORM JOURNAL, ADVOCATING SOCIAL REGENERATION AND INDUSTRIAL EMANCIPATION.

Devoted to the rational exposition of the philosophy of Freedom, mental, moral, and physical; social, industrial, and sexual. Commands the pens of the best writers in America on these subjects. Sixteen pages. $2 per year. Trial subscription three months, 50 cents. Each yearly subscriber will receive a copy of Mr. Stuart's book, "Natural Rights, Natural Liberty, and Natural Law." Address F. Q. STUART, Editor and Proprietor, 1653 Blake street, Denver, Col.

THE HUMBOLDT LIBRARY
—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

No. 1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.

No. 2. Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. (19 illustrations). By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, author of "The English Constitution."

No. 4. Man's Place in Nature, (with numerous illustrations). By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Rev. Charles Kingsley.

No. 7. The Conservation of Energy, (with numerous illustrations). By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.

No. 8. The Study of Languages, brought back to its true principles. By C. Marcel.

No. 9. The Data of Ethics. By Hebert Spencer.

No. 10. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music, (numerous illustrations), By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.

No. 11. } The Naturalist on the River Amazons. A record of 11 years of travel.
No. 12. } By Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S. (Not sold separately).

No. 13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alex. Bain, LL.D.

No. 14. The Wonders of the Heavens, (thirty-two illustrations). By Camille Flammarion.

No. 15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.

No. 16. The Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 18. Lessons in Electricity, (sixty illustrations). By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 20. The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.

No. 21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes and Men. By Samuel Wainwright, D.D.

No. 24. Popular Scientific Lectures, (illustrated). By Prof. H. Helmholtz.

No. 25. The Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Oxford University.

No. 26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.

No. 27. The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.

No. 28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. (numerous illustrations). By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.

No. 29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology, (numerous illustrations). By Andrew Wilson, Ph.D.

No. 30. } The Study of Words.
No. 31. } By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen.

No. 34. The Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird, Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and Others.

No. 36. Lectures on Evolution. (Illustrated). By Prof. T. H. Huxley.

No. 37. Six Lectures on Light. (Illustrated). By Prof. John Tyndall.

No. 38. } Geological Sketches. By Archibald
No. 39. } Geikie, F.R.S.

No. 40. The Evidence of Organic Evolution. By George J. Romanes, F.R.S.

No. 41. Current Discussions in Science. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S.

No. 42. History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock.

No. 43. Darwin and Humboldt. By Prof. Huxley, Prof. Agassiz, and others.

No. 44. } The Dawn of History. By C. F. Keary,
No. 45. } of the British Museum.

No. 46. The Diseases of Memory. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

No. 47. The Childhood of Religion. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.

No. 48. Life in Nature. (Illustrated). By James Hinton.

No. 49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. By Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.

No. 50. } Money and the Mechanism of Ex-
No. 51. } change. By Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.

No. 52. The Diseases of the Will. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.

No. 53. Animal Automatism, and other Essays. By Prof. T. H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.

No. 55. The Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 56. } Illusions. By James Sully.
No. 57. }

No. 58. } The Origin of Species. } Two Double
No. 59. } By Charles Darwin. } Nos.

No. 60. The Childhood of the World. By Edward Clodd.

No. 61. Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 62. The Religions of the Ancient World. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Univ. of Oxford. (Double number).

No. 63. Progressive Morality. By Thomas Fowler, LL.D., President of Corpus Christi Coll., Oxford.

No. 64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russell Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.

No. 65. Conditions of Mental Development: and other essays. By Wm. Kingdon Clifford.

No. 66. Technical Education: and other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. By J. F. C. Hecker, M. D.

No. 68. Three Essays. By Herbert Spencer. Special Number.

No. 69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze, Ph.D. Double number.

No. 70. Essays Speculative and Practical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 71. Anthropology. By Daniel Wilson, Ph. D. With Appendix on Archæology. By E. B. Tylor, F. R. S.

No. 72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.

No. 73. Evolution in History, Language and Science. Four Addresses delivered at the London Crystal Palace School of Art, Science and Literature.

No. 74. } The Descent of Man, and Selection in
No. 75. } Relation to Sex. (Numerous Illustrations)
No. 76. } By Charles Darwin. Nos. 74, 75, 76 are
No. 77. } single Nos.; No. 77. is a double No.

No. 78. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. By William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.

No. 79. Scientific Aspect of some Familiar Things. By W. M. Williams.

No. 80. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work By Grant Allen. (Double number).

No. 81. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two Essays by J. Allanson Picton.

No. 82. Illusions of the Senses: and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 83. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six Essays. By Sedley Taylor, M.A.

No. 84. Studies of Animated Nature. Four Essays on Natural History. By W. S. Dallas, F.L.S.

No. 85. The Essential Nature of Religion. By J. Allanson Picton.

No. 86. The Unseen Universe, and the Philosophy of the Pure Sciences. By Prof. Wm. Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 87. The Morphine Habit. By Dr. B. Ball, of the Paris Faculty of Medicine.

No. 88. Science and Crime and other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

No. 89. The Genesis of Science. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 90. Notes on Earthquakes: with Fourteen Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 91. The Rise of Universities. By S. S. Laurie, LL.D. (Double number).

No. 92. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the Action of Earth Worms. By Charles Darwin, LL.D. F.R.S. (Double number).

No. 93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. By J. Mount Bleyer, M.D. (Special number).

No. 94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 95. The Diseases of Personality. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

No. 96. A Half-Century of Science. By Prof. Thomas H. Huxley, and Grant Allen.

No. 97. The Pleasures of Life. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart.

No. 98. Cosmic Emotion: Also the Teachings of Science. By William Kingdon Clifford. (Special number).

No. 99. Nature Studies. By Prof. F. R. Eaton Lowe; Dr. Robert Brown, F.L.S.; Geo. G. Chisholm, F.R.G.S., and James Dallas, F.L.S.

No. 100. Science and Poetry, with other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

No. 101. Æsthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. By Jas. Sully and Geo. Croom Robertson.

No. 102. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-operation. By William Nelson Black.

No. 103. The Coming Slavery; The Sins of Legislators; The Great Political Superstition. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 104. Tropical Africa. By Henry Drummond, F.R.S.

No. 105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. By Ernst Haeckel, of the University of Jena. With a Prefatory Note by Prof. Huxley.

No. 106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. By Grant Allen.

No. 107. Ultimate Finance. A True Theory of Wealth. By William Nelson Black.

No. 108. English, Past and Present. Part. I. By Richard Chenevix Trench, (Double number).

No. 109. English, Past and Present. Part II. By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. By Edward Clodd. (Double number).

Single Nos. 15 cents; Double Nos. 30 cents.
Nos. 1 to 111 inclusive, cloth, plain edges—separately or together—10 vols., $2 per vol
Also same in cloth, extra, red edges, gold back—in sets only—13 vols., $1.75 per vol.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York

The Agnostic Annual
FOR 1890.
Edited by CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS.

Agnosticism and Immortality.....Samuel Laing.
A Sonnet.....Joseph Ellis.
Who Was Moses?..H. J. Hardwicke, M.D., F.R.C.S.
The Comfort of Agnosticism.....E. Lynn Linton.
Are Miracles Credible?...Constance C. W. Naden.
The Contest Between Agnosticism and Theology, John Wilson, M.A.
Above: A Poem.....W. Stewart Ross.
The Evolution of the Agnostic Idea, R. Bithell, B.Sc., Ph.D.
The New Fatalism.....B. Russell.
Descartes's Proof of the Existence of a God, F. J. Gould.
A Poem.....W. B. McTaggart.
The Free Expression of Opinions..G. F. Underhill.
Fragments.....William Maccall.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

TRY-SQUARE;
OR,
The Church of Practical Religion.
BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

ICHABOD CRANE PAPERS.
Daringly witty and inexpressibly laughable onslaughts on Christianity.
Price, 10 cents.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.

It contains. besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Sixteen pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $2. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, 3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only 1.50.
SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.
SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.
HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.
SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.
HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

DR. FELLOWS
STARR OF HOPE
Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.
VINELAND, N.J.

Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

The Liberty of Printing, and Reply.
By HURLBUT and WAKEMAN.
Price, 10 cents.

New Publications.

Unless otherwise specified, all publications noticed here can be had of THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, at the prices named.

Mr. David Overmeyer's speech at Topeka, Kan., on Labor day (September 2d), has been put in pamphlet form, and can be had of M. Harman, Valley Falls, Kan., for 10 cents.

"Optimism, or the Bright Side of Life," is what a writer under the nom de plume of "Aurelius" calls a 25-cent book published by the Bright Side Publishing Co. at 362 West Madison street, Chicago. The book is filled with sermonic platitudes of the Theistic order, and is valueless for all practical purposes.

"Hypnotism: Its History and Present Development," is number 113 of the Humboldt Library (price. 30 cents). The book is written by Frederik Bjornstrom, M.D., and translated from the Swedish by Baron Nils Posse, director of the Boston School of Gymnastics. The translation is excellently well performed, and all interested in the subject of hypnotism will find the book a good one to assimilate.

Walter Hague has solved the mysteries of life and death, and found that "Death Ends All." Our old friend Roman Staley, 315 Wood street, Pittsburgh, Pa., has printed the finding in a little pamphlet, which ought to sell for 10 cents. Materialists will like the book—though they must be a little cautious in accepting all of Mr. Hague's dicta—and Spiritualists will dispute his conclusions from the facts given.

The Agnostic Annual for 1890, the full contents of which will be found in the advertisment elsewhere, is a good number, the papers therein being much above the average magazine collection of writers. They are of that character which brings them under the head of standard literature in Agnostic thought, and students in Agnosticism and material philosophy will gather new ideas in perusing them. Price, 25 cents.

Dentists will be interested in Dr. M. L. Rhein's consideration of chloride of methyl as a medicament with which to relieve the pain of patients undergoing dental operations. Dr. Rhein givs his experience with it, and concludes that it is a valuable addition to the dentist's therapeutic armamentarium. Dr. Rhein's address is 104 East Fifty-eighth street, this city, where he practices dentistry in partnership with C. L. Andrews, the son of Stephen Pearl Andrews.

Among the Agnostic writers of England F. J. Gould's name stands high on the list. He has now contributed to the fourth number of Watts & Co.'s "Stepping Stones to Agnosticism" (a series of tracts) a paper called "The Immortal Bible." It is a review of the history of the books of the Old and New Testament, setting forth the facts known about them, and giving the probabilities as to the date of their production. It is a useful little pamphlet, though Mr. Gould has erred in assigning to the gospels a probable earlier date than most competent scholars assign them. The price of the pamphlet is 10 cents.

Accompanying a little red-covered book entitled, "Am I Jew or Christian?" published by G. H. Coffin, 49 John street, is a circular addressed to editors saying, "As the work is intended to correct an error vital to all readers of the English Bible, and is a proof of the divinity of Christ, I think you would be pleased to giv publicity to the fact of the existence of such a work." We should, indeed, hail such a work as that as worthy of extended notice. But when we find that the book is only another attempt to retranslate the Bible, and at the most is only based on verbal quibbles, we cannot think that it is all the author's fancy paints it, or worthy of much space in refutation. Price, 25 cents.

Nims & Knight, of Troy, hav published a work called, "Aryan Sun-Myths the Origin of Religions," by an anonymous writer, vouched for by Charles Morris, of Boston, who furnishes an introduction. The book is just what its title indicates, and is the best work of its size yet published on the subject. The Christian religion is found to be no exception, and the authorities cited show very conclusivly that pagan sun-worship is in a large degree responsible for many rites now found in the various religions of the world. Indeed, the very backbone of Christianity—the crucified savior—is found in Aryan mythology. The book adds considerable authority to the sun-myth theory, and will be greatly valued by the holders of that theory. Price, $1.25.

Caleb S. Weeks, the poet of the Liberal Club, has given to the world a new book entitled, "Human Life; or, The Course of Time, as Seen in the Open Light." Dr. Weeks puts this work before the world "because he believes that a great poem, of a former generation, calls for a truer presentation of its subject, and that the rhythmical style of that poem is most appropriate for that purpose." His chief purpose is "to present the order of human history—to show the formativ laws in their relation to our race, and how they unfold humanity into true life and happiness." The poetry reads smoothly, is felicitously strung together, and has a good moral on about every page. The sentiment is radical. Price of the book, $1.25.

Mr. John Campbell, founder of the "vitapathic system," has sent us a book on "Life: Physical and Spiritual," in which he expounds and advertises his "system," and deals with Spiritualism and its phenomena, denying the last and ascribing to "Vita" all the performances usually credited to spirits. This explanation of materialization and other phenomena, however, is a little less satisfactory than the old style, and his book adds nothing to the knowledge of the world. "Vitapathy" appears to be a "cure all" for physical diseases, and the book is largely an advertisment of what most people will regard as a "system" about as unsubstantial as Christian faith cure. The price of the book is $1, and it is sold by Mr. Campbell at Fairmount, O.

The papers by Henry Wace, Professor Huxley, W. C. Magee (bishop of Peterborough), W. H. Mallock, and Mrs. Humphrey Ward on "Agnosticism," which hav appeared during the past year in the Nineteenth Century hav been collected by the Humboldt Publishing Co., and given to the American public as number 114 of that Library (price, 30 cents). The book is not quite complete in detail, as Frederic Harrison's paper on "The Future of Agnosticism," transferred from the Fortnightly Review to THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 20th, is omitted, though Professor Huxley's reply is printed. There was, too, no particular call to include Mallock and Mrs. Ward in the collection, but their contributions to the controversy are interesting, from a Jesuitical and "liberal Christian" standpoint, and the book will, altogether, afford much polemical instruction, and Freethinkers generally will desire to add it to their libraries.

"The New Cagliostro" is an open letter to Madam Blavatsky by G. W. Foote, editor of the London Freethinker. It deals with the madam's Theosophical notions, her absurd historical and scientific statements, and what Mr. Foote evidently thinks are her impositions by trickery upon the public. Opposers of Theosophy will like the little pamphlet, which may be obtained for 40 cents of the Progressiv Publishing Co., 28 Stonecutter street, E.C., London. Mr. Foote has also written a reply to Mrs. Besant's pamphlet on Theosophy in which he compares that lady's present mental position with the one she occupied when a Freethinker and Atheist. The pamphlet is bright and sharp, but as Mrs. Besant did not send us her pamphlet we can not judge impartially of Mr. Foote's. We think, though, that Mr. Foote occupies the more impregnable and rational position. Like the other, this may be had at 28 Stonecutter street, and for the same price.

"The Spirit of the Matterhorn," is the marquis of Queensberry's poetical attempt to show what he believes about God, and to convince the public that the Scottish peers did him a great injustice when depriving him of his seat among them because of the allegation that he had denied the existence of God, and held as a negation all that his brother peers regarded as most sacred. Certainly, from the preface to the poem one would never mistrust that, technically, the marquis is an Atheist, though Christians would so term him, as his conception of "God"—which he calls the Inscrutable—differs from theirs. The marquis has a different definition of the soul, also, from orthodox folks, and we think that the Calvinistic peers of Scotland would prefer to grapple with pure Atheism and Materialism rather than with the mystical conceptions the marquis now sets forth. The book is published by Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's court, Fleet street, London, for about 50 cents.

The Popular Science Monthly for this month is an entertaining as well as useful number. The "Art of Cooking" is discussed by Mr. Edward Atkinson, who also describes and illustrates a cooker and oven which he has invented, in which, along with other marked advantages, the ordinary waste in the preparation of food is avoided. In "The Decadence of Farming," Mr. Joel Benton accepts the fact as a serious one, and seeks for the cause in inequitable taxation. Prof. W. Le Conte Stevens givs an account of experiments by Prof. Le Conte, Lord Rayleigh, and himself, upon "Sensitiv Flames and Sound-Shadows," which, resulting in the production of diffraction phenomena, go to establish the analogy between the phenomena of sound and light. Col. Garrick Mallery's address, delivered at the American Association, of which the first part is given, on "Israelite and Indian," relates to the existence of similarities in beliefs and customs at corresponding stages in their civilization between these two peoples. The other articles are equally good. 50 cents a number, $5 a year.

An excellent little publication is the "Freidenker Almanack" for 1890, published by the Freidenker Publishing Co., Milwaukee. It has evidently been the aim of its editor to satisfy the palate of everybody, and it must be admitted he has succeeded admirably; then besides an excellent calendar, the most noteworthy feature of which is a rubric for memorable events, the almanac contains several good poems, among which we must mention Hr. Andriessen's "Dedication" and E. A. Zündt's "Giordano Bruno." J. Lucas favors us with a short article on "The Ideal and Reality;" Schünemann-Pott has a philosophical paper on "Truth," and the reader of "Nationalistic" tendencies is served with a critical exposition of Bellamy's "Future Dream." Yet the palm for prose-writing we must award to Messrs. H. H. Fisk and C. Herman-Boppe on their respectiv papers on the "Dance of the Dead" and the "Declaration of Human Rights." Numerous selections from the writings of eminent poets and philosophers are distributed through the volume, and on the whole we can but recommend the almanac to the attention of our German-speaking friends. 120 pp; price, 25 cents.

Of William Hart's "Candle from Under the Bushel," published by the Truth Seeker Company (price 50 cents), Mrs. Slenker writes: "If anyone can read two pages of Mr. Hart's book bearing the above title and still believe in the old Jew Bible and its multifarious God, their reason must be non est indeed. It contains 1,306 questions all tending to show the absurdity, ridiculousness, and nonsense of the 'Holy Queer,' and the dogmas and creeds growing out of a belief in its divine origin. It is a book that will furnish texts for thousands of arguments with pious believers—texts they will find it impossible to reconcile with reason, science, or common sense. It utterly destroys the power of omniscience and omnipresence in the Bible deity and shows from inward evidence the impossibility of its author's all powerfulness, and indeed it makes him out to be pueril, childish, foolish, wicked, cruel, malicious, and revengeful. He asks: 'If a man is mortal (Job iv, 17), how can he be immortal (2 Tim. i, 10)? God having sons, who was his wife? or were his children illegitimate? Under the command to love your enemies and pray for them (Matt. v, 44), must you not love the devil and pray for him? A bastard shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord, even to his tenth generation (Deut. xxiii, 2). Why do you not observe this law? And the women kneaded their dough, to make cakes to the queen of heaven (Jer. vii, 18). Was this queen of heaven the wife and companion of the Lord God? As an ear-ring of gold and an ornament of fine gold, so is a wise reprover upon an obedient ear (Prov. xxv, 12). I hav put a jewel on thy forehead and ear-rings in thine ear (Ezek. xvi, 11–12)' Are not the pleasures of dress here commended? You will find the book full of meat, and most excellent for reference in debating theological absurdities."

Mr. Green says in his magazine: "One hundred thousand copies of 'The Candle from Under the Bushel' book ought to be circulated among the people. It is an orthodox eye-opener. Nothing like it has appeared for a long time. Here is Mr. Hart's 'Preface' in full: 'Search the scriptures' was a command of Christ. The writer, while a sincere church-member, obeyed the command by making the 'search,' which 'search' led to the propounding of these questions. The God herein alluded to, under his various appellations, is none other than the Jewish, or Christian's, triune God, Father, Son, and Ghost. We shall hav more to say of this most valuable work in the December Magazine. In the mean time we ask each of our readers to send to this office for a copy."

A book that we can safely call good, is one with the title, "We are all Here," by Mrs. J. M. Kellogg, of Ensenada, Lower California, which has safely arrived at this office, together with a letter urging us to copy its contents entire. It is a Freethought book, and the author's name is signed to it—"D. M. Bennett through our medium, Mrs. J. M. Kellogg." It is a book, like all of Mr. Bennett's, that ought to be widely circulated—and, as a matter of fact, it has been. That it came from Mr. Bennett's pen there is no doubt, though he is in the grave. We recognize Mr. Bennett's style, his peculiarities of expression, his copious citation of facts and general line of argument—with all of which we are thoroughly familiar. In fact, the present Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER saw Mr. Bennett write a good share of the book under consideration, and he also read the proof, locked it up in the forms of THE TRUTH SEEKER, made it into pamphlet pages, and sent it to the electrotypers. The title-page then read, "Truth Seeker Tract No. 32. The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. By D. M. Bennett. (Delivered before the New York Liberal Club, July 23, 1875.)" The only difference between the two versions is that since his advent into the other life Mr. Bennett has learned eight lines of poetry and changed his sentiments somewhat in regard to Spiritualism. He seems to know now what then he only believed and hoped for. When writing this lecture he said:

"Our Spiritualistic friends believe our former companions who hav departed from our sight are able to return to us, to see us, and hold communication with us by means of natural laws and forces. Thousands of persons, and among them some of the most brilliant minds of the age, hav been paying great attention to this subject, and hav become fully satisfied that all human beings hav a continued, conscious, individual existence. Men of science hav devoted years of patient, earnest investigation to this subject, and feel as thoroughly convinced that we hav a spiritual existence as that we hav a physical. Our own personal opportunities for investigation in this direction hav not been extensiv, but we are free to admit that we hav received proofs of an intelligence, disconnected with physical bodies, which we cannot ignore, and until some more rational theory explaining this class of phenomena is advanced, we are compelled to believe in a continued existence after death. We would not discourage those from investigating the proofs of a future life and the various forms of spirit phenomena, who feel an inclination to do so, but we believe a great waste of time, labor, and treasure has been and is being made in that direction. Our motto is, One world at a time. While we are in this state of existence, our duties are here. Here is ample scope and need for all our efforts, all our talents, and all our aspirations."

Now he writes, "through our medium, Mrs. J. M. Kellogg:"

"Our Spiritualistic friends know their former companions and friends who hav departed from their sight, are able and do communicate with them by means of natural laws, forces, and conditions. Thousands of persons, and especially the most brilliant minds of all ages, hav given great study and attention to the subject of spirit return, and communication with mortals; that all human beings hav a continued conscious, individual existence they are fully satisfied. This spiritual unfoldment and communion that is being established between mortals and immortals of angelic spheres, is an aristocracy of intellect, knowledge, and education. While all the isms of the world are founded upon spirit visitation and communication, yet, the self-same advocates deny the truth we put forth confirming the same. Such inconsistency is only calculated to deceive and should be dethroned. To better conditions it should be made clear to the conception of all, that we liv in the presence of all who reside in the vicinity with ourselvs, and they see, and know all we do, and we should be governed accordingly."

There is, too, another thing he said on the subject which he does not repeat "through our medium, Mrs. J. M. Kellogg." We subjoin it for the information of those who may not recollect it:

"We by no means accept all the claims set forth by those styling themselvs spiritual mediums. A large proportion—perhaps nineteen twentieths of them—are charlatans and frauds, wholly unworthy our confidence."

Far be it from us to say that the existence of Mrs. Kellogg's book proves the truth of this remark by Mr. Bennett; but some people will undoubtedly hold that it at least corroborates his opinion. To such we hav no objections to urge. But we cannot comply with Mrs. Kellogg's request (per spirit John Brown, Sen.) to copy her book entire, as all the good portions of it hav previously appeared in these columns. The price of "We Are All Here" is not given, but we will sell the original lecture, which is a great deal better, for 10 cents, and can recommend it highly.

Prof. Loisette's

MEMORY

DISCOVERY AND TRAINING METHOD.

In spite of adulterated imitations which miss the theory, and practical results of the Original, in spite of the grossest misrepresentations by envious would-be competitors, and in spite of "base attempts to rob" him of the fruit of his labors (all of which demonstrate the incomparable superiority and popularity of his teaching), Prof. Loisette's Art of Never Forgetting is recognized to-day in both Hemispheres as marking an Epoch in Memory Culture. His Prospectus (sent post free) givs opinions of people in all parts of the globe who hav actually studied his System by correspondence, showing that his System is used only while being studied, not afterwards; that any book can be learned in a single reading, mind-wandering cured, etc., For Prospectus, Terms, and Testimonials, address

PROF. A. LOISETTE'S, 237 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.

GIRARD'S WILL AND Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND, LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

THE

Bible of Nature,

OR, THE

Principles of Secularism.

A CONTRIBUTION to the RELIGION of the FUTURE.

BY PROF. FELIX L. OSWALD,

Author of "The Secret of the East, or the Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline," "Physical Education, or the Health-Laws of Nature," "Household Remedies," "The Poison Problem, or the Cause and the Cure of Intemperance," etc., etc.

Felix L. Oswald is a well-known and vigorous writer on scientific and social subjects.—[Cin. Com. Gazette.

Cloth, 12mo, 240pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS

OF

HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in the Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1 00.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

POINTERS:

A POCKET CYCLOPEDIA,

CONTAINING

Tables, Rules, Practical Hints, and Historical Sketches, for Farmers, Mechanics, Machinists, Merchants, Housekeepers, and the Public Generally, with

Numerous Maps, Illustrations, and Diagrams

Illustrating some of the more Important Comparativ Statistics of the World.

More Information for Less Money than has ever been offered.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

For $50 worth of "Cold Facts" boiled down in a Nutshell. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to aequire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Expos tion of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology" Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By D. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL.
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR HOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place. New York.

AN HOUR WITH THE DEVIL.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Price, - - - 10 cents

THE

UNIVERSE ANALYZED

By JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,

Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.

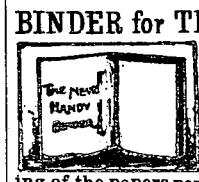
The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productiv of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,



OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.

Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Argument by R. G. Ingersoll

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

At Morristown, New Jersey.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES:

A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, - 25 cents.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday afternoon in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 3 o'clock.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Elizur Wright Secular Union

Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month, at Independent Church, at 10.30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club

Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

The Newark Liberal League

Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st., Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

DIAMONDS.

Unprecedented offer. No other house so fair In order to giv my Liberal friends throughout the United States an opportunity to examin, test, and compare my goods and prices with those of other diamond merchants, I will sell any piece of Diamond Jewelry, accompanied by contract that cash in full will be refunded any time within one year from date of purchasing if goods are not entirely satisfactory. No other dealer will do it. None will sell as cheap. Carrying a large stock, being an expert, close buyer, and doing business on smallest possible expense, you will positivly save twenty to thirty per cent by purchasing of me. Diamond Pins and Eardrops, worth $600, for $400; Pins, Rings, Eardrops, Studs, Hair Ornaments, Pendants, worth $300, for $200; do., worth $200, for $140; do., worth $150, for $110; do., worth $100, for $70; do., worth $80, for $60; do., worth $60, for $45; do., worth $40, for $30; do., worth $30, for $22; do., worth $20, for $15. You can wear these goods daily for one year. It will not cost you a cent. If in the mean time you are not satisfied that the goods are better and cheaper than sold elsewhere return and get your cash in full.

Selections sent to responsible parties on approval; to any banking-house or C.O.D., privilege of examination.

The "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

sixteen jewels, finely adjusted to heat and cold, patent regulator, Breguet hair-spring, beautiful double-paneled dial, and all modern improvements Perfect, and no watch will compete with it! In silverine case, $19; in four-ounce coin silver case, $23.50; five-ounce, $25; six ounce, $27. In open face, best filled gold case, $27; hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV., $35. In fourteen carat solid gold, $50 to $150. Sent prepaid, and cash refunded if not satisfactory.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.
Established 1857.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 160 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, Eng.

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 833pp., silk cloth. $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

News of the Week.

THE Nationalist Club of Boston will work to secure municipal administration of the street railways there.

GOVERNOR FIFER of Illinois on the 23d listened to a petition for the pardon of Anarchist Neebe, but has not given his decision.

JEFFERSON DAVIS is better.

HARRIET BEECHER STOWE has become demented.

THERE is a dispute in Montana over the validity of the election of the legislature.

MORMONS and gentiles continue to contend over the government of Salt Lake City.

THE Rev. Martin Horensen, of Council Bluffs, Ia., committed suicide on the 23d.

THE evidence against Burke, Coughlin, and Beggs in the Cronin trial strengthens.

THE movement in England to reconstruct or abolish the House of Lords is growing.

A RAILWAY accident at Pittsburgh, Pa., on the 18th, injured eight persons, some fatally.

IN Germany each election exhibits a gain in the Socialistic—called Social Democratic—party.

THE first cemetery in Lima, Peru, not under control of the Catholic church, has been opened.

THE czar's unintermittent fear of assassination has so shattered his nerves that for days together he is not responsible for his actions.

IT is reported that Africans hav massacred Dr. Peters, the German explorer, and all his men but two.

PENNSYLVANIA wants $3,000,000 from the national government in compensation for losses by rebel invasion during the war.

AT Honolulu on the 16th Aeronant Van Tassel in descending from his balloon with a parachute landed in the water, and was eaten by sharks.

PREMIER CRISPI announces that since his accession to power there hav been organized in Italy 4 colleges, 14 lyceums, 44 gymnasiums, and 3,780 elementary schools.

THE Knights of Labor in their convention did not pledge coöperation with the Federation of Labor in bringing about the eight-hour workday, as heartily as was wished.

IT was rumored that the recent death of Cardinal Schraffino, a probable candidate for the papal chair, who was supposed to hav Liberal tendencies, was caused by poison, but the church denies it.

THE church will probably excommunicate the priest that said mass over the body of Theresa Kelly, who was excluded from Calvary cemetery for associating with Dr. McGlynn and his Anti-poverty Society.

CARDINAL GIBBONS suggests that "the remedy for the defects of our educational system would be supplied if the denominational system, such as now obtains in Canada, were applied to our public schools."

THERE is some indignation at the aldermen of Long Island City, N. Y., voting to the Catholic organization that owns Calvary cemetery the gift of a large street that now runs through it, the closing up of which will seriously incommode the public.

POLICE SERGEANT TIMS upon gaining notoriety by his Liberal funeral address was interviewed by a reporter, and expressed Socialistic views. His superiors in the police proceeded to investigate his beliefs, saying "it would not do to tolerate Socialism in the police force," and "his oath of office does not permit him to entertain views and advocate principles not in accord with law and order." At his examination he retracted or denied his Socialistic utterances.

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

SAMSON GETTETH MASHED.

And Samson went down to Timnath, and saw a woman in Timnath of the daughters of the Philistines. And he came up and told his father and his mother, and said, I hav seen a woman in Timnath of the daughters of the Philistines; now, therefore, get her for me to wife.—Judges xiv, 1, 2.

Odds and Ends.

"WELL, how are you getting along in your profession?" "First rate. I began as a policeman, then I got to be night watchman, and now I'm breaking into banks on my own account."—Life.

"BY-O-MY baby—by-o-my——" "Look here, mother," said the baby; "don't sing to me. That keeps me awake. Read the editorial page of the Mail and Express to me if you really want me to go to sleep."—Puck.

WHEN old Columbus with his ships
About America hovered,
Each Indian maid with sprightly grace
Skipped from the surfy bathing-place
And cried, with wonder-stricken face,
"Great heavens! we're discovered."
—Argonaut.

THEY say—we don't know who they are, but whatever they say goes—they say every shot of one of Krupp's newest guns costs $1,500. That is to say, it costs this much at one end of the shot. What it costs at the other end depends on how much the thing it hits is worth and what it will cost to remove the debris.—Washington Post.

HE (reading from a popular American romance): "She gazed at him with sparkling eyes; her lips curled cornerwise into a smile, and her breath came in ragged uneven knickerbockers; she fancied——" She: "Oh, Robert, what nonsense! knickerbockers!" He: "I was trying to improve upon the text, my dear. The book says, 'Her breath came in ragged uneven pants.'"—Pick-Me-Up.

WHERE HE GOES.

The man who, in life's arduous school,
Does all his days observe the Golden Rule,
Must die some time, and then go—where?
Why, there:

While he who lives but to be mean and small,
Who robs and cheats, and lies to one and all,
Where will he go when buried out of sight?
Why, there, and serve him right:

—Shoe Recorder.

—Mt. Desert Herald.

Exactly, see?
Golden Rule man,
Instead of shuffling off this mortal coil at the same time the other fellow does, just let him wait until twelve hours later—until this good old earth has turned half way around on its axis—and he'll go in the same direction as the
But:
Of course he will if he is not wise,
And is not particular when he dies.

"GENTLEMEN," said the quiet citizen, who was attending his first political caucus, "in rising to nominate Mr. Simpson for this office, I wish to say that I know him to be well qualified and in every way worthy. He is not a man of many words, it is true. He is a plain, unassuming American——" And amid wild yells of "Down wid 'im!" "Put 'm out!" "Hang the blag'yard!" the quiet citizen put on his hat, jumped out of the nearest window, and abandoned politics forever.—Chicago Tribune (Rep.).

THERE are thrifty sons of Erin in Newton Highlands. One recently bought a lot of land for $500 and built thereon a two-thousand-dollar house. Then he went to get it insured. "I want a policy for $2,500," said he to the agent. "But the house only cost $2,000," was the reply. "Faith, but I want all my money protected. I'll hav $2,500 insurance or nothing." "Hum!" said the agent, pausing. "I'll tell you what I'll do, though. I'll put $2,000 on the house, and $500 on the land." "Begorra, and you're a gintleman, sir!"—Boston Times.

DISCORD prevails in the African Methodist Episcopal church of Fairview, Cumberland county, N. J. Deacon Moore heard a noise in his hennery a night or two ago. Instinct told him what it meant. Seizing the loose leg of a three cornered stool he marched boldly out. This ex lamation startled the night: "Brer Tappey. I'se amazed. Don't 'pear to me possible dat you, a deacon in de church——" "Why, bress yo' heart, Brer Moo'," broke in the trembling figure that crouched in the henhouse, "I done cum in heah outen de rain——" "Git out niggah, I'se done clean mad (kerwhack!). You, a deacon in de church (whack!), comin' roun' a brudder's hennery (bang). Git out!" Deacon Tappey's face looked like a gerrymandered assembly district map when Deacon Moore got through with him. There is now a division in the church.—Philadelphia Record.

SUBLIME the thought, to "mortal man,"
As taught by ancient fable,
Of heaven's glorious singing band
Led by the angel Gabriel.

How bright to think the souls of men
Will soar in everlasting space,
How dear to hope a syren glen
Is waiting in that wondrous place.

But tell us of the souls of men
What are they, mind or matter?
What is there of this clayey den
That we should liv hereafter?

If matter, then it is of earth,
And cannot for an instant leave;
If not, then 'tis of no great worth
As it must to all nothing cleave.

Are not all men in darkness left
As to the powers this part contains?
And are our hearts not sad bereft
When searching where this soul remains?

Some say 'tis breath, some say 'tis mind,
And others fancy various things,
But each in turn produces kind.
Now what produces angel's wings?

Why should we thus in sorrow dwell
Why giv our hearts to thoughts of evil?
Discard the teachings of a hell.
Did God create this horrid devil?

If soul is thought, and mind, or air,
Then light must be those beauteous wings
On which they soar to glories fair,
And tell us of these heavenly things.
—A. H. McClure in Infidel Monthly.

Gems of Thought.

WHATEVER else a man may lack, if he has faith, he will be saved; the greatest sin, on the other band, being what theologians call free thought. Experience proves that it is on these and such-like things that the theological mind tends to concentrate itself. Yet all this pious conduct is not only socially useless, but some of it is most injurious. —John Wilson, M.A.

TRANSLATED into plain speech, the foundation-principle of our [present Christian] system of ethics is this: that all natural things, especially our natural instincts, are essentially evil, and that salvation depends upon mysterious, anti-natural, and even supernatural remedies.—Prof. Felix L. Oswald.

LOVE, faithfulness, gratitude, the sense of duty, piety, conscientiousness, friendship, and love of one's neighbor, compassion and self-abnegation, the feeling of right and wrong, nay even pride, jealousy, hatred, craftiness, treachery, vindictiveness, and inquisitiveness are as well to be found among animals as premeditation, sagacity, the highest degree of cuuning, foresight, thought for the future, and so on; nay, the animal shares with man even the capacity for progress which is thought to belong to man only. It knows and practices even the institutes or principles of political and social life, of slavery and precedence, of domestic and rural economy, of education, nursing of the sick and medicin; it puts up the most wonderful fabrics in the shape of houses, caves, nests, roads, and bridges; animals hold even meetings and joint deliberations, and initiate trials of criminals and culprits; they consult on definit plans and projects by the aid of a well-developed language, consisting of sounds, signs, and gestures; they fully remember the past; they are taught by experience and are, in a word, as much and even more highly endowed beings than most men know or even dream of.—Buchner in Force and Matter.

THE capacities of animals differ from the human race only in degree, not in kind. Voltaire justly remarks that animals possess sensation, conception, memory, and on the other hand desire and motion, even as we; and yet that nobody dreams of ascribing to them an immaterial soul. Why should we, therefore, require it, because we enjoy an insignificant increase of those faculties and energies? True, this Something superadded to man is not as insignificant as Voltaire, rhetorically belittling it, would hav us suppose; on the contrary, it is enormous, but nevertheless only an increase of something—not something else.—Strauss.

IT is wrong, always, everywhere, and for anyone, to believe anything upon insufficient evidence.—Wm. Kingdon Clifford.

INFIDELITY says to the whole world: It is dangerous not to think. It is dangerous not to be honest. It is dangerous not to investigate. It is dangerous not to follow where your reason leads. —Ingersoll.

IN the ordinary affairs of life, a person bearing testimony or acting as a witness is expected to be enlightened, sensible, and disinterested. In religion, those on the word of whom we are required to believe incredible things are pious ignoramuses and fanatical prophets.—Voltaire.

OF the three fathers who contributed most to the growth of the canon, Irenaeus was credulous and blundering; Tertullian passionate and one-sided; and Clement of Alexandria, imbued with the treasures of Greek wisdom, was mainly occupied with ecclesiastical ethics. Their assertions show both ignorance and exaggeration.—Professor Davidson.

READ the book of Revelation, and you will agree with me that nothing that ever emanated from a madhouse can more than equal it for incoherence. Most of the writings of the early fathers are of the same kind.—Ingersoll.

THE only remedy for superstition is knowledge. Nothing else can wipe out that plague-spot of the human mind. Without it, the leper remains unwashed, and the slave unfreed. It is to a knowledge of the laws and relations of things, that European civilization is owing; but it is precisely this in which Spain has always been deficient. And until that deficiency is remedied, until science, with her bold and inquisitiv spirit, has established her right to investigate all subjects, after her own fashion, and according to her own method, we may be assured that, in Spain, neither literature, nor universities, nor legislators, nor reformers of any kind, will ever be able to rescue the people from that helpless and benighted condition into which the course of affairs has plunged them.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

IN Spain the priests, the highwaymen, the bishops, and thieves, are equally true believers, The man who takes your purse on the highway. and the priest who forgivs the robber, are alike orthodox.—Ingersoll.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 49. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, December 7, 1889. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

AN UNWELCOME PILGRIMAGE.

LEO XIII.—Thou canst not say I did it: never shake thy gory locks at me!

Notes and Clippings.

THE French Canadians claim that New England will some day be called "New France."

IT is said that the Australian legislature has passed a law taxing all married couples living with their mothers-in-law—$900 if residing with the husband's mother-in-law, and $120 if with the wife's.

THE convent of Trappists at Mont des Cats, near Lille, France, has been suppressed by the government, and those of its inmates who are aliens hav been ordered to leave the country within twenty-four hours

NELSON ROSS, of Montezuma, Onondaga county, "sinned against the Lord." Then, in the manner of certain religious fanatics, he proceeded to expiate his fault by the crime of arson. When he swore that on another occasion he had atoned for a crime by a similar crime, the sheriff's jury declared him a lunatic.

THE spirit of revolt from overbearing church autocracy has pervaded some of the Episcopalian congregations in Canada. One of them, at Ottawa, has voted that the rector's salary shall not exceed $1 in lieu of $1,500, because the appointed man is not persona grata. In another, at Toronto, and for the same reason, Sir William Ritchie, the chief justice of the place, headed a procession out of church and locked all the doors from the outside in retiring, thus making prisoners the parson and his rare supporters, who had to wait quite a while to regain their freedom.

THE Naples correspondent of the London daily News writes: "Signor Mariotti, state secretary to the minister of public instruction, has found a document proving that Giordano Bruno was stripped naked, bound to a pole, and burnt alive, and that he bore his martyrdom with great fortitude. The document is to be published officially."

SENATOR BLAIR, of New Hampshire, made an address on his Educational bill before the Republican Club of this city a few days ago. He incidentally touched on every subject from the tariff to log school-houses and from ancient history to the late civil war. In concluding he said: "I hav been a crank on this thing for ten years. We hav never been able to rescue the bill from the jaws of Democratic committees, but we are bound to put it through this time."

FROM the report of the English Bible Society, Annie Besant learns, as to Spain, that "the third and last enemy of the society's work is the now activ and very extended opposition to Christianity in any shape, and, of course, to the Christian book. Irony and sarcasm and flippant jest are doing far more disastrous work among the Spaniards to-day than priestly excommunications; and the ribald profanities of Tom Paine and Ingersoll are eagerly read all over the country." Says Mrs. Besant: "We congratulate our Spanish co-workers on the results they are evidently obtaining in Spain. 'Ribald profanities' is not an attractiv phrase; but no one will be the worse for reading the solid and simple arguments of Thomas Paine, or the racy periods of the American colonel."

A SENSATION was created at the regular weekly meeting of the Methodist Preachers' Association in Philadelphia by a complaint made by Rev. Dr. Roche, of Brooklyn, that Methodism is declining in New York city and Brooklyn. "Try as we may," said he, "and use every endeavor, it is impossible to get a congregation. This state of affairs is not the fault of the ministers engaged in the work, for I hav filled my pulpit with the most able preachers, and the body of the church has not been half filled. There is no use trying—employ every device, you cannot secure a congregation."

THE Republican triumphs at the recent French elections hav greatly disgusted the Catholic clergy, who fought for the reactionist candidates. The abbot of the monastery of Solesmes writes to the Univers, admitting that the clericals hav had a bad beating, but calling on them to resist the torrent of impiety which has been let loose over the land He deplores that Gambetta and his followers hav carried out the program of 1789. The rights of God hav been trampled upon by the Rights of Man. The deity has been hunted from civil society. His name was never uttered during the progress of the great Exhibition, and he is ignored by the president and his ministers. In short, there is the devil to pay, and nothing to pay him with. The poor abbot winds up by calling upon the clergy to bear their persecution like the martyrs of old, overlooking the rather important fact, says the London Freethinker, that their "persecution" only consists in being prevented from interfering with other people's business.

A JEW has been sent to jail in Oakland, Cal., for refusing to remove his hat when taking an oath in court. He said that his religion forbade him to remove his hat, for according to the religion of the orthodox Jew it would be sacrilege for him to approach his God except with covered head. The word of God is, "You shall be unto me a kingdom of priests," and by that is meant that all Jews shall be pure and priestly, and observe the forms and doctrins of their religion. A Jewish rabbi of San Francisco further explained the matter. The high priest in Jerusalem, he said, "laid down and prescribed the habit and clothing of priests and of all orthodox Jews, and one of the prominent features of the prescribed form was that no one should approach his God, address him, or take an oath with uncovered head. That was one of the great distinctions made between his relations with his God and with human beings. No sincere and devout orthodox Jew will take an oath with uncovered head, and I should hav little faith in the oath of one who would do so. This is not only a matter of religion, but it is also an old oriental custom, which is a matter of common usage in the orient to-day."

Communications.

Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?

CHAPTER IX

TESTIMONY OF LAMON'S WITNESSES.—CONCLUDED.

Dr. C. H. Ray—Wm. H. Hannah, Esq.—Jas. W. Keys—Hon. Jesse W. Fell—Col. John G. Nicolay—Hon. David Davis—Mrs. Mary Lincoln.

Seven of Lamon's witnesses—Ray, Hannah, Keys, Fell, Nicolay, Davis, and Mrs. Lincoln—remain to testify. The testimony of these witnesses will now be presented.

Dr. C. H. Ray.

Dr. Ray, editor of the Chicago Tribune, a prominent figure in Illinois politics thirty years ago, and a personal friend and admirer of Lincoln, testifies as follows:

You knew Mr. Lincoln far better than I did, though I knew him well; and you hav served up his leading characteristics in a way that I should despair of doing, if I should try. I hav only one thing to ask: that you do not giv Calvinistic theology a chance to claim him as one of its saints and martyrs. He went to the Old School Church; but, in spite of that outward assent to the horrible dogmas of the sect, I hav reason from himself to know that his "vital purity," if that means belief in the impossible, was of a negativ sort (Lamon's Life of Lincoln, pp. 489, 490).

Dr. Ray states that Lincoln held substantially the same theological opinions as those held by Theodore Parker.

William H. Hannah.

A leading member of the Bloomington bar, when Lincoln practiced there, was Wm. H. Hannah. He was an honest, truthful man, and knew Lincoln well. Concerning Lincoln's views on the doctrin of endless punishment, Mr. Hannah says:

Since 1856 Mr. Lincoln told me that he was a kind of immortalist; but that he never could bring himself to believe in eternal punishment; that man lived but a little while here, and that, if eternal punishment were man's doom, he should spend that little life in vigilant and ceaseless preparation by never-ending prayer (Life of Lincoln, p. 489).

James W. Keys.

Mr. Jas. W. Keys, an old and respected citizen of Springfield, who became acquainted with Lincoln soon after his removal there, and who had many conversations with him on the subject of theology, says:

As to the Christian theory, that Christ is God, or equal to the Creator, he said that it had better be taken for granted; for, by the test of reason, we might become Infidels on that subject, for evidence of Christ's divinity came to us in a somewhat doubtful shape (Life of Lincoln, p. 490).

Hon. Jesse W. Fell.

Jesse W. Fell, who died at Bloomington in the spring of 1837, was one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of Illinois. He was secretary of the Republican State Central Committee during the memorable Lincoln-Douglas campaign, and was largely instrumental in bringing Lincoln forward as a candidate for the presidency in 1860. It was for him that Lincoln wrote an autobiographical sketch of his life, which formed the basis of his campaign biographies, the fac-simile of which appears in Lamon's "Life of Lincoln," and in the "Lincoln Memorial Album." Mr. Fell was a Christian of the Unitarian denomination, and there were few men for whom Lincoln had a more profound respect. The following is his testimony:

Though everything relating to the character of this extraordinary personage is of interest, and should be fairly stated to the world, I enter upon the performance of this duty—for so I regard it—with some reluctance, arising from the fact that, in stating my convictions on the subject, I must necessarily place myself in opposition to quite a number who hav written on this topic before me, and whose views largely pre occupy the public mind. This latter fact, whilst contributing to my embarrassment on this subject, is, perhaps, the strongest reason, however, why the truth in this matter should be fully disclosed; and I therefore yield to your request. If there were any traits of character that stood out in bold relief in the person of Mr. Lincoln, they were those of truth and candor. He was utterly incapable of insincerity, or professing views on this or any other subject he did not entertain. Knowing such to be his true character, that insincerity, much more duplicity, were traits wholly foreign to his nature, many of his old friends were not a little surprised at finding, in some of the biographies of this great man, statements concerning his religious opinions so utterly at variance with his known sentiments. True, he may hav changed or modified those sentiments after his removal from among us, though this is hardly reconcilable with the history of the man, and his entire devotion to public matters during his four years' residence at the national capital. It is possible, however, that this may be the proper solution of this conflict of opinions; or, it may be, that, with no intention on the part of anyone to mislead the public mind, those who hav represented him as believing in the popular theological views of the times may hav misapprehended him, as experience shows to be quite common where no special effort has been made to attain critical accuracy on a subject of this nature. This is the more probable from the well-known fact that Mr. Lincoln seldom communicated to anyone his views on this subject. But, be this as it may, I hav no hesitation whatever in saying that, whilst he held many opinions in common with the great mass of Christian believers, he did not believe in what are regarded as the orthodox or evangelical views of Christianity.

On the innate depravity of man, the character and office of the great head of the church, the atonement, the infallibility of the written revelation, the performance of miracles, the nature and design of present and future rewards and punishments (as they are popularly called), and many other subjects, he held opinions utterly at variance with what are usually taught in the church. I should say that his expressed views on these and kindred topics were such as, in the estimation of most believers, would place him entirely outside the Christian pale. Yet, to my mind, such was not the true position, since his principles and practices and the spirit of his whole life were of the very kind we universally agree to call Christian; and I think this conclusion is in no wise affected by the circumstance that he never attached himself to any religious society whatever.

His religious views were eminently practical, and are summed up, as I think, in these two propositions: "the fatherhood of God, and the brotherhood of man." He fully believed in a superintending and overruling providence that guides and controls the operations of the world, but maintained that law and order, and not their violation or suspension, are the appointed means by which this providence is exercised.

I will not attempt any specification of either his belief or disbelief on various religious topics, as derived from conversations with him at different times during a considerable period; but, as conveying a general view of his religious or theological opinions, will state the following facts. Some eight or ten years prior to his death, in conversing with him on this subject, the writer took occasion to refer, in terms of approbation, to the sermons and writings generally of Dr. W. E. Channing; and, finding he was considerably interested in the statement I made of the opinions held by that author, I proposed to present him a copy of Channing's entire works, which I soon after did. Subsequently, the contents of these volumes, together with the writings of Theodore Parker, furnished him, as he informed me, by his friend and law-partner, Mr. Herndon, became naturally the topics of conversation with us; and though far from believing there was an entire harmony of views on his part with either of those authors, yet they were generally much admired and approved by him.

No religious views with him seemed to find any favor, except of the practical and rationalistic order; and if, from my recollections on this subject, I was called upon to designate an author whose views most nearly represented Mr. Lincoln's on this subject, I would say that author was Theodore Parker.

As you hav asked from me a candid statement of my recollections on this topic, I hav thus briefly given them, with the hope that they may be of some service in rightly settling a question about which—as I hav good reason to believe—the public mind has been greatly misled. Not doubting that they will accord, substantially, with your own recollections, and that of his other intimate and confidential friends, and with the popular verdict after this matter shall hav been properly canvassed, I submit them (Life of Lincoln, pp. 490-492).

Mr. Fell's testimony is full and explicit. He affirms that Lincoln rejected nearly all the leading tenets of orthodox Christianity: the inspiration of the scriptures, the divinity of Christ, the innate depravity of man, the atonement, the performance of miracles, and future rewards and punishments. "His expressed views on these and kindred topics," Mr. Fell says, "were such as, in the estimation of most believers, would place him entirely outside the Christian pale." Mr. Fell, himself, was not disposed to withhold from Lincoln the appellation of Christian, but it was only because he stood upon the broad Liberal Christian, or rather non-Christian, platform which permitted him to welcome a Theist, like Parker; a Pantheist, like Emerson; or even an Agnostic, like Ingersoll.

Col. John G. Nicolay.

The next witness introduced by Lamon, is Col. John G. Nicolay, Lincoln's private secretary at the White House. Nicolay's relations with the president were more intimate than those of any other man. To quote the words of Lincoln's partner, "Mr. Lincoln loved him and trusted him." His testimony is among the most important that this controversy has elicited. It proves beyond the shadow of a doubt that all these stories concerning Lincoln's alleged conversion at Washington are false, that he did not change his belief, that he died as he had always lived—an Infidel. In a letter written May 27, 1865, just six weeks after Lincoln's death, Colonel Nicolay says:

Mr. Lincoln did not, to my knowledge, in any way, change his religious ideas, opinions, or beliefs, from the time he left Springfield to the day of his death. I do not know just what they were, never having heard him explain them in detail, but I am very sure he gave no outward indications of his mind having undergone any change in that regard while here (Life of Lincoln, p. 492).

Hon. David Davis.

One of the most important, and in some respects the most eminent witness summoned to testify in regard to this question, is the Hon. David Davis. In moral character he stood above reproach, in intellectual ability, almost without a peer. Every step in his career was marked by unswerving integrity and freedom from prejudice. His rulings and decisions in the lower courts of Illinois, and on the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, commanded universal respect. As a legislator, his love of truth and justice prevented him from being a political partisan. As United States senator and vice-president of the United States, the party that elected him could obtain his support for no measure that he deemed unjust. Referring to his acquaintance with Lincoln, Judge Davis says: "I enjoyed for over twenty years the personal friendship of Mr. Lincoln. We were admitted to the bar about the same time, and traveled for many years what is known in Illinois as the Eighth Judicial Circuit. In 1848, when I first went on the bench, the circuit embraced fourteen counties, and Mr. Lincoln went with the court to every county." A large portion of this time they passed in each other's company. They often rode in the same vehicle, generally ate at the same table, and not infrequently slept together in the same bed. The closest intimacy existed between them as long as Lincoln lived, and when he died, Mr. Davis became his executor. Judge Davis would not intentionally hav misrepresented the opinions of an enemy, much less the opinions of his dear dead friend. Briefly, yet clearly, he defines the theological views of Lincoln:

He had no faith, in the Christian sense of the term—had faith in laws, principles, causes, and effects—philosophically (Life of Lincoln, p. 489).

Speaking of the many stories that had been circulated concerning Lincoln's religious belief, such as the Bateman and Vinton interviews, together with the various pious speeches he is reported to hav made to religious committees and delegations that visited him, such as his reputed speech to the negroes of Baltimore, Judge Davis says:

The idea that Lincoln talked to a stranger about his religion or religious views, or made such speeches, remarks, &c., about it as are published, is to me absurd. I knew the man so well. He was the most reticent, secretiv man I ever saw, or expect to see (Ibid).

Mrs. Mary Lincoln.

But one of Lamon's witnesses remain—the wife of the martyred president. Her testimony ought of itself to put this matter at rest forever. Mrs. Lincoln says:

Mr. Lincoln had no hope, and no faith, in the usual acceptation of those words (Life of Lincoln, p. 489).

In addition to what Colonel Lamon has presented, Mrs. Lincoln also stated the following:

Mr. Lincoln's maxim and philosophy were, "What is to be, will be, and no prayers of ours can arrest the decree." He never joined any church. He was a religious man always, as I think, but was not a technical Christian.

It may be charged that Mrs. Lincoln subsequently repudiated a portion of this testimony. In anticipation of such a charge I will here state a few facts. This testimony was given by Mrs. Lincoln in 1865. When it was given, while her heart was pierced by the pangs of her great grief, her mind was sound. About Jan. 1, 1874, a brief article, purporting to come from her pen, appeared, in which the testimony attributed to her was in part denied. At the time this denial was written, Mrs. Lincoln had been for more than two years insane. The chief cause in dethroning her reason was the death of her universally beloved Tad (Thomas), which occurred on July 15, 1871. Referring to this sad event, Mr. Arnold, one of the principal witnesses on the Christian side of this controversy, says: "From this time Mrs. Lincoln, in the judgment of her most intimate friends, was never entirely responsible for her conduct" (Life of Lincoln, p. 439).

The only effect of this denial on the minds of those acquainted with the circumstances, was to excite a mingled feeling of pity and disgust—pity for this unfortunate woman, and disgust for the contemptible methods of those who would take advantage of her demented condition and make her contradict the honest statements of her rational life.

Before dismissing this witness, I wish to advert to a subject with which many of my readers are familiar. For years, both before and after Lincoln's death, the religious press of this country was continually abusing Mrs. Lincoln. If a ball was held at the White House, she became at once the recipient of unlimited abuse. If Lincoln attended the theater, she was accused of having dragged him there against his will. It was almost uniformly asserted that he would not hav gone to the theater on that fatal night had it not been for her, and in not a few instances it was infamously hinted that she was cognizant of the plot to murder him. But even the Rev. Dr. Miner, who was acquainted with the facts, is willing to vindicate her from these imputations. He says: "It has been said that Mrs. Lincoln urged her husband to go to the theater against his will. This is not true. On the contrary, she tried to persuade him not to go."

Lincoln's biographers hav, for the most part, endeavored to do his wife justice, and hav rebuked the insults showered upon her. Mr. Herndon says: "All that I know ennobles both." Colonel Lamon says: "Almost ever since Mr. Lincoln's death a portion of the press has never tired of heaping brutal reproaches upon his wife and widow, whilst a certain class of his friends thought they were honoring his memory by multiplying outrages and indignities upon her at the very moment when she was broken by want and sorrow, defamed, defenseless, in the hands of thieves, and at the mercy of spies." Mr. Arnold says: "There is nothing in American history so unmanly, so devoid of every chivalric impulse, as the treatment of this poor, broken-hearted woman."

The evidence of Colonel Lamon's ten witnesses has now been presented. This evidence includes, in addition to the testimony of other intimate friends, the testimony of his wife, the testimony of his first law-partner, Hon. John T. Stuart, the testimony of his last law partner, Hon. Wm. H. Herndon, the testimony of his friend and political adviser, Col. James H. Matheny, the testimony of his private secretary, Col. John G. Nicolay, and the testimony of his life-long friend and executor after death, Judge David Davis. No one can read this evidence and then honestly affirm that Abraham Lincoln was a Christian. This is the evidence, the perusal of which so thoroughly enraged that good Christian biographer, Dr. J. G. Holland; this is the evidence, the truthfulness of which the Rev. J. A. Reed, unmindful of the fate of Ananias, attempted to deny.

As a full and just answer to this attempted refutation of Lamon's witnesses by Reed, I quote from the New York World the following:

This individual testimony is clear and overwhelming, without the documentary and other evidence scattered profusely through the rest of the volume. How does Mr. Reed undertake to refute it? In the first place, firstly, he pronounces it a "libel," and in the second place, secondly, he is "amazed to find"—and he says he has found—that the principal witnesses take exception to Mr. Lamon's report of their evidence. This might hav been true of many or all of Mr. Lamon's witnesses without exciting the wonder of a rational man. Few persons, indeed, are willing to endure reproach merely for the truth's sake, and popular opinion in the Republican party of Springfield, Ill., is probably very much against Mr. Lamon. It would, therefore, be quite in the natural order if some of his witnesses who find themselvs unexpectedly in print should succumb to the social and political terrorism of their place and time, and attempt to modify or explain their testimony. They zealously assisted Mr. Herndon in ascertaining the truth, and while they wanted him to tell it in full they were prudently resolved to keep their own names snugly out of sight. But Mr. Reed's statement is not true, and his amazement is entirely simulated. Two only out of the ten witnesses hav gratified him by inditing, at his request, weak and guarded complaints of unfair treatment. These are John T. Stuart, a relativ of the Lincolns and Edwardses, and Jim Matheny, both of Springfield, whom Mr. Lincoln taught his peculiar doctrins, but who may by this time be deacons in Mr. Reed's church. Neither of them helps Mr. Reed's case a particle. Their epistles open, as if by concert, in form and words almost identical. They say they did not write the language attributed to them. The denial is wholly unnecessary, for nobody affirms that they did write it. They talked and Mr. Herndon wrote. His notes were made when the conversation occurred, and probably in their presence. At all events, they are both so conscious of the general accuracy of his report that they do not venture to deny a single word of it, but content themselvs with lamenting that something else, which they did not say, was excluded from it. They both, however, in these very letters repeat emphatically the material part of the statements made by them to Mr. Herndon, namely, that Mr. Lincoln was to their certain knowledge, until a very late period of his life, an "Infidel," and neither of them is able to tell when he ceased to be an Infidel and when he began to be a Christian. And this is all Mr. Reed makes by his re examination of the two persons whom he is pleased to exalt as Mr. Lamon's "principal witnesses." They are but two out of the ten. What of the other eight? They hav no doubt been tried and plied by Mr. Reed and his friends to no purpose; they stand fast by the record. But Mr. Reed is to be shamed neither by their speech nor their silence.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Why Am I An Agnostic?

From the North American Review.

With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls.

The same rules or laws of probability must govern in religious questions as in others. There is no subject—and can be none—concerning which any human being is under any obligation to believe without evidence. Neither is there any intelligent being who can, by any possibility, be flattered by the exercise of ignorant credulity. The man who, without prejudice, reads and understands the Old and New Testaments will cease to be an orthodox Christian. The intelligent man who investigates the religion of any country without fear and without prejudice will not and cannot be a believer.

Most people, after arriving at the conclusion that Jehovah is not God, that the Bible is not an inspired book, and that the Christian religion, like other religions, is the creation of man, usually say: "There must be a supreme being, but Jehovah is not his name, and the Bible is not his word. There must be somewhere an over-ruling providence or power."

This position is just as untenable as the other. He who cannot harmonize the cruelties of the Bible with the goodness of Jehovah, cannot harmonize the cruelties of nature with the goodness and wisdom of a supposed deity. He will find it impossible to account for pestilence and famin, for earthquake and storm, for slavery, for the triumph of the strong over the weak, for the countless victories of injustice. He will find it impossible to account for martyrs—for the burning of the good, the noble, the loving, by the ignorant, the malicious, and the infamous.

How can the Deist satisfactorily account for the sufferings of women and children? In what way will he justify religious persecution—the flame and sword of religious hatred? Why did his God sit idly on his throne and allow his enemies to wet their swords in the blood of his friends? Why did he not answer the prayers of the imprisoned, of the helpless? And when he heard the lash upon the naked back of the slave, why did he not also hear the prayer of the slave? And when children were sold from the breasts of mothers, why was he deaf to the mother's cry?

It seems to me that the man who knows the limitations of the mind, who givs the proper value to human testimony, is necessarily an Agnostic. He givs up the hope of ascertaining first or final causes, of comprehending the supernatural, or of conceiving of an infinit personality. From out the words creator, preserver, and providence, all meaning falls.

The mind of man pursues the path of least resistance, and the conclusions arrived at by the individual depend upon the nature and structure of his mind, on his experience, on hereditary drifts and tendencies, and on the countless things that constitute the difference in minds. One man, finding himself in the midst of mysterious phenomena, comes to the conclusion that all is the result of design; that back of all things is an infinit personality—that is to say, an infinit man; and he accounts for all that is by simply saying that the universe was created and set in motion by this infinit personality, and that it is miraculously and supernaturally governed and preserved. This man sees with perfect clearness that matter could not create itself, and therefore he imagins a creator of matter. He is perfectly satisfied that there is design in the world, and that consequently there must hav been a designer. It does not occur to him that it is necessary to account for the existence of an infinit personality. He is perfectly certain that there can be no design without a designer, and he is equally certain that there can be a designer who was not designed. The absurdity becomes so great that it takes the place of a demonstration. He takes it for granted that matter was created and that its creator was not. He assumes that a creator existed from eternity, without cause, and created what is called matter out of nothing; or, whereas there was nothing, this creator made the something that we call substance.

Is it possible for the human mind to conceive of an infinit personality? Can it imagin a beginningless being, infinitly powerful and intelligent? If such a being existed, then there must hav been an eternity during which nothing did exist except this being; because, if the universe was created, there must hav been a time when it was not, and back of that there must hav been an eternity during which nothing but an infinit personality existed. Is it possible to imagin an infinit intelligence dwelling for an eternity in infinit nothing? How could such a being be intelligent? What was there to be intelligent about? There was but one thing to know, namely, that there was nothing except this being. How could such a being be powerful? There was nothing to exercise force upon. There was nothing in the universe to suggest an idea. Relations could not exist—except the relation between infinit intelligence and infinit nothing.

The next great difficulty is the act of creation. My mind is so that I cannot conceive of something being created out of nothing. Neither can I conceive of anything being created without a cause. Let me go one step further. It is just as difficult to imagin something being created with, as without, a cause. To postulate a cause does not in the least lessen the difficulty. In spite of all, this lever remains without a fulcrum. We cannot conceive of the destruction of substance. The stone can be crushed to powder, and the powder can be ground to such a fineness that the atoms can only be distinguished by the most powerful microscope, and we can then imagin these atoms being divided and subdivided again and again and again; but it is impossible for us to conceive of the annihilation of the least possible imaginable fragment of the least atom of which we can think. Consequently the mind can imagin neither creation nor destruction. From this point it is very easy to reach the generalization that the indestructible could not hav been created.

These questions, however, will be answered by each individual according to the structure of his mind, according to his experience, according to his habits of thought, and according to his intelligence or his ignorance, his prejudice or his genius.

Probably a very large majority of mankind believe in the existence of supernatural beings, and a majority of what are known as the civilized nations, in an infinit personality. In the realm of thought majorities do not determin. Each brain is a kingdom, each mind is a sovereign.

The universality of a belief does not even tend to prove its truth. A large majority of mankind hav believed in what is known as God, and an equally large majority hav as implicitly believed in what is known as the devil. These beings hav been inferred from phenomena. They were produced for the most part by ignorance, by fear, and by selfishness. Man in all ages has endeavored to account for the mysteries of life and death, of substance, of force, for the ebb and flow of things, for earth and star. The savage, dwelling in his cave, subsisting on roots and reptils, or on beasts that could be slain with club and stone, surrounded by countless objects of terror, standing by rivers, so far as he knew, without source or end, by seas with but one shore, the prey of beasts mightier than himself, of diseases strange and fierce, trembling at the voice of thunder, blinded by the lightning, feeling the earth shake beneath him, seeing the sky lurid with the volcano's glare, fell prostrate and begged for the protection of the unknown.

In the long night of savagery, in the midst of pestilence and famin, through the long and dreary winters, crouched in dens of darkness, the seeds of superstition were sown in the brain of man. The savage believed, and thoroughly believed, that everything happened in reference to him, that he by his actions could excite the anger, or by his worship placate the wrath, of the unseen. He resorted to flattery and prayer. To the best of his ability he put in stone, or rudely carved in wood, his idea of this god. For this idol he built a hut, a hovel, and at last a cathedral. Before these images he bowed, and at these shrines, whereon he lavished his wealth, he sought protection for himself and for the ones he loved. The few took advantage of the ignorant many. They pretended to hav received messages from the Unknown. They stood between the helpless multitude and the gods. They were the carriers of flags of truce. At the court of heaven they presented the cause of man, and upon the labor of the deceived they lived.

The Christian of to-day wonders at the savage who bowed before his idol; and yet it must be confessed that the god of stone answered prayer and protected his worshipers precisely as the Christian's God answers prayer and protects his worshipers to-day.

My mind is so that it is forced to the conclusion that substance is eternal; that the universe was without beginning and will be without end; that it is the one eternal existence; that relations are transient and evanescent; that organisms are produced and vanish; that forms change—but that the substance of things is from eternity to eternity. It may be that planets are born and die, that constellations will fade from the infinit spaces, that countless suns will be quenched—but the substance will remain.

The questions of origin and destiny seem to be beyond the powers of the human mind.

Heredity is on the side of superstition. All our ignorance pleads for the old. In most men there is a feeling that their ancestors were exceedingly good and brave and wise, and that in all things pertaining to religion their conclusions should be followed. They believe that their fathers and mothers were of the best, and that that which satisfied them should satisfy their children. With a feeling of reverence they say that the religion of their mother is good enough and pure enough and reasonable enough for them. In this way the love of parents and the reverence for ancestors hav unconsciously bribed the reason and put out, or rendered exceedingly dim, the eyes of the mind.

There is a kind of longing in the heart of the old to liv and die where their parents lived and died—a tendency to go back to the homes of their youth. Around the old oak of manhood grow and cling these vines. Yet it will hardly do to say that the religion of my mother is good enough for me, any more than to say the geology, or the astronomy, or the philosophy of my mother is good enough for me. Every human being is entitled to the best he can obtain; and if there has been the slightest improvement on the religion of the mother, the son is entitled to that improvement, and he should not deprive himself of that advantage by the mistaken idea that he owes it to his mother to perpetuate, in a reverential way, her ignorant mistakes.

If we are to follow the religion of our fathers and mothers, our fathers and mothers should hav followed the religion of theirs Had this been done, there could hav been no improvement in the world of thought. The first religion would hav been the last, and the child would hav died as ignorant as the mother. Progress would hav been impossible, and on the graves of ancestors would hav been sacrificed the intelligence of mankind.

We know, too, that there has been the religion of the tribe, of the community, and of the nation, and that there has been a feeling that it was the duty of every member of the tribe or community, and of every citizen of the nation, to insist upon it that the religion of that tribe, of that community, of that nation, was better than that of any other. We know that all the prejudices against other religions, and all the egotism of nation and tribe, were in favor of the local superstition. Each citizen was patriotic enough to denounce the religions of other nations and to stand firmly by his own. And there is this peculiarity about man: he can see the absurdities of other religions while blinded to those of his own. The Christian can see clearly enough that Mohammed was an impostor. He is sure of it, because the people of Mecca who were acquainted with him declared that he was no prophet; and this declaration is received by Christians as a demonstration that Mohammed was not inspired. Yet these same Christians admit that the people of Jerusalem who were acquainted with Christ rejected him; and this rejection they take as proof positiv that Christ was the son of God.

The average man adopts the religion of his country, or, rather, the religion of his country adopts him. He is dominated by the egotism of race, the arrogance of nation, and the prejudice called patriotism. He does not reason—he feels. He does not investigate—he believes. To him the religions of other nations are absurd and infamous, and their gods monsters of ignorance and cruelty. In every country this average man is taught, first, that there is a supreme being; second, that he has made known his will; third, that he will reward the true believer; fourth, that he will punish the unbeliever, the scoffer, and the blasphemer; fifth, that certain ceremonies are pleasing to this god; sixth, that he has established a church; and seventh, that priests are his representativs on earth. And the average man has no difficulty in determining that the god of his nation is the true God; that the will of this true God is contained in the sacred scriptures of his nation; that he is one of the true believers, and that the people of other nations—that is, believing other religions—are scoffers; that the only true church is the one to which he belongs; and that the priests of his country are the only ones who hav had or ever will hav the slightest influence with this true God. All these absurdities to the average man seem self-evident propositions; and so he holds all other creeds in scorn, and congratulates himself that he is a favorit of the one true God.

If the average Christian had been born in Turkey, he would hav been a Mohammedan; and if the average Mohammedan had been born in New England and educated at Andover, he would hav regarded the damnation of the heathen as the "tidings of great joy."

Nations hav eccentricities, peculiarities, and hallucinations, and these find expression in their laws, customs, ceremonies, morals, and religions. And these are in great part determined by soil, climate, and the countless circumstances that mold and dominate the lives and habits of insects, individuals, and nations. The average man believes implicitly in the religion of his country, because he knows nothing of any other and has no desire to know. It fits him because he has been deformed to fit it, and he regards this fact of fit as an evidence of its inspired truth.

Has a man the right to examin, to investigate, the religion of his own country—the religion of his father and mother? Christians admit that the citizens of all countries not Christian, hav not only this right, but that it is their solemn duty. Thousands of missionaries are sent to heathen countries to persuade the believers in other religions not only to examin their superstitions, but to renounce them, and to adopt those of the missionaries. It is the duty of a heathen to disregard the religion of his country, and to hold in contempt the creed of his father and of his mother. If the citizens of heathen nations hav the right to examin the foundations of their religion, it would seem that the citizens of Christian nations hav the same right. Christians, however, go farther than this; they say to the heathen: You must examin your religion, and not only so, but you must reject it; and unless you do reject it, and in addition to such rejection adopt ours, you will be eternally damned. Then these same Christians say to the inhabitants of a Christian country: You must not examin; you must not investigate; but whether you examin or not, you must believe, or you will be eternally damned.

If there be one true religion, how is it possible to ascertain which of all the religions the true one is? There is but one way. We must impartially examin the claims of all. The right to examin involves the necessity to accept or reject. Understand me, not the right to accept or reject, but the necessity.

From this conclusion there is no possible escape. If, then, we hav the right to examin, we hav the right to tell the conclusion reached. Christians hav examined other religions somewhat, and they hav expressed their opinion with the utmost freedom—that is to say, they hav denounced them all as false and fraudulent; hav called their gods, idols and myths, and their priests, impostors.

The Christian does not deem it worth while to read the Koran. Probably not one Christian in a thousand ever saw a copy of that book. And yet all Christians are perfectly satisfied that the Koran is the work of an impostor. No Presbyterian thinks it is worth his while to examin the religious systems of India; he knows that the Brahmans are mistaken, and that all their miracles are falsehoods. No Methodist cares to read the life of Buddha, and no Baptist will waste his time studying the ethics of Confucius. Christians of every sort and kind take it for granted that there is only one true religion, and that all except Christianity are absolutely without foundation. The Christian world believes that all the prayers of India are unanswered; that all the sacrifices upon the countless altars of Egypt, of Greece, and of Rome were without effect. They believe that all these mighty nations worshiped their gods in vain; that their priests were deceivers or deceived; that their ceremonies were wicked or meaningless; that their temples were built by ignorance and fraud, and that no God heard their songs of praise, their cries of despair, their words of thankfulness; that on account of their religion no pestilence was stayed; that the earthquake and volcano, the flood and storm went on their ways of death—while the real God looked on and laughed at their calamities and mocked at their fears.

We find now that the prosperity of nations has depended, not upon their religion, not upon the goodness or providence of some god, but on soil and climate and commerce, upon the ingenuity, industry, and courage of the people, upon the development of the mind, on the spread of education, on the liberty of thought and action; and that in this mighty panorama of national life reason has built and superstition has destroyed.

Being satisfied that all believe precisely as they must, and that religions hav been naturally produced, I hav neither praise nor blame for any man. Good men hav had bad creeds, and bad men hav had good ones. Some of the noblest of the human race hav fought and died for the wrong. The brain of man has been the trysting-place of contradictions. Passion often masters reason, and "the state of man, like to a little kingdom, suffers then the nature of an insurrection."

In the discussion of theological or religious questions, we hav almost passed the personal phase, and we are now weighing arguments instead of exchanging epithets and curses. They who really seek for truth must be the best of friends. Each knows that his desire can never take the place of fact, and that, next to finding truth, the greatest honor must be won in honest search.

We see that many ships are driven in many ways by the same wind. So men, reading the same book, write many creeds and lay out many roads to heaven. To the best of my ability, I hav examined the religions of many countries and the creeds of many sects. They are much alike, and the testimony by which they are substantiated is of such a character that to those who believe is promised an eternal reward. In all the sacred books there are some truths, some rays of light, some words of love and hope. The face of savagery is sometimes softened by a smile—the human triumphs, and the heart breaks into song. But in these books are also found the words of fear and hate, and from their pages crawl serpents that coil and hiss in all the paths of men.

For my part, I prefer the books that inspiration has not claimed. Such is the nature of my brain that Shakspere givs me greater joy than all the prophets of the ancient world. There are thoughts that satisfy the hunger of the mind. I am convinced that Humboldt knew more of geology than the author of Genesis; that Darwin was a greater naturalist than he who told the story of the flood; that Laplace was better acquainted with the habits of the sun and moon than Joshua could hav been, and that Haeckel, Huxley, and Tyndall know more about the earth and stars, about the history of man, the philosophy of life—more that is of use, ten thousand times—than all the writers of the sacred books.

I believe in the religion of reason—the gospel of this world; in the development of the mind, in the accumulation of intellectual wealth, to the end that man may free himself from superstitious fear, to the end that he may take advantage of the forces of nature to feed and clothe the world.

Let us be honest with ourselvs. In the presence of countless mysteries; standing beneath the boundless heaven, sown thick with constellations; knowing that each grain of sand, each leaf, each blade of grass, asks of every mind the answerless question; knowing that the simplest thing defies solution; feeling that we deal with the superficial and the relativ, and that we are forever eluded by the real, the absolute,—let us admit the limitations of our minds, and let us hav the courage and the candor to say: We do not know.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

From Sweden.

MR. E. M. MACDONALD, Dear Sir: I am greatly obliged to you for your writing to me, and for the activ interest and sympathy you giv your persecuted fellow-champions for Freethought and liberty of conscience in Sweden.

Our young, valorous chief, Victor Lennstrand, is now again in prison, and has been since October 2d, as a common felon, sentenced to six months' imprisonment on two prosecutions for blasphemy, and three remaining prosecutions for the same offense will most likely result in nine months' prolonged captivity. The reactionary, fanatical monkeys think to stem the Freethought movement by incarcerating its leader, but I hope they will be frustrated. Liberals of different persuasions should join now and take a lively part in opposing and making public demonstration against their common enemy, and the violations of the laws for free utterance and right of assembly, which hav been totally disregarded and overlooked in the case of Lennstrand.

By the pressure of the authorities every place is shut for Freethought lectures in the country. In the metropolis, Stockholm, they dare not openly hinder, but they do what they can by private interference. Utilistiska Samfundet, the Utilitarian Society, has its own hall in Stockholm, and there Mr. Lennstrand lectured fearlessly to the very last moment, the 27th of October, and established a Sunday-school for secular teaching, and so children were enrolled. The school is upheld by interested persons.

By the unceasing persecution the scanty means of Mr. Lennstrand hav been exhausted, and to replenish him the Society for Religious Liberty at Stockholm is trying an appeal to the public, signed by eight names of political and social reputation, in order to be able to minimize the sufferings of a prison for Mr. Lennstrand.

The only means now to uphold the Freethought propaganda is Sweden is Fritänkaren, edited by Mr. Lennstrand and its business affairs conducted by me. We need what help we can get to be able to continue. I wrote the 1st instant to Colonel Ingersoll, New York, and asked him to recommend our paper to our many countrymen in America, and I shall be very obliged if you find proper to do the same, and appeal in THE TRUTH SEEKER to the Freethinkers of the United States to sustain their persecuted, struggling brother Freethinkers in Sweden. The pecuniary result may be what it will, but it would certainly giv a great moral assistance to Freethought here, for the Swedish nation is very weak, and sensitiv to opinion abroad. In case anything appears in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER and you send a copy to Dagens Nyheter, Stockholm, it is sure to be published for Swedish readers.

A Mr. Henry V. Berghell lectures now at Stockholm, and has been received with applause. The Freethought platform has not been empty by the captivity of Lennstrand, and I hope it will never be wanting courageous speakers for Freethought. I trust that thus the persecutors will be baffled in their endeavors to stifle truth. This is the status of Freethought and liberty of conscience in Sweden under the reign of the most enlightened monarch of Europe and his bigoted, detestable queen.

Whatever you can do, be certain of the gratitude of your battling comrades in Sweden.

Your never-flinching adherent, OTTO THOMSON,
Stockholm, Sweden.

American Secular Union.

The following sums hav been received by the treasurer of the American Secular Union, up to Nov. 30, 1889:

Balance from Otto Wettstein, ex-treasurer	$ 50 81
" " R. B. Westbrook	125 87
A. C. Cadel	1 00
Mrs. G. A. F. de Lespinasse, Iowa	1 00
John R. Charlesworth, New York	1 00
Dr. Wm. Ekwurzel	1 00
Mabel M. Tarbel	5 00
R. M. Robinson, Philadelphia	1 00
Electa Curtis, Brighton, N. Y	5 00
H. H. Bohda, Martinsburg, W. Va	2 00
Lucy N. Colman, Syracuse, N. Y	5 00
John Simmons	1 00
Jacob Tausig, Harrisburg	10 00
John Downes, Steubenville, O, (annual)	2 00
Theodore H. Norbe, Philadelphia	1 00
William B. Clark, Worcester, Mass	1 00
Elijah Hoffman, Philadelphia	1 00
Charles H. Shepard, Brooklyn, N. Y	1 00
Eli Fayette, Philadelphia	1 00
Robert Adams, Fall River, Mass	1 00
Susan H. Wixon, " "	1 00
Bertha M. Wixon, " "	1 00
S. M. Devenbaugh, Brimfield, Ind	1 00
Dr. Julius Fehr, Hoboken, N. J. (life member)	25 00
Walter C. Wright, Medford, Mass	5 00
Sarah M. de Lespinasse, Orange City, Ia. (life member)	25 00
Josephine Duane, New York	5 00
Linesville, Pa., Liberal League, by Wm. J. Davis	25 00
F. C. Mende, Philadelphia	5 00
San Jose Secular Union, by R. H. Schwartz	5 00
Total	$315 68

Mr. Otto Wettstein desires that the following acknowledgments, not heretofore made, be published:

James Lafferty	$5 00
C. E. Nicodemus	5 00
B. F. Grigsby	5 00
Otto Wettstein	10 00
Total	$25 00

Aug. 3, 1889.

F. C. MENDE, Treasurer.
Philadelphia, Nov. 30, 1889.

In a Nutshell.

1. The American Secular Union is a purely Secular society. It has no religion, and has nothing to do with religion. There is nothing in the original constitution of the National Liberal League, or in the amendments of the American Secular Union, to show to the contrary. Its objects hav been summarized in what has come to be known as the Nine Demands. These are purely Secular. There is not one word in them about Christianity, supernaturalism, or the Bible, except to assume that they hav nothing to do with the state. The object of our society is not to antagonize the church, only as it encroaches upon the state.

2. Our local auxiliary societies may go just as far as they please in opposing the church, or they may defend it, in whole or in part. We claim no supervision over our auxiliaries. If one society is Atheistic, or Agnostic, or Materialistic, it has a perfect right to be. If another society is Christian, orthodox, or Liberal, or Spiritualistic, it has a right to be, so long as it supports the Nine Demands. It is not contemplated that these several societies should act together, only in regard to the Secularization of the state. We might hav several societies in one place only agreeing on the Nine Demands.

3. The congress of the American Secular Union in Philadelphia made no alteration of the original constitution inconsistent with these points. Who dare to affirm that it did, and giv us the proof? I appeal to the law and the testimony as found in the original documents. Let this be tried on

4. The Rev. M. J. Savage was a vice-president of the original Liberal League formed in 1876, and whether he was an officer or not, he had a perfect right to speak at our congress, and did it well, agreeing with us in our Secular schemes. Dr. Edward McGlynn was opposed to the Roman Catholic theory of schools before our organization in 1876, and eloquently advocated our Secular views of education, and had a right on our platform. Moreover, it would hav cost more to pay the expenses of one professional lecturer from the West, than we paid for all our speeches.

5. If the movement for Secularizing the state is kept on the narrow basis advocated by some of our friends, it would take ten thousand years. Let us seek help from the large majority, so long as we do not giv away our Liberalism.

R. B. WESTBROOK, Pres. American Secular Union.
Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 1, 1889.

The New Constitution of the American Secular Union.

Those who took part in the last congress of the Secular Union accepted the new Article No. 4 with so little debate that few probably anticipated that it would giv such serious offense to many who were not present to express their views then and there. It is not too late for a general expression of opinion on this subject, and no one is a more earnest and persistent friend of debate than myself. I believe that all interested should frankly state their views so that if a mistake has been made it can be rectified next time we meet; but while enjoying plain speaking or sharp, strong talk, right to the point, no matter how hard I am hit, I am free to say that the criticism offered in the last TRUTH SEEKER by Mr. J. H. Burnham strikes me as an exhibition of pernicious partisanship with an unnecessarily strong flavor of vituperation. I regretted the appearance of Mrs. Severance's "vigorously stated views," because I thought them rather too hastily formed, but the reply in the next TRUTH SEEKER by President Westbrook was so well put that it seemed fortunate that Mrs. Severance's statement had appeared as an incentiv for Mr. Westbrook's reply. Probably Mr. Burnham's article was written before he had an opportunity to see Mr. Westbrook's; at least a true Liberal would hope so.

What I object to in the Burnham criticism is the imputation of base motivs to those who voted for Article 4. It is unseemly enough to start out with calling it "the disgraceful attitude of the so-called American Secular Union congress," and to speak of it as a "cowardly transformation," when there is no good reason to attribute either disgrace or cowardliness to this action; but to impute hypocrisy and deceit, or an attempt to deceive the orthodox party, a "plot" to "fool Christian devotees," is as ridiculous as it is false and stupid. To afford any basis for his charges he should show that the American Secular Union, or the Liberal League, was organized to bring about "the downfall of ecclesiasticism," that it was in the beginning an iconoclastic society for the destruction of all orthodox or church institutions, whereas he cannot quote one line from any Article that ever was in its constitution to indicate such a purpose. It always has been, according to its preamble and constitution, an organization whose whole business was and is to hold our governments to the spirit and letter of the Constitution of the United States in matters relating to separation of church and state, and to reform various abuses or neglects of this principle which hav crept into practical administration. I will not deny that some of the congresses hav been so conducted that the ordinary visitor might easily suppose that the objects of the Union were quite different, indeed that its purpose was, in the words of Mr. Burnham, to "down supernaturalism;" but however true it may be that this is one of the favorit occupations of many of its activ members, nevertheless if we want to put this Union on a business basis, and work it according to business principles, the logical, fair, and necessary result will be the holding of congresses after the plan of the late one of Philadelphia, or, in other words, let it mind its own business as indicated by its articles of constitution.

It may be that many will say, well, if that is so, we want a new society to push Secularism as a religion or creed instead of as a polity of state government. There is no objection to the organization of such a society, and, indeed, there is need of a good deal more organization among Liberals; though, unfortunately, there is great difficulty in getting enough of them agreeing upon one or more things, ideas, or principles, to form a stable, useful organization. The American Secular Union does not limit the objects of its branch organizations, and now stands ready to accept the aid of any society, of any creed or nationality, that is willing to help in effecting complete state Secularization. Most of the branch or local societies are likely to be composed of Liberals, Agnostics, and anti-supernaturalists, and in their home-meetings they can do as much iconoclastic work as they please, but, in general, annual meetings are called to promote the objects of the American Secular Union. All delegates should be truly Liberal and ready to associate with any man or woman who attends the meeting with an honest and earnest wish to promote these objects. Mrs. Severance acknowledges that she is Liberal enough to be able to listen with patience to any views, no matter how absurd they may be, if she be allowed to talk back, but as the Congresses of the American Secular Union are not called for debate of all sorts of isms we must learn to be Liberal enough to attend them without talking back or rebutting every ism that finds incidental expression, and all speakers should be instructed, so far as possible, to hold to the questions of the occasion, and not try to make such congresses opportunities for the promulgation of their favorit hobbies. I remember, years ago, at a convention held somewhere in New York state, a number of Spiritualists were complaining that the meeting was being controled by the Materialists, and that their views did not hav a fair chance for expression, while they would, no doubt, hav been glad, had they had the control, to hav constituted the meeting a Spiritualists' camp-meeting; but they had a good excuse for so feeling, inasmuch as the meeting was being run by the majority in a way to disgust those of the minority who could not get a chance to talk back. I hav presided enough at the Liberal Club meetings in New York to know how very difficult it is to get speakers to mind the business of the occasion, to hold to the question, to avoid lugging in their special crotchets, to avoid going out of their way to lash some other fellow's hobby. But if we profess to be rational, Liberal, advanced, social, and organizable beings, we should learn to associate in practical work without splitting all to pieces on side issues; learn to attend to one kind of business at a time; learn to tolerate, even to enjoy, reasonable opposition or criticism, but we ought not to be compelled to listen to inexcusable aspersions of our motivs; charges of "indulging in such a stupid recreation" as attempting to dupe the Christian churches into aiding in the overthrow of supernaturalism. I am even willing to admit that Mr. Burnham may hav had only a good motiv in writing this pungent criticism of the congress, but this presupposes that he is intoxicated with the exuberance of his own estimate of the immediate necessity and importance of committing any and every union of Freethinkers to the demolition of supernaturalism. In the same number of THE TRUTH SEEKER Mr. D. C. Wismer well says that "what we principally need is the coöperation of the large number of people that are neither inside nor outside of the church, but who will not attend the meetings of a society that does nothing in the main but attack the popular creeds which they approve in their principal features."

I need not use my time or THE TRUTH SEEKER'S space to prove that there is a large number of Christians who believe that the church is better off when totally separated from state, and to show that they hav plenty of history to sustain them in this view, and whether they are right in so believing or not, whether we believe with them or not, we should not object to all the help we can get from them in furthering our American Secular Union objects. We might as well refuse to vote the Republican ticket because the majority who vote it are Protestant, or the Democratic because most of its voters are Catholic.

Now that Mr. Burnham is reminded of the real constitutional purposes of the American Secular Union he will at once know whether he is for them or not, and he can soon decide whether he considers it worth while for him to giv any time or service to promoting them. If he should conclude that he would like to do so, his energies will be directed in a way to assist the officials now in charge instead of obstructing their efforts; but should he only feel that he is rendering Secularism service when carrying on activ warfare against ecclesiasticism, demolishing supernaturalism, and routing their devotees tooth and nail, he will let the American Secular Union pursue its own course and methods while he loses no time in establishing another organization, under some such title as the Clerical Ku Klux Klan, the Anti-Superstition Zouaves, the Secular Up-And-At-'Em Cohorts, and after the manner of the Salvation Army, he can hav all the fun and open warfare he wants.

If he choose the latter method he will be likely to get more aid than criticism from me, for I am often in the mood to agree very enthusiastically with all he says of "true Secularism" as opposed to orthodox Christian churchism, and hav long been enlisted in the "open warfare" he advocates, but I can see the utility of a society limiting its operations to the political aspects of Secularism, and I wish Mr. Burnham might join with us in so thinking. It is well to understand that there are a good many good movements worth sustaining, and that in promoting any particular cause there may be several methods or plans worthy of trial. In the history of the Liberal League many ideas and experiments hav been tried, many hav proved useful, some impracticable, but from what I know of its history I am certain that much useful work has been accomplished, and it has been worth all it cost. We might hav done better had we been wiser. We hav made mistakes as a society, and our officials hav no doubt been conscious too often of their own deficiencies, and often enough they hav been reproved for negligence; but those of us who hav any wish to see an organization maintained among Liberals hav cause to be thankful that the American Secular Union has been kept alive, still lives, and promises to do better in the future.

Some years ago with tried and true men at the head, and no limitations as to scope of its work, an effort was made to make the organization a broad-gage propaganda of what Mr. Burnham calls "true Secularism," but the "true Secularists" did not appreciate the effort and sustain it. So there was no permanent up-building in this direction. At one time Socialism was or came near being tacked on the Union, but we learned the error of this in time to avoid being swamped by it. We are learning, or beginning to believe, whether it be true or not, that to make a useful, practical organization, it must be like recent corporations, "limited" in its scope and responsibilities, and not undertake to do too many good things at once. The Union has in the last five years tacked about in various ways in search for its proper abiding course, but if the route has been zigzag it has, I think, been mainly in one and the right direction, and now we are off on another tack which at least has the merit of being businesslike, and the advantage of being piloted by officers who hav made a success of other affairs in this world, and the leisure to giv a large share of their time and attention to engineering the work of the Union. Let us encourage them with our support, offer suggestions, "good points," and not forget the one thing needful in all such work, financial aid to the extent of our ability.

E. B. FOOTE, JR.

Lectures and Meetings.

W. F. JAMIESON has just completed three lectures in Father Chapman's neighborhood near New Hartford, Ia. From there he goes to New Hampton, Ia., to deliver a course of lectures. Address at Des Moines, Ia.

MR. JOHN P. GUILD writes: "The address I was to giv in Springfield, December 8th, has been postponed, as I hav been asked to speak in Paine Memorial, Boston, on that day at 2:30 P.M. Subject, 'Cosmian Philosophy.'"

THE Brooklyn Philosophical Association's card for December is as follows: Sunday, December 1st—Mr. Edward King. Subject: "The Revolution of the Educated Classes." Sunday, December 8th—Mr. J. E. Remsburg. Subject: "False Claims." Sunday, December 15th—Mr. T. B. Wakeman. Subject: "Bruno, the Pope, and Romanism in America." Sunday, December 22d—Mr. T. B. Wakeman. Subject: "The Way out of Hell." Sunday, December 29th—Mr. Wm. Potts. Subject: "Coöperativ Stores and Coöperativ Labor." These lectures occur at 3 P.M., and are followed by discussion. The meeting-place is Bedford avenue and South Second street.

THE Newark Press-Register of the 25th ult. thus reports the meeting of the Newark Liberal League of the day before: "'Standing-room only' was the order at Liberal League Hall yesterday to those who had gone to listen to John R. Charlesworth, of New York, lecture on 'Looking for God.' In opening he spoke of the attempts man has made in search of his origin and of the end of the same in forming an originator from his imagination, as he termed the belief in God. He gave a description of the various 'gods' that hav been found by different sects in their attempts to formulate a god from their ideas. 'The ancient idolators, in their worship of the sun and moon,' he said, 'did so because they desired the light of the one and the warmth of the other. And it is the same of the Christian worshipers to-day. They pray for what they want of an unseen and unknown thing. So, are they not the same as the uncivilized nation of India? The search for God is becoming plainer and plainer every day, and at this rate the belief in God will pass away the same as the belief in idol-worship and sun-worship passed away. The Christians of to-day hav only an idea of God. They hav never seen God, and consequently are only worshiping an idea. What proof hav we that this God of later years is any more of a reality than the gods of former years? In defining God as a spirit, they tell you nothing, for they define the unknown in the much more unknown.' In conclusion, he said: 'I proclaim myself to be without God, because I hav no idea what God is.' Mr. Charlesworth is a convincing speaker, and was listened to with interest by the large assemblage present."

Religion in Government.

Rev. F. M. Washburn in the Christian Statesman.

Congress and our various state legislatures convene in extra sessions on the Sabbath, whenever they wish to gain time, as if they were higher in authority than even the divine command. Public officials hav become so accustomed to disregard the Sabbath that it produces a sensation, and is telegraphed all over the country, that the present chief magistrate refuses to do business upon God's holy day. All honor to him; and may he receive the cordial support of all Christian people in his heroic efforts to begin the reform in high places.

Communications.

Idolatry.

For hundreds of years past, the great cry of idolatry has been heard from every denominational pulpit in our land. Every preacher has held up before the Christian world the fearful robes, stripped from the scarred and disfigured phiz of the idols of ancient worshipers, and has deplored the terrible condition of idolatry as the most barbarous of the barbarian customs, and yet these same decryers of idolatry are practicing the same thing they hav declared to be so mischievously wicked, and call it the "holy of the holies."

There have been idol worshipers in every land and every nation; under every government from the earliest record of time to the present. No matter what the name, the form of worship, where located, or where the abode of the deified personage, whether in the heavens over our heads, in the waters at our feet; whether worshiping the glittering rays of the sun that spreads the beautiful splendor over the face of nature, or the silvery moonbeams as they cast a halo of softening light over the slumbering waves, in which are born and live the hideous monsters of the deep; whether the twinkling beauties of the Great Dipper, or the far off Milky Way, or the supposed angel of mercy who sits upon a throne of peace, the club of Hercules, or the thundering power of Vulcan, each has had its worshipers, who with an eye of faith have beheld from afar off the mighty God, and, with fear and trembling, prostrated themselves in the dust at his feet.

The worshipers of the present day are no exception. From the Polytheist to the Trini—or Unitarian—each has his God or Gods to whom he, in his superstitious fear, yields his manhood, and before whom he crouches as an idolator to defend the creed he so much believes.

From the granite base to the gilded spire can be seen the relics of prolonged barbarism. On every street, at every turn is made conspicuous the form of some supposed God, goddess, or virgin of some fabled origin, carved into the hardest formated rock, at the expense of talent and chisel. High over the altar of worship can be seen the form of some representative of mythology, pictured in the finest of print, that has consumed the time and skill of the artist for years. Still higher, as our eyes look toward the mother of light, can be seen the gold bedecked cross, revealing to the world the prolonged days of ignorance. Underneath it swings the great bell to call its devotees to submission. What is the difference whether they fall to the ground at its peal to worship Allah with the endearing cry, "There is no God but Allah," or whether the deep tones of the chimes call together the better-dressed and supposedly more civilized followers of the same idol superstition, to prostrate themselves at the golden shrine of an ecclesiastical God? The intent and idolatrous worship is the same, although in a different language, uttered by different tongues; the same imagined idol is kissed by the same quivering lips of fear, with the same end to gain, the same supposed deity to please, the same adversary of souls to shun, the same human desire and ambition to satisfy. Both superstition and idolatry are the same in all cases and under all circumstances. Yet the clergy continue to admonish their hearers to shun idolatry, and at the same time will administer to them the body and blood of the lamb of God to cleanse their idolatrous souls from sin.

To-day can be seen in the show-window of one of our ecclesiastical dispensing stores of holy goods, on Wabash avenue in this great city of Chicago, dozens of different images of gods, supposed virgins, etc., cast from metal and terra-cotta, giving such expressions of countenance as the idol-makers could best imagine as most probable, and which will naturally wring from the blind and ignorant devotees the most tears and sighs of devotion, and bring themselves the most financial remuneration. Is this idolatry? Why, no; nothing of the kind. It is only depicting before man the real God and the mother of Jesus, whom we are in duty bound to worship, and which God has said, "Thou shalt have no other God but me." Have not other gods said the same? The Mohammedan, with his heart filled with devotion, cries, "There is no god but Allah!" The Christian devotee, with his soul filled with the love of God, cries, "There is no God but Jehovah!" The same idolatrous devotion that ruled supreme in the days of our ancestors is rampant to-day.

Why not, when much the same ignorant fear is inherent in and is being taught to-day as of yore, and the only sign of advancement to be seen is in the lesser proportions of the terrified? A few have learned the truth of demonstrated science, have read the history of the past, learned the fallacies of priestcraft, and have separated the noonday of truth from the midnight of error. How few there are among our philosophers, astronomers, scientists, even our lawyers and doctors, and all classes of educated thinkers, who care to acknowledge obedience to an unknown, and especially to such a one as taught by Moses. They believe that each was born free and equal, with right to think and act for himself, and not to pay tribute to a mythical fiend who seeks to prey upon the weakness of his creation.

The women and children are the feeders of the churches of to-day. Being innocent and of tender minds, they are the willing clay in the hands of the wily, who mold them to their wishes. And until woman can have the advantages due her, to enable her to free herself from the baneful influence of mental slavery, idolatry will be seen on every hand. Look at the to-be-pitied followers of Catholicism, who need the sympathy of everyone of more cultured intelligence; born in the slums of priest-ridden poverty, throttled at birth by priestly hands, and made to pay tribute to those in authority, who force upon them the worst forms of idolatry known to man, children are watched with an eye of fear, lest they learn the truth and rise above the control of the serpents that coil around their homes to steal the nestlings as they come forth to bask in the sunlight of development. Do they not deserve our pity? And should not our hands be raised in their defense?

Slavery is the same in all cases, and a curse to both master and slave—a hindrance to civilization. No menial slavery can equal that of the mental. And man could never have risen to his present state of intellectual worth had he at all times listened to the cunningly devised schemes of salvation, when there was none needed.

How long will it be that idolatrous error must be the dominant factor in the ruling of men, and that from the hands of unprincipled knaves who have degraded the very souls of those from whom they seek to obtain their living?

Well do I know the trying ordeal of the mind of those who have nursed from the breast of superstition the milk of idolatrous worship; those who are taught that it is but a step from earth to heaven, where Christ reigns supreme at the right hand of the father, who sits on a throne of everlasting glory. I well remember the soul-stirring songs of the evangelists and the pleadings to giv my soul to Jesus, but age and study have taught me that the Jesus story was but one of many that emanated from the minds of the more cunning who sought to take advantage of the weaker, and ere this the story would have been buried in the dark vale of forgetfulness had it not been for the same desire of a few to live from the larders of the many.

In all ages there have been those who believed in the story taught by some supposed sacred writings, and who would have, and have, sacrificed their lives in defense of its truthfulness. The Koran of the Mohammedans, the Five Kings of the Chinese, the Tri Pitikes of the Buddhists, the three Vedas of the Hindoos, the Zendavesta of the Parsees, the scriptures of the Christians, etc., each have told a different story, and each was believed to be the only original and true one, but science, and a knowledge of the laws of nature, has long since torn the black cap of fear and despair from the honest thinkers of nature's noblemen, and planted the seeds of peace and happiness through a respect and trusting knowledge in the great first cause of all things, as ruled by force and laws that sustain the mighty universe in which we live. The same that spreads the carpet of green at our feet, that shadows our heads with the flowering foliage of the magnolia, and fills our nostrils with its beautiful fragrance until consolation and admiration fill our very souls with love for the god of nature, who has designed that man shall live, not for himself alone, but to unite with his fellowmen in utilizing all the benefits that it is possible for us to enjoy. Such god does not ask that we make ourselves miserable here that we may enjoy a happy future.

What thinking man or woman can ascribe to deity such debasing attributes of character as are given Jehovah by the murderer Moses? According to the scriptures, the God of our existence is a liar, a thief, murderer, a seducer of virgins, and full of jealousy, envy, wrath, vengeance, fear, etc. Where can be found such blasphemy against the author of this grand universe, as is forged over the signatures of those who claimed to be the vicegerents of God? And where can be found more baneful teachings than in the holy scriptures? We there learn that God has made a failure of creation, that while he is said to be both omniscient and omnipotent, he has failed in both, as such powers have not been found in him alone, but an opponent, in the form of a devil, has been, and is now, frustrating every good work that Jehovah has undertaken to do, and after his children had fallen, the only plan Jehovah could devise to redeem them satisfactory to himself was to crucify his only son, who had to suffer pain and sorrow to please his father, and then, after heralding the story for nearly two thousand years, his disobedient children, who were made by himself and after his own pattern, will not believe the story of salvation, proving still another failure in God's omniscience. Where on earth can be found another such a libel upon the name of deity?

And yet the idol worshipers of this cruel God are seeking to decry the more-to-be-believed, but still equally false, theories of other worshipers, and by the sacrifice of millions of lives, money, arms, and ammunition are trying to force them from their bosom idols, only to supply another much worse. Less than a century ago the perfume of burning heretical flesh could have been breathed in this free land of ours; the dangling forms of priest-judged, witch-possessed children of a just God could have been seen swinging between heaven and earth only to appease the stupidity of depraved superstition, and to-day is felt the power of the law made to conform to the same damnable ignorance that has been the curse of man from the earliest stage of his existence. All this in the best country on earth, the land where the people are supposed to have the right to Freethought and free expression. Why does man seek an object of worship? The answer, Fear, resounds back from the walls of the temple of ignorance. Man, in his primitiv state, is built up of fear, wonder, and speculation, and seeks to know that which he cannot learn in his feeble condition, and at once falls in love with the beauties of nature. Why should he not? He feels that his adoration is due its author, and seeks the same in the sun, moon, waves of the mighty deep, or perhaps forms a speculative opinion that some mysterious monster is sitting upon the peak of some far-off cloud ready to hurl upon his head either sunshine or thunder at his own infinite pleasure. He sees that which is terrorizing and starts with fear, and at its first impression upon his mind he seeks to divert its terrors by prayer. He knows not of the hidden laws of force, neither can he reason from cause to effect; and as he wonders at results, he falls upon his knees to adore the author of the good in hopes to be shielded from the consequences of the bad. This alone would be well enough, as it pacifies his soul and brings consolation to soothe his fears, but others of less innocence and more degraded have taken advantage of the situation that they might thrive from off the innocent ignorance of the weaker, and have taught the most damnable doctrines and creeds to be inaugurated, and history alone tells the story of its terrible consequences.

There is but one remedy, one destroyer, and that is being met by the battle ax of the theologian as he sees it from a distance, and he seeks to decapitate it as it approaches. He is seeking to waylay and throw discredit on all scientific truths that do not corroborate his views and teachings of fallacious dogmas; but the desolated past has left its record so deeply engraved by the inquisitorial fires of ecclesiastical fury, that time will never erase it, and already the beautiful flowers of scientific investigation are growing more beautiful off the religious phosphates of the past, which have become a stench to the nostrils of the more enlightened and honest investigators who love truth better than superstition.

What are we to do? Will we allow idolatry to still rule our land triumphant, to seduce the daughters of education and lay waste the field of virtue that religious creeds and dogmas may abound, or will we stand by the great discoveries made by the persecuted dead, and from their virtuous dust make grow such other discoveries of nature's wonders as the world has never yet seen? We have the field before us, the resources to draw from. We need not longer be held in the grasp of our idolatrous tyrants, but with energy and devotion to the truth, we can soon see perched on high the eagle of victory. The laws of our being command us to press forward undismayed, and although our time on earth is short, we can—and will we not?—leave a legacy of worth to our children that they may not be enfolded in the pythonic coils of idolatrous superstition.

Thou anti-idolators, show your hand; stand fast to your colors, and the battle will be ours.

A. D. Swan.

Consecrating a Church in Siberia.

Sunday morning, November 29th, writes George Kennan, describing his adventures in Siberia for the Century, we left Nerchinsk in a sleigh for Chiti (Cheetah), the capital of the Trans-Baikal.

The icicles that hung from the nostrils of our frost-whitened horses, the sharp metallic creaking of the crisp snow under our sledge runners, the bluish, opalescent tints of the distant mountains, and the high, slender columns of smoke that stood, without waver or tremble, over the chimneys of the houses, were all evidences of a very low, if not an arctic, temperature; and I was not surprised, when I looked at our thermometer, to find the mercury stationary at twenty-seven degrees below zero. As night came on, the intensity of the cold increased until it was all that we could do to endure it from one post station to another. We drank three or four tumblers of hot tea every time we stopped to change horses; but in the long, lonely hours between midnight and morning, when we could get no warm food and when all our vital powers were usually at their lowest ebb, we suffered very severely. We had no difficulty in getting post horses until just before dark Monday evening, when we reached the station of Turinopovorotnaya (Too-rin-o-po-vo-rotenah-yah), about fifty miles from Chita, and found the whole village in a state of hilarious intoxication. Sleighs filled with young men and boys were careering hither and thither with wild whoops and halloos; long lines of peasant girls in bright-colored calico dresses were unsteadily promenading back and forth in the streets with their arms around one another and singing khorovod songs; the station-house was filled with flushed and excited people from neighboring settlements who had evidently been participating in a celebration of some kind and were about starting for their homes; the station-master, who perhaps had not finished his celebration, was nowhere to be found; there was not a driver about the stables; and the "starosta" (stahro stah)* a short, fat old man, who looked like a burgher from Amsterdam, was so drunk that even with the aid of a cane he could hardly stand on his feet. In vain we tried to ascertain the reasons for this surprising epidemic of inebriation. Nobody was sober enough to explain to us what had happened. From the excited and more or less incoherent conversation of the intoxicated travelers in the station-house, I learned that even the village priest was so drunk that he had to be taken home in a sleigh by the soberest of his parishioners. If the station-master, the starosta, the village priest, the drivers, and all of the inhabitants were drunk, there was evidently no prospect of our being able to get horses. In fact we could not find anybody who seemed sober enough to know the difference between a horse and his harness. We therefore brought our baggage into the crowded station-house and sat down in an unoccupied corner to study intoxicated humanity and await further developments. Every person in the house was drunk, except ourselvs and one small baby in arms. The father of this baby, a good-looking young Russian officer in full uniform, wandered unsteadily about the room, animated apparently by a hazy idea that he ought to be collecting his scattered baggage so as to be in readiness for a start; but the things that he picked up in one place he dropped feebly in another, and every minute or two he would suspend operations to exchange with his intoxicated companions fragmentary reminiscences of the day's festivity. Finally he seemed to be struck by a happy thought, and making his way in a devious course to one corner of the room he took up his saber, which was leaning against the wall, and carrying it to his intoxicated wife committed it solemnly to her care with directions to take it out to the sleigh. She was sober enough to remark, with some asperity, that as she had a young baby in her arms, and as the temperature out of doors was twenty degrees below zero, he had better take the saber to the sleigh himself. At this he clasped the sheathed weapon dramatically to his breast, rolled his eyes in a fine frenzy upward, and declared with emotion that the saber was his first bride, that he never would forsake it, and that, in view of all the circumstances, he would take it out to the sleigh himself. A moment later, however, he dropped it, and but for the supervision of his second bride would hav forgotten it altogether.

About 8 o'clock, after watching for an hour or two such performances as these, I succeeded in capturing the starosta, and addressing to him some very energetic remarks I sobered him sufficiently to make him understand that we must hav horses at once or there would be trouble. While I stood over him with a verbal club, he entered us in the station-house book as "Mr. Kennan and companion, citizens of Neighboring States;"† and then going out on the front steps he shouted, as every sleigh load of drunken men went past, "Andre! Nikolai! Loshedei sei chas!" ["Horses this moment!"] The only replies that he received were wild howls of derision. At every such outburst of hilarious contempt for authority, he would raise his shaking hands as high as his head with a feeble and comical gesture of helplessness and despair, and exclaim in maudlin tones: "Fsei pyáuni! Shto! prikázhtie dyélet? Chisto nakázánia!" ["They're all drunk! What do you order done? It's a regular punishment!"]

About nine o'clock the noise, tumult, and shouting in the village streets began to subside; the station-master, whose intoxication had taken the form of severe official dignity, suddenly appeared, and in a tone of stern menace wanted to know where the post drivers were and what all this disorder meant; the Russian officer, who by this time had reached the affectionate stage of inebriation, kissed all the women in the room, crossing himself devoutly, and meandered out to the sleigh, followed by his wife with the baby and the saber; two intoxicated priests in long gowns, and high, cylindrical, brimless hats draped with black crape, alighted from a droshky in front of the door, allowed their hands to be reverently kissed by the inebriated young officer and his friends, and then rode off in a post sleigh driven by a peasant who could hardly keep his seat on the box; and finally, when we had almost abandoned the hope of ever getting away, a really sober man in a ragged sheepskin coat emerged from the darkness and reported in a business-like manner to the station-master that the horses were ready for us. The drunken and irate official, who seemed desirous of vindicating his dignity and authority in some way, overwhelmed the unfortunate driver with abuse, and ended by fining him fifty kopecks—whether for being sober or for having the horses ready, I do not know. We piled our baggage into the sleigh, climbed in upon it, and rode out of the intoxicated settlement with thankful hearts. As the last faint sounds of revelry died away in the distance behind us, I said to the driver: "What's the matter with everybody in this village? The whole population seems to be drunk."

"They've been consecrating a new church," said the driver, soberly.

"Consecrating a church!" I exclaimed in amazement. "Is that the way you consecrate churches?"

"I don't know," he replied. "Sometimes they drink. After the services they had a gulainia [a sort of holiday promenade with music and spirituous refreshments], and some of them crooked their elbows too often." "Some of them!" I repeated. "All of them, you mean. You're the only sober man I've seen in the place. How does it happen that you're not drunk?"

"I'm not a Christian," he replied, with quiet simplicity. "I'm a Buriat."*

As a Christian—if not a member of the Holy Orthodox church—I was silenced by the unconscious irony of the reply. The only sober man in a village of three or four hundred inhabitants proved to be a pagan, and he had just been fined fifty kopecks by a Christian official for not getting drunk with the other good citizens and thus showing his respect for the newly consecrated edifice and his appreciation of the benign influence of the Holy Orthodox faith!

*The nativs in Siberia known as Buriats are nearly all Lamaists.

*A "starosta," or elder, is the head of a Siberian village.

†The Russian words for "neighboring" and "united" bear a superficial resemblance to each other, and the poor intoxicated starosta had never heard, evidently, of such a country as the United States.

Modern Claims Upon the Pulpit.

Nothing is more offensiv in the modern preacher, says Archdeacon Farrar in the Forum, especially when he is young and raw and ignorant, than the assumption of any right to lay down the law on disputed topics. He should rather endeavor to convince, and to illustrate, and to persuade, and to win. The pulpit is no longer a coward's castle. The preacher can be answered, if anyone thinks him of sufficient importance to make it worth while to do so. His most self-important assertions will be taken only for what they are worth. Exposure will sooner or later await his incompetence. His most aggressivly ignorant dogmatism will be listened to with a smile, and will be taken as a measure, not of his authority, but of his conceit. Nothing will tell more powerfully and more deservedly against the modern preacher than for him to giv himself the airs of the medieval inquisitor or the domineering priest.

The articles of the English church teach us that great churches hav erred, and that councils hav erred, and that any particular church may err. A preacher becomes absolutely intolerable—he alienates every instructed mind and every cultivated temperament among his hearers—when, instead of speaking the truth in modesty and love, he teaches what they know to be error with all the airs of sacerdotal pretension and usurped infallibility.

There are two great departments of knowledge which preachers are constantly tempted to invade, with no better equipment than that of a traditional and uninstructed opinion, which has remained unchanged in the midst of progress, and which is often rendered still more offensiv by being ornamented with a smattering of impossible apologetics. They are the domains of science and of biblical criticism. In both domains numberless priests, and even whole generations of priests and religious teachers, hav maintained and enforced views which are entirely false. The beacon light of progress over every such sunken reef of persecuting ignorance should serve as a warning to the modern teacher to avoid the arrogance of a nescience which takes itself for knowledge and denounces what it cannot understand.

There is no more deplorable fact than the hostility to science which has been displayed century after century by the immense majority of the church's representativs. Not a few indeed of the martyrs of science hav themselvs been priests—among them Roger Bacon, one of the greatest of them all; but this has not saved them from years of anguish and persecution, inflicted upon them by the inflated and ignorant intolerance of their brethren. No one who is acquainted with the history of science, and has sufficient honesty to accept facts, can possibly deny that scarcely a single truth of capital importance in science has ever been enunciated without having to struggle for life against the fury of theological dogmatists. In every instance the dogmatists hav been ignominiously defeated. The world moved, as Galileo said it did, in spite of the Inquisition. A great Puritan divine thought that he had checked the progress of astronomical inquiry when he said that he preferred to believe the Holy Ghost rather than Newton; yet Newton was absolutely right and the Puritan divine was hopelessly wrong.

Thousands of pulpits fulminated anathemas against the early geologists; and one religious controversialist—with the exquisit culture and suavity which marks the ordinary language of self-sufficient bigots—satisfied himself that during the ages which preceded the creation, "God had been preparing a hell for the geologists." Yet, before thirty years had elapsed, the rejection of the truths which paleontology had revealed would hav been regarded as the mark of an idiot. The men of science quietly advanced in their sacred task of deciphering the letters which God had inscribed upon the rocky tablets of the earth, leaving the theologians to square their biblical objections with the new revelation as best they could. In our own time, to giv but one instance more, we hav heard from preachers, and sometimes from men who could barely scrape through the matriculation examination of a tenth-rate college, the most furious denunciations of Darwinism and the doctrin of evolution. Darwin himself opposed to these tirades the silence of a magnanimity too noble even for the indulgence of private disdain. And already not a few leading theologians adopt the theory of evolution as one which can be applied in even wider regions than those of physics. Let the modern preacher learn a little wisdom, a little modesty, a little suspension of judgment from the disastrous annals of the past. His curses, like chickens, will only come home to roost.

Again, there has been an undoubted advance in the domain of biblical knowledge. A preacher who relies only on our authorized version will preach on scores of texts which an instructed hearer knows to be mistranslated or to hav a meaning quite other than the one attached to them. What must an educated listener think of a man who insists on the miracle of the angel troubling the water; or defends the doctrin of the trinity by the text about the three heavenly witnesses; or who rests the whole strength of the doctrin of the resurrection of the flesh on the well-known passage of Job, without showing any consciousness of the real meaning of those passages as developed by criticism? There is something almost appalling in the extent to which doctrins hav been made to depend on "proof texts" which the context shows to be entirely irrelevant, and which sometimes imply almost the reverse of what they hav been quoted to support.

Again, the science of biblical criticism has made an immense advance in the last fifty years. The fact that a man is a clergyman givs him no right whatever to pronounce an opinion on such questions as the dates of various psalms, or the authenticity of Daniel, or the time at which this or that prophet wrote, or whether the whole books of Isaiah and Zechariah were written by single authors, or the Mosaic origin of the book of Deuteronomy, or the genuinness of the Second Epistle of St. Peter, or of the last twelve verses of St. Mark. If he has well-matured opinions on these subjects, based upon thorough inquiry and not upon the supposed sacredness of a tradition which in hundreds of instances has been proved to be not only fallible but even absurd, by all means let him say his say. But even then he is bound to do so with modesty, and with the frank admission that many who know ten times more of the subject than himself hav come to conclusions different from his own.

If it is urged in vindication of religion, that it has advanced and elevated human civilization, even this merit appears very doubtful in presence of the facts of history, and at least, as very rarely or isolatedly the case. In general, however, it cannot be denied that most systems of religion hav proved rather inimical than friendly to civilization. For religion, as already stated, tolerates no doubt, no discussion, no contradiction, no investigations, those eternal pioneers of the future of science and intellect! Even the simple circumstance that our present state of culture has already long since left far behind it all, and even the highest, intellectual ideals established and elaborated by former religions, may show how little intellectual progress is influenced by religion. Mankind is perpetually being thrown to and fro between science and religion, but it advances more intellectually, morally, and physically in proportion as it turns away from religion, and to science.—Büchner.

The Protestantism which followed was as intolerant as the mother church; more so, perhaps, for it had the intolerance of youth, and as it broke and scattered into countless creeds, each of the brood, save the Quakers, arrogated to itself the right to persecute and destroy. To Luther, persecution seemed not only lawful but necessary. Calvin, who was as intolerant as the Inquisition and every whit as fanatical, made it a prop of his church. And Knox, to whom one mass was more frightful than ten thousand insurgents, declared that an idolator merited nothing less than death.—Edgar Saltus, Anatomy of Negation.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - DECEMBER 7, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

To the Subscribers in Arrears.

There are upon our regular subscription list some hundreds who hav not paid a cent for THE TRUTH SEEKER they hav been receiving and reading for the past year. Each one of these persons is earnestly asked to immediately remit the amount owed. The money is sorely needed. The tab on the wrapper of your paper shows when your subscription expired, and if that date is past a renewal is in order. Especially do we appeal to those whose time expired several months ago. They hav been trusted, and should reciprocate the courtesy by immediate response to this solicitation.

FOR THE

Truth Seeker Annual for 1890

HON. T. B. WAKEMAN

HAS WRITTEN AN ARTICLE ENTITLED

The Inauguration of the Bruno Statue.

It will be the fullest and best report of the occurrence, epitomizing the history of the event from its inception to its triumphant completion. The article will be prefaced by a full-page illustration (different from the one given in this paper) of

THE BURNING OF BRUNO.

In renewing your subscription to The Truth Seeker inclose 25 cents and the Annual will be forwarded as soon as issued.

Depravity, Sin, and Redemption.

A Christian paper published in this city printed this call to the clergy on Thanksgiving day:

"Brethren of the Ministry, with all earnestness we beseech you, do not postpone the beginning of special services! All indications point to the coming winter as one of unusual dissipation, marked by more and greater efforts to lead the young into worldliness. Preach the great truths of depravity, sin, and redemption, 'manifesting the truth to every man's conscience in the sight of God.' This done with solemnity and tenderness, and this alone, will stem the earthward tide and stir the soul to longing desires for pardon and renewing love. May every church receive a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord!"

What a cry to hear these days! The "great truth" of depravity—what is it? Only this, that all men are by nature, through the sin of Adam, totally corrupt, very far gone from original righteousness, and of their own natures continually inclined to evil. That is not much, if said quickly, and we doubt if one in a thousand hearing it from the pulpit has ever dreamed of the hideous doctrin and monstrous untruth concealed in the statement. The doctrin, of course, is founded on the mythical fall of man in the garden of Eden, in which, according to the theologians, there was the greatest Infidelity, the most prodigious pride, the most horrid ingratitude, a visible contempt of God's majesty and justice, unaccountable folly, and the greatest cruelty to the race, for because of it is man made miserable for all earthly time, and eternally so unless he shall repent and be redeemed. Such a conception of the world and man is as childish as a nursery tale and as superstitious as the old wives' fables of the days of witchcraft. If the garden of Eden incident were a fact instead of a myth the fault would not be man's but God's, because God made the conditions, made the man, and knew just what the man would do. The scheme must hav been all worked out in God's mind from the beginning (else does he lack the attribute of omniscience), and he had no intention of letting man be other than he is (else does he lack the attribute of omnipotence), and he is now looking after the man just as much as he did then (else does he lack the attributes of omnipresence and eternal being); so God is the one wholly to blame for the indications that the coming winter is to be one of unusual dissipation. And to hold that he knowingly made men wicked, and knowingly made the eternal hell in which to eternally burn them for being just as he made them, is a most hideous doctrin. If such is a God, what would a devil be?

What is sin? According to the church, it is all "vain and irrational diversions," and a refusal to obey the commands of theologians. It is universal, general, awful, and hateful to God. The latter individual permitted it, however, because he is a "God of truth," and because it will "tend to his own glory." Sin is divided into numerous parts, which are all to be preached against. There is original sin, which comes from Adam, and is conveyed from parent to child, wholly corrupting all natures; there is actual sin, which is a violation of God's laws—formulated, of course, by the theologians; then we hav sins of omission and commission, sins of infirmity of the flesh, secret sins, presumptuous sins, and unpardonable sins, the latter being the denial of the truth of the gospel, or, what is the same thing, the denial of the rightfulness of the rule of the clergy and the refusal to support them. All other sins are trivial compared with the unpardonable sin, and the preaching against them is merely that the people shall not commit this one. A presumptuous sin is pretty bad, for that is doing something "boldly against light and conviction"—in other words, occasionally disobeying the preacher—but the unpardonable sin is simply awful, and he who commits it can never be forgiven, "not because of any want of sufficiency in the blood of Christ, but because such as commit it never repent of it." The condemnation of this sin will undoubtedly be very vigorous.

Redemption, in theological parlance, denotes the recovery from sin, and a willingness to allow the church of God—which is the clergy—to rule our lives. Redemption is the currency of another world, with which preachers pay for their support in this. It being redeemable only in another world, they are safe in passing it, for no one can come back to report the insolvent condition of the bank of issue. The clergy are always willing to swap off treasures in heaven for cash down, as Colonel Ingersoll said, and a revival meeting is their place of exchange. Hence, redemption is preached unweariedly. The moving cause of redemption, the clergy pretend, is "the love of God," but what kind of love is that which made man need redemption, when God could just as well hav prevented his fall from the perfect and sinless condition in which we are assured he created him? The procuring cause of redemption is alleged to be Christ, but if God had not willed that man should sin and suffer and burn therefor he could hav dispensed with Jesus, and the world would hav been much better off, for at the best but few people comparativly use the blood of Christ to buy off the eternity in hell. Most of them are not "saved."

What a vast difference between the conceptions of theology and the teachings of science! In the one we are but the playthings of a big god, made to be damned for his pleasure, and a few only rescued from their fate through the cruel sacrifice of another god. Theologically conceived, the race is wicked, corrupt, with no good in it, and only fit for fuel for hell. Scientifically conceived, the race "began at zero and has been rising ever since." It was never perfect, and never fell. It is not perfect to-day, but is better than ever before. There is no one wholly corrupt, no one without good in him. Sin is not a denial of a book, but an act that entails unhappiness upon the race. It is not a transgression of "God's" law, but a transgression of those natural laws which work for health. There is no sin in dancing, if one doesn't dance too long and sit in a draft after it. Man is not naturally inclined to evil, but the reverse. Cruelty in man is a survival from his savage state, before his moral qualities were developed by experience and when he contended with savage brutes for a subsistence. He has been coming up all the time—is rising now—and one of the obstacles to his progress he has partly overcome is the belief in supernatural creation and subsequent fall from perfection and just such foolish assumption as theologians make in this appeal to the ministers to preach depravity, sin, and redemption. Man was once partially depraved—in a human sense—but he is outgrowing it. He has committed many real sins, causing him great misery, but he never committed a sin against any God, and he is fast learning better than to commit them against himself. He has no need to redeem himself from anything but his own folly in believing priests and the doing of injustice toward his fellows. That redemption, however, he must work out himself, with experience and not supernaturalism for a guide.

Breaking Down the "Sabbath."

Zanesville, Ohio, has been afflicted with a God-in-the-Constitution convention, at which prayers were made thanking God "for the authority and dominion which hav been vested in our lord and savior Jesus Christ," and hymns sung "melodiously cursing God and enduring him forever," and much other dangerous nonsense was indulged in.

One of the most "telling points" was made by the Rev. James P. Mills, district secretary of the National Reform Association, who addressed the convention on the subject of the "Sabbath Reform Movement." The telling point was this: At a late Sabbath convention, a Presbyterian minister told how on a recent visit to Chicago he had interviewed some of the leading members of the American Secular Union and other Infidel organizations. As there was nothing distinctivly clerical in his appearance [so says the report] they conversed with the greater freedom. "I understand," said he, "that you propose to organize for the promotion of your views. What do you propose to do?" "We propose to wipe out the superstition known as faith in God." "Well, you hav a large contract. How do you propose to accomplish it?" "In many ways, but first and chiefly by breaking down the institution of the Sabbath, changing it into a day of pleasure and recreation, a day for parades and games and popular assemblies."

Then he went to see a leading Anarchist. This Tuckerite philosopher "frankly avowed" that the Anarchists "were organized to remove and overturn all civil government, and declared that, among other means, and most important of all, they recognize the breaking down of the general Christian observance of the Sabbath, 'for the Sabbath upholds the church, and the church is the mother of tyranny.'"

The conclusion to be drawn from this alleged similarity of opinion is not plainly stated in the report of the convention, but the inference is, that because an Anarchist agrees with a member of a Secular Union, the member of the Union should be hanged, or at least imprisoned. Such is Christian logic generally, and the speakers of the National Reform Association are logicians of a peculiarly Christian sort.

We doubt, however, that any member of the American Secular Union ever told a Presbyterian clergyman that that organization proposed to "wipe out the superstition known as faith in God." If any Presbyterian clergyman ever conversed with any member of the Union he may hav been told that that particular member proposed to do it, or wanted to see it done, but any member who should assert that such wiping out is a part of the Union's work would show little familiarity with the old or new constitution of the Union. The Union is not an anti-Theistic body, but endeavors to influence public opinion on matters purely human and secular, and mainly governmental. The Union is an organized protest against the incorporation of ecclesiastical demands in our constitutions and statutes. "Wiping out the superstition known as faith in God" is good work, though, and a great many members of the Union are privately and publicly engaged in it. But they do not usually use the language of the rowdy to define their work, and we may be allowed to doubt that any Liberal ever used the words attributed to the Chicago citizen. In order to make the most of its opportunities the human race has got to giv up the idea of supernatural interference in human affairs, and work out its own salvation from poverty and misery by, of, and through itself. Faith in God is a hindrance to development and advancement, because it induces people to rely on something besides themselvs.

The Chicago Secularist's idea of the Union's attitude toward the day known as Sunday is mainly correct, though, coming through the mouth of a Presbyterian clergyman, it is, almost necessarily, coarsely stated. The true statement of the Freethinker's plan for Sunday (it is not a Sabbath) is that on that day every person shall be allowed to do that wh ch seems to him good—to parade, or play games, or assemble with other citizens, to take pleasure and to recreate as he chooses. In other words, to remove from Sunday the religious character and religious restrictions with which religious tyranny has burdened it. It is not proposed to force anyone to do these things, but it is proposed to prevent the pietists from forcing the people to stay in their houses or go to church, which is the effect of the laws now on many state statute books. It is a monstrous invasion of human equality when a parcel of fanatics can imprison men for sawing a stick of wood on Sunday.

A Commercial Barbarian.

The conclusion of a long consideration of the educational question by the Journal of Commerce is this: "When the state cannot establish schools that will train the pupils in the fear of God and in the fundamental doctrins of the Christian religion (and it is conceded that it cannot under our Constitution), we hold that it has no right to appropriate money for their support from the pockets of Christian people."

This is the most foolish utterance yet upon the school question. It puts the fanatical Christians themselvs into a ridiculous position. If they cannot hav their children educated "in the fear of God" and the Christian principles which hav grown out of that fear, they will not hav them educated at all! What nonsense!

The idea of the Journal of Commerce is to abolish all state schools and place the education of the children in the hands of the sects, because "the common school outgrew its usefulness, and its right to exist at the public expense, at the moment it ceased to giv the young committed to it a training in the fear of God. When the teachers could not carry on this, the very highest part of all proper education, the schools should hav been left as the churches were, to the voluntary support of the people." There is, perhaps, little use in reasoning with a man holding such opinions on education; it is giving medicin to the dead. But we may point out that state schools are voluntarily supported by the people. There are certain things which everyone but the editor of the Journal of Commerce regards as of vital importance to be taught to children—such as a knowledge of reading, writing, arithmetic, the proper use of language, a knowledge of the earth's form, products, etc. To educate the children in these, the people established common schools. A lot of fanatical pietists saw in these schools a good medium through which to spread their own notions and force them upon others. So they burdened the schools with religion and intolerantly claimed the right to do so because a "fear of God is the highest part of all proper education." Mark the use of the word proper, for it is the path of retreat for the fanatics when driven into a corner by those who object to paying for education that is not useful; the fanatics holding that education without religion is not proper. But why do the fanatics insist upon having their religion taught in the schools? Are they afraid that the teaching of arithmetic will undo the doctrin of the trinity unless the young mind acquires both at once? Will the geography that upsets the biblical teaching of a flat earth lead to a rejection of the whole Christian religion unless the scholar is trained in that religion at a time when he can readily believe falsehoods? Will a knowledge of astronomy prove a shield against a knowledge of heaven unless the child is mystified with religious dogmas at the same time he is enlightened with truths? Is it possible that the Christian parent knows he cannot teach his religion successfully to a boy with a common school education, and must therefore with every healthful fact hav administered a little poison, as it were, to keep him from being too well? This constantly reiterated demand for religion to go along with secular education is a most damaging admission on the part of Christians. It proclaims as plainly as can be stated, that acquirement of knowledge is fatal to acquirement of religion.

To say, also, as does the Journal of Commerce, that a Christian derives no benefit from schools in which his religion is not taught, is either to utter a very plain lie, or to advance the peculiarly foolish and barbaric opinion that Secular education is worthless. The man who can hold such an opinion, in the face of all the facts and experience of the race, is one between whom and the nineteenth century there is nothing in common; for the whole bent of this age is toward the acquisition of purely scientific and therefore secular knowledge. How many repetitions of the Lord's prayer, for instance, would enable a man to engineer the building of a bridge? How much "fear of God" would it take to survey a railroad route? How many of the "fundamental doctrins of Christianity" go to the construction of a steamship?

And why should not a Christian take advantage of a secular school for his child, supplementing the instruction therein by as much teaching of religion as he pleases? There is no other practicable way, for if common schools be discontinued every parent must educate his children himself, and he must immediately combine with other parents to establish other schools for their children in which should be taught those things the parents held in common. If the parents turned their children over to the sects, there would hav to be a school for each sect, and among Protestant Christians alone there are some one hundred and eighty of these religious sub-divisions, each holding different conceptions as to the "fundamental doctrins of Christianity." Of course the children of parents belonging to one sect could not attend the schools wherein a different sectarianism was taught, and so those parents belonging to sects unable to maintain schools would hav no place at which to educate their children. The Journal of Commerce plan would practically abolish all but a few schools, until the great mass of people who possess common sense but not religion should arouse themselvs and establish secular schools over again.

There is only one practicable way of educating all the children, and that is for the public to maintain thoroughly secular schools, leaving the question of religion with each parent. Such schools cannot be maintained as religious schools, for such a course is admittedly unjust, neither can they be abolished, for that would leave the large majority of children with no place in which to obtain an education. That would be going back to medieval barbarism, when the whole world was Christian and as ignorant as the brute.

Mr. Reid's Jury Disagreed.

The prosecution of Mr. W. S. Reid, at Grand Rapids, Mich., for fraudulent use of the mails in advertising to obtain communications from spirits has resulted in a disagreement of the jury. Mr. Reid's main defense, he telegraphs us, was overruled. It was, we presume, that the trial was virtually a trial of a certain religion.

We shall probably hav a fuller account of the matter next week. Whether the United States will press the matter further depends upon the vindictivness of the prosecution, and how much Holy John thinks he can add to the glory of God by shutting up the priests of another faith. In the mean time Mr. Reid is under bail, and will probably do a greatly increased business among those who believe that men hav spirits and that said spirits can communicate with morta's

In England.

It seems that the information obtained from the London Freethinker as to the cause of Mr. Bradlaugh's resignation of the presidency of the National Secular Society, namely, that Mr. Bradlaugh was forced to make a selection between a Parliamentary and a Freethought career, is not quite accurate. Mr. Bradlaugh states in the National Reformer of November 24th, that,

"I giv up my weekly political and Freethought lecturing because I cannot continue the work they involve and liv. Whether or not I can continue my Parliamentary career will depend on whether I can support myself with my pen. My Freethought record must be for history to judge."

Mr. Bradlaugh is now on the way to India. He will return in time to greet his friends at a meeting called for February 16th, when he will state the reasons for his course more in detail. His health is steadily improving.

Slightly Discouraging.

One of the earliest responses to our appeal for funds to continue is this letter from one whose opinion and person are esteemed very highly indeed in this office—Mr. James Parton. He writes:

"NEWBURYPORT, MASS., Nov. 27, 1889.

"DEAR SIR: I inclose a check for $6 to pay up my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"My impression is: The pictures repel more than they attract. People who like them ought to be religious. They are capable of nothing better. Very truly yours,

"JAMES PARTON."

We shall never forget, and can never adequately acknowledge, the service to Freethought and to THE TRUTH SEEKER rendered by Mr. Parton in those dismal days when D. M. Bennett was in a prison at Albany, and his enemies were using all the methods known to unprincipled men to ruin him. Mr. Parton's chivalric action then well became his noble nature, and it aided Mr. Bennett immeasurably. We like to hav THE TRUTH SEEKER suit him.

Let us hav an expression of opinion on the subject; and we do sincerely hope that all, whether they do or do not like the pictures, will follow Mr. Parton's example as expressed in the first paragraph of his letter.

Mr. Remsburg's Lecture.

The Freethinkers of this city should not forget that John E. Remsburg lectures before the Manhattan Liberal Club, at 220 East Fifteenth street, on Friday evening, December 6th.

A collection will be taken up for the benefit of the Horace Seaver Monument Fund, now being raised by Mr. Mendum. All money contributed on the occasion will be donated to the fund by Mr. Remsburg and the Club.

The presence of Mr. Remsburg and the object of the collection should assure a large audience with generous impulses.

At the close, instead of the usual discussion, the audience will be expected to make the acquaintance of the new officers of the American Secular Union. The president, Dr. Westbrook, with his wife; Miss Craddock, the new secretary; Mr. Mende, the treasurer; the vice-presidents, Hon. T. B. Wakeman, Dr. Foote, Ex-Supt. Public Instruction J. E. Remsburg, and last but by no means least, iconoclastic Juliet Severance, are all expected to be in town then, as the new Board of Directors of the Union will hold its first session on the following day.

It will be a great night for New York.

Prison Conversions.

What a confession it is that the Christian Advocate inadvertently makes in commenting upon the conversion of some eighty or ninety "leading" burglars, forgers, counterfeiters, and pickpockets in the Kingston, Ontario, penitentiary! It says:

"Revivals in the penitentiaries are proverbially transient. The vices and crimes which brought the inmates there are beyond their power while in the institution; their excitements are few, their nervous systems more or less unstrung."

Because of lack of other excitement and unstrung nerves—the consequences of incarceration—criminals can be easily converted. It must be a humiliating thought to Christians generally that men with unstrung nerves are particularly good material for the revivalist, and that lack of other excitement is a potent factor in leading men to Christ. How much are such people worth to any cause? And what is a cause worth which appeals especially to people of that sort?

Editorial Notes.

IF it is not too much trouble to our correspondents, we wish they would condense their articles a little more. Last week as the paper was going to press it was found that another contribution could be printed if it did not exceed a column and a half in length. But out of a great big drawer full of contributed articles there was not one within that bound. An hour or two spent in revising and condensing an article is time well used.

WE said last week that Mr. L. K. Washburn is as good as he is beautiful. We desire now, since seeing his picture in the Freethinkers' Magazine, and to avoid a libel suit from Mr. Washburn, to say that he is better than he is beautiful; for if his character were in keeping with his features therein portrayed, the Investigator editor would probably be in jail awaiting trial for murder, instead of directing the destiny of the oldest Freethought journal in the world. The delineation of his mustache, however, is very fine.

Letters from Friends.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Nov. 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Orthodoxy is so rampant and universal here that I should suffocate without a weekly dose of Liberalism. Heston's cartoons are a great feature of the paper. The Christian religion seems so ridiculous to me that I can never treat the subject seriously, and ridicule seems the most effectiv weapon with which to combat it. JESSE HOOKER.

CARROLL, IA., Nov. 18, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find postal note to renew my subscription to the best Freethought paper in the country. It has got to be a household necessity with me. If everyone could be induced to read Freethought and reform papers and publications of all kinds and get the spirit of investigation thoroughly aroused so they could see the church and government in their true light, the most imaginativ mind could not predict the change that would take place in the next fifty years. For lack of investigation is the only foundation they hav to rest on. There are many that uphold and support them for no other reason than because they always hav, and because their parents did—"and I am no better than they were; if it was good enough for them, it ought to be for me."

Any government that will allow or uphold such a monstrous crime as the hanging of those Anarchists in Chicago has lived long enough—hanged by capital and law for no other reason only they were agitators. The 11th of November, 1887, left a stain on the record of this, the best country on earth, that time will never erase as long as a true sense of justice exists, and Chicago will liv to see a monument erected to their memory when those that murdered them will hav passed away and been forgotten. But a monument of cold marble a hundred years from now is very poor consolation to the wife and children—shoved back by brutality and authority, and denied a farewell word and kiss with husband and father on the very morning he was led to the slaughter.

RICHARD CONWAY.

VINELAND, N. J., Nov. 21, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: As I hav removed from Berlin, N. J., to Vineland, N. J., to spend the little remnant of my life, I wish you to change the direction of THE TRUTH SEEKER accordingly, and permit me to request all publishers and friends who send me papers or letters to address me here, for I am too feeble to write to them all.

Being as deaf as a stone, the Liberal papers and letters I hav received are about all the company I hav had since the death of my beloved companion who walked firmly by my side forty-four years, in the path of Infidelity to the man-made Bible and its man-made God, and bore from the bogus churches almost everything but death because we could not play the hypocrit for the sake of popularity, pretending to believe what was impossible. Will other papers please copy this? As I am now among a more intelligent people I will circulate all the Liberal papers that are sent me, and try to obtain new subscribers.

As our nation is now being ruled by the Bible—that absurd and cruel piece of ignorant and wicked men's crazy patchwork—I see more and more the need of a more aggressiv spirit in the Liberal papers.

Awake, O men and women,
Down with the rotten church;
Leave not a single fragment
On which the buzzards perch.
They hav tortured many millions
With every sort of pain,
And if they gain the power
Will do it o'er again.

Yours, etc., JEREMIAH HAOKER.

NOV. 8, E. M. 289.

MR. EDITOR: A few days ago I gave a friend of mine "The Glory of Infidelity," by Putnam, and he informed me the book disappeared, and as his hired girl had threatened to burn it, he supposes she has done so. The full glory of Infidelity has never been nor can it be published, although Mr. Putnam has given some good hints.

In the last TRUTH SEEKER I saw an account of Lady Prather, who has been a recipient of THE TRUTH SEEKER six months and wants it stopped. She says she wants no paper that assails her best friends and redeemer. Had I sent THE TRUTH SEEKER a couple of times to anyone, and she failed to appreciate its style and indorse its spirit, I would, in the language of the Holy Queer, say, She is joined to her idols, and turn my attention to some one possessed of more integrity. For there is scarcely an article in the grand old TRUTH SEEKER touching the Bible or religion but is so full of logical facts as to send home conviction to the dullest mind. And as Mrs. Prather shows a good deal of mental acumen, there is no alternativ only dishonesty, though it be prompted by reverence for the antiquated or present veneration. Such a person needs a host of redeemers and saviors—unless she has an opportunity to become intimately acquainted with R. G. Ingersoll. He alone might do.

People are constantly saying to us, if we should happen to be wrong and the orthodox right, what an awful thing it would be! etc., and that upon these grounds we hav no right to teach others and especially others' children. Why do not they make the same objections in other matters? There are divers opinions on matters of a secular nature. Why do not they want their children to accept these all upon faith and not examin their claims? On the contrary, doubt and investigation are not harmful, and are taught to be so only by religion.

The Infidels as a rule are conscious of the fact that the safety of our republican government, the purity of its laws, the justice of their administration, our civil and ecclesiastical and, in fact, all the natural rights and privileges we enjoy, are due to the strength of Infidelity. And as it increases our freedom and prosperity, ease and comforts, will increase. And consequently, no matter whose religious, or rather superstitious, corns we tread, our duty impels us forward. EX-REV. JOSEPH N. MAXEY.

GEORGIAVILLE, R. I., Nov. 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Will you please tell me when and where and by whom was the Bible written, and how long will men be made fools of by it? Is it divine or human? We read in Ex. xxxiii, 20: "And he said, Thou canst not see my face, for there shall no man see me and liv;" then again we read: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." I was raised up among the Shakers in Enfield, Conn.; and by the way, that belief is the nearest nothing of any. Their creed is founded upon the Bible and ignorance. They preach that no married man can enter the kingdom of heaven, because Christ did not marry. Those that do marry are not followers of Christ. That faith or doctrin breeds ignorance and crime of the worst form, such as secret vice, as they are not allowed to speak to a woman. "Stay on your own side of the house," is often told the young men. And to sing and dance and work and confess your sins to the elder is about all there is to that faith. Read the Bible, believe in something that you know nothing about. Priest, minister, pope, bishop—away with trash of that stamp. In Georgiaville there is one Catholic, one Baptist, one Universalist church. Nothing but orthodoxy and Roman ignorance reigns. There are but two Infidels in the whole town, myself and another man by the name of Monroe. He is a subscriber of THE TRUTH SEEKER. He receives the paper through a newsdealer. The Baptist pope of the village every now and then gives Ingersoll a going over. When will the time come when their sneers will cease—poisoning the minds of youth with their stuff that benefits nobody? They are trying to hav the Bible read in the public schools of the town, but it does not work worth a cent.

No minister, no pope, no bishop, no church, no God in the government of the United States, and then a happy people we will be. WILLIAM A. BENNETT.

MT. VERNON, ONT., Nov. 17, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I would not think of getting along without THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is victuals and drink, and a lot of fun thrown in, for me, on Sundays as well as the rest of the week. I would take it for the pictures alone, for my six children. All are anxious after them when it comes. Picture-writing is ancient but picture-reading is easy and modern. The children take the pictures all in. Ridicule and ridiculous pictures are the very best sort of battering-rams to attack the old monstrous mud-walls of Christianity in particular, and religion in general, with.

This country next to Spain is under the thumb of the pope and the Catholic church. Quebec is the proper place for the old pope to come to when Italy becomes too hot for him. Pope Leo XIII. and several of his successors could liv cozily here for years. All political parties bow and scrape to the Catholic church, and it is disgusting to see our leading politicians licking the great toe of the pope, so to speak. We hav in Ontario separate schools for the Catholics and public schools for the other believers. The Catholic bishops hav a lot to say in the running of the public schools as well as their own.

Schools are opened and closed here with prayer and Bible-reading—which, by the way, is one of the main things we Liberals should kick against night and day, and keep on kicking until we kick the dirty old Bible and all its belongings out of our schools. Why should we be insulted in our families by such impudence as forcing our children to listen to the worst of nonsense, prayer and Bible reading? Our school readers are here well interlarded with religious twaddle of the orthodox type. Thanks to Mr. Charles Watts, editor of Secular Thought, who is doing much to lift the cloud of the Dark Ages off this pious land, we shall soon hav churches and their belongings taxed. Next will come public schools for all (no separate schools), free from all religious taint. Wishing you every success, I remain,

Yours truly, JAMES S. PALMER.

MARTINSBURG, W. VA., Nov. 17, 1889.

EDITOR: Liberal friends, enlisted as we are in the great Freethought movement for Universal Mental Liberty, I desire, in common with your noble efforts, to do all I can by my honest conviction to secure to all who are willing to receive the delightful luxury of mental liberty, which the Christian and nominal believer do not dream of. The first thing in order to secure this liberty is the ability to doubt, and is intellectual bravery. We as Freethinkers must speak for ourselvs. We are fighting for individual sovereignty—the complete liberty of man from superstition and religious delusions. Reform is our motto—revolution in thought. One thing is settled, and that is, Christianity cannot prove what it teaches to be true. It is universally admitted by scientific and rational thinkers, and even many Christians, that it is impossible to prove there is a God, heaven, and hell. Therefore, there is nothing but faith to go by. This is sufficient for millions who will liv and die in mental slavery, but the brave minority of independent thinking men and women in this and other countries believe only by the evidence that is revealed in their every-day life, and not by ancient sayings of irresponsible men of things and events so far back that they cannot concern modern life. When we look back into the past it is nothing but mist and uncertainty. The truth cannot be found in that direction. The only safe and wise course is to look forward to the future. Science and Freethought are nobly investigating, as far as they can penetrate, the hidden secret of life and death. We must go by the evidence as rational beings, and not by faith, which is more characteristic of the savage than of inteliigent, rational minds. The only thing not needing evidence is myth. When the hidden truth cannot be seen, the only sensible way is to go by the evidence as it is shown—that testimony we see, feel, and understand. And like an impartial jury, we must likewise giv the popularly accepted belief in God and Christianity a fair, impartial trial. Such has been done for hundreds of years, but the Christian claims of a heaven and hell are entirely unsupported by proof. The greatest amount of testimony is against the belief of any other life. Nature seems to be all in all. The process of life and death goes on unexplained. The real truth, which alone can make us free, cannot be revealed. It is known, and that by experience, that we are obliged to be our own savior; that the God so long believed in cannot be found. Thousands perished at Johnstown last summer because fate was stronger than the savior of myth. Christianity teaches and admonishes man that unless he trusts in God he will fail in all his efforts. Failure will result if he does not pray and ask God's aid. This claim is false. I know by experience and observation that if we all possess knowledge, prudence, and self-reliance, and pursue certain courses in life, happiness and success must result. It is only the unsuspecting and unwary who fall into so-called temptation. Individual reformation is of experience and not of God's grace. Happiness is purely a natural quality, and is not born of belief or unbelief. The subject of praying is the great prop of Christianity. In all the calamities and sorrow in this world not one prayer has ever been proved to hav been answered. The united prayers of all Christians in this nation could not save the life of President Garfield from his fatal wounds. Just simply because we exist and see the wonders of nature is not evidence that there is a God. That will do for the savage, but not for the rational, analytical mind. I hav lived to see the day that I sincerely believe the sooner sensible people dismiss this unproved idea in a future life the better it will be for humanity.

THOS. J. CONNERS.

BALTIMORE, MD., Nov. 16, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: You will pardon me for intruding upon your time with the following lines, but I deem the present occasion a fit one to forward you a scrap of information as to some of the interesting remarks made by the very prominent prelates of the Catholic church at the one-hundredth anniversary of the Catholic hierarchy, which has just about come to a close, having been in session for about three days in this city. The occasion has been watched, of course, by the entire secular and non-secular populace throughout the globe. I forward you only a few clippings from the address made by Archbishop Ireland, in which he says: "Our work is to make America Catholic. If we love the church, to mention the work suffices. Our cry shall be, God wills it, and our hearts shall leap with Crusader enthusiasm. We know the church is the sole owner of the truths and graces of salvation. The Catholic church will confirm and preserve as no human power or human church can the liberties of the republic." Also from Rt. Rev. R. Gilmour, bishop of Cleveland, at the dedication of the University on Wednesday, Nov. 13, 1889: "As Catholics, poverty and limited numbers left us crippled, and the terrific struggle to provide lodging and religious attendance for the immigrant estopped the possibility of higher education. Added to this the organization of the public schools, which Catholics could not in conscience use, thus imposing upon them the unjust burden of building for themselvs and supporting separate schools, whilst they are taxed for the public schools. Catholics hav no contention with the public schools because they are public schools, nor because they are state schools, nor do Catholics seek to destroy the public school. On the contrary, Catholics are willing to accept the public schools in America, as they hav done in Europe and elsewhere, on condition that an arrangement be made by which the child shall be taught religion and the laws of morality."

As I know there are many able minds who contribute to your paper, and who perhaps hav not noticed the details of this congress, I venture to giv you this bit of information, for some one on the side of progress to comment upon.

CHAS. MEHLGARTEN.

WILKESBARRE, PA., Nov. 18, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: My literary and scientific friend, J. A. Tuttle, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has paid me another of his compliments in your issue of the 16th inst., and suggests that as "Mr. Perry needs rest and good nursing after his laborious and successful efforts to win glory and renown in the fields of science, I will commend him to the tender care of the spirits," etc.

Now, my dear sir, do not be in so much of a hurry. You seem anxious to get rid of me when I am only upon the threshold of the temple of science. I was in hopes I could induce you to enter in and study a few of the subjects that you say you neglected from boyhood.

Mr. Tuttle is one of those fortunate persons who cannot be cornered. He is like one of the species of animals who feel their way by means of projecting nerve tentacles. The moment he blindly encounters anything, he becomes frightened and immediately retreats into less dangerous quarters. You could no more catch him than you could put your finger on the Irishman's flea—"When you put your finger on him, he isn't there." Then he has a fashion of saying things, or putting them into my mouth, which I never said or thought of. He says: "If attraction is the cause of gravitation, it is obviously the cause of all motion, and all motion is attraction. Hence attraction, gravitation, and motion are synonymous." I do not think that any man could put more absolute nonsense into that many words than is done by the above, and yet this man has the Jumbonian cheek to assert that "this is what Mr. Perry's theory is, as nearly as I can understand it." Now, either his comprehension is decidedly limited, or he is devilishly tricky, to build up such a man of straw, which he then proceeds to batter down, and after the great feat proclaims himself a "great slugger." To attempt to argue that because attraction is the cause of motion therefore it must be the only cause of motion, is too simple to attempt dispute upon, when any schoolboy must know that there are millions of causes which produce motion—yes, and in the department of chemistry alone they are innumerable, beyond computation.

But Mr. Tuttle tries to show an inconsistency in me, because I show a different cause for gravitation than ponderosity of matter. He says in substance: To the senses, matter seems to hav weight, and therefore if Mr. Perry will prove that ponderosity is not the cause of gravitation, he is at the same time denying the evidence of his senses, hence the inconsistency! Now, my dear Mr. Tuttle, this shows me that you do not understand evidence, and I will try to explain what the evidence of a man's senses is, and show also that some men's senses are very limited, while those of others are much enlarged. If you look at the savage, you find his senses in a very low and crude state, and his knowledge correspondingly limited, simply because he has not brought all of them into play in the observation of facts and the acquisition of truth. Now to illustrate, if a savage puts a straight stick into the water, where the light can shine upon its surface, the stick from the surface under the water will appear to be bent into an angle, and so it will appear to anybody, if only the one sense of sight is brought into play. But if another sense is brought into the account, that of feeling, and if he will run his hand beneath the water, he can not feel any bend in the stick. So we find that the surface of the water and the sun's rays, or daylight, cast upon the surface of the water, will account for the apparent discrepancy of the senses of sight and feeling. The resultant is of course what we term knowledge, and thereby we are taught not to deny the evidences of our sense of sight but to bring into the investigation of every subject as many, or all, of our senses as we can, in order to gain truth. So I might say in regard to the rising of the sun, it does appear to rise. But by the observation of the stars and planets, and the variability of their motions, as they diminish until we reach the North star, it proves to us that our earth is revolving instead of the sun, as we might suppose at first sight. But here, as before, we are not to deny the evidence of our sense of sight, for we use the same organs of vision in different directions to prove that we are moving instead of the sun, by establishing the facts of observation as we approach the North star, noting the motions as we go along—which also proves the rotundity of this earth. The law is, not to deny the evidence of any one sense, but to bring them all into play in order to discover truth and establish scientific knowledge. And science means the classification of facts, which can be established only by the evidences and comparison of our senses, or reasonings and inferences therefrom. The bent stick is just as truthful a fact as any other, showing that the rays of light strike the water at an angle to its surface, and the eyesight would lie if it did not show the crook in the stick.

In the study of subjects of scientific import, all the evidences of the senses must be considered and compared. For this reason so many persons, otherwise well qualified and disposed, fail to understand the phenomena of Spiritualism. They bring only one, or sometimes two, of their senses into play in its investigation, and hence nearly always fail to get truthful results. For instance, I might see two slates moved about upon a wooden table, and thumped around, as I hav, without the least contact with any human force which I could see, and conclude that the force must be akin to electricity or some hidden mechanical device, but if on opening those slates I found an intelligent message purporting to come from my dead son, with his full signature, and such characteristic knowledge as I knew he possessed, that would be a subject, or a phase, to demand my most earnest attention, especially if I were a total stranger to the medium or person through whom these phenomena took place. It is no more the mere motions that I am studying, but the intelligence they hav imparted. And this should be the touchstone of all our efforts, Hav the phenomena any intelligence? There is no subject in this world which requires a more candid mind, or a more intelligent one, or which is of so much importance to the present life, as the study of Spiritualism, and the person who writes merely for the purpose of sneering or quibbling, or for the purpose of vanity, is unqualified to do so, and it were a waste of effort to attempt to argue such a question with him. And for this reason, also, some of the greatest minds to be found in some branches of learning are so prejudiced that they are entirely unfitted to tackle it. The best way in those cases is to let such persons ripen out until they are in a better frame of mind to study or talk upon such a subject, and as the spirits are not at all anxious to convert such ones to a belief in a future state of existence they usually address themselvs to those who are of an inquiring mind and not so pompous but that they may be instructed. For this reason I never attempt to argue with one represented by the characteristics shown by our friend, J. A. Tuttle. This is my reason.

In writing about attraction it is well understood that I meant it as a cause of planetary motion, and as the law pertains to bodies in contiguity to our earth. And I think any ordinary mind, who read my illustrations, should see that I hav clearly established the fact of attraction being the cause of motion on all bodies having relation to this earth, for even the particles of an explosion ultimately descend toward the earth.

There is one point, however, which I desire to explain in reference to matter within the earth's attraction, and I think this will take the gas out of Friend Tuttle's explosion, to which he refers. If a man took scales and attached them to a bar of iron weighing one thousand pounds, and then lifted nine hundred and ninety-nine pounds and fifteen ounces, he would yet fail to lift the weight, or break the contact of the bar to the earth, as he would still lack one ounce of doing it. So it proves that no matter what force may be applied by way of attraction operating upon our earth, unless it is greater than the whole earth in force, it cannot move it at all. But as the attractiv force of the sun is greater than all its planets it produces motion, and all bodies would in time be drawn upon it but for the fact that at the same time we are moving toward the sun. The sun is also in constant motion, which is in turn governed by the laws of universal motion and equilibrium. Weight, or ponderosity, is therefore not a property of matter. It is the magnetic force resident in the magnet which draws the bar of iron to its surface when that bar is brought within the magnetic sphere, as in the horseshoe magnet or as in the telegraphic instrument. The fact that a bar of iron can become magnetized or demagnetized instantly by contact with the battery is evidence of what I hav been stating, Mr. Tuttle and his scientific speculations and his sense-evidence ideas to the contrary notwithstanding.

And now, if Mr. Tuttle can rest peacefully under his evident defeat, and not feel ashamed of himself for exposing his breast to the shafts of common sense and accepted truth, I am content to remain in the care of the spirits to whom he has recommended me. J. R. PERRY.

CINCINNATI, O., Nov. 17, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Although not a subscriber, I hav been reading your excellent paper for more than two years, and am convinced that you are a learned scholar and honest man, and that you really try to make the world better. Thus much for my opinion of yourself and THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hav now to say something of myself and of my conversion to the holy Catholic faith. When I began to entertain the opinions on theology which you hold at present I supposed Infidelity was something wholly different from what I now know it to be. Although Freethought must be credited with having made kind and good husbands out of worthless sots, and although the Infidels I know are more honest and kind and hav more sympathy with the poor and oppressed than most Christians hav, still your system has one great defect—it has no divine authoritativ teaching. I hav discovered that reason is defectiv, that it misleads, and hav therefore selected the holy Catholic church, which teaches by divine authority, to be my guide and to do all my thinking (at least on religious questions) for me. How did I discover that reason cannot be depended upon? Why, just this way: I observed that there could be no consciousness or thinking when there was no blood coursing through the brain, and taking J. S. Mill's axiom of inductiv logic, "Whatever antecedents cannot be excluded without preventing the phenomena are the cause or part of the cause of the phenomena," as true, I arrived at the conclusion that death ends all. You certainly will admit that this conclusion is legitimate and is true if reason is to be taken as a guide. But since actual ghosts and spirits and other supernatural beings come to us in dark rooms through the agency of mediums, you must conclude our reason is wrong and leads astray. I warn you not to place any confidence in this faculty. It is of the devil, and it might not be quite pleasant for you when on your deathbed (there you will ere long be) to think that you hav rejected the divine authoritativ teachings of the holy Catholic church.

I write to warn you and your readers that the penalty for rejecting the authority of God or his priests is eternal damnation. I should indeed be sorry to see such a wise and good man as you perish for want of faith. Faith, dear Editor, is the gift of God. He givs to whom he will, but if you hav not faith our offended maker will surely not hold you guiltless. You will perhaps answer that since faith is the gift of God, it would be unjust to punish you for not having what it was necessary for him to giv to you ere you could hav it. To this I reply, that divine justice is quite different from human justice. God is not bound to show us either goodness or mercy, for he is all-powerful. What he shall do with us after death does not depend upon works, for only faith is pleasing to him; it depends upon his caprice, and good works are not rewarded. I will now treat of dogmas of holy church.

1. It is undeniable that the pope is infallible, for our Lord said, "Peter, thou art the rock. Satan has desired thee that he might sift ye as wheat." Holy church asserts by divine authority that our Lord conferred the privilege of being infallible on all the popes when he said that although private interpreters do not draw that conclusion, nor think the text can be made to mean that.

2. It is undeniable that the holy Catholic church teaches by divine authority, for our savior said, "He who does not hear the church let him be to you a publican and sinner," etc.

3. It is undeniable that there is such a place as purgatory, for our Lord said, "The sin against the Holy Ghost shall never be forgiven." Therefore all other sins will be forgiven, and as holy church has decreed that to her alone has been given the power of getting souls out of purgatory, and as her authority is of divine origin, we her children do not hesitate to obey and follow her.

I might go on in this way to prove the truth of every other doctrin of the holy Catholic church, but space forbids.

I will now say a little about the authenticity of the Bible. I will show that Jesus rose from the dead. After he was dead three days and three nights he again appeared (or at least they say he did), like modern spirits and ghosts, among his disciples. He was with them forty days. He, however, took care not to be seen by the unbelieving Jews, as they would doubtless hav killed him. Our Lord thought it better to show himself in dark places only, and at night, when the eyes are of little use. They could not be deceived, for he told them to handle him and to thrust their hands into his side. You must not doubt this miracle, seeing it is recorded in our sacred books, and this (i. e., the Testament) is sufficient authority to prove anything. Now, as I hav overwhelmingly established the resurrection of the savior, or at least shown that the Bible says he rose, you will certainly not be amazed when I ask you also to grant his ascension up into heaven after the forty days.

Jesus was the messiah. Proof—a series of wonderful prophecies were either literally or allegorically fulfilled in him. It is quite true the Jews maintain that the passages claimed by us as being prophecies of our savior hav no reference to him, but this only shows that they are enemies of Christ our savior and that they will not under any circumstances admit him to be the messiah. Besides, Whiston, an Infidel himself, has proved that the Jews altered the Old Testament so as to make the prophecies hav no reference to our savior.

Jesus did miracles. Proof—look into the New Testament. You will learn that angels and devils had almost taken exclusiv possession of Judea simply for the purpose of showing our savior's power in subduing them. If the Jews and the heathens in that country did not see these devils and these angels which then walked the streets of Jerusalem, this must not be attributed to the fact that there were no such devils or such angels as are said to hav hopped about in the New Testament, but rather to a supernatural blindness. The fact that our savior raised several from the dead in public before enemies shows that he was no fraud.

He was born of a virgin (see Isa. vii, 14, fulfilled in New Testament). Why, is there anything incredible in this? Were not Christna, Buddha, and others born of virgins? Did not the God of this universe send an angel (Gabriel) to Mary to tell her he would marry her and that she should hav a child by him? Read the New Testament, first chapter.

With respect to the Old Testament I will only say that it is even better authenticated than the New, if possible. There we find the infinit spirit condescending to speak to a small tribe of Egyptian savages called Jews, and also giving his servant Moses laws whereby to govern his herd of wild men. The creator of all worlds manifested himself to the Jews daily. He frequently performed miracles in their behalf, and often led them on to battle. There could be no deception, since they had sufficient opportunity to investigate whether what they saw was true. If further evidence for the truth of holy scripture is needed, I can amply supply you with it. That God appeared to Moses and his little tribe of chosen Hebrews can, I believe, hardly be doubted—at least, not by such as receive the holy scriptures as authority. For instance, the infinit showed his back parts to Moses and Moses spoke to him face to face at one time. Moses and Aaron and Nadab and another Hebrew scholar saw the God of Israel, and they did eat and drink. Here we find that the Jews had ocular demonstration, and it is therefore our duty to believe in divine revelation.

I think that I hav said enough concerning Christianity and Judaism so that I am justified in speaking of the Bible and the men called "scientists" (falsely so called). I hav observed, sir, in the books written on geology by "scientific" Infidels that they are always devising new schemes of interpreting so as to giv authority to their false theories. For instance, these men do not take scripture as it stands and as the writers meant, but they impose on Moses a meaning that was never in his mind. For instance, the word "day" is made to mean a long period—though Moses expressly states that the days he has reference to were ordinary days of twenty-four hours each, for he says they had an evening and a morning. God says in the Ten Commandments that we (or rather the Jews) are to keep the Sabbath holy, for, says the text, in six days the Lord made heaven and earth and on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed. For in six days he made heaven and the earth and all that in them is and rested from his work and hallowed it. This is as plain as language can make it. God distinctly declares he worked six days and therefore the Jews should. He says he rested the Sabbath day and hallowed it; therefore they were to do so likewise.

It is useless for you Freethinkers to torture scripture to support you, since any Christian can expose the folly of it. I verily believe, sir (and if no evidence is brought forward by you I shall continue to suppose), that this earth is only six thousand years old. Moreover, I do not believe it is round at all, since scripture, which is the highest authority on all matters it treats of, plainly avers the earth is flat. It is useless to say Columbus went around the world, since that is rather begging the question. You must prove its rotundity before you can get me to believe in it. With respect to the age of this "globe" (so called), I say that geologists cannot prove it. They merely make assumptions. The deluge, sir, is a fact. There is evidence that there was just such a flood as is described in the Bible (see Bagster, Comprehensiv Bible). He (Bagster) shows that the evidence of its universality is most incontestable. The moose deer, for instance, a nativ of America, has been found buried in Ireland. Elephants hav been found in the Arctic ocean on the coast of Siberia. Explain how this could be if there were no flood. I ask for light. I am no bigot, sir, and would be very glad to receive a reply to this in next week's TRUTH SEEKER. I trust we can differ in opinion without hating each other. If I hav made any errors, please expose them in THE TRUTH SEEKER. JAMES BIRD.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower.
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Solid Counsel.

IN A BOY'S ALBUM.

Many men are shameless sharpers,
And will rob you of your labors;
Be cautious of all your harpers,
Trust not too much in neighbors.

In whatever path you move
Do what your thought can best approve,
Keeping even with the throng,
Take your pay as you go along.

Ne'er in heaven be your debit,
Too long is her doubtful credit;
Do not mind the parson's racket,
Find your heaven beneath your jacket.

Love your friends, look out for foes,
There is no argument in blows.
Learn to know and act the truth,
And ever keep the cheer of youth.

Springfield, Mass. JOHN PRESCOTT GUILD.

A Visit to Philadelphia.—Continued.

Returning from Girard College, in a rainstorm, in making connection with another car the attention of our party was called to a couple of angry boys who were exercising their muscles in pugilistic style, to the great delight of a grinning crowd of men and boys. Oh, how fierce and brutal they appeared! Like two wild beasts they flew at each other, tearing, scratching, and kicking at a furious rate. Could they hav seen themselvs as they appeared to the calm beholder, they would certainly hav been ashamed of themselvs, and their conduct.

The next day, Bethia and I visited the Academy of Fine Arts, which was founded in 1805. It is a perpetual feast to look upon the wonderful and beautiful creations upon the walls of the galleries in this building.

Here was a conception of "Ariadne" asleep on a mossy bank, so lifelike that one almost thinks she breathes, while on another wall is "Hero and Leander," by Kockart, holding the gaze by its mute, heavenly beauty. The "Festival of Song," by Brewer, seemed aglow with animation, and the picture of "Mentor," a dog who saved a man from drowning, calls for appreciation of the noble in the animal. "Orestes pursued by the Furies" is full of passion and pain, and the life-size pictures of the "Christ Rejected," by that great artist, Benjamin West, and the same after the descent from the cross, by Thomas, is full of expression. The scene from the massacre in Paris in 1792 is terribly impressiv. The story of it is that Sembruil, an aristocrat, is condemned to die. His daughter rushes in and implores that her father's life be spared. Her wish is granted only by her consent to wetting her lips in the blood of the murdered aristocrats.

From the galleries our party went into the School of Art and Design. A recitation was going on, and a pupil came in dressed in a costume after one of Oscar Wilde's esthetic fancies, and posed while the class made sketches of her. The drawings showed remarkable quickness and comprehension of the idea.

One day we went over to Camden, just across the Delaware river, to see the "good gray poet," Walt Whitman. Camden is a curious old town, with fine wide streets and many old-fashioned houses. In one of these plainest of plain homes, surrounded not by the emblems of wealth, but stern poverty, dwells the great poet. The front door is narrow, and the paper is torn in places off the walls of the small entry-way. We were ushered into the little sitting-room by Mrs. Davis, a pleasant lady, who keeps the house and has charge of the poet, who is an invalid, as you may know. The furniture is simple and unostentatious, consisting of a stove, a table, a sofa, and a few chairs. The mantel over the fireplace is filled with photographs, and some are of distinguished persons. Above his armchair on the wall are paintings of Mr. Whitman's father and mother. Opposit is an unframed portrait of himself by Millet, a plaster cast of his own head by S. H. Morse, the great sculptor, and statuets of Grant and Garfield. A sewing-machine tells that sometimes Mrs. Davis comes in to sew, and—maybe I shall tell tales out of school, but a long-stemmed pipe on the window-sill indicates that the poet is a smoker as well as a rhymer.

"Everything has a scent of its own, even the snow, if you can detect it," and when Mr. Whitman came in, walking feebly, with two canes, the gentleman shone through his infirmities, and we felt we were in the presence of one of the interpreters of nature's moods and expressions. But he is more the poet of the future than of the present, and coming generations will wonder why he was left to suffer in pain and want while the world of nature of which he sang so well had enough and to spare. The appearance of Walt Whitman is most striking. Tall, square-shouldered, with a large head, mild, grayish eyes, in which the light is soft and mellowed like the twilight, long white hair, and a white flowing beard, he reminds one of the casts of heads of the old Roman emperors.

Our interview with the great poet will always be a memorable epoch in our lives. Such a man, as Thoreau says, "it takes ages to make and ages to understand." We purchased some of his books, as he depends now for his sustenance upon their sale. He is seventy years old, infirm and feeble; he is wasting slowly away, and is ready to go when the time shall come, feeling that his work is now about completed. As we came away, he gave to each of our party a photograph of himself, a souvenir of our visit which we shall all treasure as long as we liv. When we requested his autograph in the books we purchased, he said, smilingly, "Why, yes, of course, if you wish it. Where's the pen?" As he sat writing, the picture he presented was a fine one. He wears the wide, Byronic collar edged with lace, unfastened at the throat, and wide, loose cuffs are folded back from his wrists. His gentle but dignified manner, the expression of his countenance, his whole bearing, indicates vigor of thought, independence of character, decision, firmness, and a great love for universal mental liberty.

(CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.)

What the Little Ones Are Saying.

Officer Society for Preventing Cruelty to Children: "I am hunting for a family who, I am told, are compelling a three-year-old child to learn the Russian language." Resident (Slum court): "I know 'em. They liv in room 63." Officer (wrathfully): "The brutes! What is their name?" Resident: "Kuoskiwoskivitz. They are Russians." Officer: "Oh! Um—er—very fine weather we're having."

A little boy in a Milford school received his first day's instruction last week. Before night he had learned to recognize and spell one word. "Now," said the teacher, "you can tell your grandmother to-night how to spell 'ox.'" "My grandmother knows how to spell it," indignantly replied the loyal little fellow; "she's teached school."

Mamma: "Bobby, I notice that your little sister took the smaller apple. Did you let her hav her choice, as I told you to?" Bobby: "Yes, I told her she could hav the little one or none, and she chose the little one."

Mrs. Sadface to Tommy (who had stolen a jar of preserves): "My boy, I know you are sorry. I see it in your face." Tommy (meditativly): "Yes, mamma, I am. There was a bigger jar on the shelf that I couldn't reach."

Correspondence.

GRANTFORK, ILL., Nov. 8, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: It has been some time since I wrote a letter to the Corner, so I thought I would write a few lines.

There are four Freethinker families in Grantfork. Pa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I like to read the Corner. My little sister has a kitten; its name is Eva; it has two black ears. We liv on the corner of School and Main streets. My mother died seven years ago. My eldest sister keeps house for us. I think the boys and girls of the Corner ought to write more and make the Corner more interesting.

We take the Freethinkers' Magazine. I like it very well. I think it very good. Well, I will close. I remain,

A true Liberal friend,
EDWARD R. MAXEY.

OAK MILLS, KAN., Nov. 10, 1889.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Esteemed Friend: I extend to you many thanks for your kind words, which I indeed appreciate. The last TRUTH SEEKER was a valuable one. Mr. Eugene Macdonald is just the man to edit the grand old journal. What keen and logical articles he writes! My father is a great admirer of Mr. Macdonald, and I hav often heard him refer to the genial editor as a man of many good qualities. Mr. Macdonald's last editorials were excellent. The articles by Colonel Ingersoll, J. Hacker, W. Perkins, James K. Magie, Joseph Felix Gonzales, T. E. Longshore, and others, make the last copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER an exceedingly interesting one.

I went to church last Tuesday night just for amusement. The preacher put in his time vilifying the Infidels, and he said that no young man would ever amount to anything unless he had "faith in Christ." He gave Ingersoll as an example, saying that when he ran for Congress he was defeated because he lacked one necessary qualification and that was faith in Christ. I would like to ask this haughty minister if such men as Humboldt, Bacon, Copernicus, Galileo, Bruno, Shakspere, Newton, Voltaire, Franklin, Paine, Hume, Rousseau, Diderot, Frederick the Great, Washington, Jefferson, Gibbon, Goethe, Girard, Volney, Burns, Comte, Carlyle, Lincoln, Hugo, Emerson, Garrison, Garibaldi, Huxley, Spencer, Tyndall, and others, possessed this so-called "necessary qualification." I suppose he would hav the "brass" to claim them, but he cannot prove that they were religious men. Nevertheless, if Colonel Ingersoll's lack of "faith in Christ" does prevent him from standing in the halls of Congress, I challenge this minister to find a better, abler, and more honest man than Colonel Ingersoll is. But even if Ingersoll was not elected Congressman, has he not made his mark in this world? Lack of "faith in Christ" did not prevent him from being the greatest and most eloquent orator of the age. If Ingersoll is never elected to Congress his oratorical ability will entitle him to the highest renown.

I was sorry to hear of the Hon. Charles Bradlaugh's serious illness, but my heart was soon gladdened by the report that he is better, and I hope the next report will be: "Charles Bradlaugh has recovered." Eugene Macdonald truly says: "American Freethinkers are about as proud of their champion in England, as they could be if they themselvs benefited from his successes," etc.

Hoping you will accept this humble contribution, I remain,

Your true friend,
GEO. J. REMSBURG.

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25.

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FAITH AND REASON.

A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.

With elaborate index.

By HALSEY R. STEVENS.

A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained in such compact form.—[Literary Review.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Ingersoll and the Deist

BY

A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."

Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE

Cosmian Hymn Book,

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

PRICE, ... $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ANTICHRIST.

PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

MATERIALISM AND CRIME.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, 5 cents.

AN OUTLINE OF THE

French Revolution

ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

By W. S. BELL.

Paper, 12mo, 25 cents.

MORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

IMMORTALITY OF ITS ELEMENTS.

By A. S. de Pellegrini.

Paper, - - - 15 cents.

PHILOSOPHY of SPIRITUALISM

AND TREATMENT OF MEDIOMANIA.

By F. R. Marvin, M.D.

Cloth, ... 50 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY.

By VOLTAIRE.

Terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of theological terms.

Price, 25 cents.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY EXPOSED.

By REV. G. T. FOX, M.A.

15 cents.

PRO AND CON OF

Supernatural Religion.

Have We a Supernatural, Inspired, Miraculous Religion?

By E. E. GUILD.

Paper, 20 cents; cloth, 30 cents.

PYRAMID OF GIZEH.

Ancient Egyptian Civilization and Hebrew Narrative in Genesis and Exodus.

By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D.

Price, 15 cents.

QUESTION SETTLED.

BIBLICAL and MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

By MOSES HULL.

Price, 60 cents.

Rational Communism.

THE PRESENT AND FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

Advocates associate life and employment as a preventive of vice, crime, poverty, etc.

By A CAPITALIST.

Paper, 493pp., 50 cts.; clo., $1.

Relation of Witchcraft to Religion.

By A. C. LYALL.

Price, 10 cents.

Fruits of Philosophy.

POPULATION QUESTION.

By Dr. Knowlton. Edited by Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant.

25 cents.

TRUTH. A Poem. By E. N. Kingsley. 10 cents.

POVERTY: Its Cause and Cure.

How the Poor May Attain Comfort and Independence.

By M. G. H.

Price, . . 10 cents.

Religion of Inhumanity.

With a Glance at the Religion of Humanity.

BY FREDERIC HARRISON.

Price, 15 cents.

RELIGION:

The Gibraltar of the World, as Now Constituted.

By George T. Bondies.

With

Exceptions to the Character of Christ as a Gentleman.

By W. T. Purviance.

25 cents.

IMAGE BREAKER.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Six Lectures.

Decline of Faith.
Protestant Intolerance.
Washington an Unbeliever.
Jefferson an Unbeliever.
Paine and Wesley.
Christian Sabbath.

Each, 5 cents; bound, pap., 25 cents; per doz., 40.

SABBATH BREAKING.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, 25 cents.

St. Matthew Before the Court

FOR THE CRIME OF FORGERY.

By SECULARIST.

Price, . . . 10 cents.

SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.

Including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, Bible.

By D. M. BENNETT.

(From Vol. II. "Gods and Religions.")

333pp., pap., 60 c.; clo., $1.

For all of the above books address

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 558 West Madison st., Room 1, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co.. 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.
Horace Haynes, Leslie.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 331 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.
C. Stocker, 29 Vauxhall Road, Liverpool.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

The Individualist.

A LIBERAL AND REFORM JOURNAL, ADVOCATING SOCIAL REGENERATION AND INDUSTRIAL EMANCIPATION.

Devoted to the rational exposition of the philosophy of Freedom, mental, moral, and physical; social, industrial, and sexual. Commands the pens of the best writers in America on these subjects. Sixteen pages. $2 per year. Trial subscription three months, 50 cents. Each yearly subscriber will receive a copy of Mr. Stuart's book, "Natural Rights, Natural Liberty, and Natural Law." Address F. Q. STUART, Editor and Proprietor, 1653 Blake street, Denver, Col.

THE HUMBOLDT LIBRARY
—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

No. 1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.

No. 2. Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. (19 illustrations). By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, author of "The English Constitution."

No. 4. Man's Place in Natnre, (with numerous illustrations). By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Rev. Charles Kingsley.

No. 7. The Conservation of Energy, (with numerous illustrations). By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.

No. 8. The Study of Languages, brought back to its true principles. By C. Marcel.

No. 9. The Data of Ethics. By Hebert Spencer.

No. 10. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music, (numerous illustrations), By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.

No. 11. } The Naturalist on the River Amazons. A record of 11 years of travel.
No. 12. } By Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S. (Not sold separately).

No. 13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alex. Bain, LL.D.

No. 14. The Wonders of the Heavens, (thirty-two illustrations). By Camille Flammarion.

No. 15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.

No. 16. The Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 18. Lessons in Electricity, (sixty illustrations). By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 20. The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.

No. 21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes and Men. By Samuel Wainwright, D.D.

No. 24. [illegible] led). By Prof. H. Helmholtz.

No. 25. The Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Oxford University.

No. 26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.

No. 27. The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.

No. 28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. (numerous illustrations). By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.

No. 29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology, (numerous illustrations). By Andrew Wilson, Ph.D.

No. 30. } The Study of Words.
No. 31. } By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen.

No. 34. The Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird, Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and Others.

No. 36. Lectures on Evolution. (Illustrated). By Prof. T. H. Huxley.

No. 37. Six Lectures on Light. (Illustrated). By Prof. John Tyndall.

No. 38. } Geological Sketches. By Archibald
No. 39. } Geikie, F.R.S.

No. 40. The Evidence of Organic Evolution. By George J. Romanes, F.R.S.

No. 41. Current Discussions in Science. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S.

No. 42 History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock.

No. 43. Darwin and Humboldt. By Prof. Huxley, Prof. Agassiz, and others.

No. 44. } The Dawn of History. By C. F. Keary,
No. 45. } of the British Museum.

No. 46. The Diseases of Memory. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

No. 47. The Childhood of Religion. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.

No. 48. Life in Nature. (Illustrated). By James Hinton.

No. 49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. By Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.

No. 50. } Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By Prof. W. Stanley Jevons,
No. 51. } F.R.S.

No. 52. The Diseases of the Will. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.

No. 53. Animal Automatism, and other Essays. By Prof. T. H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.

No. 55. The Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 56. } Illusions. By James Sully.
No. 57. }

No. 58. } The Origin of Species. } Two Double
No. 59. } By Charles Darwin. } Nos.

No. 60. The Childhood of the World. By Edward Clodd.

No. 61. Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 62. The Religions of the Ancient World. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Univ. of Oxford. (Double number).

No. 63. Progressive Morality. By Thomas Fowler, LL.D., President of Corpus Christi Coll., Oxford.

No. 64. The Distribntion of Animals and Plants. By A. Russell Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.

No. 65. Conditions of Mental Development: and other essays. By Wm. Kingdon Clifford.

No. 66. Technical Education: and other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. By J. F. C. Hecker, M. D.

No. 68. Three Essays. By Herbert Spencer. Special Number.

No. 69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze, Ph.D. Double number.

No. 70. Essays Speculative and Practical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 71. Anthropology. By Daniel Wilson, Ph. D. With Appendix on Archæology. By E. B. Tylor, F. R. S.

No. 72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.

No. 73. Evolution in History, Language and Science. Four Addresses delivered at the London Crystal Palace School of Art, Science and Literature.

No. 74. } The Descent of Man, and Selection in
No. 75. } Relation to Sex. (Numerous Illustrations)
No. 76. } By Charles Darwin. Nos. 74, 75, 76 are
No. 77. } single Nos.; No. 77. is a doub e No.

No. 78. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. By William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.

No. 79. Scientific Aspect of some Familiar Things. By W. M. Williams.

No. 80. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work By Grant Allen. (Double number).

No. 81. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two Essays by J. Allanson Picton.

No. 82. Illusions of the Senses: and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 83. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six Essays. By Sedley Taylor, M.A.

No. 84. Studies of Animated Nature. Four Essays on Natural History. By W. S. Dallas, F.L.S.

No. 85. The Essential Nature of Religion. By J. Allanson Picton.

No. 86. The Unseen Universe, and the Philosophy of the Pure Sciences. By Prof. Wm. Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 87. The Morphine Habit. By Dr. B. Ball, of the Paris Faculty of Medicine.

No. 88. Science and Crime and other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

No. 89. The Genesis of Science. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 90. Notes on Earthquakes: with Fourteen Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 91. The Rise of Universities. By S. S. Laurie, LL.D. (Double number).

No. 92. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the Action of Earth Worms. By Charles Darwin, LL.D. F.R.S. (Double number).

No. 93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. By J. Mount Bleyer, M.D. (Special number).

No. 94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 95. The Diseases of Personality. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

No. 96. A Half-Century of Science. By Prof. Thomas H. Huxley, and Grant Allen.

No. 97. The Pleasures of Life. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart.

No. 98. Cosmic Emotion: Also the Teachings of Science. By William Kingdon Clifford. (Special number).

No. 99. Natnre Studies. By Prof. F. R. Eaton Lowe; Dr. Robert Brown, F.L.S.; Geo. G. Chisholm, F.R.G.S., and James Dallas, F.L.S.

No. 100. Science and Poetry, with other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

No. 101. Æsthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. By Jas. Sully and Geo. Croom Robertson.

No. 102. Ultimate Financc; A True Theory of Co-operation. By William Nelson Black.

No. 103. The Coming Slavery; The Sins of Legislators; The Great Political Superstition. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 104. Tropical Africa. By Henry Drummond, F.R.S.

No. 105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. By Ernst Haeckel, of the University of Jena. With a Prefatory Note by Prof. Huxley.

No. 106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. By Grant Allen.

No. 107. Ultimate Finance. A True Theory of Wealth. By William Nelson Black.

No. 108. English, Past and Present. Part. I. By Richard Chenevix Trench, (Double number).

No. 109. English, Past and Present. Part II. By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolntion. By Edward Clodd. (Double number).

Single Nos. 15 cents; Double Nos. 30 cents.
Nos. 1 to 111 inclusive, cloth, plain edges—separately or together—10 vols., $2 per vol
Also same in cloth, extra, red edges, gold back—in sets only—13 vols., $1.75 per vol.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York

The Agnostic Annual
FOR 1890.
Edited by CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS.

Agnosticism and Immortality.....Samuel Laing.
A Sonnet.....Joseph Ellis.
Who Was Moses?..H. J. Hardwicke, M.D., F.R.C.S.
The Comfort of Agnosticism.....E. Lynn Linton.
Are Miracles Credible?...Constance C. W. Naden.
The Contest Between Agnosticism and Theology, John Wilson, M.A.
Above: A Poem.....W. Stewart Ross.
The Evolution of the Agnostic Idea, R. Bithell, B.Sc., Ph.D.
The New Fatalism.....B. Russell.
Descartes's Proof of the Existence of a God, F. J. Gould.
A Poem.....W. B. McTaggart.
The Free Expression of Opinions..G. F. Underhill.
Fragments.....William Maccall.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

TRY-SQUARE;
OR,
The Church of Practical Religion.
BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

ICHABOD CRANE PAPERS.
Daringly witty and inexpressibly laughable onslaughts on Christianity.
Price, 10 cents.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration,
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.

It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Sixteen pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $2. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only 1.50.
SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.
SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.
HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.
SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.
HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.

Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

The Liberty of Printing, and Reply.
BY HUBLBUT and WAKEMAN.
Price, 10 cents.

New Publications.

Unless otherwise specified, all publications noticed here can be had of THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, at the prices named.

Leo Haefeli, of Ogden, Utah, has written and compiled a pamphlet which he calls "As You Like It." Its contents are thus described by the author in the preface: "There is a sop for the earnest thinker, a bite for the admirer of stately iambic monolog, a spoonful for the lover of 'occasional' sonnet and acrostic rhyme-artifices, a taste for the friend of the dimpled-cheeked laughing Comus, a welcome flavor for the loyal patriot, a morsel for the shrewd financier, a piece or two for the fair reader of storied love, and above all and for all, from the very entree, the savory, incense-like odor of praise for all who know and therefore love Ogden, the Queen City of the Great Salt Lake basin." Mr. Haefeli is a journalist of Freethinking proclivities, and his book is a sort of reflection of his various moods and humors. It can be had of the Union Printing and Publishing Co., Ogden, Utah, for about 50 cents.

"Ready for Business, or Choosing an Occupation," is Mr. George J. Manson's ideas, embodied in a series of practical papers, of the way young men should look at the serious question of how to achieve business or professional success in the world. Mr. Manson reviews the various trades, businesses, and professions which are attractiv to the youth, considers the opportunities afforded by each, shows what is to be done in order to acquire a knowledge of them, how much education is necessary, and how it can be obtained, the opportunities for employment and the chances for success. He does not attempt to indicate what is the best line to follow, but rather to show what is to be done and how to do it, to enter upon any one life-pursuit, so that when a young man has the matter under consideration he may know what he has to contend with, or to do in order to succeed in that to which he feels he is the best adapted after studying himself and the various pursuits of life carefully. Price, 75 cents.

"Every-Day Biography," is a collection of brief biographies arranged by the days of the year, and indexed by names, so that one can find the persons written of and also readily determin whose birthday any given date is. "Would you know, for instance," say the publishers, "what persons of eminence were born on the 20th of May, turn to the page on which that date occurs, and you will find Henry Percy ('Hotspur'), Dorothea P. Madison, David Dudley Field, John Stuart Mill, Antoinette Brown Blackwell, Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, each of these having a short sketch, indicating the nature of his or her distinction." To which we may add, would you know the date of Ethan Allen's birth, turn to the index and the page on which he appears is before you. The people of whom these sketches treat are those who hav lived in modern times, and the book is therefore a very useful compilation, so far as it goes, for the student, teacher, and writer. The sketches, however, are so brief, that the work is put in the category of dictionaries rather than in the list of biographies. Price, $1.50.

"The Esty Family." By Sara E. Hervey. Of this book the editor of the "Children's Corner" writes: "'The Esty Family' is the title of a book the highest object of which, the author declares, 'is to encourage all honest and earnest desire in the young to carry out their loftiest ambitions and to seek to rise above the mere commonplace drift of everyday life.' The family consists of a mother, three daughters, and two sons, each of them bright and intelligent enough to make a way in the world. One son is an Episcopal clergyman. The outline of several sermons is given in the book, showing him to be a man of better and broader views than the church he represents. The oldest daughter is a physician, and not only wins her own way, but helps others to rise also. The trend of the story is toward a more liberal religious faith, is mild in tone, and in sentiment will undoubtedly please Reformed Episcopalians, Universalists, Spiritualists, and the followers of Christian science. May this venture prove so successful that the author will feel encouraged to write a sequel to the fortunes of the Esty family very soon." Price, $1.

"Progressiv Essays on Popular Topics of Our Age," by Prof. H. M. Kottinger, is a book of 328 pages, not including the Errata. The essays are on Public Schools, Natural Science, Political and Social Questions, Religion, and History and Biography. The book is what our esteemed religious contemporary, the Independent, if he knew how to spell the word, would call gallimaufry, or as Shakspere wrote it, gally-mawfry, a medley of inconsistent materials. Why Mr. Kottinger should hav given us funeral addresses, accounts of trips to the Hot Springs, and criticisms of McGuffey's Readers in a book of general principles is not plain. Perhaps it is because he wrote them. The design of the book is not at once apparent, and it is difficult to perceive the class of readers it will appeal to. But, like Mr. Kottinger's previous works, the matter is of the plain common-sense order, and the instruction imparted is useful, if not unique. The book contains many excellent hints as to the best methods of educating children, and in the more philosophical essays the conclusions are those approved by the keener students of nature. Price, $1, published by Mr. Kottinger at San Jose, Cal.

The Rev. Henry Clay Mabie, D.D., has written a small book which he calls "Romanism in Four Chapters, together with An Open Letter to Archbishop Ireland." It is the attack of a Protestant on Catholicism, and while the attack is not without substantial reason, it is made from a wrong standpoint, and Mr. Mabie is as open to a retort in kind as is Archbishop Ireland, whom he excoriates. It makes no difference to the victim whether he is persecuted and deprived of his rights by an organization known as the Catholic church, or in the name of "God" and under authority of the Bible. Intolerant Protestant shrieks against "the Mother of Harlots" are nowadays taken at their proper worth. The National Reform Association is as much an enemy of human liberty as the pope's organization; the Protestants hav done a little persecuting themselvs; and both Protestant and Catholic hav ever been conscienceless robbers of public treasuries. Mr. Mabie tells much truth about the sinister purposes of Rome, and any Catholic priest can as reasonably impeach his own church. "Romanism" is published by T. J. Morrow, 20 North 4th st., Minneapolis, Minn., and ought to be sold at 50 cents.

Our next-door Christian neighbors, Fords, Howard & Hulbert, hav published a book called "An Appeal to Pharaoh." It deals with the race problem of the South—the ineradicable differences between whites and blacks—and, as one would expect from the title, is in favor of letting one of the peoples go; of course, that one being the negro. The plain proposition is to induce the negroes to go back to Africa and the mulattoes to some other place—say one of the Antilles. The government would hav to help them, certainly, and the good Christian whites could still patronize them with missionaries It is not proposed—that is, just now—to use force to send the colored men and brothers and sisters away, but if they wouldn't go, why, some of the inducements to remain could be withdrawn, and in that way the author expects the "nigger" could be got rid of, and the white church-goers of the South would also hav their race problem settled; for it is just a little inconvenient to hav the supposititiously un-Christian attitude of the churches which refuse fellowship to the blacks thrown up to them by scoffers who want to know if a soul in a black body isn't as good as one in a white body, and what Jesus would hav thought of the haughty course of the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, South. That a good many Southern people besides some Northern Christians would like this settlement of the so-called problem is evident by the kindness with which the book has been reviewed by a few Southern journals; but that such sentiment is general is certainly not expected by the publishers of the book, as they send along with it a circular beseeching for it at least a reading. It looks, therefore, as if the book was not written to supply a long-felt want, but rather to create the want, and then supply it. However, if anyone wants a book of the sort, he will find this well-written, plausible, and interesting, as many phases of the matter are considered: the reckonings of numbers; of cost; of the desirability of certain fresh territory now being opened up to civilized industry and commerce; of the restlessness of the blacks and the organized efforts to start enterprises of emigration and colonization by colored men, and thus the probability of their willingness to go; modes of inducing them, and methods of helping them—these and many other things, as the circular recites, are touched upon and some discussed with elaborate care and citation of facts and statistics. But the scheme looks to us like one to benefit the pious politicians who will handle the funds to move the negro, and the pious church authorities who claim the moral guardianship of the negro, and who when they hav settled him in Africa will be eternally begging the government and people for funds with which to go over and convert him, when the painful fact is that he already possesses too much religion and too little honesty, and his revivals being orgies of immorality. Like Blair's educational scheme, there is more to it than appears on the surface, and besides making the government the keeper of a colossal poorhouse, it would involve the country in almost endless complications. The price of the book is $1.

Morality and religion hav mostly been taught together. But they should not be taught together. They should not be mingled and confounded. They are two totally distinct things. Morality is one thing. Religion is another. Morality is our duty to our fellowmen. Religion is our supposed duty to supposed supernatural beings. Morality aims at making others happy. Religion aims at making one's self happy by securing entrance to heaven. Morality is unselfish. Religion is selfish.

As religion is now waning, and leaving vacant its place in human attention, morality is extending itself over that vacant place. Thus it is doubling itself. In doing this it has to furnish codes of unmixed morality in place of those codes which were half religion and half morality—or supposed morality. Of these new codes, some hav been written. But those that hav been written are few as yet. Great numbers must be written. A vast scientific literature of morals must grow up, and occupy all the attention that was formerly monopolized by religious literature. The movement to produce this literature is now taking a start. The American Secular Union has done nobly in agitating the matter, and we hav great hope in the moral manual that it will soon present us. In the mean time, three Manuals hav appeared elsewhere. We consider this movement, the substitution of morality for religion, a very important one.

The smallest of the three new Manuals is Mr. John S. Hittell's, published by the Bancroft Company, of San Francisco. Mr. Hittell aims to do for this age what Epictetus and Marcus Aurelius did for their times. He has not wholly succeeded, but the attempt is praiseworthy. Exception will be taken to his dicta by many of the present moralists, more especially those of a radical turn of mind, for Mr. Hittell is very conservativ in his ideas of what is moral and best for people to do, and his book is perhaps more properly a compendium of good advice, or an epitome of what is commonly received as morality, than a basic outline of real morality. A good deal of Christian "morality" is sham morality, and a violation of some of its dogmas is more truly moral than their observance. And the basis of its teaching (the idea of divine authority) is wholly immoral, for the welfare of the individual and the race, and not the pleasure of a god, is the real and scientific mainspring of morality. Mr. Hittell has not attempted, except in a limited and general way, to emphasize this new view, his teaching being dogmatic rather than explanatory. The advice given, however, is good, and young men and young women should study the book thoroughly. He treats of Individual Duties, Social Duties, Industrial Duties, Political Duties, and Religious Duties. Anarchists, Socialists, Communists, and Christians will find no support in the volume. The three first-mentioned, indeed, will claim that he is unfair to them. Christians cannot claim this, however, as there is little in common in thought between Mr. Hittell and the theologians, the latter basing their moral structure upon supernaturalism, while the author of "A Code of Morals" denies the existence of the basis. Mr. Hittell sums up his book thus: "If it was evident to Cicero, Seneca, Epictetus, Marcus Aurelius, and their contemporaries, that virtue was the only road to the highest pleasure in life, the proof, with the aid of the additional light of intervening centuries, should be a hundredfold clearer to us." All of which is true enough, but still the question remains unanswered, What is Virtue? This Mr. Hittell has not told us, though he tells plainly enough how to liv what the world calls virtuously. But we hav known very virtuous men to be very immoral, if, as is the case, morality should be based on individual and racial happiness. The price of the book is 25 cents.

Another manual, with more pretentious design, is Mr. Austin Bierbower's "The Virtues and Their Reasons." It is written with the ambition that it may divulge a system of ethics for society and schools. With the exception of too frequent reference to Christ and Christianity as authority for his words, Mr. Bierbower's book is also a good one. He is cautious in formulating the "ground and rule of right," not apparently pronouncing between the theory that it is a course in harmony with the necessary order of things, or the dogma that it is a course in harmony with the "will of God," or the holding of Utilitarians that the happiness or general good of mankind is true morality, but really pronouncing for the latter by saying that it is "enough to observe that, whatever men's opinions touching the ground of right, they all deem those things right which are thought best for men, and consider that course morality which will bring them most happiness."

The book is divided into a consideration of the "Duties regarding others chiefly," and the "Duties regarding self chiefly." In the first he deals with the usual subjects, such as Kindness, Truth, Honesty, Family Duties, Public Duties, with numerous subdivisions concerning Love—family, friendly, and sexual; Beneficence—generosity and charity; Vices Antagonistic—hate, envy, anger, cruelty, etc. In the second, Self-Development, Industry, Self-Support, Self-Control, Temperance, Self-Respect, Purity, and Conscientiousness are treated also with special subdivisions. Like Mr. Hittell's, the book is crowded with good advice, and substantiated with reasons generally sound, though dogmatic teaching is occasionally indulged in and erroneous reasons sometimes given for right actions, due probably to a thread of Christian authoritativness left in Mr. Bierbower, and to his deep but mistaken respect for Christ as a moral teacher—the fault of early training and a lack of clearness in his analytical reasoning. He fails to meet, in his references to Jesus, even the commonest of the objections to that alleged individual's teachings. And some of his pronouncements as to right action are totally wrong, owing to faulty conceptions of the rights of the individual and his duty to others. But, on the whole, Mr. Bierbower's book is, as we said, a good one, and far superior to the general teaching of so-called moralists. The price is $1 50.

The third book of what is intended to be moral teaching is John Lord Peck's "Kingdom of the Unselfish." It is not a manual, but rather a consideration of man's social condition in all its aspects, with especial view to a renovation of society through a renewed moral impulse. However, we should speak rather of a reformed moral system than of a renewed moral impulse. For Mr. Peck designs not merely that the impulse be made fervent and moving, but also that the intellectual element of morals, the science which tells us what is right or wrong, be to some extent remodeled. The range of subjects treated is marked out in twenty chapters, with such headings as these: The Reliable and the Unreliable in Thought, an introduction to the whole; The Evolution of Morality, two chapters; Independence, as the condition of morality; Pride; Intellectual Immorality; Conceit and Self-Righteousness; Natural and Social Selection, five chapters, a treatment of the industrial situation; Love, two chapters; Religiosity and Religion; Conversion and Salvation; Artosity and Art; God; Immortality; Human Perfectibility.

Mr. Peck is a Liberal, a land reformer, a social readjuster, and thinks the world at present is pretty near being upside down. It is the object of his book to restore it to its right position, and in the main it is valuable for that purpose. He seems to recognize clearer than Mr. Bierbower the distinctions between the individual and society, and would carefully protect the former while obtaining for the latter all the results due it from those advantages of nature which man cannot create, and a monopoly of which is scarcely less than robbery by material and mental force of the weak and unthinking by the strong and unscrupulous. The book is only one of a large number of "reformatory" volumes now being printed, but it is better than many of them as being more rational and moderate in its tone. Price, $1.50.

Prof Loisette's

MEMORY

DISCOVERY AND TRAINING METHOD.

In spite of adulterated imitations which miss the theory, and practical results of the Original, in spite of the grossest misrepresentations by envious would-be competitors, and in spite of "base attempts to rob" him of the fruit of his labors (all of which demonstrate the incomparable superiority and popularity of his teaching), Prof. Loisette's Art of Never Forgetting is recognized to-day in both Hemispheres as marking an Epoch in Memory Culture. His Prospectus (sent post free) gives opinions of people in all parts of the globe who hav actually studied his System by correspondence, showing that his System is used only while being studied, not afterwards; that any book can be learned in a single reading, mind-wandering cured, etc., For Prospectus, Terms, and Testimonials, address

PROF. A. LOISETTE'S, 237 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.

LIFE OF

Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND,
LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL

Price, 25 Cents.

THE

Bible of Nature,

OR, THE

Principles of Secularism.

A CONTRIBUTION to the RELIGION of the FUTURE.

BY PROF. FELIX L. OSWALD,

Author of "The Secret of the East, or the Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline," "Physical Education, or the Health-Laws of Nature," "Household Remedies," "The Poison Problem, or the Cause and the Cure of Intemperance," etc., etc.

Felix L. Oswald is a well-known and vigorous writer on scientific and social subjects.—[Cin. Com. Gazette.

Cloth, 12mo, 240pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS

OF

HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in the Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

POINTERS:

A POCKET CYCLOPEDIA,

CONTAINING

Tables, Rules, Practical Hints, and Historical Sketches, for Farmers, Mechanics, Machinists, Merchants, Housekeepers, and the Public Generally, with

Numerous Maps, Illustrations, and Diagrams

Illustrating some of the more Important Comparativ Statistics of the World.

More Information for Less Money than has ever been offered.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

For $50 worth of "Cold Facts" boiled down in a Nutshell. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 188pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: ow suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By D. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR HOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

AN HOUR WITH THE DEVIL.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Price. - - - 10 cents.

THE

UNIVERSE ANALYZED

By JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,

Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.

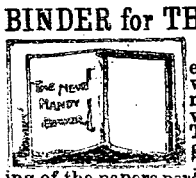
The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productiv of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,



OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.

Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Argument by R. G. Ingersoll

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

At Morristown, New Jersey.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents: paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES:

A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price. - 25 cents.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday afternoon in the Hall of Cramer's Block South Howard street, at 3 o'clock.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Elizur Wright Secular Union

Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10.30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club

Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

The Newark Liberal League

Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st., Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

Cleveland, O., Secular Union

meets every Sunday evening at 7:30, at room 29, City Hall, for lectures and free discussions on religious and social subjects. The public cordially invited.

DIAMONDS.

Unprecedented offer. No other house so fair In order to giv my Liberal friends throughout the United States an opportunity to examin, test, and compare my goods and prices with those of other diamond merchants, I will sell any piece of Diamond Jewelry, accompanied by contract that cash in full will be refunded any time within one year from date of purchasing if goods are not entirely satisfactory. No other dealer will do it. None will sell as cheap. Carrying a large stock, being an expert, close buyer, and doing business on smallest possible expense, you will positivly save twenty to thirty per cent by purchasing of me. Diamond Pins and Eardrops, worth $600, for $400; Pins, Rings, Eardrops, Studs, Hair Ornaments, Pendants, worth $300, for $200; do., worth $200, for $140; do., worth $150, for $110; do., worth $100, for $70; do., worth $80, for $60; do., worth $60, for $45; do., worth $40, for $30; do., worth $30, for $22; do., worth $20, for $15. You can wear these goods daily for one year, It will not cost you a cent. If in the mean time you are not satisfied that the goods are better and cheaper than sold elsewhere return and get your cash in full.

Selections sent to responsible parties on approval; to any banking-house or C.O.D., privilege of examination.

The "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

sixteen jewels, finely adjusted to heat and cold, patent regulator, Brequet hair-spring, beautiful double-paneled dial, and all modern improvements. Perfect, and no watch will compete with it! In silverine case, $19; in four-ounce coin silver case, $23.50; five-ounce, $25; six-ounce, $27. In open face, best filled gold case, $27; hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV., $35. In fourteen carat solid gold, $50 to $150. Sent prepaid, and cash refunded if not satisfactory.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.
Established 1857.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 160 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, Eng.

THE JEWS AND THEIR GOD.

"The Jews and their God stood on the lowest plane."

Price, 10 cents.

News of the Week.

GREENWALD, the murderer who is to be hanged at New York next Friday, has entered the Roman Catholic faith. He was baptized on the 29th ult. by Father O'Hara, and when the ceremony was concluded held a long conference with him.

ALL the provinces of Brazil hav signified their adherence to the new government.

Two hundred and fifty miners that were entombed in Westphalia hav been rescued.

THE Minneapolis Tribune building was burnt on the 30th ult., and ten to twenty lives were lost.

IMMIGRATION for the first ten months of 1889 was 378,140, against 473,172 for the same period in 1888.

CUBA has had riots arising from differences between aldermen, and between military and civil authorities.

FORTY per cent of the population of St. Petersburg, including the czar and czarina, are suffering from influenza.

ARCHBISHOP LABISTIDE, of Mexico, has sent to Spain for five hundred priests, as though he thought the nativ ones useless.

A CONVENTION of Baptist preachers at New York on the 25th ult. discussed the Catholic congress with sentiments so friendly to Catholicism as to occasion remark.

AT Burlington, Ia., on the 24th ult., Arthur Bosler became insane from a religious excitement that had been growing upon him since a late revival.

ON the 27th ult. a snowstorm commenced at Montreal that was the hardest for fifteen years, and from there extended into the United States.

REPUBLICANS in Portugal purpose to imitate Brazilians and overthrow their monarchy. They are said to hav 17,000 members and 97 activ committees.

IN the French chamber of deputies a Radical has moved that a grant of 750,000 francs be given the striking miners, and amnesty for strike offenses be declared.

KANSAS newspapers are endeavoring to compel the Missouri Pacific railroad to publish its reports as enjoined by law. Kansas railroad commissioners seem to hav connived in their suppression.

ON the 28th ult. Boston suffered one of the most destructiv fires of late years. A considerable extent of ground in the business district was burnt over, with a loss of $5,000,000. Firemen and others received a number of injuries, some fatal.

To the Jesuit organs now in existence—among the chief of which are the Month of London, the Lyceum and the Irish Monthly of Dublin, and the Messenger of the Sacred Heart of Philadelphia—a new one called the Monthly Review will be added by the Jesuit fathers in America next month.

LYNN, Mass., on the 26th ult. had its business portion destroyed by fire. There were burnt 42 brick blocks and 112 wooden blocks. Among the buildings destroyed were the central railroad station, four banks, three newspaper offices, one church, and 120 factories—the loss of which latter throws 8,000 men out of employment.

ACCUSATION has been made against a large number of aristocrats and military officers in London that they hav been meeting at a house for shockingly immoral purposes. Among the accused are Prince Albert Victor, Lord Arthur Somerset, and the earl of Euston. The radical party and press will push the charges, as aidant in their work of ridding England of its nobility.

GODS AND RELICIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo. 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

WHATEVER way my days decline,
I felt and feel, though left alone,
His being working in mine own,
The footsteps of his life in mine.
—Tennyson.

MAN'S body is dust,
But his soul livs in his works.—Voss.

IT is impossible to leave the history of witchcraft without reflecting how vast an amount of suffering has, in at least this respect, been removed by the progress of a Rationalistic civilization. . . . We hav to conceive, above all, the awful shadow that the dread of accusation must hav thrown on the enfeebled faculties of age, and the bitterness it must hav added to desertion and to solitude. All these sufferwere the result of a single superstition, which the spirit of Rationalism has destroyed.—Lecky's History of Rationalism.

TAKE the further gain to humanity consequent on the unbelief, or rather disbelief, in witchcraft and wizardry. Apart from the brutality by Christians toward those suspected of witchcraft, the hindrance to scientific initiativ or experiment was incalculably great so long as belief in magic obtained. The inventions of the past two centuries, and especially those of this nineteenth century, might hav benefited mankind much earlier and much more largely but for the foolish belief in witchcraft and the shocking ferocity exhibited toward those suspected of necromancy.—Bradlaugh.

THE most powerful consideration with a truly benevolent man, if he be a Christian, for the extirpation of heresy by force, is the belief that its unfortunate victims will suffer unending torments in hell. Not for a few days, not for a few years must they suffer, but forever. Under the burden of such an awful thought can the sincere, kind-hearted Christian fold his arms and look calmly upon the efforts of men who are spreading unbelief or heresy in every direction, who are not only going to hell themselvs, but are taking with them thousands of their fellow-men? Is it not natural that the sincere Christian, having the power, should suppress such opinions?—B. F. Underwood.

NEITHER the Austrians nor the frugal Spaniards are by nature a bloodthirsty race. But the dogma of exclusiv salvation left them no choice. It made the suppression of unbelief a sacred duty; for, if the propagation of erroneous doctrins could doom thousands to an eternity of unspeakable, incomparable, and hopeless tortures, the objections founded upon such scruples as compassion with the short sufferings of a condemned heretic must hav assumed an appearance of almost idiotic futility.—Prof. Felix L. Oswald, M.D., in The Secret of the East.

THEOLOGY is a science profound, supernatural, and divine, which teaches us to reason on that which we don't understand and to get our ideas mixed up on that which we do.—Voltaire.

MINISTERS are, for the most part, engaged in poisoning the minds of the young, prejudicing children against science, teaching the astronomy and geology of the Bible, and inducing all to desert the sublime standard of reason.—Ingersoll.

SCIENCE ascribes to natural causes, what theology ascribes to supernatural ones.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

EVERY religion has for its foundation a misconception of the cause of phenomena.—Ingersoll.

I DO not believe that any two men, on what are called doctrinal points, think alike who think at all. It is only those who hav not thought that appear to agree.—Paine.

THE church that does not allow investigation, that teaches that all doubts are wicked, attains unity through tyranny, that is, monotony by repression. The boast of unity is the confession of tyranny.—Ingersoll.

ECCLESIASTICS likewise claimed and exercised the right of private war. . . . On many occasions, the martial ideas to which ecclesiastics of noble birth were accustomed, made them forget the pacific spirit of their profession, and led them into the field in person at the head of their vassals. The dignified ecclesiastics . . . bore arms, led their vassals to the field, and fought at their head in battle. Among them the priesthood was scarcely a separate profession; the military accomplishments which they thought essential to them as gentlemen were cultivated; the theological science, and pacific virtues suitable to their spiritual function, were neglected and despised. —Robertson's Survey of the State of Europe.

BISHOPS were concerned in assassinations, poisonings, adulteries, blindings, riots, treasons, civil war.—Ingersoll.

OUTSIDE man is no salvation.—Feuerbach.

WHEN man has been helped, man has done it.—Ingersoll.

SAMSON ASKETH A FAVOR OF HIS PARENTS.

And he came up and told his father and his mother, and said, I hav seen a woman in Timnath of the daughters of the Philistines; now, therefore, get her for me to wife.—Judges xiv, 2.

Odds and Ends.

GATHERING CHESTNUTS.

The funny man sits at his desk all day,
And works in a silent, industrious way;
And out in the woods the squirrel light
Is gathering chestnuts from morn till night.
—Washington Capitol.

A KY. CUSTOM.

Way down in the state of Kentucky,
Afar where the Cumberland rolls,
The people select,
The social elect,
Serve Rye in the Fin-
Ger
Bowls. —Life.

SOME good, religious folk, says the Tribune, are so intensely solemn that they can't realize how funny they sometimes are. Here is a Sunday-school leaflet whose topic is Christ's triumphant entry into Jerusalem, in which a great deal is made of the statement in the narrativ that the Lord had need of an ass. And then the lesson ends with this remarkable appeal: "If the Lord had need of an ass, do you not think he has need of you?"

WHAT WONDER?

Young Digby went to Vassar
To lecture to the girls;
And there, in fine orations, showered
A wealth of wisdom's pearls.

But soon his courage faltered,
And went into eclipse,
What wonder, when five hundred girls
Were "hanging on his lips?" —Time.

THE BIGGEST ONE.

I caught a string of beauties
Up on the North Fork to-day,
The finest trout that were e'er pulled out—
But the Biggest One Got Away!

And down in the mill pond meadow,
The boys that were making hay,
With forks and rakes kill 3,000 snakes—
But the Biggest One Got Away!

And so I hav heard of liars
Since Ananias's day,
There are just a few that receive their due—
But the Biggest One Gets Away!
—C. F. Lummis.

THE LADIES AT ELECTION TIME.

If registrars were ladies,
With eyes as black as hades,
Fair and petite,
With laughter sweet,
As many a Buckeye maid is,

A simple invitation
To come for registration
Would bring all men
With ink and pen
With trifling hesitation,

Whate'er the voter's trade is,
Or his complexion's shade is,
He'd go and sign,
In rain or shine,
If registrars were ladies.
—Columbus Dispatch.

JOSHUA BARNETT was a wag and a religious orator, and possessed a prodigious memory. Uncle Josh, as he was generally called, had an appointment to preach one Sunday at an out-of-the-way log school-house in his neighborhood, and two noted lights of a rival denomination attended the meeting for the purpose of criticising the sermon. One was named Jones, the other Warman. Uncle Josh, who, it appears, was aware of their intentions, concluded to checkmate them, and instead of preaching a sermon he commenced repeating from memory and without any comment whatever one of the epistles of St. Paul. For nearly an hour chapter after chapter fell from his lips accompanied by a grave and decorous gesture and intonation. Brother Jones at the end of some thirty minutes arose with grave disapproval written all over his face and retired from the house, and took a seat in the yard upon a barkless and prostrate tree, which was used as a horse-block. Brother Warman stood it some ten minutes longer, when he, too, arose and joined Brother Jones. "Well, Brother Warman, what do you think of such a sermon?" said Brother Jones. "Think?" said Brother Warman, "why, I think if the good Lord will forgiv me this time for listening to such rotten doctrin, I will never be guilty again."—Jetico News.

MELISSA'S MISADVENTURE.

Melissa Melinda McCann
Projected a laudable plan
To reform woman's dress
On a standard no less
Than the models affected by man.

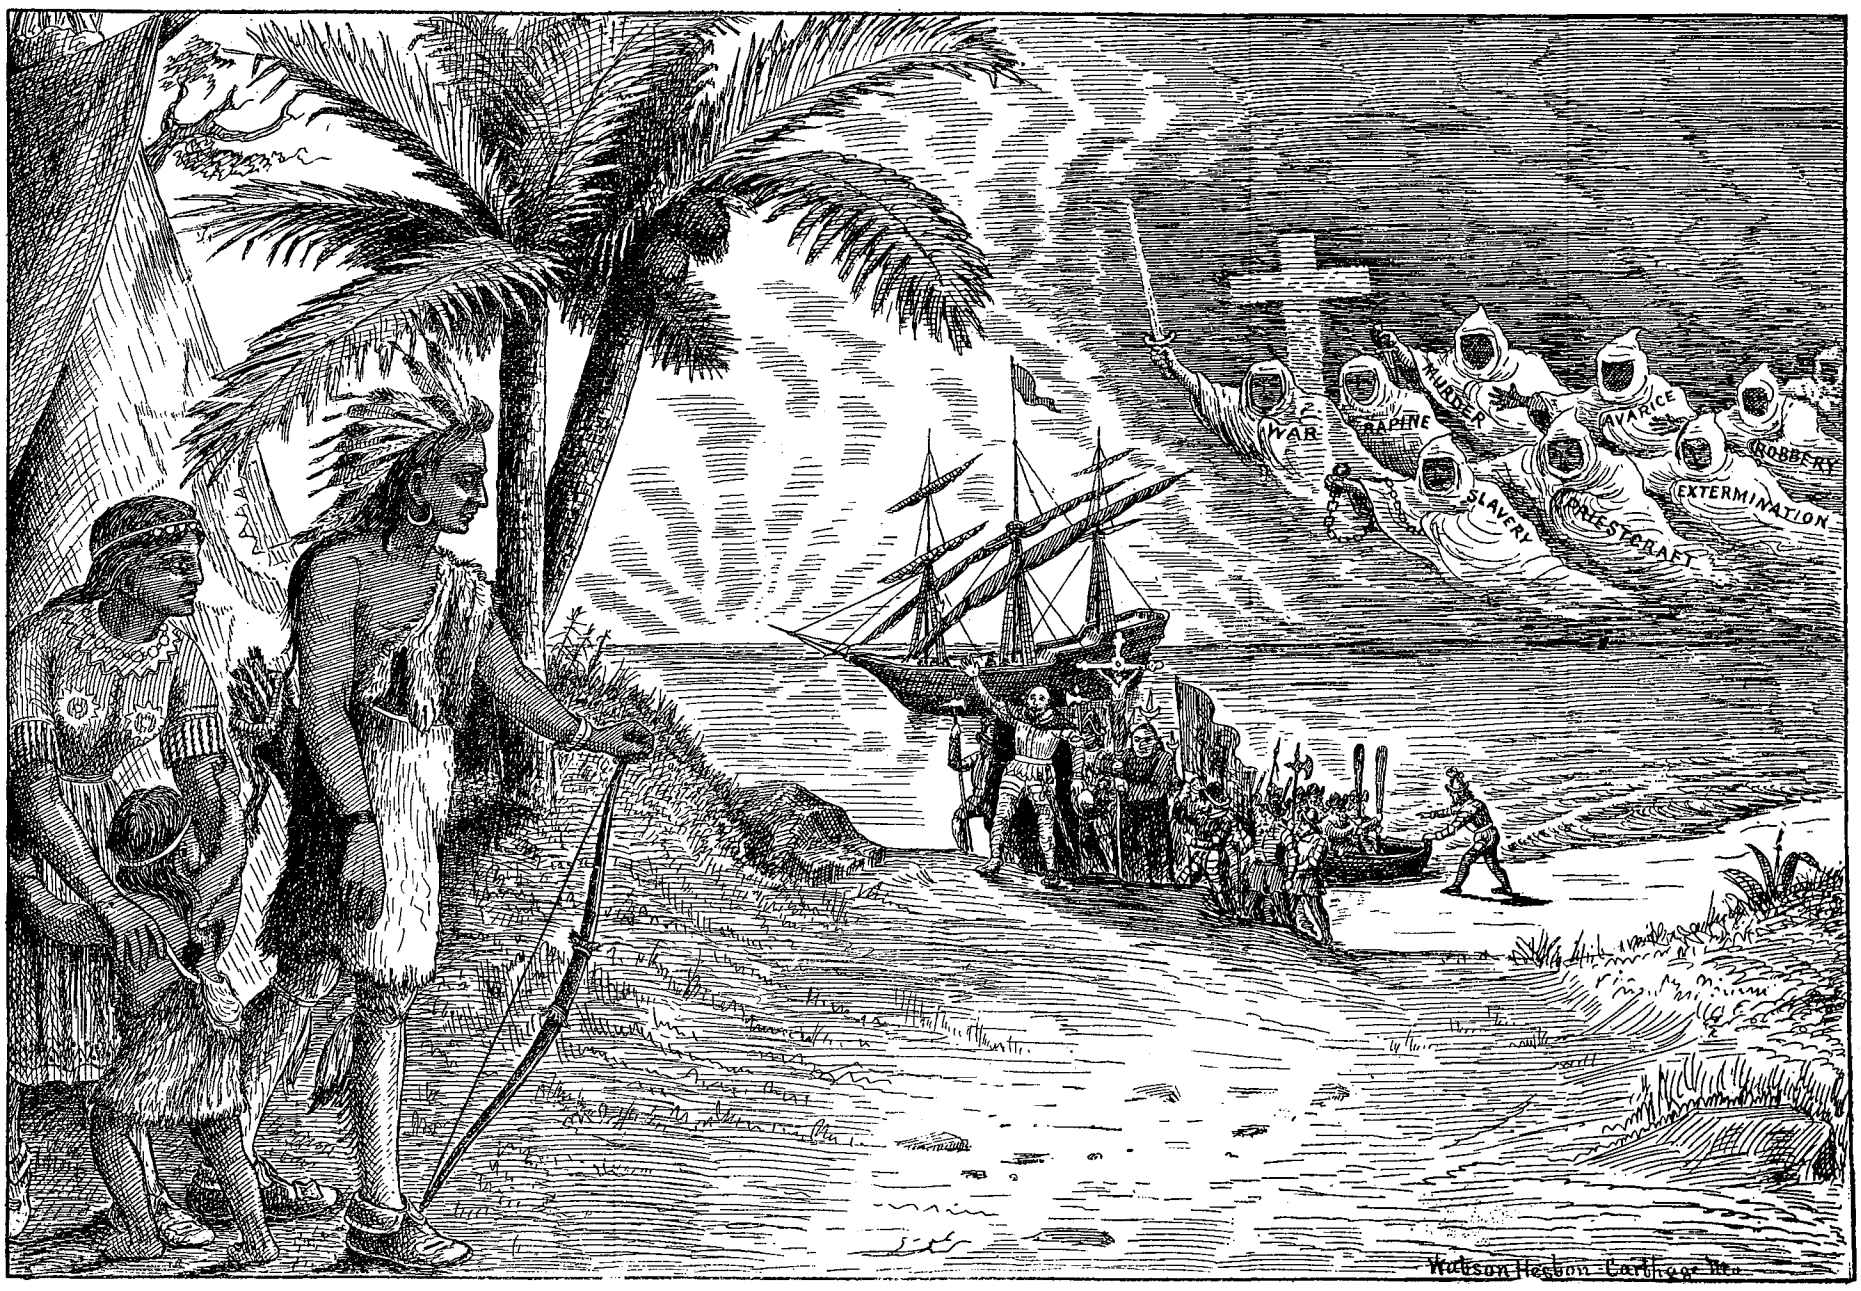
She invented remarkable ways
Of belaying her garments, and praise
Was distinctly her due,
For the neighbors she threw
Into constant and breathless amaze.

Unmindful how some might deride,
She determined her skirt to divide;
No change was too radical—
Transient—nomadical—
Each idea new should be tried.

All draping she wholly abhorred—
Her vials of wrath she outpoured
Upon tailors and dressmakers,
Calling them messmakers,
Banded in fiendish accord.

Point de Venise was as bad—
Never a trimming she had;
For her no chimerical,
Cheap, millinerical,
Passementerical fad.

And so she elected to go
Unadorned from her crown to her toe;
A strong, common-sensible—
Quite indefensible,
Funny old feminin crow!



These were the thanks that she got:
From naughty newspapers, hot shot;
From her friends, levity—
Hints of longevity—
Tragical, quite, was it not? —Evening Sun.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 50. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY. New York, Saturday, December 14, 1889 } 28 LAFAYETTE PL. $3.00 per year.

THE UNSEEN EVILS THAT FOLLOWED IN THE WAKE OF COLUMBUS.

Notes and Clippings.

THE pastor and elders of the First Baptist church at Babylon, N. Y., hav been unable to allay their quarrels by means of the spirit, and hav had to fall back upon the despised worldly means of the supreme court.

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL has accepted the invitation of the State Bar Association to deliver the annual address before that body in the assembly chamber at Albany on January 13th. "The Imperfections of the Common Law" will be the subject of the address.

Two men were hanged in this neighborhood last week, one in Brooklyn, one in this city. Both were nominal Catholics, and before swinging off formally embraced the Roman Catholic faith and were admitted, through baptism, into the church. They are now in heaven.

How did the Florida Times-Union find these sad facts? "Adam sleeps his last sleep on the island of Ceylon in the Indian ocean, while Eve is buried on the shores of the Red sea, several thousand miles away. Their descendants should chip in and move the remains of the former back nearer home and bury the two side by side." Perhaps the aforesaid descendants would hav trouble in identifying the remains, and it's always well to be sure in these things.

THE Philadelphia Inquirer thinks that the French pulpit cannot be as sensitiv about handling political topics as is the American, if it may judge by the report that fifty-five priests hav been temporarily deprived of their stipends for preaching on subjects connected with the recent election. What makes their conduct still more remarkable, it thinks, is the fact that the objectionable discourses must hav been delivered principally to women, for Frenchmen, as a rule, rarely go to church.

THE Jews as well as the Methodists are having difficulty in getting their religious houses filled. At a meeting in Omaha the other day, called to organize a literary society, a rabbi stated that religious indifference among the Jewish people was becoming more apparent every day, and that some means of creating an interest in religious work must be devised. He thought a literary society would, in a measure, accomplish this, and hoped that all his people would manifest an interest in the society. At this rate it will not be long before a chromo goes with every conversion, and free lunches are established to entice the wayfarer. The children are already bribed by prizes to attend Sunday-school.

THE progress of schisms in the English church continues. The Sun lately chronicled the suspension, by order of the civil court, of the vicar of Hoo, for declining to administer the communion to a parishioner who refused to repent for attending a Wesleyan service. The notice containing the order of suspension was fastened on the church door, and the bishop of the diocese, in compliance with the order of the court, sent a curate to officiate. The regular vicar said that it was his "duty to God" not to recognize any such priest; that when "a temporal judge, sitting in a temporal court, without a shadow of spiritual authority, presumed to deprive a priest of his spiritual powers, he would refuse to recognize the usurped right of a court set up merely by the authority of Parliament to judge spiritual questions."

THE Christian Advocate (Methodist) says: "It is not often in our day that ministers are found objecting to an increase of salary, but we report a veritable case—a noble exception. It occurred in Connecticut some years ago. The worthy pastor declined the advance in his salary for the three following substantial reasons: '1. Said he, because you can't afford to giv more than $300. 2. Because my preaching isn't worth more than that. 3. Because I hav to collect my salary, which heretofore has been the hardest part of my labors among you. If I hav to collect an additional hundred, it will kill me.'"

THE World tells this one on the great Agnostic: Col. Robert G. Ingersoll is one of the happiest-looking men in the city. His smile is as sunny as a successful comedian's and his bonhomie is as pronounced as ever. He wears a cape coat of generous dimensions and where he stands he attracts the gaze of admiring men. He was conversing with a friend in a hotel corridor a few days ago when a mutual acquaintance joined them. "Has —— been in?" asked the new-comer. "I don't know," answered Colonel Ingersoll. "Of course you don't," returned the questioner. "I forgot, for the moment, you are an Agnostic."

THE Cincinnati Times-Star says: "Talmage would hav shown more sense and discretion if he had stood down at the bottom of Mars Hill to deliver his open-air sermon instead of hunting out the place where Paul preached. We suppose that as Mr. Talmage continues his journey eastward, he will go down into the Holy Land and endeavor to locate the spot where Christ delivered his Sermon on the Mount. Still, there are things that possibly are even beyond the egotism and conceit of a Talmage." It would indeed be hard to locate the place occupied by Jesus while delivering his most celebrated sermons. The fact that it is more than likely that he never preached them at all may hav something to do with this.

BY far the most important event of the series of sittings of the Edinburgh Art Congress, writes a correspondent of the National Reformer, was the great public meeting at which the Sunday opening of museums, picture-galleries, etc., formed the leading subject of discussion. Principal Cunningham of St. Andrews, who, by his outspoken advocacy of a freer Sunday, has more than once scandalized the "elect," was the chief speaker, and argued vigorously in favor of the opening of museums and picture-galleries on Sundays. "Instead of it being a sin to open such places, he considered it a sin to keep them shut." The prevailing notion that the Jewish Sabbath was a day of solemn religious observance, was totally erroneous. In reality they kept it as a festival day, a day of merry-making and relaxation. "It was a day for fun and feasting among the Jews On the Sabbath day the Jew invited his friends to dine with him—cold victuals of course, which were not so bad in a warm country. He also went to the theater on the Sabbath, if there was a theater, and enjoyed himself thoroughly in every way." Principal Cunningham did not say in so many words that his compatriots should imitate the example cited; but it is perhaps enough in the mean time that a man who is a leader of thought in the Established church, and the principal of one of its colleges, should make so liberal a concession.

Communications.

Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?

CHAPTER X.

TESTIMONY OF LINCOLN'S RELATIVS AND INTIMATE ASSOCIATES.

Mrs. Sarah Lincoln—Dennis F. Hanks—Mrs. Matilda Moore—John Hall—Wm. McNeely—Mr. Lynan—Wm. G. Green—Joshua F. Speed—John Decamp—Green Caruthers—Squire Perkins—Hon Joseph Gillespie—Jas. Gorley—Dr. Wm. Jaynes—Hon. Jesse K Dubois—Judge Stephen T. Logan—Hon. Leonard Swett.

Were I to rest my case here, the evidence already adduced is sufficient, I think, to convince any unprejudiced mind that Lincoln was not a Christian. But I do not propose to rest here. I hav presented the testimony of half a score of witnesses; before I lay down my pen I shall present the testimony of seven times as many more.

In this chapter will be given the testimony of some of the relativs and intimate associates of Lincoln. The testimony of his relativs confirms the claim that he was not religious in his youth; the others testify to his unbelief while a resident of New Salem and Springfield.

Mrs. Sarah Lincoln.

If there was one person to whom Lincoln was more indebted than to any other, it was his step mother, Sally Lincoln, a beautiful woman—beautiful not only in face and form, but possessed of a most lovely character. She was not highly educated, but she loved knowledge, and inspired in her step son a love for books. She was a Christian, but she attached more importance to deed than to creed. She loved Lincoln. After his death, she said: "He was dutiful to me always. I think he loved me truly. I had a son, John, who was raised with Abe. Both were good boys; but I must say, both now being dead, that Abe was the best boy I ever saw, or expect to see." Lincoln was too good and too great not to appreciate this woman's care and affection. Said he (alluding to her and not, as popularly supposed, to his own mother, who died while he was yet a mere child), "All that I am and all that I hope to be, I owe to my mother."

When the materials for Lincoln's biography were being collected, Mrs. Lincoln was considered the most reliable source from which to obtain the facts pertaining to his boyhood. Her recollections of him were recorded with the utmost care. His Christian biographers, in order to make a Sunday-school hero of him, hav declared him to be a youth remarkable for his Christian piety and his love of the Bible. The statements of Mrs. Lincoln disprove this claim. The substance of her testimony, as given by Lamon, is as follows:

His step-mother—herself a Christian, and longing for the least sign of faith in him—could remember no circumstance that supported her hope. On the contrary, she recollected very well that he never went off into a corner, as has been said, to ponder the sacred writings, and to wet the page with his tears of penitence (Life of Lincoln, pp. 486, 487).

The Bible, according to Mrs Lincoln, was not one of his studies; "he sought more congenial books." At that time he neither talked nor read upon religious subjects. If he had any opinions about them, he kept them to himself (Ibid, p. 38).

Dennis F. Hanks

The next witness is Lincoln's cousin, Dennis Hanks. Mr. Hanks held "the pulpy, red, little Lincoln" in his arms before he was "twenty-four hours old," and remained his constant companion during all the years that he lived in Kentucky and Indiana. He lived for a part of the time in the Lincoln family, and married one of Lincoln's step-sisters. Although he was born in the last century he still survives. I met him recently at Charleston, Ill. With evident delight he rehearsed the story of Lincoln's boyhood, and reaffirmed the truthfulness of the following statements attributed to him by Lincoln's biographers:

Abe wasn't in early life a religious man. He was a moral man strictly. . . . In after life he became more religious; but the Bible puzzled him, especially the miracles (Every-Day Life of Lincoln, p. 54).

"Religious songs did not appear to suit him at all," says Dennis Hanks; but of profane ballads and amorous ditties he knew the words of a vast number.

. . . . . .

Another was:

Hail Columbia, happy land!
If you ain't drunk, I'll be damned,—

a song which Dennis thinks should be warbled only in the "fields;" and tells us they knew and enjoyed "all such songs as this" (Lamon's Life of Lincoln, pp. 58, 59).

The fitness of the above coarse travesty to be warbled, even in the fields, may well be doubted. Lamon would hardly hav recorded it, and I certainly should not quote it, but for the fact that it strikingly illustrates one phase of Lincoln's "youthful piety."

Among the many Christian hymns which Lincoln parodied, Mr. Hanks recalls the following:

How tedious and tasteless the hours.
When I can read my title clear.
Oh! to grace how great a debtor!
Come, thou fount of every blessing.

Mrs. Matilda Moore.

Mrs. Lincoln's first husband was named Johnston. By him she had three children, a son and two daughters. The latter, like their mother, developed into noble specimens of womanhood; and both loved Lincoln as tenderly as though he had been their own brother. The elder was married to Dennis Hanks; the younger, Matilda, married Lincoln's cousin, Levi Hall, and, after his death, a gentleman named Moore.

Lamon says that Lincoln in his youth made a mockery of the popular religion; not from any lack of reverence for what he believed to be good, but because "he thought that a person had better be without it." That he was accustomed to turn so-called sacred subjects into ridicule is attested by his step-sister, Mrs. Moore. She says:

When father and mother would go to church, Abe would take down the Bible, read a verse, giv out a hymn, and we would sing. Abe was about fifteen years of age. He preached and we would do the crying (Every-Day Life of Lincoln, p. 71).

John Hall.

On the 28th of April, 1888, the writer, in company with Mr. Charles Biggs, of Westfield, Ill., visited the old Lincoln homestead, near Farmington, Ill. We dined with Mr. John Hall, a son of Lincoln's step sister Matilda, in the old log-house built by Lincoln's father nearly sixty years ago, and in which his father and step-mother died. Mr. Hall, who owns the homestead and preserves with zealous care this venerable relic, is an intelligent farmer nearly sixty years of age. He greatly reveres the memory of his illustrious uncle and loves to dwell on his many noble traits of character. He stated that the family tradition is that while Abe was a most honest and humane boy he was not religious. He referred to the mock sermons he is said to hav preached. "At these meetings," said Mr. Hall, "my mother would lead in the singing while Uncle Abe would lead in prayer. Among his numerous supplications, he prayed God to put stockings on the chickens' feet in winter."

William McNeely.

William McNeely, of Petersburg, Ill., who became acquainted with Lincoln in 1831, when he arrived at New Salem on a flatboat, says:

Lincoln said he did not believe in total depravity, and, although it was not popular to believe it, it was easier to do right than wrong; that the first thought was: what was right? and the second—what was wrong? Therefore it was easier to do right than wrong, and easier to take care of, as it would take care of itself. It took an effort to do wrong, and a still greater effort to take care of it; but do right and it would take care of itself.

. . . . . .

I was acquainted with him a long time, and I never knew him to do a wrong act (Lincoln Memorial Album, pp. 393–395).

Mr. Lynan.

In 1880, at Bismarck Grove, Kan., the writer of this delivered a lecture entitled, "Four American Infidels," a portion of which was devoted to a presentation of Lincoln's religious views. In its report of the lecture, the Lawrence Standard, edited by Hon. E G Ross, formerly United States senator from Kansas, and at present governor of New Mexico, said:

In regard to Abraham Lincoln being an Infidel, the evidence adduced was overwhelming, and was confirmed by a gentleman present, Mr. Lynan, who had known him intimately for thirty years. Mr. Lynan declared that none but personal acquaintance could enable one to realize the nobility and purity of Lincoln's character, but that he was beyond doubt or question a thorough disbeliever in the Christian scheme of salvation to the end of his life (Lawrence Standard, Sept. 4, 1880).

William G. Green.

One of Lincoln's early companions at New Salem was William G. Green. He and Lincoln clerked in the same store and slept together on the same cot. The testimony of Mr. Green has not been preserved. We hav simply an observation of his, incidentally made, the substance of which is thus presented by Lamon:

Lincoln's incessant reading of Shakspere and Burns had much to do in giving to his mind the "skeptical" tendency so fully developed by the labors of his pen in 1834-5, and in social conversations during many years of his residence at Springfield (Life of Lincoln, p. 145).

Mr. Green's conclusion, especially in regard to Burns, is quite generally shared by Lincoln's friends. Burns's satirical poems were greatly admired by Lincoln. "Holy Willie's Prayer," one of the most withering satires on orthodox Christianity ever penned, was memorized by him. Every one of its sixteen stanzas, beginning with the following, was an Infidel shaft which he delighted to hurl at the heads of his Christian opponents:

O thou, wha in the heavens dost dwell,
Wha, as it pleases best thysel',
Sends ane to heaven and ten to hell,
A' for thy glory,
And no for ony guid or ill
They've done afore thee!

Joshua F. Speed.

One of Lincoln's earliest and best friends was Joshua F. Speed. When he was licensed as a lawyer and entered upon his professional career at Springfield without a client and without a dollar, Speed assisted him to get a start. W. H. Herndon was clerking for Speed at the time, and for more than a year Lincoln, Herndon, and Speed roomed together. Referring to the religious views held by Lincoln at that time, Mr. Speed, in a lecture, says:

I hav often been asked what were Mr. Lincoln's religious opinions. When I knew him, in early life, he was a skeptic. He had tried hard to be a believer, but his reason could not grasp and solve the great problem of redemption as taught.

This is the testimony of an orthodox Christian, and a church-member. Mr. Speed, during the years that he was acquainted with Lincoln, was not a member of any church; but late in life he united with the Methodist church. As "the wish is father to the thought," Mr. Speed professed to believe that Lincoln before his death modified, to some extent, the radical views of his early manhood.

John Decamp.

Another of Lincoln's most intimate Springfield friends was John Decamp. Mr. Decamp was interviewed by Mr. Herndon regarding Lincoln's religious views in July, 1887. His statement was brief, but to the point. He says:

Lincoln was an Infidel.

Green Caruthers.

Soon after Lincoln removed to Springfield he became acquainted with Mr. Green Caruthers and remained on intimate terms with him during all the subsequent years of his life. Mr. Caruthers still lives in Springfield, and is a quiet, unobtrusiv old gentleman, universally respected by those who know him. The substance of his testimony is as follows:

Lincoln, Bledsoe, the metaphysician, and myself, boarded at the Globe hotel in this city. Bledsoe tended toward Christianity, if he was not a Christian. Lincoln was always throwing out his Infidelity to Bledsoe, ridiculing Christianity, and especially the divinity of Christ.

Squire Perkins.

A few years ago there died near Atchison, Kan., an old gentleman named Perkins. He was poor, but honest, and a bright man intellectually. He was a son of Major Perkins who was killed in the Black Hawk war. Lincoln after the fight discovered the scalp of Major Perkins, which his savage assassin had taken but lost. His first impulse was to keep it and take it home to the family of the dead soldier. Then realizing that it would only tend to intensify their grief, he opened the grave and deposited it with the body. This incident led to an intimate acquaintance between Lincoln and the younger Perkins. In June, 1880, Mr. Perkins made the following statement relativ to Lincoln's religious belief:

During all the time that I was acquainted with Abraham Lincoln I know that he was what the church calls an Infidel. I do not believe that he ever changed his opinions. When Colfax was in Atchison I had a talk with him about Lincoln. Among other things, I asked him if Lincoln had ever been converted to Christianity. He told me that he had not.

Hon. Joseph Gillespie.

Judge Gillespie, of Edwardsville, Ill., one of Lincoln's most valued friends, writes as follows:

Mr. Lincoln seldom said anything on the subject of religion. He said once to me that he never could reconcile the prescience of deity with the uncertainty of events.

"It was difficult," says Judge Gillespie, "for him to believe without demonstration."

James Gorley.

Mr. Gorley, who was the confidential friend of Lincoln, and who spent much time with him, both at home and abroad, made the following statement:

Lincoln belonged to no religious sect. He was religious in his own way—not as others generally. I do not think he ever had a change of heart, religiously speaking. Had he ever had a change of heart he would hav told me. He could not hav neglected it.

William Jayne, M.D.

Dr. Jayne is one of the most prominent citizens of Springfield, and was one of Lincoln's ablest and most faithful political friends. He secured Lincoln's nomination for the legislature once, and was one of the first to pit him against Douglas. In a letter to me, dated August 18 1887, Dr. Jayne says:

His general reputation among his neighbors and friends of twenty-five years' standing was that of a disbeliever in the accepted faith of orthodox Christians. His mind was purely logical in its construction and action. He believed nothing except what was susceptible of demonstration. . . . His most intimate friends here, and close to him in the confidential relations of life, assert, in regard to those who claim for Lincoln a faith in the orthodox Christian belief, that the claim is a fraud and utter nonsense.

Hon Jesse K. Dubois.

Jesse K. Dubois, for a time state auditor of Illinois, a noble and gifted man, and one whom Lincoln dearly loved, once related an anecdote which shows that if Lincoln did believe in a supreme being, he had little reverence for the God of Christianity. In company with Dubois, he was visiting a family in or near Springfield. It was summer, and while Dubois was in the house with the family, Lincoln occupied a seat in the yard with his feet resting against a tree, as was his wont. The lady, who was a very zealous Christian, called attention to his appearance and commented rather severely upon his ugliness. When they returned home Dubois referred to the lady's remarks. Lincoln was silent for a moment and then said: "Dubois, I know that I am ugly, but she worships a God who is uglier than I am."

Judge Stephen T. Logan.

Lincoln was admitted to the bar in 1837, when he was twenty-eight years of age, Judge Logan being on the bench at the time. Soon after his admission he formed a partnership with John T. Stuart which existed nearly four years, or until Mr. Stuart entered Congress. He then became the partner of Judge Logan, and continued in business with him until 1843, when he united his practice with that of Mr. Herndon. The testimony of Mr. Stuart and Mr. Herndon has already been given. No formal statement of Judge Logan concerning this question has been preserved. All that I hav been able to find is contained in a letter from Mr. Herndon dated Dec 22, 1888. Mr. Herndon wrote in relation to Lincoln's letter of consolation to his dying father. In Lincoln's letter, while Christ and Christianity are wholly ignored, there is an implied recognition of immortality and an expressed hope that he may meet his father again. Lincoln's friends, for the most part, consider the letter merely conventional, not an expression of his real sentiments, but simply an effort to console his Christian father whom he could never meet again on earth. Mr. Herndon, however, is inclined to believe that while the tone of the letter is not exactly in accordance with the views generally held by Lincoln, it is yet a sincere expression of the feelings he entertained at the time. Referring to this letter, Mr. Herndon says:

I showed the letter to Logan, Stuart, et al. Logan laughed in my face, as much as to say: Herndon, are you so green as to believe that letter to be Lincoln's real ideas? I cannot giv the exact words of Logan but he in substance said: "Lincoln was an Infidel of the most radical type."

Hon. Leonard Swett.

I close this division of my evidence with the testimony of that gifted lawyer and honored citizen of Illinois, Leonard Swett. Previous to his removal to Chicago, in 1865 Mr. Swett resided in Bloomington, and for a dozen years traveled the old Eighth judicial circuit with Lincoln. Few men knew Lincoln better than did Swett, and none was held in higher esteem by Lincoln than he. It was he who placed Lincoln in nomination for the presidency at Chicago in 1860. I quote from a letter written by Mr. Swett in 1866:

You ask me whether he [Lincoln] changed his religious opinions toward the close of his life. I think not. As he became involved in matters of the greatest importance, full of great responsibility and great doubt, a feeling of religious reverence, a belief in God and his justice and overruling providence increased with him. He was always full of natural religion. He believed in God as much as the most approved church-member, yet he judged of him by the same system of generalization as he judged everything else. He had very little faith in ceremonials or forms. In fact he cared nothing for the form of anything. . . . If his religion were to be judged by the lines and rules of church creeds, he would fall far short of the standard.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Mrs. Besant's Libel Suit.

What was in many respects one of the most singular trials that ever took place in England, writes the London correspondent of the New York Sun, ended here four days ago (Nov. 15.) It was the libel action brought by Mrs Annie Besant, the famous Freethinker and co-worker with Charles Bradlaugh, against the Rev. Edwyn Hoskyns, the rector of Stepney, Tower Hamlets. Tower Hamlets is a suburb of London, and represents a division of the London School board. At the School Board election Mrs. Besant was a candidate for the Tower Hamlets seat. During the election Rev. Mr. Hoskins, who was greatly opposed to Mrs. Besant, issued and circulated a handbill declaring that the outcome of Mrs. Besant's teaching was that chastity was a crime and unbridled sensuality was a virtue. Mrs. Besant sued for damages, in a nominal sum, from the libel. The case was brought to a trial, lasting four days, in the Queen's Bench Division before Baron Huddleston and a special jury. Mr. Hoskyns pleaded justification and privilege. The solicitor-general, Sir Edward Clarke, Q C, and Mr. J. Lawson Walton appeared for the defendant. Mrs. Besant conducted her own case in person, and right well did she do it. Nevertheless the spectacle in a grave English court was a strange one.

The trial, from the very peculiar character of the evidence adduced, has been the talk of all London. Mrs. Besant was examined at length as to her radical views of marriage and other social relations. The jury was out a long time, and were finally discharged, as they could not come to a verdict.

Mrs. Besant, in opening her case, said that she had been invited to come forward as a candidate in the school board election by a large number of working men's clubs and associations, and she stood on the program of "free, compulsory, technical, and secular education." Mr. Hoskyns was a clergyman who distinguished himself throughout the course of the election by the extreme violence of his opposition. The election was on Monday, Nov. 26, 1888. On the previous day a certain anonymous handbill, which she afterward traced to the defendant, was distributed. The handbill contained, among other things, these words: "A Freethinker thus describes the practical outcome of her teaching—'Chastity is a crime; unbridled sensuality is virtue.' Such teaching is earthly, sensual, devilish. Christian voters do your duty." That was the libel she now complained of. She maintained that at no time and in no place had she ever written or spoken one solitary word which by the utmost malignancy could be twisted into the phrases which had been put into her mouth. On the appearance of this libel she instructed her solicitors to write a letter to the defendant calling attention to the libelous circular, demanding an apology and withdrawal of the defamatory statements, and the payment of £50 to the London Hospital with costs. To that there was no reply.

Mrs. Besant testified to these facts in the witness-box. She said she was a partner in the Freethought Publishing Co., and was already senior member of the school board for the Tower Hamlets division. On her cross-examination she again denied that she had taught anything so gross as the Rev. Mr. Hoskyns had represented. She gave a history of her life. It was true that when the libel was written she did not believe in God. She would now rather call herself a Pantheist than an Atheist. In 1874 she met Mr. Bradlaugh and joined the National Secular Society. She lectured in connection with that society in 1875. She had written under the name of "Ajax." The phrase, "Malthusian in social economy," referred to the fact that population had a tendency to increase faster than the means of subsistence, and to the prevention of this by abstinence from marriage or limitation of the family. She taught that it was a crime for people to hav more children than they could support. Questioned as to the trial of Mr. Bradlaugh and herself at Westminster for the publication of "The Fruits of Philosophy," which the jury found calculated to deprave public morals, she said the lord chief justice (Cockburn) would hav let them off from being sent to prison if they would hav promised not to sell the work any more, but that they declined to giv any such undertaking, and the conviction was eventually quashed, although she admitted it was quashed on a technical point—namely, on the point that the passage complained of in the book had not been copied out in the indictment. They did not now sell the book. They continued to sell it until the government refused to prosecute further, and then they ceased. (Laughter.) "The Law of Population" was published by her in place of "The Fruits of Philosophy." It was true that after the trial Mr. Bradlaugh and herself gathered together in a little pamphlet all the passages in the Bible which they could suggest to be obscene, and asked whether the Bible was indictable. She denied that she had ever taught that the position of the mistress was better than the position of the wife.

She recommended a durable contract between man and woman, without any religious ceremony.

Sir Edward Clarke cross-examined Mrs. Besant almost a whole day with regard to a book known as "The Elements of Social Science," published by Mrs. Besant's firm and advocating free love. Mrs. Besant said that she did not agree with those doctrins. She repudiated them whenever possible by her writings and otherwise. Her book on "The Law of Population" was written in part with a view to the redemption of the masses, and she was happy to say that it had to some extent had the effect. In 1877, when she was indicted with Mr. Bradlaugh, she made a speech contained in a book produced.

She had said that the "Elements" was a book which no one had had the courage to attack in court. As to the pamphlet containing the obscene passages from the Bible, and known as "Is the Bible Indictable?" that was written, as its title indicated, to invite the police authorities to show their sense of justice by prosecuting the people who circulated the Bible as well as the people who circulated the "Fruits of Philosophy."

On her reëxamination, which consisted simply in Mrs. Besant talking from the witness-box without prompting or assistance of any kind, Mrs. Besant went over the whole ground again and showed such readiness of memory, energy of purpose, as well as such careful study and appreciation of the legal points of her case, that Baron Huddleston twice complimented her warmly. Mrs. Besant said that the man who first printed the "Fruits of Philosophy" pleaded guilty to its being an immoral book, and that then she became her own printer and publisher. She believed that the doctrin of the limitation of family within the means of the parents was a doctrin of vital importance to society. The book was republished as a test of the right to publish it at a price which would giv the information to those who required it. The witness read a large portion of her own autobiography to show that this was the case, and defending her action. As leaders of the Freethought movement, Mr. Bradlaugh and herself thought it their duty to make the sacrifice involved in the publication of the book, as in questions affecting the people the fullest light of free discussion should be maintained at all hazards. She said she believed that early marriages destroyed prostitution, and limitation of the family destroyed pauperism. If this meant unbridled sensuality on the part of men and women, the law was at liberty to make the most of it. Referring to her book on marriage, Mrs. Besant said that in it there was not one word which was aimed at real marriage—at the faithful and durable union of two individuals of the opposit sexes—a union originating in and maintained by love alone. Mr. Bradlaugh and herself had ever taught that faithful love between one man and one woman was the highest ideal of human love, but that marriage without love was a form of prostitution.

Sir Edward Clarke in opening the case for the Rev. Mr. Hoskyns, said he should not shrink from the fullest issue with which it would be necessary to deal in this case. The defendant was rector of one of the largest parishes in the East End of London, having a population of twenty five thousand.

The Rev. Mr. Hoskyns in the witness box declared that he believed the passage quoted in the handbill truly represented the outcome of Mrs. Besant's teachings.

Sir Edward Clarke summed up for the Rev. Mr. Hoskyns. It might be, he said, that the plaintiff could not be fairly held responsible for the teaching in "The Elements of Social Science," but even then it might be that her own books did by their teaching tend to the same result. Mrs. Besant guarded herself by saying that she referred constantly to marriage, but what she called marriage was not marriage at all. She taught doctrins subversiv of all doctrins of marriage known to them, and held up as her ideal of marriage an adulterous intercourse which was well known to hav taken place between two persons whose names she cruelly mentioned in her book. He said that a woman who, because a judgment of a court of law had gone against her, could with diligence collect from the Bible the references to all the passages which she could suggest to be obscene in their character and gather them into a penny pamphlet under the title, "Is the Bible Indictable?" by which persons of prurient tastes might hunt out from the venerable volume all those passages, did not deserve consideration to be shown to her.

Mrs. Besant, in replying upon the whole case, said that she was really upon her trial, and the line which had been taken by the defense was one which made it absolutely necessary for her, as the representativ of a great constituency in London's educational parliament, to wipe away some of the filth thrown at her by the solicitor-general. She did not blame the learned counsel, for she knew that such pleading was an advocate's duty to his client, and he had been engaged to do this special work and to save a minister of the Church of England from the chastisement which his conduct deserved. He was, therefore, bound to use all the power of a skilled tongue and able brain in order to distort and misrepresent the doctrins which she had taught and was not ashamed of. But she confessed she found herself unable to recognize those doctrins in the frightful imputations and the scandalous statements to which she had been listening for the last two hours.

Prejudice had been introduced about her religious opinions, but they had nothing to do with the case. She should not press for vindictiv damages, but she did ask for substantial damages after the line which had been taken by the defense. She had the courage of the opinions she held upon theological matters, and had no desire to escape from any consequences which might follow from them; but she thought it was scarcely within an advocate's province to raise theological prejudices and bitter religious controversies in an issue as to the truth or falseness of a libel such as this. She had brought this action not for her own sake, for she could afford to treat with the contempt it deserved the slander of the clergy of the baser sort, but she brought it for the sake of the constituency which honored her, for the sake of those who sat with her on the board, and for the sake of the women who worked for her election, and who believed in the usefulness of the work which she did. Notwithstanding the fact that she had from an early period of her life been without the protection of a home, not one word had been said which would touch her honor—not one word which would suggest that that which it was said she taught had soiled her life in any way. She held that it was only by limitation of the family that society could be made pure. Last year forty-three thousand children came to the schools which she superintended starving, and dropped on the floor. Would the jury tell her that if she went to the mothers and said, "Don't increase the multitude of these starving babes, who fill the churchyard after they are called into life," she was preaching that chastity was a crime and unbridled sensuality a virtue? She was a member of a committee to help these people, sitting side by side with the president of the council and the wife of Lord G. Hamilton, and she asked the jury to remove the stain which had been cast upon her.

Baron Huddleston, in summing up, said the question for the jury was whether, looking at these pamphlets and books that were before the reverend gentleman, he might fairly adopt that which the Freethinker had stated—and conscientiously, fairly, and honestly stated—that in his opinion that was the result of plaintiff's teaching? He held that the occasion was privileged.

Reading the passages from the "Elements of Social Science," upon which Sir Edward Clarke relied as justifying the libel, the learned judge said the suggestion in them was that chastity was dangerous and abstinence was far from being a virtue. But the plaintiff said they were not her doctrins, and that she had repudiated them. That might be the case; but the question was whether, if she chose to laud the person who wrote that book as an honest, well-meaning man, and if she chose to sell that book, a person in the position of the defendant, solicitous for the welfare of his parish, might not reasonably assume that they were her doctrins.

Quoting passages from the "Law of Population" his lordship said he could not believe it possible that husband and wife would sit down to discuss such matters, or that any pure-minded or modest woman would hav resort to such practices. He could not imagin anything more disgusting, and when one of the jury called his attention to the fact that there were women present, he merely repeated the phrase of a celebrated judge. It was, however, a question of taste, and it was not a savory subject. Mrs. Besant said that when she wrote her book upon marriage she was smarting under the unjust state of the laws relating to the position of man and wife. She was entitled to that explanation, but she did not giv it in her book, and all that the defendant had before him when he wrote the alleged libel was what she had written on the subject, and on this only could he judge of her opinions. In her book on marriage she said that, looking at the position of woman, both as wife and mother, it was quite evident that marriage was a disadvantage, and described, as the keynote of the moral marriage, the case of Shelley (having a wife living) living with another woman, and of George Henry Lewes and George Eliot (Miss Evans), who lived together, although Mrs. Lewes was living.

Baron Huddleston reprobated in the strongest manner the collection which had been made, he said, with perverse industry, of chapters and verses of the Bible which Mrs. Besant considered obscene, and their publication under the title of "Is the Bible Indictable?"

Baron Huddleston's charge was an interesting example of the great difference between English and American judges in charging juries. The baron discussed the whole case just as if he were himself a juror, and virtually directed the jury to find against Mrs. Besant. The jury were out four hours, and then, coming into court, declared that they could not agree, and that they were not likely to agree. In answer to Baron Huddleston's question the foreman of the jury said that they had agreed that there was publication of a libel and that Mr. Hoskyns was responsible for it, but that they could not agree as to the truth of the libel. Sir Edward Clarke hinted at the feasibility of taking the verdict of the majority, but Mrs. Besant shrewdly said that if she did so she should prevent herself from going to a higher court to complain of the exclusion of evidence. The jury were then discharged.

The sentiment of those who watched the trial was that Mrs. Besant would hav won her case but for the judge's charge. The ability with which Mrs. Besant managed her case was the marvel of judge, jury, and spectators.

Mr. Remsburg and the Secular Union Officers in New York.

A large and friendly audience greeted Mr. Remsburg at the hall of the Manhattan Liberal Club on the evening of the 6th. Several years had elapsed since the Kansas comet passed through New York's sky, and his reappearance was gladly welcomed by the cosmopolitans. The audience of the Liberal Club is about the same in personality that used to attend and listen to the speakers and wonder what the Man with the Badge Pin would make their utterances read like in THE TRUTH SEEKER. The Man with the Badge Pin was always accurate in his reports, of course, but somehow the audience thought the words of the orators appeared differently in print from the way they sounded when spoken. The improvement, they confessed, was marked. But a few old-time attendants were missed. Young Dr. Foote's only rival in length, sedate Mr. Van Deusen, was not there. He says he misses too many of the old speakers to feel at home in the German Temple. The Pythias to the Secular Union ex-treasurer's Damon held a chair down alone in the northwest corner of the room. The ex-treasurer has gone after strange Anarchial gods. Pious Mr. Shook, combativ Dr. Eccles, and the German gentleman with Socialistic whiskers were absent. The V-shaped southern exposure which used to warm the hearts of the gentlemen who admiringly gazed on the mother of Lillian Russell added no attractions to the scene on this occasion. But Dr. Weeks was there, with his book of poems, and Mr. King's white skull twinkled away down between two stately ladies. Mr. Wakeman, patriarchal and Positivistic; Dr. Gunn, who, it is whispered, has fallen into bad company; Treasurer Sutherland, gathering in the nimble nickels, and getting a pocketful—these were all there and seemed to like it. Mr. Leonard Geiger, with his wife and daughter, came all the way down from Hudson; Mr. Hunter, chief stirrer-up of the Jersey heretics; Mr. Charlesworth, a small English edition of Charles Watts, who attracts to the Newark Liberal League bigger audiences than the League can accommodate; Mr. Chamberlain, whom his envious contemporaries designate by the indefinit article—these and many more came out to do honor to themselvs and the occasion. But Dr. Severance, who wouldn't take the mayoralty of Milwaukee but who will work for the Union, could not come. She fell down Thanksgiving day, seriously injuring her arm. Her absence left more applause for the balance of the Union's officers, which they received calmly. President Westbrook's wife and the Secretary occupied front seats, and his white head was also in the forefront like the plume of Navarre. It was a cheerful and notable gathering.

Mr. Remsburg's defense of Paine, made on this occasion because Mr. Seaver liked it so well, is known to most of THE TRUTH SEEKER readers as one of his worthiest efforts. He sketches the life of Paine, his services to the United States, to France, and liberty; and finds that the malignity with which the church pursues his memory is due to her inability to answer the "Age of Reason." The audience liked the lecture and the lecturer, and made their appreciation known.

At the conclusion, Mr. Remsburg said of Horace Seaver as Jackson said of Paine: He needs no monument built by hands, but as monuments were the fashion, Horace Seaver should hav a splendid shaft to commemorate his service to the world of Liberal thought. D. M. Bennett, loved of all who knew him, had been so honored; and Giordano Bruno, victim of Rome's hate and cruelty, had a statue costing a few thousand dollars, but cheap had it cost as many millions, so great has been the effect of its erection upon the world. He wanted New York to adequately remember Horace Seaver.

Four hats went around, and, in response to Mr. Remsburg's appeal, their owners found therein the sum of $35.12, which the chairman said was a generous collection for the Liberal Club.

After this, Dr. Foote stooped a little so the folks could hear him, and made the motion that the Club let down the bars of debate, and not pursue its usual course of insisting that the discussion which always follows a lecture be strictly confined to the subject of the discourse. The officers of the American Secular Union were with us, so he said, and he should, if the audience permitted, allow the subsequent remarks to take wide range, and he suggested that Paine, Seaver, and the principles of the Union be commented upon. And it was done that the Lord had spoken.

Dr. Westbrook was called to the platform. He said that though he is president of the Secular Union he is not like the Baptist preacher who couldn't talk about anything but baptism, and challenged anyone to find a text in the Bible that did not support the doctrin. The preacher was cited the line, "The voice of the turtle is heard in the land." He didn't know that the turtle meant was a turtle-dove, and his exegesis was in this wise: When you walk through the flowery fields down to the water edge, and find a turtle sunning himself on a log, and lifting up his voice in praise of God, the sound is, "Immersion, immersion, immersion," and then the turtle dives into the water. That, affirmed the preacher, proves the Bible to be all through in support of baptism. Dr. Westbrook thought he could talk about something else than the Union. When he was a theological student he had been obliged to study the numerous replies to Paine's "Age of Reason," and imagined he could refute him at a moment's notice, but he preached twenty years before he read the "Age of Reason." Then he found that the time spent in reading the Replies had been wasted. One of the things he desired done was to rescue the statue of Paine, now in a lawyer's office in Philadelphia because the authorities would not allow it to be placed in a public place, and place it either in old Independence Hall or in Fairmount park; and he swore by the Thanksgiving picture in THE TRUTH SEEKER that it should be done.

Then the doctor got back to the subject of baptism. The present policy of the Union, he said, was to stick to a few of the demands of Liberalism, and press them vigorously. Taxation of church property was one point to be pressed. His letter to the Pennsylvania legislature last year had brought the Union many supporters, among them the presiding judge of one of Philadelphia's courts. Dr. McGlynn had told him that within a few years twenty millions of dollars' worth of property had been given to the Roman Catholic church in New York city. Again, the schools ought to be secularized, for we were bound by every principle of honor to see that the rights of no child were invaded. The Union's president here referred to the Prize Manual. He was receiving about twenty-five letters a week on the subject, from school teachers, college professors, and people interested in education. The professors said morality could be taught without religion, the others wanted it done, and he assured all that it would be done. In every way the policy of the Union was Liberal, and though it had been criticised by some, he had received scores of letters indorsing it. The office was now established at 930 North 17th street, Philadelphia, where Miss Craddock was making the type-writer click merrily.

When President Westbrook finished Dr. Foote stooped again and informed the audience that Miss Craddock was in the room; that he believed her to be possessed of woman's chief weapon, to wit, a tongue, and that he moved she be invited to the platform. It was done. The new secretary said she had a cold, and didn't want to speak for various reasons. She was in a new territory for her; after she had gotten the lay of the school house, as it were, she would like to lecture in New York. She complimented the president, and then said that as she had no speech ready she would recite one of Edwin Arnold's poems, "The Legend of the Rajpoot Nurse," which she did effectivly. The members of the Union around New York hav long burnt with a great desire to become acquainted with their new secretary, and they watched her closely. She stood the scrutiny splendidly, and made everybody her friend. She is evidently a trained speaker, with a strong, clear voice, magnetic personality, masculin vigor, and healthy, handsome presence. The opinion was expressed that when she gets used to being an infidel, and finds that convictions held may be safely spoken, she will make one of the best of lecturers. She is no mere clerk, but an ornamental and useful acquisition to the working force of Liberalism, and ought to go into the field, where, if her performance is equal to her promis, she will cause the other lecturers to carefully guard their laurels. And when she goes gunning for this reporter he will take to the woods.

Mr. Wakeman was next called for. He responded, saying that as all the Union's officers were on exhibition he might as well show himself. He considered it a red-letter day for the Club when the Union's directors came here to win the Club's encouragement. The trouble with Liberals generally is that they won't hav leaders, and consequently little is done. The assaults President Westbrook proposed to make would demoralize the enemy. One battle was enough to fight at one time, and enough emphasis should be placed on two or three demands, that by no means meant that the others should be dropped. Advantage should be taken of all opportunities, and when you hav gotten your secular government, you should get your secular philosophy, secular morality, or religion, whichever you choose to call it. Paine was the first man to use the words Religion of Humanity, so far as he could find out. The Union should organize local Unions, and so build up Liberalism. More organizations are needed. The difference between a cause with and without organizations might be seen in the results of Voltaire's and Wesley's work. Voltaire had the whole educated world with him in thought, but he had no organizations. Wesley, on the other hand, little insignificant Wesley, went over England organizing little churches, and his faith is now spread through England and America, and the Methodist church is one of the most powerful agencies in the world. He was glad that New York was honored by the first meeting of the Directors of the Union, and he should do what he could to help the organization. He had received a letter from Dr. Severance saying that though she could not be here, she should concur in whatever was done.

Mr. King was called for, but he shook his glistening poll in declination. Mrs. Donnelly ascended the platform, and said that as the secretary of the Club had omitted in the minutes of the previous meeting Mr. King's name from the list of speakers he probably didn't care to speak when he would get no credit. She further added that her friend Mrs. Lewis Masquerier was the first woman to write a communication for the Boston Investigator. Mr. King was again called for, and yielded to the vox populi, as Dr. Foote remarked casually. Mr. King said he didn't like to be put on exhibition, though there was considerably less of him to exhibit than there is of Mr. Wakeman. Mr. King recurred to the discourse of the evening. Thomas Paine was what we now regard as a conservativ in religion, and the churches were very glad when they could find a young minister who believed as much as Paine did. Giv the churches a show, pleaded Mr. King; let them down easy; and it's astonishing how far down they will go. But Liberals don't usually let folks down easy. The Club held the same ideas now that it did twenty years ago, when great changes hav in fact taken place. There is room now for action, and the Liberals should "let up." Mr. King believed in the pope, astonishing as the statement was, and desired to giv him a chance, and help him out of the hole he is in. Here Mr. King mixed his metaphors, saying that if the pope in a hole only had things made easier for him, he would probably come down many pegs. People, he thought, desired morality, but the Union's publication of a Prize Manual is calculated to throw suspicion on the scheme for morality without religion. However, he thought the Union would be successful.

Mr. Remsburg closed the proceedings with a few remarks to the effect that though his labors for Liberalism must necessarily be outside of organizations, he pledged himself to push, wherever possible, the work of the Union. He sympathized with it as he did with all organizations. He sympathized also with its critics, for he did not believe the battle for liberty would be won while a single man wore the livery of a priest. He was glad to see organizations for secular political work, and was pleased that this one is broad enough for all to join. He wanted to utilize Liberalism wherever it can be found. Blair's Sunday bill is a dangerous precedent, and Liberals must oppose it. At present ninety per cent of the work against it is being done by Christians—the Seventh Day Adventists. He wished that Liberals would work as hard as Christians, and that all Liberals would work as energetically as a few are doing.

Mr. Remsburg added his cordial thanks for the generous gift for Horace Seaver's monument, and the meeting came to an end at a late hour. The next day the Board of Directors met at Dr. Foote's office. Mr. Remsburg addressed a New London, Conn., audience on Saturday evening, the Newark, N J., League Sunday morning, the Brooklyn, N Y., Philosophical Association Sunday afternoon, and Friendship League in Philadelphia, Pa., Sunday evening.

Saturday evening a reception to the officers of the Union was held at the residence of Dr. Foote, 120 Lexington ave., at which some seventy heretics put in an appearance, crowding the doctor's large parlors. It was a very pleasant meeting, and enabled many Freethinkers to form new acquaintances. There were speechlets and songs and recitations and general festivity, including a spread provided by the doctor's queenly mother. The Union officers think, taking things by and large, that the New Yorkers used them pretty well.

A Nugget.

In vol. i, p. 191, Rollin tells of a treaty of peace between the king of Macedon and the Carthaginians, which shows the superstition of these ancient people and also gives us a glimpse of their theology. It is as follows: "This treaty was concluded in the presence of Jupiter, Juno, and Apollo; in the presence of the demon or genius of the Carthaginians; in the presence of Hercules and Iolas; in the presence of Mars, Triton, and Neptune; in the presence of all the confederate gods of the Carthaginians, and of the sun, the moon, and the earth; in the presence of the gods of the rivers, the meads, and waters; and in the presence of all those gods who possess Carthage." And then he adds, "What should we now say of an instrument of this kind?"

We can now see clearly enough that these gods had nothing to do with the Carthaginians or with their treaty, for the good reason that no such gods were in existence, and that their treaty of peace would hav been of equal force with the gods left out. Would not one of those heathen gods answer just as well in the Constitution as the God which the Christians are trying to hav recognized?

The Christians' God is of no more consequence and is just as unreal as the gods of the ancient heathens. We shall see that these gods are always getting us into trouble, and that the less we hav to do with them the better.

For, on the next page, Rollin tells us that the kings of Tyre sacrificed their own sons to appease the anger of their gods. And then he goes on to say that private persons to avoid great calamities took the same method, and such as had no children of their own purchased them of the poor that they might not be deprived of the merit of such sacrifice. Mothers made it a merit and a part of their religion to view this barbarous spectacle with dry eyes and without a groan. And if a tear or a sigh stole from them, the sacrifice was less acceptable to the deity, and the effect was entirely lost.

On page 193 he tells of a great battle which lasted from morning till night, and during the whole engagement the general was perpetually throwing men in great numbers on a flaming pile. And he further states that when Agathocles was going to besiege Carthage, the children of the poor were sacrificed in great numbers; and when the tide of battle seemed to be turning against the Carthaginians, they thought the gods were displeased because they had sacrificed poor children only. and so they burnt two hundred children from the highest families, besides three hundred citizens who voluntarily sacrificed themselvs.

As long as there is a belief in a God sacrifices of some kind will be made. Every dollar given for so-called missionary purposes, every dollar given to build churches or for any religious purpose, is of the nature of a sacrifice. It is so much taken away from the needs of humanity and sacrificed on the altar of superstition, and can do the God or gods (one or three) no more good than the burning of the innocent children did to the heathen gods.

If a God can be pleased, he can be displeased; if he can be displeased, he can suffer; if he can suffer, he can die.

The superstitious barbarism of the Christian religion should engage the attention of every philanthropist. Is it not barbarous for a sick child to lie twenty four hours without anything to eat, because a Christian mother was so filed with superstition that she was afraid God would get angry and kill her child if she kindled a fire on Sunday to make a little gruel? Such a God had better be kept out of the Constitution and out of the minds of the people until he is forgotten entirely.

There is a passage of scripture which declares that all the nations shall be damned that forget God. But has not a belief in those phantoms of the sky invariably had a tendency to damn the people? Has not such belief produced ten curses where it has brought one blessing?

There is no such God as there was two hundred years ago. There is no such God enthroned in the minds of the people. Is not the change a great blessing? As civilization advances the Gods lose power. At some day in the future all the Gods will be regarded as we now regard the gods of the ancients.

People can see the superstition in other systems of religion, but fail to see it in their own when it is equally glaring. Christians can see how superstition in the ancient religions led to such horrible sacrifices; at the same time they believe that a man was sacrificed for their sins two thousand years before they had committed any. They eat bread and believe it to be his body; they drink wine and believe it to be his blood, and are unable to see any superstition in such degrading folly. JOHN PECK.

Naples, N. Y.

Colonel Ingersoll's Philosophy.

The annual election and dinner of the Goethe Society took place Monday evening, December 9th, at the Hotel Brunswick. Parke Godwin, the former president, had resigned on account of ill health, and Mr. A. M. Palmer was elected president. Col. Robert Ingersoll and Mrs. Ingersoll were elected to activ membership.

Dr. Ruppaner, who had visited Weimar this summer, being called upon to speak as the first president of the society, which is twelve years old, related incidents of his visit to the Goethe house and to seeing the manuscript of "Werther" and the stage and puppets where Goethe practiced his dramatic poems while writing them, to see that the parts fitted together harmoniously.

Colonel Ingersoll's toast was a quotation from one of his speeches: "Happiness is the only possible good, and all that tends to the happiness of man is right, and is of value." He was frequently interrupted by applause. Some of the things he said in a running commentary on his own text are these aphorisms:

"I believe the only reason or excuse for our existence is that the result shall be happiness. If the result of life is not happiness then back of life is a fiend and not a being that is God.

"I know it is human to fail. I've failed myself. But I don't believe there is any use in entering a business unless there is at least six per cent profit, therefore unless the average life is a happy one it is a failure.

"The place to be happy is here, and the time to be happy is now. Thousands of men spend their lives in heaping up money, and so destroy the faculty of being happy.

"There's every kind of insanity here, but the man who owns forty million neckties and gets up at 4 A M. to slave to get another necktie is insane. It makes no difference whether it's dollars or neckties.

"Nearly all the joy of this earth is by the fireside with the ones we really and truly love, and not in official state on top of a greased pole. I tell you, you hav got to be close to the grass to be happy.

"I like you Germans who can be happy with a glass of beer and good mustard on your sandwich—and a band. An American is never so happy as when he is getting something he can't pay for.

"If there be a God, and you know I don't know much about that subject. I believe he had rather hav his creatures laugh than cry. By laughing and being happy I don't mean feeding. It is to be self-denying, to liv up to your highest thought, and so to put a wreath on your own brow. In my judgment there will be no worse world than this. Let's make it better so that we can truthfully say that we hav reached the democracy of the republic—the republicanism of the heart"

William Winter spoke to the toast, "The Poet's Mission," and Mr. Charles R. Miller to "The Relation of the Press to Literature." Mr. Miller said newspapers never had been and never could be literature. The newspapers liv an hour, whereas a book sometimes livs a week.

Foreign Items of Interest.

From the London Freethinker.

At Petroszenz, in Hungary, a Greek priest called a meeting of his congregation, and turned up with a drawn dagger in his hand. Flourishing this elegant symbol of Christian charity, he exhorted them to surprise and exterminate the Jews. The population was so excited that military assistance was telegraphed for.

Freethought has made considerable headway in Brazil. One of the Republican leaders, Benjamin Constant, is a professor and a disciple of Auguste Comte. In 1871 he founded the Brazilian Positivist Club. All the young officers of the army hav been his pupils and are entirely devoted to him. He is now fifty-three, is cool and prudent, and has a reputation for stainless integrity.

M. Floquet has been elected president of the French chamber of deputies, receiving 383 out of the 400 votes recorded. M Floquet is an ardent Republican and Freethinker. Like other Frenchmen, he has fought his duels, and the wound he gave General Boulanger did a good deal toward bursting that bladdery reputation.

There is a row among the London Jews. Lord Mayor Isaacs rode instead of walking in the 9th of November show, and his co-religionists are down upon him for breaking the Judaic law. "What," says the Jewish Standard, "must be the effect upon our children if called upon to receive prizes from the hands of one who has publicly desecrated the Sabbath?"

A letter from Stockholm prison from Mr. Victor E. Lennstrand assures us that however long he may be incarcerated he will, upon liberation, take up his work of propagating and organizing Freethought where he left it off. He is convinced that the Freethought organization in Sweden will, in a few years, be strong enough to render any further prosecutions impossible.

Las Dominicales del Libre Pensamiento, of Madrid, inserts a letter written from the Effel Tower by A. de Maglia, who, as our readers are aware, was sentenced to six years' imprisonment for an article attacking the pope and bishops at the time of the Bruno festival. Las Dominicales laments that a gentleman of Signor Maglia's ability should be in exile simply for expressing his opinions.

According to the Vatican documents it appears that Bruno was granted eight days in which to make his peace with the church, but he remained an eretico impenitente, and so was taken to the Campo dei Fiori and burnt alive. The Rev. Padre de Martinis also relates that at the stake a crucifix was presented him to kiss, but Bruno with a disdainful look turned his head away. He also mentions that he was gagged in order to prevent him uttering his fearful blasphemies.

As long as it was possible the church endeavored to throw doubt upon Bruno's martyrdom, and books and articles were written to that end. Since the announcement that Signor Mariotti would publish official documents proving that Giordano Bruno was stripped naked and burnt, the Osservatore Romano, the principal Catholic journal of Rome, fairly owns up. and endeavors to take the wind out of Signor Mariotti's sails by publishing an account of Bruno's death on documents published by the Rev. Padre de Martinis of the Sacred Congregation of the Index.

Miss Emma Hardinge Britten, the editress of the Spiritist paper, the Two Worlds, states in that journal that the first meetings of the Theosophical Society took place at her house in New York. "Nearly all the parties connected with the society, including the lady and gentleman now universally recognized and named as founders and chiefs of the Theosophical Society, were reputed to be Spiritualists, acknowledged as such, and supposed by their writings and teachings to be such." Miss Britten has challenged Colonel Olcott to meet her in debate on the inseparable lines of demarkation between Spiritualism and Theosophy. The gallant colonel has respectfully, and we believe wisely, declined the encounter.

Lectures and Meetings.

THE secretary of the Chicago Secular Society writes: "On the eve of the 1st instant this society, with hundreds of guests, listened to one of Mr. Chas. Watts's most telling lectures, a discourse made up of such penetrating logic that no one of his hearers could hav gone away unconvinced of the advantages of Secular teaching and Secular living. For an hour and a half this world-renowned Secular teacher held the breathless attention of his large audience, and at the close was given such deafening applause as is rarely heard in that Opera House. We await his return with eagerness, and particularly so as he promised to bring his talented wife with him."

W. F. JAMIESON delivered four lectures in New Hampton, Ia., commencing with "Secularization of Our Schools," and closing with "Thomas Paine, the Great Misrepresented," with increasing audiences. The Christians imported an "evangelist" to keep the "sheep" away from the "wolf." The fold was right across the road, a fine-looking Congregational church. Jamieson dispensed his own gospel, and disposed of the other man's, in a large brick court-house. Mr. Jamieson is engaged to deliver three lectures in Charles City, and three in Fredericksburg, Ia., speaking every night. Liberals in Nebraska desiring his lecture courses should address him, without delay, at Des Moines, Ia.

ON Sunday, December 8th, J. E. Remsburg eclipsed his previous phenomenal record as the Eli of American lecturers by delivering four addresses before four regular societies in four different states within twenty-four hours, a feat that no professional lecturer has probably ever performed before. After lecturing in the German Masonic Temple in this city Friday night and attending a meeting of the board of directors of the American Secular Union on Saturday, he proceeded to New London, Conn., where he lectured for the National Progressiv Union of that city Saturday night, beginning his lecture a little before 9 o'clock. Sunday morning he took a train, traversed the entire length of the state of Connecticut, crossed New York state, and proceeded to Newark, N. J., where he spoke for the Newark Liberal Society at 11 A.M In the afternoon he returned to New York, and went over to Brooklyn, where he addressed the Brooklyn Philosophical Society at 3 P M. Leaving the Philosophical Society's platform at 4 P.M., he passed out of Brooklyn, crossed the Williamsburg ferry, passed through New York, crossed the Desbrosses street ferry, took a train at Jersey City, crossed the state of New Jersey, a journey of nearly one hundred miles, and reached Philadelphia, where an audience of one thousand people had assembled to welcome him. Here he spoke for an hour, closing his address at the same moment that he commenced his lecture on the previous evening at New London.

Communications.

Freethought in Oregon.

There has probably been more Freethought work done in Oregon, during the past year, than in any other state in the Union. Less than a year ago Mr. Underwood came to Oregon to engage Clark Braden in debate, and remained in this state and Washington until about two months ago. Mr. Underwood delivered the 4th of July oration here in North Yamhill, where our national day was celebrated without religious ceremonies. Then, right in Mr. Underwood's wake, came Mr. Bell. I did not arrive in Oregon in time to meet Mr. Underwood, but met Mr. Bell at the Portland convention. The past president of the California Secular Union, Mr. S P. Putnam, has just ended his customary raid through this country. He gave three lectures in North Yamhill that were given in his usual eloquent style. Mr. Putnam is full of enthusiasm and earnestness for the cause of Liberalism. I entertained Mr. Putnam, and was very sorry when the time came for him to depart, for a jolly, happy companion like Mr. Putnam is a great comforter when one is worn out with the drudgery of the school room.

Mrs. Krekel has also been with us and given ten lectures. Mrs Krekel is a clear reasoner, a logical thinker, and an eloquent speaker; her language is pure and inspiring. I think her lectures hav given as good satisfaction as any of the lectures that hav been given by any of the speakers yet visiting the coast. I hope she will meet with the success that she merits.

As yet I hav given no lectures in North Yamhill, as I am teaching here and it is feared that I might raise the ire of the Christians and so injure the school.

While this is a very Liberal community, and everyone knows my attitude toward orthodoxy, everything passes off smoothly so long as I giv no personal offense Freethought teachers are not altogether safe where the least virus of orthodoxy remains.

North Yamhill is another place where the Liberals contributed to the building of a church, with the understanding that the Liberals should be allowed to use it. But, as in every such instance, the money and the entire management of the church was given into the hands of the pious, so no "blasphemous speeches" hav been heard within its "sacred walls." It is hoped that the Freethinkers will soon learn to quit such nonsense, and just contribute a little to the building of halls for themselvs.

Though I hav not yet lectured in North Yamhill, I go once a month to our neighboring town of Forest Grove, and once a month to McMinnville.

The Liberals of Forest Grove and Hillsboro are doing nobly. They hav organized a county Secular Union. and hav monthly meetings, when your correspondent in his humble way "breaks the bread of life to them." The Liberals of Forest Grove hav an advantage that the Liberals of but few towns hav. They hav a fine large hall of their own, that was built by money given for the purpose by the deceased French Freethinker, Mr. Vert. The hall is known as Vert's Liberal Hall. When at the Grove I am generally entertained by our enthusiastic Spiritualistic friend, T. M. Hines, and also by our energetic president, D C. Stewart. Mr. Stewart livs about four miles from town and it is a very pleasant ride from town out to his splendid farm and happy home, where the Liberal preacher whiles away an evening beside an old fashioned, cheerful fireplace. Our secretary is Mrs. S. C. Todd—a noble woman who is in earnest in the work for humanity. As is characteristic of her sex, she accepts without a murmur the drudgery that is imposed upon her.

The Liberals of the Grove are going to celebrate the ancient pagan festival day, Christmas. with a ball, and the 29th of January, the author-hero's birthday, will be celebrated. Forest Grove is one of the prettiest little towns in the West. It is really a picture of beauty, nestled among the foothills of the Coast Range mountains. From the Grove there may be seen four grand snowcapped mountains lifting their grand and stately peaks above the surrounding hills—Mounts St. Helens and Adams, of Washington, and Mounts Hood and Jefferson, of Oregon.

There are some good Liberals in McMinnville, John and W. T. Booth, A. K Olds, Mrs. Olds, Mrs. Booth. Our friends of McMinnville are considerably discouraged. As in many such places, there are scores of Freethinkers. but of the kind that are no help to the cause of Liberalism. They can see no reason why there is any use working and spending money for any such purpose. Then Mother Grundy frowns so when Liberals of wealth and of political aspirations attend Liberal lectures. What a terrible thing it is for some people to brave popular opinion, even when that popular opinion may be nothing but popular folly. It is a very serious thing to be considered unpopular.

Many people who hav grown out of orthodoxy and heartily approve the work that a few are doing, yet from selfish motivs or from cowardice will giv their influence and financial support to a system of religion they in their hearts utterly despise. I want to be free and honest. Shackles cannot be put upon my brain either by priests or Mother Grundy. I would rather go alone through life's journey, feeling that I was honest and earnest, than to go with company that I could not keep without the blush of hypocrisy mantling my cheeks. If I had opinions that I were ashamed of, I would try and reason myself out of them.

I find this to be very much the state of affairs at McMinnville as well as in almost every place. But, in spite of these adverse circumstances, I think the future is bright, and hope that the work will be continued, for it is steady, earnest effort that accomplishes great works. The falling of one drop of water on a rock makes no perceptible impression; but a constant falling of the drops, drop after drop, day after day, wears away the solid stone.

I would like to say to the Liberals of Oregon and Idaho that my school will close in March, and I shall be glad to answer calls to lecture during the spring and summer. GEO. H. DAWES.

North Yamhill, Ore.

Booming Real Estate in Washington.

Washington is number forty-two. The giant state is born, and takes her place upon the starry banner. Her great natural advantages insure her successful competition with any of her older sisters for first place, as the A No. 1 state of the Union. Her harbors, her lakes, her rivers, her ports, her fisheries, her mines, her vast and fertil agricultural valleys, her railroads, her thriving cities, her public spirited, energetic citizens, are unexcelled. Washington is an empire of herself, and has within her own boundaries every resource requisit for the upbuilding of the grandest commonwealth. Within her boundaries are forty-five million acres. She has four times the combined area of Vermont and New Hampshire, is twice as large as either Ohio or New York. Her magnificent and inexhaustible forests of fir, spruce, and cedar will prove a prolific source of revenue for the next three generations.

Puget sound timber has been famous the world over for ship-building purposes. The general impression has been that even ordinary oak was stronger than the best fir; recent timber tests at the shops of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. prove that yellow fir is actually one-third stronger than the very best Eastern white oak, and more than half stronger than Eastern white pine. Puget sound fir will henceforth be in demand for railroad trestle bridges on every road in the United States. Trees eight feet in diameter at the stump, and over two hundred feet in length, are quite common in the immense forests which skirt Puget sound.

Coal is found in many parts of the state both east and west. It is computed that there is not less than one hundred and eighty thousand acres of coal in western Washington. The annual output of coal in the Puget sound country is over a million and a quarter tons; and it is constantly increasing, as new mines are opened up and better transportation facilities afforded.

The iron mines of Washington excel those of the famous Michigan peninsula; the very low percentage of phosphorus making the ore especially valuable for bessemer steel products. With the steadily increasing stream of capital which is pouring into the state, it will in a few years excel even Pennsylvania as a great iron-producer.

Puget sound has the finest harbors in the world. The different ports are nearly all land-locked and afford a safe anchorage for the largest ocean going vessels. Taking it all in all, it is beyond question the most magnificent, picturesque body of salt water on the globe.

Washington is exempt from cyclones or blizzards. People in the East hav been deceived into a notion that the winters in the sound country are one continual rainfall. The signal service record of the weather for the last eleven years givs: Yearly average of snowy days, eleven; rainy days, ninety seven; clear days, one hundred and fifty six, and cloudy days, one hundred and one. The warmest day in eleven years was eighty nine degrees, and the coldest day six degrees, above zero. The average for spring is fifty three degrees; for summer, sixty-seven degrees; for autumn, fifty degrees. The days are pleasantly warm, and the nights are always cool in summer.

In my last I gave a brief description of Seattle in her phenix transition state. The only rival of that wondrously progressiv Queen City of Puget sound is Port Townsend. When I first visited this place, a year ago in May, its people were enjoying a drowsy sleep. I had but a very short time to visit there, but rapid as was my survey I was very deeply impressed with its great and grand possibilities.

Port Townsend is now wide awake, and I doubt if she is ever again caught napping. What a magical, glorious transformation, since my first visit! Some of the old mossbacks deepened their dozing to eternal slumber, while her wide-awake citizens hav indeed aroused to most energetic action.

Port Townsend is situated at the head of the straits of San Juan de Fuca, and commands the entrance to the whole sound country. It is one of the finest harbors in the known world.

Port Townsend bay has an anchorage area of about fifty square miles, in which the water is from three to eleven fathoms deep. Vessels from the ocean, bound to any of the sound ports, sail in as far as Port Townsend, needing no pilot. The navigator does not even need a chart during daylight, for it is perfectly safe for the largest vessel to sail in any part of the bay, so long as she is kept twice her length from the shore. The situation is one that impresses every visitor, for Port Townsend holds the keys to a system of inland navigation reaching into a vast and fertil region rich in natural as well as acquired wealth, which is tributary to this bright and prosperous city. It is ninety miles from Port Townsend to the ocean, while Seattle lies forty miles southeast, and Victoria thirty miles northwest. Port Townsend is the nearest port of entry in the United States for the traffic of Japan, China, India, Australia, and Alaska. Steamers sail to Alaska every two weeks from Port Townsend. During the first six months of 1888 the custom house report shows Alaska freight, 4 634 tons, valued at nigh two million dollars. Having been selected by the government as the headquarters of its customs service on the sound, all the commerce of the great coal and iron fields, the fruit and wheat farms, of the inland empire drained by Puget sound, and the vast system of rail and water centering here, must pay tribute to Port Townsend, just as all the incoming tonnage from foreign lands must do likewise. Congress appropriated $240 000 to build the custom house and post-office, and the building is under headway, and will be hurried to completion. It will seem incredible, yet it is strictly true that with the exception of New York alone, more tonnage is registered at Port Townsend than at any other port in the United States. The official report of the business transacted at the custom house from December, 1887, to November, 1888, givs the number of vessels cleared as 1,046, total tonnage, 966 356; number of vessels entered, December. 1887. to November, 1888, 1 039, total tonnage, 1 049 094. The report for 1889 will greatly exceed this.

The city is built to the westward of Point Hudson, and faces the southeast. At the point the low land extends back half a dozen blocks or more, but the flat grows rapidly narrower to westward, until the bluff comes out flush to the water's edge. In the business par of the town the streets extending back from the bay are interrupted by the bluff about three blocks from the water, but those running parallel with the shore ascend to the hights by easy grades. On the hill the land is rolling enough to afford perfect drainage, and to permit, from the various elevations, an unobstructed view of the magnificent scenery that challenges one's admiration in every direction. The view from the hights of Port Townsend is one of the grandest and most fascinating imaginable, the tranquil waters of the inlet specked with sail and steam craft, the Indian canoe and the sea birds occupying the foreground. In the east the long cragged crest of the Cascade range sweeps across the landscape where Mt. Baker thrusts his hoary, snowclad summit boldly to the sky. To the south and west are the Olympic mountains, in the midst of which the grim old sentinel Olympus stands. The view from the top of the new Tourists' Hotel is probably one of the grandest in the world.

For general farming, fruit-raising, and dairying, and for delightful summer resorts, and building sites, there is an extensiv and most attractiv field around Port Townsend, both on the mainland and on the islands and peninsulas that are numerous in the vicinity.

The fishing industry is assuming large proportions. A number of vessels are engaged in fishing for halibut, sturgeon, cod, and salmon, all of which abound in the waters from Port Townsend to the shores of Alaska. The success attending this industry has resulted in negotiations for six hundred fishing-boats and schooners to be sent here from Gloucester, Mass.

Among the most profitable and successful industries of the city is the Port Townsend Foundry and Machine Company; D. W. Smith, president. Mr. Smith is also president of the state bank of Washington, and to his energy, enterprise, and public spirit the city is greatly indebted for its wondrous progress. D. W. Smith was a good soldier, is an able lawyer, a clear headed, practical business man, and a genuin Liberal.

The Machine Company has just completed another splendid steamer, the Discovery. Port Townsend may well be proud of her. Her engins are of the very best design and workmanship, and gain the highest encomiums of experienced engineers and machinists, who pronounce her unsurpassed by anything afloat.

The company turn out everything in their line, from a tailor's goose to a donkey engin. The excellence of their work has resulted in such increase of business that they hav had to remove their plant to a thirty-acre plot of tide water lands, which they hav spiled and converted into handsome docks, on the shore end erecting a monster foundry, and machine shops.

The city is well supplied with public schools, and rejoices in a normal college, with very handsome buildings and grounds. There is a full corps of professors, and an attendance of seventy pupils. But what is of especial interest is the following extract from the incorporate papers of the Port Townsend and Northwestern Normal College:

ARTICLE V. Every branch of knowledge necessary or conducive to the highest development of mind or body, including the principles of morality, truth, justice, and patriotism, and the rights, duties, and dignity of American citizenship; but no book, tract, paper, catechism, or other publication of a partisan or denominational character shall be used or distributed in the school; nor shall any partisan or sectarian doctrin be taught therein; it being the intention of the incorporation that only secular subjects shall be taught and that all religious and anti religious subjects shall be relegated to the home and churches.

It was through the zeal and persistency of Gen. D. W. Smith and his Liberal colleagues that this wise provision was made, and what else had been a sectarian became a secular college.

The price of real estate is rapidly advancing. There is danger of its by and by exceeding value, and a gambling speculation would keep out the actual settler. The business men who hav labored so faithfully and wisely in promoting the best interests of the city will need to keep sharp lookout and prevent any such calamity. All possible should be done to encourage home building and the establishment of manufactories. The cost of building a good five-room cottage is from $700 to $1 500, according to interior finish. A modern two-story frame residence will cost from $1 800 to $2 500. Rents vary from $15 to $40 for dwelling-houses. Wages are: Carpenters, $3 50 to $5; plasterers, $5; machinists, $4 50; house painters, $3 50; laborers, $2; mill hands, $50 per month; farm laborers, $25 to $30 per month. And for good, burden-bearing hired girls, and women cooks, and nurses, this section, any part of Puget sound, is a bonanza. $5 to $7 per week would be gladly paid to real A No. 1 help all the year round. For lack of good girls some families are paying $30 and $40 per month to heathen Chinese.

Freethought holds its own, yet for lack of organization the church and Mrs. Grundy exert undue influence, and church and fashion frown on science and common sense. I delivered four lectures at the court house to steadily increasing interest and attendance. Arthur Venn, a young artisan of push and ability, an earnest, thorough Liberal, took the initiativ and most of the burden, seconded by the Methodist Episcopal church. Gen. D. W Smith and his estimable wife extended to me the generous hospitality of their happy, cosy home. At the last lecture the following gentlemen were unanimously elected by the Liberals of Port Townsend as delegates to the great Seattle convention to be held the last of January next, for the purpose of effecting practical organization of the Liberals of Washington: Gen. D. W. Smith. Arthur Venn, John Effin, Hamilton Keeler, and H. E. Morgan.

The friends are anticipating lectures from Mrs. Reynolds, and if arrangements can be effected, it cannot fail to greatly popularize Liberalism with the ladies. Until we enlist the wives and mothers we cannot fairly hope for the triumph of reason, right, and truth over ancient superstition and bigotry. With their aid victory is near and we can "keep the flag above the cross." C B. REYNOLDS.

Our Policy.

Nothing is more usual, or natural, than that men should differ in opinion as to the right method for conducting a party or an organization. The word "policy," when applied to a public object, may perhaps hav a different meaning than when applied to a private adventure. We (I now speak of the Union) must hav a distinctiv policy because we hav a dominant enemy to overthrow. But what is the policy of the American Secular Union? According to its constitution and its Nine Demands it has but "apparently" one policy, viz., the separation of church and state, and upon this basis all persons of all creeds and faiths whatsoever are invited to coöperate with us in our endeavors to bring this to a practical issue. Should this be our only policy? If yes, then the American Secular Union can disband when they hav attained their objects; for when the separation of the church from the state has been accomplished there is practically no further use for the Union. Such a meager policy is not sufficient to enforce the success of our organization. We must go further; we must adopt a more lasting and antagonistic policy, if we wish our efforts to become effectiv for all purposes of social reform, or for sweeping aside the religious obstructions that stand in the way of it.

Now, the question which presents itself before us is, "Can a Christian retain his religion and unite with us in a common course of action?" Christianity is considered by its advocates as the only true religion. It arrogates unto itself preëminence, and visits with supreme contempt all other religious creeds. Its presumption is of a character unknown to any other creed. It holds that all within its pale are traveling on the road to salvation, and looks upon those without as already bearing the mark of eternal damnation upon their devoted foreheads. From the cradle to the grave its adherents are required to regulate all their thoughts and actions in strict accordance with its injunctions, and it claims every moment of their lives to be devoted to the furtherance of its glory and exaltation. With these facts before us, it is difficult to imagin how any honest Christian can sincerely unite with Secularists in a common course of action, or one common policy. It does seem to me an utter impossibility. Secularism being essentially antagonistic to all religions, the Christian, who considers religion to be the best and fairest gift of providence, naturally regards the Secularist as an enemy to his kind, and looks upon him as one who wickedly or unwittingly designs to deprive his fellow-men of all hope and consolation in this world and their chances of salvation in the world to come. Therefore the Christian, instead of uniting with the Secularist, must in the very nature of things regard him with suspicion and distrust. Then, is it not high time that the absurd idea of attempting to unite two such extraordinarily heterogeneous elements should be abandoned? It would be as ridiculous to expect the wolf and the lamb to liv together on friendly terms as to suppose that Christians can or will act harmoniously with Secularists. The greatest good of the one seems the profoundest evil of the other. The one delights to see the progress of religion, and would use every means, honest or dishonest, to compel the state to succor the church; while the other strains his energies and exerts his powers to undermine and uproot it. The one cries for more churches and chapels; while the other views these institutions with disgust because he believes them to be the greatest obstacles in the way of practical reform among the people. Now, for the sake of argument, let us suppose that a number of Christians join the Secular Union, upon the basis of the separation of church and state; being members, they would possess equal privileges, and would of course hav the same chance of being elected on the committee of management as the rest. Let us suppose, the committee at their deliberations, and consisting of an equal number of Christians and Secularists, a Secular member rises to propose that a portion of the Union's funds shall be employed for the extension of Secularism, and as a means to such end he advises to send about the United States well-qualified individuals, whose business it should be to do all in their power to expose the errors of Christianity and establish the truths of Secularism. Is it possible that the Christian members could or would giv their sanction and support to such a proposition? Certainly not, unless they are content to sacrifice principle for courtesy. On the other hand, suppose a Christian member rises to propose that inasmuch as religious ideas are entertained and cherished by a large number of our fellow-men, and as the generality deem it an insult to their feelings to hear these ideas publicly challenged, it would be well, and in accordance with the opinions and wishes of a considerable number of members, if for the future the American Secular Union abandoned all discussions upon religious topics. Would not every Secularist laugh at such a proposition, and indignantly reject it? Seeing, then, that the views of the respectiv parties on such important points are diametrically opposit, their union and cohesion for any practical purpose seems quite out of the question. It is indeed an obvious delusion to suppose that for one moment they can act harmoniously together, while each of them is sincerely anxious to promulgate what they believe to be true and of the greatest importance. It would certainly occupy more space than could be conveniently given to an article of this kind to compare Secular principles with those of Christianity in extenso. Therefore, I hope that sufficient has been said to make thoroughly clear the antagonism, and to exhibit the absurdity in the constitution of the present Union which admits "all" persons, of any faith or creed whatever, as being eligible to become members, since no honest Christian can conscientiously "agree" with its principles or its objects. I trust that enough has been said, both here and elsewhere, to disabuse the minds of those who hold the affirmativ of this question, and those who are not convinced by the foregoing I would beg to reconsider the subject, and I hav no doubt that by so doing they will discover that the attempt to unite with persons holding religious views, in order to obtain their cooperation in our work, has been the "rock" upon which the Union has been gradually sinking, and by admitting the semi religious and superstitious, instead of a well-directed anti-religious, crusade, shall we not sink lower and lower until the bark will founder altogether?

We must, of a necessity, hav a distinctiv, well-directed, antagonistic policy to all religions. I know that many entertain the idea that we hav been pulling down long enough, and that the time has arrived to commence building a new structure; but let those who think so build one, if they hav sufficient material. To me, however, it seems that although a great number of fallacies hav been destroyed, still there is a vast deal to be accomplished, and we must first pull down the old building before we can erect a new structure upon the old site. If Freethinkers are to unite they must unite to fight superstition at every step, and to destroy the charge of sectarianism and enable man to be progressiv.

Secularism is a protest against all the theologies of the day; it deems them all incomplete and unsatisfactory. If it finds a mind bound down with creeds and Bibles, it endeavors to the utmost to sever the bands; if it finds men prostrating themselvs before idols, it strives to pull them down though the worshiper may polish the fragments. If it finds a "rock of ages" in its path, it will break it. Then how can we expect even the most liberal-minded Christian to unite and coöperate with us in such a work? For a long time to come our "policy" must needs be iconoclastic, it must be aggressiv, it must sound the challenge note of battle, for uprooting the creed-erected barriers between man and man, and stubbornly negate the influence of the priest. Then again I ask, and this time with more emphasis, "How can we expect the Christian to unite and cooperate with us in such a work?"

Our policy is to make every individual member of the Union an ax-bearer, and a pioneer cutting down this obstacle, and clearing away the debris. I respect the sower who delights in the positiv work of scattering seed on the ground, but I fear that the weeds will destroy much of the fruit of his labors. I know that the present is perhaps a critical time for the Union; and the present dissensions which permeate the Union are to be deplored, but if they cannot be avoided, yet our real work must not be lost sight of. We must persevere steadily in the path before us, though it be a thorny one. At present Secularism seems apathetic, and more so just now, when it should exert itself with redoubled vigor, when we find our principles menaced, when we see our individual liberty attacked, and threatened with encroachments from all sides. Is it right that so many should indulge in listless apathy? The course of earnest Freethinkers is clear enough, and if any amount of success is obtained, then every honest person would naturally strive to adhere to it. Let us not shrink from performing our duty for fear of being branded with the name of "Infidel," for it is a glory to be an Infidel to error.

We can be courteous, but we can assert no compromise; we can show respect to the honest opinions of our opponents, but we must not sacrifice our own to a decidedly destructiv expediency. Let us continue on in the work we hav before us of establishing the American Secular Union independent of all religions, thereby necessarily making it antagonistic to all religions. There is no middle ground for us to take if we wish to make our Union a success. Our only wish should be to make man truly free, and this we can only do by eradicating all religious ideas from his brain. Our purpose should be to promote the happiness of our fellow-creatures, and by so doing we shall increase our own. And man can never be happy until he is free—free in body and free in mind, free in thought and free in utterance, free from crowns and free from creeds, free from priest and free from king, free from the cramping customs created by the influences surrounding him, and which hav taught him to bow to a robber, and frown upon a beggar. This is the task we hav to accomplish, even if it is to be done single-handed. We cannot expect that any sincere Christians would assist us in such a policy, so suicidal to themselvs, so antagonistic to all they hold sacred and dear, and which they cherish so fondly. And an organization which opens its doors to all opinions cannot hav a "policy" of its own, and cannot unrestrainedly teach to others that which it so strongly desires. Therefore I sincerely hope, as a well-wisher to the American Secular Union, that in its future course it will be guided by the experience of the past. JOHN R CHARLESWORTH.

THE Roman [pagan] religion was essentially domestic, and it was a main object of the legislator to surround marriage with every circumstance of dignity and solemnity. Monogamy was, from the earliest times, strictly enjoined, and it was one of the great benefits that hav resulted from the expansion of Roman power, that it made this type dominant in Europe. In the legends of early Rome we hav ample evidence both of the high moral estimate of women, and of their prominence in Roman life. The tragedies of Lucretia and of Virginia display a delicacy of honor, a sense of the supreme excellence of unsullied purity, which no Christian nation could surpass.—Lecky, European Morals, Vol. I, p. 316.

SPEAKING of self worship, which leads to brutality toward others, Mill says: "Christianity will never practically teach it" (the equality of human beings) while it sanctions institutions grounded on arbitrary preference for one human being over another.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

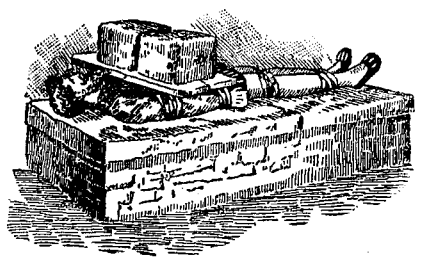
SATURDAY, - - DECEMBER 14, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

IN THE

Truth Seeker Annual for 1890



WILL BE AN ARTICLE

WITH SEVENTEEN ILLUSTRATIONS,

ENTITLED THE

Inventions of Science and Inventions of Christianity

St. Polycarp remarked as to scientific instruments; "In all these monstrous demons is seen an art hostil to God."

A Christian Invention.—Giles Corey being murdered with weights by the New England Puritans for defending his wife from the accusation of witchcraft.—See T. S. Annual of 1890, p. 92.

In renewing your subscription to The Truth Seeker inclose 25 cents and the Annual will be forwarded as soon as issued.

A Change in Public Opinion.

Last week a trial in one of our courts had a peculiar beginning and a significant ending. It was a libel suit brought by a "materializing medium," Mrs. Wells, against the editor of a Western paper who had charged her with being a humbug who "uses trick cabinets and confederates to accomplish her deceptions." Mrs. Wells was backed by H. J. Newton, of this city, and Lawyer Benns, of Brooklyn.

The peculiar beginning of the case is that Mrs. Wells was first exposed at the house of Mr. Newton, and Mr. Newton came out in an article denouncing her as a fraud. Then he recanted, took her under his protection, and backed her with money in the libel suit. When it was said in the Western newspaper that Mrs. Wells is a swindler, Mr. Newton wrote the publisher, demanding to know what Mrs Wells he meant, and if he meant Mrs. Eliza A. Wells, and if so, when would he be in New York. The Western man promptly accepted service on his attorney in Brooklyn, and it was announced that the medium had sued for twenty thousand dollars damages.

When the case was called for trial before Judge Beach in the supreme court, Lawyer Benns desired to ask the jurors certain questions, and if they could not answer them affirmativly, he objected to going on with the case. The questions were:

"Suppose it was proved on evidence that was not disputed here that a form in human shape appeared all clothed in white, and then dissolved into the air, would you believe the evidence?"

"No, I wouldn't."

"If you saw such a phenomenon yourself; if you passed your hand through the form and found it was only vapor, would you then believe such a thing was possible?"

"No, sir; I don't believe anything of the kind could happen."

Another juror was asked:

"Suppose positiv evidence was produced here to prove that a woman was locked in an iron case competent to hold a tiger, and that she came out without the moving of the iron bars or the unlocking of the door, would you believe it?"

"Who came out? the tiger?"

"No, the woman."

"No, I wouldn't."

"Would you believe in the materialization of a spirit form if it was revealed here before your eyes?"

"No, sir. I would say there was some deception."

Judge Beach ruled that all such jurors were competent, and that the disbelief of the jurors as expressed was no more disqualifying than a disbelief that the moon is made of pink paper. The issue to be determined, he said, was whether, as the defendant charged and offered to prove, a trick cabinet and confederates had been used by the complainant, and the court did not propose that "the trial should wander over the domain of Spiritualism."

The plaintiff's attorneys argued that their client would hav no show if the jurors would not believe it possible for anyone to do what she professed to hav done, and withdrew the suit.

The positions assumed by the judge and jurymen are significant of the change that has come about as to alleged supernatural occurrences. It is ev dent that the plaintiff proposed to bring forward witnesses who had seen the things stated in the questions occur. But the jury plainly declared that they could not be made to believe anything of the sort, as it was beyond human experience; and the judge evidently took the same ground. Here, then, we hav a legal tribunal throwing out of court better testimony than can ever be obtained to the reality of the Christian religion and practically affirming that human testimony to supernatural events is of no value at all, because supernaturalism is beyond the bound of probability and human experience.

When Greenleaf afflicted the world with his Testimony of the Evangelists, going over it, cross-examining them, and summing up in legal shape, and concluding that it answered all legal requirements to prove a case, the Christian world was delighted and scoffed at the heretic, saying There now? what do you think of that? Of course Greenleaf has long ago been laid on the shelf, as his witnesses were found to be mythical men and their testimony to be flatly contradicted by facts, but the plaintiff in this suit had a much stronger case than Greenleaf could present. His witnesses were all dead; those for Mrs. Wells were alive and in court. His witnesses contradicted each other; Mrs. Wells's would hav agreed as to what they saw. If Greenleaf could make out a case from the disputed testimony of dead men, written years after the events were said to hav happened, and not even sworn to, subjected to all the mutation of intervening centuries and passing through the perils of translations and retranslations, guesses, hypotheses, and alleged inspiration, how much stronger would hav been the case made out by Mrs. Wells! She could bring men to testify that they had actually seen these occurrences; that they had taken such precautions that the conjured shades could not possibly be only human representations; and instead of four she could hav brought dozens, whose testimony was sworn to, whose reputations for veracity are good, who saw the marvelous events only the other day, who did not guess but knew by actual eyesight and contact, and who based all their hypotheses on experience. It would seem that if a juryman could be impressed by human testimony he ought to hav believed that Mrs. Wells did really and truly call up the dead. Certainly if they could believe it of a man who is said to hav lived nearly nineteen hundred years ago on the evidence of four unknown liars, they ought to believe it of a woman of to day on the evidence of dozens of honest witnesses.

But the jury would hav none of it. Supernaturalism, to them, was impossible and unbelievable. Yet courts not so many decades ago executed witches on a hundredth part of the testimony Mrs. Wells could adduce that she was a genuin medium. Juries then believed that women could ride through the air, could send evil spirits into animals and persons, and could not only conjure up spirits of dead men, but that the very devil himself often visited them and made unholy bargains. Such belief was a part of the very religion held by the jurymen who now refuse to believe on direct human evidence that any dead person ever came back to this world.

It is a vast and a pleasing change in public opinion; but how deep it buries the Christian religion, the sole claim to acceptance of which is that it is truly supernatural!

Our Congressional Nuisance.

Two chaplains log-rolling for the privilege of holding an unconstitutional office, and incidentally earning $900 a session, was the ungracious spectacle the country beheld at the organization of the fifty-first Congress last week.

Last session the House of Representativs was Democratic, and the blind chaplain Milburn was chosen to direct the action of God so far as that action related to the lower House. This year the House is Republican by a small majority, and the Republicans selected for all its offices men of their own political faith. The Republican candidate for chaplain was a relativ of Mrs. Harrison. By the bolting of a few Republican members Mr. Milburn had a good chance of election, and his friends worked for him strenuously. He was finally elected.

There isn't the shadow of a ghost of a shaving o constitutional authority for swearing in a chaplain as a United States officer. In fact, it is forbidden; for the prohibition against religious establishment is violated by such act. But some of the members of the House are pious, and of course are willing to violate not only a constitution but the rights of all other citizens to get daily religion at some one's else expense, and the rest of the members are afraid to antagonize the churches. So the people hav to pay for what about eight of every ten of the members regard as a positiv nuisance. The Christian church is a great bugaboo to most folks.

Our Pictures.

We hope that our friends will not forget that in order to continue the pictures another year, it is imperativly necessary that we hav an addition of at least five hundred names to our list. Some of our friends are hoping that we will not get them, for they do not like that style of warfare, but others think differently, as may be seen from the letters herewith printed in addition to those in the "Letters from Friends." The first is from the treasurer of the American Secular Union:

"PHILADELPHIA, PA., Dec. 4, 1889.

"MR. EDITOR: The reading of your exhortatory article headed, 'A Word About Our Pictures,' made me at once hunt up the last wrapper, which was already consigned to the waste-basket, to ascertain whether I was not one of the delinquents in question. With a sort of joyful relief I made the discovery that I was not a debtor yet, but came very near to be, since the time for which the paper has been paid will run out on the 6th of December.

"In order, therefore, that my paper may not be stopped, I inclose $5 with the request to make the proper change on that ever reminding tab. I will try to get a new subscriber, if possible, to help to make up the five hundred that the pictures may be continued.

"Yours truly, F. C. MENDE."

Here is another from Philadelphia, from the Secretary of the Liberal League, who does his share of work in pushing the sale of THE TRUTH SEEKER and our books at the League meetings. He says:

"I am sorry to hear complaints of the cartoons in THE TRUTH SEEKER. As you desire us, one and all, to speak out and giv our opinions of them, I will say that, in my judgment, they are splendid object-lessons for children, and even grown-up people also. They hav a tendency to refresh the memory of what the Bible does really teach, without perusing it weeks and months, as the case may be. I will say that my children know more about the old book through these illustrations than they otherwise would. So I hope, for one, they will be continued and also sustained.

"Yours, GEO. LONGFORD."

The next letter is from one of the friends to whom Mr. Longford refers. This one does not like the pictures (and another of the same mind will be found in the report of the Literature Fund):

"LEOMINSTER, MASS., Dec. 9, 1889.

"MR. EDITOR: You ask for an expression of opinion on the pictures. I am of the opinion that Mr. Parton has the right 'impression,' that 'the pictures repel more than they attract.' I hav wished to hand my TRUTH SEEKER to my Christian neighbors to read, but was prevented from doing so on account of the pictures, which would hav been shocking to them. Respectfully yours, J. FOSTER."

But Mr. C. P. Hosmer, of Belle Plaines, Ia., thinks differently, and acts wisely. He sends $3 for a new subscriber and says:

"This is my effort. One new subscriber to aid the pictures in the paper. Now, if the other four hundred and ninety-nine will each get a subscriber, we will hav the pictures.

"Yours in hope of a free country, C. P. HOSMER."

An old Texas friend writes:

"DALLAS, TEX., Dec. 6, 1889.

"MR. EDITOR: By all means don't discontinue Heston's cartoons. I will send you some new subscribers before long. W. D. ROBINSON."

Mr. John R. Charlesworth has also handed us the names of two new subscribers to help continue the pictures. There is no doubt that eighty per cent of the Freethinkers of the country are in favor of their continuance; the question is, will they help us get the necessary funds with which to pay for them? We are not able to publish them without assistance of a substantial kind, however much we may desire to, for all good things in this world cost money. And there ought to be no trouble at all in finding the necessary additional number of subscribers if all those who hav written in favor of the pictures will make a little effort.

The Literature Fund.

The following letter is short and directly to the point:

"SAVANNAH, GA., Dec. 7, 1889.

"MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $20—$10 for fund for distribution of literature, $10 for American Secular Union—all from a friend. SILAS B. LATHAM."

The next is longer, and in some portions not quite so good—but it is pretty good:

"RIDGEWOOD, N. Y., Dec. 9, 1889.

"MR. EDITOR: Your appeal in THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 30th, for additional subscribers to enable you to continue the illustrations, prompts me to write a few lines on the subject. I think the way to increase the subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER would be to discontinue the illustrations. They are a hindrance rather than an aid. While extreme Radicals may enjoy the pictures, the class of readers whom you especially desire to reach is repelled rather than attracted by them. The 'Literature Fund' project is a wise one, in my opinion. As an earnest of my approval I inclose $2 toward it. R. B. JACKSON."

The fund now stands:

Cash previously acknowledged	$17.00
Silas Latham	10.00
R. B. Jackson	2 00	$29.00
Expended as per TRUTH SEEKER of Nov. 30,		$19.50

Leaving $9.50 on hand which we shall use as we did the other, as soon as lists of legislators from Washington and Montana are obtained.

The American Secular Union has authorized us to forward at its expense to each national representativ and senator a copy of Remsburg's "Sabbath Breaking," which will be done when Congress gets fairly to work and Blair introduces his bill again.

We hope that every Liberal in the four new states has written to his state senator aud representativ protesting against the enactment of Sunday laws, and in Washington also against the exemption of church property from taxation.

In the mean time, more donations to the Literature Fund are needed. Let us keep up this war, and show our lawmakers that there are Liberals alive as well as Christians. It is just as easy to convert a legislator as it is a private citizen, and it will do a deal more good just now.

Aid for One of Senator Blair's Bills.

Senator Blair has found a useful ally in his endeavor to pass his national educational bill—no less a person than President Harrison, Presbyterian elder. In his message to Congress the latter eminent Christian says:

"The interest of the general government in the education of the people found an early expression not only in the thoughtful and sometimes warning utterances of our ablest statesmen, but in liberal appropriations from the common resources for the support of education in the new states. No one will deny that it is of the gravest national concern that those who hold the ultimate control of all public affairs should hav the necessary intelligence wisely to direct and determin them. National aid to education has heretofore taken the form of land grants, and in that form the constitutional power of Congress to promote the education of the people is not seriously questioned. I do not think it can be successfully questioned when the form is changed to that of a direct grant of money from the public treasury.

"Such aid should be, as it always has been, suggested by some exceptional conditions. The sudden emancipation of the slaves of the South, the bestowal of the suffrage, which soon followed, and the impairment of the ability of the states where these new citizens were chiefly found to adequately provide educational facilities, presented not only exceptional but unexampled conditions. That the situation has been much ameliorated there is no doubt. The ability and interest of the states hav happily increased.

"But a great work remains to be done, and I think the general government should lend its aid. As the suggestion of a national grant in aid of education grows chiefly out of the condition and needs of the emancipated slave and his descendants, the relief should, as far as possible, while necessarily proceeding upon some general lines, be applied to the need that suggested it. It is essential, if much good is to be accomplished, that the sympathy and activ interest of the people of the states should be enlisted, and that the methods adopted should be such as to stimulate and not to supplant local taxation for school purposes."

President Harrison does not, in this, go so far as to urge an amendment to the Constitution commanding states to maintain schools in which shall be taught the fundamental principles of the Christian religion, but he does worse, he desires Congress to violate that Constitution and vote money to do one of those things which are by that instrument reserved to the state. There is a vast difference between the United States disposing of its public land and voting cold cash to establish schools. In the one instance they are pursuing a constitutional course; in the other they are interfering in a matter in which they hav not a shadow of authority. Congress can no more constitutionally authorize in Charlestown. S. C., the establishment of schools for the colored citizens than it can authorize such schools for Irishmen in New York.

This presidential recommendation is without doubt intended to help Mr. Blair get his educational bill through Congress, for two or three years ago the proposition was made in the Senate to appropriate through a series of years some sixteen millions of dollars to build schools in certain states which had a great number of illiterate voters within their limits. This was understood at the time to mean the Southern states. Mr. Harrison was then a senator, and he and Senator Blair, if we recollect rightly, supported the bill. The churches were strongly in favor of the measure, as certain church educational institutions hoped to handle the funds and do the educating. The scheme failed then, and Congress will probably pay little attention to it now. Its revival by the president, however, will help Mr. Blair's present educational bill, as his new measure has a stronger church backing than the other.

An English Political Program.

The English political Liberals, under the leadership of Gladstone, hav announced their platform. It is universal male suffrage, a shortening of the duration of Parliament, a reduction of the period of residence enabling a man to vote to three months, compulsory powers to acquire allotments, the abolition of the duties on tea, coffee, and cocoa, a direct popular vote on the liquor traffic, and the disestablishment of the Church of England. The next Parliament will be strenuously urged to pass bills favoring all these demands, and if it shall not do so, the Liberals hope to soon elect a parliament that will.

It may be that it is to be able to take a very activ part in this program that Mr. Bradlaugh has resigned the activ leadership of the Freethought party in England. He cannot do everything, and possibly he considers that others can capably conduct the Freethought propaganda, and that he can do more good as a politician working for reform and disestablishment. Rumor in England, too, hath it bruited shrewdly about that Mr. Bradlaugh, in the event of Liberal success, has an eye on a cabinet position, and in view of his past interests in Indian affairs, and the present direction of his convalescent trip, it is a fair guess that the portfolio of secretary of state for India would not be distasteful to him.

These are of course only rumors, but if they are facts, the ambitions are truly honorable, legitimately to be held. If Mr. Bradlaugh can better help to bring about disestablishment by being untrammeled, the good to be gained will more than repay the Freethought party for making the sacrifice.

It is pretty evident that a change is about to take place in the political affairs of our mother country, and it is not very rash to predict that advantage will thereby accrue to the Secularists and to their intrepid leader.

The Mistake of the Probationists.

If the doctrin of probation after death be true, those Christians who are sending missionaries to the heathen are making an awful mistake.

The essence of the doctrin is that if the light of the gospel be withheld from certain races, God's mercy will in some way find methods to redeem them, because it would be unfair to damn them for not believing a scheme God never let them hear of.

But it is an undisputed fact that but a very small percentage of those who do know of the gospels take advantage of their knowledge to obtain heavenly mercy. The large majority of the Christian race will be damned.

It is plainly to be seen, therefore, that it is a cruelty to the heathen to carry the gospel to them, for without it the probation doctrin will save them all, while with it the perversity of the human race—which will not believe all it is told—will unquestionably consign the major portion of them to sheol.

As fast, then, as the probation doctrin spreads among the orthodox sects, they should disband their missionary societies.

Editorial Notes.

MR. THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN sends us this: "To THE TRUTH SEEKER and Friends in New York, Boston, and everywhere: Please to oblige me by not using the prefix 'Hon.' before my name. To it I am in no way entitled, and never hav been. Yours sincerely, T. B. WAKEMAN." But his article for the ANNUAL is just as complete and interesting as though he could prefix and affix to his name all the titles and letters known to the British peerage and the college degrees.

UPON the school question, Charles C. Starbuck, in the New Englander, makes the following remarks: "The basis of our school system ought to be Protestant. We are in fact, and ought to be by legal decision, a Protestant Christian country. We do not want schools in which we cannot mention Luther and Knox and Calvin and Latimer with full confidence and honor, not withholding it from St. Francis de Sales and St. Charles Borromeo. A school in which our children are not free to study Macaulay's History, is only half a school." The only difference between the Protestants of the Starbuck-Blair stripe and the Roman Catholics is that they want to steal the schools for the Protestant church and the Roman Catholics intend to steal them for the Roman Catholic church. Both sects should be resisted to the utmost extreme.

SINCE Mr. Bradlaugh's illness Mrs. Besant appears to hav been editing the National Reformer. She says nothing about Theosophy, and she makes the paper much livelier than it has been of late, owing probably to the fact that she can giv more time to it than could Mr. Bradlaugh. In her suit against the London clergyman—a report of which we giv elsewhere—she displayed much legal skill, wonderful ability in argument, and not a little bravery in bearing the browbeating of court and opposing counsel. In dealing with the affairs of the world she has lost none of her vigor and clearness through much Theosophical seeking after knowledge of another. The disagreement of the jury renders it necessary that she carry the case higher, and the Rev. Edward Hoskyns will find his future path unhappy unless he apologizes and makes reparation for the foul wrong done to the ablest woman in England.

THE editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S "Children's Corner" has just been elected a member of the school board in Fall River, Mass., over an Episcopal clergyman who was pitted against her. It is a great triumph for our side and for the cause of woman. Almost everything was said to hurt her that could be thought of, but the arrows poisoned with venom and spite fell harmless at her feet. The bitterness of the hatred shown by the bigoted and superstitious was something marvelous in this age of enlightenment. Among other deprecatory reasons urged, including Atheism and Anarchism, was this: "She will go into the schools and tell the children that there is no hell!" But the voters knew their business. And the Australian ballot system was a great help, for it prevented intimidation. Miss Wixon was elected for three years, and her previous three years' service on the board gives her the right of seniority there. We congratulate her and the citizens of Fall River, and are proud indeed that the victory is ours. It is substantial encouragement for THE TRUTH SEEKER when the voters of a great city choose the editor of its children's department to superintend the education of their children.

THE Spiritualists of Montreal hav placed the finance committee of that city in a quandary. The Spiritualist Society petitioned for exemption from taxation on the ground that the temple occupied by it is a church. When the petition was presented the ignorance of the committee upon Spiritualist affairs exhibited itself. In answer to the inquiry, "What is that?"—referring to the society—one said it was "a sort of Freethought club;" another that it was not common sense to recognize a body as religious that didn't believe in religion. The petition was finally referred to the city attorney for an opinion. There appears to be a feeling in the minds of many of our Canadian neighbors, comments the Banner of Light, that the exemption from taxation of church property is a grievous wrong upon those whose property is in another form, and for that reason subject to assessment. We venture to say that no such petition would hav emanated from the Spiritualist Society, had not other societies not one whit more "religious" than itself, been granted exemption; but it very reasonably concluded that from the nature of its services, it is, in every sense of the term, a "religious society," or "church," and on that account is entitled to all the privileges granted to such bodies.

Letters from Friends.

BALTIMORE, MD, Dec. 2, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I am sorry to see that one of the friends of Freethought and liberty from priestcraft and demagogism, is against the illustrations of Brother Heston. I for one think that they are immense, and also add to the already priceless value of the grand old TRUTH SEEKER. I say, with Durand, in connection with Remsburg that he makes the priests froth at the mouth. Long liv Heston to carry on his part in the work he is engaged in. E. S. MCMURRAY.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Nov. 24, 289.

MR. EDITOR: Heston's "Thanksgiving" is tip-top. I took it to church to day—the church of the spirits—and the officiating clergyman, Rev. E B. Fairchild, was pleased to read it, and it pleased the people immensely, eliciting repeated applause. He said he regretted that he had not seen it sooner so that he might hav taken it for a text. However, the discourse he did giv was eloquent of radicalism, a vigorous condemnation of compromise and valiant assertion of the right and duty of following and proclaiming truth to its utmost limit. I received orders for several copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER from those who wanted to keep the praver.

JOHN P. GUILD.

LUMBERVILLE, PA., Nov. 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Again we hav the annual Thanksgiving proclamations of president and governors, who, in relation to God and the government of the universe, seem to us to possess no discerning power. We think with many others that the issuing of such proclamations is labor lost. How will such papers read before the close of the twentieth century, when it will be known that no device of man can in any way change the ruling power of the universe—that no device can prevent a cyclone, earthquake, or flood? And yet to fully combat these cherished theological errors of ages it requires a moral courage surpassing the military heroism of a Cæsar, or a Napoleon. ALBERT LIVEZEY.

CASCADE LOCKS, ORE., Nov. 20, 289.

MR. EDITOR: I cannot get along without the best paper in America. So please change my address from Orient, Ia., to Cascade Locks, Ore. Since last July I hav been looking at the western part of the United States, and like Putnam, think it is a great country. I notice a great many Liberals are coming to this coast—Reynolds, Dawes, and now Mrs. Krekel. And I notice the people are more Liberal than in fanatical Iowa. I notice in Dakota, where the Lord's people carried the day and voted for Prohibition, they are starving, and over in our sister state, Washington, where they nearly voted the Lord out of their constitution, the people are prosperous. Truly the ways of the Lord are past finding out.

Yours for Universal Mental Liberty, C. F. KUNATH.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28. 1889.

MR EDITOR: According to the latest news from Rome, a republican revolutionary society has been formed in said city under the names of Jesus Christ. Galileo, Bruno, Mazzini, Garibaldi, and others, with the object of establishing the Universal Republic and compelling all those who hav immense fortunes, whether clergymen or not, to return what they hav stolen from the poor. This is very important news for the Knights of Labor and other societies in this country which may hav the same object in view. The Catholic clergy hav publicly declared that "to be a Liberal" is one of the greatest crimes, worse than to be a murderer. When reading the above about the new society formed in Rome, I suppose they will understand that the head of the Catholic church has been and is St. Peter, the traitor, and not Jesus Christ. JOSEPH FELIX GONZALEZ.

TANEY, IDA., Nov. 23, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for some time, and not seeing any letters from this part, I thought a few lines would not be amiss. There are quite a number of Liberals in these parts, but only a few outspoken. But what there are make it warm for the hell-pedlers. Every once in a while some go crazy and imagin they are called to preach. But they don't hav the success they used to hav. They played all last winter to full houses and never took a trick. We knocked a Seventh-Day Adventist out last winter, and the rest would not debate They do a great deal of talking outside, but they won't discuss. Keep right on. Your paper is doing great good. Although only a few take it in this part, it is read by a great many. The pictures are what take a great many at first. They won't read but will look at the pictures, but in a short time they want to read as well as look at the pictures. THOMAS WEAVER.

GEORGIAVILLE, R. I, Nov. 21, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: This day I received a postal card and books from you—all in good order and worth their weight in gold. The "Age of Reason" is a book that theology cannot shake to pieces. Had Thomas Paine lived in our day, what a splendid cannon for theology! And the "Crisis" is a book that every American should read. "Crimes of Preachers"—wonder if those pious divines thought of their angry God when they were committing such crimes. For my part, deliver me from all Christianity. The holy Bible is full of ignorance. I can remember the name of D. M. Bennett, when at the Soakers' in Enfield, Conn., when a small boy not in my teens. Mr. D. M. Bennett lived at Lebanon, N. Y. He was too wise a man for the Shaker elders. He put too many questions to them. They did not want him longer there. That is orthodoxy. When a man will express his honest thoughts he is not wanted there.

I will try my level best to get you all the subscribers I can.

Yours truly, WM. A. BENNETT.

OMAHA, NEB, Nov. 23, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I am happy to send my money, for THE TRUTH SEEKER is mental life to my very being, and because of its most intelligent subscribers. If there is any more superstition in any of the cities of these United States than in this I would like you to point it out. Forty ministers just met together in the Young Men's Christian Association's rooms to see who could gas most about Sunday and Prohibition. And the Catholics are not sleeping. Our mayor is hand and glove with the forty blind leaders of the blind. Is it not strange the very men who hav such influence over the people and ought to be the greatest saviors, do not know what slaves they are making of the people? They are doing their level best to destroy this beloved country of once claimed freedom. They do not see that they are helping the mother church to stamp its foot on the eagle. Mr. Editor, hav you yet hopes? I think you are a brave soul, too. Supply us with such material as will build up manhood and womanhood so that we can see nature's god face to face.

W. L. GRAY.

FORESTPORT, N. Y., Dec 4, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: On the 2d of this month Mr. Remsburg, of Oak Mills, Kan., delivered to a small but select audience, many of whom were ladies, his lecture on "False Claims." The lecture, which took place in Arcanum Hall, Utica, and which is one of Mr. Remsburg's best, was a decided success. Every now and then the speaker was interrupted by a long and hearty applause which reached its culmination point when he declared that this country will never become a Christian republic. Let us sincerely pray that this prediction may prove true! To enumerate all the good points of the lecture cannot be done; one must hear it himself to be capable of judging. Authority after authority is cited; men of science, historians, theologians, all are called upon to giv their testimony, which invariably proves that the phrase, "False Claims," is true, and certainly no Christian can listen to this lecture of Remsburg without endangering the salvation of his soul. Liberals cannot serve our common cause better than by engaging Mr. Remsburg to deliver "False Claims." Mr. Rae, of Utica, a Spiritualist, I believe, did most of the work preparatory to the lecture, and to him and his fellow-workers of Utica is due the hearty thanks of the audience. Our thanks are likewise due to both reporters and editors of the Utica Herald and the Daily Press, but especially to those of the latter for the liberal notice given; then it makes a Freethinker hopeful to see that not all of our newspapers are under the ecclesiastical thumbscrew, and that all editors are not so bigoted as the one who edits and owns the Utica Observer. GUSTAVE NELSON.

MONTE VISTA, COL., Nov. 22, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I will announce the death of Capt. John W. Culumber. It will be painful news to Professor Jamieson to know that poor "Jack" was buried at Monte Vista to-day. He was late captain of Co. D, Colorado National Guards, a member of the Odd Fellows, late marshal of Monte Vista, deputy sheriff—a brave, tender, humane, and noble-hearted man. His merry laugh has rang out often in bell-like tones, so loud that everyone knew who the owner of that laugh was, because no one could laugh like Jack. I was with this noble specimen of humanity constantly almost every day for eighteen months, during which time he never spoke an unkind word to me, although pious folks called him a "holy terror." He was a pioneer, and widely known throughout Colorado, Arizona, and New Mexico, and not a crime stands against him in his eventful career. It was through my teaching that he was emancipated from the cursed superstition of the age, and became an image-breaker. When approached on the subject of Christianity he often drew from his pocket Mr. Billings's "Crimes of Preachers," and said, "Here's your damned scoundrels." Of course he used the most forcible language to express his indignation, because his nature, wild as it was, instantly revolted at the diabolical crimes recorded in that book. He was a despiser of priestly carpet-baggers, and often told me that he wanted no priest to rant over his peaceful ashes, and in this he was outspoken, and made it no secret. Yet after all, Elder Brooks had no more manhood than to read the meaningless words of the twelfth chapter of Ecclesiastes over his defenseless body. O Christianity, where's thy shame?

JOHN TRUEBLOOD.

KENT, O., Nov. 27, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: As you do not seem to fall in with us Christians in giving thanks for heavenly blessing, I thought I would send you something of "this world's goods" as an accompaniment with "the turkey." I forwarded to your address, by American Express, prepaid, some of my new celery, "Barmcott's Golden." If it should happen that you do not use this gracious nervine, you will hav no difficulty in finding some who do. This is not sent to get a "puff," but it is a superior article; and, as I like to share all good things with manly and womanly characters, I hav sent it as a token of respect, and a recognition of your fearless opposition to church and state. I am not, however, an Infidel in the common acceptation of the term. I hav never severed myself from the church, nor do I intend to, unless they "cut me off," believing I can accomplish more good by remaining where I can be heard. I know many Radicals do not approve of this policy, but observation satisfies me I can accomplish more by this method.

I send you one of my little pamphlets, "The Union and its Flag." I should be pleased if you could introduce it to your readers. My Liberal friends here—i.e., some of them—thought, at first, that I had made a great mistake in shading it with Christianity, using the terms, "Jesus of Nazareth," "Millennial glory," etc. I told them it was used as a bait to get liberal Christians to read. The purpose is accomplished. All classes of Christians read it, and, apparently, it is having a Liberalizing and an Americanizing effect. It will certainly hurt no Infidel to get a glimpse of how church and state operate in beautiful but oppressed England.

I heartily indorse the fourth amendment of your constitution at your late convention. I shall express my approval in writing for THE TRUTH SEEKER as soon as I hav a spare hour. Yours in love of country, and in pleading for human rights, JOHN DAVEY.

[Mr. Davey's celery was received in good shape and eaten voraciously, and Mr. Davey was thanked heartily. If all that he raises is as good, he can hav a certificate from all in the office for the "Barmcott's Golden" and the new bleaching process.—ED. T. S.]

BIG SPRINGS, TEX., Nov. 18, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The Liberals of this community hav just enjoyed a fine treat in the form of three excellent lectures by J. D. Shaw, of the Independent Pulpit, at Waco. His subjects were, first, "Liberalism;" second, "The Objects and Aims of Liberalism;" third, "The Causes of Civilization." Mr. Shaw is a thorough scholar, and an intelligent and logical speaker. He had the largest audiences during his lectures that ever assembled at this place to hear either speaking or preaching of any kind, and everybody was delighted with him except the extreme religious fanatics. His supporters were all the county officers, our leading merchants, and the most substantial and best citizens of the community. This is a decidedly Liberal town, anyway. The church people placed a full ticket in the field at the last election, and endeavored to do the Infidels up, but we are still in office by very handsome majorities. If we could secure a good lecturer now and then we would compensate him or her handsomely and enjoy it very much. We are very much pleased, however, to say that "orthodoxy is mad, and that we are glad," and that we hope to see Mr. Shaw again soon. G. W. WALTHALL.

EAST RANDOLPH, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The lecture of Prof. J. E Remsburg, "Bible Morals," delivered in the Union church last Friday night to a fair-sized audience, composed of lawyers, doctors, and Rev. Mr. Foulke, of the Methodist Episcopal church—a few church-members and Liberals of this place and of Randolph who came out in the snow and storm to hear the truth and who contributed freely in the way of dollars to the advancement of truth and justice—was appreciated. Remsburg did himself honor in the masterly way he struck sledgehammer blows at the inconsistent, disrespectful, absurd, and fiendish language and commands of the Bible. We think, with a majority of his audience, that he gave good and valid reasons for the conclusions he arrived at, "that the Bible contains much that is interesting and beautiful, noble and uplifting, but more that would cause the blush of shame to crimson the cheek of virtue to read" Since the lecture people hav been reading the Bible as never before, and some church-members claimed in H. Dixon's store Saturday night that Remsburg did not quote the Bible correctly; that Mr. Ginader and Mr. Foulk took notes of lecture, and passages referred to could not be found. Mr. H O. Burt offered to bet anyone who made the claim $100 that every chapter and verse Mr. Remsburg quoted was in the Bible and that he quoted it correctly. That put a quietus on the blatherskites for a few moments, whose knowledge of the Bible is meager compared with Remsburg's. To think correctly is a noble thing. To be honest investigators, truth seekers, and giv to the world the knowledge obtained by study and experience, adds a charm to the soul-life of those who do so.

The good, the true, in all human hearts and brains can never die, and defeats in the good cause are only resting-places on the road to victory at last. R. R. JONES.

SANAGO CREEK, IDA., Nov. 22, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Heston does nobly, but he seems delicate about the best old patriarch of all, David. I suggested a long time since his giving the scene of his ballroom attire. But I suppose Anthony is watching him too closely.

And right here occurs a thought. Officials, hungry people, men in idleness, men planning and scheming—what shall be done in the future to prevent poverty and idleness and crime, to prevent the poor from becoming poorer and the rich from becoming richer? Solution: Why, just turn out from our prisons and asylums those who hav been put there by "put-up jobs" and deserve their liberty, and commence putting in officials who ought to be there. Then there will be demand enough for all unemployed men enlarging and building new buildings of iron and stone, and not only would many officials be crowded but a good sprinkling among them would be found to come from among the secret orders that exist from one end of this nation to the other. Note just one jot or tittle coming to light—Dr. Cronin. Is it not about time for good men, whether members of societies which were organized for good and wise purposes or not, to stop such work? The Clan-na-Gaels are not the only order which has such material as dealt with Dr. Cronin, to my certain knowledge. I hope the trial of his murderers will be an eye-opener to many who slumber and sleep too often to affairs going on before their very eyes, or if they even open one eye they close it again, saying mentally, "Well, if I don't see their doings, I guess they will let me alone;" or, "I can run my business better, or I'll be more likely to get an office;" or if he is a member of a secret society, cowardice shuts his eyes and locks his tongue, etc. To hell with all such manhood, for no man has to die but once. In haste, A. G. CHURCH.

NEW YORK, Dec. 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Point your readers to Col. R G. Ingersoll's condensed, latest, and best essay in the North American Re- view, December, 1889 [reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 7th]. Point to the epitome of human wisdom in the concluding four words. All on the subject is therein found. Now here is a letter I picked up. If you like to print it, as far as I judge it may amuse your regular readers, and I am one of them:

TIMBUCTOO, Dated all fools' day, year 6000.

DEAR BOB: You asked me, What is astronomy? As far as I know astronomy is the trying, by the parasite man, to understand where the being on which he livs is going, and what the other beings are doing by which it is surrounded. Astronomy is the name they giv their employment when they put their tapelines round the being on which they liv, and in imagination measure the other fellows out yonder, who are walking round like gentlemen with nothing else to do but shine around. Astronomy they call it when a conclave of parasites sit on this being and puzzle out how much like and unlike the other fellows are, and what they all mean by what they are doing. Astronomy seems to really mean something when she attempts the problem, with how much safety the parasite may depend that these Mars and Jupiter and such like fellows will not play football with one another. At present astronomy says they seem a very well-to-do, peaceable, growing lot, going on their own way with their little families without meddling—at least, those in our immediate neighborhood of a few blocks off—none seeming lying in wait to sandbag the other, or appropriate the astronomers of the other fellows. But astronomy as explained by some two or three cranks ventures to address the parasitic world and say that as all astronomy's accumulated wisdom, observation, and experience has been gathered up through a period of the big fellows' lives that may be estimated as within the fraction of a second of time merely, and as things point now, notwithstanding their peaceable, Quakerish, sober attitude in a general funeral walk-round, astronomy cannot possibly say what hanky-panky tricks and can-can dances they may not hav had in the past when they were frisky, or hav in the future if they feel like it, nor does astronomy feel certain that during a waltz in the past, when in friendly and loving contact, some black parasite has not fallen from the tresses of the lovely Venus to the short, curly locks of the manly earth fellow, and vice versa; the one falling on the earth calling it in after days in tones of regret a banishment from Eden with flaming swords. Astronomy when asked if a Babel tongue was the result of the natives of two stars meeting on the same stage, says she doesn't know but thinks some little parasite may hav dreamed it when the light went out.

F. L. M.

GOLDTHWAITE, TEX., NOV. 20, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Alex. McPherson requests me to say for him that he hopes and has been trying to get at least one other subscriber for your truly valuable paper, and that for himself he cannot do without it, and that his family had rather forego some of the physical comforts of life than miss the expected weekly visits of the good old Radical dispenser of light, truth, and common sense. He says that with it he feels fully equipped for the fray with superstitious hosts.

We hav a few subscribers here to the Investigator and a few to the Independent Pulpit. The most of us feel it to be our duty to sustain Brother Shaw and his excellent periodical. He is a good and very strong man. He has been unfortunate in the matter of having his hall at Waco destroyed by fire. We hav quite a number of Liberals in our county. The most of them are conservativ, as I think, to a fault. There are a few of us who are so radical in the cause that we are ever ready to let slip the dogs of war, and giv our earnest heed to the destruction of the old rotten hulk of superstition. I am charged with being a little too ultra by even some of my Liberal friends. For instance, a few days ago I was in company with a couple of Liberals. One of them was an old physician and a man of research, well educated in the myths and superstitions of the churches, having been a member of one of them a number of years. The other was a lawyer of distinction in our state, of fine intellectual attainments and force. I remarked that when I met with an intelligent orthodox preacher—one who had posted himself, and had kept abreast with modern thought and orthodox biblical criticism and vice versa—I could not from my standpoint help associating his work and pulpit declarations alongside with a hypocritical canting for popularity and bread and butter. One of those gentlemen asked me a few days later if I could honestly charge hypocrisy upon a number of the popular divines of the day, and especially upon the great English premier and statesman, Gladstone. My answer was about this: "Mr Gladstone had been raised under the influence of the political and religious tenets of a past age, and had been so completely immersed in the dogmas of Episcopacy that the probability is that he could not perceive nor feel the force of the unanswerable arguments of Huxley, nor the complete annihilation of the dogmatic theology of orthodoxy by our greater and more modern logical giant, Colonel Ingersoll."

We hav had Remsburg with us in three lectures, and Shaw in three. Now, if I could hav the good fortune of hearing the immortal "Bob." Putnam, and Washburn, I think I could say with old Simeon, "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes hav seen and ears hav heard" the salvation of the world from the foul pollutions of ignorance and superstitions, of ecclesiasticism and priestcraft.

H. S. THOMAS.

HAMILTON, Dec. 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I notice in THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 30th that Mr. Shegogue, of Baltimore, objects to the pictures of Mr. Heston in THE TRUTH SEEKER that "there is a stamp of vile vulgarity about them, injurious to THE TRUTH SEEKER." I cannot agree with the Baltimore gentleman that Heston's pictures are vile, or that they injure the paper in which they appear. If there is anything vile, immodest, or obscene, the obscenity is in the subject the pictures so represent. Mr. Shegogue must charge the vileness of those scenes to the Bible, that publishes them as literal truths, and alleges their inspiration. And we are all commanded to believe them, on the penalty of eternal pains. Now, if this is so, what impropriety is there in Mr. Heston picturing these scenes in a modest, truthful manner, as he seems to do? If those pictures are vile, vulgar, or immodest, the fault is in the story and acts recorded in the Bible. True pictures of the scenes of those sacred records ought not to be harmful, nor are they so considered by Bible lovers and Bible believers.

In the last issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER is a forcible and striking representation of the human family—a very large portion of them—from the hand of their creator to the cradle, and on their way to hell, while but a small portion are on the way to heaven on angels' wings. Now, is there anything vile or improper in this faithful representation of the foundation of the Christian religion? I cannot see that there is. If there is anything abhorrent about it, it is the doctrin emphasized by this picture, and not the picture itself. It is a common thing to picture in Sunday-school books the person of Christ, also the devil, and in picturing his Satanic majesty they even excel Mr. Heston, picturing him in every conceivable shape and condition, so that the picture of the devil and the teaching of the Sunday-school teachers impress on the youthful an impression that is intended to be lasting. In the picture of Samson making love to a Philistine woman, what is there in the picture that is vile or obscene, or even immodest? It is pictured just as described in the Bible. The whole history of Samson is a vile, obscene, and shameful story to be in any book. Yet we find it in God's holy word and no apologies for its immorality. And is Heston doing a vile act, or doing wrong, in picturing Samson's courtship? In my family Bible is a large picture covering a whole page in which Samson is represented as sitting on the floor with his head between the knees of the half-dressed harlot Delila, he being fast asleep, and she with a big pair of shears cutting off his hair. If there is anything vulgar or vile to be seen in any picture, it is in this picture. And if a modern picture of a modern transaction like this one, were to pass through the United States mails from one person to another, and Mr. Comstock were to know of it, he would be delighted in trying to punish the parties. This picture of Samson is to be found on page 176 of Phinney's edition. Nor is this the only picture of a vulgar nature in this edition. There are others; look for yourselvs. I know Heston's pictures are unwelcome sights to some who think the Bible is all right, but they interest those who see them, and people draw their own conclusions as to the merits of the thing represented by Mr. Heston. Nor are his pictures "cartoons." They represent the thing just as it reads, and if those pictures are an additional expense to THE TRUTH SEEKER, which I am told they are, its readers, for whose benefit they are, ought to pay their cost, as they add largely to the interest and edification of its readers. For but few of the common people, who seldom read the Bible, are aware such things as are pictured out are in the Bible or in any other book, or that such wonderful stories ever found people of common sense that could believe them.

CARLTON RICE.

SAN JOSE, CAL., NOV. 18, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I find by observation and experience that there is too much contention and lack of harmony in our ranks. Liberals should cultivate more toleration and philanthropy. Sowing good seeds will produce harmony, fellowship, and coöperation in our Freethought and Liberal ranks. A large per cent of the so-called Liberals—or would-be Liberals—do not understand or realize that all true sons and daughters of intellectual liberty are reaching out into the realms of the highest possibilities of man. Within the last year I hav been forced to realize this fact more than ever. I hav given considerable of my time and what I could spare of means in aiding Mr. N. F. Ravlin, who has come out of the Baptist ministry a free man. Having had the courage to state his convictions, he sacrificed position and a good salary for manhood and liberty. He started a church of humanity here, having a good hold on the people of San Jose. He drew out many to hear him that could not be reached by our Freethought speakers generally. He was a thorough go-ahead man, and as fast as he grasped ideas and grew he had the courage to state his honest thought. He held principle above profit, and I almost felt assured at first he would succeed in making the church of humanity which he organized here a success. But as time rolled on I found the great drawback was in our own ranks. Those that should hav stood firm would not support him. They could not cast their little bickerings and prejudices aside. Again, others withdrew their support. It would make my letter too long to state the many worthless quibbles and excuses constantly brought against the good work. All acknowledged that he was doing a good work, and also that he could reach more people here than anyone else had been able to reach; that he was making more converts to Freethought than any other man ever had in San Jose. Mr. Ravlin did not receive sufficient financial aid, so he has gone East for the present, trying other fields. I wish him success and hope he will soon return and resume the good work to final success.

Yet in spite of all drawbacks, those who keep up with the times can see that we are gaining ground. Our influence is being felt. We are fast changing wrong customs into right action. I hav noticed a great change in San Jose, as well as throughout the entire continent. Some eight to ten years ago the clergy of San Jose were terribly on the warpath against Freethinkers and Infidelity. At present we hear but very little against our cause. When they hav anything to say they touch the matter very lightly. Formerly at various times we hav called meetings and in many instances we hav put speakers in the field in answer to their foul accusations, and hurled their lies back, and so turned the channel against them. Thus we hav intimidated and silenced them, and should any be bold enough in the future to make an attack on us, we are ready for them. We will make them take back the dirt they are trying to fling. Our motto is, In truth we trust. With us no good cause is a failure and no evil cause a success. Truth appeals to conscience and justice, and recognizes only the personal character of its representativs, hence those whose conduct conforms to the highest standard deserve the highest honor. Truth does not appeal to blind faith, but to manhood and womanhood, and teaches that principle molds the life forever. It is better always to set a good example than to follow a bad one. We invite all on a free platform, and respectfully request a free and open investigation on all subjects of life. No one can claim the proud title of freeman until liberty of conscience rules the mind. Little good can ever be expected from churches whose teachings are founded on prophets, parables, and Bibles full of obscene and bloodthirsty passages. Truth is unchangeable and will outweigh and outliv all error to the end of time.

THE TRUTH SEEKER meets with a hearty welcome in our home. It is watched for as eagerly by our nine-year-old son, Burt Ingersoll Schwartz, as by us. He is the first to tear off the wrapper that he may look at the pictures and hav them explained to him. He in turn explains them to his playmates. Pictures impress themselvs on the mind where words would fail to make an impression. Those in THE TRUTH SEEKER speak louder than words. Long liv THE TRUTH SEEKER. It should find a welcome in every home where liberty and freedom dwell.

R. H. SCHWARTZ,
President San Jose Secular Union.

LEXINGTON, KY., NOV. 26, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The spirit of tyranny should find no rest on earth. As Charles I. wandered despairingly over England, Cromwell's army was gradually imbued with the free and forceful ideas of the Independents, which were not so much Anarchical as aimed at breaking up the cruel and bigoted spirit of the ancient régime. If they worshiped a God, before they knelt they fashioned him according to their progressiv creed. They did well for their period. What shall be accomplished for ours, in which free principles are lost amid the low tricks of monopoly—raising of prices, factories making and selling adulterated articles not fit for use, for which ungenerous theft they should be indicted and punished accordingly. You pay a good price for provisions and shoes, but get nothing for it but vile articles. You hear of a tea or some other "company," and rejoice that you are duly warned.

A favored few know how to obtain the genuin square meal so much talked of but the abject poor feed from the slop barrel and the ash-heap. As I turned a corner the other day, a hollow-eyed woman whispered to me, "Do you think there is any God?" "No," said I, smiling; "come with me, perhaps we can find something better than a careless, angry God."

Our daily news is a record of murder and violence, unchecked by a weak and luxurious priesthood. Our pulpits are remarkable only for assertions which make God worse than a cannibal; brimstone exhalations, with the slaughter of an innocent Christ, being depended on to pay the board of a needy clergy. The false and insane ideas about these butcheries would disgrace the creed of Samuel, who hacked a prince to pieces before the Lord for some brutal whim. Our progressiv literature would disgrace the days of the Sophists. Many writers on evolution forget that God must be banished from the universe before there could be one healthy throb of protoplasm—before we could be individuals, independent of God, man, or angel.

If God and his branches are the only life in the creation, from whence spring the qualities and powers distinctly traceable, one would think, to intelligent exertion, which makes us all that we are, or can be? Deep thought induces magnetism, and produces the mental force, which is constantly fighting the Titan, necessity.

The evolutionists in question hav lately thrown the soul into the arms of faith, which is so ready to bound into the future—which is a nepenthe that can produce more dreams of the future, than plans which will light up the path of political economy. Better than visionary faith, surely, would it be for the rough and rich chaos of the present age to change into use and beauty, which really bring results without so great a waste of material.

In ancient days, the air was heavy with the voices of saints and angels. Then ethics were a combination of gorgeous delusions born of that fanciful relation between the seen and unseen. But the hollow voices of prophet, saint, and dreamer hav given place to the calm elucidations of the truthful investigator.

Multitudes of minds awoke from slumber in the days of Cromwell. Independents, like Socialists, ran into grave errors of opinion, made many mistakes, insisting upon views and theories either too narrow or too extreme, advocating impossible reforms, ill planned and imprudent; perpetrating evil, perhaps with good intention. But above all this arose the serene splendor of the pure idea of freedom of thought, speech, and action, leading men to govern themselvs by principles of justice and good will to all. And if such principles are corrupted, the only step forward, the only advance, is to cast off corruption. When the masses rule themselvs, thousands are dragged up from the loathsome ditch of slavish obedience and placed upon a throne. If Cromwell had spent his time persecuting Spiritualists and forcing people to keep a Puritan Sabbath, nothing would hav prospered in his hands. One controling mind, like his, is too apt to rule by brute force, at the best. An aggregate of minds must shape the brain and heart of this age—minds of right-minded, reasonable men. If they do not arouse themselvs, the spirit of the old and new firm of Calvin, Blair, Harrison, and Wanamaker will send us to church, gagged, at the point of the bayonet.

ALHAZA.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Who Saved the Trains?

Two trains came speeding along the track—
('Twas a bitter cold night in winter time)
And the switchman nodded over his fire
With never a thought of crime.

'Twas a bitter night, and the snow was thick,
The fire was warm and he nodded long,
His senses benumbed by fatigue and cold,
But never intending wrong.

The trains came rushing, laden with lives—
Alas! for them, with no guard at the switch!
For the switchman's lever is mighty to save
Or destroy, and this night 'twonld be—which?

His Newfonndland dog lay close to his feet,
With silken ears all alert to hear,
And bright eyes steadfastly keeping watch
For possible danger near.

A distant rumbling smote his ear,
And swift as a flash to his feet he sprang,
Eagerly pulling his master's coat,
And loudly his sharp bark rang.

The switchman rose to his feet in haste,
And saw, through the heavily falling snow,
The howling winds, and bitter night,
Two fiery headlights' glow!

He sprang to his duty. The trains swept by,
Laden with precious humanity
Peacefully sleeping, not knowing how near
They had been to eternity!

—Travelers' Record.

A Visit to Philadelphia.—Continued.

After seeing Walt Whitman, we called on Robert Purvis, a well known reformer in Philadelphia. His home, unlike that of the poet, is the abode of wealth, luxury, and refinement. Both are great men, both represent the broadest humanitarian principles, yet fortune or fate has been kinder to one than the other.

As you enter the drawing-room of Mr. Purvis's residence, the eyes rest upon a fine portrait of Wendell Phillips, who is the ideal of Mr. Purvis. Charles Sumner was also his friend, of whom he said: "He (Sumner) was always conscious of Sumner, while Phillips never seemed to remember Phillips," and, consequently, he admired the latter most. Mr. Purvis is abounding in reminiscence, and it is most instructiv and interesting to listen to him as he relates the stories of the stirring times of other years.

He was himself mobbed out of the city in 1842 on account of his antislavery sentiments, but, full of energy and determination, he built a hall in the village where he removed, and carried on his work for oppressed humanity. He, like many others, has arisen from the ranks by industry and tact, and is now very comfortably situated as to this world's goods, as well as having a mind well stored with information. In his time he has been the trusted friend of presidents, Congressmen, philosophers, and reformers of nearly all nations. Now, in his eightieth year, he is just as full of fire and enthusiasm for all right and just measures, as ever. In personal appearance he is tall, dignified, and handsome. Mrs. Purvis is a lovely lady, whose time is occupied in writing and seeing that everything is in order in the beautiful and attractiv home. His daughter is pleasing and intelligent, with eyes whose depths seem to haunt one like the memory of a sweet picture.

Mr. Purvis is a most ardent advocate of woman suffrage. Said he, in parting, "Depend upon it, when women hold the purse-strings, pantaloons will behave themselvs!"

He is very proud of a copy of the declaration of sentiments issued by the American Antislavery Society upon its formation. He said, with pathos, "Only two of the signers of that document survive—John G. Whittier and myself."

You ask if we went to see Independence Hall. Bethia said she would not go home until she had seen the old historic building, full of all sorts of Revolutionary and pre-Revolutionary relics. It would take too much space to go into detail of all that is to be seen there, but, looking upward to the old bell suspended in the vestibule—the same old bell that rang so vigorously for liberty on the 8th of July, 1776—the mind speeds back to the old time of great events of a never-to-be-forgotten period. How the people, with anxious, bea ing hearts, thronged the streets on that eventful day, waiting for the news of the adoption of that grand document, the Declaration of American Independence, that means so much, and seems yet to throb with the warm blood of its framers! On the old bell is inscribed these words: "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof." How the old bellman waited the announcement of the good, glad news! How the hours seemed to drag as he mournfully said, "They will never do it." Suddenly his heart leaped with joy, as his little boy came running to his side, exclaiming eagerly: "Ring, grandpa, ring! 'Tis done! 'Tis done! Ring! ring! ring!"

How the old bell sang out the joyful tidings, how its clang, clang, clang echoed and re-echoed, and how every steeple sent back its joyous and triumphant tones!

O liberty, may thy children never prove recreant to the meaning that those peans sounded on that great day of American Independence!

Inside the hall is a beautiful Sevres vase, presented by the French government to the city of Philadelphia. Upon one side is a medallion portrait of Washington and copies of various scenes in his life, and the whole surmounted by an exact duplicate copy of the old liberty bell.

The very same straight-backed chair and plain table used by the president of the first Congress, not very luxurious or costly, but full of interest on account of their associations of the past, stand there in mute condemnation of the extravagance of modern days. In another room are many curious and antique relics—the old sofa and other furniture said to hav belonged to Washington's parlor, the silver inkstand that once held the ink that made the Declaration of Independence plain to all the people. Garments of a hundred years ago hang in glass cases, their owners long since changed to dust. The first baby clothes worn by John Quincy Adams, made by Abigail Adams, his proud and happy mother, are here.

Among the many portraits we saw one of Thomas Paine, but it was not placed in either a good light or good position, but his memory is kept green in many hearts, and he will yet receive the gratitude of the world when it shall hav become enlightened enough to understand and appreciate the value of such a grand and noble man. S. H. W.

(CONTINUED NEXT WEEK)

Correspondence.

WEST EATON, N Y., Nov. 24, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Papa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. I like to look at the pictures. I hav some rabbits; the old cat killed most of them. I hav one little white rabbit. I hav a little brother Floyd; he is six years old, and I am nine years old. We both go to school every day. We hav a good teacher. We hav a dog; he's full of fun. We hav a little calf, too. Well, as I hav written about enough, I will close, wishing all the children who write for the Corner good health.

JAMES W. DARROW.

NEW YORK, Nov. 22, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write a few lines to the Children's Corner. My father is a strong Liberal, and has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for many years. I like to read the Children's Corner, and also the letters which the boys and girls write to the Corner.

I am eleven years old. I go to school and study arithmetic, history, geography, suffixes, prefixes, spelling, reading, grammar, writing, and singing.

I hav four brothers and one sister. I think I will close now. Hoping to see this in print, I remain, Your Freethinker friend,

ABRAHAM M. WATTENBERG.

SHANE'S CROSSINGS, O., Nov 29, E M. 289.

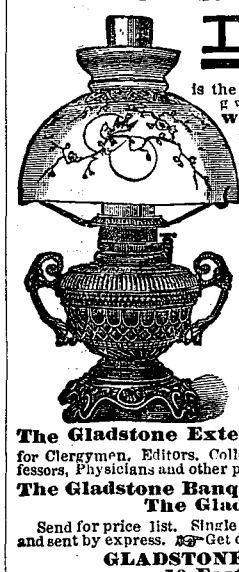
DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav been waiting till after Thanksgiving day, so I could tell my little friends how my school observed the day. First we had reading of select pieces, then arithmetic, and next we all marched to the long table, seated ourselvs, with knife and fork in hand, with eyes fixed on Mr. Turkey. Well, then, they all chose me to carve the fowls. Well, I had a rather large contract, but I did the best I could, so we all got a piece. After dinner we read promiscuous pieces, and I and one of my friends read Bennett's "Bible in Public Schools," which was said by the directors to be the best they ever heard on the subject. Well, I will quit writing, hoping all had a merry Thanksgiving day.

I send my love to all.

SOLOMON PEAROE KING.

ORANGE CITY, IA., Nov. 28, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write to the Children's Corner. I go to school. We hav six rooms in our school. I am in the third room and in the A class. Every month we hav examinations. My last month's report was: Reading, ninety-two; writing, seventy-six; spelling, seventy; numbers, seventy-three; language, eighty-three; drawing, seventy-eight; deportment, eighty five; punctuality, one hundred; attendance, sixty. I had to stay out of school over a week because I was sick.



I am the only little Liberal boy in this town. Mamma told me about meeting you when she was in Philadelphia, and about your parrot biting the kitten's ear. I would like to see them.

I am ten years old. I like to read the Children's Corner and see the pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER. Well, I must close.

Yours, FREDDIE DE LESPINASSE.

CORRESPONDENTS will please be patient. Their communications will appear as room can be made for them.—ED. C. C.

"The Gladstone" LAMP

is the finest lamp in the world. It gives a pure, soft, brilliant white light of 85 candle power. Purer and brighter than gas light; softer than electric light, —more cheerful than either. A Marvelous light from ordinary kerosene oil!

Seeing is Believing.

A "wonderful lamp" it is indeed. Never needs trimming, never smokes nor breaks chimneys, never "smells of the oil;" no gumming up, no leaks, no sputtering, no climbing of the flame, no annoyance of any kind, and cannot explode. And besides all these advantages it gives a clear, white light, 10 to 20 times the size and brilliancy of any ordinary house lamp! Finished in either Brass, Nickel, Gold or Antique Bronze. Also

The Gladstone Extension Study Lamp,

for Clergymen, Editors, College Students, Teachers, Professors, Physicians and other professional men.

The Gladstone Banquet Lamps.
The Gladstone Piano Lamps.

Send for price list. Single lamps at wholesale price, boxed and sent by express. Get our prices. "Seeing is believing."

GLADSTONE LAMP CO.,
10 East 14th St., New York.

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards. $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Ingersoll and the Deist

BY

A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."

Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE

Cosmian Hymn Book,

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

PRICE, . . . $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place. New York.

THE

MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

DID MAN FALL?

The Location and Topography of the Garden of Eden a Fact.

IS THE GARDEN ALSO A FACT?

$5,000 REWARD.

By ISRAEL W. GROH, Author of "Is the God of Israel the True God?"

Paper, 10 cents.

The Candle From Under the Bushel

(Mark iv, 21); or,

1,306 Questions to the Clergy:

And for the Consideration of Others.

Instructive, Interesting, and Laughable.

By WILLIAM HART.

Price, - - - - 50 cents.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS
OF
THE BIBLE.

144 PROPOSITIONS, Theological, Moral, Historical, and Speculative, each proved affirmatively and negatively by quotations from scripture, without comment; embodying the most palpable and striking self-contradictions of the so-called inspired word of God.

By W. H. BURR. 72 pages. Price, 15 cents.

DANIEL THE DREAMER.

By A. HOLYOAKE.

Price, . . . 10 cents.

Specimen of The Bible. Esther.

By A. HOLYOAKE.

Price, . . . 10 cents.

Acts of The Apostles. A Farce.

By A. HOLYOAKE.

Price, . . . 10 cents.

Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity.

By A. HOLYOAKE.

Price, . . . 10 cents.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

By M. D. CONWAY.

Price, - - - 5 cents.

EVOLUTION OF ISRAEL'S GOD.

By A. L. RAWSON.

Price, - - 10 cents.

THE NEW AGE.

By W. S. BELL.

Price, - - 10 cents.

If You Take Away My Religion What Will You Give Me Instead?

By MARTIN.

Price, - - - 10 cents.

A PLEA FOR ATHEISM

By CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

Price. 10 cents.

Dialogue Between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin.

Price, 10 cents.

Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian.

Price, 10 cents.

Men, Women, and Gods,

And Other Lectures.

By HELEN H. GARDENER,

With an Introduction by R. G. Ingersoll.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

WOMAN:

Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, 10 cents.

MATERIALISM:

ITS HISTORY AND ITS INFLUENCE UPON SOCIETY.

By DR. LOUIS BUCHNER, Author of "Force and Matter," etc.

Translated from the German.

Paper, 12mo, 15 cents.

Christian Absurdities.

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 20 cents; six copies for $1.

Confessional: Romish and Anglican.

An Exposé.

By SALADIN. Price, 30 cents.

Did Jesus Christ Rise From the Dead?

By SALADIN.

Price, - - - 25 Cents.

WILL THE COMING MAN WORSHIP GOD?

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, . . . 10 cents.

For all of the above books address

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.

J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.

T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.

J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.

Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.

A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.

Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 558 West Madison st., Room 1, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.

J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.

Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh. Northampton
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.

A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.
Horace Haynes, Leslie.

MISSOURI.

Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.

Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.

Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler. cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King. 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.

John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.

B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.

Wm. B. Fisher, 331 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.

I. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick. Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.

James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.

Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.
C. Stocker, 29 Vauxhall Road, Liverpool.

AUSTRALIA.

Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.

A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

As a Means for the Production of

Relief Printing Plates

We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.

Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address

MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

The Individualist.

A LIBERAL AND REFORM JOURNAL, ADVOCATING SOCIAL REGENERATION AND INDUSTRIAL EMANCIPATION.

Devoted to the rational exposition of the philosophy of Freedom, mental, moral, and physical; social, industrial, and sexual. Commands the pens of the best writers in America on these subjects. Sixteen pages. $2 per year. Trial subscription three months, 50 cents. Each yearly subscriber will receive a copy of Mr. Stuart's book, "Natural Rights, Natural Liberty, and Natural Law." Address F. Q. STUART, Editor and Proprietor, 1653 Blake street, Denver, Col.

The Humboldt Library of Science.

In this series are well represented the writings of DARWIN, SPENCER, HUXLEY, TYNDALL, PROCTOR, CLIFFORD and other leaders of thought in our time, at 50 to 75 per cent. lower than usual prices.

We have the Library bound in Complete Sets, as follows:

OLD STYLE.—In this style the volumes average 640 pages 8vo, and are arranged thus:

Vol.	I.	Nos. 1-12	Vol.	VI.	Nos. 60-70.
"	II.	" 13-24	"	VII.	" 71-80.
"	III.	" 25-36.	"	VIII.	" 81-91.
"	IV.	" 37 48	"	IX.	" 9 -103.
"	V.	" 49-59.	"	X.	" 104-111.

Cloth, plain edge, $2 vol. (Separately or in sets.)
Half seal, marble edges, $2.7, vol. (In sets only.)

NEW STYLE.—Nos. 1 to 111 inclusive, are bound in 18 vols., averaging 492 pages each, 8vo, thus:

Cloth, extra, red edges, $1.75 per vol. $22 75 per set.
Half seal, plain edges, 2 25 " 29 25 "
Half seal, marble edges, 2 50 " 32.50 "
Hlf Mor., marble edges, 2.75 " 33 75 "
In sets only.

All of the following are octavo, cloth:

WORKS BY PROFESSOR HUXLEY.

Man's Place in Nature. Numerous ill.; &
The Origin of Species. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
The Physical Basis of Life & other Essays.
Lectures on Evolution. Illustrated. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
Animal Automatism, and other Essays.
Technical Education, and other Essays. 2 books in 1 vol. .75

WORKS BY CHARLES DARWIN.

Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection; or, the Preservation of Favored Races in the Struggle for Life. New edition from the latest Eng. edition, with additions and corrections. 1.25
Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. With illustrations. New edition revised and augmented. 1.50
Formation of Vegetable Mold Through the Action of Worms, with Observations on their Habits. With illustrations. .75

Charles Darwin: His Life and Work. By Grant Allen. .75

SELECT WORKS BY GRANT ALLEN.

The Evolutionist at Large;
Vignettes from Nature; and
Force and Energy: A Theory of Dynamics 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

WATER, ELECTRICITY, AND LIGHT. BY PROFESSOR TYNDALL.

Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers 19 illustrations.
Lessons in Electricity. 60 illustrations.
Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

WORKS BY HERBERT SPENCER.

The Data of Ethics. .60
Education: Intellectual, Moral, and Physical; and Progress: Its Law and Cause. With Appendices. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
The Genesis of Science.
The Factors of Organic Evolution. 2 books in 1 vol. .75

SELECT WORKS OF RICHARD A. PROCTOR, F.R.A.S.

Light Science for Leisure Hours.
Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.
Hereditary Traits, and other Essays.
Miscellaneous Essays.
Illusions of the Senses, and other Essays.
Notes on Earthquakes, with 14 miscellaneous Essays. 6 books in 1 vol. 1.50

SELECT WORKS OF WM. KINGDON CLIFFORD, F.R.A.S.

Seeing and Thinking.
The Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays.
Conditions of Mental Development, and other Essays.
The Unseen Universe, and the Philosophy of the Pure Sciences.
Cosmic Emotion: Also the Teachings of Science. 5 books in 1 vol. 1.25

SELECT WORKS OF EDW. CLODD, F.R.A.S.

The Childhood of Religion.
The Birth and Growth of Myth.
The Childhood of the World. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

SELECT WORKS OF TH. RIBOT,

Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

The Diseases of Memory.
The Diseases of the Will.
The Diseases of Personality. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

THE MILKY WAY.

The Wonders of the Heavens. 32 Illus. By Camille Flammarion.
The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kearley Muller, M.A.
The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. By Nathan T. Carr, LL.D. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

POLITICAL SCIENCE.

Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, author of "The English Constitution," and History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock. 2 books in 1 vol. .75

THE LAND QUESTION.

The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.A.S.; and Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. By William Lloyd Birbeck, M.A. 2 books in 1 vol. .75

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Mystery of Matter, and The Philosophy of Force; and
The Essential Nature of Religion. By J. Williams Lawton 2 books in 1 vol. .75
Science and Crime; and
Science and Poetry, with other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E. 2 books in 1 vol. .75

[Continued in next column.]

HUMBOLDT LIBRARY (Continued).

Current Discussions in Science; and
Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
The Black Death. An Account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century; and
The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker. M.D. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
The Naturalist on the River Amazon. A Record of Adventures, Habits of Animals, Sketches of Brazilian and Indian Life and Aspects of Nature Under the Equator, during Eleven Years of Travel, by Henry Walter Bates F.L.S., Assis. Sec. to the Royal Geographical Society of England. .75
The Rise and Early Constitution of Universities, with a Survey of Medieval Education. By S. S. Laurie, LL.D., Professor of the Institutes and History of Education in the University of Edinburgh. .75
The Religions of the Ancient World, including Egypt, Assyria and Babylonia, Persia, India, Phœnicia, Etruria, Greece, Rome. By George Rawlinson, M.A., Camden Professor of Ancient History, Oxford, and Canon of Canterbury, author of "The Origin of Nations," "The Five Great Monarchies," etc. .75
Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze. Translated from the German by J. Fitzgerald, M.A. .75
Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons, M.A., F.R.S., Professor of Logic and Political Economy in the Owens College, Manchester. .75
On the Study of Words. By Richard Chenevix Trench, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin. .75
The Dawn of History: An Introduction to Pre Historic Study. Edited by C. F. Keary, M.A., of the British Museum. .75
Geological Sketches at Home and Abroad. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., Director-General of the Geological Surveys of Great Britain and Ireland. .75
Illusions: A Psychological Study. By James Sully, Author of "Sensation and Intuition," "Pessimism," etc. .75
The Pleasures of Life. (Parts I. and II.) By Sir John Lubbock, Bart. 2 parts in 1. .75
English Past and Present. (Parts I. and II.) By Richard Chenevix Trench. 2 parts in 1. Complete. .75
The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S. Over 80 Illus. .75

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

HOW TO Strengthen the Memory,

OR,

NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.

The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order." Price by mail $1.

Parturition Without Pain.

By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Godey's Lady's Book says: "We giv our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY

AND HYGIENE, or, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN. Carefully revised edition, with 111 illustrations. The most perfect book for men and women ever published. 50,000 sold. Price $2, by mail. Illustrated catalog free.

Marriage and Parentage.

In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations and in Their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.

By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

The Scientific American says: "This work is scientific, sober, clean, and worthy of conscientious consideration by every possible parent, and particularly by the young." $1.

EATING FOR STRENGTH;

OR,

FOOD AND DIET IN RELATION TO HEALTH AND WORK.

The New York Herald says: "Dr. Holbrook's book is among the very best of its kind."

The Home and Garden says: "A study of this book will enable any intelligent reader to make a choice of food which may save the cost of the book every day in providing for a family, besides increasing health, strength, and longevity." $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FAITH AND REASON.

A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.

With elaborate index.

By HALSEY R. STEVENS.

A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained in such compact form.—[Literary Review.

Extra cloth. 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

GIRARD'S WILL
AND Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

Price, 25 Cents.

The Agnostic Annual

FOR 1890.

Edited by CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS.

Agnosticism and Immortality.....Samuel Laing.
A Sonnet.....Joseph Ellis.
Who Was Moses?..H. J. Hardwicke, M.D., F.R.C.S.
The Comfort of Agnosticism.....E. Lynn Linton.
Are Miracles Credible?...Constance C. W. Naden.
The Contest Between Agnosticism and Theology, John Wilson. M.A.
Above: A Poem.....W. Stewart Ross.
The Evolution of the Agnostic Idea, R. Bithell, B Sc., Ph.D.
The New Fatalism.....B. Russell.
Descartes's Proof of the Existence of a God, F. J. Gould.
A Poem.....W. B. Maccaggart.
The Free Expression of Opinions..G. F. Underhill.
Fragments.....William Maccall.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

TRY-SQUARE;

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price. $1.00.

ICHABOD CRANE PAPERS.

Daringly witty and inexpressibly laughable onslaughts on Christianity.

Price, 10 cents.

Twentieth Century.

DEVOTED TO

Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.

HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.

It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.

It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.

Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.

Sixteen pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $2. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:

TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only 1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each:

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

DR. FELLOWS

Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.

VINELAND, N.J.

Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

The Liberty of Printing, and Reply

By HURLBUT and WAKEMAN.

Price, 10 cents.

Obituary.

At about half past 8 Saturday morning, November 9th, a sad and fatal accident occurred at Williamsville station, on the Brattleboro and Whitehall division of the Central Vermont railroad, by which Mr. A. L Frisbie, for more than thirty years a trusted, well known, and well-liked employee, lost his life by falling from a trestle a distance of twenty-five feet, killing him instantly.

Mr. Frisbie was born in the town of Milton, Vt., Aug. 14, 1832, and consequently was a few months past the age of fifty-seven when he was so suddenly and unexpectedly killed He first entered the service of the old original Vermont Central Railroad Co., in 1858, and with the exception of one year or so had been continually in the employ of the same ever since. He held the responsible position of bridgemaster, and was always considered a safe and reliable man by his superior officers As a prominent railroad official remarked the day of his death, "He was a good man and it will be hard to replace him," a sentiment which all will voice who knew him.

He was a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator, and warmly and openly espoused the principles advocated by them He was a great admirer of Horace Seaver and Colonel Ingersoll. He believed with them that no man knows aught concerning a life beyond this. He honestly believed with Panetious that "the soul always dies with the body, because it is born with the body." He conscientiously believed with Seneca that "there is nothing after death, and death itself is nothing but an eternal sleep." He believed in the liberty of every man, woman, and child. He believed in truth and justice. He believed whatever looked reasonable and consistent; whatever appeared otherwise to him he rejected. He believed in doing right because it was right, and not from fear or policy. He was frank and outspoken at all times and in all places. He hated shams and despised hypocrisy. He abhorred deceit in either man or woman. Convinced of an error, he acknowledged it like a man. He was a practical, common-sense man in everything. He was a thoroughly honest man. He was a man of generous impulses and a warm beart. He lived for others as well as himself. There was not a selfish trait about him. Of a genial nature, he easily formed and retained the friendship of those he came in contact with. It is not known that he had an enemy in the world. His domestic relations were of the most exemplary kind. A strong attachment existed between him and his family, and all his old friends and neighbors cordially testify to his kindness and devotion as a husband and father. To know him was to love him. He was not afraid to die. He had said so frequently. The wish so often expressed by him to the writer, that he might die quickly when the time came for him to go, was granted him, although, perhaps, sooner and in a different way than he had anticipated, but he was ready. He met death bravely and without a murmur.

Tenderly cared for by gentle hands and loving hearts, he is now at rest. Life's fitful struggle is over. All that was is not. Peacefully he slumbers in the bosom of mother earth, from whence he came. To her he returned content. Summer's breezes and winter's winds disturb him not. He sleeps the sleep that knows no waking. 'Twere a pity, however, that he could not at last, "sitting by the holy hearth of home, as evening's embers change from red to gray, hav fallen asleep in the arms of her he worshiped and adored, feeling upon his pallid lips love's last and holiest kiss." But it was not to be. Farewell, my friend, farewell!

The funeral services were held from his late residence at Milton at 1 o'clock the following Monday afternoon, Rev. F. W. Whippen, Universalist, officiating. There was a large attendance, the bridge department of the Central Vermont railroad being well represented by many of his old-time friends and associates. His wife and only child, a young man of twenty-four, hav the sympathy of all in their bereavement. M. SEVERANOE.

Brattleboro, Vt., Nov. 12, 1889

ANOTHER VETERAN GONE.

John E. Krahmer, the father of a well-known family of Liberals, was suddenly killed on Saturday last by being run over by a train on the railroad near his farm at Bloomingdale, N. J. Mr. Krahmer had reached the ripe age of seventy-three years, but his stalwart constitution yet promised many years of enjoyable life. He was of German parentage, but a thorough American. When the Mexican war broke out he served his country faithfully as a soldier, and was well known as one of its veterans. As a tradesman and farmer he was a thorough business man, and gained the respect and confidence of all for his industry and honesty. His widow and nine living children survive him, and a more beloved and honored husband and father it would be impossible to find. The funeral was held on Monday, November 18th, at the house of his son in the city at 325 East 105th street, and the houseful of children and grandchildren made a most interesting and affectionate assembly of mourners. Most, if not all of them, share the Liberal sentiments of the father. He had been for all his life a decided Liberal, a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for many years, and had often expressed a wish that there should be no clergy or theology at his funeral. The family, therefore, requested Mr. T. B. Wakeman to make an address at the funeral, which was done and was evidently sincerely appreciated by the family and friends present. The remains will be interred at Woodlawn. The world has now to find, if possible, and hard it will be to find it, a sturdy, honest, useful, intelligent Liberal to take the place of this veteran. Would there were more like him!

A NOBLE HERETIC'S FUNERAL.

From the Sanford, Fla., Daily Journal.

The body of Mrs Nannie Remine Lynch was interred in the Belair cemetery yesterday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock. The family, the pall-bearers, and a number of friends followed the body in carriages from the residence to the burial-grounds. A special train was tendered through the kindness of Mr J. E. Ingraham, president, and Mr. B. R Swoope, superintendent of the South Florida railroad, to accommodate the large number of friends that desired to pay their last respects to this noble woman. At the grave, after the body had been lowered, the pall-bearers, Messrs. A. C. Martin, J. M. Parham, F. H. Lyman, J. H. Ferguson, C. R Walker, and Cruse Barnes, with the friends of the family, stood around the grave while Mr. C. D. Kellog read the following lines: "Kind friends of this bereaved household, we are assembled to pay the last sad rite of respect and love to the memory of a noble woman. There will not be what is generally called a religious burial service, because this wife nor her husband did not belong to any religious organization. She did not believe in what is called revealed religion. She was not a Christian, and it was her and her husband's wish as a recognition of her truth and consistency that no Christian minister officiate at her funeral; but she intimated at the same time the kindest regard of feeling and respect for the beliefs of all. She was a true friend, a loving wife and mother, and a noble woman. To do good was her religion; to do right because it was right, was her idea of the highest earthly duty. She neither praved nor feared, but stood between two eternities with the glorious trust that to do good is the alpha and omega of virtue. About the intricate and disputed dogmas, the belief of which bring so much of bloodshed and misery on earth, she simply said she did not know. She loved and enjoyed a life of making others happy. She died without fear of the future, believing that if she awoke in another life she would there hav an opportunity of continuing the rectitude of the life begun here, and that if she and hers should meet again they would 'smile indeed.' These are the feelings that hav actuated this family thus far through life; on these feelings they leaned in all the hours of the past, when their great inexpressible love joined them together, when in its continuity the sweet off-pring of that love cemented their hearts more closely together—and they will still afford consolation in the vast abyss of sorrow in which the bereaved ones hav been thrown by the untimely death of the noble friend, wife, and mother." Then covering her grave with the beautiful floral offerings, they left her in the "silent city of the dead."

Mrs. Lynch was born in Greenville, Tenn., Feb. 21, 1856, and was in her thirty-third year, just in the prime of life, with a kind and loving husband, fond and loving children, and a happy home. The heart-broken husband and the sweet little motherless children hav the sympathy of the entire community.

The Infidel's Catechism.

What is Christianity?

Answer. Pagan mythology engrafted upon Judaism.

What is pagan mythology?

Ans. Science in allegory. The worship of nature (fetichism) under a veil of allegory.

What is allegory?

Ans. A writing, or a discourse, which says one thing and means another.

The Christian gospel has a literal, apparent meaning, and a hidden philosophical meaning, which cannot be perceived by the uninitiated.

The first is a written sense, the second a traditional sense transmitted orally to the initiated. The so-called sacred scriptures hav an exoteric interpretation, and an esoteric interpretation. Many of the primitiv Christians were called Gnostics; they held that the scriptures were to be interpreted by philosophy.

Origen says: "To the carnal-minded we preach the gospel in a literal way, Jesus and him crucified, but to those further advanced and inspired with a holy desire for divine, celestial wisdom we communicate the logos."

What is Infidelity?

Ans. It is the negativ of allegorical religion. In China it is the negativ of Buddhism. In India it is the negativ of Brahmanism. In Turkey and Arabia it is the negativ of Mohammedanism. In Europe and America it is the negativ of Christianity. It has one universal characteristic, and that is opposition to shams and delusions.

What is a saint?

Ans. A dead sinner. One who while living was a religious crank and committed crimes against God's children thinking that he was doing God's service. The religious fanatic who was most cranky while living is regarded as being the most saintly after death.

What is the blood of the lamb, which cleanseth from all sin?

Ans. Wine. Intoxicating liquor. "He poured out the wine and passed it round, saying, This is my blood, drink ye all of it."

What is the purpose of a Sunday-school?

Ans. To educate children in the duty of supporting the minister, and to train their brains to fit into a sectarian creed.

Flat Creek, La. P. F. SHUMAKER.

Prof. Loisette's

MEMORY

DISCOVERY AND TRAINING METHOD,

In spite of adulterated imitations which miss the theory, and practical results of the Original, in spite of the grossest misrepresentations by envious would-be competitors, and in spite of "base attempts to rob" him of the fruit of his labors (all of which demonstrate the incomparable superiority and popularity of his teaching), Prof. Loisette's Art of Never Forgetting is recognized to-day in both Hemispheres as marking an Epoch in Memory Culture His Prospectus (sent post free) gives opinions of people in all parts of the globe who hav actually studied his System by correspondence, showing that his System is used only while being studied not afterwards; that any book can be learned in a single reading, mind-wandering cured, etc., For Prospectus, Terms, and Testimonials, address

PROF. A. LOISETTE S, 237 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LIFE OF

Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND,
LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BURGESS-UNDERWOOD DEBATE

ON CHRISTIANITY.

Between B. F UNDERWOOD and Prof. O A. Burgess, Pres of N. W Christian Univ.

Paper, 183pp., 50 cts.: clo., 80.

COMMON SENSE.

By THOMAS PAINE.

Written in 1776

Price, . . . 15 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, 10 cents.

IS AMERICA THE NEW WORLD?

By L. L. DAWSON.

Price, . . 10 cents.

DEACON SKIDMORE'S LETTERS.

(Zion Hill Baptist) His Evolution out of Christianity. By D. M. BENNETT. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

ECCE DIABOLUS.

Jehovah-Worship and Devil-Worship Identical—i.e., Bloody Sacrifices and Burnt Offerings.

By the Very Rev Evan Davies, Arch Druid of Great Britain.

Price, . . 25 cents.

RELIGIOUS POSITIVISM;

OR, POSITIVIST CALENDAR. Brief Exposition of the Comtean System

Paper, 25 cents; cloth 50

Eight Scientific Tracts.

EVOLUTION, DARWINISM, etc.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD and others.

Price, 20 cents.

EPIDEMIC DELUSIONS.

By F. R MARVIN, M.D.

Price, 10 cents.

Essay on Miracles,

By DAVID HUME.

Price, 10 cents.

ESSAYS AND LECTURES

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Paper, 300pp. 60 cts; cloth, $1.

Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

By T. E. LONGSHORE.

5c., 50 c. per doz., 25 for $1.

THE UNSEEN WORLD.

By PROF. JOHN FISKE.

Price, 10 cents.

GOSPEL OF ATHEISM.

By ANNIE BESANT.

Price, 10 cents.

GOTTLIEB: HIS LIFE.

A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell.

By S. P. PUTNAM.

Price, 25 cents.

Heathens of the Heath.

RADICAL ROMANCE.

By WM. MCDONNELL.

500pp., paper, 80 cents.

HOLY BIBLE ABRIDGED.

The passages unfit for family reading.

Pap., 30c.; clo., 50.

THE

LOGIC OF DEATH,

OR,

WHY SHOULD THE ATHEIST FEAR TO DIE?

By J G. HOLYOAKE.

Price, 5 cents.

THE

LOGIC OF LIFE,

DEDUCED FROM

THE PRINCIPLE OF FREETHOUGHT.

By G. J. HOLYOAKE.

Price, 5 cents.

Secular Responsibility

By G. J. HOLYOAKE.

Price, 5 cents.

GENESIS I. II:

BIBLE NARRATIVE OF CREATION.

By A. R. GROTE, A.M.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

Godly Women of the Bible.

A History of

ALL THE WOMEN WHO FIGURE IN THE BIBLE.

BY

An Ungodly Woman of the XIXth Century.

Pap., 50c.; clo., 75.

For all of the above books address

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE

Bible of Nature,

OR, THE

Principles of Secularism.

A CONTRIBUTION to the RELIGION of the FUTURE.

BY PROF. FELIX L. OSWALD,

Author of "The Secret of the East, or the Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline," "Physical Education, or the Health-Laws of Nature," "Household Remedies," "The Poison Problem, or the Cause and the Cure of Intemperance," etc., etc.

Felix L. Oswald is a well-known and vigorous writer on scientific and social subjects.—[Cin. Com. Gazette.

Cloth, 12mo, 240pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3: leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman Parton Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co

---

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS OF

HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should have this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effective Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in the Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1 00.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

POINTERS:

A POCKET CYCLOPEDIA,

CONTAINING

Tables, Rules, Practical Hints, and Historical Sketches, for Farmers, Mechanics, Machinists, Merchants, Housekeepers, and the Public Generally, with

Numerous Maps, Illustrations, and Diagrams

Illustrating some of the more Important Comparativ Statistics of the World.

More Information for Less Money than has ever been offered.

ONLY TWENTY FIVE CENTS

For $50 worth of "Cold Facts" boiled down in a Nutshell. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York

FOR HER DAILY BREAD

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroine The narrative is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology" Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By D. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W CHADWICK
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR BETT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

AN HOUR WITH THE DEVIL.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Price. - - - 10 cents.

THE

UNIVERSE ANALYZED

By JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,

Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.

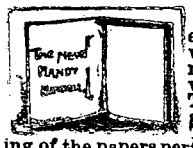
The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productiv of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,



OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.

Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.

Argument by R. G. Ingersoll

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

At Morristown, New Jersey.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents: paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
29 Lafayette Pl., New York

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M D LL.D.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES:

A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.

BY J. K. INGALLS.

Price, - 25 cents.

Liberal Meetings.

These notices are for the benefit of Liberals who may be visiting the places where these societies are located. Local Secular Unions and Freethought Societies meeting regularly can have their gatherings advertised here free by forwarding the necessary information.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

The Newark Liberal League

Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st. Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

Ingersoll Secular Society, Boston,

Meets every Sunday (from October to June) at 2:45 P.M., at Paine Memorial Building, Appleton street.

Chicago Secular Union

Meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday afternoon in the Hall of Cramer's Block South Howard street, at 3 o'clock.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

Elizur Wright Secular Union

Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10 30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club

Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

Cleveland, O., Secular Union

meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 at room 29, City Hall, for lectures and free discussions on religious and social subjects. The public cordially invited.

DIAMONDS.

Unprecedented offer. No other house so fair In order to give my Liberal friends throughout the United States an opportunity to examine, test, and compare my goods and prices with those of other diamond merchants, I will sell any piece of Diamond Jewelry, accompanied by contract that cash in full will be refunded any time within one year from date of purchasing if goods are not entirely satisfactory. No other dealer will do it. None will sell as cheap. Carrying a large stock, being an expert, close buyer, and doing business on smallest possible expense, you will positively save twenty to thirty per cent by purchasing of me. Diamond Pins and Eardrops, worth $600, for $400; Pins, Rings, Earrings, Studs, Hair Ornaments, Pendants, worth $300, for $200; do., worth $200, for $140; do., worth $150, for $110; do., worth $100 for $70; do., worth $80, for $60; do., worth $60, for $45; do., worth $40 for $30; do., worth $30, for $ 2; do, worth $20 for $15. You can wear these goods daily for one year. It will not cost you a cent. If in the mean time you are not satisfied that the goods are better and cheaper than sold elsewhere return and get your cash in full.

Selections sent to responsible parties on approval: to any banking-house or C.O.D., privilege of examination.

The "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

sixteen jewels, finely adjusted to heat and cold, patent regulator, Breguet hair-spring, beautiful double-paneled dial, and all modern improvements Perfect, and no watch will compete with it! In silverine case, $12; in four ounce coin silver case, $23. 0; five-ounce, $25; six ounce, $27. In open face best filled gold case. $27; hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV., $35. In fourteen carat solid gold, $50 to $ 50. Sent prepaid, and cash refunded if not satisfactory.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.
Established 1857.

THE JEWS AND THEIR GOD.

"The Jews and their God stood on the lowest plane."

Price, 10 cents.

LITERATURE OF THE INSANE.

BY F. R. MARVIN.

Price, . . . 5 cents.

News of the Week.

ITALY has felt slight earthquake shocks, and Mt. Vesuvius is in eruption.

THE Rev. Mr. Pettit, formerly of Sawnee Mound, Ind., has been arrested on the charge of poisoning his wife.

JEFFERSON DAVIS died at New Orleans at 12:45 A.M. on the 6th.

THE Buffalo, N. Y., presbytery has voted to change Calvin's creed.

IT continues uncertain whether New York, Chicago, or St. Louis will obtain the World's Fair.

BY the burning of a house in Philadelphia on the night of the 1st seven lives were lost.

AT the burning of a dock at New York city on the 7th four men were killed and several badly injured.

A BROOKLYN believer in faith cure named Edwin Larsen has been arraigned for refusing medicin to his four-year-old child ill of diphtheria.

AT Ellicott City, Md., a darkey named Henry Roberts has made a neat sum of money out of the religiously inclined of his race, by representing himself to be a prophet. He has been arrested.

JOHN JANSEN, of Brooklyn, N. Y., a faith cure leader, whose wife and child were removed to the hospital on the 7th because he refused to furnish them with the medicin prescribed by a physician, was arrested last Sunday by Dr. Callaghan, a health inspector. His daughter has scarlet fever, and he had been warned by the health authorities not to go out till the quarantine on his house had been removed, but he regardlessly went out to a meeting of his sect. Maria Peterson and Anna Jansen were arrested for similar offenses. At the faith cure services the speakers said that as long as the Lord was on their side jails had no terrors for them.

EX-EMPEROR DOM PEDRO has arrived at Lisbon. He has refused to abdicate, or to receive the annuity offered to him by the republic. It is complained by some, with what justice it cannot be decided, that the provisional government has already evinced a tyrannical disposition by the arbitrary appointment of governors for the provinces. It is held that they should be elected by the provinces, as the governors of our states are by the states, and not appointed by the central power. The franchise is given to all that can read and write. News has reached us that the revolution was attended with bloodshed at the town of Maranhas, four or five being killed.

PRESIDENT HARRISON'S message recommends that the national government appropriate money for education in the states; that our steamship lines be subsidized by liberal pay for mail service; that builders of ships be paid for building them with reference to the conversion of the vessels into cruisers in case of need; that pensions be given all men who served in the war and are now, while dependent on their labor, disabled, whether their disability be traceable to the service or not; that coast defenses be increased; that "naturalization laws should be so revised as to make the inquiry into the moral character and good disposition toward our government of the persons applying for citizenship more thorough," while "those who are the avowed enemies of social order . . . should not only be denied citizenship but a domicil;" that steps be taken to remedy the withholding from the negroes of "their political rights and many of their civil rights;" that the tariff be reduced, yet not in the way of abandonment of the protectiv principle; that the tax on tobacco, and that on spirits used in the arts and manufactures, be removed.

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

28 Tafayette Place, N.Y.

SAMSON RENDETH A LION.

Then went Samson down, and his father and his mother, to Timnath, and came to the vineyards of Timnath: and, behold, a young lion roared against him. And the spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him, and he rent him as he would hav rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand: but he told not his father or his mother what he had done —Judges xiv, 5, 6.

Odds and Ends.

SHORT-SIGHTED gentleman chooses a pair of spectacles. "These glasses," he says, "are not strong enough for me." "But, sir; they are No. 2.' "What hav you next to No. 2?" "No. 1.' "And after that?" "After No. 1, sir, you will want a dog!"—Le Voltaire.

IT is told that Senator Vest was once playing poker when he had on a new and particularly handsome flannel "outing" shirt. He had been losing steadily, and his chips were nearly gone, when one of the other players remarked: "That's a mighty handsome shirt you're wearing, Vest.' 'That settles it," exclaimed the statesman, jumping up; "blessed if I'm going to play in a game where they cast lots for a fellow's garments."

IT was Elder Buzzell, declares the Mercury, who called on a worthy deacon to open a meeting with prayer, and was surprised when the good man began his petition with: "Oh, thou great, insignificant God." "Omnipotent, brother; you mean omnipotent God," whispered the horrified pastor "Huh!" ejaculated the surprised supplicant. "What's that you say?" The preacher repeated the correction, whereupon the deacon continued his prayer to a great length, and concluded as follows: "Finally, Lord, bless our eddicated parson. Stuff him with religion as well as words; break him of the habit of fault-findin', if possible, and at the 'leventh hour gather him with the saints in thy kingdom."

LITTLE WILLIE (to the minister at the dinner table): "Was that your carriage you came here in?" Rev. Mr. Frontpew: "Why, yes, Willie.' Little Willie: "There, papa; he drove two horses, and you said he was a one-horse preacher."

ON the old gray terrace where we had parted,
With vows, and pledges, and many a sigh,
Where the sunlight slept and the swallows darted,
I met her—my sweetheart of days gone by.

Twas the ghost of a courtesey, silken, stately,
That she dropped as she passed, and turned from me
To the grand milord she has wedded lately,
The gouty, tyrannical, rich marquis.

But I smiled to myself in cynic fashion,
As I watched the bloom on her proud cheek fade,
And the stir of a long-forgotten passion
That fluttered her bodice of gold brocade.

Oh, the fickle world! . . . All the boughs are budded,
There are flocks of sails on the glancing sea,
And my heart with an April joy is flooded,
Though Dolly is married, and not to me!

—M. E. W. in Life.

THE two young men had called almost simultaneously. George sat on the sofa; Albert on the little reception-chair with the gilt legs. Between them, in the great arm-chair, sat the fair girl whom they had assiduously courted during the whole summer at the salubrious resort of Squillville Springs. The two young men glared at each other, and each stole furtiv glances at the lovely Gladys. Conversation languished. A pall of gloom had settled down upon the stately parlor, crowded with luxurious furniture and rare bric-a-brac. At last Gladys spoke, with resolution in her silvery tones. "Gentlemen," she said; "this thing has gone far enough. Business, it is generally conceded, is business. Am I in error in assuming that each of you has called here to-night with a special object in view, and I am that special object?" "Miss Onderdonk—Gladys—" began both the young men at once. "That will do!" interrupted the fair girl; "that is the usual formula. Let us waste no more time. If you hav any propositions to make and specifications to submit, you might just as well do it while the furnace fire holds out to burn. It is as fair for one as for the other. May I suggest that the arbitrament of a coin, heads or tails, might appropriately decide who is to hav the initial innings?" "Will you match me?" inquired George, covering with his hand the quarter which he had laid upon his knee. "I will, now or any time," responded Albert, fiercely, as he flattened his palm over a half-dime with a hole in it. They lifted their hands. Albert had not matched. "Gladys," began George, with a hightened color, "I love you. Whatever wealth can do to make you happy shall be yours. If I were the lowest, the humbiest, the most hopeless of all your suitors, I would not be more your slave." "Do you mean that?" queried the girl, with downcast eyes. "Indeed I do!" cried the young man, with vehemence; "if I were—why, if I were William Bliven, that poor devil you used to snub so at the springs, I could not be more at your mercy." "And you," inquired the lovely Gladys, turning toward Albert, whose heels were working nervously and rubbing all the gilt off the legs of the reception chair; "what hav you to say?" "Gladys," he began, "I cannot dazzle you with visions of wealth and splendor. I am not rich——" "You are not," interrupted George; "you and William Bliven might just pair up on wealth, and then, maybe, you'd be able to buy one beer between you.' "I may not be Mr. Bliven's superior in worldly goods," retorted Albert, flushing proudly; "but I certainly am in manners, and I wish I could say as much for you." "Indeed?" returned the young plutocrat, superciliously; "I always supposed that you and Bliven got your manners together, in the same place that you got your clothes. They always struck me as being ready-made." "You appear to know more about Mr. Bliven than I do," was Albert's icy response; "your taste for low associates was well known at the springs. But, as I was saying, Gladys, while I hav not material wealth, if the devotion of a heart that is wholly yours——" "Say no more, gentlemen," said Gladys, rising and smiling sweetly; "it is but yesterday that Mr. William Bliven wrote me, asking me for my hand. I had just written my acceptance of his proposal, when you arrived, and I thought it was only just to giv you both a chance. You hav had it. Here's the letter. Will one of you gentlemen do me the kindness to mail it? If Mr. Bliven is not here by 9 o'clock to-morrow, I shall hav reason to doubt the affection you hav so eloquently expressed. Good evening, gentlemen." And as the fair young girl swept gracefully from the room, the fire in the furnace collapsed with a chilly thud.—Puck.

Gems of Thought.

THE more terrible phenomena of nature were . . . invariably attributed to supernatural interposition. In every nation it has been believed, at an early period, that pestilences, famins, comets, rainbows, eclipses, and other rare and startling phenomena, were effected, not by the ordinary sequence of natural laws, but by the direct intervention of spirits. . . . The clergy hav frequently identified these phenomena with acts of rebellion toward themselvs. The old Catholic priests were consummate masters of these arts, and every rare natural event was in the Middle Ages, an occasion for the most intense terrorism. Thus, in the eighth century, a fearful famin afflicted France, and was generally represented as a consequence of the repugnance which the French people manifested to the payment of tithes.—Lecky's History of Rationalism.

MAN finally ascertained that there could be no possible connection between an unusually severe winter and his failure to giv a sheep to a priest.—Ingersoll.

A GROUND frequently taken by Christian theologians is that the progress and civilization of the world are due to Christianity, and the discussion is complicated by the fact that many eminent servants of humanity hav been nominal Christians of one or other of the sects. My allegation will be that the special service rendered to human progress by these exceptional men has not been in consequence of their adhesion to Christianity, but in spite of it; and that the specific points of advantage to human kind hav been in ratio of their direct opposition to precise biblical enactments.—Bradlaugh.

THE priests of each nation hav accounted for the prosperity of that nation by its religion.—Ingersoll.

EVERY enjoyment by which no one is injured, is innocent; and every innocent enjoyment is praiseworthy, because it assists in diffusing that spirit of content and of satisfaction which is favorable to the practice of benevolence toward others. The theologians, however, for reasons which I hav already stated, cultivate an opposit spirit, and, whenever they hav possessed power, they hav always prohibited a large number of pleasurable actions, on the ground that such actions are offensiv to the deity. That they hav no warrant for this, and that they are simply indulging in peremptory assertions on subjects respecting which we hav no trustworthy information, is well known to those who, impartially, and without preconceived bias, hav studied their arguments, and the evidence which they adduce.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

THE misery of the Middle Ages was due not to the supernatural, but to the antinatural tendency of the Christian religion. According to the gospel of the Galilean Buddhists [Christ and his followers], earth, with all its joys and desires, with all its visible and invisible habitants, is wholly evil; the renunciation of temporal blessings is the first condition of eternal welfare, and death the only gate of true life.—Prof. Felix L. Oswald in The Secret of the East.

WERE half the power that fills the world with terror,
Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts,
Given to redeem the human mind from error,
There were no need of arsenals nor forts.
The warrior's name would be a name abhorred,
And every nation that should lift again
Its hand against a brother, on its forehead
Would wear forevermore the curse of Cain.

—Long, ellow.

CAN we possibly suppose that if government had originated in a right principle, and had not an interest in pursuing a wrong one, that the world could hav been in the wretched and quarrelsome condition we hav seen it? What inducement has the farmer, while following the plow, to lay aside his peaceful pursuits and go to war with the farmer of another country? Or what inducement has the manufacturer? What is dominion to them, or to any class of men in a nation? Does it add an acre to any man's estate, or raise its value? Are not conquest and defeat each of the same price, and taxes the never-failing consequence? Though this reasoning may be good to a nation, it is not so to a government. War is the faro-table of governments, and nations the dupes of the game.—Paine.

How many millions of Christians are now armed and equipped to destroy their fellow Christians? Who are the men in Europe crying against war? Who wishes to hav the nations disarmed? Is it the church? No: the men who do not believe in what they call this religion of peace. When there is a war, and when they make a few thousand widows and orphans; when they strew the plain with dead patricts, Christians assemble in their churches and sing Te Deum Laudamus. Why? Because he has enabled a few of his children to kill some others of his children.—Ingersoll.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 51. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY. {New York, Saturday, December 21, 1889.} 28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

WHEN WOMANHOOD AWAKES—A NEW SHAKSPERIAN CIPHER.

Womanhood as Titania: My Oberon! what visions hav I seen! Methought I was enamored of an ass!
Manhood as Oberon: There lies your love!
Titania: How came these things to pass? O how mine eyes do loathe his visage now!—Midsummer Night's Dream.

Notes and Clippings.

THE New York presbytery of the Presbyterian church has reported the changes it wished in the Westminster Confession, minimizing damnation.

HOLY JOHN is advertising angels at ten cents each over his angel counter. Church people ought to lay in a supply. It's all the chance most of them will get to hav anything to do with angels, wax or otherwise.

DR. SHEARER, president of Davidson College, N. C., at a synod on the 13th denounced the common school system because it fails to instruct children in the religion of their fathers, and advises that Presbyterians hav their children educated in schools fostered by the church.

THE German Reichstag, by a large majority, approved the motion to repeal the law of 1874, which givs the government authority to expel from the country any clergyman who, having been officially deprived of his clerical charge, yet persists in the performance of his clerical duties.

A WESTERN actress has aroused the ire of the church people by using the alleged portrait of "Mary Magdalina" as an advertising card with the actress's name attached. A correspondent of the Dramatic Mirror calls it a "flagrant example of sacrilege." But who is harmed? Who knows anything about "Mary Magdalina?"

PRESIDENT HARRISON indorses the Blair educational bill—that is to say he recommends legislation of the sort proposed by that bill, on the theory that the states are not able to take care of their own scholastic population. The Galveston News is inquiring if the president's recommendation will hav the effect of making the Blair bill a Republican party measure?

SEÑOR CASTELAR said in an interview that the events in Brazil had been no surprise to him. He believes that the example will be followed in Portugal sooner or later, but not in Spain, because in Spain the regent during the king's minority keeps liberal ministers in office, and has allowed Sagasta to establish universal suffrage. He thinks the Brazilian republic is stable.

"WHAT magazine writer seems most popular among the contributors of the great heavy magazines?" was asked recently at one of the news-stands in a Boston depot. "Pagan Bob," came the quick reply; "and," continued the newsdealer, "to illustrate the fact, we usually sell fifteen or sixteen North American Reviews a month; when Mr. Ingersoll writes, we sell from fifty to a hundred, and one month last winter when he contributed we sold one hundred and sixty copies over this counter."

HIGH art in prayer! The St. Louis Post Dispatch says: "Chaplain Milburn proved by his prayer yesterday that if he were not a Democratic chaplain of a Republican House he would hold a high place in the diplomatic service. A man who can sympathize with the South, compliment the North, refer feelingly to the death of Jefferson Davis, and preach a sermon on a text taken from the mouth of Abraham Lincoln, is fitted to shine in diplomacy. The chaplain's mental vision is evidently in a high state of perfection."

THAT fearful and wonderful statesman Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, begins his career this session by proposing an amendment to the Constitution which shall giv the District of Columbia a senator and a representativ in Congress, and "as many electors for president and vice-president as it has members of Congress." He should devote the whole session to this work, says the Sun; it would be less costly than tempering the waters of Hudson bay with the Gulf Stream, or distributing the treasury funds in dependent pensions and Southern educational schemes.

THE St. Louis Presbyterian is greatly shocked because Professor Briggs has declared the story of Adam a poem, and Professor Curtis, of Chicago, has said that the book of Job is not a collection of facts, but likewise a poem. The Chicago people hav not much patience with ideas emanating from St. Louis, and the Interior (also Presbyterian) thus scourges its esteemed contemporary: "This thing of raising a cry of heresy at every supposed new discovery of truth relating to the scriptures is worse than ridiculous. It is slanderous and shameful. It is the outcome of stolid ignorance with a large infusion of malice." If the church organs continue in this way, they will soon adopt Agnosticism as the only sound orthodoxy. If the story of Adam is only a poem, what becomes of the doctrin of the fall of man, upon which all subsequent Christian theology is irretrievably based? If there was no Eden why was there a Calvary?

A TYPICAL Christian congregation is thus described by the Mt. Desert Herald: "At the Maine state prison, on Sunday mornings, the convicts all assemble in the chapel for devotional services. The Thomaston clergymen alternate in preaching there. Music for this service is furnished by a choir made up from among the prisoners, one of whom is J. C. Chandler, sentenced for forgery in Bangor, who is organist and leader. Chandler is a fine musician, and claims that he was organist at one time in Dr. Chapin's church, New York city. The choir has rendered several anthems of his composing which are very meritorious. One time Chandler for some misdemeanor was shut up "in solitary" and amused himself the while composing sacred music for the Sunday service. "He is not all right in the upper story," say the prison officials. The rest of the choir is made up of Wm. E. Gould, the Portland bank cashier; Thomas J. Libby, of Scarboro, in prison for life for murder; James McCarty, of Saco, in for breaking and entering; Edwin Chase, of Gardiner, who killed a woman in Portland's streets, and Geo. F. Dutton, of Farmington, serving a sentence for murder."

Communications.

Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?

CHAPTER XI.

TESTIMONY OF FRIENDS AND ACQUAINTANCES OF LINCOLN WHO KNEW HIM IN ILLINOIS.

Hon. W. H. T. Wakefield—Hon. D. W. Wilder—Dr. B. F. Gardner—Hon. J. K. Vandemark—A. Jeffrey—Dr. Arch. E. McNeal—Charles McGrew—J. L. Morrell—Mahlon Ross—L. Wilson—W. Perkins—H. K. Magie—Hon. James Tuttle—Col. F. S. Rutherford—Leonard W. Volk—Hon. E. B. Washburne—Hon. E. M. Haines.

I will next present the evidence that I hav gleaned from the lips or pens of personal friends of Lincoln who were acquainted with him in Illinois. The relations of these persons to Lincoln were, for the most part, less intimate than were those of the persons named in the preceding chapter; but all of them enjoyed in no small degree his confidence and esteem.

Hon. W. H. T. Wakefield.

Mr. Wakefield, our first witness, is a son of the first chief justice of Kansas, Judge J. A. Wakefield. He is a prominent journalist, and was the nominee of the United Labor party for vice-president, in the last presidential contest. In a letter to the author, dated Lawrence, Kan., Sept. 28, 1880, Mr. Wakefield says:

My father, the late Judge J. A. Wakefield, was a life-long friend of Lincoln's, they having served through the Black Hawk war together and been in the Illinois legislature together, during which latter time Lincoln boarded with my father in Vandalia, which was then the state capital. I remember of his visiting my father at Galena, in 1844, or 1845. They continued to correspond until Lincoln's death.

My father was a member of the Methodist church and frequently spoke of and lamented Lincoln's Infidelity, and referred to the many arguments between them on the subject.

The noted minister, Peter Cartwright, boarded with my father at the same time that Lincoln did, and my father and mother told me of the many theological and philosophical arguments indulged in by Lincoln and Cartwright, and of the fact that they always attracted many interested listeners and usually ended by Cartwright's getting very angry and the spectators being convulsed with laughter at Lincoln's dry wit and humorous comparisons.

Lincoln's legislativ career at Vandalia extended from 1834 to 1837. It was about the beginning of this period that he wrote his book against Christianity. He was thoroughly informed and enthusiastic in his Infidel views, and it is not to be wondered at that on theological questions, he was able to vanquish in debate even so eminent a theologian as Peter Cartwright. Ten years later, Lincoln was the Whig, and Cartwright the Democratic, candidate for Congress. In this campaign a determined effort was made by the church to defeat Lincoln on account of his Infidelity. But his popularity, his reputation for honesty, his recognized ability, and his transcendent powers on the stump, carried him successfully through, and he was triumphantly elected.

Hon. D. W. Wilder.

For thirty years General Wilder has enjoyed the reputation of being one of the most gifted and honorable of Western journalists. He was surveyor general of Kansas before it was admitted into the Union, and after it became a state, he held the office of state auditor. Many years ago General Wilder wrote and published an editorial on Lincoln's religious views in which he affirmed that Lincoln was a disbeliever in Christianity. The article excited the wrath of the clergy, among them the Rev. D. P. Mitchell, the leading Methodist divine of Kansas, who replied with much warmth, but without refuting the statements of General Wilder. Some of my Western readers will recall the article and the controversy it provoked. I hav been unable to procure a copy of it, but in its place I present the following extract from a letter received from General Wilder, dated St. Joseph, Mo., Dec. 29, 1881:

Lincoln believed in God, but not in the divinity of Christ. At first, like Franklin, he was probably an Atheist. Although a "forgiving" man himself, he did not believe that any amount of "penitence" could affect the logical effects of violated law. He has a remarkable passage on that theme.

Concerning Lincoln's partner, Mr. Herndon, with whom he was acquainted, General Wilder says:

Write to Wm. H. Herndon, a noble man, Springfield, Ill. Send him your book ["Life of Paine"]. He will reply. The stories told about him are lies.

B. F. Gardner, M.D

Dr. Gardner, an old and respected resident of Atlanta, Ill., in March, 1887, made the following statement in regard to Lincoln's views:

I knew Lincoln from 1854 up to the time he left Springfield. He was an Infidel. He did not change his belief. Herndon told the truth in his lecture. Lincoln did not believe that prayer moved God. When he requested the prayers of his neighbors on leaving Springfield for Washington, he saw that a storm was coming and that he must hav the support of the church.

These words of Lincoln in his farewell speech requesting the prayers of his friends, though used merely in a conventional way, hav been cited by Holland, Arnold, and others, to prove that he believed in the efficacy of prayer. That no such import was attached to them at the time is admitted by Holland himself. He says: "This parting address was telegraphed to every part of the country, and was strangely misinterpreted. So little was the man's character understood that his simple and earnest request that his neighbors should pray for him was received by many as an evidence both of his weakness and his hypocrisy. No president had ever before asked the people, in a public address, to pray for him. It sounded like the cant of the conventicle to ears unaccustomed to the language of piety from the lips of politicians. The request was tossed about as a joke—'old Abe's last'" (Holland's Life of Lincoln, p. 254).

Hon. J. K. Vandemark.

J. K. Vandemark, a member of the Nebraska state senate, who formerly resided near Springfield, Ill, and who was well acquainted with Lincoln, on the 13th of October, 1887, at Valparaiso, Neb., testified as follows:

I met Lincoln often—had many conversations with him in his office. To assert that he was a believer in Christianity is absurd. He had no faith in the dogmas of the church.

A. Jeffrey.

Mr. Jeffrey, who has resided near Waynesville, Ill., for a period of fifty years, and who was in the habit of attending court with Lincoln, year after year, in an interview on the 1st of March, 1887, made the following statement:

Lincoln was decidedly Liberal. He admitted that he wrote a book against Christianity. In later years he seldom talked on this subject, but he did not change his belief. A thrust at the doctrin of endless punishment always pleased him. This doctrin he abhorred.

Dr. Arch. E. McNeall.

Dr. McNeall, an old physician of Bowen, Ill., who was a delegate to the Decatur Convention which brought Lincoln forward as a candidate for the presidency, says:

I met Lincoln often during our political campaigns, and was quite well acquainted with him. I know that he was a Liberal thinker.

Charles McGrew.

Dr. McGrew is a resident of Coles county, Ill.—the county in which nearly all of Lincoln's relativs hav resided for sixty years. He is a cousin of Hon. Allen G. Thurman, and is a man of sterling character. He was for a time related to Lincoln, in a business way, and met him frequently. I met Dr. McGrew in 1888, and when I propounded the question, Was Lincoln a Christian? he replied:

Lincoln was not a Christian. He was cautious and reserved and seldom said anything about religion except when he was alone with a few companions whose opinions were similar to his. On such occasions he did not hesitate to express his unbelief.

J. L. Morrell.

Mr. J. L. Morrell, a worthy citizen of Virden, Ill., who came to Illinois soon after Lincoln did, settled in the adjoining county to him, and like him followed for a time the avocation of surveyor, in a conversation with the writer, on the 8th of February, 1889, made the following statement:

I knew Lincoln well—met him often. His religion was the religion of common sense. He went into this subject as deep as any man. He did not believe the inconsistencies of theology. He was not a Christian.

Mahlon Ross, Esq.

Squire Ross, another old citizen of Virden, Ill., says:

I was acquainted with Lincoln, but never talked with him on religion. He did not belong to church, and his friends say that he was not a Christian.

Lusk Wilson.

Mr. Lusk Wilson, a prominent and respectable citizen of Litchfield, Ill., says:

I was acquainted with Abraham Lincoln, but never heard him giv his views on the subject of religion. His partner, Herndon, and other friends, state that he was not a believer in Christianity.

W. Perkins.

Mr. Perkins, an old lawyer and journalist of Illinois, who was acquainted with Lincoln for upward of twenty years, and who was his associate counsel in an important murder case, writing from Belleview, Fla., under date of Aug. 22, 1887, says:

The unfair efforts that Christians hav been putting forth to drag Lincoln into their waning faith betray a pitiable imbecility. Were it possible for them to get the world to believe that Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln, all prayed, had faith, and were washed in the blood of the lamb, would that prove the inspiration of their Bible, harmonize its contradictions, put a ray of reason in its gross absurdities, or humanize the first one of its numerous bloody barbarities?

I knew Mr. Lincoln from the spring of 1838 till his death. Like Archibald Williams, our contemporary, an able Lord Coke lawyer, he no more believed in the inspiration of the Bible than Hume, Paine, or Ingersoll. Less inclined openly to denounce its absurdities and cruelties, or to antagonize the well-meaning credulous professors, than was Williams, Mr. Lincoln had no faith whatever in the first miracle of the Bible, or the scheme of bloody redemption it teaches. To attribute such sentiments to him, is to tarnish his well-earned reputation for common sense, and to impair the estimation of his countrymen and the world of his high sense of humanity, justice, and honor.

Two of my Presbyterian friends at Indian Point, near Petersburg, told me that they had interviewed Mr. Lincoln to prevent his impending duel with Shields—claiming that it was contrary to the Bible and Christianity. He admitted that the dueling code was barbarous and regretted much to find himself in its toils, but said he, "The Bible is not my book, nor Christianity my profession."

H. K. Magie.

Mr. Magie formerly lived in Illinois, and was for a time connected with the state department at Springfield. Writing from Brooklyn, N. Y., March 19, 1888, he says:

My acquaintance with Mr. Lincoln was limited, as I did not reside in Springfield during his residence there. I met him during his campaign with Douglas at different times, and was with him once for three days. . . . Mr. Lincoln was a Freethinker of the Thomas Paine type. There hav been picked up some of Mr. Lincoln's utterances about "providence," "God," and the like, on which an attempt is made to make him out a Christian. Those who knew him intimately agree in the statement that he was a pronounced skeptic.

Mr. Magie also refers to the Infidel pamphlet written by Lincoln. His knowledge regarding this, however, was derived, not from Lincoln himself, but from his friends. He says:

At one time he wrote a criticism of the New Testament which he proposed to publish and which his friends succeeded in having suppressed, solely because of their regard for his political future.

Hon. James Tuttle.

Two miles east of Atlanta, Ill., resides one of the pioneers of Illinois, James Tuttle, now over eighty years of age. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and is a man universally esteemed for his love of truth and honesty. Mr. Tuttle's residence is situated on the state road leading from Springfield to Bloomington. In going from Springfield to Bloomington, to attend court, and in returning home again, Lincoln always stopped over night with Mr. Tuttle. Theological questions were favorit topics with both of them, and the evening hours were usually spent in conversations of this character. Mr. Tuttle accordingly became well acquainted with Lincoln's religious views. Feb. 26, 1887, at Minier, Ill., he made the following statement relativ to them:

Mr. Lincoln did not believe in Christianity. He denounced it unsparingly. He had the greatest contempt for religious revivals, and called those who took part in them a set of ignoramuses. He was one of the most ardent admirers of Thomas Paine I ever met. He was continually quoting from the "Age of Reason." Said he, "I never tire of reading Paine."

Mr. Tuttle is confident that Lincoln always remained a Freethinker, and believes that those who claim to hav evidence from him to the contrary, willfully affirm what they know to be false.

Col. F. S. Rutherford

The foregoing testimony was all given direct to the writer, either by letter or orally, and he hereby certifies to its faithful transcription. This testimony is from men whose characters as witnesses can not be impeached, and it is hardly possible that one of them will ever favor the other side with a disclaimer. I wish now to record a statement from Colonel Rutherford, a well-known citizen and soldier of Illinois. It was not made to the writer, but was made during the war to Mr. W. W. Fraser, a member of his regiment, and a man of unquestionable veracity. I will let Mr. Frazer present it, together with the circumstances which called it out. I quote from a letter dated Ottawa, Kan., Dec. 16 1881:

During the siege of Vicksburg our colonel, F. S. Rutherford, colonel of the 97th Ill. Vol. Inft., was about to leave us, and I went to see him about taking a small package to Alton—his home and mine. He had been sick and quite unable to do activ service. During our conversation I said that many of the Alton boys did not like to be left under the command of —— ——. Colonel Rutherford then said: "If my life is worth anything I owe it as much to my family as my country, and it will be worthless to either if I stay much longer in camp, but I hate to leave the boys." Colonel Rutherford said that he had stumped his district for Mr. Lincoln, and had expected, from Mr. Lincoln's promises, something better than a colonelcy. I told Colonel Rutherford that I was sorry to hear that, as I had always thought so well of Mr. Lincoln. Mr. Rutherford then said: "What more could you expect of an Infidel?" I said, "Why, colonel, doesn't Lincoln believe in a God?' He replied: 'Well, he may believe in God, but he doesn't believe in the Bible nor Christ. I know it, for I hav heard him make fun of them and say that Christ was a bastard if Joseph was not his father, and I hav some sheets of paper now at home that he wrote, making fun of the Bible."

Leonard W. Volk.

In the spring of 1860, just before Lincoln was nominated for the presidency, the celebrated sculptor Volk made a bust of him. He spent a week in Chicago and made daily sittings in the artist's studio. Mr. Volk relates the following incident, which hardly accords with the tales told about Lincoln's reverence for the Sabbath, and his love for church services:

He entered my studio on Sunday morning, remarking that a friend at the hotel had invited him to go to church. "But," said Mr. Lincoln, "I thought I'd rather come and sit for the bust. The fact is," he continued, "I don't like to hear cut-and-dried sermons."

Hon. Elihu B. Washburne.

It is difficult for orthodox Christians to reconcile Lincoln's fondness for the play and dancing with his reputed piety. That his last act was a visit to the theater is a fact that stands out in ghastly prominence to them. To break its force they offer various explanations. Some say that he went to avoid the office seekers; others that Mrs. Lincoln compelled him to go; and still others that he was led there by fate. The truth is he was a frequent attendant at the theater. He went there much oftener than he went to church. The visit of a clergyman annoyed him, but the society of actors he enjoyed. He greatly admired the acting of Edwin Booth. He sent a note to the actor Hackett praising him for his fine presentation of Falstaff. He called John McCulloch to his box one night and congratulated him on his successful rendition of the part he was playing.

The ball-room, too, had its attractions for him. Some years ago Hon. E. B. Washburn contributed to the North American Review a lengthy article on Lincoln. When President Taylor was inaugurated, Lincoln was serving his term in Congress. Alluding to the inaugural ball, Mr. Washburn says:

A small number of mutual friends—including Mr. Lincoln—made up a party to attend the inauguration ball together. It was by far the most brilliant inauguration ball ever given. . . . We did not take our departure until three or four o'clock in the morning (Reminiscences of Lincoln, p. 19).

Hon. Elisha M. Haines.

In February, 1859, Governor Bissell gave a reception in Springfield which Lincoln attended. Hon. E. M. Haines, then a member of the legislature, and one of Lincoln's supporters for the Senate, referring to the affair, says:

Dancing was going on in the adjacent rooms, and Mr. Lincoln invited my wife to join him in the dancing, which she did, and he apparently took much pleasure in the recreation (Every-Day Life of Lincoln, p. 308).

Early in January, 1863, President and Mrs. Lincoln gave a reception and ball at the White House. This was a severe shock to the Christians of the country, and provoked a storm of censure from the religious press.

According to Ninian Edwards, Lincoln is converted to Christianity about 1848. In March, 1849, he attends the inauguration ball and "Won't go home till morning." According to Dr. Smith, he is converted in 1858. In February, 1859, he attends and participates in a ball at Springfield. According to Noah Brooks, he is converted in 1862. In January, 1863, he gives a ball himself. In every instance he retires from the altar only to enter the ball-room.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Notes on "Was Lincoln a Christian?"

1. The Editor, compositor, or proof-reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER having corrected the punctuation, etc., of the Edwards, Lewis, Stuart, and Matheny letters, the force of the third, fifth, and seventh arguments in the discussion of their authorship is to a great extent impaired. Those having access to Scribner's Monthly for 1873 can see the letters as they were originally presented by Reed and as I desired to hav them presented in this work. With this explanation the corrections made by THE TRUTH SEEKER only emphasize the arguments referred to.

2. In answer to an inquiry recently made by Mr. C. P. Berylson, I will state that the edition of Chambers's Encyclopedia cited was the popular American edition issued by Alden, more copies of which were probably sold in this country than of all other editions combined.

3. The name of Lincoln's brother-in-law whose testimony has been quoted was not Minian but Ninian W. Edwards. J. E. REMSBURG.

Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History—Is It a Modern Forgery?

Eusebius, the first and only historian of the church bordering on primitiv times, begins his "Ecclesiastical History" with the birth of Jesus and ends it apparently about the year 325. In that year the famous Nicene council was held in which it appears that Eusebius took a prominent part, being selected by its presiding officer, Constantine, to deliver the opening address. But though our historian lived many years longer, during which time, as his biographers and commentators concede, he not only continued to write, but must hav finished his "Ecclesiastical History," he makes no allusion to the council of Nice in that work. This omission, as the annotator Valesius remarks, is very singular, and we might add that it is quite unaccountable except upon the hypothesis that the "Ecclesiastical History" is a forgery. A like omission is noticed by Valesius in Eusebius's "Chronological Canons," another work which comes down to the same date, A D. 325. And though in the same author's "Chronicon" there is a suspicious passage concerning the Nicene council, Valesius says, "It is sufficiently evident that these words were not written by Eusebius, but by St. Jerome, who in the chronicle inserted many passages of his own."

The "Chronicon" was first published in a complete state at Milan in 1818, from an Armenian version discovered at Constantinople in that year. Jerome, whose birth is dated about the time of Eusebius's death, is credited with the translation of the Old and New Testaments into Latin, known as the "Vulgate."

Other works of Eusebius appeared as follows:

"Preparatio Evangelica," Latin, in 1480; Greek text in 1544.

"Demonstratio Evangelica," Latin, in 1498; Greek text in 1544.

"Ecclesiastical History," Latin, in 1474, purporting to be a translation from the Greek by Rufinus, who is supposed to hav been born about A.D. 350; Greek text in 1549.

The learned Jesuit Hardouin (A D. 1646–1729) says that the earliest of the succession of Benedictine forgeries were in Latin, because it was some time after the revival of learning before scholars mastered the Greek; and he suspects that most of the Greek books were first written in Latin, pretending to be early translations. Such appears to be the case in regard to Eusebius's works.

The date of the birth of Eusebius, and of his death, can only be approximately ascertained. The same is true in regard to every Christian father, every apostle, and even Jesus Christ himself.

Eusebius says in his "Ecclesiastical History" that "Dionysius obtained the episcopate of Alexandria in our day;" that is to say, in the historian's own lifetime (book iii, chap. 28).

Again he tells us that Dionysius succeeded to the episcopate in the third year of the reign of Philip (book vi, chap. 35). That was A D. 246 or 247.

Again he says that Dionysius died in the twelfth year of the reign of Gallienus, having presided over the church of Alexandria seventeen years. In the same connection he says that Gallienus reigned fifteen years in all, i.e., including two years jointly with his father Valerian (book vii, chap. 28). The twelfth year of Gallienus was therefore A.D. 266 or 267.

From these data it would appear that Eusebius was born before A.D. 247, and was consequently at least seventy-eight years of age in the year 325 when the council of Nice was held, and not less than ninety-three years of age in the year 340, about which time he is supposed to hav died.

But the authorities are constrained to make him out a much younger man; they guess that he was born about A.D. 264, which would make him sixty-one at the time of the council of Nice, and about seventy-five when he died.

Prefixed to the English edition of the "Ecclesiastical History" is a translation of the "Annotations of Valesius on the Life and Writings of Eusebius," in which either Valesius or the translator has falsified the text of Eusebius by making him say that "Dionysius, bishop of Alexandria, lived in his own age." The passage reads, "Dionysius obtained the episcopate of Alexandria in our day;" and what does that mean but that the writer was living before A.D. 247?

A scholarly monk of the fifteenth century engaged in fabricating ancient codices, would be careful about giving an exact clue to the date of the birth of the pretended author.

The first translation of the "Ecclesiastical History" into English was made in 1584. There was perhaps no Greek text in existence then; the first publication of the Greek text was many years later, by Valesius, who was born in 1603. The English translator of the "accurate Greek text published by Valesius" apologizes for the ambiguous and otherwise defectiv style of Eusebius, being very different from that which prevailed three centuries before. Father Hardouin would say, fifteen hundred years before. "Why is it," says Hardouin, "that not one of the Greek fathers wrote good Greek? In the Gallic language there hav been many changes in five hundred years; in the Greek no change appears in fifteen hundred years; all the pretended fathers and historians use the same dialect and the same syntax."

Eusebius makes much use of the Jewish historian Josephus. The spurious passage in the "Antiquities" concerning the crucifixion of Jesus Christ by order of Pontius Pilate first appeared in two works of Eusebius, namely, "Demonstratio Evangelica," and "Ecclesiastical History." In the latter work the false quotation is followed by this audacious comment:

When such testimony as this is transmitted to us by an historian who sprung from the Hebrews themselvs, both respecting John the Baptist and our savior, what subterfuge can be left to prevent those from being convicted destitute of all shame who hav forged the Acts against them (Book i, chap. 11)?

The "Acts" referred to are subsequently explained to be the "Acts of Pilate," forged by Theotecnus of Antioch in the author's own time (b. ix, ch. 2). And in a chapter preceding the above quotation the author attempts to disprove the date of the crucifixion alleged in the "Spurious Acts against our Savior," to wit, in the seventh year of the reign of Tiberius, which would be A.D. 22, some three or four years before Pilate was appointed procurator of Judea (b. i, ch. 9).

The false quotation from Josephus concerning the crucifixion of Jesus Christ is preceded by another concerning John the Baptist, which is also conceded to be spurious.

Eusebius quotes at length an alleged account of the death of "James the brother of the Lord," by Hegessippus, who, he says, "flourished nearest the days of the apostles." This James, to whom Eusebius tells us "the episcopal seat at Jerusalem was committed by the apostles," he identifies as "James the brother of Jesus," who was stoned to death with other alleged lawbreakers by order of the high priest Ananus at Jerusalem, A.D. 62 (Jos. Ant. xx 9 § 1).

The account, as quoted from Hegessippus by Eusebius, ends as follows:

Thus he suffered martyrdom, and they buried him on the spot where his tombstone is still remaining, by the temple. He became a faithful witness both to the Jews and Greeks that Jesus is the Christ. Immediately after this Vespasian invaded and took Judea.

The death of "James the brother of Jesus" was A D. 62; and the invasion of Judea by Vespasian was A.D. 66.

Eusebius then proceeds:

So admirable a man indeed was James, and so celebrated among all for his justice, that even the wiser part of the Jews were of the opinion that this was the cause of the immediate siege of Jerusalem [A.D. 68–70], which happened to them for no other reason than the crime against him. Josephus also has not hesitated to superadd this testimony in his works: "These things," says he, "happened to the Jews to avenge James the Just, who was the brother of him that is called Christ, and whom the Jews had slain, notwithstanding his preëminent justice."

No such passage is to be found in Josephus. The pretended quotation is a verbatim repetition of a passage in Origen's "Commentaries on Matthew," supposed to hav been written about a hundred years before Eusebius flourished. Origen professes to find in the 20th book of the Jewish Antiquities, where the death of James is recorded, a reference to the miseries which the Jews suffered when their holy temple was demolished, and he quotes Josephus as saying:

These things befel them by the anger of God, on account of what they had dared to do to James the brother of Jesus, who was called Christ.

Here, then, is the passage which Eusebius repeats, purporting to be quoted by Origen a hundred years earlier, but probably not written before the fifteenth century.

Eusebius follows this false quotation with a true one from the 20th book of the Antiquities describing the death of "James the brother of Jesus," but the succeeding words, "who was called Christ," are an acknowledged interpolation. "The manner of the death of James," says Dr. Lardner, "was not known to the early Christians;" and he doubts the genuinness of the reference to Christ, while Dr. Whiston in a note on the passage says:

Of this condemnation of James the Just and the causes, as also that he did not die till long after, see "Primitiv Christianity Revived."

Josephus says that James and some others being accused, Ananus the high priest "delivered them to be stoned," and the presumption is that the sentence was executed. If not, then the James who escaped death A.D. 62, and "did not die till long after," was not the brother of the Lord and first bishop of Jerusalem, whose death is described by Hegessippus, as quoted by Eusebius.

And indeed how is it possible to identify the brother of the Lord with the James mentioned by Josephus? We read in the "Book of the Blessed Mary and the Infancy of the Savior, Written in Hebrew by the Blessed Evangelist Matthew and translated into Latin by the Blessed Presbyter Jerome," that when Joseph was chosen by lot to take care of the Virgin Mary he bashfully protested, saying, "I am an old man and hav children; why do you hand over to me this infant who is younger than my grandsons?" Mary was twelve years old, or fourteen, as stated another copy of "Pseudo-Matthew." And we are told in another apocryphal gospel that Joseph was a widower at eighty-nine, with four sons and two daughters; and that he died at the age of one hundred and eleven when Jesus was nineteen years old. With the great disparity between the age of Jesus and that of his half-brother James, how is it possible to believe that James was even living as late as A.D. 62, much less that he "did not die till long after?"

Eusebius professes to copy the account of the death of James from Hegessippus and to confirm it by a passage from Clement. Neither of the two testimonies is extant except as given by Eusebius. He not only makes Hegessippus say that "immediately after this Vespasian invaded and took Judea," but subsequently he himself affirms that "after the martyrdom of James and the capture of Jerusalem, which immediately followed," the surviving apostles and disciples elected Simeon the son of Cleophas as the successor of James in the episcopal see of Jerusalem. Eusebius therefore places the death of James just before the capture of Jerusalem, which was A D. 70, and not as Hegessippus has it, just before the invasion of Judea by Vespasian, which was A D. 66. But the date of the death or condemnation of the James mentioned by Josephus was certainly A.D. 62.

Had Eusebius been more careful to ascertain the exact date in Josephus, would he hav quoted Hegessippus as saying that immediately after the death of James Vespasian invaded and took Judea? and would he himself hav said that the capture of Jerusalem immediately followed?

Further reasons for discrediting the authenticity of Eusebius's "Ecclesiastical History" will be given in another article. ANTICHRIST.

THE clergy hav ruined Italy.—Brougham.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Vice-President, 120 Lexington ave., New York city.
T. B. WAKEMAN, Vice-President, 93 Nassau street, New York city.
J. E. REMSBURG, Vice-President, ... Oak Mills, Kan.
JULIET H. SEVERANCE, Vice-President, . . . Milwaukee, Wis.
IDA C CRADDOCK, Secretary, 930 North 17th st., Philadelphia, Pa.
F. C. MENDE, Treasurer, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, Ida C. Craddock, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
TREASURER, F. C. Mende, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The American Secular Union.

OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The first meeting of the directors of the American Secular Union was held in New York on December 7, 1889, at which all the members of the board were present except Dr. Juliet H. Severance, who was detained by an accident. After a free discussion the following policy was adopted, and is hereby submitted to the members and friends of the society, in the hope of securing their prompt and activ coöperation:

We recognize the fact that "there is a tide in the affairs of men" which should be "taken at the flood." There are certain subjects which are now uppermost in the public mind, and to these we call attention, viz.: church taxation, secular public schools, and no Sabbath laws as such. To these three demands of Secularism we propose to give special attention, without abandoning the other six.

In pursuance of our work, the methods proposed are as follows:

1. To giv earnest attention to organization. Many of our local auxiliary societies—which at one time numbered nearly three hundred or more—hav become inactiv and indifferent, while the National Reform Association and the American Sabbath Union are unusually activ, having their agents at work everywhere, holding public meetings and subsidizing the press. We must counteract this influence by a more complete organization of our forces.

The records of such local societies as we hav are incomplete and unreliable. We therefore call upon all who are interested in this subject to send us as soon as possible the names of all local societies, whether auxiliary to the American Secular Union or not, with the names of their officers, and the names of all persons who would be likely to be interested in this matter. We want to prepare a perfect inventory of all organizations and persons who are likely to work in our cause. We call for help in this regard. If your local society is alive, or half dead and inactiv, or if you hav no local society, and hav only five persons who desire to be organized, let us know at once. Especially let the auxiliaries of the old national Liberal League now come to our assistance. We invite the coöperation of all persons and societies, whether they agree with us in other matters or not, to unite with us in promoting some, if not all, of the "Nine Demands."

2. We invoke the assistance of all traveling lecturers and organizers in forming new societies; and in return, we will aid them by maintaining a "bureau of information" regarding Liberal societies and activ workers in the cause throughout the United States.

3. Especially do we invite the correspondence of all volunteer agents residing in the cities where state legislatures meet, and in every important center where local issues may arise, or where new legislation may be proposed; and we ask for information regarding the abuse of any existing laws involving the Secular principle of our government. We propose to look after Secular interests through our auxiliaries, through local representativs, and through other competent agents, wherever these interests are endangered.

4. We propose that our treasurer shall keep accounts of a special fund for the free distribution of pamphlets and Liberal literature generally, selecting the matter in accordance with the wishes of contributors. We hope to organize this work so as to make it a propaganda which shall be widely efficient, with the least possible waste and expense. We already hav frequent calls for publications of this kind, and hope to be promptly supplied with money for this purpose.

5. We urge life members and annual members to help our secretary to compile correct lists, in order that we may know how many there are in our ranks, or interested in our cause, or able or willing to aid it.

6. We urge all who hav time, capacity, or inclination to act as local volunteer reporters, agents, or pickets to make themselvs known to us, and to say what they can and will do in such practical work as circulating petitions, distributing documents, or attending and reporting the proceedings of public meetings, and especially of legislativ bodies.

7. We urge all who can to subscribe money for the work of the Union, and, upon receipt of this announcement, to promptly send to the treasurer, Mr. F. C. Mende, 930 North Seventeenth street, Philadelphia, either some actual subscription, or some pledge of what they can do during the year, so that the extent of our work may be planned accordingly, and its execution insured.

8. We invite further suggestions as to the work to be done and the means for accomplishing it; but especially do we ask that those who are willing to lend a hand in any way should communicate with us at once, as above suggested. Let each member and every Liberal wake up to the fact that it is his duty to answer to the roll-call, and to inform us where he may be found, what he can do, and how much he will contribute. We are now prepared for a large amount of activ, systematic work; but our plans presuppose the existence of live members and local branches; and our success will necessarily be proportionate to our support.

9. We hav taken an office at No. 930 North Seventeenth street, Philadelphia, as our headquarters, where our secretary is at work early and late, and where our president and treasurer make daily calls, to see that the battle for freedom is wisely directed. Write at once, and let us know what to depend upon.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.
IDA C. CRADDOCK, Cor. Sec'y.
F. C. MENDE, Treasurer.

930 North Seventeenth street, Philadelphia, Dec. 11, 1889.

The Secular Union and Mr. Burnham.

The American Secular Union should hav no ism,—J. H. Burnham in letter of October 30th.

If that be true, wherein is the recent American Secular Union Congress blameworthy in dropping Secularism and inviting the coöperation of all Christians who will work with us for the equitable taxation of all property and the complete Secularization of our public schools? The Kent Secular Union invites Christians to join it and work for state Secularization. Christians hav been received into our society and no one seemed to think the proceeding disgraceful. Is it not the part of wisdom to concentrate our efforts to accomplish practicable aims rather than scatter our efforts in aid of every reform or deform that impracticables may chance to advocate? Looked at from such standpoint may it not be possible that President Westbrook is not guilty of treachery, and that to charge him with the practice of dishonesty is uncalled for? Why not giv him the benefit of the doubt and time to prove the new move a wise step? We who staid away from the Congress should be careful how we criticise those who attended and did the best they could. In the words of our good brother Burnham, spoken at the Pittsburgh Congress, referring to organization, "If the majority will not come to us let us go to them." What if the Nine Demands hav been changed? Like the Christian, are we sure that in them we had, or hav, a finality? Is it not possible that they hav been improved, even if the covert free love declaration of the former eighth Demand has been knocked out, or do our free love allies expect the American Secular Union to get their chestnuts out of the fire? Is that a Liberal spirit which chafes because it might hav to listen to a Deist's prayer? Do we deserve the credit of being tolerant when we cannot endure the thought of a Deist in office working for our common objects? On the other hand, we hav men in our ranks who will hav it that an ex-reverend is of necessity either a fool or knave, hence should be kept out of all offices of trust.

With our liberties endangered by the encroachments of the church, would it not be wiser to put aside all such petty prejudices and work shoulder to shoulder for the new Demands?

Kent, O. MARIUS HEIGHTON.

Immortality.*

LAW OFFICE ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
45 WALL ST, NEW YORK, June 25, 1889.

E. R. JOHNES, ESQ., My Dear Sir: Accept my thanks for your essay on "Immortality." It is very beautifully written, and you hav brought forward in support of your doctrin all the argument there is, and you hav stated your case with much force and clearness.

In addition to this you hav abandoned many positions that cannot, in this age of the world, be maintained. You admit that the hope of immortality can not, with safety, rest upon the inspiration of the Old and New Testament, or upon any form of superstition. If we admit the existence of a God of infinit wisdom and compassion, we may say that there must be a world better than this; but how do we account for one worse than that—that is to say, for this? If injustice triumphs here, why not there? If honesty goes without bread in this world, why not in another? Certainly, God will be no better then than now. Still, it may be possible that a God of infinit love and compassion will so reward those who suffer—through suffering itself—that all that happens will be consistent with wisdom and compassion.

I do not see any evidence in this world that it was created by either wisdom or compassion. Neither do I see what right we hav to say that man has a spiritual body, any more than trees hav. The tree springs from a seed, so does man. The trees produce others and then perish from the earth; the same is true of the human race. You hav had the courage to accept the logic of your position and giv to all life the immortality that Christians giv to man.

I hardly know the meaning of the words "spiritualist," and "materialist." I do not see that it makes the slightest difference with the argument to admit that everything is "spiritual," or to assert that everything is "material." He who asserts that all is "spiritual," admits the existence of everything that another calls "material;" and he who insists that all is "material," admits the existence of everything that is by the other called "spiritual." Call it what you will, it remains beyond the grasp of our mind.

The weakest parts of your essay are the quotations from others. What Greenleaf says upon the subject seems to me a non sequitur. If man had believed only in his own experience, why could the world "be neither governed nor improved?" The first man obtained something by experience which he could convey to another, to which the other might add by his own exertions, his own experience—and so on, from generation to generation, until there would be a vast and splendid capital of human experience. So, what Mr. Drummond has to say, may be more ingenious but is equally without foundation. Of all the men who hav written upon this subject, I know of no one so shallow and insincere as Dr. Young.

I congratulate you on what you hav said concerning the "wax figures" of Milton. If anyone is open to the charge of barren Materialism, it is Milton. His "heaven" was simply another England—with a government somewhat worse. You hav endeavored to establish your doctrin by reason—by something universal—and you hav wisely left out the provincialisms, the prejudices, and the puerilities of Christianity. Love and hope are universal. As long as men love and as long as they hope there will probably be in heart and brain the splendid dream of immortality. It may be that we liv no more—that we go back to the unconscious dust, and yet the heart will always say, "Perhaps there is another life." But whether there is or not let us all paint on the canvas of the future the pictures that delight and satisfy the soul. We know that in this world after joy comes grief, as after day comes night; and it may be there is some world where after grief comes joy, as after night comes day.

Thanking you again for your beautiful and poetical essay, I remain, Sincerely yours,

[Signed] R. G. INGERSOLL.

*A letter to E. R. Johnes, author of "Circumstantial Evidence of a Future Existence." M. L. Williams, publisher, 275 Pearl street, New York.

Our London Letter.

It is a cause of rejoicing to all his friends that Mr. Bradlaugh has recovered from his severe illness sufficiently to enable him to start on his Indian trip, and it is to be hoped that the voyage will thoroughly build him up again that he may hav health and strength to carry on the work on which he has been so heartily engaged nearly all his life. His letters from abroad will be expected and read with deep interest, and he will, on his return, be in a still better position to expose the abuses of Indian government and plead for the reform which is so much needed.

The case of Besant vs. Hoskyns has closed its first chapter in a very unsatisfactory manner, and will hav to be gone through once more. It is stated that the majority of the jury were in favor of the plaintiff, and this in the face of the bias displayed by the judge. Mrs. Besant has become so well known to the public of late years that but little attention is paid to slanders against her, and it is pretty evident that the handbill forming the cause of action was but little regarded, as it made no difference to her being elected. It seems almost a pity to bring the scurrilous Hoskyns from the obscurity in which he groveled. Before this action, it is a question if he was known outside his parish, and now he is posing as a martyr, a West End parson having taken him in hand, and issued an appeal to all true believers to subscribe sufficient funds to pay his law expenses. The opinion of the judge that a libel, no matter how base or unfounded, if believed in by the libeler, is perfectly justifiable, is rather a novel rendering of the law, and if the jury had found for defendant, this would hav been an interesting point to raise for the consideration of another court.

The consideration shown by judges for the clergy is further illustrated by the case of the vicar of Hoo, who has been cited before Lord Pengauer for disobeying an order of the courts to administer the sacrament to a female parishioner who had committed the terrible sin of schism by occasionally visiting a Wesleyan chapel. The parson would not carry out the order and an application was made for his committal, but the judge was anxious to giv him another chance and postponed the matter for a fortnight, so that the bishop in the interval might see what he could do to persuade the recalcitrant vicar to spare a trifle of bread and wine for a hungering and thirsting suppliant at the throne of grace.

The good Dr. Barnardo is in trouble again. He has handed over a boy to an unknown person, who was recommended by a person he did not know, and the boy has been taken he knows not where. He has been ordered to produce the boy within three months, but by that time no doubt the case will be forgotten and the affair blown over, to the glory of the doctor and the discomfiture of his enemies. It is curious that some of his boys appear to disappear without leaving the slightest trace of their whereabouts.

The Salvation Army had a powerful awakening today. Their headquarters in the city caught fire and a considerable amount of damage was done before the flames were suppressed. A quantity of clothing and other stores were destroyed, so it is likely to be a heavy loss to Booth unless he is insured, which no doubt he is, being a very knowing old bird, and one who would prefer trusting to the solvency of an insurance office than in the oversight and protection of his deity.

A certain amount of religious liberty has been granted in Finland, which though it does not go very far is, at all events, a welcome instalment. It only at present givs professing Christians of any sect the right to educate their own children, though not those belonging to members of the state church. Marriages contracted by members of acknowledged sects will in future be legal. Different views of Christianity will no longer make any difference in the privileges and duties of the citizen, and these prerogativs are extended so far as to giv Christians of any sect the right of entering government service.

Religious demonstrations and processions are, however, prohibited, and as the Salvation Army has gained a footing in the country, no doubt they will soon come into collision with the authorities on that point. The government has undertaken to examin into the doctrins and beliefs of every dissenting sect, and also to keep a close account of them; it has cut a nice task out for itself and it remains to be seen how the plan will work. It appears that any members of the community not professing some form of Christianity are still to be debarred the rights of citizenship, nor are they allowed to form organized communities or educate their children. Altogether the countries of the far north are not very desirable places of residence for Freethinkers.

Salisbury is in the curious position of possessing a school-board but no board school, and now that the two national schools hav been closed the clergy are doing their utmost to prevent the erection of a public school, desiring to get the government grant applied to their own schools. The non-churchgoers are strongly opposed to this pleasant little arrangement, and threaten if the parsons succeed to avail themselvs of the conscience clause, and keep their children free from the, to them, pernicious religious teaching of the church party. How dearly the different sects of the Protestant church love one another! J. D.

Priestcraft in the West Indies.

I propose laying before the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER in a series of letters a picture of the miserable condition of the people of this far-off picturesque western isle of Trinidad, "the pearl of the Antilles," as it has been very appropriately named, under the despotic ecclesiastical government of the see of Rome, whose priests here revel in a saturnalia of bigotry, fanaticism, and greed. If ever there was a religiously enslaved, priest-ridden country, that place is Trinidad. Even the broad fertil acres of the country, so astonishingly prolific that one may almost regard them as chosen spots over which the goddess of fecundity had elected to brood, producing almost spontaneously the richest products of mother earth, are made to yield their precious crops of cacao to further swell the already plethoric money-bags of the church of Rome, the authorities of this church here being actually engaged in the usurious trade of lending out their surplus cash to impecunious planters on a mortgage security of their cacao plantations at a heavy rate of interest. Why, the auri sacra fames of these ecclesiastics is not surpassed by the most wretched miser in the world.

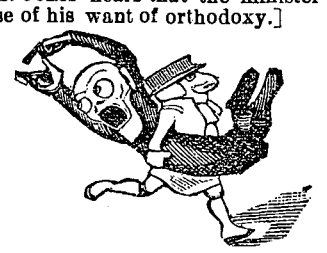
Port-of-Spain, the chief town of the island, has, with its suburbs, a population of about forty thousand souls. It is well laid out. and contains many fine and costly buildings. The dwelling-houses are all well constructed and very comfortable, and the suburban cottages lately erected after the American rural style of architecture are really very pretty. In these latter dwell the haut ton. The stores and shops are all well appointed. The streets, laid with asphalt, are splendid specimens of road-making and are kept very clean. The sidewalks and concrete water tables or surface drains are perfect. So far so good. But it will surprise the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER to hear that there is not a single theater, music hall, or place of healthy amusement. I want this fact remembered, as I shall hav occasion to touch on it later on. And now for the churches. There are in Port-of-Spain and its suburbs fourteen Roman Catholic, three Anglican, and five Protestant churches. There are also nine Roman Catholic schools and five Anglican assisted by the government. On the question of public money being paid by the government to maintain denominational schools one can hardly write with composure. It makes the blood boil to think that instead of this money being applied by the government for the substantial improvement and advancement of the people, it is frittered away among a number of rapacious fanatics intent upon teaching the rising generation of the colony the tenets of a religion which has over and over again been proved to be reared on the triple bases of fiction, fraud, and hypocrisy. But retournons à nos moutons. Last year the government gave the Roman Catholics $13,550 and the Anglicans $5,815 for the upkeep of their respectiv scholastic establishments. The government also pays for four exhibitions or scholarships of $750 each per annum, tenable for three years. And boys from the Roman Catholic College of the Immaculate Conception are permitted to compete for and obtain these scholarships. In addition to this, the government contributes $5,000 a year toward the support of this Catholic College. We next find that the sum of about $17,500 a year is paid from the public treasury toward the maintenance of the Church of England in Trinidad, and $30,000 to the Romanists to preach "Christ and him crucified" to the colonists. I may here state that the Catholic establishment is run by an archbishop, a small army of sleek, red-cheeked, overfed Dominican friars, and a number of black-robed priests; while the Anglican church has its bishop and a full complement of deans, vicars, and priests, who strut along in the heyday of contentment, basking, as these worthies all do, in the golden sunlight of governmental favors, and in the silvery beams of the bright shillings cunningly extracted from their all-too-credulous parishioners. And what has been the result of all this pampering by the government of the religious bodies? Has it achieved any good? Why, right here I say, "No," emphatically.

The lower classes are as ruffianly and blackguard a lot as any country was ever afflicted with. Concubinage is general, and only twenty-six per cent of the births are legitimate. Thrift is almost unknown. Prostitution and vice are rampant, especially among the younger females. Gambling in its worst form is the order of the day. Burglaries hav been of late very prevalent.

And yet there is not one of these people who is not an adept at making the sign of the cross, and who cannot reel off "Hail Mary's" and "Pater Nosters" by the ell. The young girls, after making what is known as their first communion, lapse into dreadful profligacy.

But the superstition of these people, pandered to and encouraged by their priests, is one of the most lamentable features of their condition. There are in this small island no less than five shrines of the Virgin and other so-called saints to which the people make pilgrimages, prayers, and adorations, this "racket" of course bringing money to the coffers of the church. For the information, and perhaps amusement of your readers, I will briefly relate the story of one of these shams which the poor deluded people here so firmly believe in.

Many miles away from Port-of-Spain, in the heart of the Siparia woods, is a chapel with the image of the Virgin Mary, believed by the Catholics to be endowed with extraordinary virtues. This image is called "La Divina Pastora," and is very richly dressed and bedecked with valuable jewelry, the offerings of the many pilgrims who hav from time to time visited this shrine. These visits are to pray for the restoration to health of those sick and diseased. In the case of a pilgrim suffering from a diseased limb, a model in miniature of the limb is made of pure gold and presented to the image. Masses, well paid for by some dupe, are occasionally said here, and the fête of La Divina Pastora is annually held, when numbers of people attend. But the most ludicrous part of the whole thing is the accepted origin of this shrine. It is said that the image was picked up by the Spaniards, in whose possession the island once was, in the depth of the forest. It remained there for some time, and was then removed to a chapel eight miles down.



It made no stay there, however, for on the morning after its arrival it was found to hav mysteriously disappeared during the night, and on search being instituted, it was discovered in the precise spot of the forest where it had first appeared. To the superstitious Spaniards this was clearly a sign from heaven. Accordingly in 1758 a church was erected on the spot to receive the image, and a mission set on foot, conducted by the Capuchin fathers. And this is the same image which is being worshiped in the nineteenth century by the people of the island under the enlightened temporal rule of her most gracious majesty Victoria, queen of Great Britain and Ireland and empress of India, and under the spiritual government of his holiness Leo XIII., sovereign pontiff of Rome!

At a place called Deigo Martin, a priest, some years ago, erected a statue and called it "Our Lady of Lourdes." Rocks and sea-shells form the base on which the image is placed, and there is provided a small basin filled with water, the curativ properties of which are believed to be miraculous. A number of people go there to get cured of various complaints. Some time since a French tinsmith skilfully constructed an image which was promptly named "Our Lady of Laventille," and placed in a chapel picturesquely situated on a hill a mile or two out of Port-of-Spain. There the priests make intercession to "Our Lady" on payment of a sum of money. Devout Catholics lighten their pockets frequently at this shrine. A sort of duplicate of the image of La Divina Pastora at Siparia, above referred to, has been erected in one of the suburbs of this town, so that those who are unable to travel to Siparia to supplicate the genuin image, may, upon the payment of a small sum, offer their prayers to her duplicate here. But the limits of this letter hav now been reached, and I must therefore reserve further revelations for another communication. E. S.

Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, British West Indies, Nov. 20, 1889.

The Church Scandal.

[Young Mrs. Jones hears that the minister has been removed because of his want of orthodoxy.]

Not orthodox? What's that? I'm sure
He's just as nice as nice can be;
He spoke so kindly of the poor—
He sends his compliments to me.
"Not sound," they say, oh, dear, oh, dear!
I'm sure he looked quite bright and strong.
What are these curious things I hear?
What is it in the man that's wrong?

They say he sneers at Jonah's whale,
And gourd that withered in a night;
And has his doubts about the tale
Of Samson and the lion's fight.
But what of that? At such small things
What inconceivable distress!
How well he showed at christenings!
What perfect pastoral tenderness!

Not orthodox! So out and down
He goes, for thus the deacons vote;
I worked him up a dressing-gown,
I've got his tender, perfumed note.
He praised my muffins—kissed my child,
He has such sweet, entrancing ways;
I feel I can be reconciled
To life's vexations when he prays.

Now for his doctrins, doubts, and all,
I do not care a rush—that's flat;
They say his learning made him fall—
Theirs never will—I'm sure of that.
I gave him heavy wraps and shawls,
I knit him caps and woolen socks;
I'll miss his ministerial calls—
He's not a horrid orthodox!

—J. D. Miller in Time.

The Brotherhood of Moralists.

The following is a report of the work done by the propaganda committee of the Brotherhood of Moralists at Hannibal, Mo., in the month of November, 1889:

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

Number of membership at last report	726
Enrolled since last report	59
Total	785

Those enrolled this month represent fifteen different states. Our membership now extends into nearly every state and territory of the United States and Canada.

F. H. RAU, Secretary.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Balance from last report	$12 45
RECEIPTS.
H. P. Marsh, New York	25
Jas. Forgey, Kansas	10
F. F. Gallardo, Nevada	25
Mrs. Schofield, California	10
Mrs. Campbell, Wisconsin	50
G. W. Watson, District of Columbia	5 00
Total	$18 65
EXPENDED.
Paid Wisel Atkins for printing applications, certificates, circulars, etc	$10 00
Mailing constitutions, etc	2 20
Total	$12 20
Balance in treasury	6 45

A. R. AYRES, Treasurer.

PERHAPS it is to the spirit of Puritanism that we owe the little influence of women, and the consequent inferiority of their education.—Buckle.

Communications.

State Organization

Of the Liberals of Washington at Seattle, January 28th, 29th, 30th.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club and over eight hundred Liberals from all parts of the state of Washington earnestly desire that a real, practical organization should be formed, that shall not alone secure the secularization of at least our state government and advance the cause of Liberalism by distribution of literature, by lectures, and the formation of local Liberal societies, but shall also be a real benefit to every member, affording security and protection, so that if any wrong, injury, or injustice is done to any Liberal in any part of the state the whole force and power of the united Liberals of the entire state shall be brought to bear in defending, securing, and maintaining his or her rights; and if the powerful church organizations attempt undue influence of the legislature or to carry out their avowed intention to secure the exemption of church property from taxation, the enforcement of rigid Sunday laws, the subsidizing sectarian institutions, or the employment of chaplains to make prayers to be paid for out of the public money, our organization can counteract their nefarious schemes and defeat their evil purposes.

Of course the secretary must keep an open office, which office will be the headquarters of the organization, and this office must be in some city easy of access from all parts of the state; and it will be absolutely necessary to hav the members of the board of directors, or a working majority of them, reside in that same city, so that they can at shortest notice be convened, and can frequently meet for counsel and transaction of business. Wherever the office may be located, it will per necessity be a "long way off" from some parts of the state; yet all and every section and every member can and must hav equal voice, and be equally represented, with rights equally protected.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club has sent out letters to all places in the state where there are any number of Liberals, asking them to elect delegates from the most able and influential of their number to attend the convention to be held at Seattle, January 28th, 29th, and 30th, and has met very general approval and prompt compliance. These delegates will form the convention proper, and they will consider, discuss, and by their votes decide all matters pertaining to the constitution, the plan of organization, methods of carrying on the work, etc.

This must not be construed as excluding Liberals who are not delegates; on the contrary, all the Liberals of the state and of other states are cordially invited to attend the convention. But the business of the convention will be transacted by the regular delegates, elected or appointed by the Liberals of their own precincts especially for that work.

In every precinct where there are five or more Liberals, it is proposed they elect from their own number a vice-president, who shall be the executiv officer and representativ of the state society in that precinct. And the vice-presidents so elected shall constitute the vice-presidents of the state society.

It shall be the duty of each of the vice-presidents to ascertain the name and address of the Liberals residing in the precinct; as far as possible cultivate their acquaintance, and induce them to join the state organization; to send list of their names and post-office address to the state secretary, and on the first Sunday of each month report to the secretary any additions, removals, or deaths (blanks to be furnished by the secretary on which to make these reports), and send with the report suggestions as to what is most needed to advance the cause in that precinct, and to encourage formation of local Liberal societies, and, when possible, establish science-schools on Sunday without a teacher, and, whenever practical, to urge on Liberals of the precinct the advisability of forming a joint stock company to purchase a lot and build a Liberal hall, with stores and offices, so as to make it a profitable investment and afford a hall free for Liberal uses, our great difficulty being to secure the earnest coöperation of women, on account of their unwillingness to read Liberal publications; to urge all Liberals of ability in the precinct to write short articles and items on the Nine Demands—our principles, our aims and objects, etc.—for the local newspapers, and to cultivate influence so as to be able to insure the publication in local newspapers of items of interest furnished, from time to time, by the state secretary; to keep close watch on the public schools of his precinct, and insist on their conforming to the law, and see to it that no religious or sectarian teaching, prayers, or Bibles are used. In case of any difficulty to report the facts to the state secretary, he shall immediately lay the matter before the board of directors. In any case of favoritism on the part of the assessors in reduced or false valuation of church property; in any case of religious persecution of any member of the society, to promptly investigate, and, if in his opinion necessary or advisable, to send statement of facts to the secretary to be, by him, promptly laid before the board of directors for action, and in all cases such vice-president shall be, de facto, a member of the board of directors, and hav full and equal voice and vote in deciding on what action shall be taken by the organization in regard to such matter. When the religious bigots shall attempt to sway the legislature, and secure enactments in the interest of the church, prejudicial to the common good, the vice-president shall urge, not alone the avowed Liberals, but all Liberally inclined, to write letters, or, failing in that, then to copy or sign those furnished by the state secretary, and send to their members of the legislature urging opposition to all such enactments; to select able Liberals—three when possible—who, in case of the death of any Liberal in the precinct, could deliver or read oration and conduct funeral services (blank orations and funeral services to be furnished by the state secretary); to advise secretary in regard to persons to whom to send Liberal leaflets for distribution; to advise board of directors in cases where there is demand for lectures, and the Liberals of the precinct too few to meet the entire expense, so that the board can act justly and discreetly in supplying lecturer and paying part of the cost.

It must be distinctly understood these are suggestions only, and to be so regarded. The decision will rest with the convention when assembled. But as the time of the convention is so very limited, I earnestly request the delegates to the convention to take these matters into immediate consideration and help insure success and harmony by the interchange of opinions, and by stating objections and suggesting amendments and additions through the columns of The Truth Seeker. Certain it is every true Liberal desires only "the greatest good to the greatest number."

C. B. Reynolds.

Eminent Women.

MARIE JEANNE PHILIPEN ROLAND.

Among the grand and noted women of the past none stand more conspicuously for purity, morality, bravery, and intelligence, than Marie Jeanne Philipen Roland, or Madam Roland, as she is more familiarly called.

She is a mother-made woman, too.

"Her father, Gratien Philipen, by trade an engraver, was an ambitious, frivolous, and discontented man. Her mother, a pure-minded, large-hearted woman, possessing rare worth and intelligence, early instilled into the mind of her child those principles of conscientious virtue which afterward added such luster to the genius of that child—which made her strong and brave in the face of a terrible death, and which made hers the purest public character developed by the revolution of 1793."

At eighteen she was well versed in history, philosophy, chemistry, the languages, and mathematics, and the graceful accomplishments of her sex, and could also ply her father's art of engraving.

Her favorit reading was history, and at nine years of age she read Plutarch's "Lives," and imbibed from them her first strong admiration of republican principles.

Her life was happy and joyous till in 1775, when the death of her mother brought to her the first real sorrow, and prostrated her on a bed of sickness and almost robbed her of reason and life.

Soon after this she made the acquaintance of M. Roland, who sought her in marriage, but was contemptuously refused by her father, who had become a harsh, improvident, dissipated man, and was rapidly wasting the fortune left her by her mother. Finally she had to leave home and hire rooms in a convent, where she lived alone for six months, when M. Roland again sought her out and she consented to marry him—in 1779, she then being twenty-five and he forty-seven years of age.

They had one child, Eudora.

In 1789 the ferment preceding the revolution in France commenced, and among the first to indorse the idea of a new and republican government were M. and Madam Roland. Madam Roland wrote the most enthusiastic and radical of political letters from Lyons to Paris journals, "thus helping to kindle the blaze that lit her own funeral pyre." She said, "We must be ready for everything—even to die, without regret. . . . If we do not die for liberty, we shall soon hav nothing left to do but to weep for her. Do you say we dare no longer speak? Be it so, we must thunder then. . . . The insolence of the rich and the misery of the people excite my hatred against injustice and oppression, and I no longer ask for anything but the triumph of truth and the success of the Revolution. . . . I am glad there is danger. I see nothing else capable of goading you on. It is impossible to rise to freedom from the midst of corruption without strong convulsions. They are the salutary crisis of a serious disease."

These are noble thoughts and sentiments, and we of to-day find them as appropriate to all reforms as they were in her day and age.

"Quiet, modest, but quick-thoughted and energetic, led on by the deep interest she felt in the affairs of the nation, Madam Roland soon, almost unconsciously to herself, became the life and leader of the Girondists, the party of impetus at that time, but afterward, under Robespierrean rule, the party of moderation."

Many people insinuated that Madam Roland was minister and not the husband. It is true she was "the power behind the throne." She wrote for and with her husband. Sometimes both would write and then conjoin the best into one document which went out as M. Roland's, though it really was hers as much as his; but "'twas ever thus." The man has the honor and the woman is content to be "the silent partner."

She married without love but was a good, true wife to him, and he loved her with his whole heart. Roland resigned his office in 1793, but too late to save them from prosecution. M. Roland, at his wife's earnest request, finally went into concealment, but she herself refused to do so or to betray her husband's place of refuge. She was imprisoned for five months, and "although surrounded by all the horrors of the revolution, and though tortured by her anxiety in regard to her husband and child, she kept up before her fellow-prisoners a dignified, courageous deportment, cheering and comforting the faint-hearted and despairing with care, serenity, and heroic calmness."

The 8th of November, 1793, was the day set for her execution. She met her fate with heroic bravery, at the age of thirty-nine. She died for liberty and left behind her one of the purest and noblest of records.

When M. Roland heard of her execution he was unable to endure his grief and killed himself with his sword, declaring he no longer wished to liv in a world so polluted by crime.

In 1795 the memoirs of Madam Roland were published in two volumes and sold for the benefit of her daughter Eudora by the friend who had the care of the child.

In 1800 her works were published in three volumes —"An Appeal to Impartial Posterity," "Works of Leisure Hours and Various Reflections," and "A Journey to Sans Souci and Travels in Switzerland."

Elmina Drake Slenker.

The Sunday Law a Factor in Ohio's Election.

I hav been watching your columns for comments upon the recent election in this state, but so far I hav seen no mention of it. I hav been a Republican since the time when I cast my first vote, but there has never been a Democratic success with which I was better satisfied than that of November last. Two years ago the Republican plurality was thirty-one thousand; this year it is ten thousand the other way.

The agencies by which this change was brought about, are certainly of great interest to Liberals everywhere. There was certainly some opposition to a third term for the governor, but it was too insignificant to hav changed the governorship, and would hav little or no effect upon the legislature. It was the Sunday laws that "did the business."

The Republican party of this state certainly deserved a good beating. The Republican legislature hav received a well-merited rebuke.

Their defeat was brought about by the fanatics, the goody-goodies, the people who want to control other people's morals and dictate the private doings of everybody, people who hav no more idea of personal liberty than so many sheep.

Democratic papers talk about the increased sentiment favoring tariff reform. That is all bosh and nonsense. The trend of Ohio is not that way, and if it were, such a revolution would not be accomplished in one year. Others charge the result to the liquor element entirely. That the saloons contributed to the success of the Democratic ticket is not to be doubted by any reasonable person, but they are merely a factor, as most of the saloonkeepers were already Democratic. One ward in Cincinnati, which was previously among the most strongly Republican, and which contained the fewest saloons of any ward in the city, showed the greatest Democratic gains. One gentleman of this ward says that he knows twenty-five Republicans who voted the straight Democratic ticket and who were not interested in saloons.

I consider theater-going people, and those who patronize baseball and other Sunday amusements, a much more powerful political element than the saloon-men. The latter alone could not possibly hav brought about this result; they hav tried it several times.

Thousands of people who were confined to their offices, or were otherwise prevented from attending amusements during the week, were deprived of their only opportunity to enjoy their favorit recreation on Sunday.

Every person who was arrested for violation of these infamous Sunday laws, felt indignant and outraged, and every such person had at least one friend in full sympathy with him.

The tide has turned. People hav determined that they will not endure such oppression, and when any political party undertakes to restrict the liberties of Ohio's citizens in their amusements and other natural rights, that party is going to be defeated.

Civilization is advancing. CHAS. O. HAYS.

Locust Corners, O.

To Any Spiritualist.

I do not know whether Spiritualism is founded on truth or error, but the central ideas of Spiritualism are grand enough to make every good man wish them true.

The idea of living on indefinitly with the power of doing good and getting good makes me desire to hav the Spiritual philosophy true. But there has always been the devil of doubt in my mind as to the possibility of it being true.

If there is something in me or about me which will liv after I am dead, I want some Spiritualist to tell me what that something is.

If any man or woman has positiv knowledge that there is a part of man which never dies, he or she ought to be able to so describe it as to giv one a definit idea of what that part or thing or soul or spirit is. Not knowing anything about this part which never dies, I can do no better than to call it a thing. It is either a thing or it is nothing.

If it is a thing, it can be described like any other thing, so that we may get a definit knowledge of it. If it is a thing, it must be somewhere and occupy space and hav the properties of other things.

Where is it located? In the brain or nerves or heart or stomach? It must be somewhere about a person. Tell me where to find it.

If man possesses this soul or thing, whence did it come? From father or mother, or both, or from some other source? When did he receive it? After conception and before birth, or after he was born? We ought to be able to feel it, or see it, or hear it, or taste it, or smell it, or we ought to be tolerably sure that no such thing exists.

If no definit idea or description of this thing or immortal part can be given, tell me why. To say it is a soul conveys no idea, unless you can tell what a soul is. To say that it is the mind, is to say that idiots and lunatics and newborn babes hav no souls. It is to say, further, that no one while asleep or in an unconscious state has any soul.

Look into a medical work and see how minutely and distinctly the brain, eye, ear, heart, and stomach are described. Then look into your dictionary and cyclopedia for a description of God, devil, soul, heaven, and hell, and tell me what you hav learned. Whence comes this difference? In the first case there is positiv knowledge; in the other there is no knowledge. In the one case the author deals with realities; in the other he deals with myths.

One cannot impart knowledge to another which he does not himself possess. On the other hand, where there is knowledge, it can be imparted to another.

Is this thing or immortal part born with the child, and is it developed as the brain is developed and matured as the mind is matured?

If there is an immortal part which never dies, it must be eternal, and what is eternal was never born, never created. If it is without end, it must be without beginning.

In the next hundred years millions of human beings will be ushered into existence. Where is the thing or soul or immortal part to-day which each one of these unborn beings is to receive? Cannot somebody show me one? Cannot somebody describe one or giv some general idea of one?

I never saw a bundle of souls, "put up for family use," lying around loose. Pray, tell me where they come from and by whom they are furnished.

People remain unconscious for long periods of time. Where is the soul or immortal part during the interval? It cannot be in heaven, for there is no sense of enjoyment; it cannot be in hell, for it can not suffer. If while one is unconscious he should be touched with a hot iron and the body would feel no pain, would the soul be burnt?

If it is a thing or being separate and distinct from myself, and of which or whom I hav no knowledge, I can no more be interested in it than I can be in a supposed inhabitant of Mars or Jupiter.

I hav had some experience in these matters and know whereof I affirm. I was kicked by a horse, and for a certain period of time I was dead—to all interests and purposes, dead. Whether a half hour or a hundred years, from my own experience I could not tell. I knew nothing, felt nothing, saw nothing, heard nothing. It was a perfect blank—so much cut out of my existence. Where did this important part flee to? If it remained in my body, it did me no good—neither did it get any good from me, to my knowledge, or that of anyone else.

Now, suppose my head had been cut off, or my heart torn out, I would not hav realized it any more than a mummy. Suppose I was unconscious six hours, and at the end of five hours my head had been cut off. It is evident that there never would hav been any further connection between my body and soul. When would the soul hav left the body—when I first became unconscious, or when my head was cut off? And what difference could it make with me whether I was unconscious six hours or an eternity?

If there is a thing or soul which never dies, it must hav been in existence before I was born, and I hav tried to throw my mind back and bring it in connection with that immortal thing, or make it throw some shadow forward that the mind might take cognizance of. The best I can do, the mind reaches back to a certain period; beyond all is blank and dark.

Now, if there was no relation between me and this thing or soul, before I was born, what relation will there be after I am dead? That part of eternity which passed away before my birth to me was all a blank. Will not that part which follows my death be a blank also?

If during my unconscious state my head had been cut off, when would this thing, or soul, or immortal part, hav waked up, and become conscious so as to continue the identity of and represent John Peck? To me there is but one rational conclusion, and that is that if my head had been cut off, that unconscious state would hav been eternal.

Without the brain we can neither see, hear, smell, taste, or feel. And when from any cause the brain becomes paralyzed so that it cannot perform its functions, the eye cannot see, the ear cannot hear, neither can the nose smell, the palate taste, or the body feel. And this is an unconscious state.

Now how can a man hav any sense of a soul, or immortal part, when the brain, the source of all sense, goes to "rot?" When the brain ceases to act, there is no sense of time, space, light, or heat, or anything else. The millions of years which will pass away after our death will be the same to us as the millions of years before we were born. There is an eternal blank each side of this life. So I hav reasoned. If I am in error, I ask to hav the error pointed out.

Naples, N. Y. JOHN PECK.

Foolish Preaching.

In the various towns visited, I attend church services, chiefly to listen to the music seldom heard in Liberal meetings. The church appears to hav a monopoly of music.

Incidentally I listen to the sermon, and wonder that sermons hav not long ago palled upon the people. What is it that induces people to part with their money for such performances? There are few churches even in the smallest villages which do not cost the overtaxed people a thousand dollars a year, including the preacher's salary. What do they get for it?

I heard a Methodist preacher at Clarksville, Iowa, relate a story of how an idiot converted an Infidel banker to Christianity, by accosting the banker with "Why don't you love Jesus?" By the idiot's repeated inquiry whenever he met the Infidel, the latter was at last seized with convulsions—excuse me—conviction, and seriously asked himself, why don't I love Jesus? The result was, he became a worker for Christ. Some idiots regularly ordained do not hav that poor fellow's success.

In a revival in the Congregational church in New Hampton, Ia., the "evangelist" made a fling at the good time, ornamented with a little merriment on the part of my audiences, which we had at our anti-divine services. "Ah," said he, "Infidels may laugh at these things; but I want to tell them that he laughs best who laughs last. God will laugh at their calamity."

The reverend said this as if he was full of joy. The ease with which he demolished our Infidelity commands our unfeigned admiration. Here is the way he did it: "A man expects to reach heaven by his I's. 'I will do the best I can and know how, and I know I shall come out all right.' Four I's and no Jesus. Now, I hav a better religion than that."

If thirty states of this Union would devote as much each to sustain Freethought literature and lectures as the smallest Christian sect in a small village does to uphold such foolishness, we would sweep the country with mental freedom.

I hav just come from the sanctuary across the road in Fredericksburg, Ia., in company with Brother H. B. Carpenter. The Lord's servant remarked, "It is not necessary to criticise the pastor in his remarks. The devil is always on the alert. The very worst people in the community will tell you what is right and wrong, and they will come to us and say, 'We do not believe in conducting meetings on this line.' Some of the best members of the church do not agree with these methods." One recently said, "I can easily refute all the evidences of Christianity; but when I see the revival, and how the intemperate are reformed, there is something in this that I cannot understand. Skepticism in the church, as well as out of the church, is overcome by revivals."

These gems of wisdom were by the Methodist parson, who receives a better salary than the average school-teacher.

In Charles City, Ia., the Advocate announced, "The subject of Elder Mueller's discourse next Sunday evening will be on the objections of Infidelity to the Christian religion." As this reverend heard my lecture on "Objections to Freethought Refuted," he doubtless will giv a common-sense discourse—in the quotations. W. F. JAMIESON.

Osceola, Neb.

Is An Infinit Being Conceivable to Man?

Why should man attempt an intelligent conception of an infinit being? Strange as it may seem, every Thanksgiving proclamation, prayer, or invocation, however impossible, is an effort in that direction. A being independent of conditions, sustaining no perceivable relationship to, and having no aspirations in common with, man—under what possible obligation can man be to him? How can man be under obligations to a being of whom he can form no rational conception? If a being is independent of and above conditions, will it not follow as a logical sequence that he must be without organs either mental or physical? The functions of those organs implying conditions subject to the laws of necessity, can it be logically assumed that a being may be hampered by the laws of necessity and still be infinit? Would he not be amenable to those laws, and, therefore, not infinit? A finite being possesses certain organs and attributes because it is absolutely necessary he should hav them for purposes of self-preservation. Nature having been so economical in her distribution of them in animal structures that they barely hav enough to conserve a limited existence. She has even been so niggardly in her dispensation that some of the most essential contributions to a successful existence hav been ignored. And, worse still, man can actually improve upon the organs nature has so grudgingly given us. Yet man has no organ or faculty unessential to him in his struggle for existence, each and every one having been developed through a long and tedious pressure of necessity—a law to which he is inexorably bound.

Now, what can we say of an infinit being? Is he in possession of organs and attributes? Were they developed through the laws of necessity? Are they indispensable to him? Why should he hav them? Even admitting that he is without body or parts, which I suppose means that he is without physical development, a condition which I presume would come under the law of necessity, the question will follow that notwithstanding the absence of the physical organs of sense, is he in possession of the inherent property or quality of those organs as they exist in finite beings? In other words, does he hear, see, etc.? If so, why? Is it a necessity that he should hear to know? This would imply a necessity, and he at once becomes a next-door neighbor by coming down to the level of the finite. He is now within the realm of conditions, and amenable to the laws of necessity. His knowledge is made to depend upon the laws of sound. But were it demonstrable that he is not amenable to the laws of sound, the question still remains, Why does he hear at all? why does he see, etc.? Must he hav even immaterial properties or inherent qualities that he may realize, may know? Going a step farther may we not reasonably inquire, Why should he even know? Must he hav knowledge upon which to predicate an action? It follows that even in this there is the implication of a necessity incompatible with any rational idea of an infinit being. When contemplating an infinit being how are we to know which would take precedence, knowledge or action? However, in either alternativ, the necessity of the antecedent will be implied.

The question seems to resolve itself into about this: A being endowed with attributes, qualities, etc., is a creature of conditions, and under and amenable to the laws of necessity, and, therefore, cannot be infinit. Then, if without physical development, also without inherent qualities, no knowledge, and without action, in what does he consist? I presume it not necessary that the forces of nature should hear, see, think, know, etc., and thereby be placed in the awkward position of having these perplexing superfluities to account for. THOMAS BURK.

Bozeman, Mont., Nov. 25, 1889.

THE writers of the Middle Ages are full of accounts of nunneries that were like brothels. . . . The inveterate prevalence of incest among the clergy rendered it necessary again and again to issue the most stringent enactments that priests should not be permitted to liv with their mothers or sisters. . . . An Italian bishop of the tenth century epigrammatically described the morals of his time, when he declared, that if he were to enforce the canons against unchaste people administering ecclesiastical rites, no one would be left in the church except the boys.—Lecky.

TAUGHT that education for her was indelicate, and irreligious, she has been kept in such gross ignorance as to fall a prey to superstition, and to glory in her own degradation. . . . Such was the prejudice against a liberal education for woman, that the first public examination of a girl in geometry (1829) created as bitter a storm of ridicule as has since assailed women who hav entered the law, the pulpit, or the medical profession.—Matilda Joslyn Gage.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - DECEMBER 21, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

A GOOD many of our delinquent subscribers seem to think that when we asked them for what is due us we were joking, and did not really want the money. Let us assure them that that beseeching call for funds is the most serious paragraph which ever appeared in print. THE TRUTH SEEKER has no other source of revenue than its subscription list and book sales, and when its readers do not pay their subscriptions we cannot pay the bills incurred in furnishing them the paper. The money is needed, is needed sorely, and is needed now. We hope we shall not be obliged to say this again.

IN THE

Truth Seeker Annual for 1890

WILL BE FOUND AN ARTICLE BY

E. M. MACDONALD,

WHICH HE CALLS,

IN SEARCH OF A SPIRIT

Being an account of what he saw and heard and read when attempting to obtain "independent slate-writing" from the other world, in company with our well-known Spiritualist contributor Mr. McArthur, and also at his expense. Proofs of the article were sent to Mr. McArthur and he promptly replies that he shall come to New York and see the writer, who will probably be out at that time.

In renewing your subscription to The Truth Seeker inclose 25 cents and the Annual will be forwarded as soon as issued.

IN selecting Christmas and New Year's presents our readers should remember that books are very useful and appropriate gifts. We hav some on hand which, in their fine bindings, will make very beautiful and valuable gifts. Mr. Bennett's Around the World, four volumes in morocco covers, with gilt edges, is a very handsome set of works, at $10.50. Colonel Ingersoll's Lectures in one volume, half calf binding, at $5, is a volume to be proud of, and his Prose Poems—$2.50 in cloth, $4.50 in half calf, $5 in half morocco, and $7.50 in Turkey morocco—is just the book for this season. Paine's Complete Works, for $3 in cloth, $4 in leather, tinted edges, and $4.50 in morocco and gilt edges, is another beautiful and valuable present to make. Still other books, with fine binding, are Mr. Bennett's Ancient Gods and Religions, two volumes, at $5 in cloth, $7.50 in leather, and $8.50 in morocco; Supernatural Religion, in cloth $4, leather $5, morocco $5.50; Champions of the Church, cloth $3, leather $4, morocco $4.50; World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers, at the same prices as Champions; The Story Hour, by Miss Wixon, at $1; Mrs. Slenker's Little Lessons, at 40 cents (these last two for the children); Miss Wixon's All in a Lifetime, $1.50; Apples of Gold, $1.25; Martyrdom of Man, $1.75; Men, Women, and Gods, by Helen Gardener, $1; F. M. Holland's Reign of the Stoics, $1.25; Bible Myths, $2.50, and many more equally good books, the names and prices of which may be found in our advertising columns. Orders filled promptly.

The Sabbath Union and the Sunday War.

The American Sabbath Union held in this city last week its first anniversary meeting. Elliott Fast-in-the-Faith Shepard, as the Sun ironically calls him, is the president, and Wilbur F. Crafts the secretary of the Union. Congressman Nelson Dingley, of Maine, and Senator Hawley, of Connecticut, the fellow who kept the Philadelphia Centennial closed on Sundays, are also among the officers.

The meeting was devoted to abusing the world for not observing Sunday, and to concocting schemes to enforce such observance. The president offered some resolutions to the effect that the day of the inauguration of the president of the United States should be upon the first Wednesday of March, instead of upon the fourth day of that month. The reason for the change, as set forth in the resolutions, is that it would do away with the desecration of the Sabbath by enabling persons east of the Mississippi, and those living even farther away, to leave their homes on Monday, attend the inauguration ceremonies, and return home by Saturday of the same week. This, says the resolution, would prevent their "dishonoring the Lord's day for the purpose of honoring the president of the country." The resolutions were passed after the Rev. Dr. T. A. Fernley, of Philadelphia, had denounced the scenes attending the last inauguration as "a disgrace to civilization, and a carnival of debauchery, licentiousness, and disgraceful conduct." Field Secretary Crafts said he thought the union should take official cognizance of the fact that one baseball organization refuses to play on the Sabbath. "The other two principal baseball associations," he said, "were simply organized bands of criminals, who go about the country breaking the Sunday laws and getting well paid for it. They are simply outdoor actors in an outdoor theater, and, like all other theaters, their place of amusement should be closed on Sunday." A resolution was passed commending the League. Another resolution, and perhaps the most hypocritical of any, was this:

"Resolved, That the American Sabbath Union heartily indorse the policy of the Fifth Avenue Transportation Company of New York city in not running their stages on the Sabbath, an example in the great metropolis of our country of proper reverence for sacred time, and of what may be done to diminish unnecessary labor."

The union did not resolve anything about the stages that Shepard's company run in Central park on Sunday, which is the most profitable of all the days of the week; nor did the Philadelphia clergyman and Mr. Crafts afterward apologize for their dishonest and shameful description of those who took part in Harrison's inauguration and of the baseball men who play games on Sunday.

The most important statement made at this anniversary meeting was one by Mr. Crafts, who said that he thought the present Congress would pass a law compelling Sunday observance in the District of Columbia. President Harrison and Postmaster-General Wanamaker were in favor of it, and it would hav an able advocate in Congressman W. C. P. Breckinridge, who would be the sponsor for the measure in the House.

This is a matter in which the whole nation is interested, as well as the inhabitants of the District. The District of Columbia belongs to the whole people; it is United States soil and is governed by Congress. Everybody is interested in that spot, for we all own it, and when the Christians convert it into a little theocracy every citizen's rights are invaded. President Harrison, Holy John, and Mr. Crafts ought to meet with some vigorous opposition to their scheme.

The Sunday observance agitation has also received a humble contribution from the ministers of Xenia, Ohio. These devout men desire the people of that town—so a public address to the "Dear Brethren and sisters" states—to stop desecrating the blessed Sabbath by refraining from burying the dead on that day, going to the post-office, reading secular papers, compelling servants to do household work, and traveling on Sunday, especially by railroad. These clergymen, of course, hav no scruples against laboring themselvs on Sunday, nor against the people traveling to church; but everything which does not bring grist to their mill is, in their minds, wicked. In their address they say also that there is a divine law forbidding labor on Sunday. We would like to know if there is one of the twelve clergymen who signed the address who thinks he can prove the assertion? If so, we offer him space in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and we will also find some one to show him how awfully mistaken he is.

All over the Christian world, it seems, this question of Sunday observance is being pressed at the present time by the fanatics of the Christian church. They held a Sunday observance congress in Paris last summer; in England, the church is laboring to hold its monopoly of the day, and in this country every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER knows how zealously the Sabbatarians are seeking to force their religious day upon all the people. And now from Australia comes the news that the Sabbath supporters are at the front in the government. In the Melbourne Liberator is an account of a meeting called to help retake Sunday for the use of the people, at which Joseph Symes spoke, and in the same paper he details the subservience of the government and business men to the church. There is not a case, he says, "in which train extension crops up in Victoria, but what fanatical Sabbatarianism is to the front to prevent desecration of the Lord's day! This insane cry is raised with all the innocence and fury of a Middle Age cry of heresy, or a Puritan scream of witchcraft. In Melbourne the railway rulers make fish of one suburb and fowl of another, they run a train to one township but positivly refuse it to another four miles farther on; and all in obedience to the Sabbath superstition. There is nothing else. Government officials are afraid of the fanatics, are held in terror by the parsons. The opening of the library, art gallery, and museum on Sundays is prevented by the same fanaticism. A member of Parliament hardly dares to open his mouth on the subject for fear of Sabbatarians. The same class of people are incessantly clamoring to hav the Bible and religious instruction taught at the expense of the state, and the Catholics are clamoring for a separate grant for teaching their infernal nonsense. Not long since, in Sydney, a Sunday newspaper was practically outlawed even by the supreme court, which decided that advertisers in such a journal could not be compelled to pay their debts to the proprietor! And why? Merely because priestly law prevails or is supposed to prevail in the colonies—ay, and to an extent unknown in the old country! I suppose this must be a remnant of the old convict sentiment. And now the government, or the attorney-general, has brought in a bill to prevent Sunday newspapers being circulated, and inflicting the most atrocious penalties, £5, £10, £100, seizure of plant on the authority of two justices; and giving any pious brute the right to set the law in motion!"

These are strong but wholesome words. And what is true in Australia is practically true in England and the United States. Many railroads are run by the Sabbath fanatics, and these fellows are endeavoring to still further dominate the actions of railroad men. Most of our museums and art galleries are closed by the influence of the same fanaticism. The clamorers for the Bible in the schools are with us, and hav succeeded in thousands upon thousands of schools. We hav the Catholics asking for the division of the school money. We hav Sunday laws in almost all the states, which if enforced would prevent Sunday newspapers, and we hav the fanatics striving to enforce them; and we see the pitiable spectacle of alleged statesmen helping them, while other alleged statesmen dare not oppose them for fear of the church vote. In addition, we hav a Presbyterian elder for president, a Presbyterian Sunday-school teacher for postmaster-general, shutting up post-offices on Sunday, holding mails from Saturday night to Monday morning to prevent desecration of the Lord's day! and both of these officers are willing to use their individual influence and official power to force still more stringent Sunday laws upon the territories and District which the United States govern entirely. To use a homely but very forcible expression, the church has already jumped on the people with both feet, and she is now preparing to tread around and make the situation still more uncomfortable for the prostrate burden-bearer.

If our liberties are not to be all taken from us, somebody has got to make some effort to prevent it.

Get Rid of Ecclesiastics.

A Catholic journal publishes an account of the whipping and maltreatment of Roman Catholics in Russia to compel them to apply for membership in the orthodox or Greek Catholic church, which is the established church of the empire, and a part of the government. This the journal rightfully calls persecution, and protests against.

But this protest would carry greater weight as a matter of principle if it were accompanied by a small expression of regret that the Roman Catholic church herself has been the worst of persecutors, and whipping and maltreatment the slightest of her punishments. Death by torture in every conceivable form has been the portion she has given to dissenters from her dogmas, by adjudging them heretics and passing them over to the civil arm of government—an arm very firmly attached to her own body.

Greek Catholicism in Russia to-day is what Roman Catholicism once was to western Europe; what Episcopalianism once was to England; and what Puritanism once was to New England. Every religious sect has persecuted to the extent that it had the power, and will do so again when it can. In Catholic countries, persecution of Protestants and Infidels is still carried on; and in the Southern portion of our own country Protestants are persecuting the members of a weaker sect who will not keep their own "holy" day. Indeed, right here in New York, only two weeks ago, six men were arrested for laying a cellar wall on Sunday, and innumerable Jews hav been dragged to jail in our city for working on the first day of the week. These are all persecutions of religions by religions. And the Jews, in the ancient days, were not a whit behind the modern offshoots of their brutal theology. They and their God were as zealous in persecution as the Roman Catholics, before their race became the football of fate, the pariahs and Ishmaels of all Christendom.

This persecution by all the religious sects basing their faith on the Bible, teaches plainer than words the stupendous folly of allowing priests to govern people. Put a beggar on horseback and he will ride to the devil, it is said. But put a priest in power, and he will fall to persecuting much faster than ever beggar rode. The Roman Catholics of Russia are getting but a very mild dose of their own medicin—a medicin they are still administering to Protestants in Spain, and which Protestants are forcing upon the heretical sects of their own church. Of course, the Greek Catholic church is a beastly organization, and its priests, from the czar up to the meanest parish drudge, are brutes, but the conduct complained of is only one of many proofs that man will never enjoy liberty until he gets rid of ecclesiastics.

The Pictures.

The vote on the pictures is going to reach high up in number, but so far the chief orator of the occasion, Mr. Cash, has shown himself but infrequently. The advocates of illustration should remember that the only reason why this question is raised is that the pictures add a good many hundreds of dollars per year to the expenses of the paper. With another five hundred subscribers this can be borne; without them, it cannot.

The most encouraging letter received during the past week is from F. O. Hellstrom, Bond, Kansas. Mr. Hellstrom sends five new subscribers, and renewals for himself and another, and says:

"I hope that every subscriber will appoint himself a committee of one to obtain other subscribers. I am satisfied that the result would be a thousand new subscribers within thirty days. We cannot do without the pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER."

Mr. J. A. Walthall, of Paris, Ill., thinks the pictures attract more than they repel; but Mr. Walthall did not inclose the money for a new subscriber. Mr. B. Greenwood, of Chattanooga, Tenn., sends two subscriptions, with two solid votes for the pictures. Mr. Moffatt, of Orillia, Can., will forward one or two within a few days. Mel Pierce, New Hartford, Iowa, desires the pictures, but forgot to get the necessary new subscriber. Mr. A. Beamer writes:

"COLVILLE, KY., Dec. 8, 1889.

"MR. EDITOR: I am not willing for the pictures to stop for the want of financial aid. I propose to the subscribers of THE TRUTH SEEKER that I will be one of one thousand or fifteen hundred subscribers who will pay fifty cents in addition to our regular subscription to hav the pictures continued. I don't want to see Liberalism take any back steps. We ought not to allow ourselvs to slip back the thousandth part of an inch. Let us hold all we hav and gain all we can. Let Onward march be our watchword and guiding star. So speak out, friends, and say what you will do and don't wait for somebody else to speak. Speak yourself, and say at once if you are willing to pay fifty cents a year to hav the pictures continued. And in addition to this let every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER do his level best to increase the circulation of the paper, and perhaps by another year an additional subscription will be unnecessary.

"Yours for progress and Freethought, A. BEAMER."

Mr. R. A. Smiley, of Austin, Tex., takes a gloomy view of the matter. He says:

"I am no prophet, nor a son of a prophet, but I predict this: That nine-tenths of those who subscribed for the paper with the cartoons, will not renew if the pictures are taken out. Who would not rather study the lesson contained in a cartoon, than read Berylson's egoism? No genuin Liberal wants the cartoons withdrawn."

Thomas Knight, Ceresco, Mich., is equally convinced of the value of the pictures. They are, he says, "Just bully. You can't put anything in their place that will amount to shucks compared to them, and don't you forget it." Friend Knight also forgot the new subscriber. Mr. Ernst Platz would put the pictures in a supplement, though individually he indorses them; but he did not send any new subscriber to help pay for that supplement. Richard Conway, Carroll, Iowa, thinks the pictures are worth almost as much as the paper, and is willing to pay an extra dollar a year to hav them continued. Robert C. Adams, president of the Canadian Secular Union, votes to continue the first-page pictures and discontinue the last-page ones. James Foster, also of Canada, regards the pictures as "very effectiv in the battle against the monstrous fraud," but there seem to be no possible new subscribers either in his town or Mr. Adams's city. The following letter is from a friend who givs Mr. Parton a dig in the ribs:

"WESTFIELD, N. J., Dec. 11, 1889.

"DEAR SIR: I notice in THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 7th a letter from James Parton, wherein he expresses his dislike of the illustrations published in the paper. I cannot follow the example of Mr. Parton as to sending a check for past dues, because I believe my accounts with THE TRUTH SEEKER are square. But I will do something to show that your labors are appreciated, and therefore inclose herein six dollars; three dollars to pay for my renewal for 1890, and three dollars to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER to be sent to some worthy person you may know who is unable to pay for it. Also find twenty-five cents for the ANNUAL.

"My observations may not be as extensiv as Mr. Parton's, yet I travel a great many thousand miles each year, and so far as I am a judge the pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER are a decided success, and are what is first examined and discussed upon the receipt of the paper each week. And I know of a number of people who were first induced to read THE TRUTH SEEKER through the influence of the pictures. Keep the pictures, by all means, say I.

"Very truly yours, M. L. NICHOLS."

And here is another aimed at the Newburyport philosopher:

"DAYTON, O., Dec. 10, 1889.

"EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: Inclosed find note for subscription for one year. You ask the opinions of subscribers as to the propriety of continuing the illustrations. Mr. James Parton has replied, in about as terse terms as need be, for Mr. Parton.

"There are those of our fellow-mortals, however, that are just as anxious to arrive at the truth, who may require a different line of argument, a different analysis or illustration. Just how far the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER should cater to this class should be decided by the circumstances known to the Editor himself.

"Whether it is better to use direct rather than indirect means to bring mankind out of the slough of Christianity, is a debatable question. The question may well be asked: 'Had man ought to be a Christian' or had he ought to be a man? J. S. BRADLEY."

There is no danger that Mr. Parton will be offended by these frank expressions. If Liberalism could thereby be substantially advanced, he would be willing, we know, to submit to innumerable thrusts.

We hav received a great many more votes, some accompanied, and some unaccompanied by cash. They will be found in the "Letters from Friends" next week. In the mean time, let us hav more, but please remember that a favorable vote supported by a new subscriber counts many more than one without such favor.

The Methodist Chuckle.

Writing upon the result of the trial of Lum Smith for libeling Anthony Comstock, Jim Buckley, chief grinder of the Fifth avenue Methodist organ, says:

"Ever since Anthony Comstock began his career we hav done what we could personally and in this paper to hold up his hands. He has had enemies without number. In 1877 an attempt was made by the Freethinkers to secure the repeal of the act of Congress under which the mails are protected from the infamous creatures who would use them to corrupt the youth of the land. Then another organization was formed for the same purpose, whose mouthpiece was D. M. Bennett, whose conviction and imprisonment for blasphemy and obscenity Mr. Comstock had secured."

If James has stopped a moment to think about this matter, it should hav occurred to him to ask why Comstock has made so many enemies? And if he were honest with himself, the answer would hav been at once forthcoming, Because he has abused the power given him by law. The case of D. M. Bennett is perhaps the most flagrant of all Comstock's many misdoings, and it alone has made him enemies who will be sincerely glad when his labors in this world are over. No one with his vicious instincts can be found to succeed him. And while he and his enemies liv, they will never cease to oppose his nefarious schemes.

D. M. Bennett never sold an obscene book in his life; obscenity was only the excuse to punish him for blasphemy, and this Buckley practically admits in the paragraph quoted. Comstock, in this persecution, was the tool of the Christian church, and the Christian church is morally responsible for the infamous wrong done Mr. Bennett. The Methodists may chuckle all they please over the imprisonment of that blasphemer; one of these days they will feel as the pope does over the burning of Bruno, and as ashamed of it as a Bostonian now does over the imprisonment of Abner Kneeland. It was an outrageous crime, and the man who can glory in it and uphold the tool through whom it was accomplished is not a fit representativ of any decent society—not even of a Methodist church.

Colonel Ingersoll's Views Unchanged.

We print elsewhere (page 804) the full text of the letter written by Colonel Ingersoll to Mr. E. R. Johnes and printed in Mr. Johnes's pamphlet on "Immortality." This is the letter which some sensational newspaper correspondent has made the basis for the assertion that Colonel Ingersoll is "backing down in the rigor of his skepticism."

The assertion is absurd and is made purely as a sensation for the newspapers. There is no evidence to support it. Colonel Ingersoll has never at any time in any of his speeches or writings denied the possibility of a future life. But there was no basis of fact for the story the Spiritualists used to tell about his silent adherence to their views, and there is no proof in this letter that he now believes in either God or a future life. He simply doesn't know and says so; he admits a possibility which none can logically deny, any more than they can deny that Jupiter is inhabited by ten-headed men. There is no evidence on the subject pro or con.

This letter to Mr. Johnes was written last June. Since then Colonel Ingersoll has written several articles, and if there is any backing down in the vigor of his skepticism it has not been found and mentioned by any of his readers. His latest is, Why Am I An Agnostic? and in that he speaks with no uncertain sound. His reasoning all through is that of the Atheist, though he calls it Agnostic.

Some months ago the same rumor was traveling through the press—with the addition that the "backing down" was induced by sickness. The colonel's attention was called to the matter and he said: "I see no particular difference in myself except this: that my hatred of superstition becomes a little more and more intense; on the other hand, I see more clearly that all superstitions were naturally produced, and I am now satisfied that every man does as he must, including priests and editors of religious papers." Undoubtedly, that would still be his answer to these assertions that he is "backing down;" and it would also probably be his comment on the sensation-monger who sent the report out as well as upon religious editors.

THE Plaindealer at Hastings, Mich., is not a very large journal, but the editor has a big heart. He advertises: "We desire that the New York TRUTH SEEKER should be well circulated here, and to that end we will send it, direct from its office of publication, and the Plaindealer, both postpaid by mail, each week for one year, for $3, the regular price of THE TRUTH SEEKER alone. Those who hav already paid their subscription to the Plaindealer can hav THE TRUTH SEEKER by paying us the difference between that sum and $3." His readers should all take advantage of his generous offer.

W. F. JAMIESON has gone to Nebraska, where he will giv lectures, and additional lectures later in Iowa. Address, Osceola, Neb.

Letters from Friends.

OCALA, FLA., Dec. 7, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I see in your paper of November 30th a call for more subscribers to keep the pictures going. I like that feature of the paper, and think it should be supported, and will aid what I can. Send me some back numbers, and I will try and get a few subscribers for you. If you charge for them, state how much, or if you desire postage remitted, I will remit it. Yours truly, G. B. TYLER.

QUINCY, ILL., Dec. 6, 289.

MR. EDITOR: You will please send me the copy of your paper under date November 16th, also your ALMANAC for 290. My family and I enjoyed the pictures in one ALMANAC, especially, "Where was Moses when the light went out?" My daughter has had many a hearty laugh over that piece of artistic work. I would also say that "The voice in the garden of Eden" speaks more than words.

Yours truly, JOHN L. MOORE.

ALLEGHENY, PA., Dec. 3, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Apropos of an article on "Giordano Bruno's Martyrdom," in last week s paper, the gist of which is that he was burnt on Thursday, Feb. 17, 1600, I hav an "Excelsior Perpetual Almanac" which says that the 17th day of February, 1600, was Sunday. The Thursdays of that month were the 7th, 14th, 21st, and 28th. It would hardly seem probable that the "church" would select Sunday as the day for work of that horrible sort, even lusting for blood as she then did.

Can you not throw some light on this subject?

Yours, W. E. BROWN.

JARBOESVILLE, MD., Nov. 20, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: By accident I saw one of the copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Please send a sample copy. I hav been seeking this Methodist church religion for over fifty years, from childhood. I hav seen many converted, and hav been a true seeker. I think it strange not to feel this forgivness of sins. They tell me to believe, hav faith. I do use all my energies to hav faith, but cannot feel the forgivness of my sins. I hav no evidence of it. I want evidence of it. This faith is beyond my conception. They then tell me I am lost, yet none can tell me that their religion is in the heart. None can tell me anything but faith—believe—which is beyond my comprehension. I want the evidence of it. If it does not forgiv wrongdoing, it may satisfy many weak minds. A good, honest heart, a conscientious mind, is true religion. The one who has this will not rob his Christian neighbor, but will help him. The influence, faith, by which one is raised will follow him through life, often against his better judgment.

This was a slaveholding county, and the children of those slaveholders inherit the principle of their ancestry. Only think—this beautiful, soft, alluvial, natural, underdrained, peach, wheat, corn, and grazing land, only seventy miles from Baltimore, is yet unknown, though thousands can get homes for a trifle, say $5 and upward per acre. Those religious, slaveholding fanatics are the cause. The oyster grows in four months fit for table use, and all other luxuries are in abundance, but all is spoiled by those church people who worked and reared the slave at the cost of his dinner and no coat.

I am a Freethinker, and cannot part with good judgment, or believe earth-born Adam was placed in the garden of Eden and tempted to eat the apple. One church person said, "We don't understand it, but believe it." God tempted him to eat for the sake of having him to punish—what folly! Mind is limited in many things, but honest judgment is what we want. We need facts, not faith.

Yours very truly, GEORGE W. FISH.

MONTE VISTA, COL., Dec. 4, E.M. 289.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of the 30th ult. you giv a paragraph from the St. Louis Republic concerning the Japanese hell. If the Japanese and Chinese religions are the same, I rather think the Republic has obtained its information from some Christian pagan who does not care to part with his consolation. In Monte Vista livs an oriental whose name is Sam Lee. He is well educated, reads English, has made several trips across the Pacific, and is very intelligent and social. He tells me that in China they hav no rewards, no punishments, no immortality. He further says that if a person livs a virtuous, honest life, his corpse will be hauled through the most honorable gates, and buried in a nice place, while a bad-lived person gets the opposit. He says they go to the joss-house to pray for good luck, and to wish for it does just as well. But, continues he, "I don't say that any consequences come from such actions, any more than from the hocus-pocus held by the gambler over his cards." He says they think that by the power of evolution the good and noble Confucius may hav attained to immortality, and exerts a powerful influence over the living for good. However, he says, they are by no means certain of his influence, save the lasting memory of the actions, and noble precepts, and sublime and faultless philosophy and morals given by that great man. In the latter sense, we certainly feel the immortality of Confucius, as we do of our own beloved Ingersoll. I hav had many interviews with Mr. Lee concerning this oriental religion, and I am greatly surprised how such matters are misrepresented. One more incident which he relates I will giv, and I am done. A certain Christian missionary, by the liberality and civility of these humane pagans, was allowed to build a church in one of their cities. He conducted a Sunday-school for young girls and succeeded in drugging those girls with love powders. One girl on which this did not take effect gave him away. His church was justly torn down, and he was compelled to leave the place.

These are a few of the things which Mr. Lee tells me, and I think it time for carpet-baggers to stop telling their dupes that all nations and tribes believe in a hereafter.

JOHN TRUEBLOOD.

KEYTESVILLE, MO., Nov. 16, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: During the Dark Ages of antiquity the doctrin of eternal damnation was the faith of those whose ignorance God is said to hav winked at. It was then the populace of the inhabited world were destitute of the necessary astronomical apparatuses and chemical conveniences to aid them in the great solution of the problems then concealed in the dark domains of nature. It was not until the sixteenth century that the people began to read and think for themselvs, when the walls of superstition and ignorance began to crumble and melt into a state of utter confusion before the batteries of truth and science.

If there be a God, the creator of the heavens and the earth, and he was pleased with his handiwork when creation was completed, why was it necessary to institute a plan by which that handiwork was to be made better?

Not long since we heard a so-called distinguished clergyman, in attempting to illustrate the proneness of man to cleave to the evil practices that demoralize his being, state that in ancient times it was the custom of the Romans to bind their prisoners to dead human bodies as a means of persecution to those who were regarded treacherous to their law, and in many instances they would express a likeness and love for their putrefied and decomposed companion. By this he attempted to prove that man would cleave to all of the corruptible tendencies of his nature denominated in the scriptures as the body of sin and death. Can it be possible that intelligent men can be so blinded with metaphors and figures so unnatural, as to think that man, created in the image of God, could be so debased as to cleave to such unnatural things with such tenacity?

Through the process of time, by the ingenuity of man, judging the future by the past, man, by his own peculiar penetration of thought and skill—man alone will reveal the hidden secrets in the unexplored realms of science and art.

What has become of the doctrin of eternal damnation among our theologians? Where are the realms once believed to be above and below? From whence come the uprisings of Freethought? We answer, from candid, honest, and thinking minds who walk not after the flesh but after demonstrated facts.

I am a new subscriber, but a lover of truth, and am highly pleased with my paper, that finds me every week waiting its arrival. Very respectfully, T. J. SHANDS.

ONONDAGA HILL, N. Y., Dec. 1, 289.

MR. EDITOR: There are many problems in nature that appear to be of easy solution, yet which are, in reality, extremely difficult. The answers which suggest themselvs to some of these problems appear to be self-evident, but these apparent answers, in reality, may be extremely incomplete or absolutely false. Without doubt many men hav seemed to see, while awake and apparently in their right mind, the form of one that has been dead. At once they solve the problem to their own satisfaction by calling it a living spirit. To consider such a conclusion scientific is simply a piracy upon the word science.

I will here giv a few mathematical examples that many people unskilled in mathematics would judge to be of easy solution, yet the fact is that no one but a skilled mathematician can solve them completely and correctly:

1. Find the primary value of the logarithm of the square root of minus one.

2. Let i represent the square root of minus one, what then will be the i'th root of i?

3. Find the sixth roots of one.

4. Find the fourth roots of minus one.

5. Find the cube roots of the square root of minus one.

6. Show how zero raised to the zero'th power may be equal to one.

7. Show how infinity divided by infinity, or zero divided by zero, may equal a finite number.

All around us there are people pretending to investigate a science called Spiritual by scientific methods and "tests."

When in the year 1842 Dr. Mayer introduced into science the expression, "Mechanical equivalent of heat," and gave thereupon a method by which it could be calculated mathematically, he suggested that great truth that embraces the whole of physical science, namely, the correlation and conservation of forces. Anyone who comprehends this law ought to see that creation, annihilation, and force or life apart from matter, are as impossible as perpetual motion confined to a machine of fixed form. The immortality craze is only the perpetual motion lunacy in a different dress. When absurdity is very absurd, people accept it without question. After a young man gets out of school or college he reads plenty of plain print, yet the men are rare that investigate science at her very fountains. They read the rehash reduced and simplified, for they do not like to do hard head-work. How many men in this country keep up with the latest developments of mathematics? How many ever review their Euclids or algebras, to say nothing of higher branches? Yet it is higher mathematics to-day that is developing science and perfecting invention. In our public schools children are actually overtasked in the elementary branches of real science; when out of school and men grown they read to be entertained, and never get far beyond the scientific pap of childhood days, and in many cases this is too diluted to even keep the facts of their school physiologies and philosophies fresh in their recollection.

If men do not do thinking, they will be slaves, and if they are willing to let every scientific book that requires deep thinking remain unopened, they may dream that they are scientific by viewing science at a distance and watching a few other men work; but their dreams are the dreams of sluggards, and the less hard head-work they do the tighter the bonds of slavery will fix themselvs upon the race, while the moss of superstition gathers upon their intellects.

CHAS. E. BOYNTON, B.S., M.D.

ROCHESTER, MINN., Nov. 25, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: It seems impossible that W. E. Reid can be convicted of unlawful use of the mails in sending purported messages from spirit friends. No doubt he can bring evidence that the greater number who received them were fully satisfied as to their genuinness. But the Bible, in which are purported messages from spirits and even God himself, is sent through the mails on the double-quick, and by the thousands. Is the "peace and dignity" of the United States disturbed over it? No, but it ought to be, and had it been, there would never be occasion for the Reid trial, as we could hav read our titles clear.

Spiritualism needs no masks, but it needs and must hav mediums who can demonstrate the fact of immortality to "bloody Christians" and "don't-know" Agnostics. Shall we kill off, legally, all mediums, because, perchance, they love money more than honesty? Were that the case, even Mr. Vincent could not escape, for he claims to get messages from his decarnated wife—but still persecutes Reid. How is that?

Spiritualism is a demonstrable fact, or it is nothing. Then why accept all its enemies say of it, and never honestly and thoroughly investigate for ourselvs? Yes, why? When one of the oldest reform journals will close its columns to a worthy woman contributor of thirty-two years' standing, simply for opinion's sake, I begin to lose all hope that investigators will multiply fast enough to save the "peace and dignity and respectability" of our much-boasted free America. I trust THE TRUTH SEEKER will not follow suit.

I heartily indorse your persistent exposures of Catholicism. In some of our country schools here the catechism is required to be taught, by order of a Catholic board. It might not be lawful, but it is done.

Philadelphia, the City of Brotherly Love and "Cradle of Liberty," closed out its stock in trade on November 11th, by refusing the use of Odd Fellows' Hall for an address upon "The Crime of the Eleventh of November," by Hugh O. Pentecost. Free speech had no rights, while three hundred police were round about. However, Mr. Pentecost gave the same address in your city. And a meeting was held at Cooper Union to commemorate the Chicago Anarchists' ignoble fate, and the police were forbidden to interfere. Query: Which city has the bigger "cradle" now?

Sister women, let us all aid Lucifer. Send for a remonstrance and petition, get signers, and send to Judge Foster, and let him know that we are beginning to preëmpt our inalienable rights of ownership over our bodies and souls, and we hav a hankering for more knowledge and freedom.

Success be yours. FLORA W. FOX.

PURDY'S STATION, N. Y., Dec. 1, 289.

MR. EDITOR: In my letter to Miss Helen H. Gardener I used the following language: "It is impossible to read it ['The Lady of the Club'] without dropping a tear of pity for the poor woman who died of the brutality and selfishness of man—and poverty with love," the words "the brutality and selfishness of man" being a quotation from "The Lady of the Club." This led Mr. Tuttle to think that I associate selfishness with inhumanity, which is not the case. I hav only quoted the words of Miss Gardener, but made no remarks on them whatever. It is not necessary for me at present to say anything on this subject, as it has been discussed at length in an article printed in THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 30th. The next thing Mr. Tuttle tells me is that the question, "How to do away with poverty?" is incorrect. What, then, is the question? Certainly Mr. Tuttle does not mean to say that there is no such thing as poverty in the world. Perhaps my question was not complete. It should read: How to do away with the poverty, or how to increase the wealth, of one class of people? Some reformers tell us that in order to accomplish this it is necessary to decrease the wealth of another class. Of course, I did not propound this question in mockery. Jokes are out of place in this case. If I hav not suggested any remedy, it was because I hav not found one which would be satisfactory, at least, to myself. If I ever find one, I shall not hesitate to express my views.

The discussion on the question of divorce is continued in the December number of the North American Review. I hav read carefully the opinions of the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, and came to the conclusion that his answers to the questions propounded by the editor of the North American Review are wrongly labeled, "An Anglican Statesman's View." They should be called the views of an Anglican theologian. I don't mean to deny that Mr. Gladstone is a great statesman, but in my opinion his views on the divorce question are not a statesman's, but a theologian's. A statesman is supposed to hav some views of his own. But Mr. Gladstone does not favor us with his own opinions. He shakes hands with Cardinal Gibbons, he reaffirms his views—that is to say, the views of the Catholic church—and in support of these views he quotes scripture. He informs us that divorce is wrong and can be granted only in one case, and even then neither of the divorced parties should be allowed to marry again, and his main reason is because a certain writer of the Bible said so. One would think that the leader of the Liberal political party of England ought to know that the dust of the past ages cannot control the present. Why a certain thing should be good or bad because the Bible is for or against it, is a matter which I cannot understand. I don't believe that Mr. Gladstone would hav justified murder and theft had the Bible been in favor of them. Why, then, should he use the Bible as an authority in discussing the question of divorce? Why should he bend his knee to the barbarism of the past? Divorce may be right or wrong. It is a question upon the solution of which people disagree. I am satisfied that divorce is right. But whether right or wrong, it is so from a modern standpoint of view, but not because some ancient writer who lived sixteen or seventeen centuries ago commended or denounced it.

CLEMENS P. BERYLSON.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec. 4, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The proposition that antagonism is the universal cause and law of motion, is based on the self-evident fact that there can be no motion without antagonism. Motion per se is antagonistic. Hence, all formations are necessarily effected by the antagonistic properties of vitalized matter; and ponderosity, though necessarily an inherent property of matter, is incidentally brought out by the compound formations of matter, and makes centripetal motion and planetary formation an absolute necessity. Those who advocate the attraction theory of gravitation admit that centripetal pressure is ponderosity, but assume that it is caused by attraction. That is the rock upon which we split, and upon which their theory is wrecked and lost. For if attraction is the cause of ponderosity, it should logically follow that the weight of ponderous matter should decrease in the ratio of atmospheric pressure as it recedes from the center or sea level, and advocates of attraction assert that it does. Nevertheless, the motion of every balloon that has yet ascended demonstrates that it does not. Unless the centrifugal force of expanded matter in the balloon is greater than the centripetal pressure of the ponderous matter attached to it, the balloon cannot rise at all; therefore, if the balloon is inflated so that it can rise to any distance, and the weight of ponderable matter attached to it decreases in the ratio of atmospheric pressure, there should be the same difference between the centrifugal force of expanded matter in the balloon, and the centripetal pressure of ponderous matter attached to it, that there was at the start, until the weight of the ponderous matter is reduced to naught and the limit of atmospheric pressure is reached, from whence the balloon should never return or proceed farther. For the centrifugal force of the expanded matter being caused by atmospheric pressure, it should necessarily decrease in the ratio of atmospheric pressure and be reduced to naught when the limit of atmospheric pressure is reached. But a balloon invariably reaches a point of equilibrium before it has proceeded to one-fourth of that altitude, and will not rise farther unless a portion of its ponderous matter is detached, which should obviously not be necessary if its weight decreases in the ratio of atmospheric pressure on being elevated above sea-level. Hence, the attraction theory of gravitation is demonstrated by the logic of positivly known facts to be false.

If the advocates of attraction are not satisfied with the above demonstration, they may build a tower seven miles in hight, and adjust a scale-beam across the top of the tower and attach a rope to one end of the beam that will extend to sea-level and be strong enough to sustain its own and twenty-five pounds additional weight, and balance the rope with a corresponding weight attached to the other end of the beam. For the purpose of illustration, I will suppose that atmosphere loses one-half its pressure at that altitude. Therefore they should attach twenty-five pounds to the lower end of the rope, and place a body of ponderous matter upon the other end of the beam that will weigh fifty pounds, at sea-level. If the twenty-five pounds causes the fifty pounds to "kick the beam," their theory will be demonstrated correct. But if the fifty pounds elevates the other end of the beam to the sharpest rectangle that the obstructions will admit, as it obviously will do, their theory will be demonstrated false. Therefore they should build a vault into the base of their tower to receive the remains of their theory; and should inscribe in large letters upon a tablet over the entrance, "Sacred to the memory of attraction of gravitation, of whom nothing remains but the memory." They should afford to place a statue of attraction upon the top of their tower. It will cost nothing, for nothing will be required.

J. A. TUTTLE.

DETROIT, MICH., Dec. 4, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: There seems to be serious discord among the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, if not others, concerning the things done at the Secular Congress in Philadelphia, yet not one of the fault-finders has anything better to offer. Not one of them has as yet found what the real evil is that must be destroyed. Each has a sore spot to heal, but none of them realize that religious people are all of them seeking to reform some evil which, to them, is as great and important as are any or all of the demands of the Secularists. Lucy N. Colman seems to be wakening in the path of freedom from slavery after sleeping in the belief for thirty years that she had helped to wipe slavery off the face of this country—a false and silly belief. Our brother Burnham also is thoroughly aroused over the truckling actions of the Union. Yet Brother Burnham has nothing to offer that can be more effectiv. Mr. D. C. Wisman speaks the truth, and is the only one to see it, so far as the best methods for the success of the best interest of Liberalism. It is some years now since I said the same in THE TRUTH SEEKER, as Mr. Wisman says in the last issue—only by political actions will the demands of Liberals ever be gained. Mr. Wisman makes one simple but serious mistake in saying that our forefathers fought for freedom. This has been stated so often in the past history that it still helps to delude Liberals and all others. Our forefathers fought against the right of the government to tax the people, and the question has never been settled. The time has come now to settle that question (the most important question on the earth to this day) in the negativ. Upon this depend all of the demands of every reform movement in the world to-day, as they always hav done in the past history.

The whole trouble, and it is fatal, is, that Liberals, in common with all Christians, believed that they lived in a free country and are already free. If this is true, what nonsense it is to labor for the Nine Demands, the very substance of which must be already enjoyed by everyone! Here is the lame pedestal which, with all that Secularism demands resting upon it, is always tottering and ready to fall. All talk about Universal Mental Liberty, free speech, free press, free land, free love, and forty-eleven other expressions about people's false ideas of freedom, are common among all classes of people in this land of falsehood and hypocrisy.

The manifest uneasiness and dissatisfaction that has, from time to time, been published by the ever fair and open TRUTH SEEKER, ought to awaken truth seekers to the fact that they hav not yet learned the ultimate truth of Liberalism. The first and most important truth to be accepted and believed is, that the liberty for which the patriots fought in the first war with Great Britain has never been received or accepted by the people of this country. We are still living in the same state of slavery that the rebellion against Great Britain found our ancestors; buried under the same forms of taxation against which they rebelled; intensified by the accumulated power of over one hundred years of a false constitution and a false government that has increased the burdens of debt and taxation a thousand fold. The Secular Union has been following an ignis fatuus just like the various labor organizations all over the country and all over the earth; never searching back and down to get at and remove the first and real cause, but digging and scratching at some little sore spot on the surface. They only serve to help each other to make the whole matter worse. Taxation and want (or deprivation) of money in circulation has always been, is now, and always will be until abolished, the cause of all evil. Taxation, interest, and all money-lending must be forever abolished. The Liberals must awake to the fact that the cause of labor is one with the cause of liberty, and that Liberalism means liberty, nothing less. There can never come a more propitious opportunity for the cause of liberty than the present. The laborers' unions and Farmers' Alliance are both very strong, numbering at least four or five millions of voters. They each hav published a creed of what they desire, and, like the Nine Demands, having no purpose that can appeal to reason for support, and giving no tangible means to obtain their wishes. They need some one to put the truth before them, and show them the path to universal liberty and lead them to adopt it. Let Liberals drop their present form of work and adopt and publish to the world the following: "We, the people of the United States, demand of our senators and representativs in Congress that all taxation shall cease, and that an amendment to the Constitution shall be presented to the people for their votes, prohibiting Congress from laying any taxes for any purpose whatsoever. And we demand that Congress shall, in place of all taxes, issue and pay to the people a full legal tender greenback money for all debts, dues, and expenses within the United States, and that said money shall be, at all times and places, receivable for all debts and dues public and private, and shall be the only lawful money (gold and silver excepted) that shall be recognized, licensed, or authorized by Congress, and Congress shall, at all times, provide that a sufficient amount of money shall be issued and in circulation to prevent the least necessity of credit or debt, or the possibility of any person being obliged to borrow money upon credit. And we warn our senators and representativs that we will hold them strictly and immediately accountable for the prompt and full accomplishment and fulfillment of these demands."

I fully and plainly agree with our friends, Dr. Severance and Mr. Burnham, that the bars are let down for our enemies to enter and destroy the Union if they see them. It would be just as sensible to put fire and water together as Christianity and Liberalism. Christianity has destroyed everything else on earth that it has taken hold of, and will do the same in future. Masonry, Oddfellowship, and every other secret beneficial association that were instituted to get out of the clutches of superstition and tyranny, hav each been overcome and their truth and beauty destroyed by the spying traitor Christians that hav entered their circle only to destroy them. They will do the same for every other project that they can get into. The Liberals are wasting their time and opportunities. They must join with the whole people, and make common cause in the demand for freedom from a common fate. There is no other path worth a fig. There is not a single leader of any party, or of any reform movement, past or present, that scarcely pretends to giv any sure knowledge of what is the cause of the evils that people complain of, or of the remedy that will remove the evils, and yet I assert that the true cause is as plain as any piece of common history, and the remedy is also simple and as sure as the changes of the season. Will the truth seekers listen to the truth and accept the position? J. H. WOOD.

ONONDAGA HILL, N. Y., Nov. 27, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: In reply to the letter of A. Allen Noe in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Nov. 23, 289, I would first reply to the question, "Do you know of a single person who had accepted Spiritualism and became insane on account of becoming a Spiritualist?" Answer.—As to the word Spiritualist, what does it mean? The word has been applied to the theories of Berkeley and Fichte, which held everything real to be immaterial or spirit. This form of spiritualism has had few advocates and, furthermore, has never been proved or disproved.

Now, if anyone purporting to be a spiritualist admits that some real things are material, he inevitably makes himself inconsistent if he does not admit that all real things are material. If he acknowledges the fact that all real things are material, he admits that nothing is immaterial, consequently nothing is spiritual, and finally he cannot be a spiritualist.

There are, we all admit, a class of Antichristians, Liberals, Rationalists, etc., that claim that the universe contains immaterial or spiritual agents as well as material.

If a man possesses the mental attributes that enable him to stand out against the most popular superstition of his age and nation, he is mentally, in many respects, superior to the average of mankind.

The superstition of Antichristian Spiritualists is by no means as gross as that of Protestant or Catholic Christians, therefore, assuming that religious enthusiasm may be a cause of insanity, we may safely conclude that Antichristian Spiritualism is less liable to cause insanity than is Christian spiritualism. As my own limited observation of insanity could be no criterion whereby to make a scientific comparison between the number of insane Antichristian Spiritualists, and the insane of other isms, I will not, at present, attempt such a task, neither would I affirm that no Spiritualist, or no Materialist, for that matter, has ever become insane. If Mr. Noe thinks that in Spiritualism he has a prophylactic against insanity, as his question implies, he should stop and think that his Spiritualism is, in part, an anti-spiritualism, for he has thrown away the evangelical part; perhaps his prophylactic would work better still if the other part was thrown away also.

Suppose I could collect several hundred cases of Spiritualists that hav become insane, what would it prove? No advantage at all to the view of Spiritualism that I take.

My aim was in my first letter, and my previous letter in reply to Brother Noe, not to prove that any one form of spiritualism, like the variety that Mr. Noe defends, is more productiv of mental aberration or insanity. I merely claimed that any enthusiasm tending to bring about the subjectiv action of nerve matter is detrimental to the organism.

The question as to the sensations experienced by the Spiritualist being subjectiv or objectiv, is the real question at issue between us.

In speaking of certain excitants of subjectiv sensations, narcotics, etc., I was much surprised to note that Mr. Noe made a personal application of my words, for I certainly hav too much respect for THE TRUTH SEEKER to wish to make it a medium for insulting personalities toward its readers.

The greatest errors into which mankind has fallen hav resulted from the unqualified acceptance of the dictum of the senses.

Science goes deeper than the superficial images of things upon the retina, or the records of touch and hearing.

> Bare observation plays a second role
> To algebra in all philosophy;
> The savage sees and swears upon his soul
> It is the sky that moves aronnd, not he.

No man has a right to say that he has investigated a question scientifically when he has only observed and not formulated.

Mr. Noe wanted scientific answers to his questions. I tried to oblige him. He may call them gas, and, doubtless, if I had sent him the algebraic and geometric interpretation of my words, he would hav called that gas also.

I wish some Spiritualist would explain how it is possible for a part of a man to liv after he is dead. Every function of that complex organism called man has a particular mechanism of cells that, during their activ state, known as life, perform those functions. When the cells die the organism dies, and that is the end of the functions for that individual. Take away a few cells from an organ, and you take away a part of its function. Will the Spiritualist inform me if the immaterial soul, belonging to the subtracted cells, flutters round loose waiting for the rest of the man to die so that the spirit or soul can be complete in the spirit world?

Suppose a plug of clotted blood shuts up a small artery in the brain, and the portion of the brain to which the artery belongs dies, and the functions of the brain are crippled, is the spirit crippled also? If Spiritualism is true, it is very strange that the spirit in life is changed in character whenever the brain is changed in structure.

I am glad I am not a Spiritualist; and glad, also, that there is no life for me but this. The immortality hope and longing is, from its very nature, a mental narcotic—a mental poison. Life is too short for even our practical duties of this world, which consist in comprehending, not merely observing, the phenomena of the universe.

The man who uses formulas, with the scales and yardstick, comprehends phenomena. The savage looks; he sees; he does not weigh, measure, and formulate, he merely observes, and he calls the result of his observation knowledge. What does the Spiritualist do at the circle? He sees and hears, as any other hypnotized subject may, certain phenomena that hav either never occurred at all, or are simply conjured tricks performed, perhaps unconsciously, by the conjurer.

The subject of hypnotism has not yet been thoroughly investigated; yet, to say that there is an immaterial personage back of its phenomena, is like asserting that it takes a God to make grass grow, and to observe that a swallow falls properly according to the laws of gravitation.

Mr. Noe only exercised a war-dance around my answers to his questions. Parrot-like, he picked up my words, but ventured to make no analysis of the principles they represented. If, when he asked me what "energy expended" and "energy developed," had to do with Spiritualism, he meant to imply that they had nothing at all, in his judgment, to do with Spiritualism, then the energy of spirit-force being zero would make out spirits to be without force as well as without matter, or, in other words, nothing.

I would advise Mr. Noe to be cautious how he plays with the language of dynamics, or he may place himself in a rather ludicrous dilemma. CHAS. E. BOYNTON, B.S., M.D.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A December Blizzard.

The sky assumes a grayish hue:
A cold northwestern wind prevails;
All nature's robed in winter's garb,
Yet fiercer blow the piercing gales.

The trees are tipped with sparkling frost;
Beneath the ice the brooklet flows;
The ground is frozen, yet the air
Still heavier and still colder grows.

A sheet of snow enshrouds it all.
It makes a scene sublimely grand,
Yet with it showing boldly forth,
Grim Peril takes his chosen stand.

Out in the storm a traveler tired
Faces the chilling, bitter storm,
Plodding his way to his distant home,
Hoping to find it safe and warm.

The crystal snowflakes fast descend,
To add more horror to the scene,
Yet to the weary traveler's joy
A distant light is plainly seen.

He pushes onward toward the light,
Facing the cold and cruel blast,
Though danger stands on every side
To crush the hopes that cannot last.

His hopes that all at home were safe
Were crushed on entering the door;
He found his dear ones stiff and cold
In death upon the cabin floor.

The lamp upon the mantel shelf
Was dimly burning o'er the scene,
And all was dreary—oh, how sad!—
For silence reigned o'er all supreme.

Before their cold, stiff forms he bent,
While from his eyes the teardrops start,
And there alone, o'erwhelmed with grief,
A father died of broken heart.

GEO. J. REMSBURG.

A Visit to Philadelphia.—Continued.

Of course we went to Fairmount park. This is the largest pleasure-ground in America, containing three thousand acres, and more than thirty miles of beautiful driveways. There is but one other park larger than this, and that is across the water.

We entered Fairmount at the Spring Garden entrance. The scenery here is very beautiful. The water-works that supply the city with the water used by the people, are located here, and the river goes dashing along, unmindful that it carries the germs of ill-health upon its sparkling surface. But it does all the same, as Bethia and I found out to our sorrow before we had been long in the Quaker city.

As we strolled along through the lovely park, a lad overtook us and joined our company. His name, he said, was Auguste Hugg, and he was errand-boy in a store. He had been given a couple of hours from work, and thought he would come to the park.

We inspected the fine group of statuary—the Tam O'Shanter scene—and watched the lively squirrels run in and out among the leaves over the rustic bridges and under the walls and rocky slopes. "Do you see the dam yonder?" said Auguste. "Lots of boys and men hav been drowned there. They go out in boats, and venture too near that dam. No use to warn them, they think they know better'n anybody."

So we chatted, and admired the way, every step. "The vine-covered boat-houses are pretty, ain't they?" and Auguste looked at them with his head on one side. "Aren't you glad you came in this way? It's fine," said Auguste. John Dolan, who married Alice, a pretty girl from Fall River, told us this was the best side to enter the park, "and you'll not mind the long walk," said he.

At the bridge, Auguste remarked that his time was up, and he would hav to leave. So we said good-bye and parted. Whether we shall ever meet that pleasant boy again, we know not. The chance is we shall not, but still we may.

The bridge is 1,000 feet long, and 100 feet wide. Its ultimate strength is 65,000 tons. It has 7 lines of trusses, 23 feet deep, and is 52 feet above water. It cost $1,486,000. You see it is quite a bridge. It commenced to drizzle and we had to put up our umbrellas. Bethia bought apples at the little stand just beyond the bridge, but, although red and pretty on the outside, they were not good for much. We went into the queer little brick cottage just across the way.

They said Wm. Penn once lived in it. "No such thing," said the chatty man who now occupies the building. "I'll tell you," said he. "It was the first state house built in the province. It once stood on the governor's lot on Letitia street, and was removed here in 1883." Horace Wemyss Smith, that is the gentleman who gave us a lot of information about almost everything. He seemed like an animated encyclopedia. After bringing us a drink of water from the well close by, which was refreshing, as Bethia said, after so much of the "Schuylkill punch," as they called it, we examined the old-fashioned piano and made it yield a tune as sweetly as one of Chickering's grand instruments. Mr. Smith then invited us into his sky-parlor, where he does much literary work, and is authority to historians and journalists everywhere. The walls of his den are covered with packages and envelopes of literary matter. It was pleasant to meet a man who had seen and talked with Tom Moore, as has Mr. Smith. Mrs. Smith is a pleasant and engaging lady, and we were loth to leave the cosy home, and the feast of literature up above.

We wandered along past the children's play-ground until we were likely to get lost, and made inquiries of a lady in a carriage as to our whereabouts. "Get in," she said, smilingly, "I'll take you as far as Horticultural Hall," stopping her horse. This kind lady, a stranger, was Mrs. Gillingham, connected with the state board of charities, and she had two children with her, a boy and a girl, from "the Home," that she was taking to ride.

In the Hall we felt we were in the tropics, surrounded as we were by tree ferns, palms, and many tropical plants. My mind flashed back to the great centennial exhibition. The locality all became familiar in an instant. Thirteen years ago we walked over the same ground. But now, we were as tired as we ever were in the centennial times, hungry, too, and were glad to take the first car to our hotel, without having seen more than a bit of the beautiful Fairmount park. S. H. W.

(CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.)

An Ant Lesson.

DEAR CHILDREN OF THE TRUTH SEEKER CORNER: I hav thought for a long time that I would like to address you a short letter. I am a great lover of children, and when they are good, kind, and patient I would prefer their company to that of the angels who, it is said, lodged with Lot. Now I want to tell you of something which I hav seen, but before I do that I want to tell you of a text or verse in the Bible. "Oh," you say, "Pa and ma don't want us to believe in that book." Did your pas and mas tell you that? I don't think there is any Liberal father or mother who ever told their children that there were no good things to be found in the Bible. The verse which I wish to refer to is found in the writings of Solomon, chapter vi, verse 6: "Go to the ant thou sluggard, consider her ways and be wise." Now, then, I'll tell you what I saw a few years ago while alone in the hills of east Kentucky. I was traveling a road that was not used a great deal, and to my surprise I saw a large gang of ants crossing the road before me. I suppose there must hav been thousands of them, because they covered the ground for a space something like a circle of fifteen feet. They were marching in an orderly way like an army. Of course the sight was out of the common to me, so I followed just a pace or two behind them to see, if possible, the object of their march. They did not go far till they came to a little stump which they surrounded in an orderly way. Then I saw the object of their march. When they went down into a little hole and began their work of robbery, out came another species of ants and went helter-skelter down the hill like an army routed. After the freebooters got what they went for, namely, the store of the other ants, they returned to their own home some distance away. Now, what has always puzzled me is this, how did they organize that army for the purpose of robbery if they did not hav a language to communicate thoughts with? Some one, or perhaps a dozen of their number, may hav discovered this weak colony of ants and communicated it to the others, whereupon they organized their whole forces and started on their march. Now, as they hav power to communicate thoughts to one another, the question arises, How far does that power extend? and how much of thought do they hav to communicate? Well, there was a great lesson in this little incident which I am relating to you; it shows to me the power of unity and organization. The human family is short of that power to a great extent—at least there are great divisions among us. But I hear you say, "Holy horror! you don't want us to do as the ants did, band ourselvs together for the purpose of despoiling others of our race?" Oh, no, dear children! but for the opposit—band yourselvs together in one bond of love and friendship, then you will be able to resist those who would despoil you or any of your number. What a great pity that the human family has not learned this lesson long ago! As the governments of mankind exist now, they are not superior to the ant families, which rob and prey upon each other—the stronger despoiling the weak. Hoping that each youthful reader will draw a good lesson out of that which I hav told you, I bid you good-bye. S. P. HERRON.

Newcomb, Tenn.

Correspondence.

WORCESTER, MASS., Dec. 8, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I do not see as many letters from the children lately as there used to be, and so I thought I would write again. Mr. J. P. Guild stopped with us over night last week.

There are two Salvation Armies here, and they come out every Sunday with drums and tambourines, singing as loud as they can, trying to see which can holla the loudest.

My little baby sister has just commenced to walk alone, and is very cunning; she is fifteen months old and has no name yet, and mamma says she wishes you would send a name for her. My papa said he saw you in Philadelphia. If you ever come to Worcester we would like to hav you come and see us. Your little friend,

MABEL M. CLARK.

[Fifteen months old and no name! We always admired the name of Frances Wright, and it belonged to a noble woman who was a true friend of humanity. But, if we cannot find a name for the baby, we shall hav to let her grow up and name herself. If ever we come to Worcester to stop long enough, we will not go away till we hav seen Mabel and the rest of the family, including the sweet little baby that hasn't any name.—ED. C. C.]

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25.

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 833pp., silk cloth, $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God.—[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Ingersoll and the Deist.

BY

A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."

Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

WHAT KIND OF A MAN CLARK BRADEN IS.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, 10 cents.

COMMON SENSE

GUIDE TO CORRECT ENGLISH.

By J. L. BARKER.

Price, 35 cents. Address this office.

INFLUENCE OF

CHRISTIANITY ON CIVILIZATION

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, 25 cents.

INGERSOLL IN CANADA.

Reply to Archbishop Lynch.

By A. PRINGLE.

Price, . . . 15 cents.

Civil Rights Speech

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

With Speech of HON. FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

Price, 10 cents.

Ingersoll Catechised.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS BY EDITOR OF San Franciscan.

Price, 3 cents; per doz., 30 cents.

LIMITATIONS OF TOLERATION.

Discussion between

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL, Hon. Frederic R. Coudert, and Ex-Gov. Stewart L. Woodford. Before the Nineteenth Century Club.

Price, . . 10 cents.

ORTHODOXY.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 cents; per dozen, one dollar.

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT.

By G. F. RINEHART.

25 cents.

LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT
OF

JEAN MESLIER.

Abstract of.

Paper, price, 25 cents.

LOVE VENTURES

Of TOM, DICK, AND HARRY.

A Novel With an Affidavit.

"And they were naked and not ashamed" (Gen. ii, 25).

16 full-page French Art Illustrations. Beautifully Illustrated Covers.

12mo, 226 pages, paper, 25 cents; boards, 50.

MANNA. Our Forefathers' Ideas of Hell. Price, 5 cents.

MARIA MONK.

CONVENT MYSTERIES.

MONKS and THEIR MAIDENS.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

Modern Thinker, No. 2.

The Most Advanced Speculations in Philosophy, Science, Sociology, and Religion.

160pp., pap., 50 cents.

MOTHER of HARLOTS.

POPERY DISSECTED.

By WM. HOGAN (25 years a confessing priest).

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

NEW ENGLAND

AND THE PEOPLE UP THERE.

A HUMOROUS LECTURE.

By Geo. E. Macdonald.

Price, . . . 10 cents.

NIBBLE AT JOHN FISKE'S CRUMB FOR THE MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

Price, 10 cents.

ORIGIN OF

THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE

By O. B. WHITFORD.

Price, 25 cents.

The OUTCAST. Freethought Story.

By WINWOOD READE.

25 cents.

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY.

By F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.

Pap., 25c.

RIGHTS OF MAN.

By THOMAS PAINE.

Answer to Burke's Attack on the French Revolution.

Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE THE POLITICAL and RELIGIOUS REFORMER.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, ... 10 cents,

For all of the above books address

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 558 West Madison st., Room 1, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.
Horace Haynes, Leslie.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 359 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 723 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 331 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.
C. Stocker, 29 Vauxhall Road, Liverpool.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

The Individualist.
A LIBERAL AND REFORM JOURNAL, ADVOCATING SOCIAL REGENERATION AND INDUSTRIAL EMANCIPATION.
Devoted to the rational exposition of the philosophy of Freedom, mental, moral, and physical; social, industrial, and sexual. Commands the pens of the best writers in America on these subjects. Sixteen pages. $2 per year. Trial subscription three months, 50 cents. Each yearly subscriber will receive a copy of Mr. Stuart's book, "Natural Rights, Natural Liberty, and Natural Law." Address F. Q. STUART, Editor and Proprietor, 1653 Blake street, Denver, Col.

THIRD EDITION.
BIBLE MYTHS,
AND THEIR PARALLELS IN OTHER RELIGIONS:
BEING A
Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity,
CONSIDERING ALSO THEIR ORIGIN AND MEANING.
WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.

[Heathen Illustration of the Temptation.]

The Bundehesh (a sacred book of the Persians,) states that Ahuramazda after creating the first man and woman, Mashya and Mashyana, bade them "to be humble of heart; to observe the law; to be pure in their thoughts, pure in their speech, pure in their actions." But an evil demon came to them in the form of a Serpent, sent by Ahriman, the prince of devils, and gave them fruit of a wonderful tree, which imparted immortality. Evil inclinations then entered their hearts, and all their moral excellence was destroyed. Consequently they fell, and forfeited the eternal happiness for which they were destined. They killed beasts, and clothed themselves in their skins.

BIBLE MYTHS shows this to be the origin of the Hebrew story.

1 Vol. 8vo., cloth, about 600 Pages. Price, $2.50.

Sent post-paid by the TRUTH SEEKER.

GIRARD'S WILL
AND
Girard College Theology.
AN EXPOSÉ
Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.
By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.
Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE
MARTYRDOM OF MAN.
A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.
By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.
You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.
His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.
The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.
Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE
Cosmian Hymn Book,
A COLLECTION OF
Original and Selected Hymns
(Words and Music)
For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.
COMPILED BY
L. K. WASHBURN.
PRICE, . . . $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LOOKING BACKWARD
By Edward Bellamy,
Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.
The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.
A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.
12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

HOW TO Strengthen the Memory,
OR,
NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.
The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order.' Price by mail $1.

Parturition Without Pain.
By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.
Godey's Lady's Book says: "We giv our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY
AND HYGIENE, or, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN. Carefully revised edition, with 111 illustrations. The most perfect book for men and women ever published. 50,000 sold. Price $2, by mail. Illustrated catalog free.

Marriage and Parentage.
In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations and in Their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.
By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.
The Scientific American says: "This work is scientific, sober, clean, and worthy of conscientious consideration by every possible parent, and particularly by the young." $1.

EATING FOR STRENGTH;
OR,
FOOD AND DIET IN RELATION TO HEALTH AND WORK.
The New York Herald says: "Dr. Holbrook's book is among the very best of its kind."
The Home and Garden says: "A study of this book will enable any intelligent reader to make a choice of food which may save the cost of the book every day in providing for a family, besides increasing health, strength, and longevity." $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FAITH AND REASON.
A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.
With elaborate index.
By HALSEY R. STEVENS.
A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained in such compact form.—[Literary Review.
Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

ANTICHRIST.
PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

BLASPHEMY AND THE BIBLE.
By C. B. REYNOLDS.
Price, 5 cents.

The Agnostic Annual
FOR 1890.
Edited by CHARLES WATTS.
CONTENTS.
Agnosticism and Immortality.....Samuel Laing.
A Sonnet.....Joseph Ellis.
Who Was Moses?..H. J. Hardwicke, M.D., F.R.C.S.
The Comfort of Agnosticism.....E. Lynn Linton.
Are Miracles Credible?...Constance C. W. Naden.
The Contest Between Agnosticism and Theology, John Wilson, M.A.
Above: A Poem.....W. Stewart Ross.
The Evolution of the Agnostic Idea, R. Bithell, B.Sc., Ph.D.
The New Fatalism.....B. Russell.
Descartes's Proof of the Existence of a God, F. J. Gould.
A Poem.....W. B. McTaggart.
The Free Expression of Opinions..G. F. Underhill.
Fragments.....William Maccall.
Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

TRY-SQUARE;
OR,
The Church of Practical Religion.
BY REPORTER.
This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.
For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

ICHABOD CRANE PAPERS.
Daringly witty and inexpressibly laughable onslaughts on Christianity.
Price, 10 cents.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.
It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Sixteen pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $2. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:
PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, 3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only 1.50.
SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Tronblesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.
SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.
HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.
SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.
HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

DR. FELLOWS
STAR OF HOPE
Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N.J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.
VINELAND, N.J.
Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

The Liberty of Printing, and Reply.
By HURLBUT and WAKEMAN.
Price, 10 cents.

Poetry.

Man's Life.

A poem of the sixth century, found in an Irish manuscript, Trinity College, Dublin.

Like a damask rose you see,
Or like a blossom on a tree,
Or like the dainty flower in May,
Or like the morning to the day,
Or like the sun, or like the shade,
Or like the gourd which Jonah made,
Even such is man, whose thread is spun,
Drawn out, and out, and so is done.
The rose withers, the blossom blasteth,
The flower fades, the morning hasteth,
The sun sets, the shadow flies,
The gourd consumes, the man he dies.

Like the grass that's newly sprung,
Or like tale that's new begun,
Or like bird that's here to day,
Or like the pearled dew in May,
Or like an hour, or like a span,
Or like the singing of the swan,
Even such is man, who livs by breath,
Is here, now there, in life or death.
The grass withers, the tale is ended,
The bird is flown, the dew descended,
The hour is short, the span not long,
The swan's near death, man's life is done.

Like to the bubble in the brook,
Or in a glass most like a look,
Or like the shuttle in weaver's hand,
Or like the writing on the sand,
Or like a thought, or like a dream,
Or like the gliding of the stream,
Even such is man, who livs by breath,
Is here, now there, in life or death.
The bubble's out, the look forgot,
The shuttle's flung, the writing blot,
The thought is past, the dream is gone,
The waters glide, man's life is done.

Like an arrow from a bow,
Or like a swift course of water flow,
Or like the tide 'twixt flow and ebb,
Or like the spider's tender web,
Or like a race, or like a goal,
Or like the dealing of a dole,
Even such is man, whose brittle state
Is always subject unto fate.
The arrow shot, the flood soon spent,
The time no time, the web soon rent,
The race soon run, the goal soon won,
The dole soon dealt, man's life soon done.

Like the lightning from the sky,
Or like a post that quick doth hie,
Or like a quaver in a song,
Or like a journey three days long,
Or like snow when summer's come,
Or like a pear, or like a plum,
Even such is man, who heaps up sorrow,
Livs but this day, and dies to-morrow.
The lightning past, the post must go,
The song is short, the journey so,
The pear doth rot, the plum doth fall,
The snow dissolves, and so must all.

The Infidel's Catechism.

What is prayer?

Answer. A useless agitation of the air. A presumption of dictation to the almighty. An essay to influence the action of the vital force that pervades the universe.

What is a sermon?

Ans. A string of words hung together by grammatical hooks and eyes in such a manner as to express much feeling and no thought.

What is sanctification?

Ans. Affected holiness.

What is a doctrin?

Ans. A cud of mental food already chewed.

What are doctrins used for?

Ans. To stuff the people's heads with before they cut their mental molars.

What is a creed?

Ans. A clamp to put upon the brain to stop its development, and to limit its size.

Who made the creeds?

Ans. Victor, Constantine & Co., manufactured one which the Catholic clergymen wear. The Catholic clergy manufactured another one for the laymen to wear to prevent the laymen from ever becoming wise enough to criticise their priests.

When the Catholic church had the power the clamp was fastened upon the brain, in infancy, of all who were born within the dominion of the church, and if anyone's brain fractured the clamp, or if any tore the clamp off, he was killed. And where the church was extending her dominion by conquest, if anyone was found with a brain too large for the clamp he was killed.

Martin Luther's brain fractured the Catholic clamp, and he modified it so as to make it fit his own brain, and all of his disciples now wear it, so that none of them can become wise enough to criticise Luther.

John Calvin's brain fractured the Catholic clamp and he tore it off and manufactured a new one to fit his own brain, and put five sharp points in it to prick the brain when it grew large enough to press against the clamp. The Presbyterian church puts Calvin's clamp upon the brain of her members to prevent them from becoming wise enough to criticise John Calvin.

So each sect of Protestants has originated by some Christian's brain growing large enough and strong enough to fracture the clamp, when a larger clamp was made to fit his brain and he became the founder of a sect a little more enlightened than the one that he broke loose from.

At what stage of development is the clamp usually fixed upon the brain?

Ans. The Catholics, Methodists, and some other sects fix the clamp upon the brain in infancy, with the consent of the parents. The Baptists and some other sects wait until the brain is nearly large enough to fill their clamp, then they hav to resort to many expedients to get a chance to put the clamp on. They usually conceal the clamp and say nothing about it until they get the youths fast in the web of the church, then they snap the clamp upon their brains.

What is a sect?

Ans. A band of Christians wearing the same clamp on their brains.

What is a heretic?

Ans. One whose brain has fractured the clamp.

What is an Infidel?

Ans. One whose brain is too large for any sectarian clamp to hold it.

What is a Freethinker?

Ans. One who refuses to hav a clamp fastened upon his brain. P. F. SHUMAKER.

Obituary.

DIED.—Last Sunday morning, in this city, at the ripe age of sixty-six years, George Edmonds, a nativ of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. Edmonds was one of the most advanced Freethinkers in this section of the country, and was never afraid to giv his ideas on religion, no matter where or when the occasion was.

He was never so happy as when assisting some worthy person, and there are a number here who can testify to his charitableness.

To do good was his religion, and he lived fully up to it.

His death was painless, he passing away like a babe going to sleep in its mother's arms.

His funeral was very simple, his friends, after taking a last look at his well-loved face, following him to the grave, where he was laid to his eternal rest on the evening of Dec. 2, 1889.

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LIFE OF

Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND,
LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

A FEW WORDS
ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

MATERIALISM AND CRIME.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 5 cents.

AN OUTLINE OF THE

French Revolution

ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.
By W. S. BELL.
Paper, 12mo, 25 cents.

MORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

IMMORTALITY OF ITS ELEMENTS.
By A. S. de Pellegrini.
Paper, - - 15 cents.

PHILOSOPHY of SPIRITUALISM
AND TREATMENT OF MEDIOMANIA.
By F. R. Marvin, M.D.
Cloth, . . . 50 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY.

By VOLTAIRE.
Terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of theological terms.
Price, 25 cents.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY EXPOSED.
By REV. G. T. FOX, M.A.
15 cents.

PRO AND CON OF Supernatural Religion.
Have We a Supernatural, Inspired, Miraculous Religion?
By E. E. GUILD.
Paper, 20 cents; cloth, 30 cents.

PYRAMID OF GIZEH.
Ancient Egyptian Civilization and Hebrew Narrative in Genesis and Exodus.
By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D.
Price, 15 cents.

QUESTION SETTLED.
BIBLICAL and MODERN SPIRITUALISM.
By MOSES HULL.
Price, 60 cents.

Rational Communism.

THE PRESENT AND FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.
Advocates associate life and employment as a preventive of vice, crime, poverty, etc.
By A CAPITALIST.
Paper, 493pp., 50 cts.; clo., $1.

Relation of Witchcraft to Religion.
By A. C. LYALL.
Price, 10 cents.

Fruits of Philosophy.

POPULATION QUESTION.
By Dr. Knowlton. Edited by Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant.
25 cents.

TRUTH. A Poem. By E. N. Kingsley. 10 cents.

POVERTY: Its Cause and Cure.
How the Poor May Attain Comfort and Independence.
By M. G. H.
Price, . . 10 cents.

Religion of Inhumanity.

With a Glance at the Religion of Humanity.
BY FREDERIC HARRISON.
Price, 15 cents.

RELIGION:
The Gibraltar of the World, as Now Constituted.
By George T. Bondies.
With
Exceptions to the Character of Christ as a Gentleman.
By W. T. Purviance.
25 cents.

IMAGE BREAKER.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Six Lectures.
Decline of Faith.
Protestant Intolerance.
Washington an Unbeliever.
Jefferson an Unbeliever.
Paine and Wesley.
Christian Sabbath.
Each, 5 cents; bound, pap., 25 cents; per doz., 40.

SABBATH BREAKING.
By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Price, 25 cents.

St. Matthew Before the Court

FOR THE CRIME OF FORGERY.
By SECULARIST.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.
Including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, Bible.
By D. M. BENNETT.
(From Vol. II. "Gods and Religions.")
333pp., pap., 60 c.; clo., $1.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible.

144 MORAL, THEOLOGICAL, HISTORICAL, AND SPECULATIVE PROPOSITIONS.
Price, 15 cents.

SEPHER TOLDOTH JESHU.
Book of the Generation of Jesus. First Trans. from the Hebrew Original Story of Jesus.
Price, 15 cents.

SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER AND REFORMER.
By C. SOTHERAN.
Paper, 8vo, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY FOR CHRISTIANS.

A CARTOON
From The Truth Seeker, July 11, 1885.
17x24 in. 6 for 30c., 12 for 50c., 25 for $1, 100 for $3.

JOHN'S WAY. Radical Domestic Story. 15 cents. By Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

By MRS. E. D. SLENKER.
Boards, 40 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS

WITH THEOLOGICAL AMENDMENT AND STATE PERSONALITY.
By Joseph E. Peck.
Pap., 25c.

SPIRITUALISM

FROM A MATERIALISTIC STANDPOINT.
BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 10 cents.

Religion Not History.

Examination of the Morals and History of the New Testament.
By PROF. F. W. NEWMAN.
Price, 25 cents.

RELIGION of COMMON SENSE.
By Professor L. Uhlich.
Price, 35 cents.

PAINE VINDICATED.

Reply to N. Y. Observer.
By R. G. INGERSOLL.
With "ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD."
Price, 15 cents.

Scientific Materialism:

ITS MEANING and TENDENCY.
By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS.

(Bound.)
Vols. I, II, III, IV, V, 18mo, 525 pages in each vol.
Per vol, pap., 60c.

TWELVE TRACTS.

Bible Worship.
Darwinism.
Design Argument.
Evolution.
Jesus Not Perfect.
Underwood's Prayer.
By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
25 cents.

TWO HUNDRED POETICAL RIDDLES.
For the Instruction and Amusement of Youth.
By E. D. Blakeman.
25 cents.

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS.
A Story of the Rightway Almshouse. By Jennie Butler Browne. 5 cents.

UNDERWOOD-MARPLES DEBATE

ON THE EXISTENCE OF A PERSONAL GOD AND INSPIRATION OF SCRIPTURES.
Between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. J. Marples.
Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60.

VOLTAIRE IN EXILE.

Memoirs.
His Life and Works in France and Abroad.
And Unpublished Correspondence With Mme. du Chatelet.
By B. GASTINEAU.
Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

WAIFS AND WANDERINGS.
A Liberal Novel.
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.
Pap., 50c.; clo., $1.

BIBLE IDOLATRY.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.
Price, 3 cents; per dozen, 30 cents; per 100, $2.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE

Bible of Nature,

OR, THE

Principles of Secularism.

A CONTRIBUTION to the RELIGION of the FUTURE.

BY PROF. FELIX L. OSWALD,

Author of "The Secret of the East, or the Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline," "Physical Education, or the Health-Laws of Nature," "Household Remedies," "The Poison Problem, or the Cause and the Cure of Intemperance," etc., etc.

Felix L. Oswald is a well-known and vigorous writer on scientific and social subjects.—[Cin. Com. Gazette.

Cloth, 12mo, 240pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price, 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS OF

HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in the Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

POINTERS:

A POCKET CYCLOPEDIA,

CONTAINING

Tables, Rules, Practical Hints, and Historical Sketches, for Farmers, Mechanics, Machinists, Merchants, Housekeepers, and the Public Generally, with

Numerous Maps, Illustrations, and Diagrams

Illustrating some of the more Important Comparativ Statistics of the World.

More Information for Less Money than has ever been offered.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

For $50 worth of "Cold Facts" boiled down in a Nutshell. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Expos tion of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL.
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR HOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

AN HOUR WITH THE DEVIL.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Price, - - - 10 cents.

THE

UNIVERSE ANALYZED

By JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,

Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.

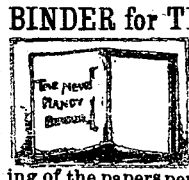
The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productiv of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,



OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.

Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Argument by R. G. Ingersoll

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

At Morristown, New Jersey.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES:

A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, - 25 cents.

Liberal Meetings.

These notices are for the benefit of Liberals who may be visiting the places where these societies are located. Local Secular Unions and Freethought Societies meeting regularly can hav their gatherings advertised here free by forwarding the necessary information.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

The Newark Liberal League

Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st., Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

Ingersoll Secular Society, Boston,

Meets every Sunday (from October to June) at 2:45 P.M., at Paine Memorial Building, Appleton street.

Chicago Secular Union

Meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday afternoon in the Hall of Cramer's Block South Howard street, at 3 o'clock.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; LEROY BERRIER, Sec.

Elizur Wright Secular Union

Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10:30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

Cleveland, O., Secular Union

meets every Sunday evening at 7:30, at room 29, City Hall, for lectures and free discussions on religious and social subjects. The public cordially invited.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club

Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

DIAMONDS.

Unprecedented offer. No other house so fair In order to giv my Liberal friends throughout the United States an opportunity to examin, test, and compare my goods and prices with those of other diamond merchants, I will sell any piece of Diamond Jewelry, accompanied by contract that cash in full will be refunded any time within one year from date of purchasing if goods are not entirely satisfactory. No other dealer will do it. None will sell as cheap. Carrying a large stock, being an expert, close buyer, and doing business on smallest possible expense, you will positivly save twenty to thirty per cent by purchasing of me. Diamond Pins and Eardrops, worth $600, for $400; Pins, Rings, Eardrops, Studs, Hair Ornaments, Pendants, worth $300, for $200; do., worth $200, for $140; do., worth $150, for $110; do., worth $100, for $70; do., worth $80, for $60; do., worth $60, for $45; do., worth $40. for $30; do., worth $30, for $22; do., worth $20, for $15. You can wear these goods daily for one year. It will not cost you a cent. If in the mean time you are not satisfied that the goods are better and cheaper than sold elsewhere return and get your cash in full.

Selections sent to responsible parties on approval; to any banking-house or C.O.D., privilege of examination.

The "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

sixteen jewels, finely adjusted to heat and cold, patent regulator, Breguet hair-spring, beautiful double-paneled dial, and all modern improvements Perfect, and no watch will compete with it! In silverine case, $19; in four-ounce coin silver case, $23.50; five-ounce, $25; six-ounce, $27. In open face, best filled gold case, $27; hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV., $35. In fourteen carat solid gold, $50 to $150. Sent prepaid, and cash refunded if not satisfactory.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.
Established 1857.

THE JEWS AND THEIR GOD.

"The Jews and their God stood on the lowest plane."

Price, 10 cents.

LITERATURE OF THE INSANE

By F. R. MARVIN.

Price, . . . 5 cents.

GODS AND RELIGIONS
ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.
Vol. I. Givs a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.
Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

News of the Week.

THE Pan-American congress proposes that all America adopt a common coin. In the construction of the contemplated railroad to and through South America, the most difficult tracts will be Ecusdor, Colombia, and parts of Peru.

ROBERT BROWNING, the poet, died on the 12th.

IN Morton county, Kan., 250 families hav had to hav supplies sent them to keep them from starving.

THE influenza that has passed from St. Petersburg through Europe is expected here. It is not dangerous.

ON the 11th at Johnstown, Pa., twelve were killed and thirty-five hurt in a causeless fire panic at a theater.

IN a quarrel between two Salvation Army men at Wilkesbarre, Pa., on the 12th, one killed the other with a poker.

AT Hackensack, N. J., on the 14th a coal train plunged into an open draw at Overpeek creek and three men were killed.

ANOTHER employee of an electric light company at New York was killed by a shock on the 14th. In obedience to public feeling, the wires are being taken down by the authorities, despite protests from the companies, and the city is in darkness except for the insufficient gas lights.

THE Second Baptist church, colored, of Long Branch, N. J., warns the public against its former pastor, George Washington Jones, who collects money for it and then keeps it.

IN the Cronin trial Burke, Coughlin, and O'Sullivan hav been found guilty of murder and will be imprisoned for life; Kunze receives three years for manslaughter. Beggs was discharged.

THE extent of the exodus from Canada into the United States is shown by the discovery at the late election in Rimouski county, Ottawa, that 350 heads of families hav emigrated to this country thence since 1886.

DOM PEDRO says he will return if asked. He says: "I do not think the Brazilian people hav reached that stage of civilization and political development which is necessary for the safe working of an absolutely free government." However, Liberal thinkers believe the republic stable. He refuses the large gratuity voted him and will accept only the sum allowed by law. It is rumored that Portugal will discountenance the revolution by dismissing the Brazilian minister there.

JEFFERSON DAVIS was buried at New Orleans on the 7th. There were present at the services 30,000 people, including the bishops of Louisiana and Mississippi, the governors of the Southern states, and the surviving Confederate generals. The procession was led by ten surpliced Episcopal clergymen, followed by clergy of all denominations. The religious services were of the Episcopal church, in which Mr. Davis had lived, and whose last offices he desired. In the address the bishop of Louisiana said: "This man, as a Christian and a churchman, was a lover of all high and righteous things." The funeral was a military one. The deceased wore gray. Among the floral offerings were the Confederate colors, and in the procession several Confederate banners were carried. But no houses bore other than the United States colors, and those was the prevailing ones everywhere. Soldiery of several states were in the procession. Grand Army men joined, but not as a body, and they wore veteran instead of G. A. R. badges. Negroes scrupulously refused to participate, and even to attend, very few being seen in the streets. In the Southern cities business was suspended, buildings were draped, bells tolled, guns fired, processions held, and orations made.

SAMSON ROBBETH A BUMBLE-BEE'S NEST.

And after a time he returned to take her, and he turned aside to see the carcass of the lion; and, behold, there was a swarm of bees and honey in the carcass of the lion. And he took thereof in his hands, and went on eating, and came to his father and mother, and he gave them, and they did eat: but he told not them that he had taken the honey out of the carcass of the lion.—Judges xiv, 8, 9.

Gems of Thought.

I REPEAT, without the slightest fear of refutation, that the four gospels, as they hav come to us, are the work of unknown writers.—Huxley.

THE New Testament is filled with contradictions. The gospels do not even agree upon the terms of salvation. They do not even agree as to the gospel of Christ, as to the mission of Christ. They do not tell the same story regarding the betrayal, the crucifixion, the resurrection, or the ascension of Christ. John is the only one that ever heard of being "born again." The evangelists do not giv the same account of the same miracles, and the miracles are not given in the same order. They do not agree even in the genealogy of Christ.—Ingersoll.

WHAT, in truth, are the conditions necessary to constitute a religion? There must be a creed, or conviction, claiming authority over the whole of human life; a belief, or set of beliefs, deliberately adopted, respecting human destiny and duty, to which the believer inwardly acknowledges that all his actions ought to be subordinate. Moreover, there must be a sentiment connected with this creed, or capable of being invoked by it, sufficiently powerful to giv it, in fact, the authority over human conduct to which it lays claim in theory. It is a great advantage (though not absolutely indispensable) that this sentiment should crystallize, as it were, round a concrete object; if possible, a really existing one, though, in all the more important cases, only ideally present. Such an object Theism and Christianity offer to the believer: but the condition may be fulfilled, if not in a manner strictly equivalent, by another object. It has been said that whoever believes in "the Infinit nature of Duty," even if he believes in nothing else, is religious. M. Comte believes in what is meant by the infinit nature of duty, but he refers the obligations of duty, as well as all sentiments of devotion, to a concrete object, at once ideal and real; the Human Race, conceived as a continuous whole, including the past, the present, and the future. This great collectiv existence, this "Grand Etre" [Grand Being], as he terms it, though the feelings it can excite are necessarily very different from those which direct themselvs toward an ideally perfect Being, has, as he forcibly urges, this advantage in respect to us, that it really needs our services, which Omnipotence cannot, in any genuin sense of the term, be supposed to do: and M. Comte says, that assuming the existence of a Supreme Providence (which he is as far from denying as from affirming) the best, and even the only, way in which we can rightly worship or serve Him, is by doing our utmost to love and serve that other Great Being, whose inferior Providence has bestowed on us all the benefits that we owe to the labors and virtues of former generations.—John Stuart Mill.

I BELIEVE in the religion of humanity. It is far better to love our fellow-men than to love God. We can help them. We cannot help him.—Ingersoll.

NATIONS, like individuals who hav long been enemies, without knowing each other, or knowing why, become better friends when they discover errors and impositions under which they had acted.—Paine.

To understand all is to pardon all.—Mme. de Stael.

EVERY system of religion the world has yet seen, recognizes faith as an indispensable duty; but to every system of science it is a hindrance, instead of a duty, inasmuch as it discourages those inquisitiv and innovating habits on which all intellectual progress depends.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

IT is wrong to believe on unworthy evidence.—Clifford.

THE repugnance of men to believe miraculous narrativs is in direct proportion to the progress of civilization and the diffusion of knowledge.—Lecky.

WE demand a new miracle, and we demand it now. Let the church furnish at least one, or forever after hold her peace.—Ingersoll.

MEN will always deceive themselvs while they abandon experience for systems hatched up by superstition. Man is the work of nature, he exists in nature, he is subject to its laws, he cannot free himself, he can never even rid himself of them in thought; vainly does his spirit seek to penetrate beyond the boundaries of the visible world; he must ever return to it.—D'Holbach.

A NEW world has been discovered by the microscope; everywhere has been found the infinit; in every direction man has investigated and explored, and nowhere, in earth or stars, has been found the footstep of any being superior to or independent of nature. Nowhere has been discovered the slightest evidence of any interference from without.—Ingersoll.

Odds and Ends.

COP: "I arrest you, Mister Abrams, on a charge of arson." Hibernian: "Ain't yer got a mishtake, mein frendt? My name vosn't Abrams; it's O'Duffy, unt I'm an Irisher. Don't you tell it from my oxcent?"—Life.

"ACCORDING to my father's rules, Mr. Chapkins, we always adjourn here at twelve. It is now one minute of." "Ah, indeed! Well, in accordance with legislativ custom, Miss Barrows, there being some unfinished business before the house, I will turn back the clock." Engagement announced next day.—Elmira Echoes.

MR. BATCHELDER: "I am twenty-six now, Miss Van Wrinkle, and unless some girl smiles on me soon I fear I am doomed to celibacy." Miss Van Wrinkle: "Never mind, Mr. Batchelder, I hav a pretty little sister who will be making her debut soon. I'd like to hav you in the family, you know, so you must wait for her." Mr. Batchelder: "If it's a family affair, my dear Miss Van Wrinkle, wouldn't it be just as well for you to wait for me?"—Life.

DINER: "You hav waited upon me very acceptably and I hav enjoyed my meal thoroughly. You hav behaved like a gentleman, and a gentleman you certainly are, notwithstanding your humble occupation." Waiter: "I hope, sir, that I am a gentleman. I always try to be one." Diner: "It is as I suspected. And, being a gentleman, I shall not insult you by offering you money. Perhaps at some time I may be able to reciprocate your courtesy. Till then, farewell."—Boston Transcript.

FIRST young lady: "Did you hear about Maude? Wasn't it too bad?" Second young lady: "No! What? Where? Do tell me. I'm just dying to know." First young lady: "Why, you know she was going to be married next month, and had her trousseau half done, when her dressmaker, the only one in town who can giv her a good fit, had to go and die. Wasn't it provoking? Maude nearly cried her eyes out." Second ditto: "The horrible old thing! Poor Maude! How I feel for her!"—Utica Critic.

JUDGE BLUECLAY: "Sheriff, convene the co't. Where is the jury?" Sheriff: "Back in the jail yard, your honah. We happened to get three Frenches and a couple of Eversoles on it, an' they're fightin' it out, if it please the co't." Judge: "Where is the prisoner in this horse-stealing case?" Sheriff: "The Barnard boys got him out last evenin' while I was at supper and hanged him." Judge: "Strike off the case, Mr. Clerk. Are the parties to the Salt Lick road case ready to proceed?" Sheriff: "It was settled early this morning; they're gittin' the defendant ready for burial now." Judge: "Well, then, if the district attorney is ready, we will proceed with the State vs. Hiram Garrard." Sheriff: "If it please the co't, the district attorney is not ready. Garrard's counsel carved him with a bowie-knife right after breakfast." Judge (wearily): "Adjourn the co't."—Brooklyn Eagle.

DURING the recent Paris Exposition there was a little railroad, five miles in length, running around the grounds. The track ran in and out among the trees and buildings, and so near them that a passenger's head or arm thrust out of window was in danger of being knocked off. To prevent accidents of this sort, warnings were printed on large posters and tacked up at intervals of a few yards along the entire track. They were printed in almost every known language, including Asiatic and African tongues, shorthand and Volapuk. But there was one omission, and a very important one. Not a single word of warning was printed in German! Some one said to the manager of the road: "It looks as though you didn't care whether the Germans got their heads and arms knocked off or not." He smiled a quiet smile and replied, "It does look that way, sure enough."

A FISH, A PROPHET, AND A GOD.

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,"
Who will not weep when he has read
How Jonah from his God had fled,

How Jonah strove to get away,
How Jonah's God would hav him stay,
How with a fish God barr'd his way?

"O fish!" cried God, "hold Jonah down,
The indolent, disobedient clown,
And bring him back, not far from town."

So back he comes; oh, sad to see!
A sicker fish there could not be,
I wot none ever swam the sea.

"Thou fish," roared God, "heave Jonah out!"
"I must," quoth fish, "beyond a doubt;"
Where'pon the whale began to spout.

"Aha," quoth God, "you're back, I see;
Now skin out straight for Nineveh;
And don't run off and go to sea.

"You lazy, worthless, roving clown,
Cry out like mad through all the town
That you and God will burn it down.

"Sure pop, old man, now git, I say;
You surely ought to find the way;
So don't you dare to go astray."

So Jonah got, as git he must,
God scarce could see him for the dust;
He sped as though his gall he'd bust.

And Jonah cried his false alarm,
Not doubting God would make it warm
For Nineveh in a fiery storm.

He bawled, he yelled, his Thus God saith;
He raved and stormed till out of breath,
And scared some Ninnies half to death.

"Yet forty days," great Jonah cries,
"We'll bake you up in brimstone pies,
On Jonah's God you'll find no flies."

The forty days their course had run,
Still Jonah sweltering in the sun;
"Alas!" quoth he, "where's all the fun?"

In this sad fix Jonah went to bed,
Growled about God, and finally said:
"Darn all Nineveh! I wish I was dead!"

So thus he died, and has gone to sleep
With his father and mother. Oh, weep,
All ye who would God's vigil keep!

NELSON HUNT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 52. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY. {New York, Saturday, December 28, 1889.} 28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

THE SITUATION AT THE CLOSE OF THE YEAR.

Notes and Clippings.

It is said that the Portuguese are not so extensivly imbued with resolve to imitate the Brazilians as was reported, being kept down by the aristocracy and priests.

"I never had the honor of voting for a blind chaplain," remarked Col. Thomas P. Ochiltree, ex-member of Congress from Texas, "but if ever I am reëlected to Congress I will cheerfully vote for a deaf and dumb one."

The Rev. J. M. Duran, a Methodist minister, was tried and acquitted lately in the Chambers county circuit court of Birmingham, Ala., on a charge of passing counterfeit money. He proved that the money was found in the contribution box of one of his churches. There were $8 in the box after the usual Sunday collection, and $7 of these were counterfeit.

A herd of buffaloes has been shipped from Manitoba to Utah. Utah's endeavor to preserve the buffalo is praiseworthy, says the World, but she might better turn her attention to getting rid of the Mormons. Can the World giv any good reason why the Mormons are not as much entitled to enjoy their religion as any other Christian sect? Perhaps, though, the World meant polygamists.

Religious moralizing by the World: "Edward Larsen, the faith-cure monomaniac, in Brooklyn, has been fined $500. This may serve as a warning to those dangerous lawbreakers, as Justice Tighe hoped, but it strikes us that something more is necessary to compel them to giv up their dangerous humbug. The practice of their teachings not only endangers the lives of their immediate victims, but may spread contagious disease throughout the community. At the same time, may not these poor fanatics be as honest in their beliefs as any other followers of a faith?"

Says the Sun: "The following description of the attractiv outside page of an esteemed contemporary must be corrected in one small but not unimportant particular: 'Elliott F. Shepard brushes his hair back behind his ears and wears his eyeglasses all the year round.' Except on Sunday. Of a Sunday Colonel Shepard givs his hairbrush and his binocle a rest."

At Embsay a drunken farmer lost his life the other day by tumbling into a quarry. He was a churchman, but his wife was a Methodist, so before the funeral the vicar called upon her and informed her that he intended to omit certain portions of the burial service, including that referring to the "sure and certain hope." At the funeral the vicar haranged her on the wickedness of schism, informing her that it was a worse sin than drunkenness.

"Say, here's a bill to be sworn to," said a young man, rushing into a busy merchant's office in the wholesale district yesterday. The merchant began to fume about loss of time, but the young man cut him short with, "That's all right; there's Mr. ——, he's a notary, at that window right across the street, and he says all you'll hav to do will be to shake the paper and hold up your hand, and he'll know what you mean and put on his seal." The merchant went to the window and held up his hand according to orders, a young man across the street nodded and smiled, and the oath was recorded here below, whether the recording angel got track of it or not.

The Catholic Union and Times says: "The pope's bank has beaten the record. It was scarcely hatched out in the inventiv brain of the sensational New York Herald, when its hundred millions faded into thin air, like fairy gold, leaving its creditors (of the story) to cry to the moon for their money." Exactly. And that's where the millions went, too, that Archbishop Purcell swindled out of the poor Catholics of his diocese. Mr. Purcell's creditors hav been crying to the moon for their money for several years.

A new Anti-Semite book, called "Le Mystere du Sang chez les Juits," has come out in Paris, the author being M. Henri Desportes. Edouard Dumont contributes a preface. The object of the book is to perpetuate the notion current in the Middle Ages against the Jews, that the blood of murdered Christian children was necessary for the performance of their rites, by making the astounding assertion that these rites are still continued. It even includes a letter from Cardinal Rampolia, saying: "His holiness was rejoiced at your filial homage (the presentation of the book), and orders me to thank you in his name, and to say that he sends you with his whole heart his apostolical benediction, for his holiness greatly approves of your work on the horrible custom of the rabbinical Jews." The pope evidently desires his people to still believe these yarns about the Jews.

At the Buffalo Free Soil convention, which nominated Van Buren for president, a committee on nominations was in session, and Van Buren's chief fugleman, Benjamin F. Butler, was addressing the delegates on behalf of his friend. He gave an animated and picturesque description of a visit he had recently made him at his house in Kinderhook. As he was describing the almost boyish activity with which Van Buren went over his farm, and the pride he took in his fields of grain, and cabbage, and turnips, a tall, gaunt delegate from Ohio, named Brinkerhoff, slowly and spirally elevating himself like a jackscrew, shrieked out, in shrill, piercing tones: "Damn his cabbage and turnips! What does he say about the abolition of slavery in the Deestrick of Columby?" This was a thunderclap. Silence reigned, but not long. The committee spontaneously burst into a roar of mingled laughter and cheers.

"It is a curious fact," says the Sun, "that while even the reformed Jews of New York are averse to changing their Sabbath from Saturday to Sunday, those in smaller cities throughout the country hav come to a point where they are seriously considering the subject. A Jewish newspaper of character and standing in the interior of this state is championing such a change and advancing arguments, drawn from the Bible itself, to prove its position. The main point put forth by it and the other champions of the change is that the observance of Saturday as a Sabbath is certain to become almost obsolete in this country, and that unless the Jews want to see their religion gradually fade away, they should take into consideration the drift of modern opinions and the ways of the modern man." We should like to see the argument drawn from the Jewish scriptures which sustains a change of day for the Jewish Sabbath. It must be unique if nothing more.

Communications.

Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?

CHAPTER XII.

TESTIMONY OF FRIENDS AND ACQUAINTANCES OF LINCOLN WHO KNEW HIM IN WASHINGTON.

Hon. George W. Julian—Hon. John B. Alley—Hon. Hugh McCulloch—Donn Piatt—Hon. Schuyler Colfax—Hon. Geo. S. Boutwell—Hon. Wm. D. Kelley—E. H. Wood—Dr. J. J. Thompson—Rev. James Shrigley—Hon. John Covode—Jas. E. Murdoch—M. B. Field—Harriet Beecher Stowe—Hon. J. P. Usher—Frederick Douglas—Warren Chase—Hon. A. J. Grover—Judge Jas. M. Nelson.

The evidence of more than forty witnesses has already been adduced to prove that Lincoln was not a Christian in Illinois. Those who at first were so forward to claim that he was, hav generally recognized the futility of the claim. They hav abandoned it, and content themselvs with affirming that he became a Christian after he went to Washington. These claimants, being for the most part rigid sectarians themselvs, endeavor to convince the world that he not only became a Christian, but an orthodox Christian, and a sectarian; that even from a Calvinistic standpoint, he was "sound not only on the truth of the Christian religion but on all its fundamental doctrins and teachings" The testimony of Colonel Lamon, Judge Davis, Mrs. Lincoln, and Colonel Nicolay, not only refutes this claim, but shows that he was not in any just sense of the term a Christian when he died. In addition to this evidence, I will now present the testimony of nearly a score of other witnesses who knew him in Washington. These witnesses do not all affirm that he was a total disbeliever in Christianity; but a part of them do, while the testimony of the remainder is to the effect that he was not orthodox as claimed.

Hon. George W. Julian.

Our first witness is Geo. W. Julian, of Indiana. Mr. Julian was for many years a leader in Congress, was the Antislavery candidate for vice-president, in 1852, and one of the founders of the party that elected Lincoln to the presidency. He was one of Lincoln's warmest personal friends and intimately acquainted with him at Washington. Writing to me from Santa Fe, N. M., under date of March 13, 1888, Mr. Julian says:

I knew him [Lincoln] well, and I know that he was not a Christian in any old-fashioned orthodox sense of the word, but only a religious Theist. He was, substantially, such a Christian as Jefferson, Franklin, Washington, and John Adams; and it is perfectly idle to assert the contrary.

Hon. John B. Alley.

In 1886, the publishers of the North American Review issued one of the most unique, original, and interesting works on Lincoln that has yet appeared—"Reminiscences of Abraham Lincoln." It was edited by Allen Thorndike Rice, and comprises, in addition to a biographical sketch of Lincoln's life by the editor, thirty-three articles on Lincoln written by as many distinguished men of his day. One of the best articles in this volume is from the pen of one of Boston's merchant princes, John B. Alley. Mr. Alley was for eight years a member of Congress from Massachusetts, serving in this capacity during all the years that Lincoln was president. To his ability and integrity as a statesman this remarkable yet truthful tribute has been paid: "No bill he ever reported and no measure he ever advocated during his long term of service failed to receive the approbation of the house." Lincoln recognized his many sterling qualities, and throughout the war his relations with the president were of the most intimate character. Mr. Alley is one of the many who know that Lincoln was not a Christian, and one of the few who hav the courage to affirm it. He says:

In his religious views Mr. Lincoln was very nearly what we would call a Freethinker. While he reflected a great deal upon religious subjects he communicated his thoughts to a very few. He had little faith in the popular religion of the times. He had a broad conception of the goodness and power of an overruling providence, and said to me one day that he felt assured the author of our being, whether called God or nature, it mattered little which, would deal very mercifully with poor erring humanity in the other, and he hoped better, world. He was as free as possible from all sectarian thought, feeling, or sentiment. No man was more tolerant of the opinions and feelings of others in the direction of religious sentiment or had less faith in religious dogmas (Reminiscences of Lincoln, pp. 590, 591).

In conclusion Mr. Alley says:

While Mr. Lincoln was perfectly honest and upright and led a blameless life, he was in no sense what might be considered a religious man (Ibid).

Hon. Hugh McCulloch.

Hon. Hugh McCulloch, a member of Lincoln's cabinet, his last secretary of the treasury, writes:

Grave and sedate in manner, he was full of kind and gentle emotions. He was fond of poetry. Shakspere was his delight. Few men could read with equal expression the plays of the great dramatist. The theater had great attractions for him, but it was comedy, not tragedy, he went to hear. He had great enjoyment of the plays that made him laugh, no matter how absurd and grotesque, and he gave expression to his enjoyment by hearty and noisy applause. He was a man of strong religious convictions, but he cared nothing for the dogmas of the churches and had little respect for their creeds (Reminiscences of Lincoln, pp. 412, 413).

Donn Piatt.

The distinguished lawyer, soldier, and journalist, Donn Piatt, who knew Lincoln in Illinois, and who met him often in Washington, writes:

I soon discovered that this strange and strangely gifted man, while not at all cynical, was a skeptic. His view of human nature was low, but good-natured. I could not call it suspicious, but he believed only what he saw (Reminiscences of Lincoln, p. 480).

Those who are disposed to believe that Lincoln's Christian biographers hav observed an inflexible adherence to truth in their statements concerning his religious belief would do well to ponder the following words of Mr. Piatt:

History is, after all, the crystallization of popular beliefs. As a pleasant fiction is more acceptable than a naked fact, and as the historian shapes his wares, like any other dealer, to suit his customers, one can readily see that our chronicles are only a duller sort of fiction than the popular novels so eagerly read; not that they are true, but that they deal in what we long to hav—the truth. Popular beliefs, in time, come to be superstitions, and create gods and devils. Thus Washington is deified into an impossible man, and Aaron Burr has passed into a like impossible monster. Through the same process Abraham Lincoln, one of our truly great, has almost gone from human knowledge (Ibid, p. 478).

Hon Schuyler Colfax.

In a lecture delivered in Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1886, Mr. Colfax stated that Lincoln was not a Christian, in the evangelical sense. To a gentleman who visited him at his home in South Bend, Ind., he declared that Lincoln was not a believer in orthodox Christianity. Again at Atchison, Kan., he informed Mr. Perkins that Lincoln had never been converted to Christianity, as claimed.

Previous to the war no class of persons were louder in their denunciation of Abolitionism than the clergy of the North. When at last it became evident that the institution of slavery was doomed, in their eagerness to be found on the popular side, they were equally loud in their demands for its immediate extirpation. In September, 1862, a deputation of Chicago clergymen waited upon the president for the purpose of urging him to proclaim the freedom of the slave. Notwithstanding he had matured his plans and was ready to issue his proclamation, he gave them no intimation of his intention. In connection with their visit, Colfax relates the following:

One of these ministers felt it his duty to make a more searching appeal to the president's conscience. Just as they were retiring, he turned, and said to Mr. Lincoln, "What you hav said to us, Mr. President, compels me to say to you in reply, that it is a message to you from our divine master, through me, commanding you, sir, to open the doors of bondage that the slave may go free!" Mr. Lincoln replied, instantly, "That may be, sir, for I hav studied this question, by night and by day, for weeks and for months, but if it is, as you say, a message from your divine master, is it not odd that the only channel he could send it by was that round-about route by that awfully wicked city of Chicago?" (Reminiscences of Lincoln, pp. 334, 335).

Hon. William D. Kelley.

William D. Kelley, for thirty years a member of Congress from Pennsylvania, relates an incident similar to the above. A "Quaker preacher" called at the White House to urge the president to proclaim at once the freedom of the slave. To illustrate her argument and emphasize her plea, she cited the history of Deborah.

"Having elaborated this biblical example," says Mr. Kelley, "the speaker assumed that the president was, as Deborah had been, the appointed minister of the Lord, and proceeded to tell him that it was his duty to follow the example of Deborah, and forthwith abolish slavery, and establish freedom throughout the land, as the Lord had appointed him to do.

"'Has the Friend finished?' said the president, as she ceased to speak. Having received an affirmativ answer, he said: 'I hav neither time nor disposition to enter into discussion with the Friend, and end this occasion by suggesting for her consideration the question whether, if it be true that the Lord has appointed me to do the work she has indicated, it is not probable that he would hav communicated knowledge of the fact to me as well as to her'" (Reminiscences of Lincoln, pp. 284, 285).

Hon. George S. Boutwell

A great many pious stories hav been circulated in regard to the Emancipation Proclamation. We are told that he made a "solemn vow to God" that if Lee was defeated at Antietam he would issue the preliminary proclamation. And yet this document contains no recognition of God. He even completed the draft of it on what Christians are pleased to regard as God's holy day. Mr. Boutwell states that Lincoln once related to him the circumstances attending the promulgation of the instrument. He quotes the following as Lincoln's words:

The truth is just this: When Lee came over the river, I made a resolution that if McClellan drove him back I would send the proclamation after him. The battle of Antietam was fought Wednesday, and until Saturday I could not find out whether we had gained a victory or lost a battle. It was then too late to issue the proclamation that day, and the fact is I fixed it up a little Sunday, and Monday I let them hav it (Reminiscences of Lincoln, p. 123).

E. H. Wood.

Mr. E. H. Wood, one of Lincoln's old Springfield neighbors, who visited him at Washington during the war, made the following statement to Mr. Herndon, in October, 1881:

I came from Auburn, N. Y.—knew Seward well—knew Lincoln very well—lived for three years just across the alley from his residence. I had many conversations with him on politics and religion as late as 1859 and '60. He was a broad religionist—a Liberal. Lincoln told me Franklin's story. Franklin and a particular friend made an agreement that when the first one died he would come back and tell how things went. Well, Franklin's friend died, but never came back. "It is a doubtful question," said Lincoln, "whether we get anywhere to get back." Lincoln said, "There is no hell." He did not say much about heaven. I met him in Washington and saw no change in him.

I hav given the testimony of two of Lincoln's nearest neighbors in Springfield, Isaac Hawley and E. H. Wood. Mr. Hawley believes that Lincoln was a Christian; Mr. Wood knows that he was not. Mr. Hawley never heard Lincoln utter a word to support his belief; Mr. Wood obtained his knowledge from Lincoln himself. Mr. Hawley's belief is of little value compared with Mr. Wood's knowledge. Mr. Hawley never heard Lincoln defend Christianity and probably never heard him oppose it. Lincoln knew that Mr. Hawley was a Christian—that he had no sympathy with his Freethought views. He did not desire to offend or antagonize him, and hence he refrained from introducing a subject that he knew was distasteful to him. Mr. Wood, on the other hand, was a man of broad and Liberal ideas, and Lincoln did not hesitate to express to him his views with freedom.

J. J Thompson, M.D.

Dr. J. J. Thompson, an old resident of Illinois, now in Colorado, in a letter, dated March 18, 1888, writes as follows:

I knew Abraham Lincoln from my boyhood up to the time of his death. I was in his law office many times and met him several times in Washington. He was a Liberal, outspoken, and seemed to feel proud of it.

"This great and good man," concludes Dr. Thompson, "claimed Humanity as his religion."

Rev. James Shrigley.

Rev. Jas. Shrigley, of Philadelphia, who was acquainted with President Lincoln in Washington, and who received a hospital chaplaincy from him, says:

President Lincoln was also remarkably tolerant. He was the friend of all, and never, to my knowledge, gave the influence of his great name to encourage sectarianism in any of its names and forms (Lincoln Memorial Album, p. 335).

Hon. John Covode.

In connection with Mr. Shrigley's appointment, the following anecdote is related. Mr. Shrigley was not orthodox, and when it became known that his name had been sent to the senate, a committee of "Young Christians" waited upon the president for the purpose of inducing him to withdraw the nomination. Hon. John Covode, of Pennsylvania, was present during the interview and gave it to the press. It is as follows:

"We hav called, Mr. President, to confer with you in regard to the appointment of Mr. Shrigley, of Philadelphia, as hospital chaplain."

The president responded: "Oh, yes, gentlemen; I hav sent his name to the Senate, and he will no doubt be confirmed at an early day."

One of the young men replied: "We hav not come to ask for the appointment, but to solicit you to withdraw the nomination."

"Ah," said Lincoln, "that alters the case; but on what ground do you ask the nomination withdrawn?"

The answer was, "Mr. Shrigley is not sound in his theological opinions."

The president inquired: "On what question is the gentleman unsound?"

Response: "He does not believe in endless punishment; not only so, sir, but he believes that even the rebels themselvs will finally be saved."

"Is that so?" inquired the president.

The members of the committee both responded, "Yes," "Yes."

"Well, gentlemen, if that be so, and there is any way under heaven whereby the rebels can be saved, then, for God's sake and their sakes, let the man be appointed" (L. M. A., pp. 336, 337).

And he was appointed.

James E. Murdoch.

It is claimed that few public men hav made greater use of the Bible than Lincoln. This is true. He was continually quoting scripture or alluding to scriptural scenes and stories, sometimes to illustrate or adorn a serious speech, but more frequently to point or emphasize a joke. The venerable actor and elocutionist, James E. Murdoch, who had met Lincoln, both in Springfield and Washington, relates an anecdote of him while at Washington which serves to illustrate this propensity:

One day a detachment of troops was marching along the avenue singing the soul-stirring strain of "John Brown." They were walled in on either side by throngs of citizens and strangers, whose voices mingled in the roll of the mighty war-song. In the midst of this exciting scene, a man had clambered into a small tree, on the sidewalk, where he clung, unmindful of the jeers of the passing crowd, called forth by the strange antics he was unconsciously exhibiting in his efforts to overcome the swaying motion of the slight stem which bent beneath his weight. Mr. Lincoln's attention was attracted for a moment, and he paused in the serious conversation in which he was deeply interested and in an abstracted manner, yet with a droll cast of the eye, and a nod of the head in the direction of the man, he repeated, in his dry and peculiar utterance, the following old-fashioned couplet:

And Zaccheous he did climb a tree,
His lord and master for to see.

(L. M. A. pp. 349, 350).

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

(CHAPTER TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History—Is It a Modern Forgery?

The story of Abgarus and Jesus Christ comes to us in a translation by Eusebius of a Syriac document, said to hav been preserved in the archives of Edessa. When Jesus was performing mighty works in Judea and myriads came from remote countries to be cured by him, King Abgar, hearing of these things, and being afflicted with an incurable disease, wrote a letter to Jesus inviting him to come and heal him. In the letter he addresses Jesus as the good savior, who must hav come down from heaven and may be the son of God.

Jesus answers the letter as follows:

Blessed art thou, O Abgarus, who without seeing has believed in me. For it is written concerning me, that they who hav seen me will not believe, that they who hav not seen may believe and liv. But in regard to what thou hast written that I should come to thee, it is necessary that I should fulfill all things here for which I hav been sent, and after this fulfillment thus to be received again by him that sent me. And after I hav been received up, I will send thee a certain one of my disciples, that he may heal thy affliction and giv life to thee and those who are with thee.

In this letter, which is the only copy of any writing by Jesus Christ that has come down to us, there are two notable points, to wit: 1. He begins it with a quotation purporting to be from holy scripture, which has never yet been found in any scripture, canonical or apocryphal. 2. He discloses to a far-off heathen king what he studiously conceals from his chosen disciples—that is to say, his ascension.

But our present purpose is not so much to discredit the silly story of Abgar and Jesus Christ, as to find out what year Eusebius fixes for the crucifixion, and then to prove that the event could not hav occurred in that year.

The document found by Eusebius in the archives of Edessa, four hundred miles distant from Jerusalem, and which he translates from the Syriac into Greek, informs us that, after the ascension of Jesus, Judas, who is also called Thomas, sent to King Abgar Thaddeus the apostle, who cured him of his disease and converted him to Christianity; and "these things," Eusebius adds, apparently quoting from the document itself, "were done in the three hundred and fortieth year."

It is understood and conceded that this means the three hundred and fortieth year of the kingdom of the Greeks, the year beginning from the autumnal equinox. In a note Valesius says:

The three hundred and fortieth year . . . falleth with the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar (A.D. 29), in which year, as many of the ancients believed, our blessed savior suffered and ascended. So that this account falls right, placing Thaddeus's coming to Edessa and his curing King Abgarus in the same year in which our blessed savior suffered.

The letter of Jesus Christ to King Abgar used to be hung up in a frame with a picture before it, in the houses of the common people of England, and they regarded it with as much devotion as they did the holy scriptures. It was appended to the Lord's prayer and the Apostles' creed, and was cherished as a charm. Its genuinness was never questioned by the Romish authorities, and many eminent Protestants hav expressed their belief in its authenticity.

In 1841, 1843, and 1847 some Syriac manuscripts were obtained from a monastery in Lower Egypt, purporting to be about as old as Eusebius, and among them was found this very story, agreeing substantially with Eusebius's translation. At first we considered the discovery as proof of its antiquity, but knowing now that much, if not most, of the ancient literature of the church was fabricated in modern times, we suspect that these recently discovered Syriac documents are also modern forgeries.

In regard to the date of the crucifixion these documents are unanimous in fixing it in the three hundred and fortieth year of the kingdom of the Greeks, which is A.D. 29. And Eusebius himself not only accepts the date given in the Syriac document, but subsequently tells us, speaking of the destruction of Jerusalem, that providence deferred the punishment of the Jews "for forty years after their crimes against Christ." From A D. 33 to 70 would be only thirty-seven years; from A.D. 29 to 70 would be forty-one years.

And this agrees substantially with what Clement of Alexandria says in his principal work, "The Miscellanies," supposed to hav been written about A.D. 200. After quoting Luke in regard to the baptism of Jesus by John in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar, he says:

And that it was necessary for him to preach only a year, this also is written: "He hath sent me to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord." This both the prophet spake and the gospel. Accordingly, in fifteen years of Tiberius and fifteen years of Augustus, so were completed the thirty years till the time he suffered. And from the time he suffered till the destruction of Jerusalem are forty-two years and three months. . . .

And they say it was the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar, the fifteenth day of the month Tubi, and some that it was the eleventh of the same month. And treating of his passion with very great accuracy, some say that it took place in the sixteenth year of Tiberius, on the twenty-fifth of Phamenoth; and others the twenty-fifth of Pharmuthi; and others say that on the nineteenth of Pharmuthi he suffered.

The reign of Tiberius began Aug. 9, A.D. 14; consequently, if the crucifixion took place in the fifteenth year of Tiberius, it was A D. 29, at the passover full moon, which was about April 17th. Or if the crucifixion was in the sixteenth year of Tiberius, it was in the same month, A.D. 30.

But the calculations of Clement are only approximately correct. He says, for example, that from the crucifixion to the destruction of Jerusalem was forty-two years and three months; and he fixes the date of the crucifixion either A.D. 29 or 30. From April 17, A.D. 29, to Sept. 8, A.D. 70, is forty-one years and nearly five months; and from April 7th, the time of the Passover full moon in the year 30, to Sept. 8, A.D. 70, is forty years and five months.

These and numerous other miscalculations are easily accounted for if the writer of Clement's "Miscellanies" lived in the sixteenth century.

Tertullian of Carthage, the earliest Latin father, in his "Answer to the Jews," supposed to hav been written before the year 220, distinctly affirms in chapter viii that the crucifixion took place

Under Tiberius Cæsar, in the consulate of Rubellius Geminus and Fufius Geminus, in the month of March, at the times of the Passover, on the eighth day before the calends of April, on the first day of unleavened bread, on which they slew the lamb at even, just as had been enjoined by Moses.

The consulate of Rubellinus and Fufius Geminus was A.D. 29; and the eighth day before the calends of April was March 25th, as noted by the translator. And that day was Friday; but unfortunately it was a whole week after the full moon in March, A.D. 29. And the next full moon, when the Passover must hav been celebrated in that year, did not fall on Friday, the day of the week on which the crucifixion took place according to all accounts, but on Saturday or Sunday.

If A.D. 30 was the year of the crucifixion, then it is probable that the Passover full moon fell on Friday, April 7th. But the Jews never celebrated the paschal feast on Friday and never held a court or executed a culprit on the great feast day.

The works of Tertullian were doubtless forged in the fifteenth century; and it is therefore easy to account for all these chronological blunders.

Lactantius, another Latin father, sometimes called the Christian Cicero, is supposed to hav died about A.D. 325 at an advanced age. The following passage in his works seems to hav been borrowed from Tertullian:

In the latter days of the Emperor Tiberius, in the consulship of Rubenius Geminus and Fufius Geminus, and on the tenth of the kalends of April, as I find it written, Jesus Christ was crucified by the Jews.

After the word "April" the translator has inserted in brackets "23d of March," which is correct. But March 23, A D. 29, was Wednesday, and five days after the full moon in that month, to say nothing of the fact that the Passover never occurred earlier than March 26th. But Easter Sunday sometimes occurs as early as March 22d, and this is said to hav been regulated by the council of Nice, A.D. 325, though the true date of settlement may perhaps hav been in 1582, when the Gregorian calendar was introduced.

The first year of Tiberius began Aug. 9, A.D. 14; consequently the fifteenth year of his reign began Aug. 9, A.D. 28, bringing the Passover of that year in the spring of A.D. 29.

The calends were counted backward from the first day of the month, consequently March 25th was the eighth day before the calends of April. See table in Bullion's Latin Grammar, Appendix.

The unanimity of all these fathers of the church in regard to the year of the crucifixion is the more remarkable in view of the fact that the event could not hav occurred in the year 29, nor indeed in any subsequent year. And the only apparent rational solution of the matter is, that these writings of the early fathers were all forged after the revival of learning, of which further evidence will be presented in a concluding article. ANTICHRIST.

Light Slowly Dawns.

In the columns of your paper the special and exclusiv privileges enjoyed by the members of the Christian church and denied to us worldlings hav been frequently made subjects of discussion, and that, too, with profit and interest to your many readers. The genius of our civilization rests upon the principle of equal rights to all and special privileges to none, and yet, notwithstanding the general acceptance of this principle by the Secular masses, they witness the open and flagrant violation of these self-evident axioms by the church without consolidating for a common defense, or even putting forth a general protest. If a merchant not belonging to the church offers and awards a prize to the one who guesses nearest the number of seeds contained in a squash on exhibition in his window, he is at once indicted, and the heaviest penalty of the law is mercilessly visited on him by his pious persecutors. If a poor wage-worker is reduced to want by sickness and he raffles off his watch among his comrades to make a little start again, the exquisit moral sense of the church community becomes shocked at the offense, and fine and imprisonment is unsparingly meted out to the hapless offenders. In the mean time these saintly church folks claim and exercise the right to inaugurate lotteries, raffles, and other games of chance wherein they dispose of, at exorbitant prices, watches, organs, sewing machines, and other articles, to raise money to put a little more tinsel on their church trappings, or buy their "beloved parson" a horse and phaeton. Little innocent boys and girls, members of Sunday-schools, are thus constituted agents to sell lottery tickets, and unblushingly ply their nefarious trade on the street because they are led to believe it is done under the Lord's sanction, and for sweet Jesus's sake. Sam Jones, in a sermon preached in Chicago, declared, without contradiction, that nine-tenths of the gamblers were raised in Christian families and trained in Sunday-schools, but he failed to say anything about this church lottery business as the cause. But I started out to tell you that the church-gambling fraternity has received a decided backset in this little city of sixty-three churches. It came to pass that we hav on our judicial bench a judge whose surname is Ridley, and the news came to the ears of this judge that one Baxter, a man of wealth, had given to the church a Shetland pony, and that this pony had been put on the regular list of the church lottery, and that many little boys and girls, fired with a holy zeal fresh from the altar, were patroling the streets and disposing of lottery tickets at the charitable sum of $1 each—all of course for Jesus's sweet sake. Now, this judge, who was a respecter of his official oath and the constitution and laws, informed the secretary and president of this holy lottery that they must desist from thus flagrantly violating the principles of right and the majesty of the law, or he would visit upon their devoted heads the full measure of punishment due the gambler under present statutory enactments. The drawing never came off, but the amount of holy wrath bottled up against this impartial and righteous judge is terrific.

Would it not be a good idea to get up a fund to prosecute church gamblers and break up the gambling dens located in the basements of our popular church edifices? Nothing like forcing them to take potent doses of their own medicin. Then action should be vigorously instituted against their Bible-publishing houses for a violation of the laws against the printing and circulating of obscene literature. If these holy meddlers who are ever and anon sticking their dirty noses in honest people's business were occasionally treated to an energetic application of Lex talionis, you would soon see a marked change in their attitude toward the secular world. We must change our position from a defensiv to an offensiv one. There is no compromise ground between orthodoxy and Liberalism, between truth and error, science and superstition. We can never cure the bigots of their spirit of cruelty and persecution by gentle remedies. They hav, as a general thing, no more conception or appreciation of justice and the majesty of human rights than has a gorilla in the forests of Borneo. They need a vigorous application of heroic agencies, and whenever we can make an example of them by prosecuting them for their many misdemeanors and offenses against justice and decency, let us do it. There are Liberals enough in this church-polluted town to exert a strong moral force if they were united, but three-fourths of them are afraid to openly avow their skepticism; and to curry orthodox favor they giv a tacit indorsement to its loathsome system of superstition, and by their own choice are reduced to the moral status of driveling henchmen. My motto henceforth shall be, with the enemies of truth and right, "My head or yours." In recommending the application of heroic agencies for the cure of orthodox bigotry I don't wish to be understood as cherishing against these devotees of superstition any spirit of revenge or hate, but would uproot orthodox sentiment in the same spirit I would grub up noxious vegetation when encumbering the fertil soil of a beautiful field. Begotten by fathers and conceived by and born of mothers who hav inherited and imbibed all of the unjust, cruel, vindictiv, and barbarous sentiment of the orthodox faith, I hold the devotee of church superstition simply in the light of a victim of bad generation and bad education, and I would no more blame or censure him for his bigotry, selfishness, and cruelty than I would blame foxglove or nightshade for shedding poisonous exhalations, but I would grub up, destroy, and annihilate noxious vegetation, and cultivate the rose and syringia with their welcome fragrance and healing balm in their stead. I cherish hatred for the infernal church system, but only pity for its blinded and Bible-deluded victims. W. S.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 22, 1889.

F. NEWMAN denies that Christianity has improved the position of woman; and he observes that, "with Paul, the sole reason for marriage is, that a man may, without sin, vent his sensual desires. He teaches that, but for this object, it would be better not to marry;" and he takes no notice of the social pleasures of marriage. Newman says: "In short, only in countries where Germanic sentiment has taken root do we see marks of any elevation of the female sex superior to that of pagan antiquity."—Buckle.

God in the Constitution.

From the Arena.

All governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.

In this country it is admitted that the power to govern resides in the people themselvs; that they are the only rightful source of authority. For many centuries before the formation of our government, before the promulgation of the Declaration of Independence, the people had but little voice in the affairs of nations. The source of authority was not in this world; kings were not crowned by their subjects, and the scepter was not held by the consent of the governed. The king sat on his throne by the will of God, and for that reason was not accountable to the people for the exercise of his power. He commanded, and the people obeyed. He was lord of their bodies, and his partner, the priest, was lord of their souls. The government of earth was patterned after the kingdom on high. God was a supreme autocrat in heaven, whose will was law, and the king was a supreme autocrat on earth, whose will was law. The God in heaven had inferior beings to do his will, and the king on earth had certain favorits and officers to do his. These officers were accountable to him, and he was responsible to God.

The feudal system was supposed to be in accordance with the divine plan. The people were not governed by intelligence, but by threats and promises, by rewards and punishments. No effort was made to enlighten the common people; no one thought of educating a peasant—of developing the mind of a laborer. The people were created to support thrones and altars. Their destiny was to toil and obey—to work and want. They were to be satisfied with huts and hovels, with ignorance and rags, and their children must expect no more. In the presence of the king they fell upon their knees, and before the priest they groveled in the very dust. The poor peasant divided his earnings with the state, because he imagined it protected his body; he divided his crust with the church, believing it protected his soul. He was the prey of throne and altar—one deformed his body, the other his mind—and these two vultures fed upon his toil. He was taught by the king to hate the people of other nations, and by the priest to despise the believers in all other religions. He was made the enemy of all people except his own. He had no sympathy with the peasants of other lands enslaved and plundered like himself. He was kept in ignorance, because education is the enemy of superstition, and because education is the foe of that egotism often mistaken for patriotism.

The intelligent and good man holds in his affections the good and true of every land—the boundaries of countries are not the limitations of his sympathies. Caring nothing for race, or color, he loves those who speak other languages and worship other gods. Between him and those that suffer, there is no impassable gulf. He salutes the world, and extends the hand of friendship to the human race. He does not bow before a provincial and patriotic God—one who protects his tribe or nation, and abhors the rest of mankind.

Through all the ages of superstition, each nation has insisted that it was the peculiar care of the true God, and that it alone had the true religion—that the gods of other nations were false and fraudulent, and that other religions were wicked, ignorant, and absurd. In this way the seeds of hatred hav been sown, and in this way hav been kindled the flames of war. Men hav had no sympathy with those of a different complexion, with those that knelt at other altars and expressed their thoughts in other words—and even a difference in garments placed them beyond the sympathy of others. Every peculiarity was the food of prejudice and the excuse for hatred.

The boundaries of nations were at last crossed by commerce. People became somewhat acquainted, and they found that the virtues and vices were quite evenly distributed. At last subjects became somewhat acquainted with kings—peasants had the pleasure of gazing at princes, and it was dimly perceived that the differences were mostly in rags and names.

In 1776 our fathers endeavored to retire the gods from politics. They declared that "all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." This was a contradiction of the then political ideas of the world; it was, as many believed, an act of pure blasphemy—a renunciation of the deity. It was in fact a declaration of the independence of the earth. It was a notice to all churches and priests that thereafter mankind would govern and protect themselvs. Politically it tore down every altar and denied the authority of every "sacred book," and appealed from the providence of God to the Providence of Man.

Those who promulgated the Declaration adopted a Constitution for the great Republic.

What was the office or purpose of that Constitution?

Admitting that all power came from the people, it was necessary, first, that certain means be adopted for the purpose of ascertaining the will of the people; and second, it was proper and convenient to designate certain departments that should exercise certain powers of the government. There must be the legislativ, the judicial, and the executiv departments. Those who make laws should not execute them. Those who execute laws should not hav the power of absolutely determining their meaning or their constitutionality. For these reasons, among others, a constitution was adopted.

This constitution also contained a declaration of rights. It marked out the limitations of discretion, so that in the excitement of passion men shall not go beyond the point designated in the calm moment of reason.

When man is unprejudiced, and his passions subject to reason, it is well he shonld define the limits of power, so that the waves driven by the storm of passion shall not overbear the shore.

A constitution is for the government of man in this world. It is the chain the people put upon their servants as upon themselvs. It defines the limit of power and the limit of obedience.

It follows, then, that nothing should be in a constitution that cannot be enforced by the power of the state—that is, by the army and navy. Behind every provision of the constitution should stand the force of the nation. Every sword, every bayonet, every cannon should be there.

Suppose, then, that we amend the Constitution and acknowledge the existence and supremacy of God—what becomes of the supremacy of the people, and how is this amendment to be enforced? A constitution does not enforce itself. It must be carried out by appropriate legislation. Will it be a crime to deny the existence of this Constitutional God? Can the offender be proceeded against in the criminal courts? Can his lips be closed by the power of the state? Would not this be the inauguration of religious persecution?

And if there is to be an acknowledgment of God in the Constitution, the question naturally arises as to which God is to hav this honor. Shall we select the God of the Catholics—he who has established an infallible church presided over by an infallible pope, and who is delighted with certain ceremonies and placated by prayers uttered in exceedingly common Latin? Is it the God of the Presbyterian, with the Five Points of Calvinism, who is ingenious enough to harmonize necessity and responsibility, and who in some way justifies himself for damning most of his own children? Is it the God of the Puritan, the enemy of joy—of the Baptist, who is great enough to govern the universe, and small enough to allow the destiny of a soul to depend on whether the body it inhabited was immersed or sprinkled?

What God is it proposed to put in the Constitution? Is it the God of the Old Testament, who was a believer in slavery and who justified polygamy? If slavery was right then, it is right now; and if Jehovah was right then, the Mormons are right now. Are we to hav the God who issued a commandment against all art—who was the enemy of investigation and of free speech? Is it the God who commanded the husband to stone his wife to death because she differed with him on the subject of religion? Are we to hav a God who will reënact the Mosaic code and punish hundreds of offenses with death? What court, what tribunal of last resort, is to define this God, and who is to make known his will? In his presence laws passed by men will be of no value. The decisions of courts will be as nothing. But who is to make known the will of this supreme God? Will there be a supreme tribunal composed of priests?

Of course all persons elected to office will either swear or affirm to support the Constitution. Men who do not believe in this God, cannot so swear or affirm. Such men will not be allowed to hold any office of trust or honor. A God in the Constitution will not interfere with the oaths or affirmations of hypocrits. Such a provision will only exclude honest and conscientious unbelievers. Intelligent people know that no one knows whether there is a God or not. The existence of such a being is merely a matter of opinion. Men who believe in the liberty of man, who are willing to die for the honor of their country, will be excluded from taking any part in the administration of its affairs. Such a provision would place the country under the feet of priests.

To recognize a deity in the organic law of our country would be the destruction of religious liberty. The God in the Constitution would hav to be protected. There would be laws against blasphemy, laws against the publication of honest thoughts, laws against carrying books and papers in the mails, in which this constitutional God should be attacked. Our land would be filled with theological spies, with religious eavesdroppers, and all the snakes and reptils of the lowest natures, in this sunshine of religious authority, would uncoil and crawl.

It is proposed to acknowledge a God who is the lawful and rightful governor of nations—the one who ordained the powers that be. If this God is really the governor of nations, it is not necessary to acknowledge him in the Constitution. This would not add to his power. If he governs all nations now, he has always controled the affairs of men. Having this control, why did he not see to it that he was recognized in the Constitution of the United States? If he had the supreme authority and neglected to put himself in the Constitution, is not this, at least, prima facie evidence that he did not desire to be there?

For one, I am not in favor of the God who has "ordained the powers that be." What hav we to say of Russia—of Siberia? What can we say of the persecuted and enslaved? What of the kings and nobles who liv on the stolen labors of others? What of the priest and cardinal and pope who wrest even from the hand of poverty the single coin thrice earned?

Is it possible to flatter the Infinit with a constitutional amendment? The "Confederate States" acknowledged God in their constitution, and yet they were overwhelmed by a people in whose organic law no reference to God is made. All the kings of the earth acknowledge the existence of God, and God is their ally; and this belief in God is used as a means to enslave and rob, to govern and degrade the people whom they call their subjects.

The government of the United States is secular. It derives its power from the consent of man. It is a government with which God has nothing whatever to do—and all forms and customs, inconsistent with the fundamental fact that the people are the source of authority, should be abandoned. In this country there should be no oaths—no man should be sworn to tell the truth and in no court should there be any appeal to any supreme being. A rascal by taking the oath appears to go in partnership with God, and ignorant jurors credit the firm instead of the man. A witness should tell his story, and if he speaks falsely should be considered as guilty of perjury. Governors and presidents should not issue religious proclamations. They should not call upon the people to thank God. It is no part of their official duty. It is outside of and beyond the horizon of their authority. There is nothing in the Constitution of the United States to justify this religious impertinence.

For many years priests hav attempted to giv to our government a religious form. Zealots hav succeeded in putting the legend upon our money: "In God We Trust;" and we hav chaplains in the army and navy, and legislativ proceedings are usually opened with prayer. All this is contrary to the genius of the republic, contrary to the Declaration of Independence, and contrary really to the Constitution of the United States. We hav taken the ground that the people can govern themselvs without the assistance of any supernatural power. We hav taken the position that the people are the real and only rightful source of authority. We hav solemnly declared that the people must determin what is politically right and what is wrong, and that their legally expressed will is the supreme law. This leaves no room for national superstition—no room for patriotic gods or supernatural beings—and this does away with the necessity for political prayers.

The government of God has been tried. It was tried in Palestine several thousand years ago, and the God of the Jews was a monster of cruelty and ignorance, and the people governed by this God lost their nationality. Theocracy was tried through the Middle Ages. God was the governor—the pope was his agent, and every priest and bishop and cardinal was armed with credentials from the most high—and the result was that the noblest and best were in prisons, the greatest and grandest perished at the stake. The result was that vices were crowned with honor, and virtues whipped naked through the streets. The result was that hypocrisy swayed the scepter of authority, while honesty languished in the dungeons of the Inquisition.

The government of God was tried in Geneva when John Calvin was his representativ; and under this government of God the flames climbed around the limbs and blinded the eyes of Michael Servetus, because he dared to express an honest thought. This government of God was tried in Scotland, and the seeds of theological hatred were sown that bore, through hundreds of years, the fruit of massacre and assassination. This government of God was established in New England, and the result was that Quakers were hanged or burnt—the laws of Moses reënacted and the "witch was not suffered to liv." The result was that investigation was a crime, and the expression of an honest thought a capital offense. This government of God was established in Spain, and the Jews were expelled, the Moors were driven out, Moriscoes were exterminated, and nothing left but the ignorant and bankrupt worshipers of this monster. This government of God was tried in the United States, when slavery was regarded as a divine institution, when men and women were regarded as criminals because they sought for liberty by flight, and when others were regarded as criminals because they gave them food and shelter. The pulpit of that day defended the buying and selling of women and babes, and the mouths of slave-traders were filled with passages of scripture defending and upholding the traffic in human flesh.

We hav entered upon a new epoch. This is the century of man. Every effort to really better the condition of mankind has been opposed by the worshipers of some God. The church in all ages and among all peoples has been the consistent enemy of the human race. Everywhere and at all times, it has opposed the liberty of thought and expression. It has been the sworn enemy of investigation and of intellectual development. It has denied the existence of facts, the tendency of which was to undermine its power. It has always been carrying fagots to the feet of Philosophy. It has erected the gallows for Genius. It has built the dungeon for thinkers. And to-day the orthodox church is as much opposed as it ever was, to the mental freedom of the human race.

Of course there is a distinction made between churches and individual members. There hav been millions of Christians who hav been believers in liberty and the freedom of expression—millions who hav fought for the rights of man—but churches as organizations, hav been on the other side. It is true that churches hav fought churches—that Protestants battled with the Catholics for what they were pleased to call the freedom of conscience; and it is also true that the moment these Protestants obtained the civil power, they denied this freedom of conscience to others.

Let me show you the difference between the theological and the secular spirit. Nearly three hundred years ago, one of the noblest of the human race, Giordano Bruno, was burnt at Rome by the Catholic church—that is to say by the "Triumphant Beast." This man had committed certain crimes—he had publicly stated that there were other worlds than this—other constellations than ours. He had ventured the supposition that other planets might be peopled. More than this, and worse than this, he had asserted the heliocentric theory—that the earth made its annual journey about the sun. He had also given it as his opinion that matter is eternal. For these crimes he was found unworthy to liv, and about his body were piled the fagots of the Catholic church. This man, this genius, this pioneer of the science of the nineteenth century, perished as serenely as the sun sets. The Infidels of to-day find excuses for his murderers. They take into consideration the ignorance and brutality of the times. They remember that the world was governed by a God who was then the source of all authority. This is the charity of Infidelity—of philosophy. But the church of to-day is so heartless, is still so cold and cruel, that it can find no excuse for the murdered.

This is the difference between Theocracy and Democracy—between God and man.

If God is allowed in the Constitution, man must abdicate. There is no room for both. If the people of the great republic become superstitious enough and ignorant enough to put God in the Constitution of the United States, the experiment of self-government will hav failed, and the great and splendid declaration that "all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed" will hav been denied, and in its place will be found this: All power comes from God; priests are his agents, and the people are their slaves.

Religion is an individual matter, and each soul should be left entirely free to form its own opinions and to judge of its accountability to a supposed supreme being. With religion, government has nothing whatever to do. Government is founded upon force, and force should never interfere with the religious opinions of men. Laws should define the rights of men and their duties toward each other, and these laws should be for the benefit of man in this world.

A nation can neither be Christian nor Infidel—a nation is incapable of having opinions upon these subjects. If a nation is Christian, will all the citizens go to heaven? If it is not, will they all be damned? Of course it is admitted that the majority of citizens composing a nation may believe or disbelieve, and they may call the nation what they please. A nation is a corporation. To repeat a familiar saying, "it has no soul." There can be no such thing as a Christian Corporation. Several Christians may form a corporation, but it can hardly be said that the corporation thus formed was included in the atonement. For instance: seven Christians form a corporation—that is to say, there are seven natural persons and one artificial—can it be said that there are eight souls to be saved?

No human being has brain enough, or knowledge enough, or experience enough, to say whether there is, or is not, a God. Into this darkness science has not yet carried its torch. No human being has gone beyond the horizon of the natural. As to the existence of the supernatural, one man knows precisely as much, and exactly as little as another. Upon this question, chimpanzees and cardinals, apes and popes, are upon exact equality. The smallest insect discernible only by the most powerful microscope, is as familiar with this subject as the greatest genius that has been produced by the human race.

Governments and laws are for the preservation of rights and the regulation of conduct. One man should not be allowed to interfere with the liberty of another. In the metaphysical world there should be no interference whatever. The same is true in the world of art. Laws cannot regulate what is, or what is not, music—what is or what is not beautiful—and constitutions cannot definitly settle and determin the perfection of statues, the value of paintings, or the glory and subtlety of thought. In spite of laws and constitutions the brain will think. In every direction consistent with the well-being and peace of society, there should be freedom. No man should be compelled to adopt the theology of another; neither should a minority, however small, be forced to acquiesce in the opinions of a majority, however large.

If there be an infinit being, he does not need our help—we need not waste our energies in his defense. It is enough for us to giv to every other human being the liberty we claim for ourselvs. There may or may not be a supreme ruler of the universe—but we are certain that man exists, and we believe that freedom is the condition of progress, that it is the sunshine of the mental and moral world, and that without it man will go back to the den of savagery and will become the fit associate of wild and ferocious beasts.

We hav tried the government of priests, and we know that such governments are without mercy. In the administration of theocracy, all the instruments of torture hav been invented. If any man wishes to hav God recognized in the Constitution of our country, let him read the history of the Inquisition, and let him remember that hundreds of millions of men, women, and children hav been sacrificed to placate the wrath or win the approbation of this God.

There has been in our country a divorce of church and state. This follows as a natural sequence of the declaration that "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." The priest was no longer a necessity. His presence was a contradiction of the principle on which the republic was founded. He represented, not the authority of the people, but of some "power from on high," and to recognize this other power was inconsistent with free government. The founders of the republic at that time parted company with the priests, and said to them: "You may turn your attention to the other world—we will attend to the affairs of this." Equal liberty was given to all. But the ultra theologian is not satisfied with this—he wishes to destroy the liberty of the people—he wishes a recognition of his God as the source of authority, to the end that the church may become the supreme power.

But the sun will not be turned backward. The people of the United States are intelligent. They no longer believe implicitly in supernatural religion. They are losing confidence in the miracles and marvels of the Dark Ages. They know the value of the free school. They appreciate the benefits of science. They are believers in education, in the free play of thought, and there is a suspicion that the priest, the theologian, is destined to take his place with the necromancer, the astrologer, the worker of magic, and the professor of the black art.

We hav already compared the benefits of theology and Science. When the theologian governed the world, it was covered with huts and hovels for the many, palaces and cathedrals for the few. To nearly all the children of men reading and writing were unknown arts. The poor were clad in rags and skins—they devoured crusts, and gnawed bones. The day of Science dawned, and the luxuries of a century ago are the necessities of to-day. Men in the middle ranks of life hav more of the conveniences and elegancies than the princes and kings of the theological times. But above and over all of this, is the development of the mind. There is more of value in the brain of an average man of to-day—of a master-mechanic, of a chemist, of a naturalist, of an inventor, than there was in the brain of the world four hundred years ago.

These blessings did not fall from the skies. These benefits did not drop from the outstretched hands of priests. They were not found in cathedrals or behind altars—neither were they searched for with holy candles. They were not discovered by the closed eyes of prayer, nor did they come in answer to superstitious supplication. They are the children of freedom, the gifts of reason, observation, and experience—and for them all man is indebted to man.

Let us hold fast to the sublime declaration of Lincoln: Let us insist that this, the Republic, is "A government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The Truth Seeker Said It Three Years Ago.

From the San Francisco Argonaut.

The recent decision of Judge Anderson, of the United States district court, that aliens whose churches hav paramount claims over them cannot lawfully take the oath of allegiance to the United States government, has received the unqualified approval of the press. Even the Call approves of it. Readers of the Argonaut will be amazed on perusing the following editorial from the Call of December 4th:

It is not easy to determin the logical effect of the decision of the federal court that American citizenship must be denied to all aliens who hav assumed other obligations not consistent with such citizenship. The decision is assumed to apply to Roman Catholics especially, but it includes as well all others who hav undertaken similar obligations to those which Roman Catholics are charged with holding to their church. The English of the decision is that to American citizens the United States government is the highest power on earth. An oath to sustain that government is paramount to every other on the conscience of the person taking it. The decision does not recognize any revelation which absolves a person from the obligation of this oath. If he has opinions inconsistent with the discharge of all the duties the oath contemplates, he is not eligible to citizenship. The application to Roman Catholics is made clear by the fact that members of that church claim to hav received through their leaders revelations which, in their opinion, hav a superior claim upon their conscience over the fealty they hav sworn to the United States government. In other words, if their leaders in the Roman Catholic church should giv them an order in conflict with one they hav received from the government, they would obey their church leaders. The decision of Judge Anderson excludes all aliens holding such views of their obligation to the Roman Catholic church from American citizenship. Our readers will bear in mind that this decision does not deny the right of any man to hold such views as may commend themselvs to his conscience. It simply declares that aliens who consider that they owe a higher fealty to another power than to the United States shall not become citizens of the United States. They shall not take an oath, with an intention of breaking it when the higher power givs the word. The decision will not affect the civil rights of Roman Catholics. The law will continue to protect them in life and property. They may do anything that an alien may do, but they shall not be given the power to betray the government. . . .

We will remove the amazement of our readers by informing them that in the Call editorial we hav substituted "Roman Catholic" for "Mormon" wherever it occurred, just to see how it would sound. Really, it sounds very well. This Mormon business is exceedingly awkward. Whenever we level a law at that frugal people, it turns out to be a boomerang, and hits somebody else. Some years ago, the United States passed a federal law—leveled at polygamy—making "illegal cohabitation" a felony. Unfortunately, an officer in the navy, said to be a very nice fellow, was arrested in Washington city under this law for keeping as a mistress the daughter of a former friend. Federal law prevails in the District of Columbia. It was exceedingly disagreeable—the naval officer came near going to the penitentiary. But after this little matter was fixed up, the federal officials resumed their labors in Salt Lake City with renewed zeal. Now a similar trouble is threatened in this recent decision. How is a good Catholic to take the oath of allegiance?

Lectures and Meetings.

W. F. JAMIESON writes: The edition of "Bible in Favor of Debate," which I hav been sending free all over the country, is exhausted. Will notify you when I get another edition printed. I am lecturing in Nebraska now. My address is Seward, Neb.

GEORGE H. DAWES will take the platform in the spring, when his school closes, and has already engagements for a six nights' debate at McMinnville, Ore.; three nights each at Corvallis, Prineville, Wilsonville, Mulino, and two nights at Amorsville. His address is North Yamhill, Ore.

MR. H. L. GREEN says in the December number of the Freethinker's Magazine: "'Evolution—The God of Nature,' is the title of a lecture that has recently been written by our friend H. P. Marsh, of Palmyra, N. Y. We hav been permitted to read it and we can say truthfully that it is one of the most valuable productions that we ever read. It is full of just that kind of knowledge that the people ought to know. Mr. Marsh is not an educated man, but is a reader and thinker, and, being one of the 'common people,' knows how to address himself to their understanding. We hope Mr. Marsh may be invited to deliver this lecture in many localities. There is more valuable matter in this one lecture than could be culled from five barrels of Talmage's sermons. Mr. Marsh will gladly deliver this lecture before any society that will defray his necessary expenses." To which we may add that Mr. Marsh intends to devote his time to lecturing and desires engagements at once. Address, H. P. Marsh, Palmyra, N. Y.

THE Arena, from which we copy the article on God in the Constitution, by Colonel Ingersoll, is a new monthly publication similar in purpose, style, and price to the North American Review and Forum. It is edited by B. O. Flower and published in Boston. Besides Colonel Ingersoll, the writers in the January number are H. O. Pentecost, Laurence Grönlund, Henry George, Adirondack Murray, Joaquin Miller, and others less known to radical fame.

THE general assembly of the Church of Scotland has issued a pastoral address on non-churchgoing and its causes, which it asks to be read over the pulpits in all the churches on a convenient Sabbath. It points out that in Glasgow, the most populous city of Scotland, there are not fewer than one hundred and twenty thousand persons who are alienated from public worship. It is further remarked that there is a similar and alarming proportion of people in other towns, and even in rural parishes, who habitually absent themselvs from church.

UNDER the head of "Gaietés de la Semaine"—Amusements of the Week—a Paris paper prints a leading article on the Salvation Army. The writer says the singing was full of "go," the chorus reminding him of the Assassouans, only the performers jumped up and gave an "experience" instead of eating glass and chewing scorpions. One of the "supers" said he had lived till the age of thirty-five without thinking of the Lord, but he had the luck to meet him one day on the Quai Valmy, and ever since they had been inseparable. An Austrian had sought the Lord in vain in his own country, and the Lord had given him a rendezvous in France. The writer asks, "Where does the money go?" and concludes by hinting that Boulanger ought to take command of the army of the Lord.

Communications.

The Secularization of the Church.

One of the most encouraging evidences of the progress of Rationalism is the growing this-worldliness of the church. A generation ago the puritanical spirit was predominant in the orthodox church; hell fire, salvation by Christ, and renunciation of worldly pleasures formed the staple of the preaching. The church services and edifices were of the plainest description, and sincerity and consistency marked the profession of belief in the teachings of the Bible. Gradually the preaching lost its power as the enlightened mind began to revolt against the atrocious sacrificial theology. To secure drawing attraction, solo singing was introduced and more elaborate choir music was rendered. On Thanksgiving day and fast days political themes were brought into the pulpit and by degrees topics of the time were cautiously alluded to on Sundays. The church social was instituted, Sunday-school picnics and festivals became frequent; the magic lantern, lecture, literary and musical entertainment, were adopted, and young people's associations became a necessary adjunct of the church. To-day the preaching of the gospel is relegated to the less civilized masses who follow the drum of the Salvation Army, and the church has been transformed into a religious fun club.

On every hand we see the breaking down of orthodox belief. The exclusion of women from teaching in consistency with Paul's commands has given way to the ordination of a woman as pastoress of a Congregational church. And the founder of the "Young People's Society for Christian Endeavor" publicly declares: "St. Paul did not prohibit women speaking in meeting. Study the words to the Corinthians in the original Greek. He meant, 'Don't la-la-la—don't make a clatter, a disturbance in the churches.'" So it goes on. As fast as reason and common sense overthrow the practices enjoined by the Bible the ministers discover that "the Bible is to be read in a new meaning in the light of to-day;" but they only find it out when their cause is lost. Every advance has to be made against the opposition of "God's word." A wealthy gentleman who gave many thousands annually to foreign missions lamented to me that his money had been misplaced, because missionary societies were attending to education instead of the preaching of the gospel. The Young Men's Christian Associations hav found that Jesus and his blood hav ceased to draw, and they supplement this fading attraction with the gymnasium, bath, bowling-alley, billiard-table, educational class, and social gathering. The Montreal Amateur Athletic Association has just reduced its limit of age by two years in dread of competition from the Young Men's Christian Association, that is erecting a building with all the modern improvements.

Some personal observations made this summer in a New England village will illustrate the growing tendency to abandon dogma for Secularism. An invitation was given to attend a "raspberry festival" in the church, and a charming young lady urged the matter so strenuously that it was hard to resist. I replied: "I am a Freethought writer and lecturer. Your church is founded to teach the doctrin that men like me are damned. How can I contribute to its support and go there to eat raspberries and ice-cream and hav high jinks with you while I am on the brink of hell? How can you consistently hav fellowship with me whom your creed denounces?" "Oh," she said, "we none of us believe such things, and we think just as much of you, if you are a Freethinker. Of course the Bible says some such words, but they don't mean that." "Well," I said, "if it is not belief in my eternal doom that makes you happy, what is it that comforts you in your religion?" After a moment's hesitation she replied: "I can't tell you." "And you allow ministers," I said, "to rope in pretty girls like you to act as decoys for an institution that has no reason for existence, unless the need for the salvation of souls is genuin?" Soon an "apron sale" was announced. It was the great event of the year—an effort to help out the minister's salary by a jolly gathering and sale of aprons and refreshments. It was hard to resist the invitation, for it seemed churlish to refuse to join in the chief social gathering of the season. Being taken to task by the lady who had presided at the apron table and made the financial success of the occasion, I made the excuses that had served me for the raspberry festival. "Oh," she said, "we none of us believe those old doctrins. I read the report of your lectures and tell my friends, 'That's just what I believe,' and my husband says you are level-headed and put things about right." "Why do you go to church, then?" I asked. She replied: "Because the people who go there are trying to be good." "But," I said, "can you find no people who wish to be good who are not engaged in telling lies and making hypocritical professions? Surely this is a poor means of being good, and if you will be sincere and honest you will no longer sail under false colors and aid in the promulgation of opinions that you know to be untrue."

The church-members who visited this place could not be induced to go out sailing on Sunday, but they would take a buckboard drive in the afternoon, although it involved work to horses, driver, and hostler. They probably exercised prudence in consequence of the belief that God has a special delight in upsetting sailboats on his day.

Even the conservativ Roman Catholic church is adopting the most profanely secular means to secure money. The new St. Peter's cathedral, in Montreal, was lately turned into "a gambling-hell." Wheels of fortune were placed at the doors, houses and lands were sold by lottery, and dice were thrown at every table. When a lady asked me "to shake dice for a chance of getting an infant Jesus," I thought the coming of the Lord might be imminent.

Pages could be filled with accounts of "spinsters' and bachelors' socials," "pink parties," "oatmeal soirees," "rainbow festivals," and so on, which are weekly held in the churches, while in the country, in Canada, the social has been turned into a ball, where the young folks dance till morning. All this is good, and we only complain that while the church is stealing our thunder it still pretends to flash the divine lightning. Let its members revolt from the creeds they no longer believe and from the services that are only a mockery. A few old-fashioned ministers are trying to stem the tide, but the demands of the people are being generally heeded. Let them demand all they want and it will be granted if the institution can be preserved thereby. As an instance of conservatism the London Freethinker givs this item, "Don't mix up religion and amusement, says the Rev. Dr. Thomas of Liverpool." He "would rather see young men seeking amusement 'in places beset with the most dreadful temptations' than 'provide games and amusements for them in connection with the house of God.'" But the tide is all the other way and the religion of Jesus is being wounded in the house of his friends. This-worldliness is fast superseding other-worldliness.

What is the duty of Liberals toward the church in its changing attitude? Should they affiliate with it and help it on by development from within? No! As long as false doctrin is the standard of the church, even if only in name, it should be shunned. There should be no countenancing of any belief in supernaturalism, and no affiliation with formal religious worship. It is the protest from without that will make those within move the faster, and when the church becomes avowedly the Ethical Society, it will be time enough to join it. If those within who are unbelievers in miracles would leave it and those without would giv them something better to come to in the way of Sunday meetings, the church would soon be wholly secularized. This is a most important and pressing need for Liberals to supply. Nature's method of progression is usually through the development of existing forms. The social features of churchgoing are too attractiv to be dispelled. Sunday entertainments should be provided that would giv all that is attractiv in the church service combined with instruction and sensible utterance. It is time that wealthy Liberals provided a substitute for the church that would so successfully rival it that soon the church buildings would be available for secular purposes for seven days in the week. Freethought is "the heir of the ages," and ere long will receive the heritage that Christians are unconsciously preparing for it.

ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Montreal, Can, Dec. 16, 1889.

Priestcraft in the West Indies.

In continuation of my communication to you on this subject, I propose now concluding my notice of the images of certain saints worshiped by the adherents of the Roman church here, with a reference to the negro saint, known as Benoit le Noir, canonized by one of the popes, Gregory, for the performance of miracles in Africa. He is represented as a woodcutter, and his image occupies a conspicuous place in the kitchen of the convent here. Roman Catholics pray to him Contre malefice, or, in other words, he is supplicated to preserve his petitioners from the evils of witchcraft, and to restrain any person from practicing the same against them. In a country like Trinidad where, notwithstanding the surrounding influence of civilization, the belief in sorcery and witchcraft is generally and strongly entertained amongst the lower classes, this license given by the Romish church to its followers to pray to one of its saints Contre malefice seems to me to amount to a direct encouragement, if not actually to practice it, certainly to believe in it. I should say that every effort should be made by the church to discourage the belief in the efficacy of witchcraft, but such is not the case. I am, however, bound to say that there is a law in existence that provides for the punishment by imprisonment and whipping of persons convicted of practicing witchcraft, but I do not think that the religious bodies in the colony are a bit to be thanked for the creation of this ordinance. In order that the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER may be informed of the true moral condition of the lower classes of Trinidad, and for them also justly to appreciate the usefulness of the state-paid ecclesiastics, I lay before them the following picture in all its hideousness, copied from a reliable standard work, recently published, on Trinidad: "Obeahism or witchcraft is still practiced by many unprincipled individuals of both sexes. The professors of sorcery turn the practice of witchcraft and charms to lucrativ account, pandering to the worst passions of degraded humanity, by the secret exercise of pretended arts, and the performance of revolting ceremonies. To seduce the affections of a female, to effect the separation between husband and wife, to possess with a devil, to affect with sickness, to procure the ruin or the death of an enemy, such are the objects of obeahism in Trinidad. These practices are vile and monstrous to a degree, and there is an actual belief in the efficacy of the incantations performed. Such efficacy results from the most nefarious practices. Vegetable poison is administered to the party whom they wish to get rid of. The health is destroyed and death may ensue. If the object is the ruin of an enemy, poison is given to his fowls, his cow, and his donkey. Some pretend to cure diseases. They invariably declare that such diseases are produced by wicked practices, and, of course, can be cured only by the administration of medicins aided by incantations, and such incantations are accordingly performed with the accompaniment of cabalistic words and signs. The medicins are prepared beforehand and administered in secret, sometimes in a dark room, when the deluded victim will be made to cast up centipedes, scorpions, spiders, pins, etc., to the great amazement of those present, and the entire satisfaction of the poor dupe. Some of the obeah-men hav a wide reputation, and practice extensivly. The black creoles in general, when sick, instead of employing a regular medical practitioner, prefer the assistance of a class of impostors who unite the practice of obeahism and quackery, and exact little from their patients. The people here also believe that certain malevolent individuals in league with the devil, and called "soucouyans," hav the power of casting off their skin. Divested of epidermis, they fly through the air resembling at the time balls of fire. They then, vampire-like, suck the blood of those against whom they hav any animosity. For overcoming or counteracting the machinations of such an enemy there are two plans. One is to sprinkle salt upon the cast-off skin if you should meet with it, or when you are expecting a visit from the spirit strew the floor around your bed with rice. This the soucouyan, by some mysterious law, will be compelled to pick up grain by grain, thereby affording you an opportunity for slaying it.

Now is it not sad to contemplate that notwithstanding the large sums of money spent by the government in subsidizing two large religious bodies who profess to teach and enlighten the poor people, we find them to-day in such a lamentable condition of ignorance and superstition? The government spends a paltry $50,000 in maintaining unsectarian schools; can it be doubted that if the dollars it gave to sectarian schools and the ecclesiastical establishments had been expended in the education and training of the youth of the country in secular schools where neither priest nor religious dogma was permitted to enter, and competent masters engaged, the results would not hav been far different? There never existed a community, either in ancient or modern times, in which priestcraft was rampant, and whose schools were run by religious fanatics, that the members thereof were not steeped to the hilt in ignorance, superstition, and bigotry. A people whose very consciences are not in their own keeping; the sanctity of whose private, domestic life is invaded by the intrusiv curé; whose almost every thought, word, and action is dependent for determination and approval on the church and its priests, is as humiliating a spectacle as it is possible for one to witness. Out upon such wretched emasculation.

Quite recently the government of the colony, with the praiseworthy view of providing an asylum for the juvenil vagrants and criminals, proposed the establishment of reformatory schools for these children. No sooner had the movement been initiated than the Anglicans and Roman Catholics commenced a savage contention for supremacy in the management and conduct of these reformatories, and on no account would these wretched fanatics listen to the proposal to make the schools undenominational. The government, with unpardonable weakness, very nearly played into their hands by attempting the passage of a law authorizing the erection of buildings to be used by these two bodies as reformatories, when the Wesleyan Methodists presented a protest in which they disapproved of the establishment of denominational reformatory schools for the colony, and urged that considering the religious differences of the community, a large portion being neither Protestants nor Roman Catholics, the government should establish and manage reformatory schools. To shut out all the other religious bodies from any claim upon the government to erect for them buildings to be used as reformatory schools after making grants for that purpose to the Anglican and Catholic churches, was most unfair, and such proposal was most unsatisfactory to a large proportion of the community with a population of East Indian immigrants numbering upward of sixty thousand out of a total population of one hundred and ninety thousand, and with other important rapidly increasing religious bodies who may not be able to establish for themselvs reformatory schools, and praying that the government would pause before passing the law. The upshot of all this was that the proposal has been shelved for the present and the whole matter submitted to the colonial minister in England for his decision and settlement. When this will be, no one can tell—perhaps his lordship will relegate the arbitrament of the question to the Greek Kalends. In the mean time, through the wretched jealousies, bickerings, and obstruction of these belligerent apostles of the (according to their Bible in which they so much believe) meek and lowly Jesus who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," the "little children" are sent to the common prison to mix and associate with hardened adult criminals and thus become confirmed in crime, and help to recruit the criminal ranks of the colony.

Again, at the educational board of the island, we find the cloven hoof of the priest showing itself. The members of this board charged with the important duty of controling and regulating the educational machinery of the colony are pretty evenly divided as to creed, about one-half being Anglicans or dissenters, and the other half Roman Catholics. But the chairman, the administrator of the government of the island, belongs to the latter denomination, and his casting vote generally determins a disputed question in favor of the Catholics. A month or two since, a discussion arose at the board on the proposal to establish a government undenominational school at Tunapuna, in the interior of the island. A Catholic priest residing in the same district promptly wrote the board objecting to the establishment of the government school, and of course he was supported by all the Roman Catholic members. The Protestant members supported the proposal, and one of them, the attorney general, scathingly rebuked the Romish fanatics. But all to no purpose, for on the question being put to the vote, and a tie occurring, the chairman gave his casting vote in favor of the Catholic opposition. This school, if established, would hav been undenominational, and, therefore, its establishment was fiercely opposed by those intolerant and bigoted spirits who, like evil genii, cast their gruesome and blighting shadow over all they come in reach of.

E. S.

A Capable Boomer of Washington.

For six weeks, writes Frank Wilkens to the Times, I hav traveled steadily over the plains and through the forest-clad mountains and on the clear, cold water of this most promising state. Years ago I traveled throughout the region in canoes, on horseback, and on foot. Three years ago I traveled over much the same country in Pullman cars. To-day I think I know the state and its resources and its probable future. In the past I hav written but little on the resources of Washington because I believed that so long as there was vacant land which was alleged to be arable adjacent to the arid belt, the emigratory agricultural people of the Mississippi valley, who are wedded to corn-producing land, would not cross the desert that lies west of the one-hundredth meridian.

The overland trails are long. They lead across alkaline wastes, they stretch for miles across grassy deserts, they wind through gloomy pine and crag shadowed mountain passes. The Mississippi valley agriculturists are of the stock of wagon people. They desire to migrate slowly, and with cattle following their wagons. They want to carefully inspect the land they traverse. They are poor. Railroad fare, when it includes freight charges on their personal property, represents more money than these men possess. Their value as citizens to a new state lies almost wholly in their willingness to work, and in their superb confidence in themselvs. These courageous men hav attempted agriculture in arid lands; they hav toyed, to their financial discomfiture, with Oklahoma, to which red-dust land they fled to escape tilling mortgaged acres in a sun-baked but grassy desert. Occasionally a man, whose farm mortgage ceaselessly called in imperativ tones for interest which he was unable to pay, strayed from western Kansas and Nebraska, or from eastern Colorado, to Washington. At long intervals, he wrote to his friends to describe the region he had found on the Pacific coast. And when they sat on empty dry-goods boxes and inverted nail kegs in country stores to listen to the letter read they shook their heads knowingly, and sorrowfully said one to the other: "James used to be a truthful man, but he has become an awful liar since he arrived in Washington. There is no such desirable country as he describes."

Washington is the last state to be developed. It is the last, and, I am strongly tempted to write, the best. It is a region of mountains which are clad with an almost unbroken forest in comparison with which the forests of Michigan and Wisconsin are as underbrush. The main highland range is the Cascade, whose flanks jut into the cold, salt water of Puget sound. Rivers hav gouged great valleys into the western slope of the range, and creeks and small rivers hav dug other and smaller valleys from the eternal snow to the main valleys, and in all valleys and on all divides of less than five thousand feet elevation, fir and cedar and spruce trees stand thickly. All along the western slope of the mountains, from the boundary line to Olympia, the bays and arms of Puget sound extend inland. To the west of the sound, and between it and the Pacific ocean, are the Olympic mountains, fir and cedar clad, and wholly unexplored save by wandering Indians and a few white men who hav entered the forest to examin the timber. I hav not met a white man in the state who possesses any trustworthy information relativ to this region, that is seventy miles long and about thirty miles wide. Such timber examiners as I hav talked with tell me that the region is covered with a dense forest of gigantic trees; that fallen timber covers the ground in a jack-strawlike tangle, through or over which no man can travel more than three or four miles in one day.

Puget sound has a shore line of about sixteen hundred miles. It stretches southward into the heart of what I believe is the most productiv portion of the continent, as Lake Michigan extends into the heart of the stock and grain-producing region of the central eastern portion of the continent. But Lake Michigan is ice-bound for a large portion of the year, and it does not flow directly into the sea, that broad transportation line on which any man can transport goods or produce to market free of tolls levied to pay interest on the cost of construction.

The waters that twice daily rush into and out of Puget sound flow to and from the Pacific ocean, where the long swells lazily rise and fall. A great fleet of steamboats—and the number is not sufficient to accommodate the traffic—ply on these waters that hav never been closed by ice since the continent was discovered. Ships from almost every country in western Europe float their flags in the ports that stand on the shores of these bays. There floats the flag of England, yonder the French flag waves, and the American flag floats high above many vessels. As I write I see men unloading cargoes from Europe, from China, and from New York. I see other ships taking in cargoes of wheat that grew in the Palouse region and in the Big Bend country, and timber at the sawmills. This ship is loading sacked breadstuffs for Liverpool; that one timber for Australia; that one by the great mill where the saws ceaselessly hum and where the air is heavily charged with the odor of resin is to sail to Peru, and the dirty ship by the coal chutes is for San Francisco.

What has made the older states of the Union wealthy? Pennsylvania's wealth is based on iron, coal, oil, and lumber. Pine and iron ore and copper supplied the raw material on which the prosperity of northern Michigan and Wisconsin and northeastern Minnesota was built Agriculture is the basis of the prosperity of the Mississippi valley states. Gold, silver, and copper bearing ores, and coal and iron, and grazing is the solid foundation on which Colorado's prosperity is builded. And manufacturing is the source from which the Atlantic seaboard states hav drawn their enormous wealth. Washington has more lumber and better lumber than ever stood on the soil of all the lake states put together. It has more good iron ore than has as yet been discovered in the region adjacent to Lake Superior. It has more coal than Pennsylvania. The Cascade mountains are ribbed with leads of gold and silver and copper and lead bearing ores. To-day I hav examined argentiferous galena that assays ninety ounces of silver to the ton and sixty per cent galena. This ore is from the Skazet pass, through which Nelson Bennett's railroad is to run. The gold-bearing quartz is of a character to cause Colorado miners to sadly shake their heads and mournfully murmur, "We hav wasted our lives in prospecting in Colorado and New Mexican highlands."

The agricultural land of Washington is the most productiv of the country. But the quality of the wheat produced is not as good as the famous "No. 1 Hard," nor is it as good as the winter wheats raised on virgin land in Kansas. For all other grains, save corn, and for the excellence of its fruits and vegetables this state stands at the head of the list. Washington has all the raw material, the natural resources, out of which to create a prosperous and wealthy state by developing a varied manufacturing industry that a group of the most prosperous Eastern states had or hav, and the Pacific ocean rolls softly on her shores. Beyond the Pacific lie the markets of the West. To the south the treeless lands of Peru and Chili call loudly for lumber. And the whole coast calls for iron and steel, and the world demands gold and silver. The waters of the state teem with food fishes. Almost every tide flat is paved with clams. Salmon crowd into the rivers in countless numbers to spawn. The other day I saw them packed into a small river, up which they were swimming to spawning beds, so thickly that a stone could not hav been thrown into the water without striking a fish.

Climatically the state is divided into two wholly different regions by the Cascade mountains. West of that snow capped range the land, as a whole, slopes to the Pacific ocean, through which a mighty river, called the Japan stream, flows. The prevailing wind is westerly. It sweeps day after day over the large body of water, and becomes heavily charged with moisture. Winter is on, and the air is cold on the summits of the Cascade mountains. As the moisture-laden air, pushed against the range by stormy winds, ascends to attempt the frosty passage it becomes colder and colder till precipitation begins, and the water that was drawn from the Gulf stream of the Pacific is quickly frozen out of the aerial currents. This moisture falls on the highlands as snow and on the land adjacent to the coast as rain. So the winters of western Washington are rainy and rather gloomy, too. In the summer or in late spring the air on the highlands becomes warmer as the sun courses northward, and then the westerly winds are able to carry the moisture with which they are laden across the mountain summits. Then summer, delightful and with from sixteen to eighteen hours of daylight, holds the land in sunshine.

East of the Cascade mountains is a comparativly dry land and of almost perpetual sunshine. Rain seldom falls during the summer. But the air is not as dry as it is on the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains. Heavy dew falls almost nightly in the summer. There is rain in the spring and fall, and snow and intense cold in the winter. In eastern Washington are immense areas of sandy, sage-brush land, seas of rolling hills that are covered with grass, extensiv areas where the lava that was thrown out ages ago by volcanoes lies close to the surface of the ground and makes the land undesirable, and other large areas that lie close to the mountains consist of hills on which spruce and pine of pure quality stand. Large districts, such as the Palouse and Big Bend, produce bountiful crops without irrigation, but other large areas, as the region about Pasco, will remain unproductiv till irrigation works are constructed.

The best fruit grown in Washington is raised in the Walla Walla, the Yakama, and the Wenatchee valleys. In the quality and quantity, also, of hops, wheat, rye, oats, and vegetables, the Puget sound and coast regions far surpass the eastern portions of the territory.

Practically there is no winter in the region west of the Cascade mountains. In all the larger towns ice manufactories hav been established, and the smaller towns are supplied with ice from the factories. Ice never forms on the lakes of sufficient thickness to cut and pack as is done in the East. To-day is a typical winter's day. A heavy mist is flying; at short intervals rain falls. It is a decidedly nasty day. The workingmen pay no attention to the weather. The town resounds with the roar of industry. I hear carpenters' hammers, at least a hundred of them, driving nails. I hear the sharp tap, tap, tap, of stonedressers' hammers as they strike on granit and sandstone blocks, and an army of workmen labor at the wharves, on the streets, and around the mills.

The work year is twelve months long on Puget sound, and that fact means a great deal to men who hav followed agriculture in lands where blizzards and arctic-like frost rigidly suspend work for many months, during which time the farmer and his family and stock eat and burn all he made or grew during the working season. Here fuel is at the farmer's hand. He can find work for every day. But it is true that to clear a farm and fit it for the plow in this region of dense forest is a slow and very costly operation. But it is also true that the farmer who enters the forest to chop out a farm can readily sell every log he cuts if he will haul it to the bank of a river or adjacent to a railroad. When he has cleared a few acres he can grow more food on them than he could on twice as much Mississippi valley land, and sell the produce for more money.

This year Washington first begins to feel the throb of new blood injected into her commercial and industrial veins. A mighty stream of immigration is pouring into the state. They come in wagons, and second-class cars, and in Pullman coaches. Daily long trains that are heavily laden with passengers roll into the state. They come from the South, from the East, from the North—miners, mechanics, shopkeepers, capitalists, laborers, and agriculturists—a great army of them enter the state every month, and but few of them return to the East. The passenger cars of the Canadian Pacific road hav been crowded with westbound passengers for months. Last summer when I was in Ontario and Manitoba I wondered where all the emigrants were going. I hav ceased to wonder. By far the larger portion of those emigrants are to-day working around Puget sound. They traveled over the Canadian Pacific railroad because that corporation carries passengers for less money than any of the American railroads do.

This state is being settled with a rush. Towns are springing into life as by the rubbing of the lamp. The whole region resounds with the sound of blows struck in creativ industry. It is the most striking spectacle that I hav seen on the continent. It is the migration of a nation and the rapid building of a great state that is going on, and it is well worth describing.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - DECEMBER 28, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00

Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

READ

HELEN H. GARDENER'S STORY

ENTITLED

THE BOLER HOUSE MYSTERY,

IN THE

Truth Seeker Annual for 1890.

By the time this issue of The Truth Seeker reaches its readers the Annual for 1890 will be in the mail following it up to those who hav sent 25 cents for a copy. Those who hav not already sent the quarter should do so now, and the Annual will be forwarded them by return mail. And please don't forget to renew your subscription when sending for the Annual.

Still the Sunday War.

One of the most glaring instances of the hypocrisy of the church is the naming of the Wisconsin body organized to enforce Sunday laws the "Civil Sunday Association." This name was adopted to catch "those classes whose interest in a civil Sunday the association was endeavoring to obtain"—in other words, the working people are to be humbugged with the notion that all the association is after is rest for the toilers. To carry on the deception the papers read at the convention in Milwaukee bore specially upon the need of one day in seven as a rest day, without which the universe would fall into chaos; and which catastrophe would occur anyway if that rest day was not Sunday, when the churches were open and the preachers earning their salaries.

Two or three things about this matter the ministers forget to tell the people. If one day in seven is needed for rest—which is approximately true—why will not any other day of the week do as well as Sunday? Sunday workers now are given one day off each week, and why should the clergy lament if all they seek is a septenary rest day? Why, also, do the clergy denounce the Sunday newspapers and clamor for Monday editions, if they desire all workers to hav a holiday on Sunday? Sunday papers entail work on the week days, especially on Saturdays, while Monday papers compel the editors, reporters, printers, and business managers and clerks to labor Sundays. Again, if Sunday is a day on which no one should toil, why do the clergymen select that day on which to preach, breaking the Sabbath themselvs, and compelling sextons and bell-ringers and singers and organists and car-drivers and conductors and hundreds of others to violate the fourth Commandment? Why do they not change their meetings to one of the week days? If Sunday is a day of rest for one, it is for all; if there is an obligation imposed upon one single worker to keep it, the obligation is equally binding upon all.

What, then, are the preachers thinking about when they babble of the civil Sunday? They are thinking just this: That Sunday is a day set apart by the church; that it is a "sacred day;" that it is an institution without which the church cannot flourish; that with its going will go their holy and reverend selvs. That is what they are thinking of, and all their efforts are directed toward preserving the day for their own use, and consequently toward preserving themselvs as a class. To do this they are willing to deceive, to do injustice, to invade human rights, to be tyrants, to falsify history, to deny facts, to distort and disobey their own "holy book," and to be held in contempt by the intelligent and honest world.

However, it is tolerably certain that the majority of people nowadays know them and know the hypocrisy of their acts and the hollowness of their pretenses for the welfare of the toilers. The record of the church is of itself sufficient to expose their pretenses. Argument to show that there is no sacred day, that all days are alike, that Sunday is not the Sabbath anyway, that the Puritan Sabbath has been here and gone, and that the conceptions which maintained it while here were the arrogant assumptions of bigots, that rest on one day is as healthful as rest on any other day, that civilization cannot be stopped to oblige the priests, that travel away from a church is as rightful and much more sensible than toward one, that no real rest can be had from ordinary vocations without change of scene and occupation—such argument is not needed now so much as opposition to clerical schemes for making Sunday a holy day and imprisoning all those who will not observe it. This opposition should center on town and municipal governments, on legislatures, state and national, through public meetings, distribution of documents, and personal effort among neighbors and friends. The main strength of the Sunday observance lies in the devotion of a class whose bread and butter depend in a measure on their success, to whom victory means power and a greatly increased business, and who can use as a tool the most powerful of all incentivs, sentimental fanaticism. Against this there is public opinion, which in most communities is opposed to Sunday laws, if the people be not too hypocritical or scared to express it; one or two small religious sects whose holy day is not the same as with other Christians; some people who hav rejected all the essentials of Christianity but cling to the name like the Unitarians, and the Freethinkers who love liberty for its own sake, who are mentally broad enough to allow everyone all the rights they claim for themselvs, and who know that any union of church and state means the subjugation of the latter and the dominion of theocracy, which all through the world, in any country and of any creed, has been the great obstacle to progress, the tyrannical oppressor of the people, and a cruel and bloodthirsty ruler. Theocracy is truly what our government was called by some of the Abolitionists when it upheld slavery—an agreement with Death and a league with Hell. These forces opposed to this attempted theocracy hav a hard task before them. There are no loaves and fishes for them; no power to be gained; no business to be advanced; no fanaticism to aid them—they hav only this to work for, human liberty—"more important than food or clothes, more important than gold or houses, more important than art or science." If they can be made to realize this, the end is foreseen.

Something Accomplished in Milwaukee.

It is a sign of healthy progress when the school board of a great city revises the Readers of its school in favor of Secular teaching. In the public schools, where the children of Infidel, Jew, Christian—Catholic and Protestant—Atheist, Deist, Theist, Agnostic, and Liberal Christian are to be given an education which shall fit them for something better than hewers of wood and drawers of water, there can be no proper place for sectarian teaching or instruction in any religious dogmas. These must be left to the parents, who can inoculate their offspring with any tenets they please, and the child may retain them till he finds out for himself whether they be reasonable or not. But to tell the child of an Atheist that "God is the great creator and preserver of all things" is to outrageously invade that parent's right, and to teach the child of a Jew that Christ died to save sinners is no less outrageous. So we are glad to record that the Milwaukee school board has expurgated the Readers in its schools in the interests of fair play and justice.

The books used are McGuffey's Readers, from the first to the sixth grade, and it shows how badly the Christians hav abused their power that out of five hundred and fifty-eight lessons in the six books, one hundred and forty-three, or over twenty-five per cent, hav to be eliminated because of religious bias. The character of the matter struck out may be gathered from these lines:

"When the stars at set of sun
Watch you from on high,
When the morning has begun,
Think the Lord is nigh.

"All you do and all you say
He can see and hear;
When you work and when you pray
Think the Lord is near.

"All your joys and griefs he knows,
Counts each falling tear,
When to him you tell your woes,
Know the Lord will hear.

"This birdie is content to sit
Unnoticed on the way,
And sweetly sing its maker's praise
From dawn to close of day.

"God knows best. He was somebody's love,
Somebody's heart enshrined him there;
Somebody wafted his name above,
Night and morn on the wings of prayer."

Sensible people will wonder not that these songs hav been eliminated, but that such Sunday-school trash should ever hav cumbered a book intended to teach children knowledge. As literature merely, the first two extracts are slush pure and simple, and could hav been incorporated into the book for no other purpose than to befool the child into a belief that there is a universal "Lord" whom even the birdies praise. We should be strongly tempted to shy a brick at any person who repeated such imbecility in the presence of a child related to us. The last extract is a touching little bit, but if the children are to hav that engraved on their memories, let them also hav this one, which givs the real response to that prayer:

"'O father in heaven, protect my boy
From the wiles of folly, from sin's decoy;
From the snares of temptation in life's dark sea,
Guard him, and keep him pure for thee!'
So a mother prayed as her darling one
Went forth to battle the world alone—
Alone, save the blessing his mother gave,
And that prayer to God to keep and save.

. . . . . .

"A murderer's gibbet, high in air,
Answered the trusting mother's prayer."

But what a hullabaloo the Christians would raise if Stephenson's poem were put into a public school reader! These scraps of poetry hav been removed, says the Milwaukee Sentinel, because "there are many well-educated and refined people who regard the God of the religionists as a myth which their children ought to learn as little about as possible. And while there are good Christian parents who do not wish their little ones to be taught the principles of Darwinism or the Spencerian doctrins until they are well into their teens, and others harbor the gravest objections to the theories of Paine and Ingersoll, and would shudder to think that their offspring should read the section upon religion in Reade's 'Martyrdom of Man,' still others there are who entertain the strongest dislikes for anything appertaining to deity, and hav charming sons and daughters who regard prayers as senseless delusions. Colonel Ingersoll's children don't say prayers and are none the less good and happy for all that. In recognition of this fact the school board of Milwaukee very properly saw fit to erase the above little poems from its course, and, though some church-going folks will hold up their hands in horror at the fact, the board will nevertheless carry the balance of popular sympathy." And the Sentinel humorously adds: "Little birds may be very good Christians, but there is nothing strong in nature to prove the fact; and the lines may offend many who imagin that robins evoluted from the same parent germ as oysters did, and they do not know the difference between their maker and a brickbat anyhow, but whistle just because they are built that way."

Other expurgations are "Select Paragraphs from the Bible," Channing's assertion that religion is the only basis of society, and similar religious teaching which once none disputed, because they did not know any better, but which nowadays about everybody who knows anything at all knows to be untrue. A good many eliminations are made on literary grounds alone; some, perhaps, because of too conservativ political teaching—such as Blackstone on the origin of property; others because of the too abstruse character of the selections and also teaching which later philosophy has shown to be not so completely established as our forefathers imagined, for the world is growing fast and is unlearning a good deal that it once thought was the absolute truth.

The Milwaukee voters seem to hav elected some pretty level-headed men upon their school board. Mr. McGuffey was altogether too holy a man to prepare school books for this age.

Blasphemy.

Our esteemed Congregational contemporary, the Independent, says:

"The one paper in this city which boasts of its Infidelity and claims the name of Infidel, is THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is not a very intelligent journal and we judge not very prosperous. It publishes every week a couple of blasphemous pictures, which monopolize the larger part of its interest. It now tells its readers that they must bring in five hundred new subscriptions or the paper will not be able to bear the burden."

We are quite willing to admit that Christian bigotry may term blasphemous the pictures printed on the last page of THE TRUTH SEEKER, inasmuch as they do make fun of sacred foolishness, but out of what dictionary did the Independent get a definition of blasphemy which will include the pictures on the first page?

Is it blasphemy to expose the hideousness of the church's doctrins and reveal the infamy of her career? Is it blasphemy to show how the Christian religion has deceived womankind, or to recall to the minds of nineteenth century Roman Catholics how their church has murdered unnumbered heretics? Is it blasphemy to unvail the cruelty of the Presbyterian dogma of foreordination, or to disclose the hypocrisy of Thanksgiving proclamations? Is it blasphemy to print a picture of the statue erected to one of Christianity's victims, and to paint the scene of his death by flame? Is it blasphemy to point out that faith nowadays is not regarded as the best remedy for disease, or that the Roman Catholics are stealing public money? Is it blasphemy to illustrate how Christianity has opposed all science and slandered all scientists? Is it blasphemy to uncover the foolishness of foreign missions, and to quote the statement of a Christian archdeacon that for every convert Christianity has gained in India it has made a hundred drunkards? Is it blasphemy to pictorially remonstrate against sending converted murderers to heaven and their unconverted victims to hell? Is it blasphemy to unmask the villainy of priests who rob poor men and women on the pretense of saving the soul of their friend? Is it blasphemy to intimate that God paid little attention to the prayers of the Johnstown sufferers, or that papacy in Italy is fast collapsing? Is it blasphemy to ask Christians to prove their faith and the truth of scripture by handling some poisonous serpent and drinking some deadly drug? Is it blasphemy to lay open the acts of the Christians in the Dark Ages, or to say it is possible that the foolish virgins lacked oil for their lamps because they thought Christ meant it when he said, "Take no thought for the morrow?" Is it blasphemy to impress upon the people that the lightning is impartial in its effect, knowing no difference between a church and an Infidel's building? Is it blasphemy to poke fun at a minister, or to inquire which of the human races resembles God, in whose image one of them was made? Is it blasphemy to say that preachers are bores, and that church bells disturb the neighbors? Is it blasphemy to protest against Sunday laws by a picture, and to say that parochial schools are inferior to the general average of colleges? Is it blasphemy to liken Senator Blair to Cataline, and to say that the pope, the devil, and death are an unlovely trinity? In short, is it blasphemy to say anything that THE TRUTH SEEKER has said by its first-page pictures? If it is, then we rejoice in being a blasphemer. No institution in this world, and no system of superstition ever foisted upon a people, need to be exposed more than do the Christian church and the Christian religion. And because THE TRUTH SEEKER has done this does the Independent call it blasphemous.

Perhaps, however, if THE TRUTH SEEKER were less intelligent than it is—say down on the level of Presbyterian Congregationalism—it would suit the Independent better than it does now.

The Pictures.

A perusal of the "Letters from Friends" this week will convince any impartial man that the great majority of the Liberals of the country hav found the pictures published in THE TRUTH SEEKER a useful and convincing ally in their work for mental liberty.

Another thing, and one especially gratifying, is that the expressions of opinion on those pages, are all from prompt-paying patrons whose promises of new subscribers hav a cash value.

Still another thing is there to note, and this we regret, which is that there is not a sufficient number of new subscribers and promises to guarantee the expense involved in the publication of the illustrations. This, perhaps, is due to the short space of time which has elapsed since the subject was introduced, and to amend this situation, our columns are still held open and further expression of opinion solicited, with the suggestion thrown in that a vote with a new subscriber sent now counts two. The pictures will not be discontinued until the matter is settled decisivly.

The Literature Fund.

During the past week we hav forwarded to each member of the Washington legislature a copy of J. E. Remsburg's Sabbath Breaking. There are one hundred and five Solons in the legislature of the new state, and it took $13.13 to send them copies of the pamphlet. The fund now stands:

Cash previously acknowledged	$29 00
T. R. Burrows	75	$29 75
Expended as per TRUTH SEEKER of November 30, 1889	19 50
Expended for "Sabbath Breaking" to Washington legislature	13 13	32 63

Leaving due THE TRUTH SEEKER $2 88. We hope that the Liberals of the country will see to it that this fund does not languish, for there is a great deal to be done. Blair's Sunday bill is again before Congress, and his Educational bill has been reported favorably by his Committee on Education and Labor. We hav in hand to print an argument against this Educational bill made by T. W. Smith, an American missionary to Tahiti, and propose that the members of our national legislature shall hav a chance to peruse it, as well as the reasons why a Sunday law should not be enacted.

Editorial Notes.

DR. JULIET SEVERANCE'S accident is more serious than was first reported. The radius bone of her right arm is broken and the wrist is badly sprained. It will be at least three months before she can again attend to business and correspondence. The doctor thinks it would be pleasanter, as well as more profitable, to attend some one else's fracture than it is waiting for her own to heal.

THAT was a mean thing the policemen of Baltimore did to David Bernhardt last week. Mr. Bernhardt was singing a hymn at a gospel temperance meeting—singing it with unction and deep religious feeling and moving the wicked auditors to a sense of their depravity—when the law officers disturbed the sacred meeting by arresting the singer for bigamy. The arrest wounded Mr. Bernhardt's sensitiv religious nature so deeply that he fainted away in court when confronted with his wife number one. It certainly was real mean in the officers to thus injure the feelings of a saint.

MRS. ELIZA BURNZ, author of the Liberal Hymn Books and a spelling reformer, writes us: "I hav had some Liberal Hymn Books bound in cloth with name in gilt, and I send you one as a specimen. Suppose you giv it to your boy for a Christmas gift and hav him learn some of the good songs in it, and through THE TRUTH SEEKER advise other parents to do the same. The price of the bound volumes will be 50 cents; the half bound 25 cents. The book is pretty." We think Mrs. Burnz's idea is a good one. The boy shall hav the book, and we are willing to supply all the other boys in the country at the prices named.

AT the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in Toronto the other day, in discussing the best way to overcome Catholicism in the province of Quebec, the Rev. U. B. Cruchet, of Montreal, said: "I suppose that it is superfluous to remind my hearers that we can no longer use such means as deportation, crushing by arms, confiscation of property, or deprivation of political rights. We must use commendable means. If we are citizens, we are also Christians." By such twisting as this do the clergy endeavor to make people think that Christianity stands for goodness and justice. But Mr. Cruchet got the cart ahead of the horse. He should hav said, "If we are Christians, we are also citizens." If Christianity were allowed to solve the problem, crushing by arms would be the first resort, and confiscation of property and deprivation of political rights the slightest punishment one sect would visit upon another if it had the power. It is because of their citizenship—in other words, because they hav become civilized since Christianity ruled—that the Protestants cannot crush the Catholics by arms. The civil government is so far ahead of the church.

THE Christian Intelligencer makes this wonderful claim for its religion:

"Not by any human evolution but by the power of a true and free Christianity in the United States it has been brought to pass that the workingmen of this country are the best paid, best fed and clothed, best housed workingmen the world has ever had upon it, and the people, as a whole, hav more intelligence, more comfort, more humanity, more enterprise, than any nation the earth has ever maintained."

This is precisely the reverse of true. Civilization is the result of the progress of the race in mechanical invention, general science, and art. The old-time prosperity of this country was caused by the almost limitless opportunity it afforded for human enterprise. As it fills up, becomes old, conservativ, settled, the workingman is being gradually reduced to the condition he is in in the old world. If two rooms in a tenement house for a family of five or six are better and more civilized than a log cabin with plenty of room, then the average workingman in the cities is better off than he was here a hundred years ago. If not, not. It all depends upon how one looks at it.

ITALY, says a writer in a religious journal, is a hard soil for Protestantism to grow in. On the one hand are the Romanists, upon whom no impression can be made, and upon the other the Infidels, upon whom still less impression is possible. Unbelief among the Italian men, he says, is general in Rome, and their absence from church is conspicuous. The testimony gathered from such as hav large opportunity for knowing and are entirely competent to giv intelligent judgment is that the men hav gone entirely over into unbelief; that they "believe nothing" in respect to Christianity. The relation of the pope to the king upon the question of the pope's temporal power, and the evident purpose of the Italian people to maintain the unity and integrity of the nation, tend to alienate such as are intelligent and loyal to the civil government from the Romish hierarchy. But in swinging away from the Romish church, comparativly few stop at Protestantism. The majority know little respecting it, and apparently care as little about it. This, it seems to us, is an admirable state of mind for the Italians to preserve. In getting rid of the smallpox of Romanism, there is no need of catching the yellow fever of Protestantism.

A NEW YORK paper's Brazilian correspondent writes that some of the advantages soon to follow the establishment of the republic are civil marriage and separation of church and state. In the province of Sao Paulo the law relating to burial has recently been changed so that a priest's signature on a burial certificate is no longer necessary, and a religious service is optional with the friends of the deceased. This will keep a great deal of money from the church, and the vicars and bishops are angry at the government in consequence. Rome does not like freedom of this sort; it wants the secular arm to enforce the demands of the priests upon the purses of the faithful. They rightly look upon the new measure as an attempt to weaken the influence of the priests. For it settles the question that Catholics do not need to go any more to the priests to hav their deceased friends or relativs buried; so that if anyone does not like to go first to church to hav the body sprinkled with holy water and the prayers said for the dead, he can proceed at once to the cemetery and hav the body buried by simply showing the burial permit issued by the police. That means that they need not giv money to the priest for services which they would rather dispense with. Hence the change in burial proceedings touches the clerical influence and the pockets of the "holy fathers." And when the marriage ceremony is taken from their exclusiv keeping they will lose much more influence and money.

SENATOR BLAIR in a letter to Elliot Shepard's paper reports these measures now before Congress: "Mrs. Mary H. Hunt has spread before us four million petitions for the passage of the Education bill. Mrs. Bittenbender for the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the great temperance association of the land; the mighty religious organizations and the innumerable multitudes of the sons of toil, cry out for statutes and constitutions which shall deliver the now and the hereafter from the curse of rum. Religion, philanthropy, capital, labor, all the great elements of society, demand the Sunday rest. The arousing nation begins to cry out for the establishment of the public school upon foundations as strong as all the states and the nation can make them. These and other vast interests, and all controling ideas, are at work, with constantly growing vigor, and with an inflexibility of purpose as fixed as the tendency of gravitation, and just as sure to get there in the end. 'Ever the right comes uppermost, ever is justice done,' although the gods drive a slow horse." Mrs. Hunt's four million petitions are, we presume, four million signatures, made up probably as the signatures to the Sunday Rest petition were, by representation, and counting each member of the body represented four or five times—as a church-member, as a member of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, as a Knight of Labor or a member of the Locomotiv Brotherhood, as a Sunday-school scholar, etc., etc., and then adding a few million Roman Catholics because Cardinal Gibbons was induced to write a letter conditionally favoring the scheme. Mrs. Bittenbender, as is usual with folks who think that they know what is good for other people much better than the other people themselvs do, would like to regulate the diet of the Americans, and the church desires to confiscate Sunday, and pledge the national government to maintain schools wherein the principles of the Christian religion shall be taught. Of course, of course; giv the people to the church and hav done with it!

Letters from Friends.

ORILLA, ONT., CAN., Dec. 9, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Do not drop the pictures. They are grand. I will send you one or two more subscribers in a few days.

Respectfully, S. D. MOFFATT.

GRAND LEDGE, MICH., Dec. 2, 289.

MR. EDITOR: I am very busy now, but will do my best to get you some subscribers soon, for I cannot do without the pictures. JAMES W. MOYER.

EVANSVILLE, WIS., Dec 11, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. James Parton's answer to your request about the pictures is what I indorse. I would rather try to circulate the papers here with them left out.

P. F. SPENCER.

FORT GARLAND, COL., Dec. 12, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3.25 for subscription on the good old TRUTH SEEKER and the ANNUAL. Would contribute to the fund to keep the pictures going if I was able to do so, as I think they are a strong argument at a glance.

Fraternally, B. L. SMITH.

GRATTAN, MICH., Dec. 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I would not say a word against Mr. Heston as an artist or his pictures as delineators of the absurdities of orthodoxy, but I believe the money paid for them may be in other ways more profitably used in promoting the cause of Freethought. CONVERSE CLOSE.

SIOUX CITY, IA., Dec. 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER has become a choice piece of furniture of the household, and cannot be dispensed with. Heston's cartoons please us as well as the children. Long life to him as well as the venerable paper they adorn!

Fraternally yours, JASON and GERTRUDE PASSMORE.

HADDAM, KAN., Dec. 14, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: We do not wish the pictures discontinued. I hav made an effort to get a few subscribers, and hav obtained one (find cash and name inclosed) and hav the promis of another soon. Times are very dull just now and money close, and it is hard to get subscribers. ABE PETERSON.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Dec. 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I herewith inclose stamps, for which please send me the ANNUAL, and I also vote for the cartoons, notwithstanding Jas. Parton's severe criticism. I am sure that Heston and his cartoons are doing more to destroy priestcraft than anything that is done by James Parton.

HENRY WALKER.

DELAVAN, MINN, Dec. 16, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Would you do unto THE TRUTH SEEKER as Samson did unto the lion, "rend it in twain?" I think any one who sees the cartoon on the first page of THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 14th will say, Long liv THE TRUTH SEEKER and Brother Heston, and do not forget the cartoons.

Yours fraternally, W. L. HORTON.

NEW HARTFORD, IA., Dec. 10, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to say I am very thankful to James Parton for telling me I ought to be religious—being capable of nothing better. I hav had preachers tell me I ought to be religious, but they never insulted me by adding I was capable of nothing better. Continue the pictures. I never tried it before, but, say, James, let us pray.

MEL PIERCE.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., Dec. 8, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a constant reader of your paper for two years. I cannot do without it. Inclosed find $5 for two subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and we both vote for the Heston illustrations to continue. I expect to liv to see it enlarged, and the center as well as the outside illustrated. Long liv THE TRUTH SEEKER and Watson Heston.

Yours, B. GREENWOOD.

FORT WORTH, TEX., Dec. 12, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I regret to see Mr. James Parton objects to the pictures in your paper. I was repelled by my first sight of them, but I hav become used to them and hav learned to appreciate them. I read them now with satisfaction and profit. I consider them efficient educators, and I hope you will continue them. I shall surely send you one or more subscribers. Respectfully, B ——.

WEST BRIGHTON, N. Y., Dec. 11, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find my mite for the old TRUTH SEEKER, the best of papers.

I see one writer proposes to take a vote on Heston's pictures. I think Heston will win every time. He makes lots of fun, anyway. Of course he cannot suit them all.

I like old Father T. Winter's views. No superstition for me. John Peck is a holy terror. He suits me.

SAML. E. SKINNER.

BURTON CITY, O., Dec. 8, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: After reading THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 7th, it appeared to me that I could address a card to you thanking you for the many able articles contained therein, and especially for E. B. Foote's letter on the new constitution, etc. It is able and to the point. I say amen to it. "Why Am I an Agnostic?" by our colonel, should be committed to memory by our children and rendered as recitations in literary societies. As to the pictures, I would say that I like to see them, but I think I could get Christians to read the paper sooner without them. J. R. ROEBUCK.

TOLEDO, O., Dec. 16, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Please find express order for $1.75 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for six months and ANNUAL. Giv us the pictures as long as you can, as people can read and understand pictures when they cannot understand what they read any other way. It is a good thing for those Bible-lovers, as they never know what the paper contains until they see it illustrated. Heston is a genius, and I will help build him a monument when he dies. I am young yet and may outliv him.

D. W. BATESOLE.

PROVIDENCE, R I., Dec. 18, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: As you wish an expression as regards illustrations. I will say that I think Mr. Parton has about the right idea; that while some such as "The World Still Moves" do very well, there are others that had better be left out and good reading-matter put in their place. You ought to be judge as to whether they hav increased your circulation or not. If not, I would suggest they be dropped. I dare say nearly all your subscribers can tell you how to conduct a paper, but as you are in the business you should know what is for your best interest and be guided accordingly. L. L NORTHUP.

CUSTER CITY, PA., Dec. 2, 289.

MR. EDITOR: I heartily concur in the sentiments expressed by the majority of writers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, most particularly with E. R. Shegogue, of Baltimore, Md. If you wish and expect your paper to be a success, you should discontinue Heston's illustrations; they are vile, horrible, and most shocking to any refined or sensitiv person. Were it not for them, I should never miss a number of THE TRUTH SEEKER, but I dare not let my children see but few of the pictures. On the first page of the 30th November number is an illustration alike offensiv to decency and taste. Let us hav no more of them, for the sake of the great good your paper might otherwise do. MRS. LETTIE FOSTER.

PARIS, ILL., Dec. 9, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose twenty-five cents to pay for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL; please send it as soon as you can.

In my estimation the pictures attract more than they repel; on that account I like them. Perhaps I am only fit to be religious—nothing better. Yet my numerous Christian friends here say I am irreligious. I like Parton, respect his opinions, and honor him for his noble services.

The new departure of the Secular Union meets with my cordial approbation, and the character of its managers givs promis of success. The "vigorous opponents" will all come over soon and harmonious action prevail.

Very respectfully, J. A. WALTHALL.

ROSLYN, WASH., Dec. 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I for my part prefer to hav THE TRUTH SEEKER illustrated in the way that Mr. Heston is doing, but I shall not cease to be a subscriber even if the illustrating is stopped. It seems to me that it costs more to illustrate it than it would to set the same space with type. Mr. Heston is surely not doing his work for nothing. I think that Mr. Heston would be giving the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER a treat if he would giv us a picture of himself. Mr. Heston can hav $5 of my money if he will reproduce all the pictures of THE TRUTH SEEKER and put them in book form. He should publish them in book form once a year.

Yours truly, HENRY BEICHLING.

FORNEY, TEX., Dec. 14, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed post-office order for $9 for books.

Relativ to the pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER, I consider them of great value. I hav shown them to many people. I hav no recollection of a single person failing to show interest, and many hav exhibited the keenest delight. I hav found many to look at the pictures that would not read the paper. A Freethinker that could not enjoy the humor of one of the pictures, and hav his mind thrilled to increased effort against religion by the other, could never occupy a high place in my estimation. I will agree to find you a new subscriber within thirty days. WM. BONDIES.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Dec. 13, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I hand you my check for subscription to Jan. 1, 1889. I hav not the slightest doubt that Mr. Parton is right, the pictures do repel. In my opinion they not only render THE TRUTH SEEKER utterly repellent to the refined and cultivated amongst the orthodox, but to every person who is repelled by excessiv coarseness and vulgarity.

I should like to continue my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, for the valuable information I derive from it as to the progress of intellectual liberty, in which, as a Freethinker, I am deeply interested. For this reason I regret to say that, if Mr. Heston's pictures are to continue, my subscription will cease on the 1st of January next.

Respectfully yours, FREDERICK W. PEABODY.

FILLMORE, NEB., Dec. 11, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 7th came to-day. Glancing over it, the note of Friend Parton struck me. I was struck, too. I had always supposed he thought otherwise in regard to the pictures. I always open it at the post-office, and when I find something short and sharp show it, especially the pictures. The picture of "the ghosts of the unnumbered dead" in this last is worth framing. I showed it the first thing to the postmaster. He agreed it was splendid, though he was one of those who quit on account of the pictures. Of course, some of them do not look particularly striking to me. I do not expect them to suit my glasses all the time. Those that do not suit me will likely suit others. I get my money's worth. Please do not discontinue them.

GEO. C. VEILE, Probate Judge.

FRIENDSHIP, N. Y., Dec. 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 7th inst. has failed to appear. As I read the paper closely, I do not wish to miss a number. Please forward one of said date. I am pleased and proud of the paper. I like the illustrations, because I am not afraid to shock those who constantly villify those who dare think and proclaim the truth. I cannot secure any subscribers here; they will not even read a paper given them. Mrs. Grundy is quite supreme here. Catholicism seems to me the most dangerous factor within this government. Romanism and Rationalism are soon to be the contestants. Will Liberals awaken in time for the rescue?

With all my soul in the cause, GRACE L. PARKHURST.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Nov. 6, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Our Secular Society, of which I am secretary, is getting along nicely. I shall subscribe for the paper soon. Mr. Maddock is stirring things up in these parts. Not long since he and his three daughters, who do the singing, went to Princetown, Minn., and conducted a funeral service. The orthodox there were very much surprised and beaten, for they wanted to see the grand old man, but "Infidel," as they called him, go into the grave "like a dog." The best of it is he left $15,000 to build a Freethinkers' hall, and we are in hopes it may be built in Minneapolis.

Your Thanksgiving cartoon was a good one. Some think it was a little rough, but I do not. LEROY BERRIER,

Secretary Secular Society, Minneapolis.

MOUND CITY, MINN., Dec. 13, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Anent the pictures: Our folks hav never slopped over on the subject of the pictures, still I know a number of very good Liberals—some who are capable of much better things than being religious—who think them of great value. I hav known a number of conversations on Freethought to hav taken place among children based on the subject-matter of the pictures which would never hav taken place unless they had seen the pictures. If they induce children to discuss the matter, they do more, in my opinion, than some much more pretentious works hav done.

James Parton's screed on the subject has done me a service. I used to be afflicted with a disease that some of my Christian friends characterized as Partonolatry. I am better now.

To end with I will say, Not a single caricature of them all is as ugly as the subject it exposes. DR. SHUCK.

MIDDLEFIELD, MICH., Dec. 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I am sorry there are some of your subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER that are opposed to the cartoons. Now, I think every one of them preaches a sermon. But few here will read the paper, but all will look at the pictures, then go for the Bible and find everything correct as quoted, which gets them to thinking, and finally to reading. I hav got you two subscribers, and am trying hard to get more. This is the most orthodox place, perhaps, on the map of the United States. Ten years ago there was not a man that dare pipe Freethought; now I count fifty in a radius of five miles. It is gaining finely. Mr. Remsburg has been here, and gave us two splendid lectures. All hail to the cartoons!

Giv the Spiritualists a corner—not that I am a believer, but consider Spiritualism far superior to orthodoxy.

ANGUS GRIFFIN.

WHEELING, W. VA., Dec. 14, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The pictures were the greatest drawback to my handling THE TRUTH SEEKER. Not because of the subjects they represent, but I must say chiefly from their uncouth and unrefined artistic work. There is a lack of fine art and good taste displayed which many do not understand. To the average eye they are shocking and repulsiv. A lady in Seneca, Kan., told me she had to keep THE TRUTH SEEKER covered up to keep her neighbors from seeing the pictures.

I would not expect the work to be so refined as to please the orthodox Christians, yet it should reach a standard equal at least to the dignity of the paper the pictures are meant to illustrate.

I speak now because you hav brought the policy to an issue, and I do it with the greatest respect for THE TRUTH SEEKER and its able managers If the illustrations are to be continued let us hav a new artist. D. G. CROW.

RYAN, IA., Dec. 10, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Six weeks ago I sent you my subscription, and a few days later had the pleasure of reading the first copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER I had ever seen.

I am very much pleased with your paper and particularly enjoy the illustrations.

I was sorry to read two weeks ago, and again to-day, in December 14th number, that you could not afford to continue them longer unless your subscription list was increased.

I hav been trying to get a new subscriber but as yet hav been unsuccessful. I hope I will soon succeed.

It seems to me the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER should willingly contribute toward sustaining the pictures. I inclose a draft for $1, which please use for that purpose. If every subscriber would send even $1—and many will doubtless feel able to contribute more—there would be no danger of losing the pictures. Yours for a good paper and the illustrations by all means, ARTHUR FLINT.

HIGHLANDS, N. J., Dec. 17, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I will be in the city the last of this month, and will renew my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER for another year, and get the ANNUAL for this year. I don't know as I can get a new subscriber, but if not I am going to do all I can to keep the pictures on the paper with what money I can spare. What would the good old TRUTH SEEKER look like, now, without the pictures? It would look to me as though we were hauling down the flag a little, cannot see why any Freethinker should object to the pictures. I think they are an ornament to the paper, and hope Brother Heston will be able to continue them. If they don't look so nice to the Christian's eye, who thinks the Bible all right, they are very pleasing to us ungodly people who know the Bible to be all wrong. So success and long life to Heston and the pictures, to THE TRUTH SEEKER and its Editor, to Uncle John Peck and all Freethinkers.

CAPT. WM. L. JOHNSON.

MARTINSBURG, W. VA., Dec. 8, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I would like to say a few words with reference to the doings of the Secular Union on October 20th at Philadelphia. Mr. Bohda and I were there with the sole purpose to hear and see, and we indorse both Mr. Foote, Jr., and Dr. Westbrook's defense of the actions of the Congress. If we, the Liberals, want to accomplish anything we must invite all honest people who see the danger of a union of church and state. I am as radical as Dr. Juliet Severance and Mr. Burnham. While I acknowledge their superior learning, I know that men and women without principle are worthless. Too much writing on principle accomplishes nothing. More practical work will accomplish the ends and aims of the American Secular Union.

I do not agree with Mr. James Parton about the pictures. I think they do a great deal of good and set the religious people to thinking. Some would never read the paper if they did not see the pictures, especially those who are not advanced and enlightened. LOUIS WOLFES.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec. 5, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: In my opinion Heston's cartoons are both a help and a hindrance to our cause. The pictures on the first page are, as a rule, to be commended, and I would like to hav them continued if you can see your way clear to do so. But on the other hand, those on the last page are almost always silly, and in many cases rather vulgar. For example, take the last two issues, numbers forty-eight and forty-nine. Nothing could be better than the leading cartoons, more especially the one labeled, "An Unwelcome Pilgrimage." But I fail to see anything particularly attractiv in the Samson pictures. Clever they undoubtedly are, but I am inclined to think they will repel more than they will attract. To my way of thinking, the space they occupy could be used to better advantage by changing the character of the pictures or by adding more "Gems of Thought." But whether the cartoons are continued or not, you can count on me as a reader of your excellent paper, and one who buys it, not borrows it, as some Liberals are prone to do. All of which is respectfully submitted. EDWARDS ROUSSEAU.

ALBION, IND., Dec. 8, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read your editorial about the pictures contained in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I will certainly hav to protest against your discontinuing them. My knowledge of the existence of any but Christian literature up to a few years ago was very limited. And when I at last stumbled onto Ingersoll's gems of thought, it opened to me a new and grander life. My wife investigated with me, and we together, step by step, left the mire of superstition behind us. We hav two boys, one nine, the other twelve. And when, a little less than a year ago, I heard for the first time, that I remember of, of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I sent to you for a copy and then concluded to try it for six months. We all liked it very much, and the boys especially liked Mr. Heston's caricatures. And before our time was up we concluded that we could not do without THE TRUTH SEEKER. So I hav now subscribed for two years. And when I did this I of course thought the pictures were to continue. And now we and the boys especially protest against stopping this most valuable and entertaining feature. J. D. BERGER.

COLUMBUS, KAN., Dec. 14, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I do hope you will keep the pictures running and doing their great work in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It would grieve me much should they cease to make their weekly appearance and do most effectiv and impressiv service in the cause we all love. I think Mr. Heston's ability to transfer his brain pictures, images, conceptions, comparisons, and contrasts to the outer eye and to teach by ocular illustration is superior, and that he should be well supported and kept constantly at work. The true and natural method of teaching in the school-room, and everywhere else, is by pictures, outlines, and visible images of the brain, and changing, if I may so speak, the subjectiv to the objectiv and thus showing the close and indissoluble relation between them. I wish I was able to send $100 or even $1 for this most important purpose. Alas, I hav always been giving till I am now in want! O ye who are able, I hope you will be willing to send from $1 to $5, or more, to sustain noble Watson Heston and his most desirable, efficient work. Do not forget it. It is a great good. PROF. J. H. COOK.

JASPER, ALA., Dec. 11, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: It seems to me if you hav the plates for Heston's cartoons saved, if you would publish them in book form and giv one page of explanation for each, they would sell, and be the means of aiding to continue the same.

The Christians claim all the civilization of this age has been brought about by them and mostly in the last one hundred years. Now if they will change the word "Christian" to "science" they will be near the truth. In 1815 there were thirty-nine wives exposed for public sale, like cattle, at Smithfield, England. In Shropshire a well-looking woman, wife of John Hall, to whom she had been married only one month, was brought by him in a halter, and sold at auction, in the market, for two shillings and sixpence, with the addition of sixpence for the rope with which she was led. Christianity had been practiced eighteen hundred years and was the state religion there and then. And they hav the audacity to claim the civilization of this age. I hope Heston will keep at work with the cartoons until they giv science her dues. J. K. DEARTH.

ST. JOHNS, ARIZ., Dec. 10, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The inclosed is my communication to the St. Johns Herald, published November 28th. The Herald is a secular newspaper, non-religious in every particular; and I for one think the Rational element, i.e., Freethinkers, Agnostics, etc., should express their views, as far as possible, in the secular press of the country, by which means they may be able to reach many people that otherwise would not see or hear the truth. A. F. BANTA.

NEW YORK, Dec. 9, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 7th James Parton objects to the cartoons or illustrations of superstition, ancient and modern. They remind him, he says, of the pictures in Christian books of former times. Exactly, they do me. My Sabbath-school books were filled with pictures of devils, black, with hoof and horn. The effect on my youthful mind was somewhat weakened by my being educated in a progressiv democratic family of the Jeffersonian school. But not so with the generality of children with whom I was surrounded, who had not my home advantages. Yet I admit they were not without a certain effect.

The ridicule in which the superstition of the Christian, handed down from barbarous ages, is thrown by THE TRUTH SEEKER cartoons, is more effectiv than all its solid reading matter. I am sorry it is so, but such is the fact. The cartoons are shots that ring the bell every time. The average man cannot endure ridicule, neither will he read what he terms prosy matter, but he grasps the cartoons and goes away thinking for the first time in his life. My practical experience with THE TRUTH SEEKER has convinced me of this fact. GEO. M. DAVENPORT.

NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME, WIS., Dec. 8, A.S. 289.

MR. EDITOR: Although I regret exceedingly to become personal, yet in this case it seems indispensable. If our semi-Liberal friend, E. R. Shegogue, of Baltimore, doesn't like to see Heston's illustrations in THE TRUTH SEEKER, why in the name of the fellow with the "keys" doesn't he hide his head in the bosom of the church where he cannot see 'em? The Liberal who finds himself in no way aggressiv, should never attempt to fight this mythical monstrosity, this blighting scourge of civilization, old hell-fire Christianity.

Our "milk-and-water" friend suggests that your subscribers vote for or against the continuance of the illustrations. What good would that do? The veriest fool that ever said in his heart, There is a God, knows that we would outvote the Shegogue party a thousand to one. And yet, what good would that do? It surely would not help the Editor to continue the pictures. Now the question remains to be answered, Will Liberals who hav the means stand by and see the life and heart cut out of our glorious old TRUTH SEEKER? When the pictures are gone, half the paper is gone, and then, my friends, who can vouch for the other half? Verily, Liberalism must be on the decline, when the Editor of the best Liberal paper on earth is driven to the humiliating necessity of, not only reducing his paper, but of asking repeatedly for his honest dues. Yours for the pictures,

NELSON HUNT.

KANSAS CITY, MO., Dec. 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I see in your last TRUTH SEEKER that you wish opinions on Mr. Heston's pictures. Well, I like them, but I do not think, as Mr. Parton does, that I am capable of nothing better than being a Christian just because I do like them. I like to see Mr. Heston's pictures because they tell as much as a great many can tell with their pens; and, as Mr. Heston perhaps makes a living by his pictures, I do not believe he should be obliged to giv up his work just to please a few, if they are great men. Another person saw something low and vulgar about those pictures. He is Mr. E. R. Shegogue. Now, this man must hav a penetrating eye to see anything vulgar about Mr. Heston's pictures. It is my opinion that the pictures are no drawback to the paper. I am reading THE TRUTH SEEKER and paying for it, and it was those same pictures that called my attention to the paper as I was passing Mr. A. B. Fox's store, and I am reading the paper ever since. In my opinion, Mr. Parton has the wrong impression this time, and he should take a nap; perhaps he will think better of us people that like pictures after he wakes up. I am a Liberal, and therefore I wish Mr. Heston to hav a show to express his views in his pictures as well as others hav with their pen. Do not think you are Liberals, my friends, unless you can listen to everyone's arguments, whether they be in pictures or writing or by word of mouth.

Wishing success to THE TRUTH SEEKER and all other Freethought papers and the Secular Union, I remain,

Your friend, JOHN R. NIELAND.

HUBBARD'S COVE, N. S., Dec. 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Herewith find twenty-five cents for which please send me the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1890 when issued. I would like to see Ingersoll's "Why Am I an Agnostic?" adorn its pages. This last from the noble colonel is excellent. It puts almost "everything in a nutshell." I look forward to Saladin's article, "Mostly Fools," with much relish.

As you ask for an expression of opinion on the subject of the pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER, I take this opportunity to giv mine. The illustrations or cartoons on the first page, where a good political or religious hit is often made or a telling blow delivered at orthodoxy in its relation to some prominent question of the hour, I do not object to but rather like, and I know several of your readers that appreciate them. But to those biblical illustrations on the last page depicting the "good old patriarchs" in such outrageous looks and styles, I do object. In fact, I do not see any sense in them or how they can "point a moral or adorn a tale," except the monkey's that so often appears upon the scene. These pictures, with the Irish-looking Hebrews, can only excite laughter, nothing more. I see the London Freethinker has abandoned its pictures, which were in the same line, though much worse. In pictures as well as writings, our endeavor should be to convince instead of repel. Those on the first page, so long as they assume a not over-exaggerated character, I hope to see continued. Watson Heston shows great cleverness in some of these. Submitting the above in all respect and wishing you, not a merry Christmas, but a happy and prosperous New Year, I remain, Yours truly, A. W. SHATFORD.

NEW YORK, Dec. 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The terrible threat that you hold forth in your number dated December 14th, against suffering humanity, that you will continue the cartoons if you get "insulted" by five hundred new names on your list, prompts me to protest against such cold-blooded cruelty, and petition that mercy stay your hand. No one would more gladly see the circulation of your paper increase, not only by five hundred, but by five hundred fold, than myself, but I do not think the cartoons help in any way to attain the desired end, the reasons for this conviction being expressed in the following gentle hints.

To begin with—and this holds throughout—the execution of the drawings, from an artistic standpoint, is beneath criticism; a competent artist, looking at any one of them, could point out any number of glaring errors.

The subjects chosen, although occasionally good and witty, can only be repellent to Christians. When doing missionary work among "Christian friends," I can only cut out the articles I wish them to read. By so doing you miss the chance opportunities of the rest of the paper. It is like firing a bullet instead of a storm of grape-shot. For Freethinkers and their children, as object-lessons, they are far less effectiv than the, alas, too numerous living object-lessons that command our commiseration and indignation.

Lastly, it is a waste of 91.05 square inches of valuable space which could be filled up with something better, such, for instance, as the lectures of Mr. Alexander Wilder, or Mr. J. E. Remsburg, before the Manhattan Liberal Club, printed verbatim. This would, to my mind, be far more to the benefit of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S circulation, and would not grate on the tender nerves of "THE WORM THAT TURNS.

GRIDLEY, KAN., Dec. 4, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just returned from church, a place to which I hav not been before for years. The Methodist people here are trying to move both heaven and earth to get a revival under headway, and the pastor in the course of his remarks said that once upon a time, when Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll had returned to his home in Peoria, Ill., having been absent on a lecturing tour, he met a brother lawyer by the name of Loutz, and inquired of Loutz how he was getting along with his Sunday-school in the country. Loutz's reply was, "Very well." Then Ingersoll said, "Well, Brother Loutz, what is your idea about hell, anyway?" Whereupon Loutz said to Ingersoll, "I will propound five questions which you shall answer, and you may propound the same number and I will answer." And Ingersoll said, "I will do it." Lawyer Loutz said to Ingersoll, "Are you really conscientious in your lecturing and talking against the church and the Christian?" Ingersoll's reply was that he was not conscientious in his writing, his lecturing, and talking against the Christian. I once traveled a hundred and fifty miles to hear Colonel Ingersoll deliver his lecture, "What Must We Do to be Saved?" I hav heard him on several other occasions, and hav read every book, so far as I hav knowledge, that he has given the public, and must say that I felt in my heart that if ever a man was in earnest or conscientious in his work, it is Ingersoll. What this Methodist pastor said to-night is true or it is false. If it is the latter, I desire to hav it denied by Mr. Ingersoll, either through THE TRUTH SEEKER or in any other way so it may reach me. You can help me to the needed information. Do it in your own best way. If I had the address of the colonel, I should hav written him personally. At first I thought this may seem "not worth the powder," as the saying goes; yet we must not stand for what we do not believe; and the time to get in our work is at times like this, and whenever opportunity offers stop their lying, slanderous mouths. If you expect our cause to prosper, and hav the grand old TRUTH SEEKER kept going, you must come to the help of, not the Lord, but those who in their small way too are trying to fight the battles of right and freedom.

I herewith send pay for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1890.

I vote to keep the pictures going. They catch both young and old, especially the former. I can see nothing "vile" about them. Fraternally, C. H. CUSTENBORDER.

[We would not insult Colonel Ingersoll by asking him if the preacher's story be true. He is an honorable man, and we know that preachers do lie. It is a question therefore, which is more probable—that an honorable man would be a hypocrit or that a preacher would lie. The story is unquestionably false.—ED. T. S.]

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Reign of Reason.

Rocked in the treetops of fancy by wavering breezes of doubt;
Dipped in the fount of Minerva, then embellished and drifted about;
Bathed in the dew of the morning and made pure
by the light of the sun;
Past is the reign of grim error and the epoch of reason's begun.

Daughter of justice, draw nearer, sweetly play on the strings of thy lyre;
Tuning the hopes and reflections and revealing
the beauties so fair;
Charm with the strains of thy music all the good and the true of mankind,
Sing with the glory of ages for bold truth and the freedom of mind.

Climbing the steeps of the future are the lovers of virtue and right;
Lining the path to the summit are the roses of freedom and light.
Once on the summit of reason, far below are the clouds and the storms;
All is perpetual sunshine, that the trouble of living transforms.

Glittering lights of the gleaming from the summit are shining at last;
Records of ages are teeming with the infinit wrongs of the past.
Liv for the good of the living, while the past may revel with its own.
Love, and be loved by the loving, and the essence of living is known.

Richland, S. D. LOUIS N. CRILL, JR.

A Visit to Philadelphia.—Concluded.

You've heard of Wanamaker's store. Well, it is a big store, and no mistake, occupying one whole square, and there you can buy anything you want, from a pin to a parlor set.

A little girl went there one day to buy a baby brother. The clerk supposed she wanted a doll, and directed her to the doll counter. She was shown all sorts of dolls, little and big.

"But I want one that will cry and say, 'Ah, goo, goo!' and double up its fists and slat round, and kick."

"We don't keep that kind for sale," smiled the clerk.

The little girl pouted. "They told me you could buy everything at Wanamaker's."

Wanamaker is our postmaster-general, a very rich man, but not rich enough in mind to regard the rights of the whole people. There are four thousand employees in his big store, and he pays the girl clerks about half the sum paid the men, though they work the same hours and just as hard. Do you think that's justice?

I must not omit to tell you about our call on Sada Bailey and Horace Fowler on Arch street, where they make, by a new process, pure and healthy bread. It is a great thing to make nice light bread without yeast or fermentation, and that is what they do. Sada Bailey Fowler is a sweet and lovely lady who charms you with her radiant smile, and says "thee," and "thou," as a bird warbles love-notes to his mate. She is a writer and a thinker, you know, and where do you suppose her sanctum is? She did not tell me not to tell, and so I'll whisper it to you. It is away up ever so many flights, as many as four or five, I should think, anyway, out on top of the roof! Isn't that an idea? The stroller, the scolder, and the bore can't find a way there, and there my lady can sit and write without interruption, with blue sky overhead, and serene silence all around; when she is tired she can swing in the hammock, watch the clouds go sailing by, and take long flights of fancy herself if she wants to. Horace is a worker, too, as well as Sada, and turns out "gems" fit for the gods to eat. I mean the gods in men and women, the best kind of gods.

We had to leave the Fowlers and Philadelphia at last, and do not think I've told you a quarter that I saw and learned there, for I havn't and couldn't in these hasty sketches.

We came to New York in a rainstorm, and it just poured right down all day, all that night, and all the next day, which was Sunday. I was suffering from a fierce cold and I dared not face the storm, so we, Bethia and I, stayed in the hotel all day. It was useless to be mad at the elements, or at anything or any person. I had planned, you know, to hear Felix Adler and Pentecost, and to shake hands with Henry George as I hav with the ideas of these good men before. Instead, Bethia and I could only look out of the windows and watch the rain, the good-looking conductors on the elevated road, and the workmen beneath repairing the street on Sunday.

The horses were shy of the place where the paving-stones were removed, and did not want to pass it. One cautious animal would jump the distance every time. Don't horses know?

It was amusing to notice a pair of bony animals watch a span of fat, sleek bays. They seemed to express by looks,

As you are now, so once were we;
As we are now, so you must be.

Mr. Adams went out in the rain, but he has the advantage of wearing men's clothes instead of petticoats, draggling and tangling around his ankles. At dinner we were greatly interested in a family of five children, who had come all the way from Ireland with their mamma, and were going to join their papa on a farm in Kansas. Their ages were from three to twelve, and they were so bright, wide-awake, and handsome, I could not keep my eyes off them, except when I stopped to inspect an itinerant young cockroach and to hasten his departure to the bourne from whence no traveling cockroach ever returns.

The next morning dawned bright and sunny, and we went out to the Battery to see the ships come in. There were none in sight, however, and we sauntered around Castle Garden, and watched the splashing waves dash upon the "cold gray stones," as they sang, in their way, their own old songs.

There were a number of men and boys about, idlers lounging on the seats, and gazing listlessly on the water. Their dress indicated that most of them had not been long from the old countries. They had good faces, and they were brothers. I felt so.

Then we went up Broadway. Everybody hurries in New York, and, first thing you know, the stranger is rushing on for dear life too. Bethia said she appreciated what the country woman said to her husband, when passing down Broadway the first time: "Let's go in here, John, and wait till the procession gets past." It would be a weary waiting, for the tide of humanity seemed unceasing.

We called at THE TRUTH SEEKER office just a few brief minutes or two, and not near as long as we wanted to stay, for a half dozen errands were before us. We only finished our business soon enough to reach the splendid steamer Pilgrim in time to embark for Fall River.

On the boat we met several friends, and the evening passed very agreeably. When we awoke in the morning we were at the dock; it was not long thereafter before we were at home and I, at this same desk, answering the first on a heap of letters that had accumulated in my absence. We had a pleasant visit, Bethia and I, and met many dear friends, but after all is said and done, "There is no place like home." S. H. W.

Correspondence.

DALEVILLE, IND., Dec. 9, 1889.

MISS WIXON, Dear Friend: As I saw so many correspondents for the Corner, I thought I would write, too. Papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for a long time. We are about the only Freethinkers in Daleville. A young girl came to our house the other day, and got to talking about Infidels, and we began arguing. She wanted to pray for me. I told her to go to work, and she backed square out and said she would pray for me at prayer-meeting. I told her all right, I would be there to hear it. I went, but she did not make her appearance. They had singing here at the Christian church last evening. They sang one song I did not like very well; part of it,

Infidels won't dare to come around
Where the angels stand.

And they also said,

Ingersoll will not be there
Where the angels stand.

As I hav not any more, I will close.
Yours truly, ROSA REMSBURG.

SUGAR RUN, PA., Dec. 3, 1889.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Dear Friend: Considerable time has elapsed since I hav addressed a letter to the Children's Corner.

It is always with great expectations that I await the arrival of the grand TRUTH SEEKER. Besides reading the correspondence and short epistles on various subjects in the Children's Corner, I always read, with great pleasure, articles in different parts of the paper.

I was just reading in the old TRUTH SEEKERS of 1881-2, where Mr. D. M. Bennett, the founder and editor, was on his trip around the world, and had just written such an interesting letter from Tokio, Japan. When in Egypt he took a bath in the river Nile, and in writing to his friends on this continent told them as the day was so bright he thought he would take a bath in that river. He says: "You see, I had never bathed in the Nile on my birthday, and never before seen sixty-three years of age. Perhaps I ought to do something unusual on such an occasion as this, and possibly, too, it is my duty to bathe in all the 'holy rivers' I meet on my journey around the world."

On November 28th we had the pleasure of hearing Mr. J. E. Remsburg, the Liberal speaker, deliver a lecture on the "Sunday Question." His argument was undeniable, and one that I shall not forget. Mr. Remsburg had a good audience considering the fact that there were two dances in town and Thanksgiving services at three churches. Mr. Remsburg is the first Liberal speaker that I ever heard, but I hope he will not be the last one. I should be delighted to again hear Mr. Remsburg under more favorable circumstances. He set one Methodist to thinking, and this is joy enough, surely, to emanate from the first Liberal lecture in town.

Your Liberal friend,
FRANCES BURNEY MORRISON.

TALENT, ORE., Nov. 5, E.M. 289.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON: I want to tell you about my pets. I hav a dog by the name of Wiggler; his first name was Brave, but he wriggled so much when we petted him that we called him Wriggle, then Wrig, and then Wig. Papa calls him Vig, because he, papa, is a German. We often call Wig Beauty, because he is very homely. I hav a little harness and wagon. I hitch him up, and he pulls Jay Terrill and myself as fast as he can gallop. He will sit up straight while we say a prayer. He is very glad when "Jesus Christ, amen" comes, so you see he is no Christian dog. My aunt says she is teaching him to pray, so he will not hav to go to jail when the God people get God in the Constitution.

I go after the mail with Wig. I dress him in trousers, shirt, and coat for fear Comstock will be stepping off the train to see to our mails. In the summer I often only put his trousers on. This is one of his prayers:

The law condemns the man or woman
Who steals the goose off from the common,
But lets the greater culprit loose
Who steals the common from the goose.

Wig speaks when we hold up some food, carries in wood, takes the food to the chickens, leads one of our horses, climbs up on top of papa's blacksmith shop, runs cats up trees and follows them if there is a little slant, sits in the buggy seat and holds the lines, and sits in his little wagon-seat and I haul him. I hav just measured him. He is twenty-two inches high, and thirty-nine inches from the tip of his nose to the end of his tail. I guess I will stop about my dog, but I think you and the children will think as I do, that I hav a very smart dog.

My old Cotsin that I wrote to you about two years ago is five years old now. The relations between my dog and cat are very much like those between the Christian and wide-awake Infidel; you will know how that is.

Now I will tell you about my studies. When I wrote to you before I was not studying at all. Mamma and papa will not let me go to the public school. I am going to start at interest in Fish's Arithmetic No. 1 to-morrow. I practice writing thirty minutes every day, and sometimes more. I hav been through Monteith's Elementary Course in Geography once, and pretty near through again. I study Swinton's and Watson's spellers and Henderson's Test Words, and hav just started Ridpath's History. I like it very much. I read the Children's Corner every week in THE TRUTH SEEKER, Chicago Express "Column for the Young," "Children's Department" in the Carrier Dove, New Thought (when there is any), Farm and Fireside, and all other stories that I find are good. Well, I guess you will be tired reading so much from one little boy, but I would like to tell you about the wheelbarrows, guns, knives, windmills, and lots of other things I make. But good-bye for this time from a little Infidel. I am ten years old. HENRY W. BEESE.

[A letter from Henry will always be welcome.—ED. C. C.]

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 333pp., $1.25.

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

Ingersoll and the Deist.

BY
A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."

Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

MATERIALISM AND CRIME.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 5 cents.

AN OUTLINE OF THE
French Revolution
ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.
By W. S. BELL.
Paper, 12mo, 25 cents.

MORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

IMMORTALITY OF ITS ELEMENTS.
By A. S. de Pellegrini.
Paper, - - - 15 cents.

PHILOSOPHY of SPIRITUALISM

AND TREATMENT OF MEDIOMANIA.
By F. R. Marvin, M.D.
Cloth, . . . 50 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY.

By VOLTAIRE.
Terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of theological terms.
Price, 25 cents.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY EXPOSED.

By REV. G. T. FOX, M.A.
15 cents.

PRO AND CON OF Supernatural Religion.

Have We a Supernatural, Inspired, Miraculous Religion?
By E. E. GUILD.
Paper, 20 cents; cloth, 30 cents.

PYRAMID OF GIZEH.

Ancient Egyptian Civilization and Hebrew Narrative in Genesis and Exodus.
By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D.
Price, 15 cents.

QUESTION SETTLED.

BIBLICAL and MODERN SPIRITUALISM.
By MOSES HULL.
Price, 60 cents.

Rational Communism.

THE PRESENT AND FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.
Advocates associate life and employment as a preventive of vice, crime, poverty, etc.
By A CAPITALIST.
Paper, 498pp., 50 cts.; clo., $1.

Relation of Witchcraft to Religion.

By A. C. LYALL.
Price, 10 cents.

Fruits of Philosophy.

POPULATION QUESTION.
By Dr. Knowlton. Edited by Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant.
25 cents.

TRUTH. A Poem. By E. N. Kingsley. 10 cents.

POVERTY: Its Cause and Cure.

How the Poor May Attain Comfort and Independence.
By M. G. H.
Price, . . 10 cents.

Religion of Inhumanity.

With a Glance at the Religion of Humanity.
BY FREDERIC HARRISON.
Price, 15 cents.

RELIGION:

The Gibraltar of the World, as Now Constituted.
By George T. Bondies.
With
Exceptions to the Character of Christ as a Gentleman.
By W. T. Purviance.
25 cents.

IMAGE BREAKER.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Six Lectures.
Decline of Faith.
Protestant Intolerance.
Washington an Unbeliever.
Jefferson an Unbeliever.
Paine and Wesley.
Christian Sabbath.
Each, 5 cents; bound, pap., 25 cents; per doz., 40.

SABBATH BREAKING.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Price, 25 cents.

St. Matthew Before the Court

FOR THE CRIME OF FORGERY.
By SECULARIST.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.

Including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, Bible.
By D. M. BENNETT.
(From Vol. II. "Gods and Religions.")
333pp., pap., 60 c.; clo., $1.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 558 West Madison st., Room 1, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.
Horace Haynes, Leslie.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 331 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.
C. Stocker, 29 Vauxhall Road, Liverpool.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N. S. W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

The Individualist.

A LIBERAL AND REFORM JOURNAL, ADVOCATING SOCIAL REGENERATION AND INDUSTRIAL EMANCIPATION.

Devoted to the rational exposition of the philosophy of Freedom, mental, moral, and physical; social, industrial, and sexual. Commands the pens of the best writers in America on these subjects. Sixteen pages. $2 per year. Trial subscription three months, 50 cents. Each yearly subscriber will receive a copy of Mr. Stuart's book, "Natural Rights, Natural Liberty, and Natural Law." Address F. Q. STUART, Editor and Proprietor, 1653 Blake street, Denver, Col.

THIRD EDITION.

BIBLE MYTHS;

AND THEIR PARALLELS IN OTHER RELIGIONS:

BEING A

Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity,

CONSIDERING ALSO THEIR ORIGIN AND MEANING.

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.

[Heathen Illustration of the Temptation.]

The Bundehesh (a sacred book of the Persians,) states that Ahuramazda after creating the first man and woman, Mashya and Mashyana, bade them "to be humble of heart; to observe the law; to be pure in their thoughts, pure in their speech, pure in their actions." But an evil demon came to them in the form of a Serpent, sent by Ahriman, the prince of devils, and gave them fruit of a wonderful tree, which imparted immortality. Evil inclinations then entered their hearts, and all their moral excellence was destroyed. Consequently they fell, and forfeited the eternal happiness for which they were destined. They killed beasts, and clothed themselves in their skins.

BIBLE MYTHS shows this to be the origin of the Hebrew story.

1 Vol. 8vo., cloth, about 600 Pages. Price, $2.50.

Sent post-paid by the TRUTH SEEKER.

GIRARD'S WILL AND Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE
MARTYRDOM OF MAN.
A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.
You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.
His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.
The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE
Cosmian Hymn Book,

A COLLECTION OF
Original and Selected Hymns
(Words and Music)
For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY
L. K. WASHBURN.

PRICE, . . . $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LOOKING BACKWARD
By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

HOW TO Strengthen the Memory,

OR,

NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.

The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order.'
Price by mail $1.

Parturition Without Pain.

By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Godey's Lady's Book says: "We giv our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY

AND HYGIENE, or, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN. Carefully revised edition, with 111 illustrations. The most perfect book for men and women ever published. 50,000 sold. Price $2, by mail. Illustrated catalog free.

Marriage and Parentage.

In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations and in Their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.

By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

The Scientific American says: "This work is scientific, sober, clean, and worthy of conscientious consideration by every possible parent, and particularly by the young." $1.

EATING FOR STRENGTH;

OR,

FOOD AND DIET IN RELATION TO HEALTH AND WORK.

The New York Herald says: "Dr. Holbrook's book is among the very best of its kind."
The Home and Garden says: "A study of this book will enable any intelligent reader to make a choice of food which may save the cost of the book every day in providing for a family, besides increasing health, strength, and longevity." $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FAITH AND REASON.

A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.

With elaborate index.

By HALSEY R. STEVENS.

A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained n such compact form.—[Literary Review.

Extra cloth. 12mo. 441 pp., $1.50.

ANTICHRIST.

PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

BLASPHEMY AND THE BIBLE.

By C. B. REYNOLDS.

Price, 5 cents.

The Agnostic Annual
FOR 1890.
Edited by CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS.

Agnosticism and Immortality.....Samuel Laing.
A Sonnet.....Joseph Ellis.
Who Was Moses?..H. J. Hardwicke, M.D., F.R.C.S.
The Comfort of Agnosticism.....E. Lynn Linton.
Are Miracles Credible?...Constance C. W. Naden.
The Contest Between Agnosticism and Theology, John Wilson, M.A.
Above: A Poem.....W. Stewart Ross.
The Evolution of the Agnostic Idea, R. Bithell, B.Sc., Ph.D.
The New Fatalism.....B. Russell.
Descartes's Proof of the Existence of a God, F. J. Gould.
A Poem.....W. B. McTaggart.
The Free Expression of Opinions..G. F. Underhill.
Fragments.....William Maccall.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

TRY-SQUARE;
OR,
The Church of Practical Religion.
BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

ICHABOD CRANE PAPERS.
Daringly witty and inexpressibly laughable onslaughts on Christianity.
Price, 10 cents.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.

It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Sixteen pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $2. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, 3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only 1.50.
SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.
SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.
HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.
SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.
HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.

VINELAND, N.J.

Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

The Liberty of Printing, and Reply.

By HURLBUT and WAKEMAN.

Price, 10 cents.

Poetry.

Agnostic Philosophizing.

[An extract from an unfinished poem, entitled, "My Ramblings Along the Boundary of Human Knowledge."]

Whatever may, or may not, be the lot
Of conscious being when the soul has fled!
What life is to the living death is not;
And life seems not what death is to the dead.

Men reason much, and talk in learned ways,
On the condition of what is to be;
And fix conclusions in their paraphrase
Upon the nature of all mystery:

But grant no limit, to our knowledge here,
In time and space relations, or in kind;
But if increased sufficiently, makes clear
The total of all knowledge to the mind.

Thus men make angels, and the angels gods,
By adding "limited" to limitation;
At last arriving at the "end of odds,"
Between "unlimited" and fixed relation.

Yet men will argue, and insist on showing
Their power to grapple ultimate design;
To know a part, at least, of the unknowing,
And fix all attributes of the divine.

But knowledge such as ours, based on cognition,
Increased by any quantity we will,
Does not approach our limiting condition,
But leaves the great unknown the unknown still.

Life, as we know it, seems to be dependent
Upon some fact not changed by parting breath;
Some dual "entity," some great transcendent
"Embodiment," including life and death.

The past and future are but dreams of "living;"
Vague dreams that hav no real facts to show;
The "present," only, that experience giving
That we call life, from whence cognitions flow.

Our thoughts, to us, are functions of the present,
Albeit they may center in the past;
Behind the interoluded state, pubescent,
Be something else to something else recast.

Born to the "present," from the state behind us,
Through interchanged relations from within;
The functions of the past no longer bind us,
But cease to hold as if they had not been.

And memory, through that interchanged "relation,"
Has no specific knowledge to impart;
But vague presentiments, that from some station
Somewhere, and somehow, life has had a start.

Our "personality" seems carried over,
Not subject to the fluxions change creates;
While our "experiences" can only cover
The separate changes in the separate states.

The change behind us, and the change before,
Show but the fact included in "to be;"
And separate states, including separate lore,
The nature of our "relativity."

ANONYMOUS

New Publications.

Unless otherwise specified, all publications noticed here can be had of THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, at the prices named.

The American Secular Union has printed its Constitution and the Nine Demands in a neat little blue-covered pamphlet which can be had of the Corresponding Secretary, at 930 N. 17th st., Philadelphia, Pa.

"The Legend of Gautama Buddha" will interest all our readers. It is the story of Buddha's miraculous conception, birth, and life, and what the Buddhists believe of him. No one can read it without feeling that he knows the origin of the Christian parallel myth. It is a splendid little tract to hand around among believers. Price, 5 cents.

The North American Review for December contains, besides Part I of Colonel Ingersoll's "Why Am I An Agnostic?" articles on Divorce by W. E. Gladstone, Judge Bradley of the supreme court, and Senator Dolph of Oregon. The other articles are by equally eminent writers on various topics, and the Review amply fulfills the promises made by the new management.

Certain newspapers are announcing a series of articles on the Civil War, by Lord Wolseley, which it is said "will appear in an American magazine." They hav appeared. They were begun in the May number of the North American Review, and are concluded in the December number of that periodical. More than this, they hav been comprehensivly reviewed by Gen. James B. Fry, in the same magazine, and hav been noticed by almost every paper in the country.

Herbert Spencer was recently quoted in the London Times as favoring the nationalization of land, which drew out a letter from him repudiating the doctrin as ascribed to him. This led to a lively discussion, in which Professor Huxley, Sir Louis Mallett, and others took part, and a variety of views on the general question were expressed. The correspondence will be printed in the January Popular Science Monthly, under the title of "Letters on the Land Question."

Theosophists and others interested in Indian philosophy will find much to interest them in the Vedantin, which is a journal of Advaita doctrin, published for $1.75, at Saidapet, Madras, India. The "Vedanta in Christ's Teachings" is a pamphlet (10 cents) showing that those who composed the doctrins of Jesus found in the synoptic gospels were plagiarists from the Indian philosophers, and that Christianity is Paulism rather than Christism. Address "Proprietor Vedantin, Saidapet (Madras), India."

"The Credibility of the Christian Religion," is a little pamphlet by Samuel Smith, M. P., who thinks that as a business man he can do the world good by spreading his arguments in favor of his religion. He tells us what God "had to bear in mind" when he wrote the Bible, proves the stories in one portion of the book by the assertions of another portion of the work, and generally argues like an illogical, assertiv Christian who has read only orthodox authorities. The price of the book is not given, nor the place where it can be obtained.

"The Myth of the Great Deluge," by James M. McCann, first published in the Freethinkers' Magazine and now reprinted in neat pamphlet form, is one of the very best considerations of that sacred happening ever given to the American public. It goes into the subject in detail and proves in something less than ten thousand ways that the story of the Deluge is indeed nothing but a myth, and not a very ingenious lie either. A copy of the book ought to be in the hands of every Freethinker, and he ought to loan it to every one of his Christian neighbors. Price, 15 cents; ten copies, $1.

Mrs. Ottilie Bertron, of 3,929 Locust street, Philadelphia. Pa., has written and published a "Review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's Attacks Upon Christianity." The price is 35 cents. The valuable character of Mrs. Bertron's book is seen in this line: "Common sense and logic are faculties unknown to the Atheists." The rest of the book is just as good as that, and some of it better, for instance this: "Nature does hav a master, therefore the Bible is true." Altogether, the book is what we might call dogmatic idiocy, suitable for believers of the caliber of Sam Jones. No rational Christian even would waste time in reading it.

Agnostics who hold with Spencer that there is an Unknowable, which makes for righteousness, and from which all things proceed, will desire to possess R. Bithell's pamphlet, published by Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, London, E. C., entitled "The Worship of the Unknowable." Mr. Bithell admits that his Unknowable is an abstraction, something like Mrs. Grundy, but thinks there is no difficulty in loving or hating it, any more than is encountered in submitting to Dame Grundy's behests. People wanting a God, with modern improvements, and with as few unobjectionable traits as possible, can apply for this pamphlet. Price, 15 cents.

The Bruno Pamphlet No. 2 contains these things: 1. A magnificent, perfect, full-page photographic illustration of the Bruno monument as it stands in the city of Rome; 2. "Giordano Bruno," by Robert G. Ingersoll; 3. "Why Was Bruno Murdered?" by George Jacob Holyoake; 4. "Reason at Rome and Romanism in America," by T. B. Wakeman; 5. "Professor Bovio's Address," translated by Prof. Thomas Davidson; 6. "Italia," a poem, by Hudson Tuttle; 7. "The Publisher's Explanation," why this illustration of the monument is different from the previous one that appears in Bruno Pamphlet No. 1; 8. A perfect corrected list of the American contributors to the monument fund. The price of this pamphlet is 15 cents a single number, ten numbers for $1.

N. D. C. Hodges, 47 Lafayette place, publishes the "Popular Manual of Vocal Physiology and Visible Speech," by Alexander Melville Bell, price 50 cents. This work, says the author, gives a complete view of the actions of the vocal organs, and the resulting elements of speech. The object of the work is to popularize a knowledge of vocal physiology and visible speech, and to furnish a text-book by means of which these subjects may be taught in schools and colleges. The mastery of spoken languages, the exact acquirement of nativ or foreign pronunciation, and the correction or removal of defects and impediments of utterance, will be accomplished by means of the science of speech, as here expounded. It may be doubted if a study of the book will do all this, but that it will be useful to the teacher and student is without question.

When Mr. John Davey sent a box of "Barmcott's Golden Celery" here, he accompanied it with a 10-cent pamphlet entitled, "The Union and Its Flag;" also with a poem. The poetry is by no means as good as the celery, but the address on the Union is as patriotic as could be expected of a comparativly recently naturalized Britisher, and a good deal more so than some nativ Americans would compose. Mr. Davey appreciates the blessings of this great and glorious and free America to quite their full extent. He also understands that education is the keystone to the republican arch, and that Roman Catholicism and fanatical Protestantism of the National Reform Association sort are the pressing dangers to the country. For the rest, the address is Mr. Davey's sentiments, and the book can be had of him at Kent, O.

Mr. P. A. Graves, "professor of astrology," has written a book which he calls "Evolution and Reproduction," designed principally, we judge, to boom the trade in astrological chart-making. His claim that his work is without a parallel in science is true, for science doesn't deal with the quackery of astrology; but his further claim that "all things pertaining to life are explained by planetary influence," and that astrology is a guide to the production of children with any desired amount of intellectual ability, is humbug of the purest kind. "Magnetic force," by which Mr. Graves explains a great deal more than he really knows, is a term used to delude the uneducated, and cover up his own ignorance of the cause and method of natural action. The book is not worth one-quarter of the $2 asked for it, and the chart given to each purchaser is worth still less than the book. Mr. Graves does business at 921 Market street, San Francisco.

By looking over the long list of Liberal papers and books advertised in your paper, and considering that comparativly few of that class now in existence are listed therein, one must come to the conclusion that Freethought has made considerable advancement the last twenty-five or thirty years; for prior to that time but few such books and papers were known. Among the books advertised, I hav read quite a number, and find them superb; and among them are the works of that noble, persevering, and persecuted Liberal worker, Mrs. Slenker. I was so well pleased with her books that I bought extra copies and mailed them to relativs. Some people are too bigoted to investigate, and will not even read scripture if detached from their old Jewish God-book. Others would investigate could Liberal matter be put into their hands free of cost. I think every Liberal who is able would do well to procure suitable Liberal books and loan them to his Christian neighbors. WM. HART.

Kirksville, Mo., Dec. 5, 1889.

Fritänkaren, the official organ of our brethren in Sweden, is bright and spicy as ever. Excellent translations from English and American Freethinkers, pointed editorial remarks and articles showing the learning and undoubted courage of Brother V. Lennstrand, who even from his prison cell continues to fight the battle against superstition and tyranny, inspiring poetry, prose contributions of real merit, and foreign Freethought news—all this, besides accounts of the doings of Ulilistiska Samfundets (a Swedish Liberal society), constitute the contents of the paper, which we heartily recommend to the attention of those of our subscribers who hail from Scandinavia.

Let us not be like the Christians, but let us extend a helping hand to our brethren whom fate has placed in such disagreeable environments, and who endure persecutions rather than be false to their convictions.

Neither we nor Brother Lennstrand can promis you a heaven, but the personal satisfaction sure to be felt after doing a good deed will reward. Let those who can read Swedish send 75 cents for a year's subscription to Captain Otto Thomson, Eskilstuna, Sweden.

GOOD WORDS FOR MRS. SLENKER'S BOOKS.

I wish we had more books like Mrs. Slenker's "Little Lessons for the Young." We all like it very much and it will interest the older people too.—Gene Christopherson.

"John's Way" is a splendid book for missionary work, suitable for both young and old. It shows the church up in its true light, and for the size and cost I know of none better.—Henry Allen.

Mrs. B. and I hav read "John's Way" and like it very much.—J. K. P. Baker.

The children take great pleasure in hearing "Little Lessons" read. It is not only entertaining, but it abounds in knowledge which they could get in no other way.—C. W. Rudisil.

"John's Way" is a good little book. It is now going round the circle, and if it ever returns right side up I intend to read it the second time. I read it several years ago and hav never forgotten it. I think it one of the best books I ever read. One man says it is the cream of life, also that he intends to send for a dozen.—Mrs. Nett Geer.

"Little Lessons for Little Folks." I hav read it and like it very much. I am sure that all young people would be much benefited by reading it. Indeed, I hav learned something from it myself and I am fifty years old. It is very instructiv and pleasant to read. I think such books should be in all schools.—D. Stephenson.

I hav lent the book "Little Lessons," and those who hav seen it think it very nice indeed for children, and I do think it one of the most instructiv little books that I ever saw.—Eliza H. Fales.

A PROTEST directed to James Cardinal Gibbons, archbishop of Baltimore, as the head of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy in the United States of North America, and as the author of the recently published book, "Our Christian Heritage." Seven letters written in the spirit of "Robert Elsmere," by Mich. De Gavarelle, P. V. N. Polytechnical News Company, 7 Pearl street, near Battery place, publishers. Price, 50 cents.

Cardinal Archbishop James Gibbons of Baltimore issued a proclamation in book form directed to the people of the United States for the evident and outspoken purpose of drawing them to the Roman Catholic church.

The book, "Protest," is written by a professional author well known under another name. It is indeed a strong protest against the purpose of the proclamation, in the first instance based on the evident danger which would threaten our free institutions were the Roman Catholic church eventually to command a majority of voters in this republic.

But there is another peculiar interest aside of its political tendency attached to the book.

The author is evidently one well posted on the most intricate questions of Roman theology, while at the same time he sustains views closely resembling those of Huxley, Tyndall, Draper, and other scientists of the present age. His exposition as to the relation between creeds and science is of the highest and most intense interest to all educated readers, whether they be theologians, scientists, or men of the world.

To many it will prove to be a clear, precise, and final expression of what in their own mind has been growing and shaping for years as the result of advancing intellectual training. The contents of the seven letters are as follows:

First Letter.—To whom Cardinal Gibbons directed His Book, "Our Christian Heritage," and to whom not. Page 5.

Second Letter.—What may be Known and Proved, and what not. Page 28.

Third Letter.—On Miracles Page 50.

Fourth Letter.—The Real Position of the Roman Catholic Church toward Agnosticism in Contrast with Cardinal Gibbons's Attempt to Prove the Supernatural. Page 56.

Fifth Letter.—Different Methods of Propagating the Roman Catholic Faith under Different Circumstances. Page 59.

Sixth Letter.—The Roman Catholic Church is a Serious Danger in Itself to the Institutions of the United States of North America. Page 69.

Seventh Letter.—What Creed the American Citizen Should Select. Page 83.

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LIFE OF

Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

A FEW WORDS
ABOUT THE DEVIL,
AND
OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

By CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 160 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, Eng.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND,
LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

Bible of Nature,

OR, THE

Principles of Secularism.

A CONTRIBUTION to the RELIGION of the FUTURE.

BY PROF. FELIX L. OSWALD,

Author of "The Secret of the East, or the Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline," "Physical Education, or the Health-Laws of Nature," "Household Remedies," "The Poison Problem, or the Cause and the Cure of Intemperance," etc., etc.

Felix L. Oswald is a well-known and vigorous writer on scientific and social subjects.—[Cin. Com. Gazette.

Cloth, 12mo, 240pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS OF

HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in the Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

POINTERS:

A POCKET CYCLOPEDIA,

CONTAINING

Tables, Rules, Practical Hints, and Historical Sketches, for Farmers, Mechanics, Machinists, Merchants, Housekeepers, and the Public Generally, with

Numerous Maps, Illustrations, and Diagrams

Illustrating some of the more Important Comparativ Statistics of the World.

More Information for Less Money than has ever been offered.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

For $50 worth of "Cold Facts" boiled down in a Nutshell. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place. New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology" Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: ow suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By D. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR HOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place. New York.

AN HOUR WITH THE DEVIL.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Price. - - - 10 cents.

THE

UNIVERSE ANALYZED

By JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,

Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.

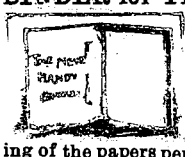
The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productiv of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,



OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.

Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Argument by R. G. Ingersoll

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

At Morristown, New Jersey.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES:

A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.

BY J. K. INGALLS.

Price. 25 cents.

Liberal Meetings.

These notices are for the benefit of Liberals who may be visiting the places where these societies are located. Local Secular Unions and Freethought Societies meeting regularly can hav their gatherings advertised here free by forwarding the necessary information.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

The Newark Liberal League

Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st., Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

Ingersoll Secular Society, Boston,

Meets every Sunday (from October to June) at 2:45 P.M., at Paine Memorial Building, Appleton street.

Chicago Secular Union

Meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday afternoon in the Hall of Cramer's Block South Howard street, at 3 o'clock.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; LEROY BERRIER, Sec.

Elizur Wright Secular Union

Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10:30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

Cleveland, O., Secular Union

meets every Sunday evening at 7:30, at room 29, City Hall, for lectures and free discussions on religious and social subjects. The public cordially invited.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club

Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

DIAMONDS.

Unprecedented offer. No other house so fair In order to giv my Liberal friends throughout the United States an opportunity to examin, test, and compare my goods and prices with those of other diamond merchants, I will sell any piece of Diamond Jewelry, accompanied by contract that cash in full will be refunded any time within one year from date of purchasing if goods are not entirely satisfactory. No other dealer will do it. None will sell as cheap. Carrying a large stock, being an expert, close buyer, and doing business on smallest possible expense, you will positivly save twenty to thirty per cent by purchasing of me. Diamond Pins and Eardrops, worth $600, for $400; Pins, Rings, Eardrops, Studs, Hair Ornaments, Pendants, worth $300, for $200; do., worth $200, for $140; do., worth $150, for $110; do., worth $100, for $70; do., worth $80, for $60; do., worth $60, for $45; do., worth $40, for $30; do., worth $30, for $22; do., worth $20, for $15. You can wear these goods daily for one year. It will not cost you a cent. If in the mean time you are not satisfied that the goods are better and cheaper than sold elsewhere return and get your cash in full.

Selections sent to responsible parties on approval; to any banking-house or C.O.D., privilege of examination.

The "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

sixteen jewels, finely adjusted to heat and cold, patent regulator, Breguet hair-spring, beautiful double-paneled dial, and all modern improvements. Perfect, and no watch will compete with it! In silverine case, $19; in four-ounce coin silver case, $23.50; five-ounce, $25; six-ounce, $27. In open face, best filled gold case, $27; hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV., $35. In fourteen carat solid gold, $50 to $150. Sent prepaid, and cash refunded if not satisfactory.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.
Established 1857.

THE JEWS AND THEIR GOD.

"The Jews and their God stood on the lowest plane."

Price, 10 cents.

LITERATURE OF THE INSANE.

By F. R. MARVIN.

Price. . . . 5 cents.

News of the Week.

THE Kansas City First Baptist church, colored, was the scene of a fight between factions of the congregation last Sunday. When the police arrived the floor was covered with Bibles, razors, and blood, and three men lay disabled.

ENGLAND and Portugal are disputing over the division of territory in Africa.

THE better class in Oklahoma City are almost intimidated by lawlessness there.

THE Imperial Academy of Arts at St. Petersburg has decided to exclude Jews from membership.

TWO men in New York hav received three months' imprisonment for distributing boycott circulars.

ON the 22d a part of New Hampshire was visited by a terrific storm bearing large hailstones that killed some domestic animals.

THREE policemen had to be called into St. Anthony's Polish church at Jersey City, N. J., last Sunday, to preserve the peace.

CANNIBALS of the Solomon islands recently enticed three English sailors ashore and ate them. A man-of-war was called and shelled the cannibal village.

EFFORTS of the Spanish authorities to repress republican agitation hav caused a riot in Gijon, in which the military were called out, and one man was killed and two were wounded.

SAMUEL TRAGDON, who was serving a life sentence in the Iowa penitentiary for killing a man for cheering for Jeff Davis, has been pardoned by Governor Larrabee.

THE Catholics of the Center faction in the German parliament hav formed a separate political party demanding freedom for the church, and denominational schools.

THE Salt Lake City grand jury charges county officers with having received great sums for canals and like works, and having nothing accomplished to show for them.

FRANCES W. ANDERSON, a faith cure believer, aged nineteen, died on the 16th, at Brooklyn, of hasty consumption, having persistently refused to take medicin that would at least hav prolonged her life. To remonstrators she replied, "Does not God say, I am the great physician?"

EDWARD LARSSEN has been found guilty in refusing to giv medicin to his seven-year-old son that had diphtheria. The justice said, "It is a singular thing that in this nineteenth century there are men who hav such a foolish belief as you and your society hav." Larssen replied, "We only believe what God tells us."

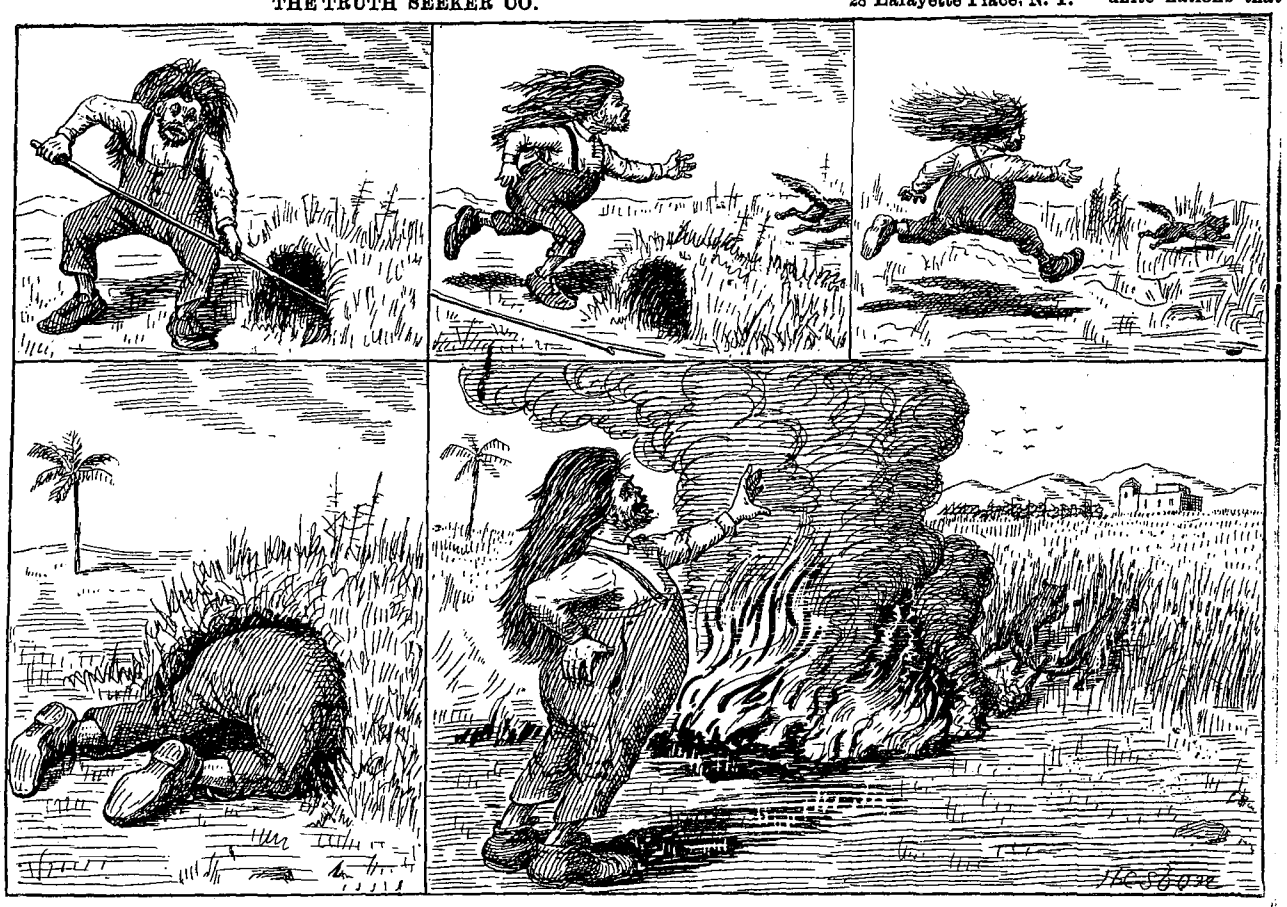
THE provisional government of Brazil has issued a decree suppressing Dom Pedro's allowance, confiscating his imperial estates, and forbidding his return for two years. Opponents of the new order of things say that when the provisional government submits the cause to election, as it will soon, republican government will fail to receive choice. The United States Senate has deferred recognition of the new government till it can satisfy itself that it is honestly what it professes.

THREE Brooklyn faith cure believers hav been sentenced. John Jansen, for refusing medicin to his sick child, was awarded a fine of $200 or 200 days. Maria Peterson, for leaving an infected house against orders of the health inspector, was awarded a fine of $100 or 100 days. Hannah Jansen, for leaving an infected house against orders of the health inspector, was awarded a fine of $150 or 150 days. The latter, who had gone to a faith cure meeting, said, "I knew that God would not let the disease spread in his house."

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Givs a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.



THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

A STORY ABOUT FOX-FIRE; OR, THE FIRST FOX-FIRE ON RECORD.

And Samson went and caught three hundred foxes, and took firebrands, and turned tail to tail, and put a firebrand in the midst between two tails. And when he had set the brands on fire, he let them go into the standing corn of the Philistines, and burnt up both the shocks and also the standing corn, with the vineyards and olivs.—Judges xv, 4, 5.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1890.

(E. M. 290.)

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Calendar for 1890,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1889,	17
Faded Flowers. Poem by J. E. Remsburg,	24
The Inauguration of the Bruno Statue. T. B. Wakeman,	26
Mostly Fools. W. Stewart Ross (Saladin),	36
Record of the Spanish Inquisition,	44
Dates of the Fabrication of Some Roman Catholic Dogmas,	44
The Boler House Mystery. Nearly a Tragedy, with a Moral. Helen H. Gardener,	45
The Middle Ages. Illustrated,	69
The Priest,	70
The Supernatural World,	71
The Reformation,	73
Future Terrors,	77
The Inventions of Science and the Inventions of Christianity. Illustrated,	79
Freethought Journals in the United States,	96
In Search of a Spirit. E. M. Macdonald,	97
Why I Left the Church. H. O. Pentecost,	109

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

Gems of Thought.

WHY may we not suppose, that the great father of all is pleased with variety of devotion; and that the greatest offense we can act, is that by which we seek to torment and render each other miserable? For my own part, I am fully satisfied that what I am now doing, with an endeavor to conciliate mankind, to render their condition happy, to unite nations that hav hitherto been enemies, and to extirpate the horrid practice of war, and break the chains of slavery and oppression, is acceptable in his sight, and being the best service I can perform, I act it cheerfully.—Paine.

LOVING man is the only true way of living of God.—Feuerbach.

IT is the hight of folly to deny intellectual capacities to animals; they feel, think, judge, and compare; they choose and deliberate, they hav memories, they evince love and hatred, and their senses are often more delicate than our own.—D'Holbach.

THE best authorities on physiology and on the subject of animal intelligence are at the present time fairly agreed in that the mind of brutes is not distinguishable in quality, but only in quantity or degree, from that of human beings.—Buchner.

IT is an indubitable fact, proved by a thousand chemical experiments, that no ponderable bodies or elements can perish nor disappear, and equally that no new ones can originate. The property that cannot perish in time cannot be evolved in time. That which cannot be destroyed cannot be originated. It follows that matter has existed from eternity, that it was neither created nor evolved, that its totality which is infinitly great can be neither increased nor diminished, and this also on the ground that the infinitly great cannot be increased by the addition of the finite, and that its characteristic of indestructibility includes that of non-creation.—F. Mohr.

FROM nothing nothing. Nothing that is can be annihilated.—Democritus.

NATURE cannot create, but she eternally transforms. There was no beginning, and there can be no end.—Ingersoll.

ALL things flow.—Heraklitus of Ephesus.

ALL is dependent on Matter and Motion.—P. A. Secchi.

MATTER possesses one inherent quality; it is continual activity.—Gerhardt.

As a continuation—a second part, as it were—of the Hebrew scriptures, the New Testament would be utterly inexplicable. Perhaps no other two books ever published are more dissimilar in their tendencies. Here, the chronicle of a brave and simple-minded nation of shepherds and husbandmen and the code of their manful law-giver, an honest system of morals, rustic and somewhat austere, but with a realistic basis and a practical purpose; there, a compilation of contradictory miracle-legends and anti-natural dogmas. Here, an honest silence on the unknowable mysteries of a future existence, a consistent avoidance of the immortality tenet; there, a constant petitio principii of that dogma; here, a stern inculcation, there, a constant violation of the first commandment; here, health-laws, Samson traditions, and pastoral poetry; there, indifference to health, to manly strength, and the gifts of our mother earth. Here, nature, Agnostic candor, optimism and realism; there, supernatural and anti-natural dogmas, mysticism, sophistry, and gnostic phantoms.—Oswald.

THE Old Testament is filled with cruelty, but its cruelty stops with this world, its malice ends with death; whenever its victim has reached the grave, revenge is satisfied. Not so with the New Testament. It pursues its victim forever. After death, comes hell; after the grave, the worm that never dies. So that, as a matter of fact, the New Testament is infinitly more cruel than the Old.—Ingersoll.

IF a man suppresses part of himself, he becomes maimed and shorn. The proper limit to self-indulgence is, that he shall neither hurt himself nor hurt others. Short of this, everything is lawful. It is more than lawful; it is necessary. He who abstains from safe and moderate gratification of the senses, lets some of his essential faculties fall into abeyance, and must, on that account, be deemed imperfect and unfinished.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

THIS prelate insists that celibacy is far better than marriage. If the world could be induced to liv in accordance with the "highest state," this generation would be the last. Why were men and women created? Why did not the Catholic God commence with the sinless and sexless? The cardinal ought to take the ground that to talk well is good, but that to be dumb is the highest condition; that hearing is a pleasure, but that deafness is ecstasy; and that to think, to reason, is very well, but that to be a Catholic is far better.—Ingersoll.